"Give me my letter," saye the young man or womaa, lately converted, hut many hopee for their piety and uesfulneee have grown already up. The ball or theatre is coming off. They have been over persuaded to join the revellings. The Devil, co-operated with by so called friends, perhape worldly-minded parents, has carried the point over these "little ones." (Better for their friends and parents that a mill-stone were tied about their necks, and they cast into the sea!) The promise is extorted. But they will be turned out of the church. This will not look well. Therefore withdraw before hand. Alas, who shall be responsible for the career of following years, from that point!

A release from the church is a momentous affair. It ought not to be enterprised hastily. The step taken, pride and obstinacy, and a thousand accumulating difficulties stand in the way of getting back. A flood of temptations hitherto shut out, now rush in. Sympathies, the comfort and support of which were not realized before, are cut off. The descent is easy. Every path leads down and far away.

A pastor who had, perhaps, given many such letters, and seen the end of them, thus impressively discourses:

"If any one is sorry that he ever professed to be a Christian, and would be glad to be released from his obligations, we would say, 'Your only hope of happiness and safety, here and hereafter, and the only relief for you, from your present embarrassment, lies in your becoming a faithful follower and friend of your Redeemer.' As for escaping from your vowe to God, which your lips have uttered, and which your soul made when you were in trouble, you cannot do it. If you should receive a letter signed by your pastor, the office-bearers and the members of the church, you might feel relieved for a while; hut that letter would soon be to you a heavier burden than poor Simon the Cyrenian bore, if, with unwilling neck, he endured the reproach of Christ. On a dying bed, that letter would seem to you, in your dreams and visions, like a great gate shutting you out of heaven. What a sight it would be, to see you before the Lord, your Judge, with that letter in your hand! It would be the last thing which you would take with you to the bar of God."

Buenos Ayres.—The Missionary of the M. E. Church, North, is straitened with his flock hy the siege and civil ware there. The last slip of monthly news from the Secretary says:

"Serving Tables" of Necessity.—Thie service hae been assumed by Brother Lore, our missionary at Buenos Ayres, during the distress incident to the blockade they had to endure. He says the condition of thinge ie growing worse daily. "The poor are becoming poorer, and the hopeless more despairing." Several Sahbathe since, I preached on the duty of providing for the poor. Since then I have had the privilege of giving to such of my own congregation ahout two beeves.

You should have seen me turned butcher, with knife, axe, and saw in hand, and sleeves rolled up. By an arrangement now made, I get about fifty pounds of beef per week to distribute. One of my congregation has given me an order on hie cash-keeper for $40 per day, i. e., about $2 eilver for the poor. Winter is now setting in upon us; we have had some cold storms and heavy rains, and it is quite as difficult to procure fuel as food.

Material Aid.—The town of Evansville, Indiana, hava collected $663 70 for the use of the Howard Association. The amount was sent by check to the firm of John Hurley & Co. For such a small village the donation is exceedingly liberal.

Costly Edifices.—The new English Houses of Parliament in London, have already cost nearly nine millions of dollars, and are not yet finished.

Dr. Alder, a man of mark and of high standing in past yenrs, has withdrawa, under charges for intemperance. He goes, it is supposed, into that "Hospital for Invnlids"—the Establishment. A more serious, a heavy loss to the connection was the withdrawal of Rev. Geo. W. Steward: his affinities not yet fixed. Dr. Olin, in his lately published journal, speaks of hearing Mr. Steward, in City Road Chapel in 1846, and remarks on the sermon in higher terms than any he heard abroad. He considered him the equal of Chalmers in matter and spirit.

EXORCISING THE MEDIUMS.

The Cntholic Messenger, of Thursday last, after quoting a case of craziness resulting from being a medium, gives out the following, From scouting at the whole husiness as Protestantism and foolery, our neighbor hns got grotesquely serious. Hear him:

"We find the above, says the NewYork Freemna, in some of the dnily papers, and we insert it chiefly to take occasion from it to express our conviction that the time ie not distnnt when the spiritual powers of the Cntholic Church will be invoked to exorcise the subjects of these delusions, which, it is our decided opinion nre demoniacal. If the unfortunnte lady above referred to desiree once more to he in possession of her right mind, and to he freed from the evil spirits thnt molests her, she hnd hetter npply to the Right Rev. Bishop of Albany, who, if he finds reason to believe that there ie demoniacal possession in the case, will appoint an exorcist to drive out the devil that troubles her. Perhaps some of our readers nt Ballston will chnritably draw the unhappy lady's attention to the subject, or to thie pnragraph."

By the way, we state it as a piece of news, that the Spirit Rappinge hne got among the Creoles of Attakapas, nnd upon every application tells them the Catholic Church is not the true church! A friend telle us thnt latterly it began to unsettle the faith of maay, and the Parish priest got alarmed. The spirits wouldn't down at his hidding. He went to the Doctor and begged him to put an end to it—that it was a mere Yankee trick! smelt strongly of Cape Cod, aay how! The Esculapius of the neighhorhood said he couldn't do any thing for him. It was beyond the reach of pills. "Perhaps some of our readers [in Attakapas] will charitably draw the unhappy [priest's] attention to this paragraph."

AMERICAN BIBLE SOCIETY.

At the regular monthly meeting of the Board on the 4th instant, in NowYork, ten new auxiliaries were recognised: one in Indiana; one in Alabama; two in Illinois; two in Missouri, and four in Texae.

Extracts were read from lettore from Agents, Messrs. Baylees, of Kentucky, and Buel, of California; and from a Bible Committee in Mississippi.

From a statement made by the General Agent, it appears that the injury sustained hy the recent fire in the Bible House ie of small amount, much less than was at first supposed, and that, as it will lead to measures for increased safety, it may prove rather beneficial than otherwise.

The issues of the past month were very large, amounting to 110,652 volumes; exceeding, by over 20,000 volumes, the issues of any preceding month. Receipts for July, $22,729 03.

CENTENARY INSTITUTE, ALA.

Thie institution of learning hae been in successful operation for ten years, ie situated eight milee north of Selma, and is the ohild and property of the Alahama Conference.

There are two departments, male and female. In the male department young men are prepared for the junior class in any college, or if they choose, complete their education here. The female department is regularly organized as a college.

The course of study is extensive, and the instruction thorough. The teaching is done mainly by men of age and experience, (not by girls.)

The President (Rev. A. H. Mitchell) is a Minister of the Gospel of twenty odd years standing, and during most of that time has been connected with literary institutions of the church in Georgia, South Carolina and Alahama. He is assisted by seven others, most of whom are persons of age and experience, and all, with one exception, professors of religion. A majority of the Board of Trustees are members of the Alahama Conference, which fact is a sufficient guarantee of its successful management.

Board and tuition are as low as can ho afforded, nnd lower than most institutions of similnr grade.

The next term opens the first Monday in October, and closes the first Wednesdny in July. For further particulars, apply to the President, at Summerfield, Ala.,

THE PEW DIFFICULTIES.

The editorial of the Register, from which we quoted some significant and hopeful remarks last week on this subject, has drawn forth a hearty amen from a correspondent. It affords us the utmost satisfaction to note these returnings. "There is no denying the fact," that the Protestant Episcopal Church has some outspoken and trusty counsellors and advisers, who will not let so respectable and influential a Christian community rest quietly in its errors. Hear this one:

"Thank you, Mr. Editor—a thousand thanks—for your timely, sensible and truthful article, last week, on pews. It touched a diseased point in the practical working of our Church system, and will, or ought to, do good. There is no denying the fact that, to a large extent, 'the Gospel is not preached to the poor' amongst us. Whatever plausible things may he said on the subject, the plain truth is, that our system excludes them. They cannot come into our fine churches on n footing of equality, and so they will not come at all. * * * *

"What is the remedy for thie miserable state of things? You have indicated, without naming it. It is Free Churches—where the rich nnd the poor may meet, as they will in the grave, and at the bar of God, on a footing of equality. Within the walls of the sanctuary, at least, let all invidious distinctions cease—and master and servant, ignorant and learned, rich and poor, kneel side by side, and on equal terms, hefore Him in whose presence we are all as nothing.

"I repel indignantly the suggestion that the [Protestant Episcopal] Church is not suited to the poor. If it were not, it would not be the Church of Christ. But it is not so; though, hy our wretched management, we have done much to give color to the mortifying charge.

"Again, Mr. Editor, I thank you for your most judicious editorial. It is worth n thousand of the hitter controversial columns of some of your contemporaries. I shall have better hopes for the Church when I see its attention withdrawn from themes of strife, and turned to deeds of charity and love. Among these, none shall have a more blessed reward, than that of recovering to the Church the pauperes Christi—the richest part of her inheritance—but which has been well nigh lost to us through our selfishness and neglect.

"A Churchman."

CHAPEL HILL, TEXAS.

Ma. Eaitor—I am getting along much after the old sort; have a very interesting charge; in which some ten whites and twenty blacks have been converted this year.

We are building a good church at Chapel Hill, which, when completed, will cost us near $4000. We were greatly behind in paying for it, until a few Sahbathe ago. And it was thought hy many that but little could be done, in addition to what had been. I presented the claim before the people, and to the astonishment of every one present, the entire sum necessary for the completion of the house was raised, amounting to $2450. Was not this a liheral subscription to he taken up in one hour, in one little congregation, and that too in Texas?

You will doubtless think so, Mr. Editor, especially when you consider that we have, in addition to thie, just paid for the buildings of Chapel Hill Male and Female College, which, hy the way, ie one of the best institutions of learning in the State. It is under the Presidency of Professor P. S. Ruter, formerly of Traneylvania University, and son of the lamented Dr. Ruter, one of the pioneers of Methodism in this country. Professor Ruter ie assisted in his college labore hy an able faculty, composed of Professor D. A. Bland, Miss E. S. Knox, and Miss C. Ruter. This institution has juet closed its first year's career, during which it matriculated ninety-nine pupils. Its next session opene the first of October. And from the signs of the times, we confidently predict that the number of its pupils will well nigh double duriag the coming year.

I have been through some dozen or more counties in the State; and I hesitate not to say that this is hy far the most desirable portion of country I have seen. And it is particularly so to Methodists who desire good Church and School privileges. But I forhear to lengthen this article; I could fill your paper, sir, with the good things that might be said of thie particular region of country. All I will say in conclusion, is, to advise good Methodist families, seeking n home in Texas, to come right to Chapel Hill, or its vicinity, in Washington county. If they will not he pleased here, I fear they will not find a country that will satisfy them thie side of the Good World. Youre, as ever,

GALVESTON, TEXAS.

By Rev. J. W. Harmon, who arrived at this port from Texae, 14th instant, we have received sad intelligence from the Ieland City. Rev. N. A. Cravens writes:

September 9, 1853.

Dear Brother: You will doubtless have seen from our daily report of deaths, that we are suffering from the fearful epidemic that has so fatally and so long afflicted New Orleans. I wae at Houston assisting Brother Petway in a very interesting meeting. Learning certainly that yellow fever wae spreading in Galveston, I returned. God graciously preserved my family during our absence (for my wife was with me.) On our arrival, a buggy wae at the wharf with a request that I should immediately go to the room of a young gentleman who wae dying. I arrived in time to pray with him before he died, hut in an effort to tell me how he felt, he sunk, and spoke no more after saying, "I feel, I feel." 'Twae Sahbath, and at four o'clock we committed his remains to the grave. That day seventeen were buried. The number of deathe since has never been more than ten a day, and some days as few as four persons, including all ... [illegible] having been attacked, but the crisis passed, and recovery fair, he adds:

Saturday Morning.—Ten cases proved fatal last night. It is truly deplorable to see so many of our young men cut down in the morning of life.

"I leave this open until to-morrow morning, when further details, if worth giving, will be reported."

Here the letter ends: The writer, as Bro. ther Harmon informs us, being numbered among the sick next morning. We hope the life of our brother may he spared.

REVIVAL INTELLIGENCE.

New Prospect Circuit, Ala.—We have had a gracious outpouring of God's Spirit in this Circuit. A protracted meeting at Havana resulted in some fifteen conversions and some number added to the church. The membership is revived and seeking for purity of heart. Early this year, I begun preaching at a church two miles from Kennedy's Landing, on the Greenshoro' road. This house was huilt hy the people, believing some hody would preach for them. We had good attendance. The fourth Sunday in August we begun a meeting which held on ten days. Brother Wells was with me. No organized church when we commenced: not a man to pray and few that would sing. Trusting in God, we preached and prayed, and God heard us. Several came to the mourner's bench the first eveniag. As they found Jesus precious they prayed for their friends. Between 30 and 40 were converted, and 37 joined the church—a majority men and women of age—and families came in nearly every member. Where we had no church in the early part of this Conference year, now we have a church organized of 41 members. May God help them to be faithful. W. I. Powers.

September 9.

Claiborne Circuit, La.—Rev. B. J. Hamilton writes August 17:

"We are having some interesting revivals on the Claiborne Circuit, which was left by Conference without a preacher. They are manifesting their faith by their works in paying the preacher supplied."

Bethel Camp Meeting, Miss.—Bethel Camp Ground, a well known spot to many converted souls, is situated within the hounds of Wilkinson Circuit, Mississippi Conference. Our Camp Meeting opened on the 24th Aug., and was continued until the 31st. The first part of our meeting was rather discouraging, but on Saturday night the Lord was with us. Also we had a refreshing time on Sunday and Sunday night. On Monday, from our first morning service until our labors closed late at night, the Lord was with us in great power. During the greater part of the day of Tuesday, we enjoyed a good time; but at night the energies of our faithful preachers and praying people were so wasted that they could not work: though the mourners tarried long at the altar, even until midnight, yet we could not count on more than two converts. In calculating the success of our meeting, we find some twenty or thirty converted, and fifty-two added to the church. The Lord be praised for all his goodness, and grant us another Camp Meeting at Bethel.

Sept. 5, 1853. Joseph D. Newsom.

Mansfield, La.—We are working along regularly. My health has been generally good. We have some good meetings, and take some members into the church, and have turned some out too. We work in more ways than one. About two months since, under discouraging circumstances, we organized a Temperance Society in Mansfield, which is now succeeding finely; numbers at this time fifty-eight members. We have monthly addresses, and if I did not fear that it would be taxing your time too much to read it, I would send you an extract of a very fine speech delivered by D. B. Samford, son of Brother Samford, sen. I will venture a few lines any way:

"The Star of Temperance arose and took its appropriate sphere in the heavens. Millions have been attracted hy the lustre of its rays, and stood with admiring wonder and eyes fixed on the splendor of its coruscations and the rapidity of its flight. Its beams fall upon the earth as the beatified spirituality of benovolence, and men's hearts are won to a work of love, and a labor of reform. Temperance Societies have been guided by its effulgence. Legions have been drawn back by them from the very brink of destruction. Thousand have been reclaimed from the bondage of appetite. Armies of drunkards have been reformed. The orphans cry has been turned to a laugh of joy. The mother's heart has ceased its agonizing throbs, and beat a long adieu to her loud lament. The wife has ceased her nightly vigils, and the daughter's eyes, bedimmed by tears, speak silently her gratitude to Temperance Societies. The chain of habit has been broken—man has been set free from a debasing thraldom, and society relieved from a bondage destructive to its principles.

"The Star of Temperance is brighter than old ocean's gems, or mountain diamonds. It has scattered the darkness of an ignorance in which the intelligence of civilization had been palled for more than two hundred and fifty years. It has broken up the mesmeric slumber of ages, and yet, clairvoyant-like, it now travels the circuit of the earth, flashing over land and sea, from continent to continent, heralded in its march of reform by the bright and beauteous radiance of God's magnificent bow of promise, while the sun of religion beams upon its wake, and lights up the moral seas with the flame of her comet trail."

closed my third round of Quarterly Meetings on the Columbus District; and am happy to state, that the religious aspect of the district is encouraging. We have had revivals in all the circuits and stations but two, and have no doubt that these will soon be visited with the refreshing influences of the Holy Spirit. At Eutaw, we have had fifteen conversions, and twenty-one accessions. At Salem, on Greene Circuit, the third quarterly meeting was protracted after I left, and I am informed that some twenty conversions took place in all. At Emory Chapel, on Pickens' Circuit, there were five conversions and ten accessions. On Columbus Circuit, there have been several revivals, and about one hundred and twenty accessions. I left their quarterly meeting in progress yesterday morning, with about thirty persons at the altar on Sunday night. That circuit has raised for missions, in cash and subscriptions already, near seven hundred dollars. The Buttohatchy Circuit has had some good meetings, and seventy or eighty conversions. Mount Zion Circuit had a revival at the third quarterly meeting, and fifteen conversions. In consequence of the sickness and death of Brother Manning, the preacher on Athens Circuit, there has been no special meetings as yet on that circuit. Columbus Station is in anticipation of a protracted meeting.

Their preacher, Brother Dorman, has been laboring several days in a gracious revival at Aberdeen. I hope he will get his torch lighted there, and when he returns set Columbus in a blaze. Geo. Shaffer.

August 30.

Dresden, Texas.—We have just closed a protracted meeting at this place, which lasted nine days, and resulted in the conversion of some thirty souls, and twenty-four joined the M. E. Church. We are having times of refreshing from the presence of the Lord in other places. Wm. T. Hobbs, P. C.

NEVER GIVE UP.

Learn, learn to hear,
Thy meed of care,
The hope of joy retaining,
Though woe and strife
May cloud thy life,
Still bear without complaining.

Ne'er turn from earth,
Nor quell thy mirth,
Though heart from heart may sever,
'Tie vain to sigh,
When broke the tie,
Though loos'd the bond forever.

Though word and smile,
May prove but guile,
So end our hliesful dreamings—
They wither all—
And fade and fall,
E'en as the meteor gleamings.

Though griefs are thine,
And thorns may twine,
Amid hope's fairest roses—
Though earth may cloy,
Know care and joy
Life's hubbling draught composes.

Though fierce the might,
Of sorrow's blight,
Learn! 'tis our mortal doom,
That each should share,
Hie world of care,
'Ere shuts the gaping tomb.

Still meet thy part,
With cheerful heart—
Nor pine in hapless sadness—
Some ray may gleam,
To gild life's stream,
And wake thy soul to gladness.

Contributions for Mobile.—We take the following from the Advertiser of the 13th inst.:

The Mayor yesterday received, from our friends in the interior of the State, the following liberal contributions, which, as usual, he divides equally between the Samaritan Society and the Can't-Get-Away Club—$895 to each:

From citizens of Selma	$1000
" " Lindsn	500
" " Suggsville	55
" Two citizens of Montgomery	60
" J. W. Smith and S. B. Duffield, proceeds of concert at Bladen Springs	175
Total	$1790

The following letter accompanied the contribution of Messrs. Smith and Duffield:

Steamer Azile, Sept. 9, 1853.

C. C. Langdon, Esq.—Our second entertainment at Bladen yielded $251. We are deeply indebted to Mr. Pomeroy and Dr. Gage for their kindness, also to the Messrs. Conner. I send by Captain McCartney $175, reserving $56 for our expenses up to this time. We remain in Bonaplis to-day and to-morrow, and give one entertainment to-morrow and Saturday, and leave on Sunday for Greensboro'. Respectfully,

John W. Smith,
S. B. Doffield.

The following dispntch had been telegraphed from New York: September 8, 1853.

To the President of the Samaritan Society:

Check on me for two thousand dollars, on account of subscriptions by Mobilians here in aid of the destitute and sick of all denominations. Telegraph daily to the Astor House the Report of the Board of Health.

The deaths from yellow fever in Mobile from the 20th of August to the 12th inst. inclusive, have been 466.

Fever Over the Lake.—From passengers who arrived by the steamer Lenora from over the Lake, we on Thursday received the following information:

At Covington the fever was very bad, and the clerk of that boat says there is not a house in the town where there are not cases. It yields readily to the treatment of resident physicians.

At Madisonville the fever still continues its ravagee, hut the arrival of Dr. Hart and the nurses sent over by the Howard Association had inspired confidence.

At Pins Grove, situated twenty-two miles back of Madisonville, in the piney woods, Mr. Terry, the postmaster, an old gentleman of seventy-eight years of age, who recently visited this city, was attacked by the fever on his return, and died with the black vomit. Yesterday his wife and servant died of the same disease. There are but four houses in this place. On the road from Madisonville to this place there is not a house.

At Lowlsburg, where there are only sixteen families, the fever has prevailed to a great extent, and there has been many deaths. Among the number we regret to notice the death of Mr. Leggett, one of the firm of Beatty, Leggett & Co., one of the first Western houses here. As also that of the wife of the Rev. Mr. Parker, of thie city.

At Mandeville, chiefly settled hy Creoles, the fever does not prevail to so great an extent, yet the deaths have been numerous.

We understand that a child of Capt. H. L. Smith died Wednesday, at Madisonville, of the yellow fever. This is the sixth child of Captain Smith

OBITUARY:

Died.—In Lewisburg, (near NewOrleans) September 13, of yellow fever, Mrs. Sarah Parker, late wife of Rev. L. Parker.

The deceased but n few months since came from the parental home in North Alabama, a bride, cheering the heart and strengthening the hands of her husband by her devotion to himself and his work, and with her intelligence, aminbility and chastened vivacity, enlarging the numbor of his friends, nnd the sphere of his usefulness. The bridal wreath is not withered, and lo now the shroud and the grave!

She died in perfect peace.

At a meeting of the members of the St. Francis street Methodist Episcopal Church the following preamble nnd resolutions were unanimously adopted:

Whereas, In his infinite wisdom Almighty God has seen fit to remove from Earth to Heaven the Rev. A. H. Powell, who, in every relation of life, manifested the utmost meekness and gentleness of spirit, combined with all that constitutes the true nobility and dignity of man, nnd by this, to us, nfflictive dispensation, has taken from the Alabama Conference one of its most huuible nnd yet gifted and efficient Ministers of the Gospel; from the Church of whieh he hnd the charge, n beloved, energetic, nnd devoted Pnstor; from the city, a bright example of Christian character, and from his family n fond husband and father. Therefore, be it

Resolved, 1. That while we justly mourn the loss of one so amiable nnd useful, and nre profoundly sensible of the visitntion, we meekly submit to the will of God, which, however it seem, brings no ill to man.

2. That we most heartily sympathize with his already nfflicted, but now greatly bereaved family, who, more than all others, feel the severity of the melancholy dispensation, and will earnestly invoke upon them the blessing and protection of that God who hath promised to be the husband of the widow nnd father of the fatherless.

3. That we will tenderly cherish bie memory and endeavor to imitate the virtues which shone forth in his character, which may be said to have been the embodiment of the Christian principles beautifully blended and exercised.

4. That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the widow of the deceased, and alse to the city papers for publication.

THOS. J. McCOY, Chairmnn.
John W. Starr, Secretary.

Died.—The Rev. James O. Williams died of yellow fever, on Friday morning, August 27, at Tuscahoma, Ala., aged 41 years. He returned some five or six weeks ago, to visit some relatives in Texas and Louisiana, nnd on returning through New Orleans, imbibed the fatal disease whieh caused his death.

Our deceased brother was in many respects a remarkable man. Born to no inheritanes, and poverty, and left at ths age of sleven the child of, a family of orphan childrea, he was reared, by tbe aid of some benevolent friends, to acquire a good education at La-Grange, Ala.; and in after years, assisted in rearing and educating the yeunger children of his father's family.

He made n profession of religion, and joined the M. E. Church when a boy, and nt the age of nineteen he was admitted on trial in the Tennessee Annual Conference. It was not long before he attracted attention by the talents which he evinced, and in a few years became a popular and successful minister and continued in the Itinerant ministry many years. He was locnted by the Alabama Conference in 1844, and thus ended the most and most useful part of his life. He afterwards settled in Livingston, to practice law, but it soon becamo manifest to those who knew him best, that bis new vocation did not suit him; and yet he succeeded by untiring industry in getting a good practice.

As a local preacher, he was quite industrious and usually prenched a good deal in the summer and fall. His preaching was very effective; but be was scarce ever heard again, after bis attention was turned to other pursuits than the ministry. He was a most perfect master of Watson's Institutes that I have ever known.

The deceased was burdened with a heavy affliction nearly one-third of his life. But in the beginning of the present year, he informed the writer that he was nearly clear of it, and that he expected to be a freer nnd happier man for the future. Alas! for him, his hopes were soon blasted by domestic affliction, and ere the dark cloude bad fully passed away, the voice of his Master called, and his days of trial were nbruptly ended, in the noon-tide of life.

May the God of the fatherless be n futher to his orphan, and almost friendless children.

J. E. Newman.

Livingston, Ala., Sept. 2, 1853.

Died.—In this city, of yellow fever, Aug. 27, 1853, Col. Wm. R. Stuart. He was born in 1800, in the State of Maryland. There he lived all his life, excepting this last year. He held responsible offices in the State for which he was a member of its Legislature, and for a considerable period President of the Senate.

When he was twenty-two years of nge both he and his wife, who is long since dead, were converted at a Camp Meeting, and became members of the Methodist Episcopal Church. He was the first and only one of his entire family connected with the church. When the questions were agitated which resulted in the Methodist Protestant Church, he was at that time he was identified with that branch of the church, and was the intimate friend of its leading ministers.

During the last year I have had opportunity to know him as a Christian. After a long acquaintance with the world, his chief pleasures had narrowed to his Bible and his Saviour. I can now see him, as at a Plantation Appointment, he enjoyed worship with the negroes, his countenance happy, looking up, his hand upon his heart, and the tears streaming down his cheeks. At a recent revival in Baton Rouge, he was much engaged and prayed in public with scriptural power. The last time I saw him was at his son's house, about ten days before his death. He was in fine health and spirits. He spoke of his delight in the service of God, and spoke of a beautiful hymn, which, as he said, expressed every thing. One verse he cited as especially delightful:

"Prayer is the Christian's vital breath,
The Christian's native air;
His watchword at the gates of death;
He enters Heaven with prayer."

He thought, and so did his son Alexander, who was with his father, that the fever had been mastered, and that in a few days health would return. But they were disappointed; in a few hours after seeming to be convalescent, he was dying. The whole sickness and issue were so rapid and suddden, that few friends knew that he had been ill until the news of his death. He had no pain, was sensible to the last, was ready to go, and so fell asleep in Jesus.

It was his intention to have joined the M. E. Church South, in this city, but his certificate of membership arrived only after his death.

The wide circle of his acquaintance will long mourn the loss of one who, by the pure polish of his manners, gave pleasure wherever he went. Mixing much with the political and fashionable world, he yet avowed himself in heart and soul a follower of Christ. He moved where the church much needs, but seldom has a witness to her truth and doctrines. But his course—a long one—is finished. For fifty-two years he ran looking to the mark for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus; and, while I write, doubtless his spirit mingles with the just, the pure, and the noble in the city of our God.

NewOrleans, Sept. 6. J. C. Keener.

Died.—Near Marion, Miss., July 31, Edward G. Hussey, in the fortieth year of his ago.

He was a native of Colleton District, S. C. From the commencement of his last had long illness, he had a presentiment of death, and began to seek the Lord in earnest. By hearty repentance and faith in the Redeemer, he obtained peace with God. Two weeks before death he joined the church, and received the Sacrament of the Lord's supper with his wife and friends by his bedside.

Aid for Thibodaux.—We have been informed that Mr. Dillard, one of the Howards, left Wednesday afternoon for Thibodaux, accompanied by Dr. C. H. Porter, and a number of nurses, intending to extend aid to the sick in that afflicted [illegible]. They took the [illegible]

General Intelligence.

Yellow Fever on the Gulf Shore.—From persons who arrived Wednesday morning we learn that the yellow fever is very bad at Pass Christian, Biloxi, and at other places on the Gulf shore, and that it has been very fatal. Ocean Springs and Mississippi City, we are told, have so far been exempt.

At Lewisburg and Mandeville, on Lake Pontchartrain, the resident physician has died, and numerous cases exist, with but one physician to attend to them.

Madisonville and Covington have also experienced the dreadful scourge, and so numerous have been the cases that the citizens have been obliged to appeal for aid to our stricken city. We understand that a committee of the Howard Association left here yesterday for Madisonville on board the steamer Lenora, taking with them medicines, nurses and all the necessary appliances for ministering to the sick, which, with their enlarged experience, cannot fail to be productive of beneficial results.

We understand that the active benevolence of the Howard Association will not cease until they have extended a helping hand to all the suffering villages on the Gulf shore.

Strange Faces.—An unusual number of strange faces appeared on our streets yesterday. In Chartres street we noticed a great many ladies whose features seem new to us since the breaking out of the epidemic. It would appear that the sojourners at our watering places, becoming alarmed at the appearance of the fever on the coast, had fled hither for safety. Some, we understand, came from Galveston on the steamer Louisiana, in order to secure the benefits of more effectual nursing in case they should be attacked. We heard yesterday of a young lady who came here a few days ago from Cincinnati (being her first visit to this place) and who is now down with the fever. We can conceive of no imprudence greater than that of venturing here before the disease has entirely disappeared.

Earthquake on the Gulf Coast.—About 5 o'clock on Sunday afternoon the shock of an earthquake was felt at several of the watering places. At Biloxi it was most violent and created considerable alarm among the inhabitants. There was a great shaking among the trees, the houses and the dry bones of the sojourners thereabout. The shocks lasted but a few moments, but were extremely violent and created a commotion in the waters as of old under the shadow of Vesuvius, when

"The restless Titan blempred in his den."

At last accounts all was quiet.

Steamer Daniel Boone Sunk.—From the officers of the steamer H. M. Wright we learn that on Saturday night last the steamer Southern Belle, hence for Vicksburg, and the Daniel Boone, from the coast, came in collision near College Point, sinking the Boone in less than five minutes. The Boone had on board about 150 head of cattle, some of which were lost. The officers and crew were all saved. Several of the crew were scalded by steam, the steampipe having been broke by the collision.

The Troubles in Venezuela.—The Boletin Oficial, of the 1st ult., announces the reoccupation of Cumana by the Government troops on the 21st of July, the insurgent government taking to flight. Maturin was abandoned by the insurgents, to the number of seven hundred, and at once occupied by regular troops.

The town of Valera, in the province of Trujillo, has been visited by a malignant typhus fever, which has swept away a majority of the inhabitants. The trade of the place, which has always been considerable, is almost ruined. The heat has been excessive in Trujillo, and, united with drought, has done much damage to the crops. Coffee is said to have suffered seriously.

Aid for the Afflicted.—The Charleston Courier of the 10th inst. says:

The contributions at this office yesterday, for the relief of the sufferers in New Orleans, amounted to $80, making a total received by us, thus far, of $8705 65.

The iron pavements in Court street appear to work well, and give satisfaction. They make a handsome street, and have one important advantage over all that have hitherto been adopted, viz: the making less noise from carriage passing. It is predicted that they will be put down in several of our streets by another year. It is estimated that they will wear twenty years. [Boston Bee.

Guano.—Francisco Rivero, a Commissioner appointed in 1840 by the Peruvian Government to examine the Guano Islands belonging to that Republic, estimated the quantity of guano on the three islands at 18,250,000 tons.

Redemption of Stocks.—During the first week of the present month nearly 300,000 dollars in stocks were received at the Treasury Department for redemption, and were canceled, of course.

Louisiana Interior.—The Louisiana Democrat of the 6th inst. has the following items:

There have been three or four deaths from yellow fever, in Alexandria, within the past three weeks. The last occurred on Sunday, the victim being a slave belonging to Mr. Sellibellas.

The Caterpillar.—The destruction is becoming general, and bids fair to be complete in a short time. We hear of the ravages of the worm whichever way we turn. A half crop may be made in the parish, though present appearances do not warrant such a conclusion

A number of families left town yesterday, and others are preparing to depart. All right. The air of the pine woods is balmy and invigorating.

September opens warm. We may look for cold weather before many moons wax and wane

The sombre angel of death, says the Plaquemine Gazette of the 10th, has been busy in our midst during the past week. Some six or seven deaths have occurred during this time. The type of the disease seems yet to be a mystery. However, we believe the doctors are inclined to the belief that it is the genuine yellow fever.

The Piny Woodsman of the 10th inst., published at Springfield, Livingston parish, has the following items:

Health, Crops, etc.—Our physicians inform us that the health of the piny woods continues remarkably good. Except those imported there is not three cases of serious illness in Livingston parish. St. Helena is not quite so free from sickness, although it is far from unhealthy.

We learn that the cotton and corn crop is unusually good in the western portion of the parish, and if the worm does not make its appearance the crop will exceed in quantity and quality former years. In St. Helena the "boll worm" has made its appearance, and it is feared will injure the crop to some extent.

Of the five persons who were landed here by the steamboat Anau, sick with the fever, three have died.

What was the Cause.—Monday last proved to be a very quarrelsome day in Springfield, and a drunken one in Greensburg. In the former place we hear reported at least six regular "set tos," and one attempted shooting case, which proved to be a flash in the pan. One of the hands on the schooner Margaret Clemens, named Peters, took deliberate aim and pulled the trigger of a double-barreled shot-gun at Luke Pendergast. The gun missed fire and Luke disarmed his antagonist. Peters was arrested by Deputy Sheriff Cozens, and tried before his honor Paris Walls, who held him to bail in the sum of $100. Thus ended the troubles

Late from Texas.

Army Movements—War!

By the arrival of the steamship Louisiana, J. Smith, master, from Galveston, we have Galveston dates to the 9th instant, and full files from the interior.

The San Antonio Ledger of the 1st inst., in reference to certain ominous military preparations, says:

On Thursday evening last an express arrived in our city from Gen. Smith, at Corpus Christi, commanding all the troops at our different posts to rendezvous at San Antonio at the earliest possible moment. At nine o'clock in the evening the order was received by Assistant Quartermaster Major Belger, and by ten o'clock the same evening six messengers were speeding on their way with the tidings of rendezvous. This order and this dispatch is ominous. We smell afar the breeze of battle, and ringing in our ears is the clang of arms. It, to our mind, when taken in connection with other circumstances, is the locsin of war.

Army Orders.—From two orders received from Brevet Major General Smith, one dated Corpus Christi, August 20, and the other Indianola, August 21, we glean the following synopsis:

Three companies of 1st Infantry from Fort Territt, four companies of the 5th Infantry from Fort Belknap, four from the Post on Clear Fork of the Brazos, four companies from 8th Infantry from Fort Chadbourne, four from Fort McKavitt, will march without delay, via San Antonio, to occupy points on the Rio Grande hereafter to be designated. Each battalion will carry subsistence stores, to last from post to post on the route. Regimental Head-quarters accompany the Regimental Commanders. The garrisons of the reduced posts will be composed of—

Fort Territt, under command of Captain Granger.
Fort Mason, under Col. May.
Fort McKavitt, under Col. Benford.
Fort Chadbourne, under Col. Hardee.
Post on the Clear Fork, under Capt. Sibley.
Fort Belknap, under Major Lamotte.
Forts Croghan, Graham and Worth, will be abandoned.

The Chief of the Quartermaster's Department will immediately direct transportation necessary for the movements. Medical officers assigned to different battalions

On complete organization, the two regiments will be put in march by the Fort Ewell road, the 5th to Laredo, and the 8th to Ringgold Barracks, until further orders. The four companies of artillery, expected from the North, will be distributed between Fort Brown, Ringgold Barracks, Laredo and Fort Duncan. The orders give further directions, (of no interest to the general reader,) and the different officers are now actively engaged to ensure a rapid and effective concentration of the forces on the Rio Grande.

Yellow Fever in Galveston.—The yellow fever is prevailing as an epidemic in Galveston. The papers caution persons in the country not to visit the town. The deaths for the ten days ending on the 8th inst. were 66. The Journal of the 8th says:

There is great diversity of opinion in regard to the number of deaths from yellow fever; but from all we can learn we should judge the proportion to be from one-half to two-thirds of the whole number. This disease seems to be confined entirely to the unacclimated, and those not receiving prompt and proper attention. The increased number of interments to-day over that of yesterday may perhaps be attributed to the cold rain storm of last night and to-day. The weather is supposed to be favorable to well persons, but unfavorable to invalids. We are happy to say that the Howard Association is doing a noble work for the poor and suffering sick.

The citizens of Galveston had petitioned for the repeal of the quarantine laws, but the City Council had taken no action on the subject.

The Civilian and Gazette of the 6th inst. says:

The yellow fever has made fatal progress in Galveston during the past week. The attacks, as well as the deaths, have been confined almost exclusively to the unacclimated. The large number (between one and two hundred) who have already been attacked; the great falling off in the number of interments yesterday, as compared with the day before; and the small number of new cases reported this morning, leave good grounds to hope that the worst stage of the epidemic has already passed. Very few old citizens have been attacked. They seem to be almost universally alive to the offices of humanity, and every possible attention is paid to the destitute and suffering. The Howard Association is indefatigable. The disease, with but few exceptions, yields readily to medicine, when treated promptly and the patient is prudent and properly nursed.

Yellow Fever at Houston.—The Wesleyan Banner says:

By referring to the report of the city sexton, found in another department of our paper, it will be seen that during the week, ending September 7, there has been an unusual number of deaths, eleven of which are said to have been from yellow fever. Our city authorities, together with the citizens generally, are using every effort to stay the progress of this disease. Though it cannot but be alarming, yet still the citizens give no manifestations of fear, but seem resolved to use all the means and leave the result in the hands of a merciful God.

Health of Indianola.—The Bulletin of the 6th says:

Last week we gave an official report, showing that up to that time there had been one death in this city from yellow fever (a late emigrant) and one case still in the hospital, landed from one of the New Orleans steamers. On Tuesday and Wednesday several new cases occurred and two (the Messrs. Bullock) reported worse and finally died. In all during the week to the present writing (Tuesday morning) there have been twelve deaths.

It was reported that a few cases of yellow fever had occurred at Port Lavaca, but this is not confirmed, and the papers only mention the report in order to contradict it.

The report of the Board of Health of Indianola shows the mortality for the week ending the 5th inst. as follows: Yellow fever ten, consumption one, typhoid one. Of these, five were charity cases, three of which died in the hospital, and eleven of the twelve cases were unacclimated.

Driving out the Mexicans.—The Indianola Bulletin says:

The people of Matagorda county have held a meeting and ordered every Mexican to leave the county. To strangers this may seem wrong, but we hold it to be perfectly right and highly necessary; but a word of explanation should be given. In the first place, then, there are none but the lower class, or "Peon" Mexicans, in the county; secondly, they have no fixed domicil, but hang around the plantations, taking the likeliest negro girls for wives; and thirdly they often steal horses and these girls too, and endeavor to run them to Mexico. We should rather have anticipated an appeal to lynch law, than the mild course which has been adopted.

The same paper, in alluding to the late election, says:

The Hon. E. M. Pease, of Brazoria, is elected Governor by probably five or six thousand over Ochiltree, the next on the list. As far as heard from, his majority is a little over 4300, and steadily increasing. The entire vote of the State will reach 35,000. The largest vote at the last election was but 22,000.

Connecticut Railroad Law.—The law relative to railroads, passed by the last session of the Connecticut Legislature, making it necessary for all trains to come to a full stop at drawbridges, railroad crossings, etc., went into effect the 1st inst.

Admiral Sir George Cockburn died recently in England, at the advanced age of [illegible] years. He will be remembered in the United States by his operations upon the Atlantic coast during the last war with Great Britain. He also commanded the vessel which bore Napoleon to St. Helena.

Breach of Promise.—Miss Coombs, of Clark county, Ind., has recovered a verdict of $5,000 damages against B. Waller, of Carroll county.

Late from Mexico.

By the arrival of the steamship Texas from Vera Cruz, which port she left on Friday last, we have files of the Eco del Comercio to the 8th inst.

The Eco del Comercio is grieved to learn that by the steamer Texas, recently arrived, that individuals disembarked have been attacked with yellow fever.

The cholera had made its appearance in some towns of the State of Oaxaca, and had approached within five or six leagues of the capital. The population was very much alarmed, and the Governor had taken measures to prevent the further ravages of the epidemic.

Robberies.—Some of the papers published at the capital, state that they are satisfied the Supreme Government is apprised of the fact that there exists in their midst an association of highwaymen who have committed and are still committing the greatest part of the robberies that are constantly occurring. Robberies are committed in open day light. So bold have the outlaws become, that recently they attacked a merchant in one of the most frequented streets of the capital, and in the presence of his dependants, compelled him by intimidation to hand over a considerable quantity of money.

Inundation and Loss of Life.—On the night of the 21th of August, there occurred a severe rain storm in the hills that overlook the small town of Mixcoac. The river which runs by the town overflowed its banks, and the current was so powerful that many houses, gardens and plantations were destroyed and many of the population perished. So great was the calamity that the prefect of Tacubaya, desiring to relieve the unfortunate sufferers, had granted a commission for the collection of donations to be distributed by the curate of the parish.

An overflow of the river Suchiapam, on the night of the 29th ult., had destroyed the great bridge on the road between Jalapa and Coatepec, and also the small one at the entrance of the latter village.

The Mexican papers are greatly excited on the subject of the comet. They wish to know what it portends. Some of the natives contend that its tail points towards the Mesilla Valley—others towards Tehuantepec. Quien sabe!

The Foreign News.

Details by the Atlantic.

By the steamer Atlantic, which arrived at New York on the 3d inst., we have Liverpool dates of August 24. From our exchanges we make up the following summary of the news:

Russia and Turkey.

The Eastern question exhibited no new complication on the one hand, and on the other it showed no new symptoms of an early adjustment. On the favorable side we have the assurance in Queen Victoria's speech that she has "good reason to hope that an honorable arrangement will be speedily accomplished." On the unfavorable, are reports of an outbreak in Servia, with the express intention of forcing hostilities.

Austria.

The text of the Austrian protest in the Costa affair, published and sent to all foreign ministers, takes the ground that Capt. Ingraham violated international law, as explained by Vattel and other jurists.

The Emperor of Austria is affianced to the Princess Elizabeth, of Bavaria.

Italy.

The import duty on breadstuffs into the Two Sicilies had been abolished.

Some popular demonstrations against the authorities had been made at Leghorn.

India and China.

The India mail is telegraphed with Calcutta dates to the 10th, and Hong-Kong to the 7th. The King of Ava had submitted to the demands of England, and peace had been declared in Burmah.

Trade in India was dull.

The Chinese Imperialists, assisted by foreigners, had been repulsed in an attempt to retake Kiang-Foo.

The Chinese markets were dull.

Markets.

Liverpool, August 24.—The cotton market has been dull at rates rather favorable to buyers, though no actual change in quotations can be made. Sales since the Europa of 15,000 bales, of which speculators took 1,000 and exporters 3,000 bales.

The market for breadstuffs was wildly excited by a speculative feeling. Wheat, flour and corn had advanced.

Miscellaneous.

Gen. Moathalon had died at Paris.

Capt. Ingraham, of the St. Louis, was present at a ball given on board the U. S. frigate Cumberland, at Spezzia, in honor of the Queen of Sardinia.

A conspiracy had been discovered among the Musselmen at Aleppo to murder the Christians. The ringleaders had been arrested and sent to Rhodes.

The London Times mercilessly ridicules Lord Sterling's claim to the fisheries.

Row at an Anti-Slavery Meeting in New York.—The New York Anti-Slavery Society held two public meetings at Metropolitan Hall, on the 4th last. In the afternoon, about 1000 persons were present, and speeches were made by Wm. Lloyd Garrison, Lucy Stone, Lucretia Mott, Sojourner Truth, (a colored woman,) and others. At night a still larger crowd was present, with the evident intention on the part of some, to have a row, which soon commenced by the speakers being greeted by hisses, stamping, etc. Miss Stone was hissed down, when the Hon. E. D. Culver attempted to speak. This was the signal for renewed hissing and all sorts of noises, which continued until the lights were put out and the leaders of the meeting had disappeared.

The Crystal Palace.—The Crystal Palace, New York, is now said to be a very attractive exhibition, complete in every particular, except the machine department, which is rapidly under way. A great variety of all kinds of machines, from a steam engine to a sewing machine, will be congregated there, and will, no doubt, afford scientific men a great opportunity for acquiring an extensive knowledge of every kind of invention. The United States contributes the lion's share of articles of this description, and will, in the absence of almost all competition, of course bear off the palm.

Another Strange Suicide.—The body of a girl who drowned herself in the Schuylkill, at Philadelphia, has been identified as that of Mary Burke. She was to have been married on that evening, and the groom and his friends remained at the house where the marriage was to take place, until suspecting something wrong, they went in search of her, but failed to discover her until he saw her dead body, which he recognized by a ring on one of her fingers, which he had given to her. It is supposed she was temporarily insane.

Historical Account of Hymen.—Hymen was a beautiful youth of Athens, who, for the love of a young virgin, disguised himself, and assisted at the Eleusinian rites; and at this time he, together with his beloved and divers other young ladies of that city, were surprised and carried off by pirates, who supposing him to be what he appeared, was lodged with his mistress. In the dead of night, when the robbers were all asleep, he cut their throats. Thence making hasty way back to Athens, he bargained with the parents that he would restore them their daughter and all her companions, if they would consent to their marriage; which proving very happy, it became the custom to invoke the name of Hymen at all nuptials.

String Beans.—A gentleman and lady residing at Cambridgeport had in their employ an Irish girl, fresh from the old country. The lady, on going out to church on the Sabbath, directed the girl how to prepare dinner, and, among other instructions, told her to boil some string beans, and string them well. Judge of her surprise on her return from church, to find that the girl, not understanding the process of

TELEGRAPHIC.

California Steamer.

New York, September 9.

The steamship Star of the West has arrived here from San Juan, with dates from San Francisco to the 18th of August. She brings one and a half millions of dollars' worth of gold.

Mr. Buchanan.

Mr. Buchanan, the American Minister at London, has been presented to the Queen and delivered his credentials.

Further by the Asia.

New York, September 9.

The Asia arrived at a late hour last evening. The following are the most interesting items contained in her mails:

Liverpool Cotton Market.

The Cotton market at Liverpool continued quiet to the close, and prices were generally without quotable change. The qualities from Middling to Fair were most in demand, and the rates were steady, while the lower grades were difficult of sale without some concession on the part of sellers.

The sales of the week were stated at 31,710 bales, including for speculation 4210, and for export 4880 bales. The stock remaining on hand on Friday, 26th, amounted to 802,500 bales, of which there were of American 540,053 bales.

Turkish Affairs.

A telegraph dispatch from Paris was received at Liverpool just before the Asia sailed, stating that the latest accounts from Constantinople announced the denial by Prince Gherka of the rumor that he had gone over to the interest of Russia.

Captain Ingrahem.

The citizens of Spezzia had joined with the refugees residing in that city, in complimenting the conduct of Captain Ingraham in the affair at Smyrna.

Chinese Affairs.

A private letter received at London from Canton states that the condition of affairs there is critical, and that an outbreak was daily expected. At Shanghai all was quiet. Business generally dull.

Steamer Georgia—Storm on the Atlantic.

New York, September 11.

The steamer Georgia, from Aspinwall, put into Norfolk yesterday in distress, with eight feet water in the hold. On the 7th inst., she encountered a terrible gale off Cape Hatteras, from which she received considerable damage, and was found to be unable to reach this port. The Crescent City has been dispatched to Norfolk to bring her passengers to this city, and the new steamer George Law will take the place of the Crescent City on the line for this trip.

Arrival of the Illinois.

The steamer Illinois arrived here yesterday. She reports that the revolution in Venezuela has been suppressed.

Later from Rio de Janeiro.

An arrival here brings dates from Rio de Janeiro to the 1st of August. Business at that port was dull, and coffee very high.

Relief for New Orleans.

The sum of $1800 was realized at Jullien's grand concert for the relief of the sufferers in New Orleans.

Relief for Mobile.

Boston, September 10.

A meeting was held here this evening, to take measures for the relief of the sufferers by the epidemic in Mobile. About $900 were subscribed at the meeting, and a committee was appointed to make further collections.

New York, September 9.—A petition is in circulation, in this city, urging Congress to take measures for the construction of a railroad to the Pacific.

Boston, September 9.—Further returns of the election in Vermont, show that the whigs have carried the State.

Cincinnati, September 9.—The river here is now rising.

Louisville, September 9.—The river here has risen seven inches during this last twenty-four hours.

Mobile, September 14.—The New York mails of the 6th and 7th inst. are through.

The total interments yesterday were 31, of which 25 were by yellow fever.

"Cure for Yellow Fever."

Messrs. Eds. Crescent—My attention was attracted by the above imposing caption to an extract from the Pointe Coupée Echo, and published in your paper of the 8th instant. The "prescription" or remedy there proposed, and strongly recommended, for the cure of yellow fever, although it does seem to emanate from such high authority, should not, cannot be indiscriminately swallowed "in the treatment of any cases" of that disease, whether on board the "steamer Natchez" or elsewhere, without seriously, dangerously subjecting the patient to the fearful consequences of a practice both unskillful and empirical. For, notwithstanding twenty grains of quinine may be given, or rather may have been given with success in some cases of yellow fever, it by no means follows that it would prove so in all; on the contrary, none will question that it might, in conjunction with the disease, greatly jeopard life itself in others. It is a well known fact, that even the ordinary therapeutical dose of four or five grains often produces very considerable cerebral disturbance, congestion of the brain, etc. But beside these effects, when given, it is said by an able writer, "in very large quantities as a scruple," twenty grains, or more, at a dose, it occasions severe headache, vertigo, deafness, loss of sight, coma, and other alarming and sometimes fatal consequences, in other diseases; then, how much the more is it necessary, in yellow fever, where the brain so severely suffers, to carefully guard against over-dosing with quinine, whose peculiar action so readily co-operates with this disease, and thus it obviously becomes the cause of fatal results.

The great and unprecedented number of sudden deaths, and other deplorable effects, which have occurred during the present epidemic, are, it is too much to be feared, attributable, in some measure, to the indiscriminate administration of over-doses of quinine. For these reasons, I do not hesitate in saying that the prescription, as published in the Echo and endorsed by you, cannot, without qualifying considerations, be safely administered in "any cases of yellow fever." Yours, etc.,

The Sun Festival.—The proprietors of the New York Sun gave their editors, reporters, compositors, pressmen, etc., a grand banquet on Saturday evening, the 3d inst., in commemoration of the twentieth anniversary of the existence of that journal. The total guests were about three hundred, including the wives and daughters of the employees, and several invited guests, including a good sprinkling of the editorial fraternity. In the early part of the evening the Sun Buildings were finely illuminated, and a splendid display of fireworks, by Edge, was set off from the roof of the building. A dense crowd of spectators, numbering several thousands, filled the streets leading to the Sun Office. The banquet was given in the upper story of the Sun Building, and the four capacious tables groaned with every luxury of the season. Toasts and speeches followed the banquet, and dancing to near midnight happily closed the hilarious festivity.

The Sun contains a full report of the scene, illustrated with cuts of the various buildings the Sun has occupied and the presses it has used in its twenty years of prosperous career. Accompanying the regular issue of the Sun is a fac-simile of the first number of that paper, a little seven-by-nine sheet.

The festivity of Saturday evening, proving as it did that, however great the diversity of employment, there are necessarily no social distinctions between the employer and the employed in a free country, was a noble spectacle; a finer one could not have crowned the twentieth year of the pioneer of the Penny Press. A Juvenile Aeronaut.—Charles Wise, aged 17 years, son of Mr. John Wise, the well known aeronaut, ascended in his father's balloon, the "Iroue," from Shannondale Springs, a few days ago, in the presence of a large concourse of spectators. The ascension took place at 20 minutes past 2 o'clock, P. M., and, at 10 minutes after 4, the balloon descended on the farm of Mr. E. Turner, five miles above Shepherdstown, Va. Three ladies, it is said, caught the tow line and brought the balloon safely to the ground. The

The Last Great Poem.

The following "dolish" "dash of "poetry" left by the pen of that "egotsordinary "writer R. S. Peltier, Esq., the first of whose effusions was introduced to the reading public by the Knickerbocker, under the title of "a combine between a Alegalter & A Water-Snark." In justice to the "pheelinks" of the writer we cannot "replace" to publish the present "ephision." The author at the time of writing, was said to have been "rekliding" onto a "Shed olest fly." His "poune" is entitled, "Solliesy Addressed to a Berd on the Fens," and runs thus:

"Mi pirly little Animle a-setting onto the pielis,
How fur hev you flew two da. as flitty Iierd

AUTUMN.... By Longfellow.

O, with what glory comes and goes the year!—
The buds of spring—those beautiful harbingers
Of sunny skies and cloudless times—enjoy
Life's newness, and earth's garniture spread out;
And when the silver habit of the clouds
Comes down upon the Autumn sun, and with
A sober gladness the old year takes up
His bright inheritance of golden fruits,
A pomp and pageant fill the splendid scene

There is a beautiful spirit breathing now
Its mellowed richness on the clustered trees,—
And, from a beaker full of richest dyes,
Pouring new glory on the autumn woods,
And dipping in warm light the pillar'd clouds.
Morn, on the mountain, like a summer bird,
Lifts up her purple wing; and in the vales
The gentle wind—a sweet and passionate wooer—
Kisses the blushing leaf, and stirs up life
Within the solemn woods of ash deep crimsoned,
And silver beech, and maple yellow-leaved—
Where Autumn, like a faint old man, sits down
By the way-side a-weary. Through the trees
The golden robin moves. The purple finch,
That on wild cherry and red cedar feeds,—
A winter bird—comes with its plaintive whistle,
And pecks by the witch-hazel; whilst aloud
From the cottage roofs the warbling blue bird sings;
And merrily, with oft-repeated stroke,
Sounds from the threshing-floor the busy flail.

O, what a glory doth this world put on
For him who, with a fervent heart, goes forth
Under the bright and glorious sky, and looks
On duties well performed and days well spent!
For him the wind, ay, and the yellow leaves,
Shall have a voice, and give him eloquent teachings.
He shall so hear the solemn hymn that Death
Has lifted up for all, that he shall go
To his long resting place without a tear.

A BATH.

O Summer! Summer, with the golden crown!
Thou comest o'er the worlds with fiery feet;
The white-skinned maids laughingly lie down
Amid thy sultry heat.

O! sow to bathe in some sweet marble fount,
In whose fair gardens Epicurus founded;
Where in bright streamlets ley waters unount,
By myrtle trees surrounded.

Or in a bath which old Boccalo
Made murmur to the air with gentle cadence,
Where oft with zoneless waists and cheeks aglow
Came Florentine fair maidens.

But no! we have the sea, the dashing sea.
And tread the wild expanse of silver sands;
We hear old poet Ocean chanting free
His tales of olden lands.

Strip to the wooing wind. From rocks romantic
Plunge in the fresh, green, laughing, quivering brine;
Sate thee with kisses of the fair Atlantic,
And then—go home and dine.

Tournament at Capon Springs.

THE CONTEST—THE COURT OF LOVE—THE QUEEN OF LOVE AND BEAUTY, ETC.

A correspondent of the Baltimore Sun, writing over the nom de plume of "Howard," gives a glowing account of the tournament at the above named fashionable watering place. Describing his arrival at the Springs he says:

How refreshing and cheerful was the aspect of the Mountain House when I arrived—music and gay voices in the hall—the forms of women with their admirers, filling the long portico, in the promenade.

Springing from the coach I soon found around me many cheerful, familiar faces, for the arrival of the stage produces considerable excitement, conveying often expected friends and letters, with the Baltimore Sun, the news bearer of the day. Here almost every Southern State, and some of the North seemed to be represented, while Baltimore and Washington out-numbered all. From a rapid glance of the company I observed some of the most esteemed and agreeable people of Maryland. I found the note of preparation sounding for the long expected Tilt and Tournament, which were to come off the next day. Knights and ladies fair were busy in arranging for the rides and fancy ball.

"Steed answered steed in

and all indicated the rich scenes of pleasure and rivalry to occur the next morning. Heralds, marshals, pages and judges were with the brightening morn selected and proclaimed, when, at 11 o'clock, the bugle sounded. Then upon a platform in front of the hotel and tournament ground, appeared seated lady-judges, as just and spotless as their own gentle sex, but rather queer-looking justices, forsooth, with broad brimmed straw flats on their heads, and robes as varied as the peacock's plumes. Mrs. ——, of Washington, a sprightly, bright-eyed judge, sat in the middle, supported by others as pretty and grave, among whom I recognized Mrs. ——, of Baltimore, fitted by her talents and high judicial lineage to administer and expound the laws of chivalry. Beneath them, before a rude table, were several gentlemen judges, whose duty it was to settle questions submitted to them by the court of love above, being literally for the time under petticoat government.

Again the trumpet sounds, when, led up by the richly dressed herald, Mr. A., of Virginia, and the marshal, Mr. B., of South Carolina, some eight or ten knights, upon finely caparisoned steeds, with lance in rest, bowed before the brilliant assemblage in the portico, when Mr. L., of your city, distinguished for his wit, eloquence and spirit, at the earnest request of the ladies, addressed the knights as follows:

Gallant Knights—Summoned at the call of Beauty and of Love, you are here to-day, with lance in rest and champing steeds, to contend for the prize which chivalry alone can win, and woman only bestow. Now shall you prove by your skill and valor that the days of chivalry have not been extinguished forever; but, in the strong arms and bold hearts of you, her votaries, shall be revived that spirit of valor and rivalry with which are associated the bright names of Bayard, Ivanhoe, Montgomery and De Courcy. No pennants here or royal banners wave before you—the pomp and pageantry of fendal chieftains dazzle not your eyes—no minstrel's song or falcon's flight attract you—no stars of heraldry or cloth of gold overhang and encompass you—but far warmer, brighter, richer welcomes greet you—the noblest of the freest land; matrons and fair daughters of America smile on you, gallant knights, and cheer you on to feats of high enterprise. Your heraldry is freedom's gift; your cloth of gold—the stars upon her azure flag. Then, onward to the tilt and tournament, where, in the lists, let

"Knighthood's dauntless deeds be hallowed,
By beauty's matchless eye"

To horse, the trumpet sounds; and—

"As faint heart ne'er won fair lady,"

he sa.ff, pursuant and victorious.

"Tis truly woman cheers you on:
Let cows of coyer mettle
Brigade reward can never move
To gallant deeds than woman's love"

After the applause which followed this brief and appropriate address, the knights rushed to the lingle's call at the suspended ring. Swift and exciting was the contest, and for hours the struggle was warm between the knights of Stafford and the lowlands—followed closely by him of Hardy, Essex, the White Plume, Virginia, and the rest. Intense indeed became the excitement, when the classic face and dark locks of Hardy passed before the ladies; or the fixed eye and well aimed lance of the lowlands and the valley dashed forward at the prize. But 'tis vain, the gallant knight of Stafford, Mr P., has won the honor and the crown; upon his brow the green wreath is now placed by Mr L., warning him that it is the only shaplem a republican should wear.

Now all is anxiety and stir among the ladies, as to whom will be offered that crown, and selected as the queen of beauty. Soon, however, he has decided; the interesting Miss ——, of Georgia, is the chosen one. To a lovely dark-eyed daughter of Winchester due homage was paid, for, with two agreeable young ladies of Washington, she shone in the hall as Maid of Honor, and was, with her fascinating sister, the observed of all observers.

At night followed the ball, where the young queen was enthroned amid garlands and flowers. The dance—the waltz—music, and gayety now rule the hour. Sweet children, dress'd as cupids and nymphs—the rich dresses of the knights and matrons proud, passed and repassed in the dance, like a fairy scene. A rich banquet closed the midnight hours. After which all was indistinct with your humble servant, and memory, "the wonderer the brain," went to sleep.

A Romantic Affair.—Georgetown, D. C., September 5.—Last evening, as the lovely family of children surrounded the supper table of the Visitation, a sudden feeling of painful solicitude was experienced by the Sisters in charge on discovering that one of their pupils was missing.

No time was lost in instituting a careful and judicious inquiry, when the fact was soon developed that the absentee—about fifteen years of age, from Tennessee, and the child of Protestant parents—had a short time previously leaped from one of the windows, and through the grounds had effected an unceremonious escape. This gay and beautiful girl was not only worshipped by her parents, but idolized by the Sisters, for the mutual affection which existed had been strengthened by an agreeable intercourse of past years, and vigilant search was quickly made for the fair one. Her entire absence from the premises partially relieved the Sisters of any apprehensions of personal injury from her bold leap; but still, mystery pervaded their minds, and, as in duty bound to devoted parents, as well as to the exalted character of their institution, that search was continued. No trace of the lost one could be discovered in Georg-town. Then the Sisters and two highly respectable gentlemen were directed to the house of a respectable citizen of Washington, who was supposed to be able to advise with them in the object of their investigation.

The interview with this gentleman invigorated the hopes of the party, and after a brief period of suspense, he freely admitted that the young lady was in the charge of his own wife! One gentleman who had accompanied the Sisters last evening, was, this morning, kindly permitted to hold an interview with the fair heroine. She frankly stated her repugnance to being returned to school; that her mind was occupied with matters of greater interest to her future. Whilst at "Jourdan's Springs," this summer, she formed an attachment to a high-minded, honorable young gentleman of the South, to whom she had pledged her heart and hand, and for the purpose of consummating the blissful union, she had made her escape, telegraphed her lover, and was resolved not to be foiled in her enterprise. On the other hand, the friend of her father, who had furnished her a retreat, had notified her father by lightning line, and he is now probably on his way here.

In care of the gentleman who had this interview, and for the sake of taking a pleasant farewell of the kind ladies who loved her, and had bestowed such attentions upon her, the young girl returned to the academy. The doors of the parlor were set wide open; the Sisters deplored her course and endeavored to persuade her to remain with them until they could deliver her over to the parents who had so confidingly placed her under their charge. She candidly averred, however, that the circumstances admitted of no delay; the nuptial engagements were arranged, her intended was now on his way to meet her, and no inducement would be effectual in detaining her even for a single day. Finding all their remonstrances vain, under a kind protest farewells were interchanged, and the fair one, in charge of the Catholic gentleman who accompanied her, was returned to the house and friendly care of her father's friend and his family.

Whoever the fortunate suitor may be, he will be blessed with a young lady of beauty, high accomplishment, extraordinary eloquence, (as evinced during this affair) and a title to a splendid fortune to boot. The Sisters and the friends lost a whole night's repose in pursuing this novel adventurer, but Love has thus far triumphed over the earnest and kindest remonstrances and solicitations. [Pur. Balt. Married Bachelors.—A paradoxical mass, perhaps, but there are plenty of them in town now, and a lonely, disconsolate, melancholy set are they. They may be seen about hotels, boarding houses, restaurants at meal-times, chatting about something and thinking about something else, and perhaps vainly endeavoring to console themselves with finely flavored cigars. They are thinking about wives and children, away in the country, or at watering places, or traveling for their health. Business, inexorable business, chains them in town fast as fate, but they send the dear ones of home to enjoy the country air while they toil on in the heat and dust, amid the roar of the city. They are self-sacrificing men, and in this habitual self-denial practice the noblest of virtues. They are among the generous, whole-souled men, whose unwearying enterprise and dauntless energies have reared the proud walls of our city. Business is habit and is pleasure to them—idleness on compulsion would be the severest punishment that could be inflicted upon them, and we doubt not that they experience more pleasure in thinking of their families' enjoyments than they would if obliged to lounge away the hours in breezy halls and shady groves.

But how dull to them is the deserted fireside of home. How tedious and unprofitable the evenings, how dreary and interminable the nights, how stale and tasteless is breakfast, how flat and unseasoned is dinner. How insipid and wearisome is supper. In sympathy with these married bachelors—men with souls, but without wives—we petition the hot days of summer to hasten by, that the wives and little ones whose smiles, caresses and cheery talk make the bosom glad, may return and restore hearts, and to hearts their joy. What We Think of Girls, in Our Courting Days.—The editor of the Sandy Hill Herald has recently had some pleasant reminiscences revived in his mind. Hear what he says about the girls in the days when he went courting:

"Wonder where the girls are whom we thought angels in the days when we went courting. We saw one of them a few days ago and she told us she was the mother of eight little angels! Quite enough for one woman. Zounds! how such things knock the romance out of a man! Can it be possible we ever thought this woman an angel? Yes, we did—and sighed for the time when we would be "big enough" to lead her to the priest, whose privilege it is to bind two willing hearts in the silken bonds of matrimony. But we don't think so now—a change has come over the spirit of our dream; and although getting old ourself, we somewhat have a fancy for faces resembling those of our guardian sweethearts. It is very probable one lady of our acquaintance may not exactly approve of this notion of ours; but we can't help it. There goes one of the vixens now—see how she trips along, scarcely bending the grass beneath her elastic step—she greets us with a bewitching smile. We know one who would give half his fortune for the mate to it; but he can't have what is so freely given to one who is incapable of appreciating it, and who would not have received it had it not been mortgaged, and the mortgaged canceled by the sale of the real chattel.

Well, who cares for the little beauties? Let 'em go it while they are young. In a few years they'll be old too.

Philadelphia Letter.

SKETCHES AND THINGS SEEN AND HEARD IN PHILADELPHIA.

Philadelphia, September 4, 1853.

Summer still clings to us in full burning heat, and though the Almanac announces the advent of Fall, the atmosphere during the past few days has been almost as oppressive as that of July or June. This prolongation of the warm season keeps away our business men, many of whom still linger at the Springs and summer resorts, and measurably holds in check the Fall trade, which, however, daily shows increased signs of animation.

In a commercial aspect, however, Philadelphia never had so bright a prospect before her as at the present time. I mean especially in regard to the increase and extension of her marine commerce. The Liverpool line of steamships is fully established, and doing a most profitable business. They arrive semi-monthly with great regularity, and always bring large numbers of passengers and handsome freight lists. I have no doubt that from the establishment of this line alone the foreign importations of Philadelphia will be increased three or four millions annually. To Boston, New York, Richmond, Charleston and Savannah, lines of steamships are also running regularly, and are all doing a remunerative and increasing business. A line of first-class packet ships has commenced to run between here and Texas, with every likelihood of securing a desirable share of the lucrative trade of that important and prosperous State. Another important accession to our commerce has been made in the re-establishment of a line of East India packets. Nine fine clipper ships, all heretofore sailing out of New York, have been placed on this line, and the first, the Trade Wind, has already sailed with a cargo valued at full $1,000,000. She will touch at San Francisco, and thence proceed to Canton, and return with a cargo of silks and teas direct to this port. Twenty-five years ago Philadelphia outrivaled every other American city in the importance and extent of her trade with the East Indies, but under the superior enterprise of New York it has gradually declined, until, of late years, it was next to nothing. This effort to regain it is, therefore, looked upon as one of the most important commercial movements in which our city has lately engaged. "Young America" has now got the lines in his hands, and though he has some weight to carry in the way of old fogy "capital," (a very desirable ballast,) yet we think there is a good time coming for Philadelphia.

The money market here has been described for some weeks past as awfully tight, and very strange and laughable stories are told of the dodges and resorts had by some parties caught in a "corner," or "short," as the mysterious jargon of 'Change has it, in order to raise the needful, and save their names from the black list. Notwithstanding this state of the money market, however, our streets tell a very different story. Ostentation and extravagance are every where visible, each man competes with his neighbor in his mode of living, and we seem not only to have entered into a contest with New York for commercial superiority, but also for the extreme of extravagance.

The trial of Bishop Dunne, of New Jersey, at Camden, opposite this city, is creating a deep sensation among the moral and religious community. The ferry boats are crowded with the white neckclothed gentlemen and deeply affected pious ladies who make their pilgrimage daily in order to watch the progress of the case, and condole with the Bishopin his persecution. The trial is conducted with the strictest privacy, none but the Bishops and their immediate attendants being allowed the entree of the Court-room, though its vicinity is constantly thronged by the interested parties. The charges against the Bishop are of the heaviest character, involving drunkenness, misapplication of funds entrusted to his care, payment of usurious rates of interest, using dishonest expedients to obtain money, etc., etc.; and of many of these he will doubtless be convicted, should the case ever be pushed to trial, for it is within the knowledge of thousands in this vicinity that his life has been anything but a godly one. The great struggle now going on is to prevent a trial, and as the High and Low Church factions of the Church take adverse sides in the struggle, it is likely to be a violent one. It is thought by many that if the Bishops determine to try Bishop Dunne he will deny the jurisdiction of the Court, and withdraw himself and his diocese from union with the Church. Truly, we have here the Church militant in more senses than one.

An outrageous piece of villany was brought to light on Saturday night, which occasioned some excitement on Chestnut street, and came near subjecting its author to a taste of Judge Lynch's discipline. About dusk on that evening loud outcries were heard from an upper room used by a writing master, and those who made their way up found there a young woman in a violent state of alarm, and showing, by the disordered state of her person and dress, that she had been subjected to rough usage. She stated that she had come to the room to take writing lessons, and, while thus engaged, her instructor had put out the lights and attempted to violate her person, in which he would have succeeded had not her outcries brought persons to her assistance. He was arrested and taken to the police-office; but as the lady, from motives of delicacy, refuses to appear against him, he may escape the punishment he deserves.

A few days since, a fine looking young Irish girl threw herself into the Schuylkill river, and though she was almost immediately rescued, life was extinct. It has since been ascertained that she was to have been married on that day, and that while her body was lying unrecognized on the river bank, the bridegroom and the bridal feast were actually waiting her coming. No explanation of the cause of suicide has yet been arrived at, but undoubtedly some tale of wrong or deception is buried with this poor girl.

Quiz.

The following, from the Havana correspondent of the New York Times, contains items of interest:

Havana, Monday, August 29, 1853.—The steamer Crescent City arrived this morning at six, and will leave at mid-day. I have to advise by this packet that letters received here recently, for Judge Clayton, addressed to him from the Department, or public offices at our Government, have been detained in the Spanish Post-office at Havana, and, when at last delivered, it appears that they had been cut open for examination. The same indignity has been practiced upon the letters received by Colonel Robertson, the Vice Consul, upon the business and duties of the office, while it has been repeated with partisans of the correspondence of our commercial houses. The Government here are anxious to ascertain what is to be the policy of General Pierce in relation to outlawed Cuba and their discourteous tampering with public documents.

A Fat Man.—A physician of Savannah sends to the Journal of that city an account of an unparalleled case of obesity. He says:

"I must put in a slip to give a singular instance of death from the accumulation of fat. We had a young man residing eighteen miles from this place, who was one of the miracles of nature; at the age of twenty-two years he weighed 555 pounds, he continued gradually to increase in flesh until he reached a little over 600 pounds, he was able to get about with tolerable ease and comfort to himself, and attended to his planting interest. He had a fine estate and looked after it with care and interest. Some four weeks ago he commenced increasing in flesh very rapidly, and gained at first one and a half pounds per day, then it was found he gained a little over two pounds per day. Last week he died suddenly in his chair, I think from an accumulation of fat around the heart. Three days prior to his death no doubt he would have gone over 660 pounds. I have often seen him, and visited his family a few months ago professionally."

The "State of Matrimony" has at last been bounded and described by some Out West student, who says:

It is one of the United States. It is bounded by hugging and kissing on one side, and cradles and babies on the other. Its chief productions are population, broomsticks and staying out late at night. It was discovered by Adam and Eve, while trying to find a passage out of Paradise. The climate is sultry till you cross the equinoctial line of housekeeping, when squally weather sets in with such power as to keep all hands as cool as cucumbers. For the principal roads leading to this interesting State consult the first pair of bright eyes you run against.

Book Borrowers.—These lines, says the Christian Register, written sixty years ago, may very properly be committed to memory by some persons—if indeed the memories that can not think to return books borrowed, can commit anything. The vacancies in library shelves—especially in "sets"—are ugly and nerve-trying:

If I this book declend you,
Or you of me do borrow,
So soon as you have read it through,
Pray bring it home the morrow
Then after which, if you do want
To borrow yet another,
Just come to me, and you shall see
That I can lend the other

The Mother of Queen Victoria.—The Duchess of Kent, mother to the Queen, has an annual allowance of £22,000, besides sundry residences, rent free. While her daughter was heiress presumptive to the crown, (which was a position involving some expense,) the Duchess had £20,000 a year; but when Victoria became Queen, lessening her maiden's outlay, the obsequious Melbourne ministry got Parliament to raise it to £32,000—thus showing that the less she had to spend the more she must receive.

"This is a pretty time o' night to come skulking hum, you drunken brute. What you been, eh?" exclaimed Mrs. Potts, when she saw Mr. Potts practising at the corkscrew polka on the staircase. "Been—hic—been? Why—hic—ye see—Sal—hic—Sally, I've been to the—hic—temperance mass—hic—meeting, and I've ent too m—much lemonade." "Eat what?" "Ye-es—hic—eat that too." At this juncture a heavy squelch announced the downfall of the Potts family.

Worth Trying.—Sweet oil is said to be one of the most effective weapons that can be used against bed-bugs. To drive these midnight depredators from your bed, all that is necessary is to take a feather and oil the joints and crevices well. After remaining several days, by rubbing it off with a woolen cloth, it will give bedsteads a handsome polish, and prevent any further visits for a long time.

"During your travels in Canada, Mr. Shoonn, did you meet with anything that arrested your attention?" "Yes, sir—a Deputy Sheriff. He not only arrested my attention, but my person, and marched us both off to Lincoln county jail, for crossing the line without paying duty on a yaller dog."

Since 1802, fourteen hundred cadets have graduated from West Point. Gen. Jos. G. Swift, who heads the list for 1802, is still living and in excellent health.

LAND FOR SALE.

The subscriber wishes to sell a most desirable settlement of land, lying 18 miles West of Monroe, on the Ouachita river, not one mile north of Indian Village, Jackson parish and on the track as laid off of the Vicksburg, Shreveport and Texas Railroad, containing 640 acres, with 160 cleared and in a good state of cultivation, with a good gin and cotton press with all the buildings necessary for common family purposes. About 100 acres of the land is very level and will not wash, and quite productive, a portion of it having made a good average bag of cotton per acre last year. The place is uncommonly well watered and healthy, myself having lived on it over seven years, with a large family, without having a single bad case of sickness. There is also many advantages and conveniences too tedious to mention, which can be fully seen upon examination of the premises. It will be sold at a fair price—one-third cash upon giving possession, and the balance to suit purchasers.

EDUCATION.

TUSCALOOSA METHODIST FEMALE HIGH SCHOOL.

The exercises of this Institution will begin on the first MONDAY in October next, and close on the first THURSDAY in July, 1854. There will be a recess of a few days at Christmas.

FACULTY.

REV. THOS. H. RUSSELL, A. M. President.
Miss ELIZABETH J. MEEK, Assistant
Miss CLARA G. LEE, Preparatory Department.
MR. F. S. WALTER, Professor of Music.
——, Teacher of Modern Languages

The fees for the first half of the scholastic year are as follows:

Primary Department	$12 00
First, Sophomore and Middle Classes, each	20 00
Junior and Senior Classes, each	22 50
Music	25 00
Use of piano	2 50
Tuning ditto	1 00
Board including lodging, washing and fuel	60 00

The above fees are required to be paid on the first day of October.

Fees of the same amount, for the second half of the scholastic year, are required to be paid on the 15th of February, 1854.

An extra fee of $5 00 is charged for French.

The course of study in this Institution is as extensive as that in any institution for the education of females and the instruction is of the most critical and thorough character. Every provision has been made to ensure success. A philosophical and chemical apparatus adequate to all the purposes of instruction has been provided, together with maps, charts, globes, etc. The instructors are experienced in their work and highly approved for capacity, fidelity and skill.

This institution has just closed the first year of its existence, with the most satisfactory results. And the public may feel assured that the Trustees will watch over its interests with the utmost solicitude and care, and spare no pains to render its system of education as perfect as possible.

The tuition fees have been somewhat reduced, and are below those of many Southern institutions of no higher grade. It is impossible to engage teachers of the highest character for talents, attainments and skill, without paying liberal salaries. But we offer as an equivalent, above all price, a faithful and skillful application of the most approved means of developing and training the mind.

Printed circulars, containing fuller information, may be had by application to Alex Glascock, Esq., Secretary of the Board.

MARION FEMALE SEMINARY.

MARION, PERRY COUNTY, ALABAMA.

FACULTY.

REV. JAMES R. ARMSTRONG, A. M.,
Principal and Professor of Mental, Moral and Natural Science.
H. M. DALY, A. M.,
Professor of Vocal and Instrumental Music
Miss E. L. HASKILL, English.
Miss M. J. BONDURANT, English.
Miss PHEBE FULLER,
Drawing, Painting French and Guitar
Miss J. V. CLARK,
Primary and Preparatory Department.
Mrs. L. J. ARMSTRONG, Governess.
Mrs. REBECCA CLARK, Matron and Nurse.

This institution has just closed a prosperous year, with one hundred and twenty-six pupils.

The ensuing session will commence on THURSDAY, the 29th day of SEPTEMBER.

It is very desirable that pupils enter at the beginning of the session.

The main building is a new and superior brick edifice one hundred by fifty feet, three stories and for elegance, convenience of arrangement—for number, size and comfort of school and private rooms—is not surpassed by any similar one in the country.

The Principal resides in the building, and superintends the Boarding Department. He has in his employ a gentleman and his lady, who discharge with faithfulness and satisfaction the duties of the position. Pupils boarding in the Seminary are under the immediate care of the Principal at all times—are members of his family.

The Matron and Nurse, a lady of great suitability and kindness of heart, united with long experience and untiring faithfulness, secures to pupils at all times the kindness and attentions of home.

The Principal and his lady, with the aid of the Female Teachers, all of whom reside in the Seminary, diligently guard and form the morals, manners and habits of the young ladies.

There is but one session, of nine and a half months. Pupils can enter at any time during the session, chargeable from the beginning of the month in which they enter to the close of the session.

One hundred and forty-five dollars will pay the board and tuition of a young lady, for the entire session, in the collegiate department. one hundred and seventy-four dollars will embrace the languages; two hundred and thirty-five dollars will embrace board, tuition in the collegiate department, on the piano, and in the languages.

The above estimate does not include books, stationery, sheet music, ornamental materials and lights; all of which articles are furnished by the Principal on moderate terms.

The institution is furnished with a new and complete Chemical, Philosophical and Astronomical apparatus. It also has a large collection of globes, terrestrial and celestial; and celestial maps, atlases, charts plates and diagrams, for simplifying the various branches of Natural Science.

The Library consists of more than one thousand volumes, embracing a choice collection in every department of literature, Art, Science, History, &c. &c.

The Cabinet consists of several hundred specimens.

The institution is furnished with a large and superior assortment of musical instruments.

The Church and Sabbath School facilities are unsurpassed by any school in the country. Of the number that have entered its walls during the past session more than seventy were or have become professors of religion.

Pupils are not allowed to attend parties, balls, dancing classes, &c.

Visitors are not received, except with suitable introduction to the Principal from patrons.

The usual regulations of the best boarding schools are enforced respecting visiting, correspondence, pamphlets, periodicals, novels, and denial operations.

They retire and rise at regular hours through the year. Great attention is paid to exercise in the open air, or within doors, when the weather is inclement.

Every Saturday morning is devoted to plain sewing and the repairing of clothing, under the direction of a matron.

No accounts will be opened in Marion, but with the expressed permission of parents. When articles are to be purchased, it must be done with approbation and under the eye of the lady of the Principal.

The wants of pupils should be supplied from home, as far as practicable. All jewelry is prohibited. All pocket money, or other sums for the use of pupils, should be deposited with the Principal. They are allowed to spend fifty cents of their pocket money per month.

Social entertainments, composed of invited married gentlemen and ladies, the teachers and more advanced boarding pupils, are held monthly, which afford the young ladies a healthful and pleasant recreation, opportunity for musical exercise before a select audience, acquaint them with the usages of refined society, and give them ease and grace in manners.

LINES BY MILTON IN HIS OLD AGE.

NOT DISCOVERED, AND FIRST PUBLISHED IN THE RECENT REVISED EDITION OF THE POET'S WORKS.

I am old and blind!
Men point at me as smitten by God's frown,
Afflicted and deserted of my mind—
Yet I am not cast down.

I am weak, yet strong—
I mourn not that I no longer see—
Poor, old and helpless, I the more belong,
Father Supreme! to Thee!

Oh merciful One!
When men are farthest then Thou art most near;
When friends pass by—my weakness shun—
Thy chariot I hear.

Thy glorious face
Is rising, evermore, and its holy light
Rises in upon my lonely dwelling-place,
And there is no more night.

On my bended knee
Recognize Thy purpose clearly shown;
My vision Thou hast dimmed that I may see
Thyself—Thyself alone!

I have naught to fear;
This darkness is the shadow of Thy wing;
Beneath it I am all at rest—here
Can come no evil thing.

Oh! I seem to stand
Trembling where foot of mortal ne'er hath been,
Rapt in the radiance of Thy sinless land,
Which eye hath never seen.

Visions come and go—
Shapes of resplendent beauty round me throng—
From angel lips I seem to hear the flow
Of soft and holy song.

It is nothing now
When heaven is opening on my sightless eyes,
When rise from Paradise in fresh my brow,
The Earth fu dark ness lies.

In a purer clime
My being fills with rapture—waves of thought
Roll in upon my spirit—strains sublime
Break over me in tonight.

Give me now my lyre!
I feel the stirrings of a gli Divine,
Within my bosom glows unearthly fire
Lit by a scroll of mine

FUNERAL DISCOURSE.

The following is the substance of remarks by Rev. J. C. Keener, in the Methodist Church, Sunday last 18th instant, on the occasion of the funeral of Hanay R. W. Hill.

[1 Timothy VI: 17, 8 c.—"Charge them that are rich in this world, that they be not high-minded, nor trust in uncertain riches, but in the living God, who giveth us richly all things to enjoy, that they do good, that they be rich in good works, ready to distribute, willing to communicate; laying up in store for themselves a good foundation against the time to come, that they may lay hold on eternal life."]

Though the purpose of this morning is to consider the character of an individual, I have thought best to rend for the basis of the remarks which may follow, a text, a passage not inappliesble, as it gives us St. Paul's description of what a rich man ought to be. How far the deceased filled out the lines of this portraiture we may all judge.

The usual course in this city of burying from a private house was departed from in this instance, at the request of several members of this church, and friends of the deceased. If it were asked for what reason, the only answer might be—"That he was worthy for whom [we would] do this, for he loved our nation, and he hath built me a Synagogue." But it was not that only, nor because he was one of the wealthiest of our citizens; for this is not a tribute to wealth, rather a certain magnificence of nature greater than success, and to which wealth was important only as it afforded the means of development. It is in the fact that Mr. Hill eminently a public man, that this occasion finds its reason and apology. Not that he held political office; that he could never be persuaded to do. And the time has come in the history of this republic, when it may be said that, as a general thing, her most distinguished citizens, of whatever party, do not hold office. It may be the tendency of a free republic to reduce all office-holding to the rank of a mere service. Whatever the philosophy of the fact, it is not to be regretted that in our country a desire to be distinguished seeks vent in more useful and less dangerous forms than those which belong to mere business of governing.

Mr. Hill sought the admiration and praise of his countrymen, so far as he sought it at all, in designs and deeds for bettering their social and their condition. Self, as large as it was not large enough for the motion of his heart. He was ready to help in enterprise of all kinds which were likely to advance the interests of his country. He was a warm advocate for internal improvements; the first Macadamised road in Tennessee was projected and carried on to completion by him. His enterprise was felt throughout the Southwest, especially in Texas. At an early period he aided those who were struggling to maintain her independence. At a critical moment he gave $5000, which, it is said, supplied the Texan munitions of the battle of San Jacinto. The news of that battle rendered unnecessary other help he had ready, in the shape of a battalion of troops organized in camp, and about to march to the relief of the expected contest.

This city felt his presence. When he returned it seemed as though the business season had fairly commenced. He was ever devising liberal things. One who felt for every body had the good will of every body. There was something joyous, elastic in his greeting: you felt yourself encouraged in the presence of one confident in his own resources, who seemed fully able to help himself and you.

He may be held up to young men to show how a man may in the end be wealthy, widely known, and highly honored who begins life without a cent, and continues it without office.

Mr. Hill was industrious. He was not given to the one hand to saving, nor on the other to extravagance. He had a quick perception and a good judgment. His conclusions seemed to be rather by intuition than by any process he could define. He seized directly upon the strong points of a question, and was not to be diverted from them after that. With great generalizing power, he had an excellent memory for minutiæ; he was, therefore, capable of much business in little time. His experience had strengthened his self-reliance. In proposed engagements he, for the most part, knew better what men were able to meet than they knew themselves. He was often satisfied with a bargain after he had given the other party much more than they had asked. He had the opportunity of an experience during a suspension, without which it would seem no American merchant can be perfect. In the reverses of 1837, he spent seven years in the State of Mississippi settling debts, and heading debtors. It was doubtless a mine of experience in law and humanity, as indeed it also proved to be of wealth, of immense advantage to him, in his subsequent commercial career. It was during this period that he laid the foundation of a planting interest which has grown to be almost, if not quite, the largest in the Cotton States.

But it was not so much by his powers and means, as by his qualities, that Mr. H. won the notice and admiration of so large a circle. It is the heart that determines the real power of a man. If he had been less otherwise, here he was great. He had a great heart, a friendly heart. He was a great friend. Especially of such as were in trouble. The poor man's friend; the friend of the widow and the orphan; the colored man's friend. See, in these galleries! what announcement of death has ever in this city affected so large a number of colored people! Whose friend was he not? Who did not calculate that if the worst came to the worst there was one man any how that would sympathise? An enemy could have counted upon him, had he asked.

He was by emphasis the Methodist preacher's friend; and I would write it on his tombstone as his epitaph.

When a young man, just starting in business, he for the first time paid the deficiency of the quarterage of the circuit preacher. Bishop Paine. Since then he has paid much quarterage. For some years the Texas Conference and some one or two other Conferences were authorized to draw on him for deficiencies in the support of their preachers. Bishop McKendry found, in the close of his life a permanent home in the house of Mr. Hill, and there he spent the most part of it. He has given to the gray hairs and weary limbs of the present Senior Bishop of our Church, the venerable Soule and his wife, a home of their own to rest in, after fifty years of itinerant toil. And many other such things has he done.

Very many Methodist preachers felt rich in knowing that he was rich: for somehow it seemed that what he had they had—that in extremity he would help—that in case of their death, he would take care of wife and children, and not see them suffer.

This gathering about one the confidence of Ministers of the Gospel was a noble use of wealth. Mr. H. was proud to be reckoned the itinerant's friend; he had a noble ambition to be felt at his hearth and in his heart. He and his wife were never ashamed of their brethren. No matter how grand the occasion and the company, the circuit preacher had the place of honor. If other people were too proud to be Methodists, they were too proud to be any thing else. I may say a more unpretending family I never knew; they affected nothing, attempted nothing but to be just what they were.

As a proper consequence of this, Mr. Hill was the intimate acquaintance of Bishops McKendry, Andrew and Soule, of Dr. Bascomb, Douglass, McMahon, Greene, Stevenson, Hanner, Pitts, and many others, the first minds and the best preachers our church has produced. He often declared himself greatly indebted to the Methodist pulpit for what general knowledge he had; never having had more than two years at an old field school, before learned in the congregation.

It is proper here to state Mr. Hill's attitude to the Church. For many years he was a member. Some six years ago he was induced to withdraw from its communion for what seemed to him a good reason. Besides, thought that he could yet be an experimental Christian. Hazardous experiment! No doubt he often felt that it had proved so. He more than once contemplated a return; indeed seemed once to have set the time, but death found him at last out of the pale of the Church. Notwithstanding this fact, he never waned in his zeal for the cause of Methodism.

He especially loved the doctrines which offered life to the whole world—their sound chimed with his cast of soul. He loved the discipline of the Church scarcely less. One thing he regarded as vital in Methodist Economy—Itinerancy. He was impatient of any policy that invaded; or even threatened this part of the system. He believed that the means by which the Church has from nothing come to be in a short period the largest in the country, were, under the blessing of God, not more her doctrine than her economy. That other churches now preached our doctrines substantially, but that they had not our success was because they had not our Itinerancy.

Scarcely second to this, and in some sense a part of this, was the system of free-seats. He was willing for argument sake to allow all that can be urged in favor of pewed seats for cities, and for the easy support of the preacher, but so long as we were after the saving of a world, and not cities, so long as the poor were the majority, he maintained that free seats only were consistent with our doctrine, and our calling, "to spread holiness throughout these lands." To one charity Mr. H. would not respond—a pewed church.

In the relations of son, husband and father, few were so exemplary. His mother, her trials in the early days of Methodism, and her happy death, bound him firmly all his life to the people called Methodists. Though for years his house has done the largest cotton business in the world, yet he was much at home. The virtues of Sister Hill lightened the house, and her husband dwelt us in a charmed circle within the constant radiance of her pure and gentle nature. They were both devoted to their son, and now only child. It was a happy family.

As a master, Mr. Hill was all that a servant could ask. I know of no one clearer of the threat of the Apostle. It could not be said of him, "Behold the hire of the laborers who have reaped down your fields which is of you kept back by fraud, crieth." He took pains to provide his servants with the Gospel, and all things necessary to life and godliness. A lady, who was spending some days at his house, had a servant that seemed hard to control. The girl was unmanageable and the mistress impatient. She at last exclaimed, "Mr. Hill, where do you get such good family servants?" "O, Madam," said he, "they are nothing but common corn-field hands." "How do you manage to get them in such good training?" said she. "Why, Madam, whenever I find they wont behave themselves, I threaten to set them free." On one occasion or more, it seems that this had actually occurred with a fractious servant. He gave the woman her freedom, and would not have her about. Whatever others have lost in his death, these servants, all his servants, have lost more, for, what loss can be mentioned with that of a good master!

The well-being of the slave had a large place in his charities. Last year he gave from five to ten thousand dollars to have the Gospel preached to the slave, besides what he gave to have it preached upon his own plantations. The negro missions engrossed a large share of his missionary zeal.

But, bringing my subject more closely to my text, let me make inquiry how far he satisfied the charge urged upon the wealthy. "That they be not high-minded." There are few men whom wealth does not inflate a little; the most of men show its effect upon themselves by their airs in the counting-room, upon the street, or in the parlor. It was not so with him. In his company any one felt as wealthy as he did.

"Nor did he "trust in uncertain riches," but he did "trust in the living God;" as he did not make wealth his hope, so did he not make it his confidence; he felt that "God was the giver, who had given him richly." He was wont to refer what he had not to his labor, or his astuteness, or his "luck," but to the blessing of God upon his business, like the rain coming down over all the furrows of the field. He was a firm believer, a practical one, in a Providence that orders every thing, and overrules each event in accordance with promise and prayer. He did good—that is from a good motive. He did not give to the church, as was often charged, to get business, for few houses had so little Methodist custom. He gave following, he scarcely could define how, the exhortation: "Make to yourselves friends of [out of] the mammon of unrighteousness, that when ye fail they may receive you into everlasting habitations." He did not, therefore, cease or tire with giving, from having been deceived, or from ingratitude, or from misapplication of his charity; but he felt that his motive for giving yet remained to him, that he had not been deceived out of it, the only true ground of reward. There was, accordingly, this peculiarity in his giving; he increased his charities when he lost, but did not lessen them when he gained. He determined to give what he had to give while he lived, and not make a virtue of a necessity, and at the last hour give what could be no longer enjoyed. His designs were large. He said some months ago, that he designed to go on and work while he lived and ever after this to give all to good purposes. He had a floating purpose to found an Orphan Asylum.

It has been estimated that he gave away at various times, for benevolent causes, two hundred thousand dollars. He has given largely to the cause of Methodism in Tennessee, and largely here—say in the last five years twenty to twenty-five thousand dollars. His last gift was at the dedication of this house, when he gave ten thousand dollars, and declared that the happiness he had in seeing so many people seated, hearing the gospel, and pleased, more than repaid him for every thing he had done. He was "willing to communicate." He gave to every one who asked. He could not say no.

In this sense, he was "rich in good works." The good works spoken of here clearly enough mean liberality—such works as a rich man is especially capable of.

"Laying up in store a good foundation against the time to come—" The future, the future! It was ever before him. Through all the confusing lights of a fortunate life, he kept his eye upon "the riches of the glory of His inheritance in the Saints."

Mr. H. years ago heard a sermon on the Resurrection from the Rev. Mr. Hanner—a sermon which affected greatly his friend Mr. Dick. This had fixed also very clearly upon his own mind this glorious doctrine, that if a man die he shall live again, with all the elements of life, with form and body, speech and eye; that birds and beasts may die and dissolve forever, but not man—he dies only as the grain, that there may spring presently a harvest of life.

Mr. H. was well informed doctrinally. He had espoused the cause of Christ early: and now in his gray hairs his sins could be soon ventured upon the Covenant, and, he was ready to sink to the only plea. The Providences of God had been during the last six months well aimed to turn his thoughts that way; first, a severe illness of his wife; then the death of Mr. Bolster, a most estimable minister and member of his family; then a little after, the death of the wife of his youth; more recently, the sickness of nearly all his servants on the plantation where he was, and the death of a number of them; later still, the death of the Missionary, Brother Childers, who preached there, and whom he highly esteemed; then, but a week or two since, the death of his waiting man Joshua; and a week still later the death of Dr. Malani, who had formerly for years been a member of his family. These events seemed converging, and came down to the hour when he was taken sick himself. So that disease did not take him unawares. When it was certain that he must die, he was asked whether he felt any fear of death? He answered, "No, no, no." And again, whether he felt prepared to go? He replied, that he was "ready and willing to die;" that he was "at peace with God and all mankind." "Peace"—expressive word! After the care and conflict of busy life—at peace with every body! Happy the man who can at last feel it. "At peace with God"—well had he learned that, "Being justified by faith, we have peace with God, through our Lord Jesus Christ." And now he had peace in believing. "He is our peace," and no doubt upon that Saviour he leaned and breathed out his soul in peace.

Alas, the breaking up of that house! no more the abundant board, the plain, thorough welcome, the pleasant social group, as I first saw them. In a few years, all are gone—Mr. Dick, the Master, the Mistress, and Joshua. There are the statues and the paintings, but the hall and stairs no longer resound to the feet of the owners. There is the sofa by the door, but the accustomed form reclines not upon it. All have gone: all but one—he may come to look sadly at the familiar room which can but remind him of his loneliness. How gladly would he give all could he but see father and mother once more! how empty to him are all the possessions which the labor and love of his father have left him! They are gone! They are MET! Through the blood of the Lamb and the quickening of the Spirit they have entered the Paradise of God. Pleasant group! Father and mother, and two daughters! they are still a family, nearly unbroken, and they wait only until he comes to make their circle complete.

A WESLEYAN MISSIONARY.

The Missionary spirit and achievements of British Methodists is their praise everywhere. Over $500,000 are annually raised for this cause. Great and good men have devised their policy. It is worthy of the Church's intention—the conversion of the world. Their Missionaries are scattered from "Lapland to the line." It is hard to say where they are not. Their system is comprehensive, and their undertakings animating to the people. They have a way of keeping up interest and diffusing knowledge on the subject of missions that is admirably effective and legitimate. The missionaries themselves, when returned home, are publicly recognized, and impart a fresh and powerful impulse by their narratives.

One of these formal public receptions took place at the late British Conference. We judge of it to have been affecting. Ten missionaries were present—of various age and service—from South Africa, India, Demarara, Bahamas, Newfoundland, Ceylon, etc. It was a large place and large congregation. After religious exercise by the Conference officials, they were introduced and made a free and easy talk. Thus one of them:

The Rev. Edward J. Hardey, from the city of Mysore, said: I am a child of unnumbered mercies, and from my earliest infancy was the subject of constant prayer. At twelve and a half years of age I was taken to a class-meeting by my now sainted mother, and at thirteen years of age I was made the subject of saving and sanctifying grace. The evidence of my acceptance with God in Christ, was as clear and distinct as it has been at any subsequent period in my Christian course. For a year, and until I left my father's roof, my peace and joy were almost uninterrupted. I mention this for the encouragement of young persons, that they may never fear to speak of their early religious enjoyments. My desires to go as a missionary to India burned as a fire in my bones, but I never made them known to others until the fitting time had come to offer myself for the work of the Ministry. At the age of twenty-two I was received into the Theological Institution, and in March, 1842, I sailed for India. After spending nearly a year in close study of the Canarese language, I was laid upon the bed of sickness, and for five days and nights I lay in a raging fever, without medical aid. I was brought to the very gate of death, but it pleased the Lord to restore me to health, and from that time I have been permitted to devote all my energies of body and mind to the great work of calling the idolatrous Hindus to repentance, and to pointing them to the cross of Christ. I have known much of both the joys and sorrows incident to the life of a missionary in the East, but I owe it to divine grace to testify that many of my most solitary hours have been those of richest Christian enjoyment. My study has frequently been to me the house of God, and the presence chamber of Deity. Never shall I forget a watch-night I once held in Goobbee, when no one was present besides Mr. Walker, myself, and God. Oh, the enjoyment, the pure enjoyment of those hours, I trust never to forget; and I am persuaded God suits his blessings to our peculiar circumstances—if this were not the case you would frequently hear of fallen missionaries, of lost grace, and of a ruined cause. I have often thought, since my return to England, that it is not so surprising that your ministers maintain their position in the divine life, surrounded by every gracious influence; but it is surprising that your missionaries maintain their standing surrounded as they are by every evil influence, solitary, alone, without sympathy, and many times forgotten at home in your prayers. Mr. Sanderson has already spoken of the great apathy of the people of Mysore in regard to the Gospel, and has shown how slow they are to acknowledge their responsibility to God as to their actions. I have many times found that every representation of heaven and its glories—of hell and its torments, have utterly failed to arouse the spiritual part of the Hindu: But I never recollect a story of the cross, and the redemption wrought out by the death of Christ, to have failed in arresting the attention. I have many times seen the silent tear steal down the face of the otherwise careless Hindu. As the time is very limited, I shall only mention old Daniel, of Goobbee, as an example of the power of divine grace to save the Hindu from his idolatry, and to direct his mind and thoughts to Christ. In 1843, he and all his family received at our hands Christian baptism. Daniel has suffered much temporarily by becoming a Christian; but the removal of your missionaries from Goobbee, has been the greatest trial to him he has ever known. When he heard I was about to sail for England, Daniel walked fifty miles in the twenty-four hours to take his leave of me. He had no sooner entered the room where I was sitting, than he fell with his face upon my feet, and sobbed and wept for some minutes. It was with difficulty I could induce him to rise to his feet. Upon rising, he lifted his hands and eyes to heaven, and said in Canarese—"O God, our Missionary is now going to England. What shall we now do? Where shall we now go? Who will now preach to us the Gospel of Jesus?" He then offered up a most fervent prayer for the preservation of my health, and my speedy return with others to watch over the flock. Just as I was leaving, old Daniel said, 'Sir, I have now only one fear, and that is, when I die, there will be no Missionary to commit my body to the grave." Daniel cannot read, but he has had his sons educated in our schools, and till twelve o'clock at night he will hear them read, and will pray with his family. So correct is his knowledge of the Gospels, that I have frequently observed that, when at family prayers, I have made a mistake in reading, he has corrected me. Old Daniel, in becoming a Christian, utterly renounced Hinduism, and brought his Christianity into his every day walk. The people of the Mysore will never yoke their bullocks on the Monday, but always on the Sunday. Upon becoming a Christian, old Daniel at once determined not to yoke his bullocks on Sunday, but Monday. When the villagers perceived this they walked round his fields and, cursed them; they walked round his house and imprecated the curse of the gods upon his family. That year was one in which the rains were less than usual. One day a heavy cloud was seen, and all eyes were cast upon it, hoping that it might fall in showers upon their fields; but upon Daniel's field alone did the rain descend, and that year Daniel's crops were the best in the village. The time has come, my brethren, when you ought to read every book you can obtain upon India. India is becoming the most interesting portion of the world. There are in Hindostan 150 millions of blood-bought individuals, 100 millions of whom are subjects of our most gracious Queen. These are looking to you for the light of the Gospel. They occupy fifty countries, and speak 35 distinct languages; and there are only 600 European Missionaries in India, and each Missionary has at present, as his proportion, 372,000 souls; and if you only give one Missionary to every 10,000 people, still you must send 15,000 to India alone. It will help you to an idea of our difficulties to be assured that I can produce near 700 castes who have never eat together and never intermarry. Brethren, pray for us, that we may be preserved with the life of God in our souls, and especially for your Indian Missionaries, that we may be preserved blameless unto the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ. I love the land of my birth, but I love India far better, strange as it may appear; and I trust I shall be permitted to return to my labors early next year, and I trust to live and die a Wesleyan Missionary.

VILLAGES OF EGYPT.

The following is from one of a series of letters in the Congregationalist, written during a visit to the East, by Prof. Upham:

It is the small villages rather than the large towns which constitute the peculiarity of the Nile, and which constantly arrest the attention of the traveler. It is undoubtedly true that they lose much of their attraction when closely inspected, but they are certainly very picturesque when seen in the distance. For hours I have sat in the boat and looked upon them. There is poetry in their very location. They are almost always built in a grove of palm-trees. The palm-tree itself is a very impressive object. Tall, straight, crowned with a tuft of long waving leaves, it has a lofty and meditative aspect, as if it were conversing with the spirits of the air. In front of the village is the Nile; and south of Cairo they have a background of mountains. The eastern mountains, with rugged but imperishable walls, guard them from the Syrian desert. The mountains on the western side protect them from the encroachments of the deserts of Lybia. Many villages have canals near them, running back from the river towards the mountains. Their high banks form a road. Oxen, camels, flocks of sheep and goats, are constantly passing and repassing. Narrow paths lead from different parts of the village to water. Women and girls are seen going to and from the river with water-jars on their heads. They are dressed in simple but decent garments of blue cotton, and are modest and cheerful in their appearance. In many instances they are adorned with neck-laces, ear-rings and bracelets. There are folds for the sheep and cattle in the villages; and in nearly all of them are large dove-cotes. The doves in countless numbers are flying about. Dogs are keeping sentinel on the flat roofs of the houses. Oxen are turning the wheels of the sakhia, by which the fields are watered. At times is heard the sound of the millstone, which is turned sometimes by oxen, but more frequently by hand. Groups of unwashed children, with their loud laugh, are playing in the dust of the lofty banks, or at the brink of the river. Such is the scene which repeats itself almost every hour.

THE SILENCE OF SCRIPTURE.

Nor is it only what Scripture says, but its very silence, which is instructive for us. It was said by one wise man of another, that more might be learned from his questions than from another man's answers. With yet higher truth might it be said, that the silence of Scripture is oftentimes more instructive than the speech of other books; so that it has been likened to "a dial in which the shadow as well as the light informs us." For example of this, how full of meaning to us, that we have, nothing told us of the life of our blessed Lord between the twelfth and thirtieth years; how significant that absolute silence which the Gospel maintains concerning all that period; that those years in fact have no history, nothing for the sacred writer to record. How much is implied herein! the calm ripening of his human powers—the commonness of his wait—the long preparation in secret, before he began his open ministry. What testimony is here, if we will note it aright, against all our striving and snatching at hasty results; our impatience, our desire to glitter before the world, against all which tempts so many to pluck the unripe fruits of their minds, and to turn that into the season of a stunted and premature harvest, which should have been the season of patient sowing, of an earnest culture, and a silent ripening of their powers.

How pregnant with meaning may that be which appears at first sight, only an accidental omission! Such an omission it might appear that the prodigal, who, while yet in a far country, had determined, among other things which he would say to his father, to say, "Make me as one of thy hired servants," when he reaches his father's feet, when he hangs on his father's neck, says all the rest which he had determined, but says not this. We might take this at first, for a fortuitous omission; but indeed what deep things are taught us here! This desire to be made as a hired servant, this wish to be kept at a certain distance, this refusal to reclaim the fullness of a child's privileges, was the one turbid and troubled element of his repentance. How instructive then its omission—that, saying all else which he had meditated, he says not this. What a lesson for every penitent—in other words, for every man. We may learn from this wherein the true growth of faith and humility consists; how he that has growth is these can endure to be fully and freely blessed; to accept all, even when he most strongly feels that he has forfeited all; that only pride and working of self-righteousness and evil stand in the way of reclaiming of every blessing which the sinner had lost, but which God is waiting and willing to restore. GREAT MEN AND SMALL CHRISTIANS.

"Why is it," said one in my hearing, "that great men commonly make small Christians?" By great men, he meant those who are superior in intellect, wealth, or station to the mass of men. The remark led me to look at facts within the range of my observation.

Judge A. was a member of the Presbyterian Church. He was wealthy, and held a respectable judicial station. He was grave and dignified in his department, a regular attendant upon public worship, and a cheerful contributor to the funds of the church. He was well pleased when all was quiet, though souls were not converted. He was never seen at a prayer-meeting. He never conversed on the subject of personal religion. He was what my friend would call a small Christian.

Mr. B. was an enterprising merchant. He made a profession of religion while he was a clerk, and was for some years an active and useful man. He had an excellent gift in prayer, and he frequently went with the officers of the church in their visits from house to house. He went into business for himself and was prosperous. He accumulated property rapidly. His business became extended, and he excused himself from visiting, and began to neglect the prayer-meeting. At length he ceased to attend it altogether. He would give money to promote the cause of religion; he could not give his time. He was honest and obliging; went to meeting on the Sabbath, except an occasional absence when business was very pressing; and gave whenever called upon for the support of the gospel, and for most objects of benevolence. "Go to Mr. B.," said one who presented a subscription paper; "he will give you something, if for nothing else than to get rid of you." He was what my friend would call a great man and a small Christian.

Mr. C. was somewhat distinguished in political life. He was not brought into the church till he was about forty years old. His conversion was a matter of great joy to the people of God; for he was a man of decided ability, and it was hoped that his influence would be of great advantage to the cause.

At first they had great reason to believe that their hopes would be realized. Even the political enemies of Mr. C. acknowledged that a great change had taken place in him. The first prayer that he offered in public made a deep impression.

He was soon invited to become an officer in the church, but declined the invitation. Political excitement increased, and Mr. C. seemed to lose his interest in religion. His conduct was irreproachably moral, yet all felt that he exerted little positive influence in favor of the cause of evangelical piety. He would come under my friend's category.

Mr. D. was a wealthy farmer. He early became a member of the church, and was generally esteemed as an honest and benevolent man. He was kind to the poor, and very liberal to the minister. He had prayers in his family on Sabbath mornings, and on other days when a minister was staying with him. He did not approve of giving much to benevolent societies; indeed, it was sometimes said, that he gave as little as he could, and keep his standing with his brethren. He had too much to do to attend evening meetings, and was very apt to sleep during the services on the Sabbath. He was the owner of nearly five hundred acres of land, and was, according to my friend's idea, a great man: he was also a small Christian.

Ought these things so to be? Ought those who are capable of exerting the greatest influence in the cause of religion, to be content to pass along without influence? I commend to all such the parable of the talents. [N. Y. Observer.

WAYS OF SPEAKING OF THE DEPARTED.

We were sorry to notice in the wording of several of the obituaries which have recently been sent to us for publication, a carelessness of language in regard to the condition of the departed, which, while it falls in with the popular mode of speech and belief, is at the same time both erroneous and harmful, and coming as it does from those who, knowing better, have, unconsciously perhaps to themselves, fallen into the fashion of the religious people about them, and instead of leading, been led, we have thought it not unworth our while to call attention to the subject, for it ought, when pointed out, to be done away with. Thus we read of ——, that he was "removed from his labors on earth to his reward in heaven." On which one is bid to ask, has the resurrection passed already, and has the whole man, body and soul, having undergone the judgment of the righteous Judge, and been reckoned among the righteous, entered on his glory? When the soul is separated from the body by what we call death, it enters upon a definitive and unusual condition of being; carrying with it its faculties of pain and enjoyment, its knowledge and its powers, its hopes and its fears, it is of course conscious of its existence, and is competent of joy or misery. But it is in an imperfect and transitory state, just as the body is which it has left behind to moulder and decay. It is not the soul which is to be supremely happy or supremely miserable in that future world which is yet to come, but the man, the compound being, his body and soul. No Christian can refuse to assent to this, which he professes to believe whenever he recites his creed. "I believe in the resurrection of the body and the life everlasting." Such are our words, and we would do well to ponder on their meaning, in order to avoid all such indefinite and misleading expressions as those we are alluding to. Men do not go at death from their labors on earth to their reward in heaven. They do not go to heaven at all; but to that place of departed spirits, wherever situated, where the souls of the righteous have their foretaste of happiness, and are prepared for that glory which shall be revealed, when their Lord returns to take vengeance of His enemies, and they, having passed the gate of death, rise to a blessed resurrection, and go with him into the Heaven prepared before all time for them of the Father. DRINKING IN ENGLAND.

Dr. Bailey, of the National Era, now in England, writes home from London:

I have never before been so profoundly impressed with the policy of the Maine Liquor Law, never before felt so deeply grateful to the persevering advocates of Temperance in my own country. Intoxicating liquor in some form or other is almost universal in London. You cannot spend a sociable evening with a friend, without the decanter being produced; and if you call at a clergyman's house, you are asked to refresh yourself with a glass of wine. It is useless to attempt any reform among the poorer classes while this bad habit prevails among respectable and wealthy people. This is a lesson long ago learned in America; but they have yet to learn it in England. They do not recognize the truth, that drinking in high places encourages it in low places; that the common use of intoxicating spirits is in itself an evil, an abuse, that temperate leads to intemperate drinking, and is appealed to in mitigation or excuse of its enormity. Rugged schools, dormitories for the poor, bath-houses for the working-classes—are all doing a good work; but they can accomplish very little, comparatively, so long as the poor spend their earnings, waste their substance, and make brutes of themselves by gin-drinking. The Temperance movement in England is far behind the times.

EXPEDITIONS FOR LIBERIA.—It is proposed to dispatch three emigrant vessels to Liberia as follows:

1st. From Baltimore, November 1, with persons from Virginia, Maryland, and the surrounding States.

2d. From New York, November 10, with those who apply from Pennsylvania, New York, and the East.

3d. From New Orleans, in December, in which parties from the extreme West and Southwest will embark.

As the effort to send these will bring into requisition all the resources which can be obtained, it is hoped that our friends will not relax, but rather give new vigor to their operations. The disposition to remove is daily increasing among the people of color, and all who desire the improvement of their condition, or Africa's redemption, should go with more burning zeal and mightier resolution. [Colonization Herald.

AMBITION.—He who would acquire fame must not show himself afraid of censure. The fear of censure is the death of genius. He who falters in apprehension of the opinion of his neighbor, has already put himself in the hands of a master; and the genius which commands the keys of the future is always an outlawry. To put one's wings into the keeping of another who has no wings, is certainly to have them clipped close to the shoulders. How should he who is of journeys by air with the eagle, who has always pursued his way along the earth with the snail? That audacity, which is one of the essentials of genius, has always laughed at what the conventional world would describe as decorum. Genius is Discovery! How should it admit the trammeling of its eyes to those by whom no discoveries have yet been made. [Ex

NEW ORLEANS:

Saturday Morning, September 24.

Yet Another.—Just before going to press we copied the Mobile Advertiser of 21st instant, containing this item:

"Rev. Preacher of the Methodist Church, aged thirty-third, died yesterday from the prevailing fever.—Rev. J. W. Starr. His funeral will take place this morning, at half-past nine o'clock, from the St. Francis street Methodist Church."

Brother S. was a young man of much promise—the son of Rev. J. W. Starr, Sen., of the Alabama Conference. He graduated a year ago at Emory College, Georgia; and at its last session was received a probationer in the Conference.

Ministers in Mobile.—Our brethren have suffered much in Mobile. Brother Hearn had a severe attack of the yellow fever soon after its appearance. We are pleased to be able to state that he is recovering; as also Bros. Starr and Lovelady,—who were sick later. The last, however, lives in bereavement. Mrs. Lovelady died of the prevailing epidemic on the 6th instant, and her infant son the day before.

Weather.—The boreau breath of Autumn is heading after the long lassitude of summer. It promises an early frost. Our exchanges tell that crowds are hurrying Southward—the cold weather causing the watering places to be well nigh deserted: cars and hotels full of passengers, en route for New Orleans. We hope, for their good and ours, they will find a stopping-place outside, till frost. People are still dying of yellow fever. Just now it would be suicidal for the stranger to come. Let us have no more fresh food for it. Wait till frost.

Sunday School Statistics.—The preachers are respectfully and earnestly requested by the editor of the S. S. Visitor, to make full returns of Sunday School statistics at their respective Conferences. State the number of Schools, Scholars, Superintendents, volumes in Library, copies of Visitors taken, and money raised for the publication of Sunday School Books, during the year. He will be much obliged to the Secretaries or Committees of Conferences for full and prompt reports.

California Camp Meetings.—These meetings suit California, and there is no lack of them in the programme of this year. Rev. W. R. Gober, P. E., of San Francisco District, writing July 29, says:

"I go to the Southern part of the District next week. Appointments are made for two Camp Meetings in the Valley below the Bay. Two or three more will also be held this side the Bay, in September."

A number of ministers of the New School Presbyterian Church, in Virginia, have held a meeting, and passed resolutions, declaring that if the subject of slavery be again introduced into the General Assembly of that Church, the Southern members will immediately withdraw, and form a separate organization. Some of the Southern ministers are in favor of an immediate secession.

Fleeing with horror from the thought that we are unfit to die, if God should take us this day and hour out of the world, keeps off the discovery of our true state more than anything else, and fatally hinders our preparation for it.

Rev. Stephen Patterson, Rector of Christ Church, in Vicksburg, and one of the editors of the Church Herald, died in that city on the 14th instant, of yellow fever.

The Tensas (La.) Herald and Jefferson (Miss.) Gazette of the 15th inst. says:

A heavy shower fell in Waterproof and vicinity on Monday afternoon. The rains which fall now cannot do the planter much good, but on the contrary may do much harm by retarding the picking of cotton, which, we are told, is opening very fast.

Revival.—Quite a revival has taken place in the Methodist Church in Waterproof during the past week. Some seventeen or eighteen persons have joined the church.

Relief Association of the City of Jefferson.—This organization, although not of long standing, ranks by no means below the standard in the amount of good it has already done. Not quite a month has passed since its formation, and they have had under treatment 224 cases, losing but seven of these—a success which is, perhaps, without a parallel during the experience of the present season.

The Association has not now means sufficient to carry out its charitable purposes. It has upon its hands, in a convalescent condition, 210 persons—57 adults and 153 children, besides 21 cases of fever under treatment. It also affords support to a class of persons rendered helpless by the ravages of the epidemic—widows and orphans. It thus appears that the Association is under a heavy expense, and it will be readily seen that the amount of its funds is entirely inadequate to meet that expense, when we say that the statement below exhibits the entire strength of their resources:

From Mayor of the City of New Orleans	$250
From Finance Committee	500
From Howard Ass'n, in grocery tickets	250
From sundry donors	85
Total	$1083

If it can be said that every great evil has its train of good, perhaps the terrible scourge which has been inflicted upon our city has produced one beneficial effect, in awakening and bringing into action the better feelings of men, the sympathies with suffering humanity. Certainly it has produced many charitable associations similar to the above, here and elsewhere, and they should not be permitted to fail in their objects from the lack of funds.

REVIVAL INTELLIGENCE.

Marshall Circuit, Texas.—There is a fine revival on Marshall Circuit, under the labor of Brother Bellamy, the preacher in charge. Between twenty and thirty have professed religion recently, and the revival influence is still going on.

September. J. B. Tullis.

Gainesville District, Ala.—The Lord is reviving us in many parts of this work. We closed a meeting at Fayville one week since of much interest; quite a number were at the altar during the occasion. Several professed and united with the church; but the most interesting feature was the revival among the membership. A few weeks before we held a meeting of similar interest at Sumterville.

But the one of deepest interest was in Green Circuit—"At Sardis"—Rev. W. H. Spence, preacher in charge. It closed on the 10th instant, and was one of the most interesting occasions that I have had the pleasure of attending for years. It was emphatically a revival of the primitive cast. The church was greatly blessed; lukewarm and backsliding members were greatly stirred up and reclaimed, and some thirty-five added to the church. At the close, there were some thirteen at the altar as penitents. May God more abundantly bless the people of Sardis.

September 12. T. Moore.

Carthage Circuit, Miss.—We closed yesterday one of the best Camp Meetings it has been my good fortune to witness. It commenced on the 1st instant, at our new ground, three miles west of Carthage, the county site. Our people have done nobly, and I avail myself of this opportunity to express thanks to the friends and neighbors for their liberality in aiding by their labor and money in the erection of the arbor and other public work. May God bless them an hundred fold.

Our ministering brethren poured in from various points, armed and equipped, to do battle under the great Captain of our Salvation. From the very commencement of our meeting, there was manifest evidence of good being accomplished. The work of the Lord began on Friday night, in good earnest. Mourners were weeping and crying at the altar of prayer for mercy, and many of the brethren and sisters were made happy in the love of God.

On Saturday and Sabbath, as the mass of souls increased, to swell the already large congregation, the intense interest for their salvation appeared to increase, and as the men of God would stand from time to time, as mouths for Him between the living and the dead, some of them seemed to be more than ordinarily clothed with the unction from on high. The holy Spirit came down, the love of God was shed abroad in the heart, and the united voices of new-born souls to God, mingled with their friends, arose in shouts and praises to Him that liveth for ever and ever. Many backsliders were reclaimed, the Church built up, and as well as could be ascertained, about fifty whites, (number blacks not known) professed to know God in the forgiving of sins. 27 whites joined the church, and 25 blacks.

September. B. J. Woodward.

Barbour Circuit, Ala.—Revival in some portions of this Circuit. The local brethren are, most of them, at their post like good watchmen. One meeting, in particular, I must mention. The second Sabbath in August, in connection with my brothers Haynes and Perry, I commenced a meeting in Pike county, under a bush arbor, among poor people, some distance from a church. The people, some of them, would come walking and praying, and go off shouting. The meeting continued until Friday, and ended in the conversion of numbers. No doubt but Heaven rejoiced to witness such a scene. We have received in the church this year about two hundred and fifty. Pray for us!

W. H. Ardis.

P. S. Our missionary work is not altogether neglected. We have had three meetings: one was last Sabbath, which is going on yet. We have taken in cash and subscription, $418 30, viz.: Peniel, $315; Mount Olivet, $49 70; Springhill, $54 60. Eight other churches yet.

Jones' Valley Circuit, Ala.—We have just closed our Camp-Meeting at Pleasant Hill, where at least sixty persons professed saving faith in Christ, fifty-five whites and fourteen blacks were added to the church.

At this meeting we have had the aid of Brothers Koger, Blue and McLeod, whose labors will never be forgotten by many who attended.

On Sunday, at 11 o'clock, after a missionary sermon from Brother Blue, our collection was taken up, amounting to $115. And let me say that our subsequent success at that meeting was the result, in part, of our missionary meeting, for up to that time the work moved on tardily, whereas, from that hour it went on with increased interest.

September 3. Geo. F. Ellis.

North Louisiana.—As I have not seen any notice in the Advocate of the progress of religion in North Louisiana, permit me to say to the friends of Zion, that there is much interest being felt of late upon that subject originating principally under the labors of Brother Saenders, P. Elder, of our District. Three sermons by him, one at the Quarterly Meeting at Mount Zion, on the Trenton Circuit, and two at Summerville, Castor Circuit, have had the blessed effect of arousing the laity of the church, as well as the local preachers, and prospects are much brighter than I have seen them for several years. Bro. Crowson, of the Trenton Circuit, is much engaged in the work, and with the assistance of some of the local preachers, is holding very interesting two days meetings, and every meeting I attend or hear from is attended wonderfully with the power of God in the conviction of sinners. We have abundant reason to praise God that backsliders (not a few) are being reclaimed. May the good Lord carry on the work.

September 8. Isaac Collins.

Choctaw Agency.—We closed our Quarterly Meeting for the Mushula-tubbee Circuit this morning; twenty-five were taken into the church. It would have done your editorial soul no little good to have witnessed the whole process. The Choctaws, for the most part, come into the church upon their knees, with floods of penitential tears.

September 5. W. L. McAlister.

Lafayette Circuit, Ala.—God has revived the work in our Circuit. There have been some 125 conversions, and about 100 joined the M. E. Church, South. Let God's name be praised.

J. W. Starr.

September 15.

Demopolis District, Ala.—The Linden Camp Meeting has just closed—one of the best I ever attended. For good order, day and night, unsurpassed.

From our best information, there were about one hundred conversions, fifty five of them whites. One young man who was converted there last year, has devoted himself to the Ministry. He was present and preached, and has now offered himself as a Missionary to China. God only knows how much good he may yet do, if faithful.

While the Master of the vineyard is calling so many from the Alabama Conference this year to their final rest, will not the brethren pray that from this meeting He may raise up some to stand upon the walls of our Zion?

DISSATISFACTION WITH INFANT BAPTISM—ITS CAUSE.

Mr. Editor—The point to which I wish to call attention just now is, who is to blame, when our members become dissatisfied about their Infant Baptism? That dissatisfaction does exist in some cases cannot be doubted. How does it originate? And who is responsible for it? These are important questions, and should be guarded. In answer to the question, How does such dissatisfaction originate? we give a four-fold answer, and

1. Parents who have their children baptized, do not manifest that regard for it they should. If they would take a small portion of time in instructing their children upon this subject the evil would not be as it is. For it is to be lamented, that many parents, after attending to the important duty of having their little ones baptized, say but little or nothing to them about it, as they approximate maturity. Let such parents take this to heart.

2. When grown up the individual does not examine the subject for himself. The vast amount of ignorance among the people upon this subject is astonishing. Ask one of them to give you an argument, and especially to refute the opinion of an opponent, and he is almost blank. And why? simply because he will not read and study for himself. Let such ponder this, in view of his responsibility to the maker of the Covenant with Abraham.

3. The ministry in our church is also greatly at fault here. Do they contend as earnestly for the faith once delivered to the Saints as they should? Do we preach upon doctrinal and controverted points as often as we should? And especially do we where the subject of Baptism is agitated? Oh! but that good, easy kind of minister says, "You had better preach holiness of heart and life, etc., and not be distracting the church with controversy upon such a subject. It is of little moment—better be trying to save sinners;" and other such excuses that might be mentioned. Now, Mr. Editor, I must confess with such ministers—not to say watchmen—I have but little patience. Not that I am so great a controvertist—for I never preach upon these points only as I, as a watchman, see it especially necessary to the well-being of my flock. "Save sinners" indeed! Had you not as well try to save them already in the church? Is there not as great reward awaiting the minister who "confirms the souls of the disciples" as to the one who "converts the sinner from the error of his way?"

And then, should he not remember his solemn ordination vows, to take the oversight of his flock, preaching the word of God faithfully? and that of driving away all strange and erroneous doctrines from his congregations? Let him view this as in sight of the judgment day. This will be the more apparent if—

4. You consider the fact that immersionists are studiously endeavoring to put down Infant Baptism. They know full well that so long as this is prominent, that it—Infant Baptism—will be full of all of Dr. Howell's evils upon the Baptist Church. Why, sir, many of them cannot even squint at preaching without having "Immersion, believers, Baptism," etc. in every sermon. If they take for a text, "Ye will not come to me that ye might have life." That's the text for immersion. "Ye will not come unto me," by immersion, "that ye might have life," is their paraphrase. Nothing plainer in all the book of God than that!

Now, sir, who is to blame for the dissatisfaction of our members? Do we not suffer these men of water to go on at too great a length before we touch the subject? If they were not eternally ringing it into the people's ears. "You must follow the Saviour into the liquid grave." "Be buried with him in Baptism," and all such stuff, and when such be the case, we would do our duty in the premises, I am confident, you would live a long time before you again saw it conspicuously emblazoned in the papers "Still they come."

But just so long as the affair stands as above stated, I expect to hear them rejoicing over such proselytes.

Enough for the present,

J. A. Clement.

METHODIST PRESS.

Various Plans.—The Western Advocate has been some time consecutively discussing one subject as it now bears upon our church. The Editor concedes there is need of improvement and adjustment to improvement. Certain influences have disturbed the old plan under which the Methodist preachers were trained. These owe their origin, principally, in sending our preachers singly into pastoral charges, the general abandonment of week-day appointments, a higher state of mental culture in demand now than formerly, etc.

But what is proposed to meet the case? He states three classes of opinions that would give rise to three plans of procedure:

"The first set of opinions goes to say, that our present Disciplinary plan is the very best, and should be sustained by all necessary adjustments requisite to carry it out.

"The second class of views goes to say, that the Biblical departments in our colleges are sufficient to carry out or amend our present procedure in ministerial culture.

"A third class of persons think that Biblical schools [Theological Seminaries] independent of colleges, is the best mode of preparing our rising ministry to meet the present state of things in the Church and world.

After admitting that in respect to the first set of opinions, in regard to ministerial culture, all must admit that there are now no new circumstances in the Church which greatly interfere with its practical operation, and giving the others a pretty fair showing, he declares:

"We prefer our old mode of teaching; but, to carry it out there must be adaptations employed to suit the altered circumstances in which we are placed. We believe Methodism is fully susceptible of such an adjustment. We have no fears or alarms in consequence of such adaptations. Let our wise men go to work and meet the case, and the God of the Church will direct them."

As one step of progress in the old mode, the Editor recommends, and we esteem it a very fair recommendation, if the wisdom of the Church adheres to the old mode:

"Let a part, if not the whole, of the preparatory, literary and scientific attainments now required by the course of study, be acquired before the young preacher is received on probation. At present, English grammar, geography, natural philosophy, moral science, general history, rhetoric, logic, etc., are placed among the studies of young men after they are received into the travelling ministry. Some have already studied these, others have not. Now, if the young man has these to learn, and study divinity at the same time, is it not too much an incumbrance on him? Few young men can do this and be preacher in charge. Now, would it not be best to require, at least, a good part of these studies to be followed before entrance into the ministry, and the more especially where there are now schools every where in which these are taught?"

The Pittsburgh Advocate brings to light a new call for "circuit riders?"

"The Cincinnati Christian Herald urges the necessity of an itinerant ministry for the Presbyterian Church in portions of the West. He thinks that many vacant churches, the number of which is constantly increasing, can in no other way be supplied. The plan he proposes is, that every pastor and supply should do some itinerant work in his own neighborhood, and thus as far as possible meet the wants of destitute places. He would have the minister take along with him half of his session to assist in these itinerant labors; leaving the other half to take care of the flock at home. By this plan he thinks his (the pastor's) own people would grow in grace faster than they do at present, being surfeited with truth. The plan, however, is to be voluntary; to carry it out, churches are to consent to give up part of the time of their ministers for the sake of the destitute around them. A most excellent plan, if it can be executed. But we fear our brethren will find it to fail in the voluntary principle on which it depends. Why not form these scattered and destitute congregations into circuits, and place on each a young man wholly devoted to it? If these circuits be judiciously formed, and the ministry possess the spirit of its divine calling, the people will not be slow in acknowledging by their acts that "the laborer is worthy of his hire."

The Editor of the Richmond Advocate gives us one of his agreeable letters (Sept. 8) from this young Conference, which has just held its third session, at Clarksburg. It has four districts and stations, forty-five preachers, and reports an increase of 350 members. Of the Conference and its prospects, the Editor says:

"We were introduced to the Conference on Friday morning; and received a cordial welcome from its members. Bishop Capers occupied the chair; and business was progressing steadily along the prescribed plan of operations. But 'Minute Business,' as the phrase goes, although quite necessary and very important, is not always very interesting. I could, therefore, look about me, read the book of life opened before me, each face a page for study. There are not many of them, but if they are weak as regards number, they are strong in physical development. They are stalwart, strong-minded, resolute men—such as nature always makes in the mountains. There are great hearts in those large bodies; and strong truth-loving minds in those capacious well-formed heads. So we read the first reading; and after study, observation and intercourse confirmed the reading. They have a great and difficult work to accomplish in reclaiming the soil from the abolitionized influence of Northern Methodism, and they will do it. Public sentiment and sympathy are with them; and the laity, heretofore beguiled and misled, are beginning to discern that their true position, and real relations to the Church, as their civil rights and social rank, are with the South.

Our clever exchange, the Philadelphia Advocate, has lost its moderation, and degenerated into radicalism, and the root is bitter. It beats the Methodist Protestant even in assailing the pastoral relation, as existing in the "old church." The candid reader sees, of course, caricature in the words "set apart to govern," etc.: but the Editor seems to think "a distinct clergy" might almost as well be dispensed with. The examples cited, however, are decidedly interesting and inviting:

"The society of Friends or Quakers, and the societies of Tunkers and Mennonists, who are, in some parts of the country very numerous, have sustained themselves for two hundred years or more, without the aid of a distinct clergy, set apart to govern, and to be paid for governing. What has been done by Quakers, Tunkers, and Mennonists, might, if it were necessary, be done by Methodists.

"In the State of Kentucky, the Baptists are more numerous than all other religionists put together. The number of regular Calvanistic Baptists is, or was a few years ago, 60,000; and the number of Campbellites and other irregulars, 40,000; in all, 100,000; while the number of Methodists is but 40,000, of Presbyterians, 12,000, and of Protestant Episcopalians less than 2000. Yet but few of the Baptist preachers receive regular salaries, or devote their time exclusively to the work of the ministry. If the Baptists have, in this way, taken the State of Kentucky, we can conceive it quite possible that the Methodists might, in the same way, have taken the State of Maryland, and many other States in this Union."

The Oneida Conference could not finish up the minutes right, without some slavery resolutions, the second and third of which are,

That no more slaveholders should be admitted into the M. E. Church.

That we request the next General Conference to specify an early day when slaveholding in the M. E. Church shall cease.

The Editor of the Christian Advocate and Journal thinks even this high ground is a notch or two under last year's position. Quoting the full preamble and resolutions, he says with a triumphal air and logical force:

"The above resolutions express the agony of despairing ultraism, and have not even the merit of consistency to sustain them. In their resolutions of the preceding year, the Conference contended for Mr. Hosmer's proposed rule of Discipline for the expulsion of all slaveholders from the Church, "whatever be their character or circumstances." And this demand upon the next General Conference was based upon the assumption that "slaveholding is a sin under all circumstances." But if this dogma be adhered to, how can those who hold it admit of any compromise, as is proposed in the third resolution, embodied in the report of the Committee on Slavery, and adopted by the Conference? Does the Conference propose to the Church to tolerate sin for a season? Not to prohibit it at once, but only to name "an early," though future "day," when it shall cease. Certainly, if "slaveholding is a sin"—and and the greatest and vilest of all sins—"under all circumstances," the Hosmer rule of discipline is imperative upon every Christian Church. All slaveholders should be absolutely and immediately expelled. But did not the ultras of the Conference see that their sweeping dogmas could not be maintained?"

After lecturing them and their allies, and stating that the leaders had disavowed all idea of secession, in which they might be sincere, Dr. Bond adds, on the general subject of secession:

"Again, are the leaders of this reckless movement aware that it is now impossible to determine for themselves what to do when the crisis comes? They know not what the chagrin of disappointment, the deep mortification of defeat, will produce in respect to their future action. We remember that the reformers of 1827 made the same protestations in regard to secession. One of the principal leaders of the movement, when such a purpose was charged, replied, with apparent indignation, that reformers were not such fools as to take such a suicidal step. It would defeat their own object, which was to reform the M. E. Church government. "If," said he, "you were at work in your garden, and saw some mischievous hogs that had crept into the premises, how would you proceed in trying to get them out? Would you go outside to do so, or would you stay within the enclosure?" Thus reformers reasoned aforetime; and our ultra abolitionist brethren reason so still. Yet some of the reformers seceded, and some so conducted themselves as to compel expulsion. Their first purpose failed. The Church obstinately refused to be reformed after their fashion, and they kindly essayed to show us by example how much better a Church organization they would have made for us, had they been permitted. The result is before the world. We repeat it: the leaders of the present movement may be sincere in disavowing any intention to effect a secession; but they cannot pledge themselves not to do so, because the measures they pursue with such heat may produce circumstances, feelings, and ultimately necessities, which they cannot now foresee. So far we may go in the judgment of the most enlarged charity. But it must be also allowed, that if there are any with whom secession is a purpose already formed—an end already anticipated—it would be bad policy to avow it prematurely; and we have no right to expect such a disclosure. We are compelled to look only to the natural consequences of their measures."

[For the N. O. Christian Advocate.]

WHO HAS THE RIGHT OF AN APPEAL?

The fifth restriction laid upon the General Conference is: "They shall not do away the privileges of our ministers or preachers of trial by a committee, and of an appeal: neither shall they do away the privilege of our members of trial before the society, or by a committee, and of an appeal."

Now, if the accused minister or preacher, or member, evades the trial by absenting himself, and the committee or society, or Annual Conference believes that the evidence is not only presumptive, but very positive, and decide that the person is guilty, and expulsion follow, has the evading expelled person the right of an appeal under the circumstances?

If the right be granted to such an one, what security have we, as a church, against continued agitation and trouble? As no new evidence can be introduced in an appeal, and the appeal of such a case is entertained, what good can be expected to result from entertaining it?

My opinion is, that such persons have not the right of an appeal granted them, if the discipline be wisely interpreted.

I have written this because of a notice published in one of our papers by a man who has been expelled from the ministry, by one of our Conferences, stating that he intended to appeal to the next General Conference, when he evaded every investigation and trial by absenting himself. Is he justly entitled to an appeal?

THOUGHTS ON CHURCH RADICALISM.

Mr. Editor—As criticism and croaking are indulged in by some, with your permission, I propose to come in for a part of the privilege. In some things, I am a young American; but in others I must say that I am an old fogy.

For thirty years past, I have been no careless observer of our Beloved Methodism. I have eagerly watched her progress, and am clearly convinced, that our doctrines and economy, for the propagation of scriptural holiness, will not suffer in comparison with that of any other denomination; yea, that they are the very best ever used. Her march has been wonderful, and her achievements great. That much has been done, and that much is still being done, to spread holiness over those lands, all will admit. But are we, both as preachers and people, doing all that we can or ought to do? I am too sensibly convinced, that we are falling far short, both of our abilities and obligations.

The time was, when, as a church, we were poor, and obscure, in the main possessing a plain, zealous, and uneducated ministry and membership; yet glorious were the results attendant upon our well-spent efforts, to do good, and save souls.

It should be to us as a church, a question of no small import, are we increasing in usefulness as we increase in members, wealth, intelligence and influence? In my opinion, we are far from it. I am well aware that we are doing much in the dissemination of piety, but I am at the same time fully as sensible, that we are far behind what we might be.

In former days the glory and potency of Methodism consisted, to a great extent, in the zeal and simplicity of both ministers and members, and the fidelity with which they adhered to the faith once delivered to the saints. Then Methodists were plain and simple in their dress, full of ardor, punctual in attending their class and prayer meetings, as well as every other means of grace or profit. Our ministers did extemporaneous preaching, from the heart to the heart, and were fully content to keep our rules, and not to amend them. But now, when other denominations, seeing our great success, are forced to acknowledge the efficiency of our economy, and to some extent imitating us, many of our preachers and people, regarding this as an age of improvement, are unfortunately applying it to Methodism, as if Christianity was susceptible of change. "God resisteth the proud, but giveth grace to the humble." "The meek shall inherit the earth," etc., is Gospel truth.

We do not advocate any particular style of dress, either for the preachers or people; only that they should avoid all singularity. Let their apparel be such, that it will attract no particular attention. We are opposed to the fantastic manner in which some of our people appear in public. It is the duty of the minister to say to his flock "follow me, as I follow Christ." When we see many of them with gold-studs and finger-rings, wearing fantastic coats, and with such an air of pomposity, that no one would take them, even for Christians, too many of our brethren and sisters suffer themselves to be dragged captive at the "wheels of fashion's car." We are commanded to "let our lights shine." I fear, so far as impressions are concerned, many exhibit darkness rather than light. Even the irreligious people prefer and commend simplicity of dress and meekness of manners in church members.

Some of our preachers seem to think the time has arrived, in the onward march of intellectual improvement, when the old usages of Methodism should be done away with; and talk of a Christianity and usages suited to this age of progression. In some places they speak of pewed churches, organs and their organized choirs in the gallery, to do the fashionable singing. Pomp and show seem to be the great desideratum. After the instruments and instrument accompanier cease their part of the worship, the preacher arrives, reads his metaphysics, or delivers a philosophical lecture, instructing but few and improving a smaller number.

The time was, when we gloried in a free gospel, free seats, preaching to the poor, and for the whole congregation to unite in singing praises to God, with the spirit and the understanding. I do not oppose improvement in singing, singing by note, and all the different parts, provided it does not prevent the congregation from uniting, which I conceive to be the manifest tendency of these gallery choirs. I love to hear familiar tunes, and to hear them familiarly sung.

We all love an intellectual ministry. If possible, we would have all our preachers possess a collegiate education, but let their intelligence be sanctified by grace, characterized by zeal, and an ardent love for souls, rather than personal display, coming not with the enticing words of man's wisdom, but in the spirit and power of Bible Christianity.

It should be the chief object of every minister to cultivate his heart, whilst he is improving his mind. He may carry his mind through all the varied field of investigation, deck or adorn it with flowers plucked from the hill side of science, yet, if he neglects his heart, he can never accomplish the good that he ought. What though a minister be learned? Because he is, he should not preach himself, or for himself, but he should know nothing among men but "Jesus and him crucified."

Unfortunately for the church and the cause of God, the practice of reading sermons is increasing. I was a man of mature years before I ever heard of such a thing from a Methodist pulpit. Now nothing is more common than to hear a Minister pray to God to be his "mouth and wisdom, enlighten his understanding," and give him ready utterance," and then draw out a manuscript and read a sermon, so stale that his audience soon become listless, and not unfrequently gaping, nodding, or even snoring. This reading system was introduced by some of the residents of our colleges, our D. D.'s who, unfortunately, have built up to much reputation to sacrifice it by preaching an old-fashioned, extemporaneous Methodist sermon.

Some of our young men have caught the spirit, and it prevails in various parts of our Conferences. If it stopped with a few, who read well, it would be more endurable, but we frequently hear them as lifeless that they become a bore, whilst some, with such awkward displays, heads down, hands uplifted, feet stamping in such a manner, that they forcibly remind us of a blind-horse in a yellow jacket's nest. I would to God that I could not witness such in the house of God again.

With the instrumentality we now have in the Methodist ministry, what could we not do, if all our preachers, both local and itinerant, were filled with zeal, love to God and man, willing to place themselves behind the Cross of Christ, and cry aloud and spare not! Were this the case we would have fewer delinquents in the laity, better attendance on prayer and class-meetings, more heartfelt piety, benevolence and liberality in the support and maintenance of our church enterprises.

Alabama, September 4, 1853. R. A. B.

TRAINING AND TEACHING FOR THE MINISTRY.

At a time when this subject is occupying the serious thought of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and some propose this, some that plan, and some hold fast to the old one, it may be well to hear what our neighbors have to say on it. From their stand-point important light is reflected. The Independent of September 1, remarking that the Methodist papers are discussing our wants, admits grave wants also under the Theological Seminary system, and compares the two, after a manner. The article bears a candid tone, and as they confess their own faults we may allow them to speak of ours:

"In the colleges and theological seminaries established for the Congregational and Presbyterian churches in this country, those young men who devote themselves to the ministry have ample opportunities of being taught. Four years in the college, and three years in the theological seminary, besides some three years in the grammar-school, all devoted to intellectual preparation for the work of the ministry, is no inconsiderable portion of the time allotted to man in this world. So far as time is concerned, more study prior to the commencement of the work of preaching could hardly be demanded.

"Still it cannot be denied that there is, on the part of the churches, and more painfully on the part of the candidates, a feeling of the need of more preparation for the ministry. The college professors would like to keep the students a year or two longer in college before sending them to their professional studies. The theological faculty would like to keep them a year or two longer in the seminary. And the young men themselves, in proportion to the diligence with which they have devoted themselves to study, have learned nothing so effectually as that the field of the theological sciences is boundless and that those preparatory studies are coming to occupy a life-time. But the fact is that, generally, more preparatory study adds little to the real preparation of the candidate for the profession which he has chosen and the office to which he aspires. What is wanted is not more teaching, but more training.

"The system of preparation for the ministry among the Methodists, is essentially different from ours, and always has been. If our system may be defined as essentially teaching without training, theirs may be defined as essentially training without teaching. Such a definition has in either case something of caricature or exaggeration about it; but caricature is sometimes the very best way of describing character. Speaking more exactly, we may say that training is the fundamental idea of the Methodist system, and that teaching is the fundamental idea of our system. The Methodists incorporate teaching, to some extent, with the training of their preachers; and on the other hand our students of theology have some opportunities of self-training while under the care of their teachers.

"The old Methodist way, if we may describe it from recollection and general impression rather than from a reference to authorities, had its own method of finding out every young man in its connection who had a talent or a passion for preaching, and of immediately employing his gifts in the way of public prayer and exhortation. First, the young man became an exhorter under the license of the preacher in charge. Thus he was put to the test, as to zeal, discretion, and the natural faculty of public speaking; and his gifts in these respects began to be developed and trained by exercise. In a little while, another license made him a preacher, that is a "local preacher." After this, unless we are mistaken in our recollection, the young preacher, if he was ready to devote his life to the work, was received on probation for membership in the Conference. From this time forward, according to our impressions, he might be considered as in the harness. A certain course of study was marked out for him, including English grammar, geography, and other elementary matters as well as subjects more strictly professional. Certain examinations were to be passed, showing the measure of his literary and theological proficiency. But all the while he was working, learning to preach by preaching. His preparation for future eminence and success in his ministry was laboring trained rather than by being taught. And the system continued, without essential alteration, to this day.

"In the present state of the Methodist body, with its numerous and growing colleges, there is a natural desire for more teaching of a professional and theological character, more of regular theological study, in the preparation of young men for the ministry. We find the subject discussed, occasionally, in the journals of that denomination.

"If the Methodists were to borrow from us our system of theological education, unmodified, it would be like sewing a new piece of cloth on an old garment. The right method for them is to improve their own system of training for the ministry by developing its capabilities and by incorporating with it more thorough and efficient teaching, and better opportunities for study."

OBITUARY:

DIED.—On the 17th, at 1 o'clock, A. M., at Live Oak Plantation, sixteen miles above the city, of yellow fever, after an illness of eleven days, HARRY R. W. HILL, in his fifty-sixth year. His funeral took place at the Methodist Church, in this city, on Sabbath morning, at 10 o'clock. The church was crowded, and a great number of people remained outside during the service. The whole city was moved with grief at the loss of one long known and universally esteemed.

He was a native of Halifax, N. C. He was born in 1797. His parents were hard-working people, in moderate circumstances. When the boy was five years old, his father died, and the family removed to Williamson co., Tenn., next to the Chickasaw Nation.

Young Harry here went to an old-fashioned school for two years, and that, it appears, is all the schooling he ever had. His good nature and quick nature soon found him a place in a country store. On the death of his employer, he settled up the estate, and though very young, achieved the task so well, that the relatives of the deceased placed him in the business on his own account. In seven years he realized a handsome fortune. In 1827 he married; in 1828 he removed from Franklin to Nashville, entered into commercial business and prospered. In 1832 he commenced business in this city.

From the beginning, his plan of life was a combined system of benevolence and thrift. The name of Harry Hill was a synonyme for noble generosity.

M.

DIED.—Of yellow fever, in this city, Sept. 1, JOHN SCHWING, of Louisville, Ky. The deceased was in his 23d year, and from his youth had remembered his Creator. Of lovely temper, pure and exemplary in life, and devoted to doing good, he was such a young man as the world and the church mourn the death of, with unfeigned feelings of sorrow.

M.

DIED.—At Pecan Grove, Miss., September 1, aged 6 years and 3 months, ROBERT SMITH, son of J. G. and Mary Parham.

"Little Bobby," as he was fondly called, had learned at the Sabbath School and at home, of the world to come. The Gospel sheds its light even upon this little grave. A short time before death he said to his mother, "Mother, I'm not afraid to die, for I will go where little brother is, and where God is, and I will be always happy." A little while after he added, "Mother, wont you and pa come there, too?"

DIED.—NIMROD POWERS, son of Sterling and Elizabeth Powers, of Talladega Co., Ala., the 15th August, in his fifteenth year. Though cut down like the flower of grass, at this early age, he trusted in God. W. I. P.

The following is the Last Will and Testament of the late H. R. W. Hill.

LIVE OAK PLANTATION, La.
July 29, 1853.

I, Harry R. W. Hill, of the City of New Orleans and State of Louisiana, do on this day make this my Olographic Will and Testament.

Item 1. I wish all my debts paid as soon as possible after my death; particularly, all cash balances on my books.

2. I give to Jane Know McAllster, niece of my late wife, a tract of land, one thousand acres, in Shelby county, Tennessee, which I got from Hilliard's estate; also, money enough to make up a legacy James Dick left her to ten thousand dollars, to be paid her when she is eighteen years old or marries. I also wish her to have a finished education, and supported out of my estate until she marries or receives her legacy.

3. I give P. Homer Lesley five thousand dollars, to pay the last instalment on his place and aid in fixing up and stocking it.

4. I give Violet Miller, for her long and faithful services, rendered my late wife, having nursed her from the cradle to the grave, six hundred dollars a year, to be paid quarterly during her natural life.

5. I give to William K. McAlister, of Nashville, twenty thousand dollars, the interest only to be paid, at six per cent., for the first five years, then the principal to be paid. This sum is to raise and educate his young children not yet educated.

6. I give and bequeath to my dear son, James Dick Hill, all the residue of my estate, of every description, which at present is largely over a million of dollars. And it is my wish that he would never sell his Deer Creek estates. The sugar plantation I would advise him to sell, with all lands in Texas, Tennessee, Arkansas, and every where else, except the lands on Deer Creek—retaining the two houses on Canal street, New Orleans.

7. I appoint my long-tried friend, Charles J Fore, Special Executor to manage and take charge of all my Deer Creek estates, in the same manner he has been doing heretofore, and to ship the crops as may be directed by my General Executors, hereafter appointed.

8. I appoint my long-tried friends, John Armfield, of Sumner county, Tennessee, and John M. Bass, of Nashville, Tennessee, my Executors of this my Last Will and Testament, with seizin and detainer—with full power to sell and convey, all but the Deer Creek lands in Issiquena, and the property in the City of New Orleans, mentioned in item six.

I also empower my Executors to compromise debts due me, and pay exchanges and interest, according to commercial usages, at the expense of my estate. I want every cash balance I owe to be paid promptly; and, if convenient, I wish my remains to be placed beside my wife and children.

In testimony whereof, I have hereunto set my hand to this my Last Will and Testament.

H. R. W. HILL.

JULY 29, 1853.

JOHN M. BASS, JOHN ARMFIELD:

My Friends—If you have to execute the enclosed Will, and nothing in the character of either of the men should change your views, I recommend that Robert W. Estill and Thomas B. Lee should succeed to my commercial house and wind up, under your direction, my old commercial business. It will be a fortune to them, and I wish them to have it. I would have been glad for James A. McAlister to be associated, but he has always objected to New Orleans. I know them to be faithful, capable and honest.

My charities will all be done in my life-time, and justice to all while living; so I leave no obligations only gratitude and friendship.

Charge full commissions on my estate. It is worth this day over fifteen hundred thousand dollars.

I believe in the Christian Religion, though an unworthy believer.

I want my negroes well treated. But for abolitionism, I should have been able to do more for them.

May God bless you! H. R. W. HILL.

YELLOW FEVER AT BATON ROUGE.—Forty-one cases of yellow fever were reported by the Board of Health for the week ending at 4 o'clock, P. M., on the 17th inst. For the three days ending at the same hour on the 21st., the deaths from this disease were thirteen.

Among the victims was Capt. J. M. Morgan, U. S. A., who died on Tuesday last.

Donations amounting to $626 25 have been received by the Board of Health.

YELLOW FEVER IN PLAQUEMINE.—The Young American of the 21st inst., published at Plaquemine, says:

We have heard of two or three deaths since Saturday last by fever; and a few new cases which have yielded readily to the nurse and the physician. The health of our town is certainly not getting worse, and we have cause to be thankful that it is and has been so good, while the scourge is desolating other localities. Our town is excessively dull. A Relief Association has just been started.

YELLOW FEVER IN ST. LANDRY PARISH.—The Opelousas Courier of the 17th inst. has the following paragraphs:

The health of our parish at the present moment is very alarming. At Washington yellow fever is raging awfully, most all the country is very unhealthy. Opelousas alone is in a very unhealthy condition.

We have been informed that from three to five persons a day have died in Washington this week.

The panic is general in our town on account of yellow fever raging at Washington, in this parish. About forty families have abandoned Opelousas in haste; those who are here yet, are unable to quit on account of their business or for pecuniary matters. The Bell Chenoy and Beaver Creek Springs are crowded with our citizens, also the banks of the Whiskychitto, situated about eighty miles from this town, where several families have started with tents, baggage, provisions, etc.; others have gone to Attakapas and the banks of the Teche. We are now in a most deserted town. The boarding schools of Mrs. A. Rouand, Miss U. Bercier, Mrs. Delaruilla, Rev. Thomas Rand, Jr., and Mr. Valade are all shut up, also several stores and coffee-houses.

YELLOW FEVER IN VICKSBURG.—The interments in Vicksburg, Miss., for the three days ending on Monday last, the 10th inst, were 41, of which 36 were from yellow fever cases.

The Vicksburg Whig of Tuesday last, the 20th inst., says: "The sexton's report shows no diminution or abatement of the disease. The dread pestilence still hovers over, and envelops our city in gloom."

Business is perfectly stagnant, and nothing is now thought of, or talked of scarcely, but the condition of the sick, and the means of alleviating the distress which the terrible scourge has inflicted upon us. The weather was beautiful for a few days, up to Sunday night, and our physicians were inclined to the belief that fewer new cases were occurring, and they of a milder type than previously.

On yesterday, however, the atmosphere was damp, with a North wind, and it is feared that the current may again change. We sincerely trust that this may not be so, but that we are over the worst, and that hereafter we may be authorized to make more favorable reports.

The Whig goes on to say:

From Vazoo City we have the most melancholy news. The boats have stopped running up the waters of the Yazoo, and on yesterday a wagon reached this city from Yazoo for mustard and other medicines, and ice. We saw a letter on yesterday from there, in which it was stated that the pestilence was raging fearfully among the few who were left in the city. From Jackson we have not as bad news as anticipated from the rumors of a few days since. From Grand Gulf, the news could not well be worse—a fearful mortality for so small a population. From Port Gibson Fayette, Natchez, Lake Providence, etc., we hear enough to satisfy us that there is no abatement of the scourge; and from Warrenton, we hear enough to sicken the heart of a stone.

THE FEVER IN PORT GIBSON, MISS.—The Herald and Correspondent, of the 16th instant, speaking of the yellow fever in that place, says:

Our town is still afflicted with the epidemic. On the 8th instant, the disease seemed to abate, and the hope was indulged that it would, in a short time, leave us. But on Tuesday last, it broke out afresh, and a number of our citizens sickened and are now prostrated. At present, however, there are no large daily accessions to the number of the sick, and we believe, as a general thing, cases yield readily to remedies. Our physicians meet with success, where patients are attended to by watchers. It is of the utmost importance that the sick should be strictly attended to.

At Grand Gulf, the epidemic prevails with no greater malignity than here; but, at the outset, it prostrated so many, that not enough were left well to take care of the sick.

General Intelligence.

THE NORTHERN RAILROAD.

The present temporary embarrassment in our money market forces on the mind the consideration of our means of communication with the interior, and places in a striking point of view the absolute necessity of our relying on railroads in preference to water courses, in our dealings with our customers. The steamboats which ought now to be crowding our levee are laid up in the upper rivers from the difficulty of procuring hands, who are prevented by dread of sickness from shipping on boats destined for our city. Cotton or Western produce are kept back, or seek Atlantic ports, and in the meantime bills mature, and our merchants are pressed for ready means, although possessed of ample resources in the shape of crops destined to their consignment. We must have our roads built, and speedily built, in order to avoid the annoying dependence on water communication, always liable to obstruction from a variety of causes.

We are happy to observe, however, that in spite of adverse circumstances, both our roads are rapidly progressing to a point where their benefits will be immediately and directly perceptible by our people. The Western road, during the ensuing winter, will be bringing in the crops of the Lafourche; and the Northern road will, in a very few months, be in operation to the highlands, and steadily approaching the heart of the cotton growing region of Mississippi.

Some anxiety has been felt amongst our citizens in relation to the failure of Messrs. Robb and Shelbell to effect a sale of the goods of this house, and apprehension are entertained that it may have a disastrous influence on the future prospects of the Company; but these fears result from a misapprehension of the facts which we have been at some pains to assert, and we will now give some details concerning the position of the Company. From these it will appear that the only result from the failure to obtain a loan will be to delay the completion of the road beyond Canton, which is about twenty miles north of Jackson, Mississippi, but in no manner to interfere with the finishing of that part of the road which connects us with Mississippi.

The distance from New Orleans to the State line is 87 miles. The whole of this distance is already graded, except about 13 miles of what is called crib-work, in the swamp at Pass Manchac, and these thirteen miles will be finished in about four months. The iron has already been purchased for one hundred miles of road—forty miles have already been received, and the remainder will be here as soon as the crib-work is finished. The contractors are now laying the iron on the track, commencing at Pass Manchac, and running North, although of course the work cannot progress rapidly while the sickness now prevalent makes it impossible to obtain laborers in sufficient numbers. Three locomotives, a number of freight and dirt-cars are already here, and one locomotive, with dirt or gravel cars are already on the road.

The means of the company are ample for carrying the work to Canton. The road between Jackson and Canton is already graded, and ready to receive the iron, which will be sent there as soon it arrives—in December or January. The location of the road from the State line to Jackson is made; depots have been provided for at the several necessary points; and, in fact, everything promises a regular railroad communication with Canton by the close of the coming year, a distance of two hundred miles. If a loan cannot be obtained on the faith of a road in full operation, of such a length and importance, the Company must, of course, rely on further subscriptions to continue its progress to the Tennessee river; this being the only link required in the chain which will connect us with the North and East; but any doubt on that score is idle, and, although the work may not be finished as soon as it could have been if a loan had been obtained, we repeat, its ultimate success is already placed beyond doubt or question.

YELLOW FEVER IN NATCHEZ.—The Conrier of last Wednesday, 14th inst., says:

We have had rains during the past week, which will, no doubt, prove beneficial to health. The fever is thought to be decreasing, new cases being less frequent; probably owing to the scarcity of material to prey upon. We sincerely trust that there may be a great improvement in the health of our city ere another week.

The same paper has the following:

CONCORDIA.—We sincerely condole with our Concordia friends in their severe distress. Our sympathies are especially with our friend Eisley, of the Concordia Intelligencer, who has lost his wife and four of his children, by the scourge which is sweeping over our Southern homes.

The total number of deaths in Natchez, from yellow fever, for the five days ending on the 13th, inclusive, was 25; on the 9th, eight; 10th, two; 11th, six; 12th, six; 13th, three.

THE CROPS.—We hear complaints from various quarters of the rot. Until its appearance the cotton in this parish was very promising. Considerable rain has fallen within the last few days, and the weather continues unfavorable. [Madison (La.) Journal.

We hear of very fair prospects for a good yield of cotton on our fine river-lands, notwithstanding the long spell of dry weather. In the up-lands the cotton crop will be very short. [Pine Bluff (Ark.) Rep.

BUSINESS IN MEMPHIS.—The Enquirer of the 14th inst. says:

There were a few wagons in town yesterday from the country, and three or four bales of new cotton, which sold at 10½ cents. These gave the first indications of the speedy revival of trade, and the rapid "coming on" of the business season. "The busy note of preparation" is heard in every quarter. The business of completing new houses, and the repairing and refitting up of old ones, is pressed forward with great activity.

HEALTH OF ST. LOUIS.—The following is an abstract of the mortality in that city for the week ending September 12. City, 30; Bellefontaine, 8; Wesleyen, 7; Holy Ghost, 10; Rock Spring, 39; German Protestant, 8; Lutheran, 3; Presbyterian, 2. White males, 75. White females, 39. Children, under five years of age, 42. Slaves, 1. Total, 115.

ST. LOUIS MARINE HOSPITAL.—The St. Louis Republican says that Mr. Burnett, Superintendent of the Custom-house in that city, has received instructions to furnish estimates for the completion of the Marine Hospital, and to proceed with the work as fast as possible, and as far as the existing appropriation will permit.

SOMETHING NEW.—William Lloyd Garrison stated, at the recent Convention at Metropolitan Hall, New York, that he was opposed to the Maine Liquor Law, because, by voting for it, he would be recognizing the laws and Constitution of the United States, which he could not conscientiously do.

WILMINGTON, DEL.—Its population at the present time is seventeen thousand; its water works cost two hundred thousand dollars; the city contains two gas companies; its manufactories are abundant and thriving; it possesses eleven flour mills; there are eighteen churches, four banking establishments, and twenty hotels in the city.

Colonel Featherston, an old and prominent citizen of Madison (La.) parish, died at his residence, on Teuses, on the 7th instant.

Louisiana Interior.

The Baton Rouge Comet says, that the Board of Selectmen have appropriated $1000 for the relief of the sufferers, in addition to which liberal subscriptions have been made by the citizens. The same paper says that two out of the band of seven young men who so nobly volunteered their services to assist the sick in this city, have fallen in the service.

A man named Caleb Hand blew out his brains in Baton Rouge on the 15th inst. in a fit of temporary insanity.

Le Messager announces the death on the 10th inst. of Mr. Gaston Carrière, aged twenty-nine years, a native of Nimes, France. Mr. C. was banished from his country by Louis Napoleon, and was recently connected with the Donaldsonville Vigilant.

YELLOW FEVER AT ALEXANDRIA, LA.—The Louisiana Democrat, of Alexandria, of the 13th inst., comes as a half sheet, with the prefatory editorial remark that all hands were sick, and no assistance could be got. This is followed by the following account of fever prevailing there:

Since our last some six or seven persons have died of fever. Four died yesterday. This, we think, will be the maximum. It is due to truth to say that those who have died were, with a single exception, we believe, in a state of the most appalling destitution up to the time that they received the prompt and efficient attention of the Rapides Charitable Association. But, unfortunately, the fever invited by a condition of things and a want of the common necessaries of life, upon which it is painful to dwell, runs its fatal career.

The Harrisonburg Independent of the 14th instant says they have been favored with all kinds of weather in that parish (Catahoula), and adds:

During this and last week we have conversed with numbers of our Planters, and they assure us that they will make an average crop. Many of them inform us that they have seen the caterpillar in their fields, but, as yet, has done no damage. Our planters have made an abundance of corn, fodder, potatoes, etc. Surely, ought not peace, joy and happiness to reign in their midst?

The Farmerville Inquirer of the 10th says:

The weather has been cloudy and cool for the last week. The Cotton crop in this Parish, from all accounts, will be a good one.

The National (Parish of Plaquemines) of the 10th says:

THE LEVEES FALL IN.—For some time past, the fallings-in of our levees are the order of the day. A short time since, it was Mr. Morgan's levee which tumbled into the river; yesterday, Mr. Grant's portion of the public road threatened to fall into the yawning abyss, and to-day, a large breach is made in the levee in front of Mr. Fazende's plantation, and falls into the river with a crash that is heard for miles. We would advise the planters of our parish to keep a sharp look out, and do the necessary repairs to their levees and roads.

THE HURRICANE.—This week will long be remembered in our parish, owing to the hurricane which swept over our fields in the early part of it, laying whole acres of the finest cane waste. The rain fell in torrents, and the demon of the storm, hurrying through space, left nothing but ruin and devastation in his track.

Mobile Items.

The steamer Black Warrior, J. D. B. Bulloch, U. S. N., commander, arrived at Mobile on Saturday, 17th inst., from New York, Sept. 9, and Havana 15th inst.

There was nothing of importance transpiring at Havana.

The total interments on the 16th were 20, of which 22 were of yellow fever. On the 17th the interments were 30, of which 26 were of yellow fever.

The number of patients admitted in the infirmaries on the 16th was 11; discharged, 11; died, 7; remaining, 68. On the 17th, admitted, 10; discharged, 9; died, 7; remaining, 65.

The whole number of interments for the week ending at 3, P. M., on Friday, 16th, was 212—a decrease of 29 on the previous week.

The Mayor has received $434 50 from Mr. O. Sibley, of Baldwin county, and from citizens of Greensboro and Eutaw, the whole sum being handed over to the Samaritan Society and the Can't-Get-Away Club.

The Tribune says:

We stated a few days ago that there were some signs of an abatement in the epidemic. Those signs, we regret to say, were delusive. The disease has begun to invade those classes within whose reach are all the comforts and securities against sickness.

The disease is by no means confined to the city limits. It exists in almost all parts of the surrounding country. On Ann street, between that and Spring Hill; on Spring Hill, and almost everywhere within the neighborhood. It is not either the result of communication with the city, but makes its appearance spontaneously.

Alabama.

Gov. Collier has published a notice calling upon the benevolent to contribute to the relief of the sufferers by the epidemic in Mobile.

We find the following in the Alabama Journal, of Montgomery, of the 16th:

No case of yellow fever has been reported to the Board of Health since the cases from the Octavia on Sunday last. No case has originated here within the last nine days.

The Mobile Tribune learns that the Tombigbee river had recently risen twelve feet at Demopolis.

The Pickens West Alabamian says:

The commissioners appointed to canvass that county for subscriptions to the railroad to connect Tuscumbia with the Mobile and Ohio road at or near Macon, Miss., have been very successful in their efforts—$240,000 have been subscribed unconditionally, and a considerable sum upon certain conditions. The whole sum will be doubled upon the location of the road, and its construction in regards as a positive certainty.

The Postmaster-General has placed upon the Alabama and Tennessee River Railroad a daily mail from Selma to Montevallo, and thence to Talledega by stages. The Department has also made another alteration in the mail arrangements, and that is the establishing a tri-weekly mail to be carried by stages between Randolph on the railroad and Tuscaloosa and Greensboro' from a daily to a tri-weekly.

HEALTH OF CUMBERLAND.—We learn from the Alleganian that since the first of August there have been, in all, 104 deaths in Cumberland, Md., of which 72 were adults and 32 children. It is probable, adds that paper, that two-thirds of the whole number died of the prevailing epidemic. There were three or four cases within the last week; which, like a majority of the previous cases, were the result of imprudent eating or drinking. The number of deaths last week was 11, against 22 the previous week. The citizens are now returning home, business be coming active, and the cholera looked upon as having disappeared.

A FAMILY OF RAILROAD MEN.—The Southern Tier Times instances a family of the name of Brown as illustrative of the bent of certain families to the same calling. There are six brothers, all of whom are eminent railroad men. 1. S. Brown, the oldest, is an Engineer on the St. Petersburgh and Warsaw Railroad, Russia; Sam. Brown is Superintendent of the Canandaigua and Niagara Falls Railroad; R. M. Brown is Superintendent of the New York and Erie Railroad; W. H. Brown is an extensive builder of locomotives in Philadelphia; J. R. Brown is an Engineer on the Catawisa (Pa.) Railroad; J. W. Brown is connected with the freight department of the New York and Erie Railroad.

FATAL RAILROAD ACCIDENT.—The first accident on the Memphis and Charleston Railroad occurred on the 14th instant, as the cars were leaving Lafayette. Mr. Brooks Hunter was thrown from the platform, caught in the brake and horribly mangled, causing his death in a short time. Mr. Hunter was Assistant Engineer on the road.

SHE CAME AND WENT.

BY JAMES HENRY LOWELL.

As a long tremble a bird
Lights on to-day, then leaves no scent,
So is my memory thrilled and stirred;
I only know she came and went.

As climbs some lake, by gusts untrue,
The blue dome's picture seen a-slant,
So my soul held that moment's heaven;
I only know she came, and went.

As at one bound our swift Spring leaps
The Arctic bonds of ice and sound,
So there beat life thro' winter sleeps;
I only know she came and went.

An angel's hand and touched my gaze
Through the low doorway of my tent:
The tent is struck, the vision stays;
I only know she came and went.

Oh! when the room grows slowly dim,
And life's last clock is nearly spent,
One gush of light these eyes will brim,
Only to know she came, and went.

A lazy fellow up North spells Tennessee 10 A C I.

There were sales of stock at the last Bourbon county (Ky) court to the amount of $150,000.

The ladies of Madison, Ia., realized eight by two entertainments for the orphans in Newtonians, bereaved by the yellow fever.

SIGN.—When a man finds a great deal of fault with a newspaper which he never fails to read, it is a sign he has not paid for it. People seldom pick flaws in their own property.

There arrived at New York from Saturday morning to Monday noon, 21 vessels from Europe, bringing 7174 immigrants. On the ship Lucy Thompson there were 36 deaths during the passage from Liverpool.

The Tobacco crop in the vicinity of Hagerstown, Md., is being considerably injured by the worms; which have appeared in many fields in large numbers. The News says that some of the farmers are hurrying to house it partially, it is presumed, on that account.

CHINESE CORN.—Wm. B. Phillips, Esq., has sent the Nashville American a specimen of Chinese corn, of which he has sent one to be growing. It is a curiosity, differing in it does, in various respects, from the Indian corn. It is said that it will produce one hundred bushels to the acre.

Mrs. Crowford says she wrote one line in her "Kathleen Mavourneen" for the express purpose of confounding the Cockney warblers, who sang it thus: "The corn of the 'unter is 'arel on the 'ill;" but Moore had laid the same trap in the "Woodpecker"—"A 'eart, that is 'umble might 'ope for it 'ere."

As a "literary curiosity," the Editor of the Boston Transcript relates that the longest sentence he has ever met with occurs in Mr Choate's Eulogy on Mr. Webster. From the 41st to the middle of the 45th page of the pamphlet edition, there is not a full stop. This passage, or single sentence, contains about thirteen hundred words, and occupies four pages and a half.

LATER FROM RIO DE JANEIRO.—The clipper ship Eagle, Capt. Farren, arrived at New York on the 10th, in thirty-two days from Rio, whence she sailed on the 7th ult. Capt. Farren reports that when he left Rio Janeiro the markets were very dull; coffee high, and no freights offering. The U. S. ship Jamestown, Commander Downing, was in port, also a number of American vessels.

FINE CATTLE.—Mr. Wm. R. Estill, of Fayette County, Ky., sold, a day or two since, six bullocks, three and four years old, for the sum of $800; one brought $300, and the other five $100 each. They were raised and fed by Mr. Estill, and were, says the Observer and Reporter, superior specimens of the improved cattle with which Fayette and the adjoining counties abound.

MULES.—Young mules are much sought after, and command good prices, say from $40 to $60 per head for fair and good. Those of the best growth and shape command better prices. We saw one not long since which sold for $125. It was bought by Mr. John H. Estill, of this vicinity, and will be taken in the State Fair next month. Good grown mules range from $100 to $150. [Glasgow (Mo.) Times.

COLLISION AT SEA.—A terrible disaster at sea between the oilpper ship John Stewart and the bark Green Point, happened on the night of the 31st of July at nine o'clock, about thirteen degree south of the Equator. The John Stewart left Callao for the Chincha Islands, and during the said night, ran into the bark, cutting her into two pieces, and sinking her immediately. The captain and family barely saved themselves. The John Stewart was considerably injured.

TOBACCO.—The Glasgow (Mo.) Times says the recent cool nights, and very slight frosts, have made our tobacco growers a little nervous. The crop is looking well and ripening fast. But little is ready for the knife yet, but with favorable weather for the next ten days, a large proportion of the crop will be cut.

Very light frosts have been noticed elsewhere, both in the Northern part of Illinois and Missouri, but we doubt whether any injury has resulted from this change of the weather. For two or three days past it has been much too hot for comfort, without any very great prospect of change.

BIG JAKE, THE PORTER.—During the last trip of the Gen. Pike to St. Louis, says the Louisville Courier of the 12th, she hailed at a way-place for a passenger, who informed the Captain that he wanted to take a valuable horse along on the boat. Orders were issued for a stage to be rigged, and the mate soon passed the word "all ready;" but the gentleman, standing by his horse, dubiously shook his head and said, eyeing the staging, "It won't do, Captain, not stout enough; one't risk a two-forty nag on them boards." For a moment the Captain seemed non-plussed; but, after a little reflection, called for Jake, his porter, and directed him to walk ashore and back again on the staging. The gentleman exhibited some surprise at Jake's size and proportions, but finding that the plank stood the test of his weight, went on board with his horse, without any further hesitation.

CAMEL TRAVELING.—A correspondent of the Union Gazette, writing from Geza, gives the following description of camel traveling in the desert:

Out of forty days from Cairo, we traveled twenty-eight at the rate of twenty-two miles a day; or nine hours of two and a half miles each. If you ask how I like desert life, I answer, as I have frequently remarked to our party, that of all the modes of traveling invented, camel traveling is the most detestable. The slow monotonous swing of his long step jerks the whole frame; at every step you have to bow and give way, or have your nose broken if you resist.

We rode only two days on the back of the camel, which we found quite enough. Our armed chairs, lashed on each side of the camel, worked well, and what with a change to our donkeys once or twice a day, and with an occasional hour's walking, we got along tolerably well.

Our tent sleeping was more comfortable than could have been expected. We have our cot beds with a mattrass; and I never experienced more sound and refreshing sleep, except when disturbed by the continued jabber and quarrels of the Arabs, coupled with the braying of our donkeys and the growling of the camel.

The camel is a wonderful, hardy and useful animal. He is docile and tractable, if well broken, and you may ride him without leader or halter, in the most mountainous and rough passages, with perfect safety. He is sure footed, his large spongy feet never slip. He kneels to receive his load and rises at the word of command, with but little growling. The Arabs sleep by the side of their camels, in the open air, covered with coarse woolen cloth. They eat but once a day (at night.) They are a poor, miserable set of beings. We saw but one settlement of them in all our desert travel, as they prefer to live secluded and out of the traveled route.

Further by the Niagara—The Eastern Question.

NEW YORK, Sept. 15.

A new complication has been given to the Eastern question by the obstinacy of the Turkish war party, which is hostile to France and England as well as to Russia. The Government has called out a reserve of eighty thousand men.

Austria.

The Austrian Government are sending two more steamers of war to Smyrna.

Earthquake.

The City of Thebes, (Thebes?) in Egypt, has been destroyed by an earthquake.

Later from Buenos Ayres.

PHILADELPHIA, September 14.

An arrival here from Montevideo brings later dates from Buenos Ayres. The advices state that Urquiza had at length abandoned his troops, and taken refuge on board an American vessel.

Further by the Niagara—Late from China.

NEW YORK, September 15.—

The Niagara brings later advices from China of an interesting character. The recent failure of the imperial troops to capture Taal Chang is regarded as decisive of the fate of the empire. The insurgent army had left Nankin for Pekin, but were for some reason soon recalled. An attack on Canton was soon expected.

REVOLUTION IN FORMOSA.—A revolution has broken out in the Island of Formosa.

Four Days later from Europe.

ARRIVAL OF THE ARCTIC.

COTTON STILL DEPRESSED.

BREADSTUFFS DECLINED.

NEW YORK, Sunday, September 18.

The Collins steamer Arctic has arrived here, bringing dates from Liverpool to the 7th inst., four days later than the accounts brought by the Niagara. Her advices represent the Cotton Market at Liverpool to have presented a heavy appearance at the date of her departure, the sales of the three business days having reached barely 14,000 bales. Of these, 1000 were taken for speculation, and 3000 for export. Holders generally were pressing their stocks on the market, and buyers were more in favor of buyers, though without any quotable decline, the brokers mostly quoting as follows at the close: Fair Orleans 6¾, Middling Orleans 6 to 6¼, Fair Uplands 6¾, and Middling Uplands 5¾ to 5¾d. per pound.

The Flour Market has been dull, and prices have fallen off 6d. to 1s per bbl., holders being anxious to sell. Western Canal was quoted at 29 shillings.

Corn has met with only a moderate demand, but prices were unchanged.

Lard had declined 1s. per cwt.

Beef and Pork were dull at previous rates.

Money and Trade.

The London Money Market continued tight, and Consols were rather lower, closing at 97¼ to 97¼ for money and account.

Trade at Manchester was dull, and prices had slightly declined since the Niagara left.

Further by the Arctic.

NEW YORK, September 18.

There is but little of interest in the general news brought by the Arctic. The following are the principal items embraced in her accounts:

The Eastern Question.

Nothing had yet been settled definitely with regard to the Eastern question. The Turkish Government had sent to the four powers an explanatory manifesto, the effect of which could not yet be known. It was said, however, that France had notified the Sultan that any further steps that he should take would be at his own peril.

France.

The French Government is striving to keep down the price of grain.

Austria.

The Austrian lieutenant who made himself so conspicuous in the Costa affair at Smyrna, has been promoted by his Government.

English Crops.

The harvest in England is turning out very favorably.

The Pacific Railroad—Large Subscriptions.

NEW YORK, September 17.

The first meeting of the friends of the great Atlantic and Pacific Railroad was held in this city yesterday. A subscription list was opened, and Hon. Robert J. Walker headed the list by subscribing ten millions of dollars. Dr. Newcomber, of Albany, followed with a subscription of nearly three millions of dollars.

Contributions for Mobile and New Orleans.

NEW YORK, September 18.

The contributions for the sufferers by the epidemic in Mobile amount so far, in this city, to more than nine thousand dollars. The net proceeds of Jullien's concert for the relief of the New Orleans sufferers exceed $2000, and of Genin's hat store over $350.

The total contributions for the New Orleans sufferers are estimated at two hundred and twenty thousand dollars, and for Mobile twenty-two thousand dollars.

Railroad Opening.

BOSTON, September 16.

The opening of the North American Railroad took place yesterday at St. John's, N. B., with appropriate ceremonies and amid great enthusiasm.

MISSION TO FRANCE—Washington, September 19.—It is now stated positively here that Mr. Rix cannot obtain the French mission. Senator J. Y. Mason, of Virginia, is spoken of as standing the best chance for the office.

THE PACIFIC RAILROAD AND GEN. PIERCE—Washington, September 19.—It is now settled that the President will oppose the construction of the Pacific Railroad by the Government of the United States.

THE SMYRNA AFFAIR—Washington, September 19.—The Ministers of Russia,

The New Orleans Christian Advocate.

The Foreign News.

DETAILS BY THE STEAMSHIP FRANKLIN.

By the N. Y. Herald of the 14th ult. we have full details of the European news, from which we glean a summary:

The West India mail steamer Magdalena arrived at Southampton on the 31st ult with specie; value $1,338,000, on freight from the Gulf of Mexico and the Pacific.

RUSSIA AND TURKEY.

The Eastern question had started into fresh life, and increased the uneasiness regarding the final issue. The Paris Moniteur, of the 27th, announced officially that the Porte had accepted the propositions of the Vienna Conference, with some unimportant modifications in the wording. The moneyed world was by no means reassured by this announcement, and on the 29th a sort of semi-panic was produced by an article in the Journal des Debats, professing to give the substance of the "unimportant alterations" which had been made by the Sultan. If the version of the Debats be a correct one, the note would have to be entirely remodelled, and it must be considered very doubtful if the Emperor would accept the alterations. Thus, the negotiations would have to commence almost de novo, and the Porte by thereby playing into the hands of Russia; "because" a pretext for delaying the evacuation of Danubian Principalities would be afforded. It depends, therefore, entirely upon the Russian Czar to reopen the question or not, just as he chooses, and to revoke his previous acceptance of the arrangements if the four great Powers if it suited his policy to do so.

Almost this view of the case and an evidence of a more pacific appearance of affairs, we find in the Morning Chronicle of the 31st ult a telegraphic despatch from Vienna stating that a courier had reached that city from Constantinople, confirming the statement that the verbal alterations to be note of the four powers were really unsignificant, and that the Porte had addressed a circular to the ambassador of the powers, stating that its dignity required such modifications, and that the Sultan would send an ambassador to St. Petersburg simultaneously with the evacuation of the Principalities.

The London Times, of the same day, publishes as a telegraphic dispatch dated Bucharest, Aug. 17, to the effect that the Austrian Consul-General having received dispatches that the Oriental question was settled, the Russians would evacuate the Principalities in September, and in Paris it was stated that the fleets of England would thereupon return to Malta and Toulon.

The subjoined appears in the Paris correspondence of the London Times:

The evacuation of the Principalities, which some days ago we believed certain, is now described in the quarters I refer to as merely probable, and, certainly, if the Emperor of Russia entertains the idea of permanent occupation attributed to him, or if he is not acting in good faith, the present conjuncture is the least unfavorable for him self since the commencement of this affair.

The Paris Moniteur says: The latest post from the Danubian Principalities announces that the Princes of Moldavia and Wallachia have refused to obey the order of the Porte to appear in person at Constantinople. This places the government in a most embarrassing position.

Every account received from the different provinces of the empire speaks of the zeal shown by the people in arming themselves for defence against Russia. It remains to be seen how this unexampled enthusiasm will be allayed without war.

The Paris Patrie concludes a long article on the subject of the settlement of the difficulty, thus:

The war party among the Turks, of which the leaders are Mehemed Ali, the Seraskier and brother-in-law of the Sultan; Mahmoud, the Capitan Pasha, and Mehemed Rushdi, the Hassa Moushir, or General-in-Chief of the Guards, are still loud in their opposition. Mahmoud Pasha declared in the Divan of the 17th that "he would divorce his wife, but would not admit a dishonorable peace with Russia." This is the expression of the strongest kind in use among the Turks. Every day sees a Grand Council, and yet no result is arrived at. The indignation among the Turks at what they term the faithlessness of their allies who with them signed the solemn treaties which were to guarantee the integrity of Turkey is constantly expressed, and England comes in for the largest share of abuse. A deputation has just arrived from 3000 Christians of Bulgaria, offering their services to the Sultan against his enemies. The Bulgarians, amounting to upwards of 4,000,000, are greatly on the increase, are of a mixed Sclavonian and Tartar origin, and are well known for their industrious, quiet habits. Great efforts have been making for some years past by Greek priests and others in the pay of Russia to create disaffection among them towards their rightful sovereign, and to teach them to regard the Czar as their natural protector and the head of their religion.

The day before yesterday the Bosphorus, opposite the Sultan's palace of Cheragan, was crowded with barges carrying from Asia to Europe from 2000 to 3000 Bashibonzouks, or irregular cavalry, from Anatolia. These men are all dressed, armed and mounted according to their individual tastes, and are a type of those warriors who first with the Janissaries carried the Turkish arms into the fair provinces of Europe.

From all these contradictory rumors and opinions we can only conclude that the question is still far from a settlement. Quien save?

THE PRINCIPALITIES.

The newspapers in the Principalities have been expressly forbidden to make mention of the movements of troops, and the merchants have been informed that they must not, in their commercial correspondence, make any mention of military matters.

Sixty thousand quintals of merchandise and grain passed the Sulina mouth in the month of July.

FRANCE.

The Prince and Princess Murat were at Marseilles, where they had given a grand dinner to the officers of the American frigate Cumberland; many of whom were old friends of the Prince.

The government announces officially that the fears with regard to the harvest were groundless—that the quantity of grain is of an average amount, and the quality excellent.

CHINA.

Overland India mail brings later news from China, but the news is not important. The failure of the Imperial attack upon Chi-Kiang-Foo is confirmed—the Imperial fleet having returned to Shanghai. Chi-Kiang-Foo is said to be the key of the Chinese Empire, and the fall-ure of the Imperialists to capture it is regarded as evidence of the fate of the Empire. The Rev. Mr. Taylor, American missionary, who was in the camp of the insurgents during the attack, says they did not suffer in the least from the cannonade of the Imperial troops. An army of insurgents had started from Nankin for Pekin, but had subsequently been recalled.

By the Steamer Niagara.

Halifax, Sept. 14.—The steamer Niagara arrived this morning, bringing Liverpool dates of September 3.

FRANCE.—The Emperor and Empress were at Dieppe.

It was thought there would be another reaction in breadstuffs.

A slight outbreak had occurred at Rouen.

RUSSIA.—The latest news from the East is less favorable for a speedy adjustment of the Turkish question. The Czar will not accept the Sultan's modification.

Commercial affairs at St. Petersburg were unchanged. Exchanges on London better.

AUSTRIA.—The Austrian government had prohibited the exportation of corn from Austrian Italy.

Two more Austrian war steamers had been sent to Smyrna.

BELGIUM.—A riot had occurred at Liege, owing to the high price of grain, and similar disturbances had been attempted at Ghent.

It was believed at Brussels that the government would not prohibit the export of corn, but would temporarily open the ports if necessary.

SWEDEN.—A public meeting had been held at Stockholm, in regard to the high and increasing price of corn.

TURKEY.—The war party have gained the ascendancy in Turkey and have considerably complicated affairs, thus giving Russia a new excuse for the postponement of a definite settlement. Many of the Turks had also begun to manifest a hostile feeling towards France and England; charging their allies with cow rdice. It was said that Turkey is willing to have the Principalities formed into independent States, under the protection of the four powers.

The warlike movements in Turkey continue, and 80,000 reserves have been called out.

A change in the Turkish Ministry is expected as soon as there is a settlement of the present crisis.

EGYPT.—The Russian Consul General of Egypt has been re-called in consequence of his leaning towards the Turks.

It is rumored that the city of Thebes has been almost totally destroyed by an earthquake.

Arrival of the Steamship Philadelphia.

The steamship Philadelphia, Julius de Brissel, Commander, arrived at her wharf from Aspinwall, with mails and passengers on Sunday morning.

In her outward passage, when in lat. 16 15 N., lon. 82 18 W., the Philadelphia broke her shaft on her port wheel. A delay of several days took place in removing the floats from her disabled wheel, and disconnecting her engines. She arrived in Aspinwall on the morning of the 5th September, most of the passengers for New Orleans having left for New York in the Illinois.

Thomas Dillon, the second steward of the Philadelphia, died of hemorrhage on Sunday, August 8, and Henry Haydn, a saloon waiter, on the 31st ult. The crew of the Philadelphia are all healthy.

After partially repairing engines and coaling the Philadelphia left Aspinwall at midnight of Friday, the 9th, and after as favorable a voyage as could be made with one wheel crossed the Bar last night at 7, P. M. The Isthmus is healthy, very little sickness existing at Aspinwall. The weather is beginning to be settled, and travel ing is good. The bridge across the Chagres river, at Barbacoas, is in great progress, and Californians may soon anticipate steaming it from Gorgona to Aspinwall.

Late from the Isthmus.

THE COMET.—The comet seen in the States for some time past has also been very plainly seen at Aspinwall. It was visible at half past six, a half-past seven o'clock on the evening of the 26th ult. and three succeeding days, in a N. W. direction.

CHURCH AND STATE IN NEW GRANADA.—The (Catholic) Freeman's Journal publishes the new decree of the Granadian Congress, separating State and Church, which would go into effect after the first September.

PROMULGATION OF THE NEW CONSTITUTION OF NEW GRANADA.—The first day of September was a gala day with the native citizens of New Granada. In conformity with a proclamation of the Jefe Politico, the day was set apart by the feast-day loving New Granadians as a day of rejoicing and every description of amusement and public spectacles. The occasion of all this display was the promulgation of the New Constitution, which was commenced by the firing of a salute to the Constitutional flag of New Granada. The authorities and a few others having taken seats on a well arranged platform on the open area on the corner of C and Third streets, and a considerable number of natives and others having surrounded the stand, the New Constitution was read, and a brief and pertinent oration delivered.

The Aspinwall Courier says the Speaker's stand was appropriately decorated, and from the hotels adjoining the New Granadian and American flags were suspended in union. After the ceremonies were completed, those assembled, accompanied with music, paraded through the streets, and then partook of a lunch and dispersed. Salutes were fired through the entire day, and taken altogether they had quite a jollification.

The Aspinwall Courier of the 21 inst. has the following items:

The steamer Illinois arrived here from New York (via Kingston, Ja.) on the evening of the 30th, with 170 passengers, and a number of men for the P. R. R. Co.

The steamer Winfield Scott, of the P. M. S. S. Co.'s line, arrived at Panama on the 30th, with dates to the 16th ult., and some 420 passengers from San Francisco. The Illinois leaves with all her passengers this evening.

The same paper of the 30th ult. says:

The railroad is making better advance than before for many months, at both ends that are now in progress.

The health of all the isthmus is better than usual; the season has been attended with an unusually small quantity of rain, and we have entirely escaped a freshet on the Chagres river.

THE DARIEN SHIP CANAL.—We learn that the last mail from England brought private advices from Lt. Cullen, which declare positively that a surveying party will be sent out to the proposed route of the Ship Canal, accompanied by Dr. Cullen.

THE PRESENT POSITION OF (COLON) ASPINWALL.—The energetic action of the companies interested in the increase of facilities upon the Panama route—the re-establishment of an opposition line of steamers—the constant increase of European business on the route—the prospect of an early establishment of an Australian line of steamers—and the fact, that the city is much less unhealthy than at this time last year, all contribute to place the city in a much more envisible position in public favor, and to excite more sanguine hopes than have before been indulged by our residents. We promised, too, that a new jail, and various other public buildings are soon to be erected—but we are loth to build much upon this latter advantage, and in fact shall only feel confidence in calculation upon it, when the buildings are erected. We are, however, fully convinced, in view of the above mentioned prospects, and the energetic character of our principal residents, that our city will have increased, at the expiration of a year subsequent as much as she has during the year prior to date.

From the Aspinwall Courier of the 9th ult.

IMPORTANT FROM THE SOUTH—Revolutionary Movements.—By the arrival of the Pacific Steam Navigation Company's steamer Santiago, Captain R. Joy, we are in possession of our usual files of Chilean and Peruvian papers, from which we compile the following summary:

CHILE.—Our Valparaiso dates are to the 30th The Chilean Congress is still in session, and the laws relative to tythes, national schools, and reduction of duties, are under consideration. Sr Ancizar, Minister from New Granada to Chile having concluded his mission, will return to this country at the end of the present month. His negotiations with Bolivia are postponed, owing to the unsettled state of that country.

ECUADOR.—This republic is in a state of reorganization, and recovering from the effects of its late disturbances.

The Government is engaged in defining the limits of the Republic with Peru; a very complicated question, and now more so, owing to the late settlement between Peru and Brazil.

An order of the Government was issued on the 1st of June, commanding Sra. Mercedes Jiron de Flores, the wife of Gen. Flores, to leave the country within twenty days. Her family were to accompany her, and the Government pays all expenses of sending them to Valparaiso.

THE MARKETS.—Business is reported as dull and suffering a depression from the loss of the Quito. In American goods and provisions small sales have taken place. The arrivals from Europe have been small, yet quite sufficient to meet the demand of the market. English coal has sold at from $16 to $17; Chile from $8 to $12. Copper scarce and high. Flour is quoted at $8-04, with small sales, chiefly for the Australian market.

BOLIVIA.—We have very little reliable information from this Republic relative to the revolutionary movements now going on. Gen. Agreda still occupies Cobija, but had made no progress and is even in dread of assassination by some of his own party.

Gen. Velasco, with his troops, consisting of 500 men, were defeated by Gen. Jose on the 10th July by Col. Corrosa, of Belzu's army. Gen. Lojenus, with seventeen others, were killed, also one officer and 53 soldiers taken prisoners. Velasco and Linares saved themselves by flight. The casualities to the Government army were three killed and four wounded. The provinces of Cuitiri and Chichas, which had pronounced in favor of Velasco, will, it is presumed, be easily brought to order by the Government.

PERU.—We have news of the settlement of the principal difficulties which existed between New Granada and Peru, and that the question of the Colombian debt was the only one now unsettled. Sr Guzman had entered upon his duties as Venezuelan Minister, and was about to arrange a treaty of peace and friendship between the two republics. Sr. Pulido, the late Venezuelan Minister, had satisfactorily arranged the question of the portion of the Colombian debt due by Peru to Venezuela, which amounts to 28½ per cent on $10,000,000, or $2,850,000, a part of which is to be paid in cash, and the rest in State paper.

The 28th July, the 33d anniversary of the Independence of Peru, was celebrated at Lima with great rejoicings.

On the 1st of August there were 90 vessels loading with guano at the Chincha Islands. From the 1st to the 31st July, 55 vessels sailed from the same place with full cargoes for Europe and the United States.

The Lima papers say nothing of the difficulties between Peru and Bolivia. There has been considerable international dissatisfaction in the latter country. A revolution broke out in Cochambamba, headed by General Urdinieu, which, however, was of no importance, and was quelled immediately by the son-in-law of Belzu.

We learn that Belzu, fearful of the invasion of the south by Generals Velasco and Agreda, of the revolution party, went to La Paz with all his army except the Chorolque battalion, which was stationed at Potosi, and the Belzu battalion, which was protecting the frontier of Huancane from petty outbreaks. Gen. Caledonio Vela had formed a species of cavalry regiment in Tarija for the purpose of marching against Gen. Velasco was near Tupiza with 500 men.

LOSS OF P. M. S. N. CO.'S STEAMER QUITO.—The Quito was sailing on the night of the 10th instant, 15 miles from Huasco, when she struck unexpectedly on a rock, and the shock drove her 100 yards further, striking from one rock to another with such force as to open her bottom immediately. The letter bags and specie were then discharged with regularity. Of the first all were saved, but of the bars of silver shipped at Copiapo, 16 were missing, only 24 bars of silver and one of gold being saved.

The following day the accident was known at Huasco, and the authorities and the English Consul went to the place, and the shipwrecked were conducted to the town, from whence the Firefly brought them to Coquimbo. The captain of the Quito wrote to the agency that only Don Cruz Toloza was drowned, who had brought with him about 200 doubloons.

ARRIVAL OF THE STEAMSHIP FASHION—Movement of Mexican Troops—Gen. Smith.—The U. S steamship Fashion arrived Wednesday from Brazos Santiago, which port she left on Sunday the 13th instant.

The Fashion left in port the U. S. mail steamship Yacht, at anchor, she having arrived on Saturday.

The schooner Corah left in company with the Fashion. She also reports the schooner Ninn, Schiffer master, to sail for New Orleans on the 28th. The schooner Star was at anchor off Brazos Santiago.

The Fashion reports that the Mexican General, Wall, had arrived at Matamoros on the 15th with 200 troops, being in command of the Mexican frontier.

General Smith and staff had arrived at Corpus Christi on the 16th.

It was further reported that the editor of the Brownsville Flag had shot a man and had been obliged to flee the country. The Flag had consequently ceased publication, the editor being printer, pressman and all.

Advices have been received at New York from Maracaibo to August 20. The revolutionary outbreak in Venezuela had been quelled, and the troops disbanded. The vessels taken by the Government for war service had been given up to their owners. No confidence was, however, felt, the Treasury was empty, and a renewal of hostilities anticipated. Business was dull. The country was remarkably healthy.

Later from Texas.

By the arrival of the steamship Perseverance, Capt. Lawless, we have Galveston papers of the 16th and Indianola of the 13th inst.

The total interments in Indianola for the week ending 13th were 11—ten of which were of yellow fever.

The deaths in Galveston for the week ending 14th inst. were 64—seven on the 9th; nine on the 10th; nine on the 11th; eighteen on the 12th; nine on the 13th; twelve on the 14th. The Journal of the 14th says the most of these cases were taken provious to the present clear and pleasant weather. The fine South breeze, which has prevailed for the last two or three days, is considered quite favorable to the health of well persons. We have heard of but few cases since last evening.

SICKNESS IN HOUSTON.—The Wesleyan Banner says:

During the week ending Sept. 7, there has been an unusual number of deaths, eleven of which are said to have been from yellow fever. Our city authorities, together with the citizens generally, are using every effort to stay the progress of this disease. Though it cannot but be alarming, yet still the citizens give no manifestations of fear, but seem resolved to use all the means, and leave the result in the hands of a merciful God.

The Galveston News contains the following items:

The Land Office is said to be crowded with those seeking to enter land.

A public meeting is called in Gonzales to take measures for boring an Artesian well.

The editor of the San Antonio Ledger says he has ever regarded Galveston as the only real port of entry in Texas. Speaking of the San Antonio and Gulf Railroad, he says:

"There will be a most respectable resistance to the collection of subscriptions. The contract will be attacked in courts of justice. It is the duty of a decent newspaper to publish such truths. We shall do it."

A correspondent, writing from Springfield, Limestone county says the health of the county is generally good, and the prospects of immigration very flattering. If a good young democrat, who wants to publish a paper, would go up there he can have $1000 guaranteed for the first year, with all the prospects of a growing country around him. Tailors, saddlers, bootmakers, etc., are also in demand. There are few better openings in Texas for enterprising men than this county offers.

The following items are gleaned from the interior exchanges:

The accounts of the cotton crop continue to be favorable from every part of Texas.

The Union Baptist Association will hold its next annual session in Anderson, Grimes county, instead of Houston, to commence on Thursday before the first Sunday in October next.

The Presbyterians, Methodists, German Lutherans, and Catholics, all have churches in Victoria. The Episcopalians at present have their services in the Court-house. The Catholics are about building a large brick church in the Gothic style of architecture.

The Austin Gazette states that the Commissioner appointed by the Governor to ascertain the distance of the Buffalo Bayou, Brazos and Colorado Railroad, completed and ready for use, reports nineteen and a half miles, and the Comptroller has directed the Commissioner of the General Land Office to issue the land scrip to which the company are entitled, eight sections of 640 acres per mile—nearly 160,000 acres in all.

The American says the District Court is now in session Judge Hancock, in his charge to the Grand Jury, called their attention to the laws against gaming, in a manner not very complimentary to gamblers in general. In consequence a goodly number of indictments have been found by the Grand Jury. The noted game of "pin pool" has been indicted for the first time.

A bill has passed one of the Dutch Houses of Legislature, opening the Molucco Islands to the commerce of all nations.

ADMIRABLE THINGS.

BY JOHN G. SAXE.

The hand outstretched to meet a brother's;
A life expressed in saving others;
Hood's preacher seeking out distress,
With will and power to make it less;
The seeking student hoy retired,
With soaring inspiration fired;
Love's mission overleaping creed,
Teaching the deaf and blind to read;
The hand that wields the hammer, then,
With equal skill, takes up the pen;
The patriot toiling for his kind,
With energetic soul and mind;
The steam press engine, forge and plow,
Pearl-drops on the laborer's brow;
The poet's sweet and hopeful song;
Humanity waging war with wrong;
A mother at the close of day,
Teaching her little ones to pray;
The Christian spirit taking flight
From the dim world to endless light;
And all things on through life we plod,
Which brings us nearer truth and God.

PERPETUAL THIRST.—Some years ago we gave a detailed account of the condition and appearance of a man who was then supposed to be the greatest drinker among men in America, if not on the globe. He is yet living in excellent health, at the age of 56 years, and still remains in a state of perpetual thirst. The individual alluded to, is Mr James Webb, of Fairhaven, Mass. Under every aspect in which the case may be examined, it is remarkable, and perhaps unparalleled in the annals of physiology. In early infancy, the quantity of water he consumed was so large, as to astonish those who witnessed it. A development in size and weight of the body required a corresponding increase in the quantity of his aquatic potations. Under ordinary circumstances, three gallons of water is rather a short daily allowance for him to live through a night with less than a pailful. With this amount of cold water daily poured into the stomach, Mr. Webb has been in good health and spirits. We leave the statement of these curious facts unembarrassed by comment, and simply ask of learned editorial friends the probable cause of this unsatisfied thirst. [Boston Medical and Surgical Journal.

TIPPED WITH THE ROMANTIC.—There is now in the mountain region of Western Virginia a young lady from Kentucky, described by the Parkersburg Gazette as young, pretty, educated and sprightly, who is there to protect her rights to a large tract of land, which descended to her from her ancestors, to whom it was patented for revolutionary services, but is now claimed by a land pirate, who formerly acted as her agent. To defend her rights "solitary and alone" to the disputed territory, she went, made a clearing, built a log-cabin, and located a tenant. She always carries one of Colt's revolvers, and, thus armed, roams fearlessly over the mountains, following paths seldom trod save by the panther and bear.

LONGEVITY OF QUAKERS.—The late census returns in England reveal the singular fact, that the average age attained by this peaceful sect is fifty-one years, two months and twenty-one days, while half of the population of this country die before reaching the age of twenty-one, and the average duration of life the world over is but thirty-three years. The Quakers therefore, live a third longer than the rest of us. Their temperance, prudence, plenty, want of passion, and general repose of character, are undoubtedly favorable to longevity.

STROKE OF WIT.—A stroke of wit, accompanied by a delicacy of insult, was played off by a lady, who was engaged shortly to be married. The intended bridegroom, perceiving her talking for a considerable time, and with much apparent pleasure, to another gentlemen, said to her, "I will be revenged of your infidelity, and show the letters you have written to me." "Do," said the lady, "I have nothing to blush for, except the direction."

TO KEEP A STOVE BRIGHT.—If you wish to keep a stove as bright as enough body by only two applications a year, make weak alum water, and mix your British Lustre with it; let the stove be cold, brush with the mixture, then take a dry brush and dry lustre and rub the stove until perfectly dry. Should any part, before polishing, become so dry as to look gray, moisten it with a wet brush and proceed as above.

An extra fee of $20 is charged for French.

The course of study in this institution is as extensive as that in any institution for the education of females, and the instruction is of the most critical and thorough character. Every provision has been made to ensure success. A philosophical and chemical apparatus adequate to all the purposes of instruction has been provided, together with maps, charts, globes, etc. The instructions are experienced in their work, and highly approved for capacity, fidelity and skill.

This institution has just passed the first year of its existence, with the most satisfactory results. And the public may feel assured that the Trustees will watch over its interests with the utmost solicitude and care, and spare no pains to render its system of education as perfect as possible.

The tuition fees have been somewhat reduced, and are below those of many Southern institutions of no higher grade. It is impossible to engage teachers of the highest character for talents, attainments and skill, without paying liberal salaries. But we offer as an equivalent, above all price, a faithful and skillful application of the most approved means of developing and training the mind.

Printed circulars, containing fuller information, may be had by application to Alex. Hitchcock, Esq., Secretary of the Board.

MARION FEMALE SEMINARY.

MARION, PERRY COUNTY, ALABAMA.

FACULTY.

REV. JAMES K. ARMSTRONG, A. M.,
Principal, and Professor of Mental and Moral Sciences.
H. H. DALY, A. M.,
Professor of Vocal and Instrumental Music.
MISS E. L. HASKILL, English.
MISS M. J. BONHURANT, English.
MISS PIERRE FULLER,
Drawing, Painting, French and Guitar.
MISS J. V. CLARK,
Primary and Preparatory Department.
MRS. L. J. ARMSTRONG, Governess.
MRS. REBECCA CLARK, Matron and Nurse.

This institution has just closed a prosperous year, with one hundred and twenty-six pupils.

The ensuing session will commence on THURSDAY, the 29th day of SEPTEMBER.

It is very desirable that pupils enter at the beginning of the session.

The main building is a new and superior brick edifice, one hundred by fifty feet, three stories, and for elegance, convenience of arrangement—for number, size and comfort of school and private rooms—is not surpassed by any similar one in the country.

The Principal resides in the building, and superintends the Boarding Department. He has in his employ a gentleman and his lady, who discharge with faithfulness and satisfaction the duties of this position. Pupils boarding in the Seminary are under the immediate control of the Principal at all times—are members of his family.

The Matron and Nurse, a lady of great amiability and gladness of heart, united with long experience and unfailing faithfulness, secures to pupils, at all times, the kindness and attentions of home.

The Principal and his lady, with the aid of the Female Teachers, all of whom reside in the Seminary, diligently guard and form the morals, manners and habits of the young ladies.

There is but one session, of nine and a half months. Pupils can enter at any time during the session, charges made from the beginning of the month in which they enter to the close of the session.

One hundred and forty-five dollars will pay the board and tuition of a young lady, for the entire session, in the collegiate department; one hundred and seventy-four dollars will embrace the languages; two hundred and thirty-five dollars will embrace board, tuition in the collegiate department, on the piano, and in the languages.

The above estimate does not include books, stationery sheet music, ornamental materials and lights; all of which articles are furnished by the Principal on moderate terms.

The institution is furnished with a new and complete Chemical, Philosophical and Astronomical apparatus. It also has a large collection of globes, terrestial and celestial; and oriental maps, atlases, charts plates and diagrams, for simplifying the various branches of Natural Science.

The Library consists of more than one thousand volumes, embracing a choice collection in every department of Literature, Art, Science, History, &c., &c.

The Cabinet consists of several hundred specimens.

The institution is furnished with a large and superior assortment of musical instruments.

The Church and Sabbath School facilities are unsurpassed by any school in the country. Of the number that have entered its walls during the past session, more than seventy were or have become professors of religion.

Pupils are not allowed to attend parties, balls, dancing classes, &c.

Visitors are not received, except with suitable introduction to the Principal from patrons.

The usual regulations of the best boarding schools are enforced respecting visiting, correspondance, pamphlets, periodicals, novels, and dental operations.

They retire and rise at regular hours through the year. Great attention is paid to exercise in the open air, or within doors, when the weather is inclement.

Every Saturday morning is devoted to plain sewing and the repairing of clothing, under the direction of an officer.

No accounts will be opened in Marion, but with the expressed permission of patrons. When articles are to be purchased, it must be done with approbation and under the eye of the lady of the Principal.

The wants of pupils should be supplied from home, as far as practicable. All jewelry is prohibited. All pocket money, or other sums for the use of pupils, should be deposited with the Principal. They are allowed to spend daily sums of their pocket money per month.

Social entertainments composed of invited married gentlemen and ladies, the teachers and more advanced boarding pupils, are held monthly which afford the young ladies a healthful and pleasant recreation, opportunity for musical exercise before a select audience, acquaint them with the usages of refined society, and give them ease and grace in manners.

For catalogues or further information apply to the Principal

THE REWARD.—By John G. Whittier.

Who, looking backward from his manhood's prime
Sees not the spectre of his mis spent time?
And, through the shade,
Of funeral cypress, planted thick behind,
Hears no reproachful whisper on the wind
From his loved dead?

Who hears no trace of Passion's evil force?
Who shuns thy sting, O terrible Remorse?
Who would not cast
Half of his future from him, but to win
Wakeless oblivion for the wrong and sin
Of the sealed Past?

Alas! the evil, which we fain would shun,
We do, and leave the wished-for good undone;
Our strength to-day
Is but to-morrow's weakness, prone to fall;
Poor, blind, unprofitable servants all,
Are we alway.

Yet who, thus looking backward o'er his years,
Feels not his eyelids wet with grateful tears,
If he hath been Permitted, weak and sinful as he was,
To cheer and aid, in some ennobling cause,
His fellow men.

If he hath hidden the outcast, or let in
A ray of sunshine to the cell of sin;
If he hath lent
Strength to the weak, and, in the hour of need,
Over the suffering mindless of his creed
Or line, been bent?

He has not lived in vain; and while he gives
The praise to Him in whom he moves and lives,
With thankful heart,
He looks backward, and with hope before,
Knows for that from his works he never more
Can be cut off apart.

MISSIONS TO SLAVES.

The letter following we publish with pleasure, for its intelligent and strong attestation to the benefits resulting to masters and servants from the labors of the Missionary. The writer is extensively known as a generous Southern planter, cultivating polite literature as well as rich land, in East Mississippi, and his testimony has all the qualities the most indifferent or skeptical, on the subject of colored missions, could ask for. It was forwarded to us by Rev. L. J. Schoolar, with request for publication, and we hope it will encourage masters every where to give the largest facilities for a good work, and Missionaries, with good heart, to labor on. [Ed. N. O. Christian Advocate.

Lonewood, September 13, 1853.

My Dear Sir: Your letter, requesting me, as "One of your patrons in the Domestic Missionary Work," to give you my views as to the benefits to be derived from imparting religious instruction to the slaves, by that means and method, has been duly received; and notwithstanding the fact that I am no professor of religion, and own no church membership, I do not hesitate to comply with your wishes. I am impelled to this as well from esteem and respect for yourself, as from deep memory of those early teachings which learned me to reverence all of your calling and profession.

This mission was begun and opened on my plantation eight years since, by the Rev. George Schaeffer, my honored and cherished friend, and under circumstances which then seemed to afford him but little encouragement. The proposition to enter upon such a work was made by himself, after a conference with several of my elder slaves, none of whom were then members of any church. I took no part in this conference, and used no sort of influence, advisory or compulsory. Having entire confidence in the man, I left him to pursue his own course, adopt his own plans and regulations, fix on his own time and appointments, and declined, from motives you have since learned, to mingle in the least degree, as the master and proprietor, in any of his church matters. The whole undertaking was voluntary on his part, and that of the negroes; and after conversing with Mrs. Cobb, who is a member of his church, this gentleman embarked in the cause with his usual zeal and sanguineness. He arranged to attend once in every three weeks, and to hold protracted meetings once in each year, catechising his whole congregation at every visitation. The rapidity of improvement in this latter exercise astonished me. I confess that I had but little faith in his success when he first made known to me his intention to try them with Dr. Capers' oral catechism; but old and young entered into it with ardor and increasing interest—an interest which has not relaxed or lessened to this day. I have often overheard their recitations, and the promptitude, vivacity and general correctness of the responses afforded to me a most pleasing exhibition of the natural grasp of memory thus distinctly employed, and unaided, save by simple repetition. The radiant smiles and sparkling eyes which beamed around, also attested to my observation the fact that the exercise was a festival rather than a task, a sort of gala contest with old and young of both sexes. I consider this single feature of the domestic missionary cause, a full and valid reason why it should be encouraged and extended, and that heart must indeed be cold and hard if impervious to the warmth of the touch which opens the sympathies to the impressions of pleasure at such social manifestations of joy among people who are the willing creatures of our will, and whose toil is the gain of him they call master.

But there is another reason why, as a matter of policy and pleasure, and apart from all religious persuasions, (to which you and all who have been thus engaged among my people know that I lay not the slightest claim, however marked my conformity may be in some respects,) I continue and encourage the domestic mission. I have found that its protection has exerted a most salutary influence in a social aspect. The family relations of our negro population have never been fairly cultivated, within the range of my observation, whilst in almost every other respect their condition has been materially improved. If this want of cultivation has not proceeded from any want of will on the part of the masters, it is impossible to work out such improvement, as I believe, without the aid of Christian ministrations. The Methodist Church has taken official action, and has wisely stepped in to supply this aid. Other churches may have done so likewise, but as I profess not to be fully posted in ecclesiastical matters, I am not able to assert such positively. The good hearted missionary, being regarded and reverenced by them as their pastor, will inevitably acquire a sort of influence among his colored friends which masters cannot attain. Lenient and impartial as these last may endeavor to be, in the administration of the church affairs, even where they are professors, there is still an impression of his authority which may be traced to another cause than that which is connected with that exercised by their pastor. He is the head of their official church body, and the representative of that church to which all in common are attached. They know, too, that he is responsible to a higher body for the manner and progress of his work among their race, and this parental care on the part of their church naturally draws out the love of their susceptible hearts. Their affections mainly centre in him who comes in their midst, as the accredited envoy of a common Father, and his advice will often avoid a resort to direct authority on the part of the master. I have seen this satisfactorily exemplified among my own people. I know nothing further than this. If any, more scrupulous than myself, shall object to this species of outside authority or influence, I can only explain my own conduct and course by declaring my entire confidence in those who have ministered among my negroes; and I am quite sure that the policy, if not the Christian spirit, of the Methodist Church will impel its officials to select the proper description of ministers for so delicate a work, and those only. I might amplify this reflection, but the limits of a letter forbid. I think, besides, that this indulgence, so unquestionably harmless and perhaps so imminently necessary, is calculated to engender closer ties and more generous associations among the plantation negroes. They are no longer a secondary portion of the audience, as is the case when they attend our regular and stated worship. They are the principal and especial subjects of address, and the family and friends of the master are their guests, so to speak. The minister is their own, the house of worship is theirs, they lead in all the forms of church adoration. No class of persons so appreciate such privileges as the negroes. Their pride is excited, and they feel the necessity of increased circumspection. Mutual counsel is courted. Generous appeals no longer fall powerless. They are disarmed of all complaint, and they are pointedly impressed with a larger and keener sense of responsibility. A new source of happiness, even supposing it to be of a mere earthly character, is thus opened, and their meetings form a monthly era in their simple and obscure lives. The trifling rest, or even occasional trouble of providing for their enjoyment of this privilege and pleasure would not enter into the mind of any liberal or intelligent planter for a single moment. Nor, in my judgment, should the skepticism or indifference of the owner be allowed to interpose any barrier to the gratification of the slave. If, after free and voluntary counsel with any accredited minister of the Gospel, the negroes decide that they should be allowed to have the services of a missionary, and the benefits of religious instruction, I hardly think it would be fair to refuse them. Nor do I believe that such a request would be refused by any planter of the South whose character and social position are at all to be valued.

Having now been engaged in filling this mission for well nigh three years, you are far better enabled to judge of their spiritual progress than I am. Of that I know nothing, nor do I suppose that you expected any testimony from me on this point. But there are many of my servants whose habits have been entirely reformed since the mission was begun, who had been previously disposed to be quite vicious; and there are others in whose sincerity, honesty and sound moral sense I have entire confidence. I regard them as being strictly honest men, and I am convinced that such reformation is alone attributable to the salutary teachings of yourself and your worthy predecessors.

Hoping that the above may have reached and met the object of your request,

Truly, your friend and servant,

Joseph B. Cobb.

Rev. L. J. Schoolar.

BECOMING ALL THINGS, ETC.

The following, from the Religious Telescope, hits off centrally, and with pointed humor, the too common abuse of St. Paul's language, in which he describes his adapting himself to his hearers, that he might save them. The assimilation to the world is nearly done—the professor or the preacher is popular—fine fellow, he—none of your croaking bigots is parson so and so. But where is the salvation? One side is overdone, and the other not done at all:

"It is said that a Scotch clergyman once undertook to convert some French prisoners confined in a castle. Returning from the castle one day, the missionary met Doctor Henry, when the following dialogue, as we learn from a popular monthly, took place:

"What ha'e you been doing in the castle, Mr. John?"

"I've been about my Master's work, Doctor; converting the poor deluded bodies, the French prisoners."

"A most orthodox employment; of course you understand the language?"

"Na, ne'er a word o' French can I speak."

"Astonishing! how did you get in?"

"To tell the truth, Doctor, it was no easy matter; for the first time, when I tried to be serious with them, they jeered and made a fool o' me, but I fell on a better plan next day; I ordered a great bowl o' punch, and we sat around it, and drank to ane naither; they laugh and I laugh; and ye ken, Doctor, the Lord works his ain work!"

"Too many at the present time pursue substantially the course adopted by the Scotchman with his bowl of punch. To gain an influence with those they aim to convert, ministers are seen taking the lead in the gay and fashionable circle, and at the party or fair. Professedly for the same object, they crowd into every popular worldly institution that can be named, seeming to think that if the good will of sinners can be obtained, even though it be around a 'bowl of punch' in the fashionable party or at the fair, then the work of conversion is half done. Alas! if they knew the truth, they would know that this conformity to the pleasures and follies of the unconverted, dishonors the sacred office, grieves the Holy Spirit, paralyses their strength as God's embassadors, and renders it certain that Heaven will, of necessity, seek other instrumentalities for the conversion of sinners."

BLESSING THE BEASTS.

Grace Greenwood, the papers say, has come home, and is about booking her letters, written while in Europe. If there are many like this one, written from Rome, January 29, the book will be worth having:

We went last Sunday to see the blessing of beasts—an annual ceremony, which takes place at the Church of San Antonio Abate. There was an immense crowd of all descriptions and classes of people; among the rest, a vast convocation of beggars—the crippled and maimed in endless varieties, wrecks and remnants, divisions and subdivisions of men.

A priest stood on the steps of the church, with a holy-water sprinkler in his hand, and a little boy at his side, bearing the benitier. The animals were trotted up before him; he read a form of benediction in Latin, shook the sprinkler at them, and they were good for a twelvemonth. Of course, this is done for a consideration, as what is not, in the way of church parades, privileges and immunities? The first applicants for a benediction, after our arrival were two miserable old cart-horses, who looked as though the blessings of all the fathers of the Church could not keep them on their legs for twenty-four hours. I fear the rite was extreme unction to them; and yet the owner doubtless led them away, rejoicing in the faith that the crows were cheated of the poor skeletons for a year to come.

Next came a drove of donkeys with their heads and tails decorated with gay ribbons. One of these committed the ever-to-be-apprehended asininn impropriety of braying in the midst of the ceremony. So absurd, ludicrous, and pompously farcical was this scene—so stupid, yet consciously ridiculous seemed the chief actors, that it struck me the benediction might have commenced, with great appropriateness, with an apostolic, "Dearly beloved brethren!"

Do not think me irreverent, from this, or any thing of the kind I may say. I feel a daily increasing indignation and contempt toward the monstrous absurdities of this system of religion and the actors therein. To reverence such things and such men were an insult to the God in whom I believe.

There came up a sudden and violent shower, and we were driven for shelter into the church, where we were brought into more intimate relations with the lower classes than was altogether safe or savory. I am a democrat even in Italy, till it comes to garlic and pulci, when, I must confess, my democracy assumes a more abstract character. After the storm was passed, the Pope's stud came, mostly driven in carriages—magnificent turn outs. Then followed those of the cardinals, scarcely less stately and gorgeous. Next came twenty-four superb horses, belonging to Prince Piombino, attached to one carriage, all decorated with plumes and ribbons—really a beautiful sight.

The horses which are to run in the Corso, during the Carnival, were blessed amid unusual demonstrations of popular feeling; and so it ended, the oddest, absurdest, most utterly ridiculous religious ceremonial I ever beheld.

To-morrow, Carnival begins. It is late at night; all is quiet in the streets, except the noise of hammers next door, where they are putting up a balcony. The sound, at this hour, has something strange and sinister in it—something so scaffold-suggestive, that it almost gives one a to-be-hung-next-morning sort of a feeling.

We need not, however, go so far for examples of this kind; for here, in this city, bureaus, bedsteads, barrels of salt, etc., etc., are "blessed" for "a consideration;" but this concerns us only from the fact, that an attempt is now being made to educate American youths, as far as possible, who are hereafter to wield the destinies of this republic, by men engaged as principals in this sort of business.

Intercession.—"In one of our infant classes," writes a visitor, "I found forty-five children in excellent order, and the visit to this class rewarded me for all my toil. The 'text' on the card was—'Christ is risen from the dead;' and, joining in the lesson, I asked many questions about the life of Christ; and referring to the passage—'He ever liveth to make intercession for us,' asked, without expecting an answer, And what is meant by 'intercession?' After a few moments pause, a bright eyed little fellow, about six years old, replied, 'Speaking a word to God for us, sir.'"

Rev. D. P. Bestor, writing to the Southwestern Baptist, on the education of youth in Alabama, remarks: "It can hardly be said that we are doing nothing for our sons. A gun instead of a library; a pointer dog instead of a teacher; a horse instead of an occupation, are certainly substitutes; and, if we are not 'training them in the way they should go,' we are training them in the way they will go, from which they will not depart."

OBSERVATIONS UPON "THE PROBLEM OF SPIRITUAL MANIFESTATIONS SOLVED."

Mr. Editor—I read Brother Powell's article upon spiritual manifestations with melancholy interest. It is deeply interesting in itself—is made doubly so by being the last thing he probably penned before he was struck down "at his post!" This interest is still further heightened by the revelations that it makes of the state and exercises of the author's mind immediately preceding his great change.

It has been the glory of Methodism from the beginning that her people "die well." Of this ground of glorifying nothing must be permitted to rob her. It is particularly desirable that her watchmen retire from the field with their faces to the foe. So went our brother. As to the extent and authority of the revelations which Brother P. received, men may properly differ. They were sufficient and timely for him—and there is nothing in the nature of the case, regarded abstractly—or in the object for which they are claimed to have been given, to render them either incredible or unreasonable. "Spiritual manifestations" as an authentic mode of communication with the invisible world, needed no revelation from heaven to expose their utterly preposterous character. The man who can believe that departed spirits—and especially spirits fitter for heaven—have no higher or more important employment in the other world than to come at the beck of every one, saint and sinner, and stay under, and work upon very ordinary pieces of furniture, as long as it may suit the pleasure of any "circle" of idle thoughtless mortals, must have very strange views of heaven, and think that the Divine Being had pretty well answered all his ends with them before they left this "sphere." Two hundred "circles" are in operation at the same hour in thirty different States, and Daniel Webster, Henry Clay, or John C. Calhoun, are called upon to entertain and instruct them all at the same time! Why purgatory would be preferable! I am sure that Paul must be differently situated from what he was when he was in the "third heaven," or he would be too much interested in the "rapturous gaze" to leave to attend upon any "circle." To be "absent from the body" is not "to be present with the Lord," as formerly; but it is to attend upon the "circles!" and cui bono? On the other hand, the "solutions" and "exposures" of the matter that have been published, are, if possible, more puerile than the system itself; and of these, Faraday's is the feeblest. They are a reproach to the science and philosophy of the age.

But I did not take up my pen to write upon "spiritual manifestations," but to criticise, in a friendly spirit, the article before us. I do this to point out what I deem to be dangerous ground assumed in it. Brother P. says: "No alternative was left him then, but to lay all at the feet of Christ, upon the altar of his truth, and solemnly promise him that if he would give me to know this strange manifestation to be the ministers of departed spirits, I would proclaim it and abide the results." Here I think the brother erred. As a minister of Christ, he had no right to place himself in a position where he might be under the necessity of proclaiming new and strange doctrines under the authority of an impression. The chartered limits of a minister's commission are laid down in the Bible, and he is not at liberty to go outside of that to find territory, and incorporate new elements into that commission; otherwise, there would be no limits to the "liberty of prophesying!" All manner of fancies would be put forth as from God, and the integrity of divine truth, and the head and ministry of the Church be destroyed. As a matter of personal opinion, such things may very properly be made the subject of prayer; but the possibility of their being made a part of a public ministry, is not to be admitted for a moment.

A minister of Christ is an authorized expounder of the word of God, and proclaimer of public truth; he is supposed to speak by authority, and must be able to show unmistakeable warrant for all he announces as a message from God. In the first place, reason is the proper tribunal before which to bring the claims of all such theories and pretensions as these, and enlightened by the word of God, is the proper guide in the disposition of them. God gave it to us for this very purpose, and there surely is nothing in these "manifestations" that defies its grasp. In the second place, there are but few men whose access to, and communion with God is so intimate and perfect as to justify them in taking such a position as this. Few men are by these raised sufficiently above themselves, and the influences that reach and affect ordinary mortals, to warrant them in taking their access to God as a guide in such matters. I believe in special answers to prayer, but to be authoritative—even to him who receives them—they should relate to legitimate subjects of prayer, and personal piety, entirely. Brother P.'s impression or persuasion had been different from what it was! the "manifestations" would then have been infallible truth to him, while, in fact, they would have been just what they are now.

"But he made it a subject of prayer, and could not be otherwise impressed." Others have done the same, and received wrong "impressions." The Rev. G. T. Cox, of the Maine Conference, a man far Brother P.'s senior, and behind few in the country either in intelligence or piety, made the doctrines of Miller and the end of the world, the subject of earnest repeated prayer, and fully believed that he received for answer, a divine assurance that the world would come to an end by a given time. He announced it accordingly, with all the feeling and solemnity that a man would naturally experience under such assurances! The church and community were startled—many distressed—and the faith of not a few was shaken; but time goes on still. And this is only one case in thousands.

There are certain subjects which men are not called to pry into; and when they do break through and gaze, they do not always learn.

A second point worthy of notice is thus set forth; this invisible agency is represented as saying to Brother P, "You are to proclaim the Millenium at hand, for this special ministry now made certain to you, is to usher it upon the world, and you, as its grand herald, shall make the circuit of the world, speaking all tongues, and nations are to be born in a day." Here we have the element which gives a charm and attraction to all the systems of pseudo-religion invented by the perverted ingenuity of man—the egotism they present—the prominence and importance of the position, as principal agents—which the inventors, propounders, or recipients of the system are to occupy in its development and application.

Not a new system has been propounded to the world since the advent of the Saviour, which had not its prominent work and position for its favored ones—in short, which had not its heroes, by whose agency the world was to be enlightened and changed! Mohamedanism had its Prophet of God—Anabaptism had its Wurmzer—Mormonism had its Joe Smith and Prophets—and Millerism had its high priest, etc., etc. This is Satan's master policy—the propounders and advocates of a new theory are its destined heroes, none being forward in new systems under which others alone are to take the lead. With this he tries the evil and the good. I by no means impeach or censure our departed brother upon this point; Satan presented the bait, but his piety and prayer prevailed against it, and he escaped. His case, however, is an exception. Generally the imagination becomes warmed and expanded upon the grand and splendid theory—the idea of proclaiming it to the world naturally follows—then the mind, adverting to the position which this agency assigns the party, this inquiry comes up, why may not I be a chosen instrument of heaven to make a grand announcement! The next step is to think such a dignity probable—evidence begins now rapidly to accumulate, and then the third and last is easy, that it is certain; and forthwith the man stands before the world, the herald of Heaven!

So far as Brother Powell's experience and discoveries may be regarded authentic, they go directly to confirm an opinion long and seriously entertained by many pious men, viz—that this whole scheme of "spiritual manifestations and communications" is in the hands of the devil; and is a tremendous, inscrutable agency which he is permitted to wield, to the misleading of those who "obey not the truth, but have pleasure in unrighteousness," and of those who, not content with the simple, searching teaching of revelation, seek for some "new thing." An agency by which he is endeavoring, and with much success, to excite the public mind, and turn away attention from the Gospel and the Bible.

That numbers of apparently religious, as well as intelligent men have embraced the theory, does not militate against this opinion, while it strikingly accords with the teachings of the word of God. J. Hamilton.

THE GRACE OF GOD ILLUSTRATED.

A clergyman once represented the conduct of awakened sinners towards God's offers of gratuitous salvation thus: A benevolent and rich man had a very poor neighbor, to whom he sent this message: "I wish to make you the gift of a farm."

The poor man was pleased with the idea of having a farm, but was too proud to receive it at once as a gift. So he thought of the matter much and anxiously. His desire to have a home of his own was daily growing stronger, but his pride was great. At length he determined to visit him who had made the offer. But a strange delusion about this time seized him, for he imagined that he had a bag of gold. So he came with his bag, and said to the rich man, "I have received your message and have come to see you. I wish to own the farm, but I wish to pay for it. I will give you a bag of gold for it."

"Let us see your gold," said the owner of the farm.

The poor man opened his bag and looked, and his countenance was changed, and he said, "Sir, I thought it was gold, but I am sorry to say it is but silver. I will give you my bag of silver for your farm."

"Look again; I do not think it is even silver," was the solemn but kind reply.

The poor man looked, and [illegible] said, his eyes were further opened, and [illegible] said, 'How I have been deceived. It is [illegible] silver, but only copper. Will you [illegible] your farm for my bag of copper? You [illegible] have it all."

"Look again," was the [illegible].

The poor man looked, [illegible] in his eyes, his delusion seemed [illegible], and he said, "Alas, I am undone. [illegible] not even copper. It is but ashes. How poor I am! I wish to own that farm, but I have nothing to pay. Will you give me the farm?"

The rich man replied, "Yes, that was my first and only offer. Will you accept it on such terms?"

With humility, but with eagerness, the poor man said, "Yes, and a thousand blessing on you for your kindness."

The fable is easily applied. Mather has well expressed the difference between grace and merit in a few words: "God was a God to Adam before he fell, but to be a God to sinners, this is grace. He was a God to Adam in innocency, by virtue of the covenant of works; but he is not a God to any sinner but in the way of free grace." [Dr. Plumer.

DR. JENKINS AND THE CHINAMAN.

The Banner of Peace, 1st instant—an organ of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church, published at Nashville, Tenn.—has the following editorial remarks on the late visit of our Missionaries to that city. The Banner urges, in conclusion, that the Cumberlands enter this open field at once and heartily.

There was quite an excitement among the boys of our city last week, produced by the appearance of a real live Chinaman in our streets. On Sabbath morning we learned that Rev. Dr. Jenkins, one of the two Missionaries sent to China about four years ago, by the Methodist Church, South, would preach in this city, at the McKendree Church, and we determined to go to hear him. The report got out that it was the Chinaman that was going to preach, and although the morning was wet, there was quite a crowd already in attendance at the early hour that we arrived, who, instead of hearing a Chinese preach, had the pleasure of listening to a very interesting lecture on China by Dr. Jenkins. After seating ourselves in the church a few minutes, waiting for the service to commence, we were not a little surprised on turning our eyes to the right of the pulpit, to see the [illegible] Chinaman—the first we had ever seen—and whom we did not suppose before to be in the house—sitting there in the full costume of his country.

He was about 5 feet in height, with the hair shaven from the front of his head as far back as a line with the ears, leaving his forehead, which was round and full, entirely bald. His eye-brows were quite small, appearing at the distance we were from him, but little more than a black arching line. His features were all small. There was no drooping of the corners of the eyes, as we invariably see in pictures of Chinese. His hair from the unshaven part of his head, was plaited neatly, and hung in a tail down his back, reaching almost to the ground. His dress was a gown of light blue, with large white cuffs. His color was nearly that of a bright mulatto. Upon the whole, he was not very bad looking, and seemed handy in packing away the idols which were exhibited by Dr. J. in his lecture. His appearance and action were much nearer those of a small and badly sun-burnt American than we had supposed they would be. From this specimen, we might readily suppose many of the Chinese to be really fine looking men.

Dr. Jenkins is a man about some 35 years of age, about 5 feet 9 or 10 inches high, heavily built, of sanguineous temperament, with thick sandy hair, and a pleasant expression of countenance.

He will return to China again next winter, and expects to be accompanied by several other Missionaries, to be sent out by his church.

He is now travelling through the Church, South, raising funds to build a Methodist Church in Shanghai, where he and his colleague, Dr. Taylor, are stationed. He seems to be quite successful in this work, as he informs us that he sometimes raises as six or eight hundred dollars on a Sabbath.

He seems to think that the prospects for Christianizing China are really very flattering, and we confess that his lecture, and an hour's private conversation with him afterwards, have greatly increased the deep interest that we have for a long time taken in that vast country.

God has certainly a great work for the Church to accomplish in China. The Churches in America are loudly called upon to aid in that work. The Providence of God constantly points them in that direction. To this land of Bibles and clear religious light, a more than Macedonian cry rolls up across mighty oceans from the hundreds of millions of perishing Chinese, "Come over and help us." Other denominations have listened to that cry.

JOHN B. GOUGH IN ENGLAND.

Previous to his departure for England, Mr. Gough entertained doubts of his success in lecturing to English audiences. He assured a friend that he knew he should make a failure; that his subject, his style, his every thing, would not suit English audiences. But it seems that he misjudged—as will be seen from the following extract, from the British Banner, cited by Dr. Campbell:

"Mr. Gough is a well adjusted mixture of the poet, orator and dramatist—in fact, an English Gavazzi. Gough is in all respects—in stature, in voice, and in force of manner—on a scale considerably lower than the great Italian orator. Gavazzi is more grand, more tragic, more thoroughly Italian, but less adapted to an English auditory. In their natural attributes, however, they have much in common. If Gavazzi possesses more power, Gough has more pathos. This is the main difference, the chief distinction; and here the difference is in favor of Gough. Gough excels Gavazzi in pathos far more than Gavazzi excels Gough in power. Then, Gough is more moderate in his theatrical displays. He paints much more, and acts much less; while as to force and general effect, he is, of course, on high vantage ground, speaking his native tongue, and among his fellow countrymen. He is in this respect, in England, what Gavazzi would be in Italy. Both find, and find to an equal extent, their account in their histrionic manner. The absence of unmitigated vehemence [illegible] favorable to the economy of strength, [illegible] measure of repose pervades the [illegible] exhibition. Resting himself, [illegible] to his audience, and reacting [illegible] unwearied till the end. There is an [illegible] ence of all mental perturbation. [illegible] he commences, there seems no idea [illegible] ing about to do any thing [illegible] y—when he has finished, that any thing extraordinary has been performed. It seems to be as much a matter of course as walking or running [illegible] or not up. His self-command is [illegible] d his control over a [illegible] Governing himself, [illegible] him. It was impossible for [illegible] been more thoroughly [illegible] last night. Taking a [illegible] his feet, there [illegible] sake of bashfulness. [illegible]

"The addre[illegible] of any sort; nay, [illegible] prepared at the [illegible] by he had never written, [illegible] a speech in his life. [illegible] was a succession of pic[illegible] manner the most natural [illegible] time, feeling was in the [illegible] another, power. His gifts of [illegible] great; this power, though [illegible] however, was but spar[illegible] only as the lightning in a [illegible] gaining all and gone, [illegible] ay for [illegible] rolling peal and falling torrent. Through the whole of [illegible] night he addressed himself to the fancy and to the heart. We cannot doubt, however, that Mr. Gough is in a very high degree capable of dealing with principles, and grappling with an adversary by way of argument; but he adopted a different course, we think, a much wiser course, for a first appearance. The mode of address is one of which mankind will never tire, till human nature becomes divested of its interest properties. He recited a series [illegible] pertinent facts, all of which were beautiful pictures. Nothing could [illegible] the unity of the impression, while nothing could be more multifarious than the means employed to effect it. To use a species of martial figure, in which old nails, broken bottles, chips of iron, and bits of metal, together with balls of lead—any thing, every thing partaking of the nature of a missile—was available. Thus a pound mass was showered forth with resistless might and powerful execution. The great idea, which was uppermost all this evening was the evils of drinking; and under a deep conviction of that truth, many men must have left the assembly.

"The conclusion to which we have come, then is, that the merits of Mr. Gough have by no means been overrated. In England, he would take a stand quite as high as he has taken in the United States."

TRIAL OF BISHOP SOULE.

The following are the charges against Bishop Doane:

1. In constructing [illegible] and large debts beyond his means of payment, amounting, March, 1849, to $[illegible],000, his property being above $100,000.

2. In [illegible] stating that he gave up his property to pay a debt not personal to himself, but growing out of his venture for Christian education in St. Mary's Hall and Burlington College.

3. In defrauding Michael Hays, of Burlington, by misapplying [illegible] entrusted by him.

4. A similar charge of defrauding Joseph Deacon.

5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10 and 11. Charges him with having obtained the names of [illegible] Deacon and others to endorse his notes, by false representations and forging without having to pay [illegible] to see them.

12. In appropriating the property of his ward, George [illegible] Winslow, to [illegible] appropriating the same to his use.

13. In defrauding the Camden Bank [illegible] sum of $100, by issuing [illegible] to protest a note [illegible] and

14. In drawing checks [illegible] and other banks not having [illegible] thereto to meet said checks.

NEW ORLEANS:

Saturday Morning, October 1.

Rev. Ed. Love, of the Mississippi Conference, and stationed at Covington, La., died of yellow fever on Monday last. He was a young man, and had not yet reached Elder's orders, but zealous and faithful in the discharge of his ministerial duties. A brief note from him of his charge informs us that he resolved "to die at his post."

BURNING DEAD BODIES.

The Picayune Mercury has published the [illegible] comments, that in the midst of the [illegible] here, dead bodies were burned! [illegible] of the Crescent City press, we [illegible] cold, or late in the day, again correct this [illegible] If it does not reach the "Thunderer," and set him right, it may spoil some [illegible] growing out of the rumor, at [illegible] even go into poetry. "The [illegible]," by Rev. C. W. Dennison, going the rounds of the press, has these lines—

"On [illegible] silent street—that lone lover—
And the unburied dead swept to the sea!
Or on [illegible] funeral pyres, whose flames arise," etc.

No human bodies were burned here—during the summer. Burning, however, would have been better than what befel some. But, none were burned. One evening in August, on visiting the Cemetery in the Fourth District, we did think it was going on, and the rumor prevailed. But, reaching the spot, those "funeral pyres," whose flames were arising, turned out to be barrels of tar emptied by dozens, about the ground and over the shallow covered graves, and between them, and set on fire—with intent of disinfecting the air. The volumes of pitchy smoke, ascending from such a locality and at such a time, would very easily give rise to such a rumor.

A GOOD OPPORTUNITY.

The village of Jackson, La., President Rivers writes us (Sept. 24) was "never more healthy than now." It has been a place of refuge for fugitives from the prevailing epidemic, from Baton Rouge, Natchez, Bayou Sara, Woodville, etc. And they have met not only a safe retreat, but we vouch for it, a hospitable one.

Here is Centenary College, which opens its next session October 3, and all accounts say it will be a good opening. Good faculty, healthy locality, easy of access. By the way, we may mention here, that those town lots in Jackson, are laid off and for sale, by order of the Board of Trustees. Here is an opportunity for families to live comfortably, and educate at home. The proceeds of the sale will be invested in what will improve property in the hands of the new owners, viz.: In adding a large and handsome centre building to the College suite. It not often happens that patronage of education falls so directly in the line of promoting real estate interest. Buy your ground and build.

MISSIONARY APPROPRIATIONS.

The Missionary Board and Bishops of the M. E. Church, South, held their annual meeting on the 7th instant, in Louisville, Ky. It was determined that one hundred and fifty thousand dollars, exclusive of the U. S. Government appropriation for the Indian Schools ($27,000 for the last year) should be appropriated for the support of the Missionary work the coming year. The amount is distributed as follows: For the Atlantic division, $30,000; for the Middle division, $20,000; for the Western division, $30,000; for California, $14,000; for China, $30,000; Contingent, $20,000.

EDUCATION.—We copy one sentence from the obituary notice of a Scotch schoolmaster, recently deceased. "He taught Latin so thoroughly, made his pupils interpret out every particle of the meaning of the authors which they read so punctiliously, was so severe on a bad construction or a false quantity, that to learn Latin from him, though it was only Latin, was to be disciplined in accuracy and research on all subjects for the whole of one's life." Classical teachers, stick that passage on the inside of your desk lids.

TEXAS ITEMS.—By letter of 24th instant, we learn that Brother Cravens, of Galveston, was recovering from the attack of yellow fever under which he was last reported by us. His family has been much afflicted, and a daughter died.

The Galveston News of same date gives intelligence of the death of Professor Ruter, and also of Rev. Mr. Wood, of the Methodist Church, at Lavaca, all of yellow fever.

YAZOO CITY, MISS.—Rev. L. Pierce writing Sept. 21, from Benton, Miss., says: Yazoo City, six miles from this, has been suffering alarmingly from yellow fever for the last ten days. The population, amounting to 2000, does not now exceed 300. The mortality has perhaps exceeded that of your own city. Alarm seized almost every person in the vicinity, and the scene of last week was one of great distress. The panic is somewhat subsiding, but the disease has not much abated, except in its virulence."

BULLS FROM ROME.

The Freeman's Journal of Sept. 18 is before us. This is the heading of its leading article, and in it we find news of importance to our readers in Mississippi and Louisiana. The Pope is liberally expanding the Episcopal policy in the United States. Several Episcopal Sees have just been established, in each of the Ecclesiastical provinces of New York, Baltimore, Cincinnati, St. Louis and San Francisco. But it is to movements in this province (New Orleans) we would call attention.

That astute and fazy Romanist—yclept Right Rev. Dr. Vandevelde, has been transferred from the See of Chicago to that of Natchez, Miss. We have published some of his doings and those under his influence in Chicago, especially in reference to Free Schools and the Honesty of the Confessional, (see Advocate of May 14) which we beg our friends in that quarter not to forget. He will bear watching. The Messenger of this city "congratulates the Catholics of the State of Mississippi on that happy arrangement."

Again: An Episcopal See has been erected at Natchitoches, La., and the Very Rev. Aug. Martin, V. G., Pastor of St. Francis Church, at that place, has been appointed Bishop. The Archdiocese of New Orleans, which comprised the whole State of Louisiana, is now divided in two dioceses, namely, the archdiocese of New Orleans, and the diocese of Natchitoches.

The two dioceses are divided by a line drawn from East to West, and running nearly on the 31st degree of latitude, which divides the State in two parts, pretty nearly of the same magnitude. The diocese of Natchitoches will be formed then with the upper part of the State of Louisiana, including the parish of Avoyelles, and all the other parishes upwards; it will be bounded at the South, by the aforesaid line, at the North, by the diocese of Little Rock, Arkansas, at the West, by the diocese of Natchez, Mississippi, and at the East, by the diocese of Galveston, Texas.

Our Protestant friends and brethren in those parts are thus advised and forewarned of the designs prepared for them and expedited from headquarters. A glimpse of the forecaste of Romanism is afforded in the remarks of the Romanist Organ of this city. The Messenger welcomes these appointments and thus disconrees on the territory of the new dioceses:

"This vast area is not settled as it must and will be, but in a few years it will offer many indnoements and facilities to farmers and settlers, particularly when the railroad in contemplation from Mississippi State to Texas, will have opened new and easy communications; and when those sections will be settled and cultivated, they will be as productive and rich as any other part of Louisiana."

"WHEN I HAVE A CONVENIENT SEASON."

A period of great advantage, which, by a singular course of Providence, has been afforded, upon which the strongest influence and the clearest mercies have been brought to bear, is set aside as an inconvenient moment for a return to God! We can imagine the Holy Spirit as He yet offers life, grieved over such fixed, hopeless transgressore. The time has come for reaping a year's labor, and nothing is yielded; inaction, procrastination, and presumption have, like the mildew, the worm and the caterpillar, ruined all the prospects of the heavenly visitor.

In addition to the opposition these dispositions have in themselves, they presently come to have the further force of habit—become a law of the heart—and they themselves demand satisfaction. They are clamorous against the strongest urgings of man and God, reason and conviction. In moments of the soundest reflection, they are wont to triumph; they are, therefore, not to be resisted in hours of infirmity of body and mind. The dying man allows the mind to run in its wonted channels, because there is not energy enough left to force it into new ones. The result of putting off from one to another day is the natural, the awful one of an eternal postponement of an acceptance of the Son of God.

It must not be lost sight of that every such act of procrastination is an evidence against us of the force and right of His claims. If it be not right to serve God, let the matter be entertained at least long enough to dismiss the demand forever. What is the conclusion when the creditor is put off to a future time as often as his claim is presented? Why, that there is no intention to pay, at all, but only to avoid a just debt; and it is thus in the face of acknowledged right that we do wrong.

The whole amount of the obligation is presented every time, and the whole is rejected. These rejections are as weighty as the offers. The slight manner bears no proportion to what is really done; a simple no, a determined silence, walking out of the the house God, or a poorly conceived and preconceived answer, for answer's sake, to one who presses us to repent, these may cover, and do, the highest rebellion against Jehovah, the most positive rejection of the Son of God. They do put away the whole grace, the large offer of the Gospel, the proposal for a return through the Mediator, the gracious third party, who, unasked, has given his life for us; and who now, unasked, urges us through his messengers to accept, for his sake pardon, life and peace. They put away the whole glory of Christ, in putting away the shame and reproach which are a part of that same Saviour.

Though there may be also with this refusal a promise of future action, yet the rejection for the present is absolute; it is not lessened by purposes scarcely formed and not tested. The whole risk of present rejection is taken, the uncertainty of life, no less than the whole amount of ruin depending upon transgression, these are estimated hurriedly, and these are ventured.

The choice of earth and sin, in spite of such incitements to the contrary, and in face of such tremendous possibilities, only shows the strong hold that an evil nature has upon us. It may also suggest what strength of resolution, what actual decision are involved in choosing the better part; and what is the ground of that reward which Christ promises to all who confess his name.

There is no doubt that all the forces and subtleties of the enemy rally at the moment that Christ is presented, and the terms of the Gospel urged, and when a sinner begins to yield himself to those powers, so far as to seek ways and means to justify his position, every evil imagiuntion and high thing that is prone to exalt itself, fills his mind and steels his heart. And, on the other hand, when there is an acknowledgment of the truth preached, and a felt conviction and a desire, and a prayer, "Lord, what wilt thou have me do," there pours into the heart the strengthening influences of the Holy Ghost to sustain the purpose, to yet further enlighten the mind, and to apply the promises, until the season seems to be the speoinl one, the very hour, the set time; and afterwards the language of the man is "had I not yielded, then, I should never have." With him the reasons for coming, and coming at once, increase in urgency, the danger is seen in all its dark, threatening immensity, the appeal is heard as from the throne of God, and mercy, too, seems at hand, and says, "Behold, now is the accepted time; behold, now is the day of salvation." The great fact is experienced by that heart, that "For this purpose the Son of God was manifested, that he might destroy the works of the devil." He soon begins to feel that he has done right, in the peace which occasionally shoots through his heart like throbs of coming life, and which, even in the tears of repentance, lightens with the sunshine of Heaven; he becomes conscious of a power lent, and a power had, to escape the thrall of sin, and that he that will come, may come, and take the water of life freely.

FINALE OF THE TRIAL.

Our High Church friends manage generally to keep one of their apostles on the anvil. Those boasted "successors" and head of the only true church have their trials—albeit after a peculiar sort. The Onderdonks laid by, now Bishop Doane is called into court, the second or third time. On another page may be seen the substance of the accusations, too well founded, it would seem. Really, we could pity our friends more, if they were not in the habit of taking such airs, and sneering at the sects. These rebukes look providential, and we move they take them so and be humble.

The Court of Bishops met at Camden, N.J., September 1, to try the Bishop of the diocese of New Jersey. His diocese are not wanting in devotion—indeed their zeal for the diocesan has taken party strength and vehemence from a question of Church politics that has arisen out of the case. The diocese claims for itself that it should try the presentment of any three Bishops, and it, in its judgment, there be cause, the Court of Bishops is to take up the matter. If the diocese pronounce the alleged charges groundless, there is to be no trial on them by the Episcopal Court. On the other hand, the Reverend presentors insist that a diocese cannot come between the Episcopal Court and the accused—that they have the exclusive right of withdrawing the presentment, and that the only legal mode of dismissing it by the court is to try the charges by the evidence.

This legal position of the presentors (Bishops Meade, of Va.; McIlvaine, of Ohio, and Burgess, Me.) was sustained, and the attempt of Bishop Doane to quash the indictment, as the lawyers say, failed. Bishop Doane was bent on evading a trial—he and his friends had no idea of falling into the hands of the court. The Church had been scandalised, and the outside pressure of public opinion was such, that the court, once more convened, would doubtless have done something: there was no getting round it.

Bishop Doane came into court at the eleventh hour, and saved himself by the following

ADMISSIONS.

The undersigned, in prosecuting his plans of Christian education, in connection with St Mary's Hall and Burlington College, found the expenses of the enterprise greatly exceeded his calculations; while the assistance in which he had confidently relied, perhaps too sanguinely, fell altogether short of what he deemed his reasonable expectations. In this condition of things, being entirely left alone and without advice, every step which he advanced involved him more and more deeply in pecuniary embarrassments. He admits that he made representations which, at the time, he believed to be correct; but many of which turned out, in the event, to be erroneous. He was also led, by his too confident reliance in anticipated aid, to make promises which he fully expected to perform; but which, experience has taught him, were far too strongly expressed. He was also induced, for the sake of obtaining money to meet his necessities, to resort to methods, by the payment of exorbitant interest on loans, which he did not suppose was in contravention of the law, and which common usage seemed to him to justify. He also, in entire confidence in his ability to replace them, made use of certain trust lands in a way which he deeply regrets, and although they have long been perfectly secured, does not now justify.

The embarrassments here referred to were followed by a long and well-nigh fatal illness which, withdrawing him entirely from the business which he had carried on alone, was mainly instrumental in the entire failure of his pecuniary affairs. The perplexity arising from this failure, with the protracted infirmity which followed his sickness, made him liable to many errors and mistakes, which might easily bear the appearance of intentional misrepresentations. In connection with the assignment of his property, he set his name and oath to an inventory of his goods, and also to a list of his debts, which he believed to be correct—an act which he grieved to find had given rise to an impression in the minds of some that he exhibited an insensibility to the awful sanctions of the oath of a Christian man; but while he laments the impression, he declares that this act was only done under legal advice, and in the firm conviction of its correctness. Some time after his recovery from the illness above alluded to, but while he was still in the midst of his perplexities, smarting under his heavy disappointments, and wounded by the imputations to which, in some quarters, he was subjected, the letter of the three Bishops came, to him. He has no disposition to ascribe to them any other than just and proper motives in thus addressing him, but at the same time when he received the communication he received it otherwise, and under the strong excitement of the moment, penned pamphlets, part of which he does not now justify, and expressions in which, in regard to those brethren, he deeply regrets.

In reference to his indebtedness, he now renews the declaration of intention which he has constantly made, and has acted on to the utmost of his ability thus far—to devote his means, efforts and influence, in dependence upon God's blessing, to the payment, principal and interest, of every just demand against him—an expectation which there is reasonable hope of having fulfilled, since a committee of the trustees and friends of Burlington College, by whom both institutions are now carried on, have undertaken an enterprise, which is nearly completed, to discharge the whole of the mortgage debt, and thus secure the property of Riverside and St. Mary's Hall, with that of Burlington College, to the church forever, for the purpose of Christian education; and this done, the Trustees have further agreed to appropriate, during his life, the surplus income of both institutions to the liquidation of all other debts in carrying on the said institutions; that, in the course of all these transactions, human infirmity may have led him into many errors, he deeply feels—he does not wish to justify or excuse them. If scandal to the Church and injury to the cause of Christ have arisen from them, they are occasion to him of mortification and regret. For these things, in all humility and sorrow before God and man, he has always felt himself liable to, and willing to receive the friendly reproofs of his friends in Christ Jesus, and especially of the Bishops of the Church. G. W. DOANE, Bishop of N. J.

This may be a good deal for one of the "successors" to admit. We have been told that, as a churchman, Bishop D. is the highest of the high; and that, as a man, no one ever strode more royaly in gown and surplice. Somebody even tells it that he always pulls off his own hat when speaking of himself. To us the admissions do not seem to touch some of the gravest of the charges. And there is that old plea about "infirmity" and "errors and mistakes," resulting from sickness, which Ex-Bishop Ives exhausted. The court was easily satisfied. The end was this:

"Wherefore, ordered, that the presentment before this court be dismissed, and the respondent be discharged without delay."

The following order was also adopted unanimously, and the court adjourned, sine die:

"That the court believes the presentors to have acted in good faith, and in a desire and determination to carry out the law of the church, in such case made and provided, in the painful duty in which they felt themselves called upon to perform."

We judge that the prosecuting Bishops who have followed up this scandalous case so persistently hardly need any justification. Those who resisted them would take the benefit of such an absolving resolution, very well.

A TEACHER.—A good teacher is to be had. See advertisement on the fourth page. To this we invite especially the attention of those friends in North Louisiana who have been in correspondence with us on this subject. The gentleman advertising is such an one, to our knowledge, as we would like to see settled in these parts, and we hope proper inducements may be extended to secure him.

CUTTING THE FACETS.

I have before me two stones, which are an imitation of precious stones. They are both perfectly alike in color; they are of the same water, clear, pure, and clean; yet there is a marked difference between them, as to their lustre and brilliancy. One has a dazzling brightness, while the other is dull, so that the eye passes over it, and derives no pleasure from the sight. What can be the reason of this difference? It is this. The one is cut in but a few facets; the other has ten times as many. These facets are produced by a very violent operation. It is requisite to cut, to smooth, and polish. Had these stones been indued with life, so as to be capable of feeling what they underwent, the one which has received eighty facets would have thought itself very unhappy, and would have envied the fate of the other, which, having received but eight, had undergone but a tenth part of its sufferings. Nevertheless, the operation being over, it is done forever. The difference between the two stones always remains strongly marked; that which has suffered but little, is entirely eclipsed by the other, which alone is held in estimation and attracts attention. May not this serve to explain the saying of our Saviour, whose words always have reference to eternity: Blessed are those who mourn, for they shall be comforted; blessed, whether we contemplate them apart, or in comparison with those who have passed through as many trials. O, that we were always able to cast ourselves into his arms, like little children—to draw near to him like young lambs—and ever to ask of him patience, resignation, an entire surrender to his will, faith, trust, and a heart-felt obedience to the commands which he gives to those who are willing to be his disciples! The Lord will wipe away tears from off all faces. Isa., xxv, 8.

YELLOW FEVER IN WOODVILLE.—The yellow fever, as we learn from the Wilkinson Whig of the 24th inst., has been declared epidemic in Woodville, Mississippi. Sixteen cases occurred there on Wednesday, the 20th inst. There had been one death—that of Miss T. V. DeLong, a young lady in the bloom of womanhood.

The Whig advises all its absent friends to stay away until the appearance of frost. The citizens of the town had formed a Relief Association. There had been one death during the week in the factory on the outskirts of the town, and the other cases were convalescent.

REVIVAL INTELLIGENCE.

PRAIRIE HILL CIRCUIT, ALA. CON.—Permit me to say, through your columns, to the friends of Zion, that the Lord has been with us on the Prairie Hill Circuit, Alabama Conference. We commenced our Camp Meeting on the 8th, and continued it up to the 15th instant. The first part of the meeting was attended with showers of rain, but Saturday morning presented more favorable indications of weather, and the people began to flock in, and the exercises became more and more interesting, until some of the children of darkness made an uproar among the people. Then the stately steppings of the Lord were seen and felt, and the good work fairly commenced, and the devil was quite beat at his own game, and at the close of the meeting we reckoned up somewhere between forty and fifty converts among the whites, but the number of colored converts we were unable to find out. But of these, there were many. We received 26 whites and 17 blacks into the church, making in all 43. To God be all the glory—amen. Besides all this, the Church was much revived, and many backsliders reclaimed. The last night of the meeting was one of power and great glory, such as I have rarely witnessed.

September 17. J. A. CLEMENT.

REVIVAL.—We mentioned last week that a religious revival was going on in the Methodist Church in this city. The day services have been well attended, and at night the church has been thronged with people. We are told that upwards of one hundred converts have joined the church. [Say. News.

RELIGIOUS MEETING.—A protracted meeting commenced here on the 2d instant, (says the West Alabamian, Pickens co., of 14th instant) in the Methodist Church, and is still progressing with increasing interest. The ministers, Rev. Messrs. Murrah, Hill, Glover and Poyas, seem to be almost exhausted in physical strength. We never have witnessed a deeper, and more heartfelt concern on the subject of religion, than that which now impresses the minds of this community. May God prosper the work.

The Camp Meeting held in beginning of the month, near Hollow Square, Green co., Ala., (Rev. W. I. Powers, pastor) resulted in good. 82 persons professed to be converted, and steps were taken to organise and build a new church in the neighborhood. A good Conference Collection ($153) was raised, and a donation raised for the sick of Mobile.

JACKSON CIRCUIT, LA.—Our Camp Meeting at Sparta closed on Monday last. Brothers Sanders, Watkins and Smyth, with two or three local brethren, were with us. A very good meeting: 20 or more were united to the church as probationers, and more than that number professed conversion. We are at war in this whole country with dancing and the drinking shops. A set effort is making, through the former, against the church. We have given place to it, not for a moment.

September 13. R. RANDLE.

MINDEN CIRCUIT, LA.—The Lord is reviving his work in this portion of our Conference. There are revivals in several parts of the country. My own dead charge is coming to life. A number are joining the church, and professing faith in Christ.

September 14. D. S. WATKINS.

COVINGTON DISTRICT, MISS. CON.—Rev. J. Lusk, P. E., writing on business, Sept. 21, speaks of the power of God in these regions manifested, in salvation. He says: "There has been an accession of seven or eight hundred members on the district, up to this time, and glorious times still continue on several circuits."

JONES VALLEY, ALA.—The work of God still goes on in our Valley. Since my last, 15 have professed faith in Christ, and 21 have joined the church, which makes 76 within the last month, and over 100 conversions.

GEO. F. ELLIS.

HERNANDO, MISS.—We have had several very interesting meetings on our circuit. Some 70 or more have professed religion. The church has been greatly revived, and much good accomplished.

J. W. SHELTON.

DEKALB, ALA. CON.—We have just closed a meeting at Soule Chapel, in Lauderdale. It was the best meeting I was ever at. 14 joined and 10 professed. I have seen a greater number of converts and more accessions to the church, but never was there more religion enjoyed. We have taken up but four Missionary Collections, and we have got subscribed and collected together seven hundred dollars. Nor have we forgotten the Advocate, for I do like to get subscribers for it. The three which I send you make twenty-six—I am going to have the other four soon. Brother McLeod has obtained his full amount.

J. W. COOK.

GIVE ME DRINK!—Mr. M'Leod, an English writer, puts the following language in the mouths of those who visit the rumseller's den:

"There's my money—give me drink! There's my clothing and my food—give me drink! There's the clothing, food, and firs of my wife and children—give me drink! There's the education of the family and the peace of the house—give me drink! There's the rent I have robbed from my landlord, fees I have robbed from the schoolmaster, and innumerable articles I have robbed from the shopkeeper—give me drink! Pour me out drink, for more I will yet pay for it! There's my health of body and peace of mind—there's my character as a man and my profession as a Christian—I give up all—give me drink! More yet I have to give! There's my heavenly inheritance and the eternal friendship of the redeemed—there—there—is all hope of salvation! I give up my Saviour! I give up my God! I resign all! All that is great, good and glorious in the universe, I resign forever, that I may be—DRUNK!

METHODIST PRESS.

The California Advocate draws a gloomy picture of the moral condition of this State. The Editor has personally encountered some gross abuse, and the abolition views he advocates have put him and his party to a serious disadvantage there. Thus, under the weather, things may have a more lowering and hopeless aspect to the Editor than belongs to them. But, even with this allowance, we fear there is truth enough in the following, of August 3, to make one heavy in spirit. The Editor has just returned from a several days tour:

"Many public officers are the 'pimps' of the lewd houses, and settled enemies of religion. Every town swells with gamblers, and is crowded with grog-shops. The hatred of the Gospel is organized in many Sunday hull fights and prize fights; in gambling and drinking houses, in schemes of plunder, outrage and wrong. To give particulars of some places would paint a picture of horrors beyond belief. There are vast numbers who abhor these things, but we have no public opinion. Society seems disintegrated. It is without the consent or power of social union. One man expresses his opinion for right, but he is met by one who descends to the meanness of fist or revolver-logic. No one stands up with him. He fights the battle as an individual, or cowers as an individual. Society does not meddle because there is no society, and the bold, bully rascal carries it his own way."

THE PASTORSHIP.—A writer in the Nashville Advocate, who is introduced with favor by the Editor, discourses earnestly and sensibly on increasing the efficiency of our Church, in saving souls. This is truly the aim, the end. Jesus died, not primarily to endow colleges, establish papers, religious press, etc., but to save souls. Are we not sometimes too much engrossed with working these means to the neglect of working the great, simple plan of salvation? Important, practical question! The writer to whose sentiments we would draw attention, does not see much demand for Church legislation. Perhaps the Executive administration should have more constitutional energy thrown into it. But he magnifies the pastorship, the vigilant, industrious, faithful pastorship. It is through the pastorship, after all, our societies and agencies can do, that God gathers, feeds, and grows his flock:

Yet, it must be confessed, that there are strong, yea almost irresistible influences operating upon our ministry, to induce them to make direct personal labor for the immediate salvation of souls—a business of secondary importance. The poverty, or parsimony of the church, literally, compels many to locate, while others, though nominally itinerant, are compelled to settle their families, and circulate in a limited range around them; greatly to the embarrassment of the appointing power, and highly detrimental to the interests of the church. Others continue subject to constant removal; yet driven by stern necessity, either to locate, or speculate for a living, they choose the latter alternative; and once drawn into the vortex, they are apt to be so engulfed in worldliness, as to lose their spiritual vitality. Indeed, we may say that only three classes of ministers in the Methodist church, find it practicable to itinerate a lifetime; those who are denied the blessings of a family of children; those whose wealth makes them independent of the stewards of the church; and those whose talents always command the best appointments. And of the last class not a few are almost forced into positions in which they have no care of souls, no pastoral charge. Superior emoluments, and higher worldly honors, both attach to these other offices and duties; and if to these we add the conveniences and comforts that can be thrown around a more permanent home, we need not be surprised that able men, with interesting families to encourage them, consent to be honorably located by disciplinary authority, without losing their connection with the conference.

Our schools, agencies, newspapers, etc., are all important in themselves, and the writer of this article has long been giving the most substantial proofs of his high appreciation of them. Yet it is his decided conviction that no minister of the gospel ever should be without the pastoral charge of some specific congregation, unless he be employed to do the work of an evangelist, through a given section of country, or to preside as a bishop over the interests of many churches. Teaching boys and girls, editing papers, writing books, collecting church moneys, or even presiding over conferences, and stationing preachers, important as these things are admitted to be, what are they, any or all of them, in comparison with the great work of the gospel ministry—snatching "brands from the burning," saving souls from hell? A call to the ministry is emphatically a call to save souls; and though a man write like Watson or Clarke, or rule like Wesley or Asbury, though he be the first theologian of his Conference, or the ablest orator of the age, all these should not avail to satisfy, if he do not directly instrumental in the salvation of souls. The great want or the age is a soul-stirring, church-rousing, world-waking pastorship.

The Buffalo (NY.) Christian Advocate says: Reports are more favorable from the surrounding charges, both to ministers and the churches, than any other year we have known in the western part of the State.

THEOLOGICAL EDUCATION.—Dr. Whitford Smith submits, through the Southern Advocate, his views on Education of the Ministry, showing its compatibility with Methodism. He submits also a letter from a layman, who receives gladly what Bishop Andrew has put forth. The layman, however, speaks of theological education—a very different thing this from education of the ministry. We regard the movement of the church to be in favor of the latter, and may have something to say on the essential difference. To us, as Methodists, it is essential. But this layman comes to the point like a deer as well as a writer:

"My object in writing this letter is mainly to say, that if the Conference will devise something like a professorship of Theology, to be connected with the Wofford College, I will be one of one hundred to pay two hundred dollars on the first of January, 1855, for a permanent endowment."

OXFORD COLLEGES.—The number of students in the colleges of Oxford, England, is at present about five thousand.

Gold is said to have been discovered in digging a cistern in the town of Bolivar, Tenn.

A TEXAS CAMP MEETING.

BROTHER MCTYEIRE—As many of my friends in Mississippi and Alabama, would doubtless, be pleased to know how we do things in Western Texas, I propose, by your permission, to give a short account of a Camp Meeting which I recently attended on Walnut Creek. This creek rises in the mountains above Austin, and runs into Rio Colorado, winding and meandering, the most part, through an open prairie; but a skirt of timber, say from one to two hundred yards in width, is generally found on each side of the stream. On this creek, some four or five miles from the Capital of the Empire State of the southwest, the P. E. of Austin District, the stationed preacher of Austin station, and the preacher in charge of Austin and Bastrop Circuit, had agreed to hold a joint Camp Meeting, to commence on Thursday, the 1st day of September, because there was "much water there." This day rolled round, and according to appointment the people met and pitched their tents (a bush arbor having been previously put up to protect the ladies from the rays of the sun) and prepared for the engagement. Please permit me here to give a short description of the battle-ground. And first, the position of tent was a regular built military maxim, borrowed by Brother P—— from the United States Arsenal for that purpose, and it was vastly comfortable; then there were the tenters, scattered around in every direction, every one selecting such a position as suited his own taste, and without any particular regard to law or order. The tents were of cloth, not a board or shingle being in the assistance; to the best of my knowledge and belief.

So much for the battle ground, now for the officers. Brother W., the P. E. aforesaid, was chief in command, and well and faithfully did he discharge his duty. He is a man of but middle age, though he wears the scars of many a hard fought battle, and he is able to do good service. Reader, were you ever aboard of a steamer at sea, or one of our Western rivers? Did you ever observe with what sleepless vigilance the Master of the Deck, looks out for, and guards against danger? Did you ever see the sentinel at his post, as he, with sleepless eye, watches for the approach of the enemy, while his comrades and companions in arms are sleeping in sleep? If so, you have some idea of the untiring vigilance of this P. E. at a Camp Meeting. Night and day he is on his feet and knees, watching and praying (he seldom preaches on such occasions) for the success of the meeting, only allowing himself a few hours out of the twenty-four for refreshment and sleep. He is one of that band of old Texan preachers, who endured all the toils and dangers of the early settlers in the valley of the Colorado. He knows what it is to sleep on a blanket in the open prairie, and to hear the savage yell of the wild Indian. Such is the man who was in charge of this meeting. His under officers were, in addition to those already mentioned, a preacher from San Antonio station, an honorable George R., of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church, who did good service on occasion, and several local preachers, exhorters, etc., etc. Thus officered, armed and equipped, the battle commenced. The enemy, rank and file, were in attendance to contest the field, all well drilled and disciplined. For three days and nights the result of the contest seemed doubtful; but, thank God, on Sunday night the enemy sounded a retreat, and vainly attempted to rally and return to the fight. On Monday and Monday night victory perched upon the banners of Israel's hosts and the enemy were completely routed, "horse, foot and dragoons." The meeting closed on Tuesday morning, with the addition of about fifty happily converted recruits to the army of Christ. To the great Captain General of our Salvation be all the glory. Amen: Yours, in Christian bonds,

WESLEY SMITH.

Webberville, Texas, Sept. 17, 1853.

P.S. Immediately upon the close of the Camp Meeting, Brother Phillips commenced a protracted meeting in Austin, which, I learn, has been the means of several conversions. It is still going on.

SEA SICKNESS AND YELLOW FEVER.—We take the following from the Baltimore Sun of the 22d inst.:

The steamer Cherokee left New Orleans on the 12th of August, when the fever was at its height, with 169 persons aboard, exclusive of the officers and men belonging to the ship. The majority of them were unacclimated, and hence specially susceptible to attack from the epidemic. Soon after the Cherokee had got out into the Gulf, which was pretty rough at the time, every one of the passengers became violently sea-sick; but after the nauseating motion of the water had had its usual effect, causing the whole party to vomit freely, this sickness ceased, and health and hilarity reigned on board. Soon after this the yellow fever broke out among the crew of the vessel, none of whom had suffered from the sea-sickness. Before reaching New York ten of the men had been attacked with the fever. Not one of the passengers was affected with the disease. Was there any connection between the sea-sickness and the exemption? The circumstance was, certainly, a most remarkable one.

FINANCES OF THE UNITED STATES—Receipts and Expenditures.—A statement of the finances of the United States, for the year ending 30th June, 1853, shows an increase in the receipts from customs on the year ending June 30, 1852, of $11,591,688 90. The receipts from the sales of public lands had declined from $2,043,339 25 to $1,667,084 00, exhibiting a falling off of $376,194 67. The receipts from miscellaneous sources increased $109,103. Total receipts $61,387,672, of which $58,081,805 was from customs, and $1,667,084 from public lands. The balance in the Treasury at the beginning of the present year, exceeds that of the preceding by $7,810,750, and on the 1st of July, 1853, amounted to $21,942,892. The total available means for the year were $75,960,050 87.

The amount of public stock redeemed in the course of the year was $6 394,508, on which there was paid an amount of premium equal to $389,737. The amount of commission paid on purchases of stock was $2,541 61. During the preceding year there was extinguished of the funded and unfunded debt $6,045,000, including $3,180,000, being the last instalment of the Mexican indemnity. The total payment out of this Treasury during the last fiscal year, exceeded the aggregate of the preceding one by $8,036,000. Exclusive of payments during both years for the redemption of public debt, and other expenditures on account of public debt, the expenditure of the two years representing the ordinary disbursements for the support of Government were as follows:

Year ending June 30, 1852.....$35,962,[illegible]
" " 1853.....43,546,[illegible]

Increase for 1853.....$7,583,901

It is expected that the revenue from customs for the current year will reach $65,000, and the surplus in the Treasury will amount on the first of July, 1854, to $43,000,000, unless kept down by the redemption of the public debt before maturity, or otherwise appropriated by Congress.

OBITUARY.

DIED.—Near Fayette C. H., Ala., July 20, 1853, Mrs. AGNES MUSKAR, in her 48th year. She was born in the State of South Carolina, Abbeville District. She professed religion in 1838, and lived a doubting Christian life until 1846, when she connected herself with the M. E. Church, and in discharge of her Christian duties, the Lord brightened her evidences and enjoyments. And for the last two years, I can say from a personal knowledge, that I have ever found her a firm, decided, consistent, though modest and retiring Christian. Her benevolence and motherly kindness for the orphan, (some of whom she had under her immediate care) was a subject of remark by all her acquaintances; and it is thought by her friends that her last illness and death was the result of her watchings around the dying bedside of one of these motherless ones. During the long nights, days and weeks of her last sickness, not a murmuring word escaped her lips, but her language ever was, "Thy will of the Lord be done."

She died a triumphant death, leaving a husband and eleven children to mourn. C.

N.B. The Nashville and Charleston Advocates please copy.

DIED.—July 23, CHARLES WESLEY CARNEY, son of Rev. Charles J. and Mary Carney, aged 10 years and 4 months.

The calm and peaceful death of this interesting boy, was another and beautiful illustration of the fitness of religion for little children, and of its power to sustain even such in that hour of trial from which the stoutest unregenerate heart shrinks. When told that death was near, no shade of gloom, no sorrow, not even a desire escaped his lips, save that the will of God, of whom he had been taught from infancy, might be done.

He spoke in an elevated and intelligent strain, beyond his years, and above mere humanity, of his "kindred in heaven," and the greatjoy of meeting them. The happiness of his approaching change so absorbed him that nothing earthly could divert or distract his thoughts from the liveliest contemplation of heaven.

His illness was short and his death sudden, yet the last enemy was not only fearlessly but triumphantly met by this little boy.

September. W. D. ANDERSON.

DIED.—On Deer Creek, Franklin Parish, La., on the 24th August, RACHEL BALLARD, aged 65 years. The deceased was born in the State of South Carolina, in the year 1790, emigrated to this State in 1817, and joined the M. E. Church in 1830.

For twenty years, has this pious and devoted Christian been a member of our church. A few hours before her spirit fled, she was asked "if she was ready?" She replied, "I am, I am." H. L. GREEN.

September.

DIED.—MARY ANN LOVELADY, daughter of D. G. Rencher, was born in North Carolina, February 21, 1822, embraced religion when young, was married to the Rev. William M. Lovelady, of the Alabama Conference, Jan. 14, 1849, and died of yellow fever near Mobile, September, 6, 1853. Her babe, William Rencher, died September 5.

Brother Lovelady was faithfully engaged in the discharge of pastoral duties connected with the West Ward Church in Mobile, when the fever fell on him and his congregation so heavily. But he assures me that for several months previous to her death, Sister Lovelady, (though always conscientiously pious,) was much drawn out in her feelings, earnestly seeking the full maturity of the interior life, and that her end was peaceful and very full of hope. Confident of her justification through the atonement, having the spirit of adoption, she was peaceful and sank "as sets the morning star, that goes not down, but melts away into the light of heaven."

COMING BACK.—We are always happy to observe any and every indication of renewed energy and life in our city matters upon the approach of the annual business season. That a very marked and decided change has recently taken place for the better, it gives us sincere pleasure to note. Our streets are beginning once more to assume their wonted garb of bustle and cheerfulness. On all sides, and in every square, the artisan and the mechanic are plying their busy labors. We notice, too, occasionally, a familiar face, that we have long missed, in our daily walks, and the cordial grasp of the hand readily proves the gratification of the return to well remembered scenes and pleasures.

We cannot, however, say that we are as well pleased to meet with those who are evidently strangers to our city and its climate, and we cannot too earnestly recommend them to remain away for a short time longer.

There is every indication of an early Fall, and we have already experienced a most favorable change in the weather. The mortality is steadily declining, and we have reason to hope that the terrible epidemic, from which we have lately suffered, will soon have stayed its ruthless hand.

A little more patience, then, good friends, and you may safely mingle once more in our gayeties and crowd our streets. But until advised of the safety of your coming, or until you have news of Jack Frost's welcome arrival, stay away.

The total number of interments in Mobile on the 28th were six—of which five were yellow fever cases.

THE FEVER AT POINT COUPEE.—From Point Coupée we have intelligence that the fever had been attacking all classes. Creoles of the parish were not exempt, and nine persons had died from it last week. There were no signs of its abatement.

YELLOW FEVER AT BAYOU SARA.—At last accounts the fever was raging at this place with unabated violence, though the subjects were not so many—the citizens having mostly gone out of town.

THE FEVER IN MOBILE.—The whole number of deaths for the week ending with Friday, 23d inst., were 182, exhibiting a decrease of 80 from the preceding week.

THE FEVER IN VICKSBURG.—From the Sentinel of the 21st inst. we take the following paragraphs:

It is refreshing to walk the streets and hear men with great emphasis swear that there has not been a real "genuine case of yellow fever in town this season," when every inhabited house in town is a hospital. It is no uncommon case for a whole family, of half-a-dozen or more, to be sick at once, and not one able to give another a drink of water. There were more deaths in Vicksburg and vicinity on Sunday and Monday last, in proportion to the population, than there were for the same space of time in New Orleans when the pestilence was at its worst. We are indifferent about names, but let no one be deceived; call it what you may, a pestilence is raging here which is no respecter of persons.

We have issued the last Tri-Weekly we will attempt to issue until the sickness abates. We will furnish all our subscribers with our Weekly, provided we are able to get it out, though we feel no assurance that we will be able to issue it regularly, as our pressman and roller are both sick, and we have only two compositors at work, one of whom is in delicate health.

THE FEVER IN YAZOO CITY.—The Yazoo Democrat, of the 21st inst., has the following:

The yellow fever at this place is now in an uncertain attitude; the number of daily cases have fallen off very much, also the number of deaths. The weather has been unsettled, and it is impossible to say or conjecture what may be the condition of things in a few days. At present the physicians seem to be in better spirits; the disease is apparently much more controlable than at first. The number of cases now in town can not be much short of one hundred, many of whom are convalescent.

The black population is now suffering more [illegible] than when it first made its [illegible]; with them, however, [illegible] milder character.

RAYMOND.—The Hinds County (Raymond, Miss.) Gazette, of the 21st inst., chronicles one death at that place from yellow fever. Several cases had occurred, but the Gazette says they originated in Vicksburg. The disease had not become epidemic.

THE FEVER AT THIBODAUX.—We have received the Thibodaux Minerva of the 24th inst., containing a column and a half of obituary notices. From the Minerva we learn, that although upwards of a month has elapsed since the fever made his appearance there, it still continued its ravages. The deaths had already amounted to one hundred and forty seven, being ten per cent. on the entire population, and about fifteen per cent. on the population remaining in the town. In the selection of its victims it has paid no respect to age, sex, or condition; the old and the young, the rich and the poor, the temperate and the inebriate; man in the plenitude of his strength, and woman, blooming in youth and loveliness, are alike victims to its insatiate thirst. The number of cases, taking for a basis that one-fifth of the number who contract the disease die, amount to 735, which is rather under than over the mark.

Within the few days preceding the date of the issue of the Minerva, (the 24th) the deaths had greatly diminished; nor had there been as many new cases reported as for the same number of days preceding the date above mentioned. This abatement, the Minerva says, is not owing to any abatement in the disease, but to the want of material to work upon. The cool and bracing atmosphere of the past few days, together with the reduction in the number of deaths and new cases, had inspired the citizens with new life, but it was feared, when the warm weather should again set in, the disease would renew its ravages. All are advised to keep away from the town for two weeks to come.

Among the deaths by the fever, the Minerva records that of an intelligent young man who had been employed on the Opelousas Railroad. He was found in an old moss shed, in the outskirts of the town, laboring under a very high fever, and conveyed to the Court-house—now being used by the Howard Association as an infirmary. Every attention was bestowed on the young stranger by the attending physician, Dr. C. H. Porter, and the nurses. When all hopes had fled of arresting the disease and restoring him to health, he was asked to give his name, age, and place of birth; to comply with which he at first peremptorily refused; but finally gave his age and place of his birth, still refusing to divulge his name. He was a native of Haut Pyranees, France, and in the 21st year of his age. He now sleeps the sleep of death in a strange land, far from his native home and kindred, under the name of "Unknown."

The planters in the vicinity had been very kind in sending in aid to the sick, in the shape of money, poultry and other necessaries. The Minerva adds:

A delegation from that band of good Samaritans, the Howard Association of New Orleans, headed by D. I. Ricardo, Esq., its Secretary, and accompanied by Dr. C. H. Porter, arrived on Thursday; the 15th inst., with a number of nurses and a full supply of such medicines as are requisite and necessary for the treatment of the fearful epidemic now prevailing among us. The aid was opportune, as our citizens, the few remaining who were able to devote their time in attending to the sick and dying, had nearly flagged out for the want of repose. This act of disinterested philanthropy on the part of the Howards of New Orleans, will long remain green in the hearts and affections of our fellow citizens, and in their behalf we return them hearty thanks.

YELLOW FEVER IN PHILADELPHIA.—The Philadelphia Sun, in recording the fact that the Board of Health reports two fatal cases of yellow fever in that city, remarks that the disease exists still in the neighborhood of South and Swanson streets, to which locality it was brought by the bark Mandarin; but it is of a mild type, and, in most instances, yields to medical treatment. Many houses in the vicinity have been deserted, and several factories closed. The disease, however, it is said, is confined almost exclusively to badly ventilated localities, to purify which the Board of Health is doing every thing in its power, but it is supposed it will require a few heavy frosts to kill it off effectually.

PACIFIC RAILROAD COMPANY.—This company, which was chartered by the New York Legislature, was organized on the 16th inst., and books of subscription opened in New York city. Mr. Robert J. Walker commenced the subscription to the stock with the sum of ten millions of dollars. Dr. Newcombe, of Albany, and others, in behalf of themselves and others, subscribed the sum of two million eight hundred thousand dollars, and the company then adjourned to meet on the 1st of October. The capital stock of the company is one hundred millions of dollars. The New York Times says that Mr. Walker's subscription is on behalf of certain interests made up at Washington, and other parties stood pledged for over five millions, making together $15,800,000. Government aid, in the form of a mammoth land grant, is to be made the talisman to the scheme, to which will be added the usual exercise of credit upon bonded security, and a Government mail contract of $3,000,000 a year.

IMPROVED STEAM BOILER.—Judge W. E. Bird, of Cahaba, says the Selma (Ala.) Sentinel, has invented an improved steam boiler, for which he has taken measures to secure a patent. The boiler is composed of cylinders or tubes, arranged in layers or tiers, having return flues passing through them and connected with fire chambers. The flues of the lower tubes or cylinders terminate in a trunk or chest, with hollow bars, through which the smoke passes to the smoke chamber. The flues of the upper cylinder communicate directly with the smoke chamber.

THE CRYSTAL PALACE.—The New York Post says that the exhibition at the Crystal Palace will close on the 1st December. Notwithstanding the stock had declined from $150, the price at which it sold some months since, to $77 50, the Post says that even with the present rate of receipts the company is clearing $1000 per day, while the value of the building and the lease, which is for two years longer free of rent, must return to the stockholders far more than the par value.

HOTELDOM.—The Mirror is noticing the rapid increase of magnificent hotels in New York city. Broadway, we are told, is getting to be little else than one vast series of hotels, with basement accommodations for shopping, shaving and bathing—from the Bowling Green to the Crystal Palace, and all are full and overflowing. The editor mysteriously adds:

It is said there are two or three eligibly situated hotels whose proprietors are always short; and yet their houses are always full! The mystery, we suppose, may be explained by one word—mismanagement. Some landlords gamble away their profits; some drink them up; others waste their substance on fast horses and fast women. But still, we think no one will deny the statement that there is at this time no business in New York so profitable and so sure as hotel keeping.

The New Yorkers are about to establish a semi-monthly steam line between their city and Matanzas and Havana; touching at Key West. One of the vessels is already under contract. They are to be about 1100 tons and powerfully built.

Louisiana Interior.

The Farmersville Enquirer of the 15th inst. says:

The rains in this section have injured the crop materially by causing it to rot. We hear that the worm has commenced its ravages in this parish. From accounts of the worm and rotting of the cotton, the crop will be cut short nearly a fifth.

The same paper says: We have been favored with a statement of the number of bales of cotton shipped from the Ouachita district the past season, which was 136,963 bales. So we are beginning to be a people of no mean importance.

The Episcopalians in Jackson are about to erect a church.

The Southern (Jackson) Mirror of the 22d says: The cotton crop has been injured by rain and winds, it has been attacked by the boll-worm and caterpillar, and the prospect is a gloomy one.

There has been a remarkable change in the weather since our last; a cold rain, and then a cold wind, have thrown our citizens into—winter clothing and fireside arm chairs.

The same paper says: The most reliable information in our possession warrants us in saying that the fever in the various towns around us is rapidly abating—that it will have entirely disappeared by the first of the coming week.

Centenary College, at Jackson, will open its annual session on Monday the 3d of October. It is expected that about four hundred students will be in attendance.

The Sharon Female College will open its annual session on the same day.

THE FEVER AT PLAQUEMINE.—The Southern Sentinel of the 24th says:

Another week has passed, and we are happy to say that the health of our town has become no worse. Five or six deaths have occurred since last Saturday, which is about the same number as the previous week. We begin to feel more confident than ever that we have had the worst of it. The Vigilant Committee of the Relief Association are active in visiting the sick, and affording to the needy all the comforts they require.

The Gazette, of the same date, says:

Thus far the fever has been very fatal; not one out of ten recovers who is really attacked with the yellow fever. To-day (Tuesday) there are more cases than on any previous day. On Wednesday and Thursday there were three deaths. Some fifteen or twenty are still sick.

WINDING UP OF BAYOU PLAQUEMINE.—At the last session of the Legislature of Louisiana, that honorable body appropriated the sum of ten thousand dollars towards defraying the expenses of making a survey, and in some manner repairing the mouth of Bayou Plaquemine.

What is to be done in the premises? The Bayou is now dry, and there is nothing to prevent those entrusted with the matter from commencing operations at once. If the matter is long delayed, the fall rains will prevent the execution of any permanent work. The mouth of the Bayou is continually winding, the banks crumbling and caving, and if something is not speedily done, there will soon be a shorter route to the Gulf of Mexico, for the largest class of vessels, than by the way of New Orleans; then "good-by John" to our flourishing town. [Iberville Gazette.

The inhabitants have already commenced removing their buildings, and other obstructions in the way of the new levee to be built, commencing at the mouth of Bayou Plaquemine. [Ibid.

THINGS IN BATON ROUGE.—The weather continues cool and bracing, and we are informed that there was a white frost in several places in Mississippi on the nights of the 22d and 23d, all of which is most favorable for the rapid decline of the fever. There have been several new cases of fever daily in this city, but few deaths, as compared with the daily record of last week, but we believe the epidemic has spent its greatest virulence, and now yields more rapidly to the treatment of the physicians than it did at first. The Howard Association, of New Orleans, sent up on Thursday six nurses and two physicians, which were very important, as nurses have been hard to get in sufficient numbers here, for love or money; besides, two of our young physicians (Drs. Ludlow and Williams) have been arrested in their career of usefulness by the enemy which they have been battling, night and day, since its first appearance among us. We are happy to say they are recovering and doing well. We had heard that the fever had spread into the country, and had reached the Comite and Amite rivers, but we have nothing authentic, and therefore can say nothing positive as to its progress or fatality there. [Comet, 24th.

WEATHER AND CROPS.—In our last issue we stated that we had seen and conversed with numbers of our planters in relation to the prospects of the growing crops, and that we were of opinion that there would be an average crop of cotton raised in our parish. We are sorry to learn that our anticipations will not be realized. The crops, we are informed, are good in the pine hills; but on Sicily Island, Tensas Bayou, Black and Little rivers, the crops are not near so good. We are informed that the crops in the above named places are suffering sadly from the caterpillar and rot. The late rains have not been beneficial to the open cotton, and has somewhat retarded our planters in gathering that which is now open in their fields.

The weather has been cloudy and rainy since our last publication. On Tuesday morning (yesterday) the sun rose clear and beautiful—the early part of the day being remarkably cool, having much the appearance of autumn. Such weather must necessarily cut short the present cotton crop at least one-third, if not more. [Harrisonburg Independent, 21st.

ALEXANDRIA AND NATCHEZ TELEGRAPH.—The citizens of Harrisonburg, Parish of Catahoula, La., held a meeting on the 17th instant for the purpose of taking into consideration the propriety of establishing a telegraph line between Natchez and Alexandria, by the way of Harrisonburg. Resolutions were passed recommending that immediate measures be taken to raise subscriptions to the stock thereof, and that three Commissioners be appointed to draft a charter for the company, to open books of subscription, and to take charge of the business connected with the telegraph line until the company is organized. Commissioners were appointed to carry out the objects of the resolutions.

NEWS FROM WASHINGTON.—We copy the following from the Star:

A Very Important Question.—A question has arisen as to the right of the Government to bring suit for the violation of the new steamboat law, and we are satisfied that the law officers of the Government are of opinion that, as the law now stands, the Government cannot do so; and as a consequence, that all such suits, until Congress shall have amended that act, must be brought in the name of an informer, or of some one who had received injury, from the failure of steamboat owners or managers to comply with the law's requirements.

A Handsome Payment.—It affords us much pleasure to be able to state that the sureties of Mr. Collier, late Collector of San Francisco, have very recently paid over an aggregate of about $118,000 on account of the balance due the United States from that gentleman.

An Indian Bureau Contract Let Out.—Grant & Burton, of New York, were the successful bidders for supplying the goods required under treaty to be paid over to the Chippewa Indians of Lake Superior in the coming autumn. They are said to have been the only bidders. The aggregate of their bids cover $17,000.

CROPS IN MISSISSIPPI.—The Lauderdale Republican of the 20th inst. says:

In this county our remarks, made a week or two since, still apply. The boll worm and rot together will reduce the crop at least one-half. Accounts from other counties are quite as discouraging, though we have had no personal observation; but here we can speak with positive certainty, because we have seen the effects of the weather and the worm.

A CHURCH FOR CANDIDATES.—An exchange paper has the following:

A defeated candidate in a neighboring county remarked that the race had cost him some four hundred dollars in clean cash, to say nothing of the wear and tear of conscience he had undergone. There is one thing about running for office in this country: if a man succeeds in getting elected he never gets done paying for it; if beaten, it invariably breaks him up. Young gentlemen of aspiring natures would do well to study the fact before "pitching in."

The News.

NORTH AND SOUTH CAROLINA GOLD MINES.—We gave yesterday what a writer in the New York Tribune said of the gold mines in Virginia, and to-day condense his statement of the North and South Carolina mines. The McCullock mine, in Guilford county, N. C., has been worked for about twenty-seven years, yielding to its owners a handsome fortune. Last year they sent to the mint $31,301 10 in gold, the whole expense of which, for digging, etc., was only $3,730 14, leaving a net profit of $27,573 86. The mine also yields abundance of copper ore, averaging 28 per cent of metal. The mines of Gold Hill, five in number, have been worked a long time, and have produced about $3,000,000. At these mines, which have been lately consolidated, there is a village of 800 inhabitants, all connected with or dependent upon them. Another company, called the "Tolesboro Gold Hill Company," has been formed to work over the "tailings," or refuse ore, which is said to amount to nearly three millions of bushels. South Carolina has long possessed many gold mines, but until within two years none of any note. It can now boast of including within its limits the richest gold mine on the surface of the globe. Mr. W. H. Dorn, the owner, discovered the great vein in February, 1852, having previously gathered but a few thousand dollars. During the year ending last February, with ten hands, and at an expense of $1200 he secured $202,000. In the month of July last the vein was 11 feet wide. In that period, from an excavation a little over 300 feet long, 12 feet high and 15 broad, $300,000 had been taken. It is no uncommon thing, upon making a blast, to open upon a nest of pieces of the pure metal, some of them weighing 60 pennyweights, (worth about $60.) The vein has since been struck in another place, about 150 yards from the opening, and yields finely. Mr. Dorn has now two Chilian mills in operation, and is realizing $100 per day. Specimens of the gold from this mine are on exhibition at the World's Fair. A New York Company, bearing the title of the Dorn Mining Company, have leased a portion of Mr. Dorn's tract, their lines running within three hundred yards of his shaft, and the course of his vein crossing their land. In exploring this property during the present summer, a vein was struck eight feet below the surface, some of the ore from which was worth $500 per bushel. This vein has been traced some distance. They expect soon to be able to extract $4000 per day. Another vein has recently been struck, the ore from which strongly resembles Mr. Dorn's, and is very rich. [Baltimore Sun, 22d inst.

HORRIBLE HOSPITALITY AT BUENOS AYRES.—A letter from Buenos Ayres, in the New York Times, relates some instances of horrid cruelty perpetrated by Gen. Urquiza, previous to his flight. One instance was that of Donna Martina Paindo, wife of G. Marino Benar, who wrote a letter to an officer named Capuco, advising him to leave the ranks of Urquiza and join those of the legal Government. Capuco, who had been fed and clothed by the lady, when he was in great poverty, pretended to favor her wishes, but at the first opportunity betrayed her to Urquiza, who ordered her instant arrest, and sentenced her to receive 300 lashes, and proceeded in person, accompanied by Lagos, his colleague, to see the sentence executed. The victim was led out, stripped entirely of her clothing, and placed in the midst of the squadron of soldiers assigned to inflict the punishment. The cries and agony of the wretched woman, at an exposure so much more horrible to her than death itself, had no effect upon her heartless executioners. Before the stripes were one-fourth inflicted she had fainted from pain and loss of blood, and shortly after he was apprised that the sufferings of the poor wretch were terminated. She was dead. With an excess of inhumanity which is almost incredible, the monster ordered the remaining number of stripes to be inflicted upon the corpse, and finally left the spot, forbidding the removal of the remains.

EUROPEAN PROTESTS AGAINST CAPT. INGRAHAM'S COURSE AT SMYRNA.—We have already mentioned a rumor that the Russian, Prussian and Austrian Ministers had filed in the State Department a protest against the conduct of Captain Ingraham at Smyrna. The National Intelligencer of yesterday states that a story is current in Washington that the Ministers of England and France have also expressed to our Government, concurrently with those of the three other Powers, the dissent, protest, or whatever it was, of their respective Governments relative to the Costa affair. We can hardly believe that this latter rumor can be true. In reference to the reported forthcoming letter of Secretary Marcy, on this subject, the Intelligencer remarks:

"What the views of the Secretary of State are on this grave question we do not know; but we cannot doubt that they are such as will be sustained by the rules of public law or a just interpretation of our own domestic law. While he occupies this ground he will be supported by public opinion at home, and will be fully fortified against any unreasonable misconstruction abroad." [Balt. Sun.

SERIOUS AND MYSTERIOUS ACCIDENT.—On Saturday night last, about twelve o'clock, as the express train of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad, bound from Baltimore for Wheeling, reached the mouth of a deep cut in the North Mountain, a few miles west of Martinsburg, one of the engineers saw from the front of his locomotive a man lying across the track. The whistle was immediately blown to stop the train, but before this could be effected the unfortunate man was caught in the cow catcher and instantly killed. Upon examination the body proved to be that of John Smith, who had been placed on duty that night at his own request, as a substitute for the regular watchman who guarded the east end of the cut. It is thought by some that he met his awful death by design, as he had been observed to be for several days past possessed of a heavy melancholy, occasioned, it is said, by domestic difficulties. But a few moments before the train arrived he was known to be awake and singing, and although he had ample notice of its approach by the customary whistle of the engine, he was found lying at full length across the track, with his neck upon one rail and his legs upon the other. His remains were interred in Frederick, the place of his late home. [Baltimore Sun.

THE GOLD MINES OF VIRGINIA.—A writer in the New York Tribune says that of the paying gold mines in Virginia, may be mentioned the Marshall mine, in Spottsylvania county, on the Rappahannock river, twelve miles from Fredericksburg. From this time some $300,000 have been extracted. When last visited by the writer twenty hands were employed. The yield was from $150 to $200 per day. The workings extend to a depth of a hundred feet. In Fluvanna county, Com. Stockton has long been working mines. The yield of gold has been considerable, though it is understood that large sums of money have been spent upon machinery, which was finally rejected. Very recently the mines known as the Garnett and Morely mines, in Buckingham county, which have passed through several hands, have finally been purchased by an English Company, who are working them. This tract contains 1300 acres, upon which are several veins. The main vein, at a depth of 110 feet is 15 feet wide, and yields about $20 to the ton. Besides a staff of engineers they employ seventy negroes. The daily yield we have not learned. The London and Virginia Gold and Copper Mining Company have purchased a property adjoining the above, and known as the Eldridge mine, for $150,000.

TRAVEL TO CALIFORNIA OVER THE ISTHMUS.—It is stated that the British Steamship Company, the Pacific Mail Steamship Company, and other parties have contributed upwards of sixty thousand dollars for the repairs upon the mule road between Cruces and Panama, and that the work has actually been commenced. Measures, it is also said, are now on foot to issue through tickets between New York and California, and vice versa—an arrangement which, it is supposed, will effectually check the impositions which have been practiced upon travelers by the muleteers and transporting agents on the Isthmus. By these tickets passengers will be enabled to cross the Isthmus in a specified time, and for a certain price. It is expected that these plans will go into operation about the 1st of October, when passengers and their luggage will be carried through from the Atlantic to the Pacific in from twelve to fifteen hours. Taking these facts in connection with the present low passage fares, $100, $75 and $50, to first, second and third class tickets, it will bring the trip within the means of every traveler. THE MISSISSIPPI BONDS.—Proposed Mode of Settlement.—Mr. H. A. Johnson, of the firm of Gilbert, Coe & Johnson, of New York, who obtained the verdict and affirmation of the High Court of Errors and Appeals of the State of Mississippi, in the case of the Union Bank Bonds, it is said, has offered, on behalf of the bond holders, a liberal settlement. He proposes that the bonds, with the interest accrued thereon, shall be taken up, and new bonds issued, payable in fifteen, thirty, forty-five and sixty years; that the new bonds issued for the interest now due bear no interest for three years, after which the interest to be charged on them as on the principal. He is also willing to take a tax of one fourth of one per cent. on the assessed ad valorem value of such real and personal property of the State as is now subject to taxation, believing it will liquidate the entire debt in sixty years; if not, he will grant a further extension.

OCEAN TELEGRAPHS.—Mr. J. B. Lindsay, of Dundee, Scotland, has concocted a plan of telegraphing across the ocean, from Great Britain to the United States, which, it is said, has the merits of exceeding simplicity and cheapness—such cheapness that as Mr. Lindsay computes, it would cost only £60,000 to establish a communication between the two countries. Mr. Lindsay proposes to dispense with submerged wires, and, indeed, all wires; he intends to make the sea serve the purpose of wires. He recently gave a public demonstration of his method at Glasgow, transmitting the electrical current, we are told, across a "large trough of salt water," which served as a conductor, and informing the audience that he had obtained similar results over a breadth of sixty feet of water. This is all very fine and very promising, but perhaps Mr. Lindsay, before attempting to make a trough of the Atlantic, will try his luck in transmitting electricity, without wires, across the British or the Irish Channel.

CONNECTION OF THE OHIO RIVER WITH LAKE MICHIGAN.—The New Albany and Salem Railroad, connecting the Ohio river at New Albany, opposite Louisville, Ky., with Lake Michigan, and traversing North and South the State of Indiana, is progressing rapidly. The road commenced running regular trains on the 19th inst., from Michigan City, 130 miles South to Crawfordville, through Lafayette; and the company expects to run ten miles farther by the 10th of October, to Bainbridge. On the South end of the road regular trains are now running 91 miles, and it is expected by the 27th inst., they will run to Bloomingdale, 90 miles from New Albany; that leaves 51 miles still to be laid with iron, which will be done, it is said, within the year, as the grading and bridging are in a good state of forwardness, with the iron on hand.

RATHER STRANGE CHRISTIANS.—The Chinese Revolutionists, it is said, claim a divine mission, and preach christianity, yet a Paris paper contains a long account from the "Apostolical Administrator," at Nankin, giving a history of the persecutions which the Catholics in that city had suffered at the hands of the insurgents. On the 26th of March the Christians were assembled according to custom, for the observance of Good Friday. The insurgents entered all at once, crying and screaming. They broke the crucifix, overthrew the altar, and then wished to have their prayers recited—at the same time presenting the Christians with books in which it is written. Their demands being refused, they seized, bound and beat and executed numbers of them. On the whole, out of six hundred Christians at Nankin, Yang-Tchou and Tseu-Kiang, fifty have been slain or burned to death, and several have been bound or beaten.

DREADFUL MORTALITY IN CUBA.—Letters from Havana to the 20th ult., state that an epidemic of a choleric nature, assisted by the pernicious fever, was sweeping off sailors, soldiers, negroes and others, with frightful rapidity in the interior of Cuba. Some estates, numbering from two to three hundred slaves, had been so reduced in the space of a week, that there were scarcely men enough left to bury the dead. It generally proves fatal in four or five h

Further Foreign News.

The files from Liverpool to the 7th inst., by the steamer Arctic, have come to hand.

As already announced, among the passengers in the Arctic is Mrs. Stowe, who has returned in improved health from the Continent. At Paris Mrs. Stowe staid with Mrs. Mary Weston Chapman, of Boston, Mass. At London she was the guest of Messrs. Low, her London publishers, and at Liverpool she enjoyed the hospitality of John Cropper, Esq., of Dingle Bank. On the 21 inst. Mrs Stowe visited Leeds as the guest of Mr. Edward Barnes, of Headingly, and when in Leeds was presented with a testimonial in the shape of a silver fruit-basket from a number of ladies; a purse of one hundred guineas from "Readers of Uncle Tom's Cabin," and an address from the Leeds Anti-Slavery Association. J. H. Shaw, Mayor of the city, presided on the occasion; the address was presented by Mr. Wilson Armistead, President of the Anti-Slavery Society, and the testimonial was handed to Mrs. Stowe by Sir George Goodman, M. P. It being understood that Mrs. Stowe desired to remain in as much privacy as her celebrity would permit, many persons who would have been pleased to pay their respects refrained from intruding.

GREAT BRITAIN.

The queen had terminated her visit to Ireland, and was going to her residence at Balmoral, Scotland.

The principal members of the Cabinet remained in London, awaiting the development of the Turkish affair.

J. & J. Alexander, commission merchants, Derry, had failed; liabilities £35,000.

The weavers of domestics by power-looms, in Manchester, have struck. Five mills, with 3000 looms, had been idle for some days, and three mills, with 2000 more looms, were to come to a stand on the 7th. The operatives demand 10 per cent additional. The cotton-spinners, from twenty-two cotton districts, had also struck work.

The harvest operations were proceeding very rapidly in all parts of Britain and Ireland. Weather, on the whole, fine.

The British ship Collector, from Calcutta for Liverpool, with 1300 bales of cotton, was lost in the channel 25th ult. Crew saved by the Prosper, of Quebec.

The London Times has been forbidden to circulate in any part of the Scotch dominions.

The extensive strike of colliers at the Dowlais Iron Works is over.

One death is reported from Asiatic cholera at Liverpool. The victim was a German emigrant, who brought the disease from Hamburg.

Mr. John B. Gough was at Scarborough, England, on the 20th ult., delivering temperance addresses to large audiences. The Leeds Mercury says he has decided to protract his stay until next June.

THE EASTERN QUESTION.—If we may believe certain letter writers of the London press, a feeling of annoyance is gaining ground in France that the obstacles to a final settlement should now rest with Turkey. Mercantile men consider that the trade of the allies of Turkey has been long enough obstructed and injured by her difficulties. In these opinions the Emperor of Russia is said to share. The Times makes this important statement, if true: "We have reason to believe that the French Cabinet has already signified to the Sultan that the ulterior steps he may adopt, contrary to the advice of his allies, must be taken at his own peril."

From Constantinople, August 22, it is mentioned in a correspondence that the Turkish Government had issued a manifesto to the representatives of the four Powers, in which it states the reasons of its modifying the Vienne note. The manifesto is signed by Reschid Pacha, and begins by expressing regret that the note prepared by the Porte itself had not been accepted by the conference.

The Porte expresses itself greatly pained to hesitate in the course of action indicated by the four Powers. "But the Government of his Majesty, the Sultan, which had, in the commencement of the affair, been declared lone competent to judge of questions relative to its rights and independence, having unfortunately not been consulted on the réduction of the new note, was consequently placed in a difficult position." The manifesto winds up with the avowal that the "Government of the Sublime Porte still awaits a solid guarantee on the part of the great Powers against all interference in future, and all occupation, from time to time, of the Principalities of Moldavia and Wallachia."

From Belgrade, August 22, a quieter state of public feeling was reported, and there was no longer any fear of an outbreak. The dispatches that now find their way to the newspapers from the principalities, are as studiously indicative of peace as they formerly were of war. Among the rumors was a doubtful one, that the Hospodars had decided to revolt together against the Sultan, if he took any steps to supersede them.

Letters written by the officers of British ships, at Besika Bay, say it was the general belief that the fleet would return in the course of the present month to Malta.

FRANCE.

Numerous vessels had arrived at Marseilles, with wheat from Odessa.

Later accounts from the grain markets, received at Paris, 5th inst., announced that there had been large arrivals of English and American breadstuffs at Havre, and prices had consequently declined by 2 francs per barrel. At Marseilles, where prices had fallen in consequence of the increased supply, quotations were again looking up. The Bordeaux markets were quiet, and at Nantz there had been a decline of from 50 cents to 1 franc per hectolitre. At Strasburg, the market was quiet.

The Emperor was to leave Dieppe for Boulogne on the 6th inst.

A seditious address was posted upon the walls of Bayonne, during the night of the 1st inst., but no disposition to make a disturbance was manifested.

PRUSSIA.

From Berlin, Aug. 20.—It was affirmed that, depending on its own resources alone, there was no apprehension of scarcity in Prussia, although the harvest had been indifferent. A destructive fire had happened at Lubec.

The Customs Conference had closed its discussions, having made but an insignificant change in the tariff.

German papers say that the Prussian Government had concluded not to interfere in the grain trade by legal enactment.

AUSTRIA.

Lieut. Schwartz, commander of the brig Usaro, who figured in the Costa affair, is promoted to the rank of captain, and put in commend of the corvette Juno.

The Princess Amelia, of Sweden, died at Vienna, 31st ult., of disease of the heart.

A letter from Vienna, of Aug. 21, states that on that day an interview had been appointed between the Turkish Minister, Ariff Effendi, and the Russian Ambassador. This meeting was looked on as a decisive proof that all difficulties were settled, except such as negotiations could remove.

RUSSIA.

Dispatches from Odessa, Aug. 19, state that corn continued in demand for Italy and France, and there were large arrivals of grain from Ghourka. From Galats, Aug. 23, it was reported that 120 vessels, laden with corn, were at Sulina, unable to get to sea; several having been detained four months for want of lighters, had their cargoes heated. Four hundred vessels were outside the bar. The report that the export of grain from Wallachia was prohibited is incorrect.

ITALY.

In Lombardy an additional impost or direct tax had been decreed to cover the deficiency in the revenue of 1852-53.

The funeral of Bartholemi Bottary, a democratic priest, at Genoa, had been made the occasion of a grand political demonstration. His death was sudden, and a post mortem examination of his body showed traces of poison.

LATEST BY THE ARCTIC.—The Turin Gazette publishes the law authorizing the Sardinian Minister of Finance to carry out the convention with the trans-Atlantic Company at Genoa, to establish steam communication between Sardinia and America.

The rise in the price of raw silk had been much felt by the manufacturers at Lyons, Nismes and St. Etienne, but fortunately for them, the large orders received from the United States enabled them to keep their operatives employed.

There are several failures of second-rate mercantile houses reported from Amsterdam, chiefly in the oil and corn trade.

Gen. Sir Neil Douglas is dead.

Three new cases of Asiatic cholera had appeared at Liverpool.

FOURTEEN DAYS LATER FROM CALIFORNIA!

The steamship Texas arrived here on Sunday night, bringing San Francisco dates to the 1st inst., and later news from Oregon.

FROM CALIFORNIA.

A great Pacific Railroad meeting was held at San Francisco on the 21st of August. The meeting was addressed by Gen. McDougall, member of Congress elect, Judge Read, Mr. Bryar, a mountaineer, and Major Andrews, of the U. S. Army. Mr. Bryar gave a description of the country between Walker's Pass and the Little Salt Lake; a country through which it was proposed that the railroad should pass, but that has never been explored by any white men except himself and a party who attempted to make a cut off through it in 1849. He thought the country very favorable for a road. He said that the idea that the Great Basin has a Southern rim is incorrect; the Basin has an outlet to the Colorado. The initiatory steps were taken and proper committees appointed to press the matter before Congress.

The shipments of treasure by the steamships which left San Francisco on the 1st, inst. were as follows: by the Brother Jonathan, via Nicaragua, $1,441,610; by the Oregon, via Panama, $976,699. Total, $2,416,709.

A portion of the town of Sonora was destroyed by fire on the night of the 17th of August. Loss about $30,000. The principal business portion of the town escaped injury.

A fire occurred at the town of Kelsey's Diggings on the night of the 25th of Aug. Twenty buildings were destroyed. Loss about $30,000.

Some extraordinary developments of the cost of supporting the State Government have been made. $1,258,857 90 have been added to the debt of the State during Governor Bigler's administration.

In many discovered gold mines of the coast ranges of mountains are, it has been ascertained, quite extensive, but the scarcity of water is a serious drawback. Near San Antonio 300 men are employed in mining; but the yield is only from $1 to $4 per day. These engaged are principally Sonorians and Mexicans.

The mines above Vallejo are paying handsomely. Ten pound lumps, according to accounts, are of frequent occurrence.

The Santa Cruz gold mines, in the adjoining county to San Francisco, are still worked, but do not yield much.

Large shipments of quicksilver, the produce of California mines, are being made from San Francisco to China.

The hostilities of the Rogue River Indians had not ceased. On the contrary, they had become more serious and threatening. The whites had been forced to fly from their dwellings for safety. A large number of troops had been sent to their relief. All business had been suspended in that region.

The first rain of the season fell in Santa Cruz on the 25th of August.

Immigrants were arriving in California from the Plains in large numbers. They do not appear to have suffered much.

The purest qualities and greatest varieties of fruit are said to be now produced in every portion of California.

The Coast had been observed in different parts of the State.

The improvement of San Francisco continued with unabated rapidity. Sacramento is also rapidly improving. The grades of both cities have been raised, and work vigorously commenced.

The water-works, intended to supply San Francisco from the Mountain Lake, about three miles back of the city, are rapidly progressing, and no doubt is entertained that they will afford an abundant supply of fresh water to the city. The time for the completion of the work has been extended to the first of January next.

The record of crime in California appears to be very large. Horse and cattle stealing is still carried on to a great extent in the southern portion of the State. A large band of robbers, it is said, have been committing depredations beyond Carson Valley, on the eastern side of the Sierre Nevade. John Clare, a Scotchman, has been hung by the people of Santa Clare, for the murder of Andrew Cracositch, a Hungarian. They were both fishermen, quarrelled about their rates, and the Scotchman waylaid and shot the Hungarian. The papers contain accounts of numerous murders, outrages and robberies.

Hilton, who was arrested at Los Angelos, as a fugitive from justice in Ohio, was taken to San Francisco, and there discharged from custody.

The crops of Santa Clara and Alameda counties are described as very fine.

The excess of shipments of gold dust from California, during the first eight months of the present year, over those of the last year, is said to be $10,457 88.

The returns of the Assessors of San Francisco city show an assessment of $28,802,060, which is an increase of more than ten millions over the assessments of last year. Nearly one-fourth is set down under the head of improvements. The value of real estate is shown to be nearly $18,000,000.

The "strikes" among the mechanics continued in San Francisco and Sacramento.

REMARKABLE BALLOON ASCENSION.—The Placer Times and Transcript contains the following account:

On Sunday, August 28, a man named Kelly advertised to make an ascension in a large balloon, from Oakland, a village on the opposite side of the bay from this city, and about twelve miles distant. He was to be accompanied by a lady. The announcement drew a large number of persons from the city, and the steamers were crowded. After waiting some time, the crowd became impatient, and the aeronaut stepped into the basket and attempted to ascend, but did not succeed. The ballast was thrown out, the basket detached, and a board made fast across the hoop, between the balloon and the place where the basket had been. A lad named Joseph Gates, an orange vender of San Francisco, dropped his basket and volunteered to go up alone. He had hardly stepped into his place when the balloon suddenly started, leaving the boy astride the hoop, clinging to the ropes, and in this manner to an immense height, the lad calling loudly for help. Before night the balloon disappeared entirely from the sight of the people in the vicinity of the place from which it started, and the adventurous lad was given up for lost.

On Monday rumors were circulated in the city that the lad had landed at a ranch several miles from town, and was on his way home, but nothing was ascertained as certain until an up-river steamer arrived about 10 o'clock P. M., with the boy on board. He stated that on starting from terra firma he pulled the rope, as he had been told, to let off the gas, but the rope broke, and he became much alarmed, but was soon composed, and enjoyed the scene very much. He could see thousands in the streets, and upon the house-tops gazing at him—the Pacific ocean, and the steamers in the bay and in the rivers. The balloon took at first a southeasterly direction, and changed from that to a northeasterly one, passing over the straits at Martinez, at a height of three miles. The lad tried to climb up and out a hole in the balloon with his knife, but did not succeed, two currents of air, however, coming in contact with it, handled the balloon so roughly that the gas escaped fast enough to let him down pretty rapidly at the Suisun Valley, half way between Benicia and Sacramento. On being relieved of his weight the balloon started off again, and he could not hold it. He went to a house near by and staid till morning, when he walked to Benicia. He was selling an extra, containing an account of his adventures, in our streets on Tuesday, at $1 each, and realized over $1000.

Our correspondent furnishes the following brief report of the markets:

Flour—Quiet. Galego and Haxall $20 to $22. Provisions—Clear Pork $36 to $30; Mess do $24 to $26. Beef unchanged. Butter is dull, choice 27 to 30 cents. Lard declined—in kegs is selling at 14 to 15c. Rice—A large supply—Carolina at 7½ per lb.

The papers furnish very little news.

FROM OREGON.

The steamship arrived from Portland on the 20th of August, bringing accounts of the preparations in Oregon for the Rogue River Indian war. The atrocities of the Indians had not in any degree abated.

The immigration to Oregon had well nigh ceased.

Every thing in the Territory was quiet.

FROM THE SOCIETY ISLANDS.

American vessels are admitted there upon the same footing as French.

The state of morals in these islands is said to be worse than ever, notwithstanding the efforts of the missionaries.

Later from Texas.

By the arrival of the steamship Louisiana yesterday, from Galveston, we have dates from there to the 23d inst., and full files of our exchanges from the interior.

Some of the Galveston papers were advocating the propriety of suspending quarantine at that port.

The Civilian and Gazette says:

The epidemic rages with unabated violence, and seems destined to constitute the darkest page in the history of our otherwise fortunate city. The disease is certainly more malignant, as well as more extensive, than any which has heretofore visited Galveston. Its peculiar victims are the unacclimated, but even those who have before had the fever have been attacked, though lightly, in some instances, and, in one case, a native child died with black vomit. Already about two hundred persons have fallen victims, and three times that number have been attacked. As the mortality is confined almost exclusively to the unacclimated, most of whom seem to have been already attacked, we cannot but hope the worst work of the epidemic is over. We dare not dwell upon the suffering and gloom which surround us. The darkness is relieved, however, by daily and nightly deeds of magnanimity and self sacrifice which reflect honor upon human nature.

The same paper says:

Yellow fever, we regret to state, has caused several deaths at the little town of Liverpool on Chocolate bayou, on the western part of Galveston bay.

From an extra of the Indianola Bulletin we select the following:

YELLOW FEVER AT PORT LAVACA.—Three deaths occurred at Port Lavaca during the week ending the 16th inst. It was feared that the disease had become epidemic in that place.

The fever was also prevailing at Victoria.

During the week ending the 20th, the Board of Health reported 14 deaths.

The Nueces Valley says there appears to be a dreadful epidemic among the fish in the Gulf of Corpus Christi. The beach of Mustang and St. Joseph Islands is said to be covered with the dead, while large numbers of dead fish float into Aransas Pass. The disease appears to be confined to the Gulf, the contagion not having yet extended into Corpus Christi Bay.

The Richmond Recorder gives a long account of a railroad meeting which took place in the court-house at Richmond, on the 8th inst., to adopt measures for the purpose of raising means to construct the Colorado branch of the Harrisburg Railroad.

The San Antonio Ledger, of the 15th instant, has the following paragraphs:

On Monday morning last some excitement was manifest about town, on account of the death of a teamster, late from Indianola, of yellow fever. It was doubtless a veritable case of that dire disease. The individual died at the Alamo. Major Belger had him removed and interred immediately after his demise, and used every precaution to prevent a contagion of the disease from this case, by burning tar, having the clothes burned, etc. Our physicians have no apprehensions that the disease will prevail here. But we would suggest that the city be carefully examined, and all filth and other diseases-breeding objects be immediately removed. The general health of the city is good. Weather dry and fine.

The Commissioner appointed by the Governor to ascertain what distance of the Buffalo Bayou, Brazos and Colorado Railroad had been completed and ready for use, reports completed 19½ miles, and the Comptroller has directed the Commissioner of the General Land Office to issue the land scrip to which the Company are entitled, say eight sections of 640 acres for each mile.

On one of the branches of the Colorado, falls have been discovered about 120 feet in altitude and nearly 100 feet wide. The water falls perpendicularly in one unbroken sheet. These falls were discovered by Mr. William H. Magill, who is an old settler in this State and never heard of them before. This gentleman also speaks of the beauty of the country. Large tracts of the most fertile territory as yet unknown for the purposes of civilization.

We have received information that Mexicans from beyond the Rio Grande are driving in large herds of stock to this part of the country, consisting of mules, horses, cattle, sheep, etc. They are fleeing from the apprehended march of the Mexican army towards the Mesilla, which will probably prove disastrous to the pastoral interests of the region through which it will pass. As many as three thousand sheep have crossed the Medina within the past week, wending Eastwardly.

Judge Ankrim and Mr. Percy, with an escort of Mexicans, left El Paso, August 22, on an exploring expedition, to discover, if possible, a pass in the mountains between that place and the Pecos, whereby the distance may be shortened.

The Western (San Antonio) Texan, of the 18th inst., has the following:

Three companies of the 1st Infantry, Captain Carpenter commanding—a portion of the troops destined for the Rio Grande—have arrived, and are encamped at the San Pedro Springs. The non-commissioned staff and band of the regiment are with this command.

FIGHT WITH THE INDIANS.—A correspondent of the San Antonio Ledger (Lo Mismo) writing from El Paso, under date of the 24th ult., gives the following account of a bloody encounter with the party of Apache Indians:

A party of California emigrants, the greatest number of whom were from the neighborhood of Clarksville, Texas, had encamped for the night at a point on this side of the Guadalupe range of mountains known as Thom's Wells. During the night the Indians effected a stampede of their animals, carrying off a considerable number of their horses, etc. On the following morning thirteen of the party mounted and went in pursuit, and following the Indians for some fifty miles, discovered some of the party entering a very deep and extensive canon in the mountains. Very few of the Indians were at first observed by the Americans, and those who were seen kept up a slow retreat, entering this canon and following up its course towards its head. The Americans unsuspectingly gave chase and continued the same up the canon for about ten miles, when the first notice which they received of the proximity of the enemy was a fire upon their ranks from every direction. They immediately discovered that they had been entrapped, and were surrounded, and that which rendered their position more difficult and embarrassing was the fact that the Indians had made ample preparation for their reception by securing themselves behind rocks, and in ravines, so that their bodies were entirely unexposed to the fire from the Americans, and, therefore, the greater portion of the firing from the Americans, I imagine to have been mostly at random. Four of the party having been killed by the Indians at the commencement, a proposition was made to endeavor to effect an escape out of the canon in the direction in which they entered it, (this being the only possible chance of escape on horseback,) but a further development convinced them that they had the enemy to contend with even in their rear. There was, then, no other alternative left but to fight desperately for their lives. Patten, who commanded the party, implored the men to stand together and make as desperate a struggle as they possibly could; and this the poor fellows did. Ten out of the thirteen were killed on the ground, three of the number made their escape, but their sufferings and extreme hardships were almost tantamount to death in its most horrifying shape. Two of the party were out eight days before they arrived in the settlements, during the whole of which time they had not tasted one particle of food; three days of the above period they were without anything in the shape of water, save the blood of one of their horses, which they killed for the purpose of drinking his blood. One of the party who escaped has since died from the effects of the exposure, privations and suffering incurred while making his escape. The remaining two looked much more like tenants of the grave than of earth when they arrived; they are, however, apparently recovering, and, I doubt not, will recover entirely.

The "Stranger" is responsible for the following:

"Jemmy, my boy, did ye see the flight of bats the other ovening?"

"Niver the one, my honey; what kind of bats were they?"

"Brick-bats, ye spalpeen!"

WIT OF A WITNESS.—By-the-bye, speaking of lawyers: the acute reasoning of an impertinent lawyer was well repulsed in another "like" quite recently. A prosecution under the Maine Law was on trial. The State's attorney, who, though he was a "cute chap," was trying to make out his case through circumstantial evidence, by showing that the defendant had the means of crime in his house. He called an undoubted "customer" to the stand, a man who would know a rum-jug "at sight," and with him held the following colloquy:

Lawyer.—Mr. Sargent, were you ever in Benjamin Kimball's bar-room?

Witness.—Yes s-i-r-r!

Lawyer.—Did you see any liquor there?

Witness.—No s-i-r-r!

Lawyer.—Did you see any thing containing liquors there?

Witness.—Not as I knows of.

Lawyer.—Did you see any decanters or tumblers there?

Witness.—No s-i-r-r!

Lawyer.—Did you see any barrels or kegs there?

Witness.—Yes: I see some kags there!

Lawyer.—Ah, yes, (exultingly,) you did, then, see some kegs? Now, sir, tell the jury what there was in those kegs?

Witness.—I do' no; I didn't look in.

Lawyer.—Yes sir; but were there no marks upon the outside? tickets, or labels, or printing, or writing of some kind?

Witness.—Yes, well there was, I remember it now; I vow I should have forgot it if you hadn't put me in mind.

Lawyer.—Oh yes, you do remember just state, then, sir, before you forget, what there was printed or written.

Witness.—It was different on all of 'em; none of 'em had it alike.

Lawyer.—Well, sir, tell us what it said on the first one you saw.

Witness.—Well, I mostly forget now, but I b'leve it said you on the first 'un.

Lawyer.—Gin! Then sir, I guess we can find out what there was in those kegs, if you didn't look in. Now, sir, tell us what it said on the next one?

Witness.—Well, on the next one it said "Ben Kimball," but I didn't suppose Ben Kimball was inside the keg.

The baneful effects of a popular class of publications are illustrated by the facts elicited on the examination of Chapman, the fiendish murderer of Mr. and Mrs. Cozzens, in Massachusetts last week, that he had been stimulated to such deeds by reading the lives of Dick Turpin and Captain Lightfoot, whose career he desired to imitate.

FEMALE MASONIC INSTITUTE,

Dayton, Marengo County, Alabama.

Rev. E. D. Pitts, Principal.

TO PARENTS, GUARDIANS, AND THE FRIENDS OF EDUCATION GENERALLY. We would announce the opening of the TENTH Annual Session of the Institute. The healthful locality—the spacious and beautiful grounds—the commodious and convenient buildings—the full supply of Musical Instruments—the fixed purpose of the Trustees to spare no expense or efforts to promote the true interests of FEMALE EDUCATION—and the assiduous devotion of an efficient Faculty to promote the comfort and improvement of Pupils, lead us to expect with confidence a liberal support.

The Principal has taught with marked success in Alabama, Mississippi and Florida, and will consecrate all his energies—physical, intellectual, and moral—to the proper training of the head and heart of those committed to his tuteloge.

The services of Miss MARY W. HOWZE, who has been for two years past connected with the Central Masonic University, have been secured. Her intelligence, energy, piety, and felicitous manner of communicating, have justly placed her in the first rank of educators.

The Musical, French, and Ornamental Department will be conducted by competent and skillful Teachers, and all due attention given to the arts and accomplishments that so beautify and adorn the gentler sex.

The Primary Department will be confided alone to a skilful and gifted lady, for we design to attend carefully to that sadly and mischievously neglected class of Pupils.

The Scholastic year is divided into Two Sessions of nearly Five Months each—with no intervening recess. The School opens on the first day of October, and closes with Examination Exercises in the latter part of July. Pupils received at any time, and charged to the end of the Session. For fractions of Sessions each week is counted one-twelfth.

The School is not Sectarian or denominational; and the only religious tuition embraces the principles of a pure morality based upon the cardinal doctrines of the Bible.

The Principal and his wife have charge of the Stewards Department, and will tenderly care for the health, manners and morals of those who Board in the Institute. Each boarder will be made to feel as far as possible that she is the loved subject of parental solicitude, and every reasonable wish will be promptly and cheerfully gratified. Yet, Discipline will not be forgotten, and the needful restraints of family government will be thrown around them.

TUSCALOOSA METHODIST FEMALE HIGH SCHOOL.

The exercises of this institution will begin on the first MONDAY in October next, and close on the 21st THURSDAY in July, 1854. There will be a recess of a few days at Christmas.

FACULTY.

REV. THOS H RUSSELL, A. M. President.
MISS ELIZABETH J MEEK, Assistant.
MISS CLARA C LEE Preparatory Department.
MR F. S WALTER, Professor of Music.
———, Teacher of Modern Languages.

The fees for the first half the scholastic year are as follows:

Primary Department	$12 00
First, Sophomore and Middle Classes, each	20 00
Junior and Senior Classes, each	22 50
Music	25 00
Use of piano	2 50
Contingent fee	1 00
Board, including lodging, washing and fuel	60 00

The above fees are required to be paid on the first day of October.

Fees of the same amount, for the second half of the scholastic year, are required to be paid on the 28th of February, 1854.

An extra fee of $20 is charged for French.

The course of study in this institution is as extensive as that in any institution for the education of females, and the instruction is of the most critical and thorough character. Every provision has been made to ensure success. A philosophical and chemical apparatus adequate to all the purposes of instruction has been provided, together with maps, charts, globes, etc. The instructions are experienced in their work, and highly approved for capacity, fidelity and skill.

This institution has just closed the first year of its existence, with the most satisfactory results. And the public may feel assured that the Trustees will watch over its interests with the utmost solicitude and care; and spare no pains to render its system of education as perfect as possible.

The tuition fees have been somewhat reduced, and are below those of many Southern institutions of no higher grade. It is impossible to engage teachers of the highest character for talents, attainments and skill, without paying liberal salaries. But we offer as an equivalent, above all price, a faithful and skillful application of the most approved means of developing and training the mind.

Printed circulars, containing fuller information, may be had by application to Alex Glascock, Esq., Secretary of the Board.

MARION FEMALE SEMINARY.

MARION, PERRY COUNTY, ALABAMA.

FACULTY.

REV. JAMES K. ARMSTRONG, A. M., Principal, and Professor of Mental, Moral and Natural Science.
H. M. DALY, A. M., Professor of Vocal and Instrumental Music.
MISS E. L. RASKILL, English.
MISS M. J. BONDURANT, English.
MISS PHEBE FULLER, Drawing, Painting, French and Guitar.
MISS J. V. CLARK, Primary and Preparatory Department.
MRS L. J. ARMSTRONG, Governess.
MRS REBECCA CLARK, Matron and Nurse.

This institution has just closed a prosperous year, will one hundred and twenty-six pupils.

The ensuing session will commence on THURSDAY the 29th day of SEPTEMBER.

It is very desirable that pupils enter at the beginning of the session.

The main building is a new and superior brick edifice one hundred by fifty feet, three stories, and for elegance, convenience of arrangement—for number, size and comfort of school and private rooms—is not surpassed by any similar one in the country.

The Principal resides in the building, and superintends the Boarding Department. He has in his employ a gentleman and his lady, who discharge with faithfulness and satisfaction the duties of this position. Pupils boarding in the Seminary are under the immediate control of the Principal at all times—are members of his family.

The Matron and Nurse, a lady of great amiability and kindness of heart, united with long experience and untiring faithfulness, secures to pupils, at all times, the kindness and attentions of home.

The Principal and his lady, with the aid of the Female Teachers, all of whom reside in the Seminary, diligently guard and form the morals, manners and habits of the young ladies.

There is but one session, of nine and a half months. Pupils can enter at any time during the session, charges date from the beginning of the month in which they enter to the close of the session.

One hundred and forty-five dollars will pay the board and tuition of a young lady, for the entire session, in the collegiate department; one hundred and seventy-four dollars will embrace the languages; two hundred and thirty-five dollars will embrace board, tuition in the collegiate department, on the piano, and in the languages.

The above estimate does not include books, stationery sheet music, ornamental materials and lights; all of which articles are furnished by the Principal on moderate terms.

The institution is furnished with a new and complete Cheubleot Philosophical and Astronomical apparatus. It also has a large collection of globes, terrestial and celestial; and celestial maps, atlases, charts plates and diagrams, for simplifying the various branches of Natural Science.

The Library consists of more than one thousand volumes, embracing a choice collection in every department of literature, Art, Science, History, &c., &c.

The Cabinet consists of several hundred specimens.

The institution is furnished with a large and superior assortment of musical instruments.

The Church and Sabbath School facilities are unsurpassed by any school in the country. Of the number that have entered its walls during the past session, more than seventy were or have become professors of religion.

Pupils are not allowed to attend parties, balls, dancing classes, &c.

Visitors are not received, except with suitable introduction to the Principal from patrons.

The usual regulations of the best boarding schools are obtained respecting visiting, correspondence, pamphlets periodicals, novels, and dental operations.

They retire and rise at regular hours through the year. Great attention is paid to exercise in the open air, in within doors, when the weather is inclement.

Every Saturday morning is devoted to plain sewing and the repairing of clothing, under the direction of an officer.

No accounts will be opened in Marion, but with the expressed permission of patrons. When articles are to be purchased, it must be done with approbation and under the eye of the lady of the Principal.

The wants of pupils should be supplied from home, as far as practicable. All jewelry is prohibited. All pocket money, or other sums for the use of pupils, should be deposited with the Principal. They are allowed to spend fifty cents of their pocket money per month.

Social entertainments, composed of invited married gentlemen and ladies, the teachers and more advanced boarding pupils, are held monthly, which afford the young ladies a healthful and pleasant recreation, opportunity for musical exercise before a select audience, acquaint them with the usages of refined society, and give them ease and grace in manners.

For catalogues or further information, apply to the Principal.

THE OLD CHURCH BELLS.

I hear once more those mournful bells
Break on the Sabbath sky;
And to my lips comes back again
The long unuttered prayer.
My heart reverberates with them
To old forgotten chimes;
For with those mournful bells are linked
The thoughts of other times

The steeple where, a boy, I climbed,
The tombs, the bending yew,
The pulpit and the solemn aisle,
The unforgotten pew;
The moss upon the sloping roof,
The porch, the lowly door,
Are linked with forms whose memory
They only can restore.

Like voices of the past they speak
To unaccustomed ears,
And bitter thoughts come swelling up
With heart-subduing tears;
And though their tones seem sad to me,
My bosom-watcher tells
How full of hopes have been the chimes
Of those old mournful bells.

OUR CHINESE MISSIONARIES.

While Dr. Jenkins is making favor and money at home for the Mission of the M. E. Church, South, in China, Dr. Taylor is busy and bold there, watching events, and ready to take advantage of them. Recent events have shown him superior in diplomacy to Mr. Marshall, our national representative there, who made friends with the worse and weaker side, of the Chinese parties.

We learn that at the Missionary meeting in Louisville, on the 7th ultimo, the Board appropriated $30,000 to this important mission for the next year. This sum is to cover the cost of a house of worship, two schools, a press, and the expense of sending out two or three new Missionaries.

The Imperial forces, aided by a considerable body of foreigners, made a determined attack on the insurgents or revolutionary troops, entrenched at Chin-Kiang-foo, and were met with such spirit that they were compelled to retire. This was regarded as a bad prognostic for the present Imperial dynasty. We feel a deep interest in any development which shows the real character of the revolutionary party.

A French paper contains a long account from the Apostolic Administrator, at Nanking, which states that on the 25th March, while the Roman Catholics in that city were adoring the Cross, according to their custom, on Good Friday, the insurgents entered suddenly and broke the crucifix, overthrew the altar, and then wished to have their prayer recited—at the same time presenting the Roman Catholics with books, in which it was written. Their demands being refused, they seized, bound, and beat numbers of them; and that out of six hundred Roman Catholics at Nanking, Yang-Tcheu, and Tseu-Kiang, fifty have been slain or burned to death. It is suggested by one of the Paris newspapers, that the insurgents may have mistaken the worshippers in a chapel adorned with crucifixes and other images for idolators; and who could be surprised at so natural a mistake? They seem to hate Popish idolatry, with a consistency. The following extract, from the journal of the Rev. Charles Taylor, (Missionary of the M. E. Church, South) as published in the North China Herald, will interest our readers:

"He left Shanghai on the 2d of June, the day the Lady Mary Wood left for Hong Kong, in a small native boat, and having succeeded in passing the Imperial fleet blockading Chin-kiang-foo, anchored on Saturday night, June 4, near the south bank of the Yang-tse, opposite Silver Island, about two miles below the city, his boatmen absolutely refusing to go any further. Therefore, at daybreak next morning, he landed alone, taking his carpet bag filled with Christian books, walked along the path on the river bank, to the high, precipitous bluff rising abruptly from the river, and running inland in a southern direction for about a quarter of a mile to the northeast gate of the city. When he came near enough to discern persons on the stockades, which run along the ridge of this hill to the gate, he made a signal to them, which was observed, and he was beckoned to approach.

"Our friend found this hill, and indeed the whole city, fortified with great strength, and no little military skill, by means of ditches, palisades, embankments, abattis, coups de loup (i. e. pit-falls, concealed by coverings of straw,) chevaux de frize, etc. When he had succeeded, after much difficulty, in passing these various obstructions, one of the insurgents came down the hill, took his carpet-bag, and led the way up to the garrison. On coming within the stockade, he found himself surrounded with great numbers of fierce looking 'long-haired men,' who addressed him as brother. He was asked many questions, but being desirous to get an interview with Lo, commandant of the forces, he resolutely refused to answer any till conducted into the presence of that officer. After many ineffectual attempts to induce him to communicate with officers of inferior rank, he was furnished with an escort of several soldiers, who conducted him to the headquarters of the commandant within the city walls. When this personage made his appearance, so destitute was he of the pompous display so common to Chinese officials, that our friend began to think another attempt was being made to thwart him in his design of obtaining access to their chief, and at first refused to reply to his interrogatories; nor was it until his attendants had invested him with a yellow and red silk uniform, that the doubts of his visitor were removed, who then informed him fully of himself, whence he came, and the object of his visit, at the same time opening his carpet-bag, presented him with the books, which gave evident satisfaction, and elicited the remark, which was oft repeated, that the doctrines were the same as their own: they, indeed, claiming a common brotherhood with foreigners. Lo hospitably entertained our friend at his own quarters during his visit, and on leaving provided him with a horse and an escort of several hundred soldiers, with their officers, to accompany him beyond the city walls, and the stockades on the river bank.

"We understand our friend was present at their worship, which he describes as consisting of chanting hymns and doxologies in a very solemn manner, while those engaged in it remained seated. After which all kneeled, apparently with much reverence, closing their eyes, while one of their number uttered an inaudible prayer. The chanting was accompanied with the usual dissonant instruments employed by the Chinese at their festivals.

"These acts of worship were repeated twice or thrice a day, and included in them the grace before meat; and immediately afterwards they proceeded to the tables without further ceremony. Mr. Taylor saw no females, and, on inquiry, was informed they were all at Nanking. He saw tables placed with bowls of various kinds of food, as offerings to the Supreme Being, among which were three bowls of tea, one for each person of the Trinity.

"In reply to frequent inquiries as to when and in what direction they would next move, Mr. Taylor was informed they could not themselves tell, but must wait for information from their Heavenly Father. He heard Thae-ping-wang frequently mentioned; but no allusion made to Theen-tih.

"Mr. Taylor was struck with the calm and earnest enthusiasm that pervaded the entire body, and the perfect confidence evinced in the justice of their cause, and in its final success. When he asked the chiefs when they proposed to come towards Shanghai, they replied that whenever they received an intimation from the Heavenly Father as they never moved in any quarter without such directions."

In their communications with foreigners, the insurgents continue to show a spirit of frankness that seems almost Anglo-Saxon. Mr. Taylor received a circular or proclamation, from one of the revolutionary chiefs, which he was requested to communicate to foreigners generally. It scarcely reads like a Chinese edict; it is as follows:

"Lo, the Fifth Avenger of the Forces, attached to the palace of the celestial dynasty of Tai-ping, who have received the command of Heaven to rule the empire, communicates the following information to all his English brethren: On the first day of the fifth moon (June the 5th) a brother belonging to your honorable nation, named Charles Taylor, brought hither a number of books, which had been received in order. Seeing that the above named individual is a fellow-worshipper of God, (Shang-te) he is, therefore, acknowledged as a brother; the books, likewise, which he has brought, agree substantially with our own, so that it appears we follow one and the same road. Formerly, however, when a ship belonging to your honorable nation came hither (the Hermes) she was followed by a fleet of impish vessels belonging to the false Tartars; now, also, when a boat from your honorable nation comes among us, the impish vessels of the Tartar again follow in your wake. Considering that your honorable nation is celebrated for its truth and tidelity, we, your younger brothers, do not harbor any suspicions.

"At present, both heaven and men favor our design, and this is just the time for setting up the Chinese and abolishing the Tartar rule. We suppose that you, gentlemen, are well acquainted with the signs of the times, so that we need not enlarge on that subject; but while we, on our parts, do not prohibit commercial intercourse, we merely observe, that since the two parties are now engaged in warfare, the going to and fro is accompanied with inconvenience: and, judging from the present aspect of affairs, we should deem it better to wait a few months, until we have thoroughly destroyed the Tartars, when, perhaps, the subjects of your honorable nation could go and come without being involved in the tricks of these false Tartars. Would it not, in your estimation, be preferable? We take advantage of the opportunity to send you this communication for your intelligent inspection, and hope that every Blessing may attend you. We also send a number of our own books, which please to circulate among you."

REFORM IN NEW GRANADA.

This Republic is situated in the northwest part of South America, and includes the Isthmus of Darien or Panama, with the territory which extends westward to Central America. It is well known that for some time past a controversy has been going on between the priests and people in relation to the civil government of the country, the former claiming supreme dominion. Church and State were united; but we are pleased record that this unnatural connection has been severed, and a new order of things inaugurated. A New Granadian correspondent of the Evening Post, dated the 2d ult., says that on that day the new Constitution was promulgated throughout the Republic, and that the event was celebrated with enthusiasm by the people. He gives a synopsis of the new decree from a manuscript copy:

"1. On and after this day will close all interference of the national or municipal authorities, in regard to the presenting of persons for filling ecclesiastical benefices, and in regard to all regulations relating to the practice of the Catholic worship, or any other worship which may be followed by the people of New Granada, in conformity with the liberty which is guarantied them by section 1 of article 5 of the Constitution.

"2. Forced contributions for the support of religious worship, or the maintenance of religious societies or ministers, cannot be levied. Liabilities which have been or may be hereafter contracted by the believers of any congregation whatever for the support of its worship or ministers, will be held as matters of individual liability, and the public authorities will treat them as such.

"3. Ministers or functionaries of any religious denomination or form of worship, no matter what may be their rank or condition, both in matters of civil and criminal jurisdiction, are amenable to the same temporal authorities, and in the same manner as Granadians belonging to the order of laymen.

"4. Churches and church property, and the revenues attached to the same, will hereafter be the property of the inhabitants of the respective districts, with the sole exception of those who have special patrons, in justice of their foundation.

"5. No religious corporation has an official character in New Granada.

"6. No act of coercion on the part of ministers or church functionaries of any kind, which will violate liberties guarantied New Granadians by the 6th article of the Constitution of the Republic, will be allowed.

"7. The Executive power will receive no agent from the Pontifical Government, unless of a purely diplomatic character; and in that case with the sole object of treating on international affairs.

"8. This article is an exception to the enactment of this law. The Fathers of the Societies of Jesus are still to be prohibited from entering the Republic.

"9. Certain penalties for offences committed against the free exercise of Catholic worship and against Catholic ministers, are made equally binding against those committed against any other denomination.

"10. From this day no obligatory contribution for the support of ministers or religion, can be decreed. The provinces are also exempt from the expense of the support of religion in the diocese to which they belong.

"11. Catholic churches and Catholic cathedrals belong to the Catholic inhabitants.

"12. The State is absolved from all connection with any Church, and the Church is no more to interfere with any matters of State. Ecclesiastics of every description, monks, etc., hold the same relation to the State that laymen do.

"13. The ecclesiastical prelates who have been banished from New Granada are at liberty to return whenever they may deem proper, and the suits against them are terminated.

"Given in Bogota, June 15, 1853."

Thus is the example of the United States extending over the Continent. May we not hope that the Eastern Hemisphere also will shortly embrace the political blessings we here enjoy?

BIOGRAPHICAL

REV. A. B. POWELL.

It was said by the father of Methodism, in reference to the death of a distinguished divine, "God takes away his workmen, but carries on his work," and surely the Methodist Church of Mobile needs some such encouragement, for all three of her ministers have fallen.

The first to go hence was A. B. Powell, of the St. Francis street Church. He was a native of Brunswick county, Virginia, and a graduate of the Military Institute at Lexington, in that State.

In January, 1847, when about twenty years of age, he joined the Alabama Conference, and devoted himself without reserve to the work of the ministry.

As a preacher, and as a Christian, Brother Powell deservedly stood high; and although so young, was at the time of his death in charge of one of the most important stations in the Conference, and had drawn around him a large circle of devoted friends.

His views of duty did not allow him to retire beyond the reach of the epidemic, and when urged to do so, his reply was, "I shall do my duty, and if I fall, it shall be at my post."

From the time the work of death began, he was there engaged day and night in visiting the sick and burying the dead, until Monday, August 30, when he went to bring his family from Portersville, a place on the sea shore, to a healthy location nearer the city, so as to have them within reach if he were attacked.

The morning after he reached Portersville he exhibited all the usual symptoms of yellow fever, and although faithfully attended by an excellent physician, and experienced nurses, the disease went on unchecked, until Saturday morning, at 4 o'clock, September 3, when he breathed his last.

One of Brother Powell's favorite themes was the name of Jesus, and as he often sang

Happy if with my latest breath
I may but gasp his name;
Preach him to all, and cry in death
Behold, behold the Lamb!

Even so were his last moments employed, when, at his request, his friends had assembled round his bed, and extending his arm, he said, "I point you for the last time to the Lamb of God, who was slain for you all;" then taking the hand of each in turn, he exhorted them all to look to the Cross, and prepare for death.

To a brother he said, "Tell my brethren and the people of my charge, I have gone straight to Heaven." He said with him, all was well, and returning thanks for the precious faith that conquers even in death, calmly requested every one to retire that he might take leave of his wife in private.

So composed and peaceful were his last hours, so comforting and all sustaining, was the faith of the Gospel to his departing spirit, that it was not a matter of surprise to see some very irreligious persons present melted to tears, and hear them wishing that they might die, if they could rejoice in death as he did.

Thus has passed away one of God's faithful workmen, who was ever ready at the call of duty, and always had his heart in the work.

He now rests from his toil, and by his side lie the remains of his brethren, Hughes and Starr, whom he preceded to the grave but a few days, and with whom he labored in the spirit of love to advance the Redeemer's kingdom.

I WISH I WAS A CHRISTIAN.

BY REV. DR. HUMPHREY.

This wish has been expressed a thousand times, and with the greatest apparent sincerity, by persons living without hope and without God in the world. Sometimes it falls from the lips of those who have no present concern about salvation, but oftener from the lips of persons under awakening.

"Do you think you are a Christian?" "I am sorry to say that I do not; but I wish I was; I want to be, and I know I must be, or I cannot be saved." "Well, dear reader, if you wish to be, what hinders? The Saviour invites and stands with open arms ready to receive you. "The Spirit and the bride say come, and whosoever will, let him come, and take of the waters of life freely."

How can you say that you wish you was a Christian? What sort of wish is that which prompts to no striving "to enter in at the strait gate?" You deceive yourself. You wish, no doubt, to be saved, when you give the subject a moment's thought, but you do not wish to be a Christian. That is, you have no wish or desire for spiritual enjoyments. You see no form or comeliness in the Saviour, why you should desire him; but the language of your carnal heart is, "Depart from me, I desire not the knowledge of thy ways." How then can you say, I wish I was a Christian? What is such a wish good for?

But perhaps you are not as stupid as you once was. Perhaps you are under real concern for your soul. Perhaps the spirit of God is now striving with you, and you think that if you ever sincerely wished for any thing in the world, it is, that you were a Christian. Well, then, if you are sincere, why do you not give your heart to God at once? Then you would be a Christian, "an heir of God, and a joint heir with Christ, to an eternal inheritance."

An illustration or two, I hope, will convince you how the matter stands with you. Here is a poor man, who says he wishes he was rich, and the way is clearly pointed out to him, step by step, how he may acquire an independent fortune. Instead of girding up his loins to the work, after a few faint endeavors, he says it can never be, and so he sits down and takes it out in wishing he was rich. Or he takes some of the steps prescribed, and exhausts himself with other endeavors, which promise nothing but disappointment, and finally gives over, bemoaning himself, that the attainment of the wished-for possession is impossible. Or, to vary the illustration a little, a friend says to him, on such and such conditions, I will give you a valuable farm "It is just what I want," is the reply; "I have been wishing for such a farm for a long time." But he does not comply with the conditions. Are they beyond his power, are they unreasonable? O no, but he feels no disposition to comply with them. And yet he says, O how I wish I could get that farm. How preposterous! What are all such wishes good for? Again, some man has a chronic and dangerous disease, and he says, "O, I wish I could obtain a radical cure." A skillful physician prescribes certain remedies, and assures him that if he will follow the prescription, there is every reasonable prospect of his recovery. He throws away the medicine, and resorts to other remedies, which no well-bred practitioner would ever recommend. He grows worse from day to day, all the while complaining that nothing will help him, and repeating the desponding exclamation, O, how I wish I was well! Why not then use the remedies? "O, they are so bitter that I cannot take them."

So with the sinner. He wishes to become a Christian. The way to become one is clearly pointed out in the word of God. He is sure to find the pearl of great price, if he will only follow the directions there given. An infallible remedy is prescribed for the plague of sin which is rankling in his heart; but instead of obtaining the pearl, he neglects the means, and remains "poor and wretched, blind and naked." Instead of being cured, he waxes worse and worse. Instead of repenting and accepting of the free invitations of the gospel, he "goes about to establish his own righteousness," or tries to "climb up some other way," all the while clinging to the delusion that he wishes he was a Christian.

HAPPY TERMINATION.—The Register, of 24th ult., speaking of the finale of Bishop Doane's case, on the 15th ult., opens with these words:

"The most important event, in a Church point of view, which has recently occurred, is the happy termination of the recent Ecclesiastical proceedings in New Jersey. We say the happy termination, because it seems to us that no better conclusion of the affair could have been hoped for, although one might be conceived. Among the circumstances which give it value and importance, is the unanimity of the members of the court. It might have been, in some respects, desirable that this unanimity should have included the presenting Bishops; but such a consummation could hardly have been expected."

WHAT IS UNITARANISM?

Messrs. Editors. Some years ago I heard Thomas Belsham, D. D., preach a sermon in London to young people, in which he strongly and eloquently urged upon men the claims of Christianity. At the close of his sermon he observed: "But do not mistake me. I do not mean to say you will not be saved if you reject Christianity. I believe the man who honestly rejects it is equally safe with the man who honestly receives it. I only regret that you lose such a motive to virtue." I mentioned this to another Unitarian minister, William Johnson Fox, the same, I presume, mentioned by a correspondent in your paper, who said it was perfectly correct, only Brother Belsham had too much candor. Dr. Belsham, in answering John Pye Smith's "Person of Christ," observed, that though the actions of Christ were unimpeachable, it did not follow but that he was peccable being.

WHAT IS TRINITARIANISM? In contrast with this I would give you a bit of old divinity, which is too good to be lost:

"Said Justice, 'Man, I'd fain know what you weigh:
Its weight I spare you, if too light, I stay.'
Man leaped the scale: it mounted. 'On my word,'
Said Justice, 'less than nothing, where's my sword?'
Virtue was there—her added weight would try:
The scale unsunk, still kicked the beam on high.
Mercy (the while I drew that ever flew,
From Calvary fetched a sprig of crimson hue,
Aloft it sent the scale on t'other side
Man smiled: and Justice own'd, 'I am satisfied.'"

STANDING AT CHURCH DOORS

It is a common practice, when a congregation is dismissed, to see a line of young gentlemen, ranged along the curb-stone, staring impudently at every female that comes out, and often indulging in impertinent remarks that cannot but be heard by those who are the subject of them. Very rarely there may be found, among the mob of dandies, dunces, a husband, father or brother, whom unavoidable circumstances has prevented attending church, and who is waiting to accompany a wife, daughter or sister home.

Such, of course, we do not censure. But, as scarcely one in ten belongs to this class; as they form, in fact, the exception, not the rule, we shall speak of those who indulge in this custom, without reference to such. It is the addle-headed lads, with high shirt collars and canes, averaging about seventeen or eighteen years of age, who form the great mass of these impertinent spectators, that we would hold up to public reproof. Where are the fathers of these young dandies? Where is the wholesome rod which Solomon recommended? Where is the police?

Only a refined female knows how annoying it is to run the gauntlet of these immature boys. Nor do they spare any body. The matron is just as much at their mercy as the maiden; the plain face as subject to remark as the beautiful one; the poorly-dressed as open to impertinence as the more richly attired. One female meets a sneer as she passes, because she does not happen to please the fancy of some young fool, while cheeks of another are made to tingle by his loud and insolent admiration. Even where the lady escapes without verbal insult, she is stared out of countenance, and has no resource except to drop her veil, hurry on, and escape into a more respectful atmosphere as fast as possible.

LAVATER—BAD TEMPER.

Lavater, the famous physiognomist, though an enthusiast, was a kind man, and his wife one of the most amiable of women. One day his servant asked him, after dinner, if he should sweep his room. Being in rather an irritable mood, he assented pettishly, telling her not to touch his books or papers. When the servant had been gone some time, he said to his wife:

"I am afraid she will cause some confusion up stairs."

In a few moments his wife, with the best intention, stole out of the room, and told the servant to be careful. Lavater met his wife at the bottom of the stairs, on her return, and exclaimed, as though secretly vexed about something:

"Is not my room swept yet?"

Without waiting an instant, he ran up stairs, and as he entered the room the girl overturned an inkstand which was standing on the shelf. She was much terrified. Lavater called out hastily:

"What a stupid beast you are! Have I not positively told you to be careful?"

What followed we will let Lavater tell himself.

"My wife slowly and timidly followed me up stairs. Instead of being ashamed, my anger broke out anew. I took no notice of her; running to the table lamenting and moaning as if the most important writings had been spoiled, though in reality the ink had touched nothing but a blank sheet and some blotting-paper. The servant watched an opportunity to steal away. My wife approached me with timid gentleness. 'My dear husband,' said she. I stared at her with vexation in my looks. She embraced me. I wanted to get out of the way. Her face rested for a few moments on my cheek. At last, with unspeakable tenderness, she said, 'You will hurt your health, my dear. I now began to be ashamed. I was silent, and at last began to weep. 'What a miserable slave to my temper I am! I dare not lift up my eyes. I cannot rid myself of that sinful passion.' My wife replied, 'Consider, my dear, how many days and weeks pass away, without your being overcome by anger.' I knelt down beside her, and thanked God sincerely for that hour, and for my wife."

It is said that not less than 4000 persons visited the Virginia White Sulphur Springs the past summer.

JOINING IN PRAYER.

"How do you join in prayer?" inquired a friend of ours, one day. "Do you join in each request as it proceeds from the speaker's lips, or when the petition is finished, do you ask God to hear the prayer as a whole?" This question, though proposed to us many years ago, has never ceased to excite our surprise. It looks like a very strange inquiry for a child of God. And yet our querist was by no means lacking in intelligence, nor was there any striking want of piety. We have no idea that our friend prayed in this manner. It was doubtless an honest familiar question, put more to scour an answer, than to inform the judgment.

Do not some Christians, however, appear to pray in this manner? "Let us unite in prayer." But how, unless each one makes the language and spirit of the prayer his own? He who leads, becomes the interpreter of our common wants. He implores forgiveness for our common sins. He expresses our common gratitude and love. But how inconsistent for us to take this position, unless we are all adopting his language and sentiments as they fall from his lips. We should be shocked to know that the speaker himself was only "making a prayer," that he was engaged in a purely intellectual effort, that he had no devotional feeling corresponding to his words, and in fact looked for none until the exercise was over. This would be shameless impiety. It is a wise truism to say that if we 'unite in prayer," we must each pray at the same instant.

The attention must be taken up by something. In what, then, shall our minds be engaged, if not in devotion? Our eyes should not be the servants of a guilty curiosity. We must not harbor thoughts foreign to so holy a service. When another leads in prayer, we should not ordinarily engage in private ejaculations. The whole assembly should worship God. Unless grossly inattentive, vocal prayer must at least be heard. But how wretched must be the state of our hearts, if we can hear prayer without praying! That the unconverted do it habitually, is an awful proof of their hardness of heart; but when one who has been taught to pray by the Spirit can hear prayer as though he heard it not, it should send him to his knees with groanings which cannot be uttered. It seems difficult to realize how a child of grace can listen, now to a broken-hearted confession, now to an earnest petition, and to a deep breathing out of filial love, without feeling strongly impelled to join in the exercise. Much more, how can he actually give attention to the prayer, and yet deliberately withhold all desire until just as the last sound is dying upon the officer's lips!

The very conception of praying in such a manner is intrinsically absurd, and practically, the attempt would be found impossible. Suppose a spiritually minded Christian, endeavoring to carry out this idea. What a singular process it would be? He would pass in review his sins, but make no confessions, he would implore all needed blessings, but exercise no corresponding desires; he would employ words as the outward expression of emotion, but every affection which might incline towards God, would lie complacently dormant in his soul! But the prayer closes, and with the final amen, the listeners first begins to pray. Into this one closing word he throws all the holy emotions which should have been felt in the preceding act of ostensible communion with God! But I beg pardon of the reader. All this is simply absurd. Think you Aaron and Hur thus joined in the prayer of Moses, when, holding up his heavy hands, his earnest appeal to the God of battles turned back the warriors of Amalek? Did the disciples thus join in the prayers of their divine Master? Did you my dear reader thus join in prayer when Christians first commended your soul, bound down under the weight of guilt, to God? When another leads our devotions, let us not mock God with empty service, but let us all "unite in prayer."

NEW REPUBLIC IN AFRICA.

The African Repository, the official organ of the American Colonization Society, in its number of this month, gives an account of the establishment of a new Republic, or at least a new independent State, on the west coast of Africa.

Our readers are all probably aware that the Colony of "Maryland in Liberia," located at Cape Palmas, has, ever since its commencement, in the early part of 1834, maintained a distinctive character, and been under a different Government from the Republic of Liberia; it having always remained under the auspices of the American State Colonization Society, which Society has been greatly aided in its objects of benevolence to the free people of color by the liberal patronage of the State. The government of the Colony is similar to that which existed in the old Colony previous to the establishment of the Republic—the Governor receiving his appointment from the Society, and the general affairs of the Colony being under the direction of the Society. Since the establishment of the Republic, however, and especially within the last two years, the citizens of the Maryland Colony have been engaged more or less ardently in discussing the propriety of a change in their political relations, either by annexation to the Republic, or by declaring in favor of a separate and independent State—peaceably withdrawing from the Society, and establishing a sovereign and independent government—thus imitating the example of the Republic with reference to its former relations to the American Colonization Society.

After a full discussion of the subject, and a patient consideration of all the questions involved in a change of government, it was decided by a unanimous vote of the citizens of the Colony, on the 30th of January last, that a change should be effected in favor of the establishment of an independent State organization; and measures were to be taken to carry out the object, by the election of delegates to a convention to form a new constitution, etc., and the appointment of two commissioners to visit the United States, and arrange their future relation with the Maryland State Colonization Society.

WHO'LL BE THE NEXT TO DIE?

BY DR. JOHN G. DUNN.

Sleep shut the world's great eye;
Pale sorrow fouled a balm;
The night-hawk ceased his shrilly cry,
And life's broad sea was calm.

An undertaker hung
O'er a coffin all alone,
And wearily he sung,
As the dreary work went on.
He varnished every side,
Then drove the screws in bright,
As he hummed away those gloomy hours
While fancy pencilled elfin bowers
Pavilioned in the night.

All weary was his eye;
The work was nearly done;
And the crazy wind went wailing by,
And ev'ry cranny moaned;
When sadly to his ear,
There came a spirit sigh,
"One coffin, only, hast thou here—
Who'll be the next to die?"

His heart was clutched with fright;
He glared around the room;
The pale and waning light
Scarce battled with the gloom.
No spectre met his eye;
No fiend was penciled there,
But the crazy wind still sorrowed by
And a moan was in the air.

"I'm sure it was not me,
Denoted in that sigh;
Thank God, it did not breathe my name,
As it went moaning by!"
But still again the spirit came;
Again the quaint reply—
"One coffin, only, hast thou here—
Who'll be the next to die?"

He conned his sick friends o'er;
He argued every all;
Then thot of self once more,
And lip and cheek were pale.
"Ah! sure it was not me,"
Came trembling in a sigh,
And he conned away right wond'ringly,
Who'll be the next to die?

There's the old man up the street,
Who begs the live-long day,
Death laggers at his feet,
And beckons him away.
The maiden down the lane,
Will soon be gone I ween;
Life's little lamp doth wane,
Her eye hath lost its sheen;

And there's my neighbor's child,
Slow languishing away,
'Twill be an angel soon, I know,
High at the fount of day.
I'm sure it was not me
Denoted in that sigh,
For these, alas, I ween,
Will be the next to die!"

"Frail fool," the Spirit cried,
Tho' thou art stout and hale,
This night, indeed, shalt thou abide
Low in the realms of wail!"
That night came grim disease
Through every vein and tissue dark;
Black midnight saw no ease;
Pale morning saw him stark!

Let ev'ry earthly elf
Attend that spirit's cry,
Nor whisper to himself,
"I'll be the last to die."

NEBRASKA TERRITORY.—The attention of the country is at this moment strongly directed to the new Territory of Nebraska, heretofore set apart for the exclusive occupation of the remnants of the Indian tribes, who once held undisputed sway over the entire Valley of the Mississippi. The restless pioneers of the West are turning their eyes thitherward with greedy intent, and are already crowding the poor Red Men from the seats reserved for them by the Government, and hastening still more rapidly the day of their doom and extinction. Although the name Nebraska until lately was scarcely ever heard in conversation, or seen in print, it will only be a few years before it is settled, in spite of the Indians who occupy it, and be received as another star upon our National banner. It is already asking to be organized as a Territory.

Where and what Nebraska is, but few of us know, or can give any definite description. In the latest maps Nebraska, or the North Western Territory, as it is variously called, covers the whole unorganized Territory of the United States, bounded on the South by the Indian Territory, Texas and New Mexico; on the West by the Rocky Mountains, which separate it from Utah and Oregon; on the North by the British possessions; and on the East by the meanderings of the Missouri river, which divides it from Minnesota, Iowa and Missouri. It is estimated to contain an area of 587,000 square miles, the greater part of which is entirely uninhabited, except by roving tribes of Indians. It is the South-Eastern section of this Territory, which is now being settled by pioneer emigrants from Iowa and Missouri. The boundaries of the Territory are as yet, however, undefined; Col. Benton's recently published map differing widely from the views of Col. Manypenny, the Indian Commissioner, upon the subject.

The policy to pursue in reference to the Indian tribes who inhabit this tract of country is, at the present time, causing the Administration no little uneasiness. As it has been set apart exclusively for the occupancy of the Indian race, the Government, it seems, cannot with any propriety grant its protection to the whites, who are settling here in great numbers. And even if the Indians surrender their lands, there is no place for them to go. To pay them money would be impolitic, and we have no land left to exchange with them. It is proposed to remove them to the extreme North-Western part of the Nebraska Territory; but even there they could be safe from the aggressions of the whites for only a few years, while it would be impossible to preserve peace between the several tribes, crowded together, as they would be, into such a narrow extent of country. Every view of the question is embarrassing, and growing more so every year; and it is difficult to know what course to pursue in regard to it. [Alton Telegraph.

A POINTED SERMON.—Many a discourse of an hour's length is not half as impressive as the following, from an eccentric English divine:

"Be sober, grave, temperate."—Titus, ii, 2.

I. There are three companions with whom you should always keep on good terms:
1. Your wife.
2. Your stomach.
3. Your conscience.

II. If you wish to enjoy peace, long life and happiness, preserve them by temperance. Intemperance produces:
1. Domestic misery.
2. Premature death.
3. Infidelity.

To make these points clear, I refer you
1. To the Newgate Calendar.
2. To the hospitals, lunatic asylums, and work-houses.
3. To the past experience of what you have seen, read, and suffered in mind, body and estate.

There are nearly 200,000 Odd Fellows in the United States.

AGENTS AND SUBSCRIBERS.

Our brethren and friends will have much to do, and we hope will do much for the "Advocate" in the time that will elapse before Conference. Its subscription price is too low to be afforded on other terms than cash—cash in advance. Remember that. This is not a matter of preference, but necessity, if you would have a religious, miscellaneous and commercial family paper at ONE DOLLAR AND A HALF A YEAR. Those who subscribed a year ago, when the price was put down, will in a few days be owing for the year in advance.

Fortunately, we have but few old accounts, but those few must not get any older. To these the paper has been continued, for various reasons, till some now owe even $4, but a larger number $1 50 for the past time—and the advance subscription for another year is falling due. They can pay it to their pastor as agent, or remit it by mail to us. Do not forget to renew for the year to come.

SEND ON YOUR ORDERS.

Such is the invitation of Messrs. McGinnis & Carver, of the Theological School and Miscellaneous Book Store, 36 Camp street, to their friends and patrons in the country. People have for three months been shy of all packages from the city—even a bundle of books. But these gentlemen agree to send such articles to their customers as are called for, and such only. If yellow fever is not one of them, it will not be sent. And if it is, they say, (and we are quite sure they are right,) they could not fill the order. Its season is past.

DEATH OF AN OLD MINISTER.

The Rev. Wm. Wier, of the Alabama Conference, died on the 19th September, near Columbus, Miss. He was one of the original members of the Conference, at its first session in Tuscaloosa, 1832. Aged 61 years. The Columbus Standard pays this brief but well deserved tribute: "The virtues of this inestimable Minister have left their impress upon the hearts of all who knew him. He lived an honest man, above reproach—a christian, abounding in charity and good works—a Minister, devoted, intelligent and successful—he died in full triumph of the faith he had preached, an example for all who may come after him."

NEW MISSIONS.—Two new missions were recognised by our Missionary Board at its late session—one in New Mexico and the other to a tribe of Indians in North Carolina. We hope it will not be long before the M. E. Church, South, breaks ground in South or Central America. What an opening in New Granada now? After long contest with priestcraft the victory is gained. See Reform in New Granada, in another column, especially the 9th article.

THE MASONIC INSTITUTE.—This institution, under the able and energetic superintendency of Rev. E. D. Pitts—no novice in this way—enjoys the most favorable auspices. We invite attention to the advertisement.

REV. ALEXANDER SPEER has been elected to the Presidency of Oak Bowery Female College, in place of Rev. W. F. Samford. See advertisement.

THE WEATHER, ETC.—During the past few days we have had clear, cool and delightful weather, and a general appearance of waking up that is quite refreshing. Our streets are crowded with people, and every thing wears the aspect of an active business season. The yellow fever has entirely disappeared, having run its three months' course, and our city now is one of the most healthful on the continent. People are flocking here by thousands. Mechanics, laborers, professionals, thieves, gamblers, vagabonds and cut-throats, all animated with the prospect of making every body dead, and no competition to interfere with them in making an honest living, are beginning to crowd upon us, and things look like the revival of the good old times. We think the absentees may as well come home.

LITERARY NOTICES.

BLACKWOOD for September has been received from the American publisher, L. Scott & Co. This is prompt.

HARPER'S MONTHLY for September. We have been furnished with usual promptness by McGinnis & Carver.

PUTNAM'S MONTHLY for September. McGinnis & Carver, 36 Camp street. The papers tell us that the publishers of Putnam have declined a suit at law against the Harpers for publishing one of their tales without credit.

NATIONAL MAGAZINE.—The October number is on our table. The Editor announces a "good corps of paid contributors," and verily the contents speak as much.

STORY OF MONT BLANC.—If one wants to know the dangers and difficulties of "vanquishing" Mont Blanc, and the fatal and successful efforts to see the sun rise from its tops without spending a few thousands for a summer trip there, he can get an idea from a little book on our table just from the press of Putnam & Co., by A. Smith. For sale at 36 Camp street.

"A CONVENIENT SEASON."

Christianity is with many a question of fact. Not having applied themselves to read the evidences of its truth, but having read many things against it, they doubt. With Felix it was a question of time. And many others linger not in the way, but at the porch; they have heard the word, and have received the testimony of the experience of many witnesses, and feel a conviction of its truth. It is with them now only a question of time—alas! it has been for a long season!

The way has not seemed to them quite open yet. They find in life "a time for every thing"—their reasons bring their appropriate fancies; and, as Solomon, in an hour of experimental infidelity, they have fit moments for labor, for rest, for all things. Life urges to enterprise, to education, to marriage, to employment, but, in all the rolling hours, supplies no time for repentance or faith. And as yet in the sanctuary, no preaching, no revival has offered the opportunity sought—the quiet service was not the time, nor the more earnest one.

Indeed it may be doubted whether any day in life ever did come, which did not bring with it enough employment or pleasure to leave no room for Christ. And if religion is to take its chance with other matters, there can be no doubt as to the result: or if it is to be a question of inclination and convenience rather than of binding authority. In matters of godliness the soul dare not wait upon its own leisure.

The King's business is pressing, he brooks no delay. It is such as no other can claim to precede it. No engagement, however momentous, the purchase of land, the marriage of a wife, ever did form or can a sufficient reason for delay no involved state of affairs, no business on hand, no difficulties of association, no plea of age or youth, of unreadiness, of ignorance, the constant demands of a profession, nor even the all engrossing pursuits of political station. It is God that calls us to break off our sins by righteousness, to "repent of this thine iniquity"—God, "in whose hands thy breath is, and whose are all thy ways." There must be time with all his creatures to heed his voice—to make peace.

We are called to receive the joys of a free salvation—the in-dwelling of the Spirit of God—to be Sons! Shall we slight the invitation of Him "who is the blessed and only Potentate, the King of Kings, and Lord of Lords!"

The same violence which is demanded against our inclination in espousing the cause of Christ must be done to our time. When an eternity is at stake, the question of convenience is an absurdity. Enough is it to know that "the kingdom of heaven suffereth violence, and the violent take it by force."

It is a little strange that the Governor saw not the fitness of that hour, most favored as it was: the sermon searching home, as it declared and vindicated the just, pure, omniscient God, his unbending law and his dread coming; the preacher sent of God manifestly, all in a blaze, full of truth and persuasion; and yet more, the felt presence of the Holy Ghost—the demonstrator of the word, troubling the conscience and loosing the joints. So we think of that hour, and so angels think of us and of this hour, this accepted hour which we now have. Let it be declared, let us believe it, that this is a convenient season, even this present, than which there can be none more so to serve God.

How far are these hours in our control—may we call for the Holy Spirit as our servant, or hold him upon our pleasure as a mendicant? Are these circumstances, this impression always at command—who can call back the passing wave? O, let us take this moment of grace, that, like rare, precious ambergris floats near, or else presently it shall be borne far beyond our reach forever!

AMERICAN BIBLE SOCIETY.

The September monthly meeting of the Board showed the receipts of the last month $25,016 87, and the number of Bibles and Testaments issued 67,469.

A letter from Governor Brigham Young, of Utah, acknowledging the receipt of a donation of Bibles from this Society was received, and requesting more. We are glad to see this uxorious character "requesting more:" we hope for use. More were voted.

An interesting letter was also read from Constantinople in regard to the Bible work in that city, and asking an appropriation for publishing the Armeno-Turkish Scriptures. An appropriation of $3000 was made.

Bishop Mellvaine made his report as one of a special delegation from this Society to the Jubilee Anniversary of the British and Foreign Bible Society, held in May last, in London. The delegation, consisting of himself and Rev. Dr. Vermilye, was cordially received and made addresses. The report eloquently concludes:

I cannot omit, in conclusion, to express my highest admiration of that wonderful Institution, the British and Foreign Bible Society; the wisdom and efficiency of its management; the greatness and increase of its means; the affluence of its issues; the grandeur of its whole operation; forming so remarkable a feature of this present age of the world; so glorious an expression by the Protestant Church of a simple and implicit reliance on the Bible as the Inspired Word, and the divinely appointed instrument of God for the conversion and sanctification of mankind: forming a Protest and Declaration, so lifted up on high, in all lands and languages, for all the world to see, against that anti-Christian form of a pretended Christianity which, above all things, would keep mankind from searching for themselves "the law and the testimony" of God: an engine of promoting the knowledge of God, and the salvation that is in our Lord Jesus Christ, among all people, of such marvellous energy and power; and accompanied, as we know it is, in all its workings, by the effective, fervent prayers of great numbers of righteous men in divers countries, an engine that is destined to be honored in the great day as one of the Lord's greatest instruments in opposing the powers of darkness, in overthrowing the dominion of antichrist, and in bringing on that glorious consummation when the whole earth shall be filled with the knowledge and obedience of His will. Blessed be God, that next to the British and Foreign Bible Society, following so near upon her strides, animated so entirely by her spirit, manifesting the same wisdom, and glorying in the same banner of a simple reliance upon the Bible, as God's own Book, and God's greatest instrument, is our own American Bible Society. No conception of man is large enough to measure the thousandth part of the agency which these two perfectly united Institutions are now exerting, and are hereafter more and more to exert, in fulfilling the counsels of the grace of God towards this sin-ruined world. Let us pray, not only for them, that God will continue to guide and honor and prosper them in their work, but also that we, and all that name the name of Christ, may rightly appreciate the privilege as well as duty of being partakers in their labor.

LETTER FROM AN OVERSEER.

Our allusion to the facilities overseers can give in the work of Missions among the numerous servile population, and the communication of "Arcola"—who labors in this fruitful field—has drawn out the following square-cornered and interesting response from one who "answers to the name." The case of destitution he brings to light, is, as he terms it, "a little sermon"—but a strong one on domestic missions—an appeal for money and men for the work which we cannot conceive us falling without effect upon those who fear God and prize his salvation. [Ed. N. O. Christian Advocate.

BAYOU BOEUF, La., Sept. 18, 1853.

Mr. Editor—I have noticed frequent allusions in the Advocate to the influence that Overseers might wield in the cause of Missions among the negroes in this State and elsewhere, provided they would bring that influence to bear upon the subject; and I have seen an article from one of your correspondents, addressed expressly to the Overseers on the subject of Colored Missions. Now, sir, as I answer to the name, I have concluded to drop you a few lines on the subject.

I agree with your correspondent, generally, but I fear he has a little overrated our influence. I am one of those who believe that the diffusion of religious information among the negroes is calculated to do much good, even if we were to set the salvation of souls out of the question. But, Mr. Editor, my object was not so much to give my opinion, as to call your attention, and the attention of the Louisiana Conference, to this section of country. Really, it seems to me that here on this Bayou, from Holmesville, say twelve miles down the Bayou, is one of the places that should not be overlooked. Within this distance there are ten sugar plantations that will average one hundred negroes on each. In the same distance and interspersed among these, there are just the same number of cotton plantations, averaging, I suppose, about twenty-five negroes, not one of which, or their Overseers, hear two sermons a year.

It is true, that on three or four of these places the negroes hold, every Sunday, a meeting among themselves, and it is no less true, that the religious negroes on these places are the ones most trusted by their Overseers and Masters. A little sermon on Missions itself, I think this fact is.

Now, sir, here are the facts put down, not very eloquently, it is true, (for I never wore out any clothes at College) but just as they are. Now, sir, what is to be done? What can the Conference do? For one, I will use the little influence I may have, in the cause. Who else will do what the inhabitants of "Meroz" would not do? I will conclude by stating that the health of the country is very good. The crops of cane fine, the corn tolerable, and the cotton very sorry. One of my neighbors told me yesterday that his cotton had the rust, the rot, the bowl-worm and six young caterpillars for every leaf on it.

Respectfully, yours, etc., C. Y. J.

A PITIABLE CASE.

Poor Pierce! not our President Pierce, reader, but Pierce Connelly, once a Protestant Minister in Natchez, Mi., and a happy husband and father. But he went after that ignis fatuus of the only true Catholic Church: was divorced, a la Rome, from his wife; he became a priest, and she went into a Convent. By and by he saw his folly. An inside view of Rome cured him of Romanism. He repents—recants, but how to get his wife back—that is the trouble. In an English paper, conspicuous under advertisements, we find the following, which we insert one time for nothing:

Case of the Rev. Pierce Connelly.—The Rev. Pierce Connelly having been driven to institute a suit in the Ecclesiastical Court, in order to compel the authorities of the Church of Rome in this country to restore, to himself and to his children, his wife, who is still detained in the Convent at St. Leonard's, near Hastings, while unable to go through with it, from want of means, is liable to costs, already taxed, to a large amount. The undermentioned noblemen and gentlemen—feeling deeply interested in his behalf, and believing his case, as referred to, to be one not only of extreme hardship, but deeply affecting the first great principles of British liberty, and involving no less a question than whether the law of Rome or the law of England shall prevail in these realms—have formed themselves into a committee, for the purpose of raising a fund to assist Mr. Connelly, and to enable him to meet the legal expenses he has incurred.

Committee.—His Grace the Duke of Manchester, Chairman; the Right Hon. the Earl of Winchelsea; the Hon. and Right Rev. the Lord Bishop of Tuam; the Viscount Mandeville, M. P.; Right Hon. J. Napier, M. P., Sir W. Verner, Bart., M. P., C. N. Newdegate, Esq., M. P., and others.

METHODIST PRESS.

POSITION DEFINED.—Under this head we try to keep our readers informed of the current discussions—the animus of our Advocate family, on subjects of general interest. The work of comparing the opinions of different organs, at various localities, is sometimes as satisfactory as expressing them. On the subject of education of the ministry, the Editor of the Richmond Advocate concludes his able discussion:

"As to the first, my affinities for theological education in seminaries established for the purpose, or by such other methods as may secure the object, before entering upon the ministerial work, as I have no reason to be ashamed of the sentiment, so neither am I afraid to avow it. A theological seminary, such as Mr. Wesley desired for laborers: as Coke, Asbury, and the General Conference of 1784 contemplated in the establishment of Cokesbury College, as the English Methodists have in successful operation, as the Episcopacy of 1840 were ready to acquiesce in, as Bishop Andrew has recently so earnestly recommended, whether as a separate school, or under distinct Professorships in our present colleges, or under the personal teaching and supervision of the Presidents of our colleges either way; or the one that the judgment of the church may select, will be satisfactory to me. But of all I have yet studied, the Theological Institution of the British Conference comes nearest to what I desire to see adopted by Southern Methodists. But if we may not have this, nor neither of those above named, then I go in for Aid Societies, such as have been adopted in the North Carolina, Virginia and Alabama Conferences, and which I am sure, already have the approval, and receive the co-operation of our church. Any thing that, maintaining the integrity of Methodism, and preserving the piety of the ministry, promises to educate those who are called of God to preach, and fit them for their work, before entering upon it, shall have my cordial approval and co-operation."

MORE BISHOPS.—The S. C. Advocate joins in the call for a strengthened Episcopacy. These opinions we have Advocated from the beginning, and see increasing reasons for them. If there be Christian expediency and policy in our Episcopacy it will bear, it demands enlargement. See how the sagacious Romanists do—two Bishops in this State. Fas est docere, etc. And our nearer kin, the Protestant Episcopalians, strengthen their organization and enlarge the available of many of their ministers, by making them Bishops. We need two or three to one; and we have the gold—it only waits the stamp to give it rank and currency.

The Methodist Church, South, numbering a half million members, and reaching from Virginia to Mexico, and from the Atlantic coast to the Indian Territory, has but four Bishops. West of the mountains but one Bishop, and he supernannuated: west of the Great River, not one. Out of Tennessee, Mississippi, Georgia and South Carolina, no community is privileged to feel the influence of a Bishop, to see one except as a mere moderator of Conference, to be in reach of his individual counsel or labors. Yet we are in favor of Episcopacy! Very much afraid of it—one would think, or doubtful of its worth. But to the extract from our cotemporary:

"We wish there were a dozen effective men on our Episcopal bench—we say, effective, and hope we shall not be misunderstood. When the venerable men that now occupy that position shall be disabled by age and infirmities, God forbid that we should cease to recognize them in their official character, and comfortably support them too. We cherish the maxim, 'once a bishop, always a bishop'—of course, so long as a spotless Christian character is maintained, for a bishop must be blameless. But when men are elected to that office, it ought to be a rare case indeed that an old or infirm man is chosen. None but men of experience—men who have been tested and found good and true—ought to be made bishops. But, with this provision, the younger they are the better. Men in the vigor of life are able to undergo the fatigues of extensive and continuous travel. They can keep up a wide correspondence with the church papers, and with individuals seeking their counsel. They can do a great deal of preaching. We have had, as yet, no unpreaching prelates, though some of our bishops have not been able to preach as often as desirable. Bishops, indeed, ought to be good executive officers—men of sound judgment, to decide questions of law, and to station their brethren—but they ought to be good preachers too. We do not want more moderators of Conferences—we want men that can preach—men that love to preach—men that the people as well as the preachers love to hear preach. We have four such men now; but we want several more of the same sort. We may smile at the adage, 'a saint in grape is twice a saint in lawn,' but smile as we may, the people act upon it, and we should not lose sight of it. See the crowds that attend the sermons of bishops at their visitations—see the deference paid to their opinions—see the influence they exert in the community. Whether Romish, Anglican, or Methodist, every body shows them respect. They are looked upon as the picked men of their respective communions."

Rev. Hezekiah G. Leigh, D. D., of the North Carolina Conference, died at his residence, near Boydton, Va., 18th September. For thirty-five years he has preached, and often with a power common to few men.

MORTALITY IN NATCHEZ.—The deaths in Natchez from July 19 to September 30, inclusive, have been 288, of which 239 were from yellow fever.

The amount subscribed by the city of Boston for the aid of the sufferers by the epidemic of this city, is $10,025.

LETTER FROM CALIFORNIA

[Special Correspondence of the Advocate.]

MR. EDITOR—A party consisting of a lady and two children, four preachers and two laymen, all comfortably seated in an uncovered wagon, drawn by two noble animals, and driven by a M. P., left San Jose August 4, for a Camp Meeting, in connection with the San Jose and Santa Cruz Circuit. Something seen, heard and done in that ride of sixty miles, will, perhaps, be interesting to your readers.

Immediately on leaving the city, and near our road, we noticed the location of "Bascom Institute." An entire block, very eligibly situated, has been secured: on it has just been placed a two story building, imposing in its appearance, conveniently arranged and neatly finished. A music room, with apartments above and below, that will accommodate a number of pupils, is all ready for use. This is the nucleus around which we expect influences to gather that will be felt beyond the extensive valley in which the institution stands. It opens on the 16th August, and though its progress may be retarded for a time by not having a suitable corps of officers, yet it is confidently hoped that this obstacle will soon be removed. It has some active and warm supporters, who entertain sanguine hopes of its future career. If there is a spot upon our globe the educational interests of which demand a united, vigorous and mighty effort on the part of Protestant Christians, that spot is California. Rome is wide awake, and with her vast resources, and the wire-working trickery of Jesuitism, the "Mother of Harlots," is seeking to develop the faculties and control the destinies of the rising generations. Her efforts, great as they are, in every part of free America, are, if possible, even greater here. And her success to me, at least, is alarming. Their schools and colleges are crowded with pupils, and many cannot be accommodated. Very many of these are the children of Protestant parents, who, because of a mistaken notion of superior advantages, patronise these schools, and will not open their eyes to the dangers to which they are exposing their sons and daughters. They have already succeeded in securing the appropriation of a portion of the Public School Fund to the Roman Catholic Schools in the State—an act alike disgraceful to the Legislature that passed it, and the people who suffer it.

But we are en route for Camp Meeting, and must hasten on thitherward. The valley along which we travel runs parallel with the coast, making our direction nearly southeast. In looking ahead some distance, the mountain ranges on each side apparently come together, making as take the hill or retreat. This is the view from a distance; a closer inspection may show it deceptive. On either hand, farms are seen extending to the mountains, from many of which large crops of grain have recently been taken. The rattle of machinery, and clouds of dust, mark the spot where it is being prepared and thrashed for market. The rust has injured the wheat crop in places. An occasional hill or solitary mound scattered before us here, relieves the monotony of portions of this valley.

Over among the hills of the western range lie the New Almedan Quicksilver Mines, from which vast quantities of that mineral are taken. About twelve miles from the city we reach what before appointed to be the end of our valley, if not our journey too. But the mountains, though approaching near, do not close up, but leave ample room for our passage, without encountering any elevation whatever. Here we cross the Cayette Creek, which passes through this gap, along the valley South, connecting with the Guadaloupe, from the opposite range of hills, and emptying into the San Francisco Bay at Alviso. In a distance of two miles we are through the gap, and where the valley again opens to the width of five or six miles, which it retains very uniformly as far south as I have gone. From this point, there are but three houses and no farm for twenty miles. The land is covered by large Spanish grants, held by individuals or families, who are waiting to see if their respective claims will be confirmed. Six miles from this, at the foot of the mountain, stands an old adobe house, enclosed by a brush fence, long known in the history of California, as "Murphy's Ranch." The Irishman whose name the place bears, lived here for many years, herding large droves of horses and cattle, and now owns the entire valley from hill to hill, for about fifteen miles. And this is but a portion of his possessions.

Two miles still beyond this, and we stand on the dividing ridge between Monterey and San Francisco Bay. Immediately to our right, in sugar loaf form, rises the highest point of land on either of these mountain ranges. Among the hills surrounding it rises a stream flowing South, which we will presently cross, and perhaps have occasion to notice again. Directly opposite, among the foot hills of the Eastern range, rises the stream already crossed, flowing north into San Francisco Bay, and through the Golden Gate.

There is but little difference in the general appearance of this or any other valley near the coast—an idea of its formation, fertility and extent being all that I expect to convey to your readers in this very brief sketch. The only timber found here is a short, scrubby oak, useless except for shade and fuel. Of these, not one could be found in all the land from which could be had a stick ten feet long, that could be made into rails. They are sparsely scattered in some places; in others thickly clustered, forming beautiful and extensive shades. There are no shrubs, bushes, or undergrowth of any sort to be seen. Grass, oats, red clover, and mustard, cover not only this but all the valleys.

Oats alone grow on most of the hills. Vegetation is now parched, giving even the soil a scared and barren appearance.

A dusty ride of thirty-six miles brought us to the Gilroy settlement, where we spent the night. It is thirty miles yet by the usually traveled route to the camp ground, but only twelve across the mountain. After consultation with the brethren next morning, I availed myself of the services of an extra horse, with which we were fortunately provided, and took the nearer route. I went across west into the range of mountains separating our valley from the coast, traveling up an arm of the valley between projecting hills for many miles before reaching the foot of the mountain. Here I saw for the first time a timber flume. Such I will call it, having no better name. It is made of plank, after the style of a water flume, elevated upon upright timbers, extending up the mountain side several miles into the Redwood forest, having an inclination upon which the timber will not lie. After preparing boards, shingles, posts, rails, etc., etc., they are thrown upon this flume, and away they go lumbering like distant thunder, and fall from the other end of the flume, and are taken from thence on wagons. A few miles of steep climbing up the rugged ascent brought me to the top of the mountain, in the midst of the tall redwoods.

Many extended accounts have been furnished of the trees found in the mountains of California, some of which are perhaps extravagant. They are here, however, in great numbers, and of enormous height and size. Hundreds of men make their homes in these forests, and spend their time in preparing timber for the use of farmers in the valleys, and in shooting grizzly bears. Timber is taken from these forests in some instances to a distance of thirty or forty miles, for fencing. The whole country is dependent upon them for such purposes, and as they are found only in certain localities, even in the mountains, they are consequently very valuable. From such elevations the prospect is often extensive and very beautiful, overlooking the surrounding country, if not the "kingdoms of the world and the glory of them." Many important points not in great distance may be distinctly marked from them, besides the lovely vallies on either side of our stand point. The ocean, too, is in full view, through an opening of the valley that spreads out westward, reaching to the coast, where the eye will occasionally rest on the white canvas of a passing vessel as it glides smoothly on until lost behind projecting hills. Beauty, grandeur and sublimity blend their charms to rivet the gaze of the admirer of nature. A very pleasing change is experienced in ascending early in the morning, while emerging from the dense, damp, and chilling fogs of the valley to the sun-lit summit of the mountain, when the sun pours forth from a cloudless sky, while all beneath is enveloped in impenetrable gloom.

Now, to the southwest, at the edge of the valley, among the hills, lies the camp ground, the point for which we have been aiming. The white canvas tents may be seen through the openings of the green foliage of the extensive grove of evergreens selected for the occasion. I shall be in time for the morning service. But this communication is sufficiently long. I will reserve an account of our meeting for the future. Yours,

W. R. GOBER.

HON. EDWARD EVERETT TO LORD JOHN RUSSELL.

The reply of the Hon. Edward Everett to the short, curt and ill-tempered dispatch of Lord John Russell in relation to the Tripartite Treaty, will, we are assured, be received by all parties with unmingled satisfaction. The length of the document, we regret, prevents us from printing it entire, but enough may be gleaned from the extracts which follow to convey an idea of the tone and spirit of the whole. The document is thoroughly American, and Lord John Russell is met with arguments drawn from the history of his own country, which to an unprejudiced mind must be irresistible.

Although the letter of Mr. Everett is unofficial, it relates to matters which arose during his Secretaryship, and as such required attention at his hands.

After referring to the general tone of the dispatch of Lord John Russell, and quoting his observation that "the absorption or annexation of Louisiana in 1803, of Florida in 1819, of Texas in 1845, and of California in 1848, had not escaped the two powers," Mr. Everett proceeds to say:

Most certainly the important and notorious events named by you—leading incidents of the history of the United States and of the world—can not be supposed to have escaped the Governments of England and France, who were parties to some of the most important of the transactions in question.

And again:

Now, it is very much the habit of a considerable portion of the European press to speak of the steady and rapid extension of the territory of the United States, as the indication of a grasping spirit on the part of their government and people. The subject is rarely alluded to, by one school of transatlantic public writers, for any other purpose. Thus the public mind of the civilized world is poisoned against us. There is not only manifested, on the part of those writers, an entire insensibility to the beauty and grandeur of the work—more beneficent if possible to Europe than to us, in the relief it is affording her—but we are actually held up at times as a nation of land-pirates. It was partly my object to counteract this disposition; to show that our growth had been a natural growth; that our most important accessions of territory had taken place by great national transactions, to which England, France and Spain had been parties, and in other cases by the operation of causes which necessarily influence the occupation and settlement of a new country, in strict conformity with the laws of nations, and not in violation of them.

To meet one of the grounds which Lord John Russell urges—that of geographical proximity—to show that Great Britain has a greater interest in the acquisition of Cuba than the United States, Mr. Everett says:

"You observe, in effect, that Cuba is somewhat nearer to Jamaica than it is to the nearest part of the United States, and you consider this as showing that we cannot have a greater interest in the island than you have.

"Now if Jamaica bore the same relation to Great Britain which our States on and near the Gulf of Mexico bear to the rest of the American Union, your reply to my argument would be good. But the direct reverse would be the case. Jamaica is a distant colony, whose entire population (of which not more than one-tenth is of European origin) does not exceed that of an English city of the second class. It is, as I perceive from your speech of the 4th of August, a burden on the imperial treasury. It must, in its present state, stand high on the list of colonies, which, (as appears from Lord Grey's recent work on the colonial policy of your administration,) are regarded by more than one active and influential party in England as incumbrances of which she ought to get rid, if she could do so with credit. How different in all respects, the case with the States lying on the Gulf of Mexico! In extent of sea coast, in the amount of valuable products furnished to the world's commerce, in the command of rivers which penetrate the heart of the continent, they are a most important, as they are an integral portion of the Union. They are numerically all but a sixth part of it. The very illustration made use of by you, strikingly confirms instead of confuting the doctrine that "the condition of Cuba is mainly an American question."

Mr. Everett hits the English Lord a hard rap in reference to the grasping policy of France and England in appropriating the territories of weak and unresisting nations. In reading them a lesson on this subject, he remarks:

Consider, too, the recent antecedents of the powers that invite us to disable ourselves to the end of time from the acquisition in any way of this natural appendage to our continent. France, within the present century, to say nothing of the acquisition of Louisiana, has wrested a moiety of Europe from its native sovereigns; has possessed herself by force of arms, and at the time greatly to the discontent of England, of six hundred miles of the northern coast of Africa, with an indefinite extension into the interior; and has appropriated to herself one of the most important insular groups of the Pacific. England, not to mention her other numerous recent acquisitions in every part of the globe, has, even since your dispatch of the 16th of February was written, annexed half of the Burman Empire to her overgrown Indian possessions, on grounds—if the statements in Mr. Cobden's pamphlet are to be relied upon—compared with which the reasons assigned by Russia for invading Turkey are respectable.

The letter of Mr. Everett is marked, not more by the courtly etiquette which runs throughout its every paragraph, than by the biting truth in Britain's aggressive history which he brings to bear in combatting the position of Lord John Russell. His arguments are all drawn from the past policy of that first of filibustering nations, and are thrown into the teeth of the Minister with a force that not even English arrogance can repel. He concludes thus:

You will not, I hope, misapprehend the spirit in which this letter is written. As an American citizen, I do not covet the acquisition of Cuba, either peaceably or by force of arms. When I cast my thoughts back upon our history as a nation, I certainly am not led to think that the United States have reached the final limits of their growth, or what comes to very much the same thing, that representative government, religious equality, the trial by jury, the freedom of the press, and the other great attributes of our Anglo-Norman civilization are never to gain a further extension on this continent. I regard the inquiry, under what political organization this extension is to take place, as a vain attempt to penetrate the inscrutable mysteries of the future. It will be well we are wise, be nigher the guidance of our example: I hope it will be in virtue of the peaceful arts, by which well-governed States extend themselves over unsettled or partially settled continents. My voice was heard at the last opportunity, in the Senate of the United States, in favor of developing the almost boundless resources of the territory already in our possession, rather than seeking to enlarge it by aggressive wars. Still, I cannot think it reasonable—hardly respectful—on the part of England and France, while they are daily extending themselves on every shore and in every sea, and pushing their dominions, by new conquests, to the uttermost ends of the earth, to call upon the United States to bind themselves by a perpetual compact never, under any circumstances, to admit into the Union an island which lies at their doors, and commands the entrance into the interior of their continent.

HYMENEAL.

MARRIED.—At the Methodist Church in Orville, Ala., Sunday evening, September 25, by Rev. D. Carmichael, Mr. L. G. SALLEE, of Indianola, Texas, to Miss C. R. DRAKE, of Orville.

OBITUARY.

Among the many distressing scenes and events produced by the fearful pestilence that has lately swept over our Gulf cities, we doubt whether one has occurred more heart-rending to surviving friends, or better calculated to awaken the sympathy of every feeling heart, than the following, which transpired in this city:

JAMES B. GREEN, his wife, ANN CRAWLEY GREEN, their three children, and Mrs. FANNY T. MARKHAM, mother to Mrs. Green, all died in the brief space of six days. They were pious, interesting family, who seldom failed to gain the esteem and win upon the affections of all with whom they were thrown into association. They had resided in the city less than twelve months, and had not yet been three years from their native State, Virginia. Many a tear will start, and many a heart will throb with sorrow, as the news of their melancholy death shall reach the distant friends and relatives they have left behind.

The fatality commenced on the morning of the 14th of September, in the death of little Arin Anan, a remarkably interesting and sprightly child, of nearly six years. On the 16th, Mrs. Green, together with the youngest of the children, Mary Louisa, aged about two years, died, and were laid together in the same grave. Sunday witnessed the death of Mrs. Markham, and Fanny Garland, the eldest and only remaining child of Mr. and Mrs. Green, aged nearly nine years, a child whose extraordinary intelligence and mental development, was the subject of general remark among the acquaintance and visitors of the family. Last of all, on Tuesday, the 20th, Mr. Green himself, worn down with the fatigues of nursing his family, and heart-broken at their death, breathed his last, and, as we have every reason to hope and believe, as well from his life, as from his dying declaration, exchanged the Christian's armor for the Christian's crown. Mr. Green was forty-three years old, had been a pious man and a Methodist for the last twelve or fourteen years of his life, and died rejoicing in the consolation of the religion he had professed in health, when all was sunshine and brightness around him.

Mrs. Markham was the widow of the late George Markham, Esq., of Lynchburg, Va. She was sixty-three years old. She joined the Methodists in her childhood, at a time and under circumstances which required nerve, and rendered it a cross to do so; when Methodism was not fashionable, but a sect "every where spoken against." Her love to the church was ardent and unchangeable. To its interests and those of its benevolent societies connected with it, she was ever ready to make almost any sacrifice. She was a firm believer in, and had for many years professed to enjoy the benefit of, that doctrine of our church, which teaches that the blood of Christ cleanseth from ALL sin. The end of such an one it is not difficult to imagine. She welcomed the approach of death as a happy relief from the cares of life, and the infirmities of age—as the termination of her pilgrimage, and the entrance upon the inheritance her faith and patience had secured her, through the blood of Christ. She was a woman of great force of character, and a vigorous well-informed mind. Possessing those qualities, with her high Christian feelings and sentiments, it is not surprising that her life should have been, as it was, one of usefulness to the cause of God in the circle of her acquaintances and association. She rests from her labors, and her works do follow her."

Mrs. Green inherited many of the traits of her mother. Her firmness and energy were leading points in her character, while she possessed in a high degree those graces of mind and person which, when combined, throw such a charm around the sex. She, too, gave her heart to the Lord early in life. When but a child, she embraced religion and joined the church; and her whole subsequent life, up to its close, showed that she sought to live as "One who must give account." She was in the prime of life—32 years of age—and seldom indeed do we see so much of metal, moral and Christian worth descend to the grave in the person of one delicate female. She, with her three lovely children, upon whose training she employed the best thoughts of her mind, and expended an incalculable amount of labor and pains-taking, lie side by side in the quiet grave. Near by is the devoted husband and father, and the aged grand-mother, all awaiting the voice of the Arch-angel and the trump of God.

Leaves have their time to fall—
And flowers to wither at the North wind's breath;
But all—all seasons are thine own O death!

Mobile, Sept. 27, 1853.

Died.—Rev. Edward Love, our beloved pastor, has gone from time into eternity: his well filled mission closed on Monday, the 19th instant, of yellow fever. During his illness, there were moments when his mind wandered, but in the intervals of delirium he was calm, and spoke with confidence of the promises of God. The truths of the Bible seemed to be the anchor on which his soul rested, with unshaken confidence, while the billows of death were passing over him. Calmly and quietly his spirit passed away, while he realized the fulfillment of the promises of God, in that kingdom of glory prepared for those who are faithful until death.

A few moments before he died, he repeated the twenty-third Psalm, dwelling with great fervency on this verse: "Though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death, I will fear no evil; for thou art with me; thy rod and thy staff, they comfort me."

His manners were very retiring and unassuming, but he possessed good reasoning powers and in his early death the church has lost a pious and faithful young minister, and one who gave promise of improvement with his years.

Covington, La., September 28.

Died.—In Toulminville, Ala, on the 7th instant, Dorcas Matthews, aged 16 years and 10 months.

Although young in years, he had heard of heaven, and learned the way. He was a victim to the prevailing epidemic, but while struggling with his enemy, manifested a Christian courage and patience belonging to riper years. The day preced ng his death, upon seeing his mother leave his bedside, weeping, said, "Pa, you and mother should not weep for me. If I should drop off now I am safe. I shall go to heaven, and Christ will take me. I am not afraid to die." Such was the character of his language up to the time of his departure.

Also, on the 19th instant, at the same place, departed Francis, brother to the above, aged 14 years and 5 months. The firmness and composure that he manifested during his last moments, were remarkable.

Some of his last words—and while he was perfectly rational—seemed to be addressed to his departed brother, as if in conversation with him: "Come Doc, let us go; I am ready: but I hate to leave Pa, he will be so lonesome."

The father was laboring under the influence of the epidemic, having received the first attack in the family, but was considered in a convalescent state at the time of the above mentioned occurrence.

Thus have two children passed away to live and bloom in a more congenial place.

The Pennsylvania State debt since 1851 has been reduced by the Sinking Fund $918,810, and now amounts to $40,263,733. The 6 per cent. debt outstanding in 1851 has been converted into a 5 per cent stock, saving $20,000 a year in interest.

Seventy-five of the unlicensed rum sellers of the Sixth Ward in New York have been arrested. The prisoners pleaded guilty, and were summoned to appear again in court to-day to receive sentence. One hundred and sixty-one remain to be arrested in the same ward.

Mortality Among the Indians.—Nearly one thousand Indians of the Snake and Cheyenne tribes have recently died of the small pox in the neighborhood of Utah. It is said that three hundred bodies were, in one instance, piled together and consumed by fire.

General Intelligence.

The City Council of Savannah has subscribed $1,000,000 to the Savannah and Pensacola Railroad.

According to the seventh census of the United States the number of inhabitants were classed as natives of the following countries: Of the population in 1850 there were of natives of Ireland, 961,719; of Germany, 573,225; of England, 278,675; of British America, 147,700; of Scotland, 70,550; of France, 29,868; of all other countries, 95,022. Total, 2,210,828.

The Fever at Vicksburg.—The Whig of the 29th ult. says:

The number of deaths reported by the sexton within the city for the two days past it will be seen is 10—about the average number for the last week. We begin to fear that it is useless to expect or hope for a diminution until the earth is mantled with frost and the atmosphere purified. There are not so many cases of sickness on hand as formerly, and but few of them are at present regarded as dangerous, a large majority thought to be doing well.

The Fever in Clinton.—We learn from the Louisiana State Paper of the 1st inst., published at Clinton, that fever of a very virulent type was raging there. There was a general panic among the citizens, and the town was almost deserted. There had been a number of deaths in town and in the surrounding country. The editor of the State Paper says that he has every day printed funeral tickets for the last week. The daily news from the surrounding country is of disease and death. There is much difference of opinion among the physicians and citizens as to whether the prevalent disease is yellow fever or not. At any rate it is eminently fatal, and the name is not important. The editor of the State Paper thinks that a few days will determine the type of the disease.

Sickness in Mobile.—The total number of deaths in Mobile for the month ending on the 30th ult. was 1068, of which 782 were from yellow fever. The Advertiser of the 1st inst., in reference to this subject, says:

The only true test of the severity of the epidemic is to be found in the total number of deaths, as undoubtedly the most of those cases reported as "unknown," and included under the head of "other causes," have died of yellow fever.

It will thus appear that in the course of two months there have been about eleven hundred deaths, out of an actual population which can hardly be estimated at more than eleven thousand—a literal decimation. Supposing only one-fifth of the sick to have died, there must have been in the city 5500 cases, being about half of the resident population.

The Register of the same date remarks:

Some medical men seem suddenly sanguine; we hope they may find their opinions carried out. Others are more reserved. We wish with the former, but think with the latter. An index of fresh material would be most likely to rekindle the flame. Those now passing away were among the most active in staying the pestilence with others. Peace to their ashes. They deserved well of their fellow-men.

Mobile Items.—The Register of the 3d inst. has the following items:

The Sickness.—It is a subject of grateful observation that the epidemic continues to abate, at least within the city limits, and that the tenants of the infirmaries are being so reduced in number that they can all be discharged probably during the present week. There is still, however, much suffering and much want to be provided for, though thanks to the timely sympathy of generous friends abroad as well as at home, the convalescing poor will not be allowed to suffer, and many a widow and many an orphan will bless the hands that have been extended so liberally to their relief. If our unencloistered friends will consent to keep away a little longer, we may hope soon to welcome their return when there will be no danger from the pestilence.

Returning.—The watering places over the bay are being rapidly vacated by their Orleans visitors, now daily returning to their homes. We trust that the "Battle House" will speedily be re-opened. There can now be no difficulty in the way, and never were its accommodations in greater demand. Every boat brings down a large number of returning citizens, and not a place remains open in the city in which they can be fitly housed or fed. It is humiliating to hear them asserting daily that they cannot get a respectable, or at least a suitable, meal in all Mobile. Not even an open oyster-shop can be found.

Odd Fellows' Hall.—The external and internal work of this fine structure advance very rapidly. By the time business is at its zenith, this Hall will be one of the greatest ornaments to the city.

Mobile Items.—The Tribune of the 4th inst. says:

There has been such a marked decrease in the sickness prevailing in the city, that the Samaritan Society closed the Infirmary at Barton Academy on the 1st inst. The Cant-Get-Away Club intended to shut up its Infirmary at the Eutaw House yesterday, but some of the few remaining patients could not be removed with safety, and in consequence it will be kept open for a few days longer.

The Tribune also gives the following account of a railroad accident:

On the arrival of the down train from Citronelle on Sunday evening, the locomotive was detached as usual a short distance from the depot. At the proper point the engineer attempted to stop the engine, but something being out of order, the machine drove ahead with undiminished speed and encountered under the shed a large passenger car on the same track, giving it such a sudden and powerful momentum, that it pitched through the south end of the depot building, breaking off heavy square timbers that interposed, and brought up near the opposite side of the street. The locomotive followed until it struck the ground, where it stuck hard and fast, leaving the tender on the track. The damage sustained was trifling. The fireman jumped off, but the engineer bravely maintained his position.

Consort of the Black Warrior.—The New York Post thus notices the new steamer which is to run as the Consort of the Black Warrior between New York and Mobile:

Mr. Wm. Collyer, at Nineteenth street, is building a steamship for Livingston, Crocheron & Co., to be employed in the Mobile and Havana trade from New York, in connection with the Black Warrior. She is two hundred and sixty feet long, thirty-seven feet beam, twenty-five feet eight inches deep, and two thousand tons burthen. She is at present called Queen of the Gulf. He is about to lay the keel of a small steamboat for the same firm, of the following dimensions: Length on deck 112 feet; breadth of beam 22 feet; depth of hold 7 feet; and 195 tons burthen.

Lead Mine in Alabama.—A writer in the Tuscaloosa Monitor makes mention of the existence of a rich lead mine, forty or fifty miles above Tuscaloosa. He says:

While reflecting with delight upon the prospects of our State, I have thought to communicate the fact through your columns, that there is a rich lead mine near Tuscaloosa, which may be sought out by some of your energetic citizens, and found to yield a great income. The lead mine was well known to the Cherokee Indians, who gave minute directions to my brother, before their emigration, how and where he might find it. My brother and I lived many years with the Cherokees, and he was quite a favorite of them. He died—and I have only an indistinct recollection of the whereabouts. It is some forty or fifty miles above Tuscaloosa, one mile or more from the river, up a branch, near the mouth of which is a large beech tree, with an Indian cut on the bark, holding a tomahawk in hand, going up which you find other marks, until you find another Indian cut on a beech tree, with a rifle pointing to the lead, which is said to be in great quantity. I give this as the best recollection I have; and perhaps no other white man may have any knowledge of it.

Louisiana Interior.

The Iberville Gazette of the 1st inst. says:

One of the most desolating scourges that ever left its mark in any community, is now severing the social family ties of our quiet and hitherto healthy village. Sickness and distress are now on every side of us. On the coast, above and below, the mortality appears to be as great as here in town. One death by cholera is reported. What next?

Health of Plaquemine.—The Southern Sentinel of the 1st inst. says:

The health of our town to-day (Friday) is about the same to all appearances as it was this time last week. We may add, however, that since that time several of our old residents have been attacked, but are doing well. The following report has been handed to us for publication by the Relief Association:

Total number of deaths from 20th of August, when the first death occurred from yellow fever, 33.

Health of Baton Rouge.—The Gazette of the 1st inst. says:

We are most happy to state upon the authority of our physicians, that the yellow fever is rapidly making its disappearance from Baton Rouge, where it has been an unwelcomed dweller for the past six weeks. The announcement we know will prove welcome intelligence to our friends and citizens at a distance; however, we will continue to advise them not to be in too great a hurry coming into town, for in bringing themselves here, where the seeds of epidemic are not entirely extirpated, they may bring fresh material for the monster to revive, and work on.

Later from South America.

Puerto Cabello, Sept. 3, 1853.—We have, by this opportunity, the pleasure of addressing you a few lines. With the exception of a small body of troops under the command of Senor Vaca, who left Caracas or its suburbs, after the earthquake on the 15th of July, the remainder of the armed enemies of the Government of President Monagas have submitted, either by coercion or voluntarily, and, by the latest accounts, Senor Vaca had entered into an agreement with one of the Government Generals to surrender, which awaited only the approbation of General Monagas to put an end, for the present, to the late revolutionary movements in all quarters of this so called republic. It may be said that the late movement was organized and conducted in the most miserable manner imaginable.

The result must be attributed entirely to the shameful mismanagement, and to the incapacity of a large majority of the principal chiefs who were in charge of the military operations. Therefore, we again see the Monagas administration triumphant. Intelligent natives believe, however, that the government of the Monagas cannot last long.

Public affairs, even in Venezuela, were never managed so badly as at the present period: and it would not surprise us to see another uprising within a few months hence.

Elections for President take place in August, 1854, and already it is said that the late President, Jose Tadeo Monagas is fixed upon. So you will perceive that the Monagas are determined to retain the reins in their own hands. It is now disgusting to observe the shameful manner in which government affairs are conducted here. In fact, the whole is a complete gambling concern.

Business is exceedingly dull. There is no coffee in market. Hides are in great demand at 12½ to 13c. per lb. Cotton, 12c. Indigo, 8 reals for F. per lb. The new coffee crop promises to be very abundant.

The Protests of England and France.—The New York Express learns from a person said to be in close communion with those who know what is going on at the Capital, that the statement in regard to the remonstrances of France and England, touching Capt. Ingraham and Costa, is true. The Express says:

Mr. Crampton, the British Minister, was the first to call on Mr. Marcy. M. Sartiges had his instructions some time since to call on the Secretary of State. These instructions were very specific and pointed, but their delivery in person was delayed until Thursday, the 22d inst., owing to the absence of the French Minister at Newport until Wednesday evening, when he returned to the Capital. The Government knew that these instructions were to come from France; and had been so informed specifically some time since. The remonstrance is in terms that Captain Ingraham's conduct was a violation of the law of nations.

Mr Marcy has had his reply ready for some time, but it has to undergo some modifications. Austria, he says, having appealed to the world to justify its conduct, the United States will also make an appeal to the world in behalf of Capt. Ingraham's conduct in saving Costa.

It would seem, therefore, that each of the five European powers had concluded to take ground against the United States in regard to Costa. But we apprehend no real collision of arms from this paper warfare. The United States hold to one set of principles and will maintain them, and the powers of Europe to quite another set, and we suppose will maintain them also.

News from Washington.—We copy the following from the Star:

Secretary Marcy leaves Washington this afternoon for the North, whither he goes, it is understood, to discharge the melancholy duty of attending the interment of the remains of his son, who died not long since in the West Indies.

Col. John C. Fremont.—We regret extremely to write that we have news, per telegraph, from St. Louis, saying that Col. Fremont has been compelled to abandon his journey of exploration to California (overland) and to return to St. Louis, on account of the condition of his health.

Things At the Capitol.—Workmen are busy repainting, varnishing and cleaning the Senate Chamber. This has already been done for the House, and on Monday the carpet will be laid on the hall, desks arranged, etc., preparatory to the arrival of members. The extensions are going on with the usual alacrity of the workmen. Greenough's statuary has nearly been fitted to its foundation, the rocks upon which it rests being in a fair way of speedy completion. According to opinions at the Capitol, the shed will probably be taken down on or before the beginning of next week, when the iron railing is to be put up similar to that surrounding Columbus and the Indian woman. The pictures of the Rotunda continue to attract numbers of ladies and gentlemen, and the Library was this morning filled with admiring visitors.

The Progressing Redemption of United States Stocks.—We hear that yesterday $100,000 of the stocks to run to 1867 and 1868, $50,000 of each, were received at the Treasury Department from one house in Liverpool, England, and cancelled. It was thought by many that the effort of the Government thus to get these securities, which had got into foreign hands, would be abortive. But this commencement looks very favorable to the success of the plan of the Treasury Department. Secretary Guthrie wisely made, in his advertisement for the return of these stocks, a condition that they would be redeemed for a fixed period at a given price; fixing the tenulation of that period sufficiently far ahead to allow all foreign United States Government bond-holders to avail themselves of the arrangement, with a certainty as to the price they were to be allowed, if they choose to receive money down in hand for their evidences of the indebtedness of our Government to them. It seems to be anticipated that, in the next three months, heavy redemptions of the stocks in the hands of such holders will be made.

A Novel Treasury Question.—A question has come up in the Treasury Department as to the right of a soldier who has been dishonorably discharged, to receive the traveling pay which would have undoubtedly been his right had he left the service honorably. The Second Comptroller has decided that a dishonorable discharge is "by way of punishment for an offence," and that being such, the laws of January 29, 1813, and June 18, 1846, expressly withhold such pay from him.

French Views of the Costa Case.—The London Times translates from the Paris Constitutionnel an article on the Smyrna affair, in which the arrest of Costa is pronounced a high-handed measure, and the conduct of Captain Ingraham rash and unwarranted. "An impartial arbitration," it is said, "would throw both parties out of court." And further: "As to M. Costa, what Austria had better do will be to give him every facility to go to America, there to reside as long as possible."

We learn from the Baltimore Sun that, now the summer heats are over, the thousands who had left their homes in the South for a more congenial atmosphere, are rapidly returning. The cars from the East are always crowded upon their arrival here, while the trains for Washington and the Norfolk steamers are also doing a very heavy business. There are now four popular trains a day running from Baltimore to Washington; and no rest is the travel between the two cities that it is thought another train will have to be added in order to accommodate it, particularly in view of the approaching session of Congress, when the number of passengers is always much increased.

The travel Westward from Baltimore is also greatly improved. We are informed that the number of through-passengers to Wheeling, Columbus, Cincinnati, Louisville, and points beyond, during the present month, is fully double that of the month of August. The indications are very strong, indeed, that as soon as the large and beautiful boats of the Union Line resume their running from Wheeling, in connection with the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad, the travel by this improving route will be very great. If the two companies come to terms, the boats will commence their trips about the 20th of October.

The Revolution in China.—We leave before us, says the New York Commercial, a letter, not designed for publication, written by an American gentleman long resident in China, principally at Macao, and favored with rare opportunities for acquaintance with the social and national character of the Chinese, which thus speaks of the insurgent movement in the Celestial Empire: "The civil war in China is another mysterious feature in the politics of the East, with respect to its beneficial results on the well-being of the Chinese. Thus far its consequences have been disastrous and bad in every point of view, and worse seems like to result, whichever party prevails. The Empire is weakened by the want of specie, long ago paid out for opium, and the government is crippled by the want of confidence in its ability and resources among the masses of the people. Hereabout the insurgents have no great number of decided adherents, yet the appearance of even a small army would nearly overthrow the constituted authorities, owing to the prestige they have obtained. Foreigners generally wish them success."

The Pacific Railroad.—A correspondent of the Alton Telegraph, writing from Oregon, in reference to the Pacific Railroad, says:

The chief and grand object with all the writers who have discussed this subject, is to discover some practicable pass through the Sierra Nevada mountains, which answers to the Cascade mountains in the north. This range of mountains extends many hundred miles North and South; and from my own personal observation of the country and those mountains, I am quite well satisfied that there is but one practical pas through them, and this pass is in the vicinity of the Klamet lakes, where the mountain range has been entirely blown away by some convulsions of the earth in by-gone years, and left in its place a smooth pass to the lakes, out of which the Sacramento river takes its rise, and down which stream a convenient, easy and practicable route can be had to San Francisco.

Mexico and her English Creditors.—The London News contains a letter addressed by President Santa Anna, of Mexico, to his Excellency, Senor Don Castillo y Lanzas, the Mexican Minister at London, and by him communicated to the chairman of the committee of the Mexican bondholders, agreeably to the intentions of Santa Anna, in which he expresses his satisfaction that Mexican bonds have risen four to five per cent, in consequence of the news of the formation of a National bank in Mexico which was to take the charge of punctually paying the interest of the National debt. He declares his determination to use every endeavor to secure the regular payment of interest due Mexican bondholders, and adds, "I shall not rest nor retire from the Government until I see established a railway, a bank, and a grand system of government and finance."

Effects of Railroads.—It will be seen from the annexed paragraph, from the Louisville Journal, that the State of Kentucky begins to feel the vivifying effects of railroads upon its growth, business and wealth. The Louisville Journal says:

"In 1848 Louisville had not a single railroad running into her. Since then she has raised $800,000 for the building of the Louisville and Franklin Railroad, has subscribed $200,000 to the Jeffersonville and Columbus Co., $1,000,000 to the Lonisville and Frankfort Company to enable them to build a branch road to Knoxville. The value of the property in Louisville, in 1848, when she entered upon the grand scheme of railroad building, was a little over $16,000,000; now, after five years only, it is a little less than $30,000,000, and the city was never increasing more rapidly in population, and never exhibited more evidence of general prosperity."

Accident at the Mass Meeting in New York.—At the democratic (hard shell) mass meeting, on the 26th ult., the platform fell, injuring a number of persons. The accident occurred after ex-Senator Dickinson had spoken, and just as James T. Brady, Esq., had commenced a speech. About a dozen persons were seriously injured. Michael Walsh, Esq., member of Congress elect, was found partially wedged between two large joists, and was injured to such an extent as to be perfectly insensible. Physicians, after examination at the Clinton House, whither he was conveyed, were unanimous in the opinion that Mr. Walsh was dangerously injured, principally internally. The spine and kidneys are supposed to be severely affected, and the breast also sustained injury. Blood was also forced from his lungs out of his mouth. His condition is very precarious. Mr. Myers, of Albany, injured fatally; Edward Higgins, a boy, had a leg broke; P. Flood, Mr. Kearnan, B. Davis, A. Nesbitt and son, Capt. Cornell and T. O'Connor, were all more or less injured, but not dangerously.

The Author of the Junius Letters.—A letter from Macaulay appears in the new edition of Lord Mahon's History of England, just published in London, in which the illustrious historian declares his firm conviction that Sir Philip Francis was the author of the Junius Letters, and that the arguments which go to prove that he was so, remain as strong as before they had been attacked by the advocates of other opinions. He adds: "I have always believed that Francis kept silent because he was well known to have received great benefits from persons who he had, as Junius, or as Veteran, abused with great malignity." He moreover mentions the fact that there is in existence a long private letter from Junius to George Grenville, which contains no decisive indications of the writer's situation, but on the whole it seems to be written by a man not very high in rank or fortune. The tone, though not by any means abject, is that of an inferior."

The Fresnel Light.—An interesting object at the Crystal Palace is said to be the Fresnel Light, set up by Captain Mead, of the Corps of Topographical Engineers. It is a revolving or flashing light, about ten feet high and six feet in diameter, made in the shape of a twenty-four sided glass, terminating in a truncated cone or dome, and containing over one thousand lenses or prisms, nicely fitted together, and reflecting an immense body of light. Its cost in Paris was some $7000 or 8000, and it is to be put up at Cape Hatteras.

Turkey and the World's Fair.—The Baltimore Sun of the 27th ult. says:

We learn from our Constantinople correspondent that the Sultan of Turkey intended to dispatch one of his ships with specimens of the peculiar fabrics of his country, to the Exhibition of the industry of all Nations at New York, but that the threatening aspect of affairs in the East, produced by the complicated nature of the Russo-Greek question, involving the necessity of his retaining as much as possible of the material of war in the Turkish waters, prevented him from gratifying this laudable intention.

Emigration to North Carolina.—The North Carolina papers are discussing means to draw foreign emigration to that State. It seems that of the twenty-one millions of acres of land in that State, less than six millions are improved; and for these six millions there is not one laborer for every twenty-five acres, whereas a high state of cultivation would require five times as many. There is also a great demand for common laborers for public works, railways, plank roads, etc.

United States Ship Cape Horn.—The gales off the Horn were very severe during June and July, and many of the best clipper ships from the Atlantic ports were knocked about in this stormy region in a distressing manner. The ship Frigate Bird, at San Francisco, from Philadelphia and Baltimore, in good portion of her cargo being taken in bags, we believe, was off the Cape forty days, during thirty of which she experienced a continual succession of westerly gales, with heavy seas on her beam ends, in which position she lay—fifty six hours of that part of her deck load of provisions carried away bend of foremast sprung foremast, and sustained other damage, causing the ship to leak badly; and rendering it necessary to throw overboard a portion of her cargo. The ship Lucas, of Philadelphia, was off the Cape for sixty days, and also sustained much damage.

No Law For the Case.—A case lately occurred in which a young man found, nearly starved to death in a damp cellar in Boston, where he had been kept by his father while sick, without suitable food, and without any person being permitted to see him. He subsequently died and the inhuman parent was arrested, and last week was put on trial on a charge of manslaughter; but, although the allegations against him, it is said, were proved, he was discharged, the Court deciding that the indictment was null, on the ground that the father was not legally bound to support his son, he being over twenty one years of age.

Serenade to Capt Ingraham.—A letter in the Newark Advertiser, dated Gunon, September 2, says:

Capt Ingraham, of the sloop-of-war St. Louis, now at Spezzia, was serenaded a few nights since, by a large company of Italians in boats, and received a complimentary address from them in commemoration of his conduct at Smyrna. The affair excited the attention of the foreign Consuls here, and the local police deemed it prudent to warn the parties to abstain in future from such demonstrations.

The Administration on Louis Kossuth's Letter.—It is stated that with regard to the letter of Lord John Russell on the Cuba question, Mr. Marcy has long since taken occasion to communicate the President's views to Mr Buchanan, who will doubtless bring the matter promptly and forcibly to the attention of the British Government. The position of the Administration, it is said, is decided, and does not differ materially from the views so admirably expressed by Mr. Everett in his letter of the 17th ultimo.

Desertion of Whale Ships.—A letter from Auckland, dated the 9th February, states that a regular stampede had been produced among the sailors on board of the whale ships, in consequence of the circulation of false reports of the discovery of gold mines within forty miles of the port. In some instances vessels were completely deserted; but, on finding that they had been humbugged, the men returned to their work.

Swedish Emigrants.—During the latter part of September the population of the Great West has received a prospective accession in the Swedish emigrants by the ship Lexington, Captain Murphy, which arrived at Boston, in forty-four days from Gottenburg. When the Lexington sailed she had 208 passengers; 18 died on the passage, and 16 are now in the hospital on Deer Island. The remainder are en route for Indiana.

Another Bank in New York.—A rumor is current in German circles in New York that the Bank of Darmstadt, an institution of high character, with a capital of $20,000,000, proposes to establish a branch in that city with a capital of $10,000,000, and there is reason, it is said, to believe that the rumor is well founded. The introduction of such an amount of foreign capital into that city could not fail to have a very marked effect upon the money market.

The grand jury of Philadelphia have found indictments charging misdemeanor in office against Thomas J. P. Stokes, Lazaretto Physician, and Matthew Vanduesu, Jr., Master of Quarantine, for the Port of Philadelphia, on the ground of neglect of duty in allowing the bark Maudurin, with the yellow fever on board, and in an unclean condition, to pass up to the city.

Progress of City Railroads.—The London press is discussing the subject of railways for city travel in London, and the feeling is unanimous in its favor, the only question being as to the best and most convenient road for public travel in crowded thoroughfares. Paris recently decided to have several built on different plans.

Wine Trade.—The reviews in the London papers of the British trade reports for the month of July, made up to 5th August, make mention of an enormous increase in the wine import, 1,119,481 gallons against 528,502 for month ending 5th August, 1852. The dealers who have capital have bought heavily on speculation against the wine disease.

French Speculations.—As there appears to be some desire to reduce the large amount of surplus revenue in the U. S. Treasury, a correspondent of the N. Y. Journal of Commerce suggests that the claimants for French spoliations hold a general meeting, to adopt measures to urge Congress, at its coming session, to pass the bill to liquidate the debt so long due them.

New York, Sept. 29.—The dates from London by the Washington are to the 13th inst.

Russell's ship yard at London was destroyed by fire on the 10th September. The loss is estimated at £600,000. A panic is reported in the London Stock Exchange, in consequence of the very threatening aspect of the Eastern question.

New Orleans Relief Fund.—The New York Committee of the Howard Association have announced the close of their labors, no more aid being needed at New Orleans. The entire amount of their collection is $57,405,11, of which $33,890,00 was collected in New York city.

The Chattanooga Advertiser states that a further reduction of freight on cotton from Chattanooga to Charleston and Savannah has been made, so that the rate from Tennessee river to the seaboard will henceforth be sixty cents.

The Merchants' Ledger has made a calculation of the number of persons who have died since the commencement of the Christian era. It sums up the deaths at three billions one hundred and forty millions.

A Dahlia has been raised by Mrs. A. A. Boyd, at Wrightsville, Pa., which is ten feet ten inches in height, and measures four inches round the trunk. It has on it at the present time ninety buds and blossoms.

New York Ship Building.—Business in the New York ship yards, it is said, is just now very brisk. There are in process of construction, 8 steamers, 8 clipper and packet ships, 3 barks, 5 steamboats, 1 propeller, 6 schooners, 1 sloop, 2 yachts and 3 lighters, an aggregate of 30,467 tons.

Washington Territory.—The Columbian, published at Olympia, in this territory, speaks in the most cheering terms of the "present and future" of Washington. The immense additional population has created new wants, particularly of flour and other staple articles.

"Pray Miss C.," said a gentleman the other evening, "why are the ladies so fond of officers?"

"How stupid!" replied she; "is it not natural that a lady should like a good offer sir?"

An exchange gives an account of a dog in Roxbury that drinks and chews tobacco like an old sailor. All the well-bred puppies in the town shun him.

A friend of ours says that the only man that really takes to him is the Sheriff, and he never lets slip an opportunity of showing his attachment.

Business is brisk at the Philadelphia Navy Yard. The U. S. steamers San Jacinto and Fulton are preparing there, and the Cyane is daily expected.

A few days ago a sale of Durham cattle and Cotswold sheep took place in Bourbon county, Ky. One bull brought $6,001, and a ram $1,010.

"What are you writing such a big hand for, Pat?" "Why you see my grandmother's deaf, and I am writing a loud letther to her."

TELEGRAPHIC.

Further by the Americas.

New York, October 1.

The following are the most interesting items of general intelligence brought by the Americas:

Russia and Turkey.

Advices from Constantinople state that great excitement prevails at that capital with regard to the relations with Russia. Placards are posted on the walls and along the public thoroughfares calling upon the "Faithful" to join in attacking the Russians.

The Turkish Government is said to have prepared a manifesto couched in warlike language, and forming, indeed, a declaration of war; but, upon the special demand of the Powers, the Sultan had consented to postpone its issue for a short time. His preparations for war, however, continue active.

The Pasha of Egypt promises to furnish additional forces to the extent of 15,000 men.

Later accounts have been received from Wallachia. The Russian commander at Bucharest, in general orders to his troops, said that Russia was called up to destroy Paganism, and those who would oppose her would be annihilated.

Austria and the United States.

Austria is endeavoring to induce the European powers generally to demand from the United States a declaration of their views with regard to European affairs. It is reported that the United States has promised active assistance to Switzerland in her opposition to Austria.

Letters from Vienna state that it is fully expected there that the Cabinet at Washington will consent to give up Costa to Austria.

Sardinia.

The Austrian Minister at Turin is instructed to express the displeasure of his Government at the friendly relations existing between Sardinia and the United States.

Uncle Tom's Cabin.

The Commissioner of the Holy Inquisition has again condemned Uncle Tom's Cabin, pronouncing it damnable and pernicious in its tendencies.

Meeting of the Sovereigns.

The King of Prussia was to meet the Emperors of Russia and Austria at Olmutz.

India.

Late accounts from the East state that the cholora was ravaging upper India, and the crops were bad. A great famine was prevailing in Burmah.

China.

The revolutionary army in China remained in the same position as at the last previous advices. The attempt of the Tartar Government to take Amoy had failed. Trade was dull.

England and Turkey.

A courier had been dispatched from London to Constantinople with instructions to Lord Stratford de Redcliff, enjoining him to employ all the means in his power to induce the Sultan to accept the Vienna note in its original form. The British Minister is authorized to allow the squadron to enter the Bosphorus and disembark troops for the purpose of causing the decision of the Sultan to be respected.

There has been no disagreement between France and England with regard to the Turkish question.

Late from Newfoundland.

Late advices from Newfoundland state that the potato crop is an entire failure, on account of the rot, and there are apprehensions of a famine. The papers urge the Government to call an early session of the Legislature to provide means for the emergency.

Later from Bermuda.

Accounts from Bermuda are received up to September 25. The deaths on St. George's Island by the yellow fever, to that time, amounted to over three hundred, being an eighth of the entire population of the Island. The epidemic was abating.

Still Later from Vienna—Austria Withdrawing.

New York, October 3.

The America brings still later intelligence respecting the Eastern question than that previously given in her accounts. A telegraphic dispatch had been received from Vienna, announcing the fact that Austria declines acting any longer with the other powers, and that instructions had been forwarded to the Austrian ambassador at Constantinople to assure the Sultan that he must accept the note of the conferences at Vienna. This gave a still more serious aspect to affairs.

Still Later from Europe.

EASTERN QUESTION—JAPAN EXPEDITION.

Important from Spain.

New York, Monday, Oct. 3.

The Collins steamer Baltic has arrived here bringing dates from Liverpool to the 21st September, four days later than the account brought by the America. She brings very interesting intelligence, of which the following is a summary:

General Intelligence.

The Eastern Question.—The condition of the Eastern Question remains nearly unchanged. The Conference at Vienna is yet in session, endeavoring to smooth matters between the contesting parties. It is reported that new modifications will be adopted conciliatory of both Russia and Turkey; but it is apprehended that before the measure will be accomplished, the armies on the Danube will come into collision. Servia remains neutral.

El Diario, of Madrid, says that the French Government entertains confident hopes that the difficulties will be settled without a resort to arms, and adds that the Emperor of Russia will not, under any circumstance, commence hostilities; but that a definite decision cannot be expected before the middle of October.

Shipments of Egyptian troops have been made in considerable numbers.

American Minister to Austria.—The new American Minister has arrived at Vienna, and will soon deliver his credentials to the Emperor.

Mr. Soulé.—Mr Soulé, the American Minister to Spain, left Paris on the 19th of September for Madrid.

Expected Revolution in Spain.—Letters from Madrid state that a ministerial crisis is soon expected. In private political circles, the propriety of deposing Queen Isabella is freely discussed.

Japan Expedition.—The Japan Expedition sailed from Shanghai on the 23d of July, bound for the coast of Japan.

World's Fair.—The Pasha of Egypt has sent a commissioner to the World's Fair at New York.

Cholera in England.—The cholera is still spreading among the English ports.

Prussia.—The King of Prussia has declined the invitation to attend the meeting between the Emperors of Russia and Austria at Olmutz.

TURKISH AFFAIRS.

New York, October 1.

The Chief Dragoman of the Russian Embassy had arrived at Constantinople, attended by several steamers. The new levy of 80,000 troops, ordered by the Sultan, was going on actively. The troubles between the Porte and the Hospoders were not settled.

HOPES OF PEACE.

It was rumored in London on Saturday (the 16th) that France and England had sent a messenger, urgently demanding that the Sultan accept the Vienna Note. There was a growing feeling in favor of the maintenance of peace.

MARCY AND HULSEMANN.

New York, October 4.

Chevalier Hulsemann yesterday had a long interview with Secretary Marcy at Albany, where the Secretary is now staying. It is rumored that an arrangement has been effected, under which Costa is to be released and returned to the United States.

BLACK WARRIOR IN NEW YORK.

New York, October 3.

The steamer Black Warrior has arrived here, bringing dates of the 27th inst. from Havana.

The notorious ship Lady Suffolk, which was seized some time since on the coast of Yucatan, had arrived at Havana in charge of an officer of the Mexican Navy; her Captain and crew being charged with having equipped her for the Slave trade.

Another cargo of Slaves had been landed at or near Trinidad de Cuba.

A slight political disturbance had taken place at Cardenas.

It was believed at Havana that Senor Pureu-

He would soon supercede Canedo, as Captain General of the Island.

The house of the Marquis de Diego, in Havana, had failed for two hundred and fifty thousand dollars.

GREAT GALE ON LAKE ERIE.

New York, October 4.

There has been a great gale on Lake Erie, which has done much damage to the shipping, and many lives have been lost.

NEW YORK COTTON MARKET.

New York, October 4.

The cotton market here continues dull, and to-day's sales embrace barely 700 bales.

ARRIVAL OF THE CRESCENT CITY.

New York, October 4.

The steamship Crescent City arrived here yesterday from Havana, bringing 600 passengers and one million of dollars worth of gold.

RAILROAD NEGOTIATION.

Mobile, October 6.

Mr. Hallett has succeeded in negotiating a loan, and obtaining the iron sufficient for the completion of the railroad from this city [to

Arrival of the Falcon.

LATER FROM PANAMA AND ASPINWALL.

The U. S. Mail steamer Falcon, A. G. Gray, commander, arrived at this port on Saturday morning from Aspinwall bringing full files of California papers to the 31s of August, and papers from Panama to the 20th, and from Aspinwall to the 22d ult. The news from San Francisco is no later, than that already published. The Falcon was detained at Aspinwall on account of the non-arrival of the Georgia until the 22d. At that date she was ordered to sail with the mails and passengers to be transferred at Havana to the steamer for this port. When about an hour at sea, a steamer came in sight and proved to be the Crescent City, which had been sent in place of the Georgia, with her mails, passengers, etc. [illegible] for New York. The Falcon returned to port, [illegible] her mails, passengers, etc. [illegible] for New Orleans direct.

The City carried to New York the first shipment of Australian gold to that place. It was conveyed by Adams & Co.'s Express direct from Australia.

Very little rain had fallen on the Isthmus, and the roads were in good traveling order.

FROM PANAMA.—A new Spanish paper called El Reformador has been issued in Panama.

A new law of marriage has been promulgated in New Grenada, by which the matrimonial bond may be dissolved by mutual consent.

The Star of the 11th ult. congratulates its readers on the conclusion of a contract with Messrs. R. Aspinwy & Co. for transporting the U. S. Mails across the Isthmus, and also complains of the previous management of postal arrangements.

The paper of the same date says:

No stronger proof need be adduced of the healthiness of the Isthmus of Panama at the present time than the fact that the report of the physician of the Foreign Hospital, published yesterday, only announces two deaths during the month at that institution.

The ceremony of baptism was performed on twelfants in the Protestant Chapel at Panama on the 12th ult., being the first ceremony of the kind ever witnessed there.

An extraordinarily rich gold mina was reported to Panama to have been discovered in Peru. It was considered an ordinary day's work to take yet twenty-five pounds of gold dust!

The Star learns from Southern papers that another expedition had been fitted out by Gen. Flores against Ecuador, but places no reliance in the report.

The Star of the 18th ult. contains the following items:

We learn that a representation having been made by the U. S. Consul at this city to the Postmaster General at Washington, informing him of the inconvenience experienced in the transportation of heavy bags of mail matter across the Isthmus, the latter functionary has issued an order to the effect, that no mail bags shall be dispatched either from the Atlantic or Pacific ports of the United States, to cross the Isthmus of Panama, weighing over one hundred pounds. This is an excellent arrangement, and will doubtless materially facilitate the transit of the mails between this port and Aspinwall.

The Minister to Bogota is at present in Panama, on his way from the former city to [illegible].

The entire number of voters for the coming election in the three parishes of San Felipe, Santa Ana and Caledonia, which constitute Panama, do not exceed 1,000.

In San Felipe there are 335 voters: in Santa Ana 400; and in Caledonia, probably 200, or [illegible].

We have not yet ascertained the number of troops in the Province of Panama, but presume they will not exceed 6,000 in all.

We learn by a private letter received from [illegible] that the Kangaroo, the first of the Australian steamships will not arrive at Panama before the 1st month of February.

We learn from the ruinously high rents in Panama, the Star says:

[illegible] families have been obliged to [illegible] they could not afford to [illegible] house rent; others [illegible] became totally bankrupt through [illegible] causes, and at the present moment we [illegible] class of the most respectable of our [illegible] community who are about closing [illegible] establishments, and others who [illegible] to remove their families to the United States, for the simple reason that all the profits of their business have to be paid over to their landlords.

Under the circumstances it gives us pleasure to announce the fact that a meeting of the tenants has been called in order to resist these [illegible] demands in future; and we are thoroughly convinced that, once the subject is properly taken up, there will be no difficulty in carrying it out.

The Star gives the following account of the shooting of an unarmed negro boy by the Dogberrys of the Panama police. It is decidedly [illegible]:

The boy, it appears, was accused of stealing, which he denied, and refused to deliver himself up. The police force then attacked him with drawn swords, and muskets with fixed bayonets, but the boy kept them all at bay, and, probably, would have escaped his escape, had not the police [illegible] where the police, with the assistance of the outsiders, succeeded in securing him with a strong rope. Even then the police were afraid to take him to jail, and were obliged to lash him to a cart for that purpose. The boy afterwards taken from the cart by Mr. [illegible], who conducted him to the jail.

The Star of the 14th says:

The British steamers have brought [illegible] laborers for the railroad from Caribbean [illegible].

The Courier of the 14th [illegible] from Barbadoes, announces the completion of the bridge over the river [illegible]. It says:

The bridge, from abutment to abutment, is a distance of 201 feet, exclusive of the river proper. There are yet two piers to be built, to meet the road on the opposite side, both of which are of minor importance to the one now finished—and it is fairly calculated that within three months the cars will be crossing the river, and landing passengers far beyond it, doing away entirely with [illegible] transportation, which has always been so [illegible] a source of trouble and dissatisfaction among the traveling community.

By the Falcon we have received a copy of the San Diego Herald of the 3d ult., being three days later than the dates received by the overland mail from Mazatlan.

We learn from the Herald that four hundred head of cattle lately sold in San Diego for $12, [illegible] or $13 per head.

THE GRAPE DISEASE.—A correspondent of the New York Evening Post, who has recently returned from Germany, gives the following gloomy account of the progress of the grape disease:

Let America prepare for dear wines, because all over Europe that fatal disease called "Traubenkrankheit" is spreading. It consists of white mildew, that spreads over the whole grape, and completely destroys it. It is an inexplicable to vineyard men as the potato disease is to farmers. Italy and Tyrol are fatally affected by it. In Germany it is just beginning to make its appearance. Grapes on trellises are worse affected by it than those in vineyards. No cure has yet been found, and it is spreading all over Europe growing Europe. The papers are full of proposed remedies, but none give permanent relief. Political economists stand aghast at a failure in which there is to be neither wine for the rich nor potatoes for the poor.

Many papers state the European grape sickness to be the same as that of the United States, but such is not the fact. Ours is a rot: theirs is a mildew. Ours shows itself by blue spots upon the berries; theirs by a white mildew all over the grape. Ours leaves a few sound berries; theirs destroys the whole grape.

TO A FLY.

By Nobody.

Oh! become elevated brushing,
May to evolve thy spinning, crushing—
Go to, teazer!
If with me thou'st best on fighting,
Why, then perseverance lighting
On my sneezer!

Come, sport it briskly leaping,
Straight thou comest—prying, peeping
Up each nostril.
Then thou better make some mention
If thy morning fierce intention
Be not hostile.

Man of reason, though not seeding,
Grant a purpose in thy being,
One supposes.
Thou wert made to madden mortals,
By persistence at the portals
Of their noses!

Maybe thou art, by agreement,
Nose surveying, and vellement,
Tickling, liching
Of callous or sinecure cleaning—
Ne'er consultant a moment's pausing
Of their twitchings.

Much warrant, by thou hearest,
Still I marvel that thou darest
Thus to ramble
Round my nasal promontory!
Dost achieve some insect glory
By each gambol?

I would provoke a saint or preacher,
Thus to have his foremost feature
My-inspected:
Thus my heart completely steeling,
How may Uncle Toby's dealing
Be expected!

Thou shalt fall! thy sure trepanning
I, thy foe, so slyly planning;
Sa—I catch thee!
Teazer taken—thus bitten—
Thus now that thy friends I've written.
I dispatch thee!

An Englishman traveling in Mississippi lately, took out his note-book and made the following entry:

"Nota Bene.—They flay people alive here, as they do slaughtered oxen. As a proof of it, see the following paragraph in the Granada Rapublican":

We understaud that Parson Parks was skinned by Colonel Wilcox during the discussion between the latter gentleman and Mr. Barry, at Carrollton last week. The person made some remark in relation to the Colonel, while he was speaking, when the Colonel turned upon him, and scored him until his jaw hung very low, and his mouth presented a huge obtuse angle, embellished with rows of teeth; while the whole of the cavity alluded to offered an enticing opportunity for the study of the anatomy of its several appendages. The red and fiery appearance of the orifice we doubt not showed him to be still a fire-eater.

Horrible! exclaimed the Englishman—and he returned the note book to his pookot!

A MAN WITH TWENTY WIVES.—A man calling himself Dr. William Hunter, but whose real name is said to be Nnthaniel J. Bird, is in jail at Camden, N. J., on a charge of bigamy, and various other charges. Elizabeth Harrington, a lady of Philadelphia, visited him in prison, and ascertained he was the man to whom she was married on the 9th of July last. On the same day he was visited by another lady from Kensington, named Mary Thomas, to whom he was married in May last. It is also stated that he has a wife in Rondlng, another in Wilmington, Del., and another yet in Philadelphia. The prisoner is only about twenty-three years of age, and it is stated, declares that he has twenty wives, a statement which may be true, as more than one-fourth of that number has been found within a few days. It is alleged that he abandoned each wife seen after marriage, and that they never heard of him after until his recent arrest. The affair creates the greatest excitement in Camden, and has induced an immense number of people to seek admission for the purpose of seeing him.

WHAT THE "SKEETER" SAID TO THE SLEEPY GENTLEMAN.—Hum-um—hum! Shut your eyes, sir; tha noies you hear is but flies, sir; a whim—h-h-m! Don't be scared, sir; go to sleep, your sheets were aired, sir. Amu-n—a h-y-m-n it is I'm singing; it's music in your ear is singing; I won't ating you, sting you. s-t-i-n-g! I'd scorn to do so mean a thing—A h-u-m-bug it is, not me, that bites. Take care! don't slap, I never fight. Slap! whang! Take care! you nearly hit me. 'Twas'at me, my friend, that bit ye. There, again! it's coma to blows, you fool; I didn't tonch your nose. Whet in the world's the use of slapping—your own face—when you should be napping?—A-h-s-m-m-m, don't be alarmed; you really ought to be quite charmed. Hum-m-m! don't play the boy; I merely sing yon lullaby. A wham, again!—There, there; now go to sleep. Aha! you're going. Now for n feast, old chap; I go in. All right! he's gone; I'll have my fill. Say, old sleepy! here's my bill.

A HOOSIER DODGE.—They have a stringent anti-liquor law in Indiana, but manago to evade it to a great degree. The following, as related by one of the country newspapers, is the latest invention of the Committee on "Ways and Means:"

On Sunday last, at the camp-ground some four miles east of this, as a couple of bloods were seated on a log in the woods, lamenting the scarcity of water and absence of anything stronger, a chap walked up and offered to sell them a small watermelon which he held under his arm. They told him they didn't want it; but he insisted that it was a good melon, well flavored, and finally thrust it under their noses, at the same time removing a plug to show them it was good. The effect was magical. It was instently purchased, and, upon a further examination, was found to contain about a quart of the pure juice of the corn. Melons advanced.

THE EARTHQUAKE AT THEBES.—It was lately stated in the foreign news that the town or village of Thebes, in Egypt, had been nearly destroyed by an earthquake. It appears the town consisted partly of stone houses, which were all new, and partly of old houses of wood and bricks. All were more or less injured, the former having been completely shaken to pieces, and the latter having been rendered uninhabitable. Eleven persons were killed, and eighteen taken from the ruins. The survivors were encamped in the open air, and were suffering from the want of water, the earthquake having dried up the wells. Seventeen villages in the vicinity of Thebes, as far as Plates, had partially suffered, and one or two houses fell at Chalkis. The shocks continued for some days, one to three shocks within the twenty-four hours.

SALE OF DAYLESFORD, THE SEAT OF WARREN HASTINGS.—The estate of Daylesford, Worcestershire, England, the seat of the late Warren Hastings, has been bought by Mr. Grisewood, of the London Stock Exchange, for £30,250. The sale of the furniture at the mansion occupied six days, and produced about £4000. It was purchased by Warren Hastings in 1788 for £11,500, and subsequently he placed improvements upon it costing £40,000. He resided there for twenty-four years after his trial for impeachment, and died in 1812, and was buried there. His wife resided upon the estate until 1833, when she also died, leaving it to her son by her first husband. He died recently, and hence the sale.

CROSSING THE STREET.—Legal Decision.—At one of the city courts in Cincinnati a few days since, a driver was fined $25 for running his wagon against a pedestrian who was crossing the street. The judge decided that at all regular street crossings pedestrians had the right of way, and that the law requires a driver to hold up when he sees a foot passenger crossing in front of his team. The same principle of law holds good elsewhere, and is worthy the notice of both drivers and pedestrians.

A MYSTERIOUS VISITOR.—Among the recent visitors to London we find notified an extraordinary dense fog. This visitor, though somewhat obscure, created a considerable sensation, and a sort of general illumination was got up by the London shopkeepers on the occasion. The fog arrived from the Thames, and made so much of the short time of remaining, that the visitor was nearly all over London in a very brief period. [Punch.

SCHOOL MASTER.—"Bill Tompkins, what is a widow?"

Bill.—"A widder is a married woman that hasn't got an husband, 'cause he's dead."

Master.—"Very well, what is a widower?"

Bill.—"A widderer is a man that runs arter widders."

Master.—"Well, Bill, that's not exactly according to Johnson, but it will do."

Dickens, it is said, has cleared $20,000 from the "Bleak House."

"Taking the Starch out of 'am."

A lot of idlers stood near the end of a pier which ran out into the Hudson river, in one of the small towns near Albany, a few days ago, amusing themselves with hurling stones into the broad stream each vieing with the other in the endeavor to pitch a missile at the farthest distance from the shore, whon a tall, rugged-built Vermonter, direct from the Green Hills, suddenly made his appearance in their midst, and for a while remained a quiet observer of their movements.

He was a brawny, strong-looking Yankee, and was very decently clad. The efforts of the little party had been exhibited over and over again, when the stranger quietly picked up half a brick which lay near him, and giving it a jerk, it fell into the water a long way beyond the line which had as yet been reached by the foremost of the crowd. At the conclusion of this feat a loud hnrrah went up from half a dezen voices around him.

It was a clear day in October, and the men, determined not to be outdone, renewed their attempts; but the Vermonter, without saying a syllable to any one, continued to pitch the pebbles far into the stream, which seemed to annoy one of them, in a green jacked, the apparent leader of the gang, who declared he wouldn't be beaten by a "feller right straight out o' the woods, no how," and sidling up to the stranger, he determined to make his acquaintance.

"Where do you come from, neighber?" inquired the other.

"Me! Wal, I hails from Vermont, jes now, friend!"

"Ha'nt been in these parts long, I reeken?"

"Wal—ne. Not edzactly yere—but up and down, sorter."

"Yla—so I 'sposed."

"Yaas," continued the green 'un, carelessly, and seizing a big billet of wood, he twirled it over his head, and it landed several rods from the chore in the water.

"You've a little strength in your arms, neighbor?"

"Some 'punkins' in them flippers, stranger. Up in aour toawn, more'n a munth ago, I driv them are knuckles rite strut thru a board, more'n a ninch 'naff thick!"

"Haw—haw!" shouted his hearers, the man in the green jacket laughing loudest.

"May be you don't 'believe it."

"Not much," answered the crowd.

"We aint very green down here in York—we aint," said the fellow in the green jacket; "we've been about, you see."

"Wal, jes' yous look yere, friend," continued the Vermonter, in the most plausible manner; "up in aour caountry, we've a purty big river, considering—luyun river, it's called, and may be you've heard on it. Wal, I hove a man clean across that river t'other day, and he came daown fair and square on t'other side."

"He, ha, ha!" yelled his auditors.

"Wal, naow, yew may laff, but I ken den it agin."

"Do what?" said green jacket, quickly.

"I can take and heeve yon across that river yondor, jest like open and shet."

"Bet you ten dollars of it."

"Dono!" said the Yankee; and drawing forth an X, (upon a broken down-cast bank,) he covered the bragger's shinplaster.

"Kin you swim, foller?"

"Like a duck," said green jaoket; and without further parley, the Vermonter seized the knowing Yorker stoutly by the nape of the neck and the seat of his pants, jerked him from his foothold, and with an almost superhuman effort dashed the bully heels over head from the dock, some ten yards iate the Hudson river.

A terrific shout rang through the crowd, as he floundered into the water, and amid the jears and screams of his companions, the ducked bully put back to the shore and scrambled up the bank, half frozen, by this sudden and involuntary cold bath.

"I'll teke that ten spot, if you please," said the shivering loafer, advancing rapidly to the stake holders. "You took us for green horns, eh? We'll show you how to do things down here in York"—and the fellow claimed the twenty dollars.

"Wal, I reok'n yeou wunt take no ten spots jis' yit, oap'n."

"Why? You've lost the bet."

"Not edzactly. I didn't calkilate on deuln it the fust time; but I tell yeou I kin dau it"—and, in spite of the loafer's utmost efforts to escape him, he seized him by the scruff and the seat of his over-alls, and pitched him three yards further than upon the first trial!

Again the bully returned, amid the shouts of his mates, who enjoyed the sport immensely.

"Third time nover fails," said the Yankee, stripping off his coat; "I kin deu it, I tell ye."

"Hold on!" said the almost petrified victim.

"And I will deu it, if I try till to-morrow mornin'."

"I give it up!" shouted the sufferer between his teeth, which now chattered like a mad badger's; "take the money."

The Vermonter very coolly pocksted the ten spot, and as he turned away, remarked:

"We aint much acquainted with your smart folks daoun here'n York, but we sometimes take the starch aout of 'em up our way; and p'raps yeou wunt try it on tu strangers again. I reck'n yeou wunt," he continued, and putting on a broad grin of good humor, he left the company to their reflections.

KNICKERBOCKER.—The Editor of "Old Knick" has spread a capital table for September. Here is a tid-bit:

Mark S—— was a very fair specimen of that class of pettifoggers who thrive in some of the by-towns. He had, in his early youth (shrewd people suspected,) possessed a conscience; but coming to years of discretion, he had dispensed with the superfinity, and now stood untrammelled. Mark used to try small causes in Justices' Courts, and looked upon himself as a model of jurisprudence. His principal forte, and that on which he prided himself most, lay in the examination of witnesses. Mark boasted that he could "worm the truth out of a stone;" and perhaps he could; he had wormed the truth completely out of himself, and he approximated somewhat to a stone. In consequence of some rather "sharp practice" in a suit in which he officiated both as counsel and witness, Mark had reason to suspect that the District Attorney was prepuring, in a merry way, an indictment against him for perjury; and being disposed to humor the joke, he carried it out still further—and himself with it—disappearing from his accustomed haunts; and, until the affair had blown over, sojourning—"on a little law business," as he afterwards said, when theroto closely interrogated—on Snipe-Iliff, a kind of Whitefriars, or city of refuge for small criminals; being the same place of which somebody said the inhabitants had broken every law, Sabbath, and Sheriff's head, for the last ten years. And Mark made a good Snipe-Hillian, for he wasn't the man to resist public opinion—" not by no means."

"Well, after his return, he was one day trying a cause before a justice, in his usuel heppy way, in which he had exerted himself if possible, more than usual, to render the position of the witnesses unhappy. At last a boy was called as a witness by the opposition, to whom Mark objected on the ground of his simplicity; that he was 'non compos,' as Mark segely remarked; and he insisted on the voir dire. The boy was accordingly sworn on the preliminary examination, and Mark, assuming his sternest face, and looking at the boy as though he would eye him into a fit:

"'Boy,' said he, 'who meda you?'

"The Lord, I thpothe," lisped the boy, "who made you?"

"Never mind who made me," said Mark, "folks say you are a fool: how is it?"

"I do thay," answered the witness: "that no thign. Thome folkth thay't you won't cheat. Folkth will lie, you thee."

"Boy, no impertinence!" said Mark, glowering fiercely, as the justice checked the subdued snicker that ran around the room. "Suppose you were to commit perjury: do you know what that means?"

"Yeth, sir; thwearing to a lie; juth what you did lath winter, aint it?"

"The witness is clearly incompetent—a rank fool!" appealed Mark to the Court; but the Court "couldn't see it so," and Mark proceeded:

"Well, suppose you were to commit perjury, and swear falsely?—whare would you go to?"

"To Thnipe-Hill, I thpothe," drawled the boy, "where you went lath winter!"

The court smiled a grim smile, and the boy was admitted to testify. Mark didn't gain that suit, as appears from the Justice's docket.

Whittier, in his poem of "Mell Pitcher," thus describes the witches of New England in the present century:

Our witches are no longer old,
And wrinkled hags alone.
But young and gay, and laughing creatures,
With the heart's sunshine in their features.
Their sons are like which dances
Where the ruined hut unveils its attics
Or the low hearthstone and cradle tone
Blandly propitiating infancy.
Soft, dream like new fairy's moan
Above the mighty closing Covers
Sweeter than that which sighed of yore,
Along the charmed Assonian shore!

"Broomers" is a name which the New York Journal of Commerce gives to the ladies' long dresses which sweep the sidewalks of the city, vs. the "Bloomers" worn by those ladies, who put on short frocks and pantaleens. It is said that several fashionable ladies have undertaken to sweep the sidewalks of Broadway with the trains of expensive dresses.

OAK BOWERY FEMALE COLLEGE.

This Institution of learning is under the supervision and control of the Alabama Conference of the M. E. Church South, and has been in successful operation for six years. It is situated about five miles north of the Montgomery and West Point Railroad, in Chambers co., in a healthy country, and among a population, moral, industrious and intelligent.

The Board of Trustees take great pleasure in announcing to the public, the election of the Rev. ALEX. SPEER, of Georgia, to the Presidency of the College. We think it only necessary to be known, that the Institution will be for the next year under the charge and direction of Brother Speer, to awaken a deep interest in behalf of the enterprise throughout the community, and impart confidence of success. His long and faithful service in the M. E. Church as a minister—his age and experience—his natural judgment and sound discretion—his acknowledged literary attainments and ability, authorize the expectation of full patronage on the part of an enlightened public.

A complete corps of Instructors whose names will hereafter be published, will be provided to supply the demand for instruction

Miss MARY J. TOOMER continues Principal in the Music Department; and the unbounded satisfaction hitherto given by Miss Toomer, who we consider has no superior in any country, is a sure guarantee that all who patronise will be pleased.

Through the kind offices of the former President, the Rev. Wm. F. Samford, who solicited contributions for that purpose, a fine and judiciously selected Library, of several hundred volumes, has been purchased, and is now in the possession of the College, embracing some of the most approved and standard literary works, and such as are peculiarly adapted to the purposes of Female Education.

The Tuition Fees will be no higher than usual, and the course of study as extensive as that in any institution of the same grade in the country.

The College Exercises will begin under the proposed organization, on the first Monday in January next—its second session will begin on the first Monday in September, and close at Christmas.

A circular, containing fuller information, will appear over the signature of the President.

FEMALE MASONIC INSTITUTE,

Dayton, Marengo County, Alabama.

Rev. E. D. Pitts, Principal.

TO PARENTS, GUARDIANS, AND THE FRIENDS OF EDUCATION GENERALLY, we would announce the opening of the TENTH Annual Session of the Institute. The healthful locality—the spacious and beautiful grounds—the commodious and convenient buildings—the full supply of Musical Instruments—the fixed purpose of the Trustees to spare no expense or efforts to promote the true interests of FEMALE EDUCATION—and the assiduous devotion of an efficient Faculty to promote the comfort and improvement of Pupils, lead us to expect with confidence a liberal support.

The Principal has taught with marked success in Alabama, Mississippi and Florida, and will consecrate all his energies—physical, intellectual, and moral—to the proper training of the head and heart of those committed to his tutelage.

The services of Miss MARY W. HOWZE, who has been for two years past connected with the Central Masonic University, have been secured. Her intelligence, energy, piety, and felicitous manner of communicating, have justly placed her in the first rank of educators.

The Musical, French, and Ornamental Department will be conducted by competent and skilful Teachers, and all due attention given to the arts and accomplishments that so beautify and adorn the gentler sex.

The Primary Department will be consided alone to a [illegible] and gifted Lady, for we design to attend carefully to that sadly and mischievously neglected class of Pupils.

The Scholastic year is divided into Two Sessions of nearly Five Months each—with no intervening recess. The School opens on the first day of October, and closes with Examination Exercises in the latter part of July. Pupils received at any time, and charged to the end of the Session. For fractions of Sessions each week is counted one twentieth.

The School is not Sectarian or denominational; and the only religious tuition embraces the principles of a pure morality based upon the cardinal doctrines of the Bible.

The Principal and his wife have charge of the Stewards Department, and will tenderly care for the health, manners and morals of those who Board in the Institute. Each boarder will be made to feel as far as possible that she is the loved subject of parental solicitude, and every reasonable wish will be promptly and cheerfully gratified. Yet, Discipline will not be forgotten, and the needful restraints of family government will be thrown around them.

CHARGES PER SESSION OF FIVE MONTHS.

Primary Class	$12 50
Preparatory Class	15 00
Junior and Senior Class	20 00
Music on Piano, Guitar and Harp, (each)	25 00
Drawing, Painting and Embroidery, (each)	10 00
French and German, (each)	15 00
Incidentals	1 00
BOARD (including Washing, Fual and Lights) per month	10 00

Each Boarder must furnish her own Towels, Brushes and Combs, and have each article distinctly marked with her full name.

AN INVARIABLE RULE.—Board and Tuition one-half in advance, and the balance at the end of each Session; and every account must be closed at the end of each Session, by Cash, or by Note.

SPECIAL ARRANGEMENT.

Each Lodge in Marengo County is entitled to select within its jurisdiction, a worthy object of benefaction and have her taught in the Institution without charge, provided said Lodge secure the payment of her Board and supply her with Books and Stationery.

As the Principal is so extensively known, the Committee have to forbear to speak of his character and qualifications, and refer Parents and Guardians to the persons named below.

CHURCH BELLS.

CHURCH FACTORY, STEAMBOAT AND LOCOMOTIVE BELLS constantly on hand, and PEALS and CHIMES of Bells (of any number) cast to order. Improved cast-iron YOKES, with moveable arms attached to these Bells, so that they may be adjusted to ring easily and properly, and springs also, which prevent the clapper from resting on the Bell; thereby prolonging its sound. Hangings complete (including Yoke, Frame and Wheel,) furnished if desired.

An experience of thirty years in this business by their late father, enabled h[illegible] to ascertain the best form for Bells, the combination of metals, and degree of heat requisite for securing in them the greatest solidity, strength and most melodious tones; which improvements, together with his very extensive assortment of patterns, are now held by the subscribers, who, have grown up in the business, and who will use every endeavor to sustain the reputation which the establishment has heretofore enjoyed, both in this and foreign countries; the Bells from which have repeatedly received the highest awards of the New York State Agricultural Society, and American Institute, and at which were completed Chimes and heavy Alarm Bells for different parts of the Union and Canada.

MATHEMATICAL INSTRUMENTS will still be manufactured by the subscribers, of which they will have constantly on hand an assortment of Transit Instruments, Levels, Surveyor's Compasses, (plain, bronze and improved,) etc. Also, Brass or Composition Castings of any size cast to order.

All communications promptly attended to.

Price's Patent Texas Tonic.

The claims of this new discovery are:

1. Its efficacy as an anticeptic, fortifying the System, and giving a healthy action to the Body and vivacity to the Mind, acting on the Blood, Kidneys, Bowels and Skin.

2. It is a certain antidote against Constipation of the Bowels, Torpor of the Liver, Palpitation of the Heart, Termination of Blood to the Brain, Indigestion, Pain in the Head, Chronic Head-ache, Vertigo, and is offered to the public as a remedy for Chills and Fevers. (see certificate Nos. 3 and 4,) and as a preventive to Yellow, Billious and Congestive Fevers, when used as an Anticeptic. (see certificate No. 5.) using it freely, keeping a lively action on the Bowels during the epidemic seasons.

The subscriber would deem it unnecessary to offer any testimonials in favor of this valuable medicine to those who have experimented with it, and only offers a few out of the many highly respectable citizens and others names whose are familiar in the community, for the benefit of those who have not made its acquaintance; and being assured that the TEXAS TONIC only has to be known to be appreciated, he therefore submits the following testimonials:

THO. K. PRICE, 99 Camp street.

1] From President Houston.

CITY OF HOUSTON, May 14, 1842.

DEAR SIR: Having learned that you were about to submit your "Tonic Bitters" to the chances of experiment and public opinion, I take pleasure in rendering you a statement of my opinion. Last May, I think it was, I first learned that such a medicine was in existence. I procured some and commenced its use. I found it of immediate and great advantage to me. My health had not been good since 1834. By the occasional use of your Bitters within the last year (in all not amounting to one bottle) I am satisfied that my general health has not been as good as it is at present within the last seven years.

The use of the Bitters, in proportion to the constitution and the malignity of the disease, will, in my opinion, be attended with the most beneficial effects. I have, in several cases, witnessed the use of a portion of what I had on hand, by others, in cases of head-ache and deranged digestion, and in an case have I known it to fail in giving almost immediate relief. My opinion is so favorable of the medicine that I will keep a supply on hand for family use With considerations of regard, I am yours, sincerely,

SAM HOUSTON.

2] From Judge Johnson, Galveston.

GALVESTON, May 31, 1842.

JOHN PRICE, Esq., Galveston—Respected Sir: I have used your "Texas Tonic" frequently during the last twelve months, as a remedy for Torpor of the Liver and Constipation of the Bowels. The first doses gave me such immediate relief that I have kept a supply of it on hand and use it occasionally ever since. It is, in my opinion, entitled to the highest degree of public confidence.

ROBT. D. JOHNSON, Probate Judge, Galveston.

3] From H. R. W. Hill, Esq., (of Dicks & Hill, N. O.)

NEW ORLEANS, January 22, 1843.

MR. JOHN PRICE: I have, for the last three years, used your "Texas Tonic." Previous to that time I was subject to sick head-ache. Since I commenced the use of your Tonic I have been entirely freed, and I have no doubt, were the medicine used as a bitter, twice a week, it would prevent the most of the diseases of the South, particularly Chills, which I have known the Tonic to effect a cure of by taking half a wine glass full. So well am I satisfied of its efficiency, that I wish you to prepare me a demijohn of it for my plantation. Wishing your medicine may prove that benefit to the human family that I am sure it will, I remain yours, H. R. W. HILL.

4] From Thomas Aikins, of New Orleans.

NEW ORLEANS, March 15, 1843.

JOHN PRICE, Esq., Galveston, Texas—Sir: I have used your "Texas Tonic" in my family for some time past, occasionally myself. We think very highly of the article—in one case particularly—a negro woman of mine took a violent Chill; the same evening I gave her one tabby spoonful, and the result was so favorable that she was well the next day, and no remains until now.

THOMAS AIKINS.

STEAMER FASHION, March 30, 1844.

JOHN PRICE, Esq., Galveston City, Texas—Sir: Early in the year 1843, we commenced the use of your valuable medicine, "Texas Tonic," and have kept a constant supply on hand since. We have found it particularly valuable in cases of indigestion, Constipation of the Bowels, Torpidity of the Liver, a speedy relief and certain cure for sick head-ache. In short, we have found it an article in keeping with your advertisement; and now that the price is reduced, we shall keep a full supply on hand, for both crew and such passengers as may be from time to time indisposed. We hope you may succeed in bringing it into general use, and as an evidence of our personal respect we take the occasion to tender you, at all times, the hospitalities of the steamer Fashion. Respectfully, your obedient servants, A. G. SLEE,
S. W. FULLERTON,

N. B.—Through the past summer, and during the prevalence of Yellow Fever at New Orleans and Mobile, the health of the crew of the Fashion was attributed mainly to the frequent use of your valuable Tonic, the Fashion plying daily between those points. A. G. SLEE.

6] From Dr. Wm. B. Keene.

TRANSYLVANIA MEDICAL INSTITUTE, March 31, 1846.

Your "Texas Tonic" is the most agreeable medicine I have ever used to relieve the Bowels, promoting their peristaltic motion. I have tried it in cases of Ague and Fever with success. The happy combination of ingredients forming the Tonic will always insure its success.

WM. B. KEENE.

7] From Bishop Andrew, of the M. E. Church.

MOBILE, March, 1845.

I have for some time past been in the habit of frequently using Price's Patent Texas Tonic and believe it to be a valuable medicine. I have found it to act finely on the Bowels, and I think also on the Liver

THE CROWN OF THORNS

Sacred Head, now wounded,
With grief and shame weighed down
Now scornfully surrounded
With thorns, thine only crown
O sacred Head, what glory
What bliss, till now was thine!
Yet, though despised and gory
I joy to call thee mine.

What thou, my Lord, hast suffered
Was all for sinners' gain;
Mine, mine was the transgression
But thine the deadly pain.
Lo, here I fall, my Saviour!
'Tis I deserve thy place
Look on me with thy favor,
Vouchsafe to me thy grace.

The joy can never be spoken
Above all joys beside,
When in thy body broken
I thus with safety hide

My Lord, oh life desiring
Thy glory now to see,
Beside thy cross expiring
I'd breathe my soul to thee

What language shall I borrow
To thank thee, dearest friend
For this, thy dying sorrow
Thy pity without end?
O make me thine forever
And should I fainting be,
Lord, let me never, never
Outlive my love to thee.

And when Death, departing
O part me not from thine,
When mortal pangs are darting,
Come, Lord, and set me free
And when my heart must languish
Amidst the final throe
Release me from my anguish
By thine own pain and woe

Be near when I am dying
O show thy cross to me
And for my succor flying,
Come, Lord, to set me free
These eyes new faith receiving
From Jesus shall not move,
For he who dies believing
Dies safely through thy love

LETTER FROM CALIFORNIA

CAMP MEETING—STATE OF THE WORK

Special Correspondence of the Advocate.

The first Camp Meeting, in connection with our branch of the church, south of San Francisco Bay, was held in Pajaro (Pa-ha-ro) valley, August 4, 1853, on a piece of table land extending from the foot of the mountain to the coast side, encircled by a range of low hills which protected the spot from the strong winds that usually prevailed here near the sea shore. Near the centre of this, and at a convenient distance from much water that is pure and good, is a beautiful cluster of live oaks, grouped together as if especially for the purpose, forming an extensive and unbroken shade. Here the altar was reared and the tents pitched. The ground was covered with a thick coat of vegetation which entirely freed the place from dust, no trifling annoyance ordinarily on such occasions. We used no enormous structure of posts, pillar frame and boards, to shelter the congregation, the thick foliage of this dense grove affording ample protection from the sun which is all that is desirable. Nor need our tents be planked and shingled at a great outlay of time and money. By no means: this is a tent country: there is no time for such extravagance and needless expenditures. Four rebelled rails planted in the ground, with canvas stretched around and over the top, or if more convenient, bushes will supply the place of the canvas at the top, and, the tent is ready for the occupant. A tent it is, not a house built without the sound of a hammer, in thirty minutes, and may be taken down in five. And yet it answers the end designed as well as the most costly, for it thunders not here in wheat harvest. No fear that a swiftly passing cloud will dispose of its watery contents to the consternation of the assembled worshipers. The preacher, when announcing his text hears no distant thunder, and, sees no thickening gloom, which cause more uneasiness about retaining his congregation, than benefiting them while there. A dense fog may envelope us early in the morning, but soon the sun breaks forth in wonted splendor from a cloudless sky, to finish his daily course without the intervention of a dimming vapor.

Talk not of the splendor and magnificence of your city temples, the workmanship of man. There is a place of worship prepared by the Great Architect himself. It is worthy of the builder: beautiful, grand, majestic. And that quietness and serenity prevailing all around is so conducive to serious thought and holy meditations. In such a temple, with circumstances so favorable, and scenery so inspiring, who could not preach? And then the preacher's voice rings forth so clear and musical, while the simple unvarnished truth seems to acquire additional force and beauty from the place of its delivery. I love to worship God in the quiet grove.

There were three preachers in attendance, besides the one in charge of the circuit, and your correspondent. None of great renown, whose extended fame had excited the anticipations of a gaping multitude. None seeking popular hours at which to display their powers of oratory. None whining around and peevishly complaining because not invited to occupy the stand as frequently as they had desired. A few in number, united in feeling, with no other object in view than the glory of God in the salvation of souls, ready to work any where, at any time, and in any way. They did work, and the Lord was present to work with and through them. The meeting resulted in twenty-four conversions and twenty-nine accessions to the M. E. Church South. The conversions were clear and satisfactory, accompanied by the most intelligent expression of love and joy but entirely free from the extravagances sometimes witnessed on such occasions. One incident I will relate. A sailor of middle age, in dress and deportment a very wicked man, who was accustomed to swearing as other only do swear. With deep feeling he presented himself again and again at the altar of prayer. After remaining there for some time, on Monday at the close of the morning service he arose and retired alone to the wood. Before the next hours service he returned with rustic steps beaming countenance, and tears of joy flowing from his eyes. The first person he met being one of the preachers, grasping his hand, and looking him steadily in the face, he exclaimed, with earnest simplicity, "[illegible]

Among the converts were some of the most influential young men of the place, and a flourishing community. May the great Head of the Church call and send forth some of them to labor in the field already white for the harvest. I have attended meetings of this sort in several of the Southern States, but never did I witness more universal good order and general interest than at this. All in attendance were amply provided for, and not a jarring note or occasion of reproof from first to last.

At the Camp Meeting in connection with Santa Clara Circuit, began August 27, which was held eight miles west, of the town of that name at the foot of the mountains which bound the entire San Jose Valley on the west. On the banks of a bold stream of cold water, flowing from the mountain above and in one of our California groves the people were brought together. This part of the valley is thickly settled. Besides the flourishing towns of San Jose and Santa Clara, within a few miles of the place. Though the attendance was not surely especially was very large. Much said of the meeting as above described is equally applicable to this, and need not be repeated. There were twelve conversions and thirteen accessions to the church. An elderly man, the head of a large family, whose wife and four children had been for some time members of our church, manifested a desire for salvation at an early stage of the meeting. After hearing the difficulties attending an aged sinner's reformation set forth in a discourse, he seemed much discouraged, and remarked that if the gold of California was at his command, he would freely give it all to be able to change his past life, and devote it to the service of God. The next day, while alone, he obtained peace. When penitents were again invited to the altar of prayer he asked permission to speak and rose and stated that he was raised in a wealthy Southern state frequented places of fashionable amusement and worldly pleasure had been blessed with health and prosperity but had in a life of over fifty years not enjoyed as much real happiness as in the half day last past and concluded his remarks by urging the young to seek religion. It was an affecting incident and especially gratifying to see one of influence, who had so long neglected his soul's interest thus begin in remodeling his former course, and decided as to his future conduct in this new country. The meeting was of a general order deep feeling and serious concern. Such occurrences make us feel that the object for which the church comes to this country was being accomplished.

I have now been twice around the District since Conference, and at the Quarterly Meetings alone under my own supervision, fifty have been converted and ninety-two added to the Methodist Episcopal Church South. Two-thirds, if not three-fourths of all the accessions have joined on probation. These facts we record in humble gratitude to Almighty God, who has wrought these things for us, and though the result may not be equal to that of equal time and effort in older fields of labor, yet when the circumstances are considered we think it will be regarded as indicative of life and progress.

I have perhaps been more minute in detailing occurrences in this communication than is desirable, but several reasons have induced it. A sinner's conversion to God at any time, and in any place must ever be joyful news to a Christian. Our brethren in the older Conferences doubtless feel peculiar solicitude for us here, and read with deep interest any reports from this work, of a favorable character. Besides this, we often receive private letters in which questions like the following are propounded. "Have you success in your work?" Do you have any conversions? Are you taking permanent hold of the people?" Facts and figures together with some particulars as to our method of doing, may be satisfactory to such. Even in our Church journals and from those in high places, statements like this sometimes follow a cheering item of news from this work: "Our success as a Church in California is no longer problematical." Indicating a previous doubt upon that subject, a doubt from which the writer rejoices in being able now to free himself. Neither do we regard this as very strange, when, in addition to the bold and daring assertions of foes the conflicting statements of friends, or those who regard themselves such are remembered. I have therefore, thought it due the work here, as well as the Church there, to submit these facts, which are tangible and reliable. The relation I sustain to that portion of the work for which I report, must be my apology for seeming officiousness, if such be necessary. Our prayer is and shall be, "O Lord revive thy work," in this new and interesting field of Christian usefulness.

THOUGHTS ON CHURCH RADICALISM

In my last I said I would speak further plainly of the radical ministers their motives and practice. In this I want to speak to the brethren of the laity among whom I am proud to number myself. We need stirring up, for too many of us I fear are sleeping at our posts, weak and sickly still, faint and thirst while we should be fathers and mothers in Israel.

What though some of our ministers have departed from original simplicity, have too much pomposity in dress and deportment, reading sermons or delivering lectures instead of preaching the gospel, some even essays, against Class Meetings and calling revivals excitements. Thanks to God we still have those who have not bowed the knee to Baal, who are still willing to be little and unknown, that thy may [illegible] With the ... to cooperate.

[illegible] coming brethren of the Church we in Love Unity and peace [illegible] and as much good as in us lies. To their shame be it said that some who are professing our church [illegible] go to attend class or prayer meetings, while they can go to theatres, balls, and other places of sinful amusements without [illegible] admonitions whatever. They will want and claim a place in the church, though their actions and department are non-disciplinary. [illegible] Against all this let us raise our voices, let us aid our ministers in ridding the church of such members, if they are beyond reclamation.

The ministers hand is often bridled in power. Do we not lack sympathy or cooperation from the laity in the class-room? Is the place where revivals are born bright and warmest? Show me a brother or sister, constant in prayer and class meeting, and I will show you a class-going Methodist. Christ has those that are not content with not appreciating but must also speak against them or blind guides in the wilderness of sin.

Let us not make ourselves dependent on rank or wealth, by yielding [illegible] to oppression. I was happily reminded a short time since, by learning that in a school [illegible] in addressing the pupils to attend dancing schools. The President and Faculty opposed it. One of the Trustees (not a member of the Church), thanks to God, by threatening to resign, and throw his influence against the school, ruled the remainder. The wish and will of the Faculty were lost sight of, dancing prevailed. Methodist schools permitting their pupils to leave their books and attend these things! Heaven forbid that such influences prevail among our people.

Revival efforts are often hindered and crippled in their progress by the influence of professing Christians, who cannot bear excitement when it is connected with religion, assist they may only tolerate it, but advocate it on every thing else. They cannot bear a preacher that speaks warmly, are shocked if the brethren should sing chorus songs, and rarely take seasons of a good sister shouts praises to God. I am no advocate for unintelligent excitement on any subject but I deem it no breach of good order to weep, even audibly, when one is oppressed with the burden of sin, and should such a one be set at liberty be as glad that God had become reconciled, nothing is more natural than they should rejoice at their deliverance and praise their Deliverer. I have witnessed the efforts of most talented ministers for days and weeks together producing but little effect. The church members wait for the minister by the force of gospel truth to reach the hearts of the sinners first and then they will shed their sympathising tears. Others are too still and formal, have too nice a sense of order and decorum to participate in such things. Thus they stand aloof amid the most interesting displays of God's mercy. Shame upon any Methodist that can blush at a scene of Christian rejoicing.

I would to God that we had fewer of these dead weights that as a church we had more of that simplicity and zeal which should characterize Christians generally, and especially Methodists. Nine-tenths of our membership were converted in what the world calls a storm, and all other churches share largely of our revival fruits. Why should any Christian be ashamed of the very means of Grace, by which they were brought from darkness to light. Strange, nevertheless too often true.

I want an earnest, a zealous ministry clothed with simplicity, burdened with the worth of souls, seeking neither high places nor distinction, but ready and willing to work for the glory and prosperity of God's cause. I want a membership prayerful, watchful, [illegible], realizing that they have an important work to do, and to do all the time. What would be the result if as preachers and people, we would come up to the help of the Lord with our hearts, hands and purses, free from ostentation, and with an eye to the glory of God?

Upon such Christianity is dependent. We are truly sorry that so many lake warm Christians are to be found, every where standing in the way of sinners. The hour will come when they will look back and sorely regret their inefficiency and inactivity. I beseech you brethren ever remember the parable of the "foolish virgins" who had no oil in their lamp.

These things I much deprecate in our beloved church, still I consider her far in advance of her sister churches in the work of saving souls. The world and even the other churches look to us to do the pioneering, expect us to go in the high-ways and hedges and bring in the lost sheep. Some of our sister churches repudiate our economy and say hard things of our usages, whilst if their churches were stripped of the members converted at our meetings, many of them would be left almost membarless. I heard a conversation not long since between two ladies concerning the influence and strength of their respective churches where they lived. He Methodist lady replied the other it was church were deprived of all the members converted at the meeting, or the Methodist how many influential members would be left. She asserted that there would be none.

Notwithstanding all this we are encouraged in our labors and bless the Lord that [illegible] revival influence in the present [illegible] We would encourage all preachers and people we would in true Methodist zeal and simplicity.

God invites from that formality and mockery well nurtured and promoted by reading sermons and metaphysical lectures in fewer churches, clear singing, fantastic dressing and non attendance on prayer and class meetings.

RECOLLECTIONS OF REV. J. O. WILLIAMS

My first appointment in the itinerant field was to the Lawrence Circuit, in North Alabama. This was in November 1820, having been, then, a second junior, Rev. E. J. Dodson long since at rest. My first round was made in the month of December, and at a meeting house called Ebenezer, (now the town of Oakvale) I met Brother James O. Williams, the had professed religion at Strain's Camp Ground, the September previous was received on trial and baptized by Rev. A. F. Driskill. He had commenced preaching about the time I met him, and great crowds were attracted to hear one who hitherto had been regarded as so impressive. My colleague being present, he was licensed to exhort the 15th December 1820. His father and family lived in the neighborhood, and I was sometimes during the year at his house. This I mention to correct an error into which Brother Newman had fallen in saying that home was left in my infant care. I was in charge of this father's family when but eleven year old. The old man was alive some years after the time of which I write. He was once a man of some property, but his habit of drinking liquor brought the family to poverty. His mother was a pious woman, and struggled hard to raise her children in the fear of God. When James began to exercise in public so meagre had been his educational advantages, that he could not read a chapter in the Bible without stopping to spell many of the words. Seeing the course his son now proposed to pursue, his father made an effort and sent him to school five months, at the end of which time he went with me a round on the circuit and we preached time about. He was then a bold and original thinker, but of course, very defective in language, with which to express his ideas. But his active, inquiring mind was athirst for knowledge, consequently he read books and men alternately as he had opportunity. This led him into many full-hand debates which generally ended to the amusement of his friends and the discomfiture of his antagonist. At the fourth quarterly meeting, he was in due form licensed to preach. Twelve months afterwards he was admitted on trial in the Tennessee Conference and appointed to Beech River Circuit, Rev. Green Malone being his senior and colleague. The next year he was my colleague on the Winchester Circuit and many happy seasons we enjoyed together. We were of one mind, touching our work, young and ardent our labors were blessed and many converted and joined the Church. I have many treasured remembrances of this year's work and of my worthy fellow laborer.

At the end of the year, we went to Conference, which met in Pulaski, Tenn. He was admitted into full connection, ordained Deacon and for the express purpose of going to college he located. On his way to La Grange, passing through Huntsville, Ala., the church then enjoying a gracious revival, several of the brethren feeling that their pastor would be overworked, proffered Brother Williams board and tuition in the Green Academy, (then conducted by the promising lamented Peyton Tutwiler) for such help as he could give under the circumstances. After five months, he went to La Grange, and continued until he graduated in the summer of 1826. The following October he was re-admitted into the Conference, and appointed to the Pulaski station. At the close of this year he married Miss Prudence Thompson, of Morgan county, Ala., and filled the next year the Florence station. The following year he was appointed to Courtland and Decatur. He then removed South, and settled in Sumter county. What appointments he filled in the bounds of the Alabama Conference, I have not the means of knowing. At the Conference held in Wetumpka he located after which he studied law, and was admitted to practice in which profession he continued till death. In the meantime he continued to preach to admiring and profiting hundreds. About the year 1840 dark clouds gathered about him, his sun of transcendent brilliancy had well nigh been obscured forever, but his brethren found no sufficient cause for the annihilation of ministerial and Christian character. But enough of this. From the foregoing sketch it will be seen that I have known Brother Williams long and well at least in his earlier days. He was naturally eccentric, passionate impetuous, impulsive, full of combativeness, but by grace he was pious, and the soul of honor. He was liable to be "overtaken in a fault," doubtless has been in many, but he never of set purpose of malice and forethought, did a mean thing. This is my opinion, deliberately formed and kindly and candidly expressed. He was the friend of my earlier days, he never deceived me. I could not do less than pay this tribute to his worth and memory.

I have mourned over his misfortunes, but regret to learn that his son did not follow in his father's footsteps. He was a genius and an orator.

WHAT LONG PREACHERS' FRIEND

Mr. Preacher, I [illegible] you have touched a very tender point in the [illegible] of the times, and I will be well if those concerned would profit by it. Long preaching is a great evil. It is [illegible] to the spirituality of the preacher, to the edification of the people, and well digest.

He says: The great evil we complain of in our pulpit ministrations is by the preacher [illegible] Right. The great evil is [illegible] by the preacher. Long preaching we think is [illegible] by Preacher's Friend. We have only to say that we think [illegible] ninety nine cases in a hundred. Whether [illegible] belongs to location is a great question. Let those who are supposed to be laboring under disease of the lungs, as a [illegible] by Preacher's Friend, be true or not, we shall not now consider. It may be true, or not for aught we know. But that preacher [illegible] very frequently [illegible] upon those [illegible] evil, in the [illegible] we presume, be [illegible] improperly. We think Preacher's Friend has luckily put upon one of the causes why so many preachers fail so early, when he says: They breathe unnaturally while preaching. They make a wheezing sound in the throat or upper part of the lungs while the lungs themselves are exhausted of air. Breathe naturally make sound in the abdomen: let the abdominal muscles perform the office of sound making, and the lungs will play as easily as though you were asleep. Now this I conceive to be truth. And it was just the advice I gave a young preacher not more than ten days ago, predicating the advice upon my own experience. The disciplinary advice to preacher about preaching too long and too loud, is very wholesome and should be observed when ever practicable. which by the way is very seldom: but there is more in the manner of preaching long and loud than is generally heeded. The writer, when first entering the ministry used to prostrate himself very much in about forty-five minutes, until experience taught him that a reformation had to take place, or he would be superannuated before he became old. He therefore betook himself to thought upon the subject and finally settled down upon the theory suggested by "Preacher's Friend." And since that time, which is about eight years in the regular Itinerancy, his voice is as good if not better now, than when he first started in the ministry, eleven years ago, although we do not often preach short sermons. This is quite a misfortune, perhaps, but some how or other as a minister of age and experience remarked a few days ago: "I have not the sense to preach a short sermon."

While upon experience in reference to the theory above advanced, I would say that I have preached since I have adopted this theory at Camp Meeting, nearly two hours without intermission, loud enough to be heard distinctly by a large congregation, with no more pain or inconvenience, than in the forty-five minutes which nearly exhausted me.

Here there is another witness to the theory of "Preacher's Friend." Experience is said to be the best teacher. But alas! alas! when experience has taught the lesson, how few are willing to be governed by it! Experience has taught many an one that he was ruined, superannuated, but too late then to profit much by it. Reader, take care, and profit by others ruin, and others salvation.

But there is another way in which preachers bring great evil upon themselves: that is by drinking water while preaching. There are few, if any cases, where it is necessary to do this thing. The writer used to drink water, more or less, while preaching, but the suggestion of some kind friends led him to abandon it. I have tried it now for years, and most heartily do I suggest to preachers to try, try it. It will be a cross at first, but persevere, and if you do not, after proper trial, find the truth of what I have said, then I will concede what will cure one man may kill another.

Now, the philosophy of the above theories I do not understand. By asking a physiologist you may, however, know. But the facts I know, and can vouch for.

But, secondly, preachers unnecessarily bring this evil upon themselves. For we cannot, for a moment, believe that the Great Head of the Church requires any minister to kill or disable himself from the work whereunto He has called him.

There are those I know, who contend, that a minister had better "wear out, than rust out" when, for the life of me, I cannot see any better in either of them. I do not believe in either one or the other. I see no religion at all in "tearing out" one's lungs to preach. Why, the long, loud hollow, throaty pardon my using this word sound. Why, sir it is enough to kill any man that would do it. Let him bring up from low down in the abdominal regions, the sound he would speak with ease to himself, and be heard with delight by his audience. By so doing, he will find, that he will be more useful as a legate of the skies, and not find himself so soon upon the superannuated list. A young superannuate! What a paradox. Yet true it is. Why? Answer that why if you can.

Now, sir, if these things be true, and I have not a doubt myself, then that declaration of a great man which has come down to us that "The minister is immortal until his work is done" cannot be true. Now sir, I am not going to controvert this sentiment here. I have only to say at this time, that it has, and will do the Church of God irreparable injury. I never did, I never can believe it, unless I become a Calvinist. Then I would, I should believe it.

But I must close. Pardon the length of this scattering article. I have written it for the benefit of those concerned. If they will take notice thereof, and govern themselves accordingly, it is all we seek. So mote it be.

Amen. ALPHA.

Ala. Conf.

SMALL TALK

But one will ask "How is the remedy [illegible] we secure a competency to the ministry with all surrounding them with pecuniary attractions? How can we keep out men by name and yet keep them close reasonable want? We confess there are difficulties here to meet and overcome which require far wiser heads than our's: it is easier to pull down than to build up. Yet we can [illegible] better. There is work here for every one of better [illegible] our next General Conference.

A difficulty meets us at the outset. The power to change our economy rests, and very properly too, we think, with the ministry. This delicate matter must be settled by them and they are the persons chiefly concerned. How can an arrangement be made by which ministers shall receive a [illegible] part, and yet not be suspected by the laity of being influenced by impure motives? We do not see well to have some action on the matter.

Why may not our Quarterly Conference do something in the way of memorializing and suggesting plans to our next General Conference. We verily believe the delicacy of the matter involved has prevented the ministry from making any important movement for many years. We also believe that the matter been left to the laity a change for the better would have long since been made. Let our people then, individually and collectively move in this matter. When the great mass of the intelligent and pious request such action there can be no doubt of it being granted, and few will question it after it is taken. We have met with numbers who would rejoice in it. Let the brethren take you down here and let a large number of the Quarterly Conference and other assemblages of the laity take the matter into immediate consideration.

Let individuals speak out as Brother Williams and another sensible brother lately have through the press and otherwise. Let this be done, and the ministry need feel no hesitation in making the proper [illegible].

But again, what course should be recommended? Here is a second difficulty. We doubt whether any particular sum should be specified. We can think of no sum which would meet the cases of a majority of the preachers. Why not leave it to the Quarterly Conference of the Circuit or station? Why not let the habits, family, etc., of the minister be taken into consideration, together with the ability of the congregation, and let him be paid accordingly? Is not this virtually done in many instances? Do not many of our official boards, in assessing what they call "table expenses," take into account the insufficiency of what is called "quarterage, and make an allowance, which will cover both in full? Now, such action however proper and politic, has no disciplinary sanction. The Board of Stewards is not authorized to collect officially more money than just enough to pay quarterage, table and travelling expenses. Let there also some enactment by which this course can be justified so that what is now done without law may be done under its sanction. This will make such action more general and efficient. In our opinion the plan might be so modified and restricted as to be made of great practical utility.

We might go on to enumerate its advantages or suggest other plans indefinitely but we forbear.

Think of it brethren, think of it. Let the laity think of it. We do not wish the Conference to become an auction room, where men are hired to the highest bidder, but we do wish something to be done to relieve our embarrassment and make us more successful in winning souls to Christ. We do not care what plan is adopted, so this end is obtained. Quite certain we are if something be not done speedily great evil will result.

We know, as far as our humble self is concerned, without a change, location is inevitable. This might be little loss to the church, but it would be serious damage to us. We know others in the same category. And, what will the end of these things be?

Give us a comfortable support. Let us live, as the medium class of the community where we labor. Give us enough to purchase a few books, and take a periodical: enough to purchase decent raiment for our wives and little ones: to pay our doctor's, drug and postage bills: to pay our little necessary expenses. Do this, and then require us to spend all our time in your service, and devote all our energies to your spiritual advancement. By this and a new day shall dawn upon the church.

COMMON SENSE.

BREVITIES

THE WORLD'S FUTURE.

My soul is enlarged and stands erect, as I look down the declivity of years, and see the changes which these young Davids, under God, will make in all the earth. Countless millions are shortly to awake from the sleep and darkness of a hundred ages, to hail the day that will never go down. I see the darkness rolling upon itself, and passing away from a thousand lands. I see a cloudless day billowing and laying itself over all the earth. I see the nations coming up from the neighborhood of the brutes, to the dignity of the sons of God; from the sty in which they had wallowed, to the purity of the divine image. I see the meekness of the Gospel assuaging their ferocious passions, melting down a million contending units into one, silencing the clangor of arms, and swelling into life a thousand budding charities which had died under the long winter. I hear the voice of their joy. It swells from the vallays and inclines from the hills. I already hear, on the eastern breeze, the songs of new born nations. I already catch from the western gale the praise of a thousand islands. I ascend the Alps, and see the darkness retiring from the [illegible] world. I ascend the Andes, and see [illegible] you are, and all the islands of the Pacific one altar. I ascend the mountains of [illegible] and hear from the plains of China, [illegible] from every jungle and pagoda of Hindostan the praises of the living God. I see all Asia bowing before Him who sitteth in the midst of them on [illegible]. I traverse seas, and hear from every floating Bethel songs of those redeemed [illegible]

[illegible]
[illegible]
[illegible]
[illegible]

I hear that blessed day—for my eyes have beheld the sight—and then give, this worthless body to the worms. [Dr. Griffin.

SOCIETY

Society is the atmosphere of souls: and is necessarily tainted from a [illegible] which is either infecting or salubrious. The society of virtuous persons is enjoyed beyond their company, while vice carries a sting in its train. The society of the company you express both the indication and your character and the former of it. In company, when the eyes of the mind are opened, there requires but no hard thought in mind, because the mind is [illegible] Such virtuous company will please you—it will not—if it does not please you the end of going will be defeated. In such society you lose your reverence, for, the [illegible] of conscience wear off, and that name at which angels bow and devils tremble you will hear contemned and abused. The Bible will supply materials for unmeaning jests, and impress buffoonery the consequence of this will be a practical deviation from virtue, the principle will become sapped, and the fences of conscience broken down, and when debauchery has corrupted the character, a total desertion will take place, they will glory in their shame.

GREATNESS AND GOODNESS.

Greatness and goodness are not always combined:
Health is not always treasures, always friends
The good great man! Three treasures, love and light
And calm thoughts regular as infant's breath
And three fast friends, more sure than day and night—
Himself, his Maker, and the angel Death.

CALM AMIDST TUMULT

The poll was kept open for fifteen days, and until the twelfth Mr Wilberforce was in the full turmoil of this noisy scene. "Breakfasted," says he in his diary, "daily at the tavern, rabid meat at two, addressed the people at half-past five or six, at half-past six dined forty or fifty, and sat with them. Latterly the people would not hear me, and slumberful treatment. On Sundays allowed to be very quiet to dine alone, to go to church." His temper of mind in the midst of this confusion, was such as is rarely preserved in the rude shock of such a contest. "It was necessary," says Mr Russell, one of his most active and friendly agents, "that I should have some private communication with him every day. I usually put myself in his way, therefore, when he came in from the hustings to dress for dinner. On each day, as he entered, I perceived that he was repeating to himself what seemed the same words. At length I was able to catch them, and they proved to be that stanza of Cowper's

The olive retreat, the silent shade,
With prayer and praise agree
And seem by Thy sweet bounty made
For those that follow Thee

NIGHT A FRAGMENT. BY R. R.

Night like a gentle hope, o'erspreads the world,
Her grateful stillness comes into the heart
As her tranquil face falls to the longing earth
Of every night silent though many voiced—
For now the watchful stars like sacred eyes
Of best though distant friends are eloquent
And the voice of memory living back
Loved tones and looks the blessedness of life—
Or the Hope hymning on the hallowed halls
Our day dreams build upon the baseless air
Or precious whispers of the days to come
Lock with meaning to the wakeful soul
Though echoes upon the listening ear

Now they silence a voiceless murmur, vague
As dreams we scarce remember yet which cast
A palpable shadow o'er our waking hours—
The solemn surgings of Eternity,
Softened, not lost while breaking on the shore
Of Earth and Time, rise tremulous and swell
Until their voice of many waters seems
Then flee away as twilight into night

Above the roar of that far sounding sea,
Whose waves surround all time and human things
Drowns with its thunder all the whispered tones
Vibrating in the shadowy aisles of life

Deep silence rises, and darkness interweave
A breathing spell from day's despotic din.
Death's gentle sister—her with no drowsy drugs,
But with a soft nothing lulls the world to sleep.

The night-wind now like life-restoring balm
Sheds it on some guardian angel's pinions bright,
The hot brow hushes and whispers nature's peace—
A loving benediction.

Over all
The dusky hangs, a boundless sea unswept
Save by the circling of God-guided worlds.
Each water seems the broad empyreal dome—
And through the gloom immensity expands.
The heaven high mystery sways and overpowers,
Till gazing out upon the boundless depth,
The soul is lost in vastness infinite.

Thus all without obtures our concordant call,
And all within, not loud but deep, responds
Mobile, 1853.

BEAUTIFUL ALLEGORY.—The following beautiful allegory is translated from the German:

Sophronius, a wise teacher, would not suffer even his grown up sons and daughters to associate with those whose conduct was not pure and upright.

"Dear father," said the gentle Eulalia to him one day, when he forbade her, in company with her brother, to visit the gentle Lucinda, "you must think us very childish if you imagine that we should be exposed to danger by it."

The father took in silence a dead coal from the hearth, and reached it to his daughter. "It will not burn you, my child, take it."

Eulalia did so, and behold her beautiful white hand was soiled and blacked, and as it charmed, her white dress also.

"We cannot be too careful in handling coals," said Eulalia, in vexation.

"Yes, truly," said her father, "you see, my child, that coals, even if they do not burn, blacken: so it is with the company of the vicious."

The Albany Knickerbocker gives an account of a wonderful dog belonging to one of its carriers. The carrier falling sick, sent out a boy to deliver the papers, who being unacquainted with the round was followed by the dog who stopped at the door of every subscriber and wagging his tail, never missing one in a list of six hundred. At the door of all the subscribers who had not paid in a long time the dog was heard to howl.

CONFERENCE NOTICE.

The members of the East Texas Conference, Transfers, Visiting Brethren of other Conferences, and Local Preachers attending to receive Ordination, on their arrival in Marshall, on the 26th of November next, will please call at the Court-House, where they will be received and consigned to their respective Boarding-Houses during the Session of Conference. Those who expect to bring their families will please inform me by mail in due time. The Church Papers will please give this a few insertions.

EDUCATION ADVERTISEMENTS.

Do you read those of the New Orleans Christian Advocate? If the people cannot there find facilities for the best instruction, mental and moral, we know not where the facilities can be found. The best talent of the land is devoted to the work—sanctified talent, as we believe. These Institutions, so well distributed and officered, are bulwarks of the Church and State. It is good reading matter. There is no apology for raising up sons and daughters in ignorance or sending them far away.

BADLY BROKE.—One of our subscribers has gone by the board, poor fellow. The Advocate was one of his creditors. This is what comes of the most solvent sounding names getting in arrears.

Our friends, the Postmasters, are generally kind and sympathising. We often complain of the mails, but seldom of them. Here is a note (official) a P. M. sends, verbatim. We could not suppress a hearty laugh over its earnest tone, notwithstanding the serious nature of the contents. Reader, do not, by any contingency, subject us to such an official note from your P. M. Pay while you are able!

SEPTEMBER 8, 1853.

Dear Sir—after my Compliments to you, etc., I am duty bound as P.M. to inform you that the paper addressed * *  Ala. is not taken from this office only as I sell it for the postage the man is broak and is not able to pay postage, & says he never intends to take it out any more, & request it discontinued & also requests me to say to you that he will pay up as sooh as he gets able &c, MONTGOMERY, ALA.—Rev. C. D. Oliver writes, October 8: "I suppose you have heard that our city had suffered from disease. What this disease is that has proven so fatal is a matter of dispute among the doctors. The majority, however, agree that it it is the vesicable yellow fever. A Spaniard, who has had the yellow fever in Cuba, says that it is not yellow fever but even worse. At all events, those who have it generally have black vomit before they die. Some days we have had four or five burials, which, considering our present population, is no insignificant mortality. The panic here has been great. Our people have precipitated themselves in all directions through the surrounding country. While I write I suppose there are over a thousand away, and waiting until it shall be safe for them to return.

We have lost some valuable members by death; among them Sisters Francee Colcough, Montague and others. These, however, whose names are mentioned did not die of yellow fever."

THE WESTERN BRANCH.—The Western Branch of our Book Concern, located at Louisville, sold books the last year to the amount of $65,000. Up to this time its profits have amounted to $30,000.

BASCOM'S SERMONS.—Twenty-one thousand copies of this work have been sold.

ST. LOUIS CONFERENCE.—The St. Louis Advocate gives the increase of membership the past year at 3,053. Delegates to the General Conference—T. Johnson, D. R. McAnally, D. A. Leeper, J. Boyle, and J. K. Leecy. Reserve—J. F. Truslow.

DEATH OF AN EDITOR.—For two or three weeks we have not received a number of the Wesleyan Texas Banner. The sad cause is now apparent. The yellow fever rages at Houston, and among the deaths reported, is that of Rev. S. E. Cameron, the Editor of the Banner. He died on the 2d instant, leaving a wife and child. But not these alone—the Church will mourn the loss of so good and useful a minister.

DELEGATES TO THE GENERAL CONFERENCE. The Western Virginia Conference elected Rev. E. C. Thornton and Rev. S. Kelly. Reserved Delegate, Rev. S. K. Vaught.

The Kentucky Conference, sitting in Versailles, September 20, elected six delegates to the General Conference, namely: H. H. Kavanaugh, Thomas N. Ralston, John C. Harrison, L. D. Huston, W. M. Grubbs, and B. T. Crouch.

Reserves, John G. Bruce and C. Babbett.

HAPPINESS.—Nothing is purer than honesty—nothing greater than charity—nothing brighter than virtue—nothing warmer than love—and nothing more steadfast than faith. These united in one mind form the purest, the brightest, and the most steadfast happiness.

THE COMING ELECTION.

The candidates for both Houses of the Legislature of Louisiana are getting into the field. Primary meetings for nominating have been quite brisk the week past. The people have it now in their power and may do themselves the justice to commit their character and interests to wise, honest and working men. Every habitue of a grog-shop will not make a good legislator. It will be of no avail a few months hence to be in a stew of virtuous indignation about an incompetent, idle or corrupt Legislature, who have to be hunted up by the Sergeant-at-Arms to vote, and who use their influence as representatives of the people to bargain for places for themselves.

The elections of November 7th have one aspect of momentous concern, to which, while it is time, we invoke attention and action. It is their bearing upon the question of Free and Common Schools. Our readers cannot have forgotten the stealthy onset of the Romanists, at the last Legislature. A memorial was got up here, headed by Archbishop Blanc, and signed by twenty-five hundred nemes, and forwarded to Baton Rouge, asking for a pro rata division of the School Fund. Of course, the Romanists were to have the lion's share; the pro rata being on the basis—not of tax-payers or taxes paid—but of children, such as they claimed. So stealthily was this memorial got up and signed and forwarded, that the public were first made aware of its existence by its presentation to the Legislature! Why this secrecy? Were not the people concerned in the matter? Was any honest patriotic end to be served by this sly dealing?

But for the discretion of the Legislature the proposed measure would have been pushed right through. Such was the plan of this coup de main of Jesuitism. But it failed. "See," said the Legislative tools of the priests, here is a respectful memorial, signed by a large constituency. It treats on a subject of public interest. There is no counter-memorial. We must obey the expressed will of the sovereign people."

And lest this stolen march on the Treasury were not sure enough, it is a notorious and scandalous fact, that Romish priests were busy in the lobbies, shamelessly taking members by the button-hole, to influence legislation.

They failed, but are not discouraged. The attempt is to be renewed. What manœuvre will be brought to bear upon Baton Rouge this winter is yet to transpire. But they are taking the voters by the button-holes now, and pledging the candidates. We have good authority for it that some of the candidates already have been offered election if they would pledge their votes and influence to the priests on the School Question. It is high time, not for the Protestants merely, but all who hold our civil and religious liberties dear, to wake up. There are numbers of Catholics in the State who will not, cannot be made the tools of priests. They have not breathed this pure air for nought. The free party can defeat the priest party. They can, if they will.

To the country constituency, especially, we appeal with hope. Not yet overridden by priestly domination; not controlled by a loose mass of voters, obeying the dictation of spiritual masters who own their allegiance to a foreign Potentate—the country parishes are a reliance. And in the city and in the country we hope no citizen will blindly cast his vote to the wordy sound of whig or democrat, in forgetfulness of the most important measure that is likely to come before the next Legislature. If a candidate is doubtful on this plain issue, if he suffers himself to be tampered with by the priests, let him have their vote, and the votes they command, and those only. Deny him a republican's vote, a freeman's vote, THE VOTE OF A SOVEREIGN AND INDEPENDENT CITIZEN OF LOUISIANA.

APOLOGY FOR SLOW SPEAKERS.

Dean Swift, somewhere in his writings, has the following paradox: "The common fluency of speech in many men, and most women, is owing to a scarcity of matter and a scarcity of words; for whoever is master of a language, and has his mind full of ideas, will be apt, in speaking, to hesitate upon the choice of both, whereas common speakers have only one set of ideas, and one set of words to clothe them, and these always ready at the mouth. So people can come faster out of church when it is almost empty than when a crowd is at the door."

At the Diocesan Convention of the Protestant Episcopal Church of New York, on Thursday week, the long vexed question of admitting negro churches was decided in the affirmative, in favor of St. Phillip's Church. The vote was 139 to 15 of the clergy, and 73 to 33 of the laity. The delegates, who are all negroes, did not appear when their names were called, as they probably did not expect to be admitted; the case having been decided against them heretofore.

ST. LOUIS CONFERENCE.

ST. LOUIS, Sept. 22, 1853.

Our Conference has just closed a most harmonious session. Two of our number fell last year. We received an accession of some seventeen or eighteen at this Conference, and yet we are sadly deficient in ministerial strength.

Bishop Andrew was with us in fine health and spirits. He ordained fifteen deacons and six elders. The Bishop left our city yesterday for Palmyra, the seat of the Missouri Conference. Our Missionary collections are 200 per cent. in advance of last year. The preachers reported extensive revivals and additions to the Church. To God be all the glory. Amen. Yours in Christ,

J. PENNMAN.

LITERARY NOTICES.

MONTHLIES.—Harper for October is a superior number. The DAMASCUS article is worth the price of it. The eighth volume begins with 135,000 issues.

Putnam for October is very good; but its rivalry with Harper is hopeless.

The Ladies Repository, Cincinnati, and Companion, Nashville, are very readable numbers. We have the two former from McGinnis & Carper.

QUARTERLY.—The M. E. Church Quarterly for October, Dr. McClintock, is promptly on our table. We have only glanced at it, and find a new feature of interest, if not of worth, in the beginning of the regular correspondence of a French book critic.

METHODIST PRESS.

MAILING DOLLARS.—There are various ways of sending money for subscription to the Editor. In this case, especially—where there's a will there's a way. Gold dollars are better than shin-plasters, and far better than postage stamps. As for these latter, they are the poorest sort of currency in these low latitudes. We have a pile now that cannot be used—all run together. The Postmaster informed us he had returned to Washington City over $800 worth this summer for this cause. The Nashville Advocate gives a very good recipe for mailing gold dollars:

Gold dollars may be sent in letters by mail very conveniently; but some care is necessary to guard against their getting out or cutting the letter. We are in receipt of a letter containing some of these yellow boys, which, it would appear, were put in loosely, and therefore not safely, and were re-adjusted by some more careful hand "on the way." Whether the letter came open, or how our careful gentleman found his way into it, we are not prepared to say; but we give his note, which may serve both as an admonition, and a subject of amusement to our readers. He says:

"The feller that put this money in this letter was a fool; he put it in loose, just like a fool; so I will fix it down about right.

"ONE OF THE FELLERS ON THE WAY."

Accordingly, he pasted a bit of paper over each piece of money, making it fast to the blank part of the letter. Of course, it came safely to hand.

WHAT DOES IT MEAN?—So several of our exchanges head a paragraph which describes the dedication of an elegant Unitarian Church in San Francisco, July 17, on which occasion Rev. Dr. Boring, of the M. E. Church, South, Rev. Messrs. Briggs & Taylor, of the Church, North, and Rev. Mr. Brisley, of the Baptist Church, took an active part in the services. We observe in many of these marks of surprise, and even of censure, at this aiding and abetting these who, though they speak of Christ as divine and the Son of God—yet, when urged to definiteness, deny his divinity, and recognize him to be nothing but a sublimed humanity! The Pittsburg Advocate of the 23d ult. thus earnestly discourses.

Have Unitarians, then, grown into the fellowship of Orthodox Christians? We should conclude so from the fact of Messrs. Boring, Briggs and other brethren taking part in the dedication of a Unitarian Church. It would seem they participated officially in the solemn religious services by which a building has been specially devoted to the propagation of Unitarian sentiments. Do they not by this act tacitly commend these sentiments to the public, as embracing the essentials of Christian doctrine? They could not have intended this. But we think their participating officially in the exercises of that occasion calculated to do serious injury to the cause of truth. The difference between Unitarianism and orthodox Christianity is not the difference merely of non-essentials. We hold that the Unitarians preach "another gospel," and we dare not bid them "God speed," lest we also fall under the apostolical "anathema maranatha." Their gospel is wanting in every characteristic truth of the gospel of Christ. They preach Christ only as a moral teacher, a good man, sent to instruct us more perfectly in our duties to God and to one another. They deny his proper divinity and his priestly offices. They reject the doctrine of natural depravity, the necessity of regeneration, and the entire work of the Holy Spirit.

Unitarianism is the most dangerous, because the most insidious form of infidelity. It claims to be Christian, while it ignores every essential doctrine of the Christian system.

CAN IT BE TRUE?—Zion's Herald, referring to the on dit that the New York Book Agents were making arrangements for an immediate settlement with the Church, South, on satisfactory terms, while the Cincinnati Agents preferred being forced to do this by law, says:

Can this on dit be true? Will the New York Agents and Commissioners refuse to avail themselves of their right of appeal to the Supreme Court, now that the questions involved have to go before that body, through the refusal of our Southern friends to abide by the decision in the Western suit? What if they should settle without an appeal, and then the Supreme Court should sustain Judge Leavitt in his decision against the South? Would the church be satisfied with their proceedings in that case?

"WHAT IS UNITARIANISM?"

To the Editor of the New Orleans Christian Advocate.

SIR—In your last paper an article was published, taken from the Presbyterian, which professes to be an answer to the question WHAT IS UNITARIANISM? The society of which I am the pastor being called a Unitarian Church, you will oblige myself, and many friends, by giving a conspicuous place in your next number, to the following statement respecting our religious faith:

1. We believe that the Bible, the whole Bible, and nothing but the Bible, is a divinely inspired and infallible standard of faith and practice.

2. We believe in God, the Father, and in the Son, and in the Holy Ghost, as they are revealed in Scripture.

3. We believe that Jesus is the Mediator between God and men; the sacrifice for sin, and the Saviour from it, and that the atonement which he made is indispensably necessary to the salvation of sinners.

4. We believe in the conversion and sanctification of the heart, by the influences of the Holy Spirit, and that without such influences no one can exercise supreme love to God, and universal love to man.

5. We believe that God will certainly and universally reward or punish men according to their deserts.

6. We believe that evangelical repentance, purity of heart, integrity of purpose, and a blameless, holy life, are the pre-requisites to the enjoyment of eternal happiness.

7. We believe in constant, unremitting warfare with sin and error; growth in grace; conformity to all the requirements of God; and in obedience to all the principles and precepts of the Gospel.

8. We believe in one Catholic and Apostolic Church; the Communion of Saints; the forgiveness of sins; the Resurrection of the dead, and the life everlasting. Amen.

"He who these duties shall perform,
Faithful, and with an honest heart,
Shall safely ride through every storm,
And find, indeed, that better part."

Very respectfully, yours, T. CHAPP.

CITY CORRESPONDENCE.

"Whose lives' whole drift is to forget their graves."

The dark time has at length passed, and in the freer breathing of the light let us look about, and like wreckers after a storm, survey the damage, and gather up the fragments. Within a few days, our city has changed its aspect, from stillness and gloom, to business bustle and commercial buoyancy. The draped hall-handle and door-knob no longer tell of death in every house. The little groups of old denizens and Howards, at the street corners, whose death-talk was wont to saluto the passers-by, have swelled to moving throngs of men, who look and act anxiously—not about death's doings—but about the vicissitudes of trade. Those palaces and castles of business, heretofore always open as regularly as the gates of the morning, but of late closed and placarded "Clerks sick," "Principals dead," or "To be opened on the 1st of October," are now the scenes of large speculation, and the homes of merchandize. Those dog-ears of death, which used to flap in thick clusters upon every awning-post, and cleave like day-overtaken hats about the lintels of the post-office, with their black margins and engravings of willow-trees and tomb-stones, no longer stare at the morning pedestrian. Those gibbets of mortal fame are now stripped of their sombre subjects, save here and there one so tenaciously tacked, that neither time nor accident has torn it from the stocks of public remembrance.

The doctors, not better natured, but less care-worn and less anxious, drive more leisurely and make more protracted calls. Their buggies do not stand so regularly in every street, and before every house; and their office hours are unbroken by a press of engagements. That bulletin board, just under the corner of the Veranda, where, about nine of the clock in the morning, crowds of anxious men, age, and of anxious women, too, used to gather, to read the daily dispatch of the Health-Board, is taken down, and no looks are turned that way now, except by those with whom the habit has not worn off. The hearses, those black carriages, instinct of death, and omnibuses of the dead, in which none can ride, except length-wise, and whose plumes, by a very natural association, remind you of shark fins, which often turn up in the wake of a sickly ship at sea, are not seen backed up against the curb-stones, ready for their posthumous passengers. The undertakers have refurnished their coffin warehouses, and stand in the doors, one might imagine, looking out for somebody to die, albeit, wearing a satisfied expression, such as farmers have, after an abundant harvest, and when, only the gleanings of fields, already well reaped, are hourly expected.

The Cemeteries are not the confused and noisy places they were. The shell-road, which leads to these municipalities of dust, planted on the Metairie Ridge; the Half-Way House to the Lake, where thousands have lately stopped forever, is not now three solid miles of going and returning processions, whose freight of mourners leaves its never ceasing wail.

The ground and vicinity of those Cemeteries, where Hebrews and Christians, Protestants and Catholics, Firemen, Odd Fellows and Masons, have all their separate territories, is not thronged with nearly all the hack and cab lumber of the city; with masses of men and women moving in every direction, as though death had a world's-fair, and the people were gathered here to look at his opaque-palace of ghostly curiosities.

The burial services of so many sects and orders, half drowned amid the shrieks of the bereaved, the din of trowels, and the crack of bricks, are not heard. And "Potter's Field," just over the way from the better classes, who are served up to the worms and corruption in better dishes, looking for all the world like a vast potato-patch, freshly ridged and ready for planting the first time it rains, has now gone somewhat to weeds, and the grass, nearly conquered by the Sexton's spade, begins to shoot up, as if this culture had given it new vigor of vegetation. These dead people sleep well, and for aught that appears, they may have slept long. The gates are closed, and each enclosure is quiet.

So it is in those grave-yards within the Corporation limits. When, a little while ago, the minister was called to commit the remains of a parishioner to the tomb, a whole file of other dead, unshrived in life, received the acknowledged grace, whilst mourners, without a shepherd, observed a stealthy silence hard by, that they too might catch some stray word of comfort. They are all gone now, and the man of marble and cement walks leisurely among his architecture, and puts gilded letters upon the front doors of these death-halls.

The mourners who go about the streets are less demonstrative in their grief. Some faces look sad, and that indifference of passing incidents which grief occasions, is evident in the abstracted and careless tread of many. But these never ceasing processions of draped hats, which pour through the streets and places of commerce, are not all dejection. Why those symbols of sorrow and bereavement are worn, one would scarcely guess, from what the countenance unfolds. Now and then a female, or perhaps numbers of them, pallid in black, and veiled in crape, move quietly along, and you think surely these hearts know their own bitterness; and you feel guilty of sacrilege were you to wish that those faces might be unveiled to the gaze of cold and calculating worldliness. But for the most part the exterior of things is very much as in other years. Some of the prominent merchants are missed "on change;" old and familiar friends no longer meet at the corners, on Camp, Canal, and St. Charles. But matters are righting themselves after the gale; and the world moves on—the Epidemic is partially forgotten. In our evening walks, we notice the mansion parlors are brightly lighted, the neglected piano gives forth its wonted notes, the social dance and merry song have been resumed by those "Whose lives' whole drift is to forget their graves."

REVIVAL INTELLIGENCE.

WETUMPKA, ALA.—We commenced a meeting in our church on Friday before the first Sabbath in September. Friday was observed as a day of fasting and prayer, for the outpouring of the Holy Spirit upon us. It was a good day—not soon to be forgotten. On Saturday several ministerial brethren came in; among them Joseph B. Cottrell, the Junior Preacher at Montgomery. He remained for three weeks, doing good service. God blessing his labors abundantly. Over forty white persons professed faith in Christ; thirty-seven joined our church; others expect soon to join this branch of the army of the Lord. Twenty-one blacks have also been the happy partakers of this glorious visitation of our Lord and Saviour. Not unto us—not unto us—but unto thy name, O Lord, be all the glory. Rejoice with us.

September 20. OTIS SAXTON.

DEMOPOLIS, ALA.—God has poured his Spirit out again upon Demopolis. We have just closed a meeting of twelve days. Sweet and blessed has this occasion been, both to the ministers and members. We all drank deeply of the waters of salvation. Twenty-four persons were in darkness and guilt when the meeting began, who are now rejoicing in the light and peace of God. There have been twenty accessions to the Church. Awakening influences have gone out into the community, which, we trust, will result in great good in after days.

Notwithstanding our severe losses here from death and removals, we have doubled our membership during the two past years. A more interesting and agreeable field of labor cannot be found in the State.

October. THOS. H. FOSTER.

PERRYVILLE CIRCUIT, ALA.—The Lord is still blessing us on this Circuit with his heavenly visitations. We have had two protracted meetings since I wrote you; some twelve or fifteen conversions, and as many accessions to our Church. We are progressing in our Missionary collections. Permit me to say that our local brethren are doing good, very good work on this Circuit.

October 1. J. W. SHOARS.

P. S. I am now in Prattville. A meeting of some interest is in progress, under the superintendence of Brother Capers.

JACKSONVILLE, ALA.—Our Camp Meetings are over and have resulted happily. At our Alexandria Camp Meeting we were blessed with over one hundred conversions, and over forty accessions to the Church. Our Quarterly Meeting was held here, and our large Circuit was divided by unanimous consent. At the close I commenced at Jacksonville, with the aid of Brothers Tabb and Wingo, of our Church, and afterward of Brother Smith, Baptist Minister. This meeting resulted in between thirty-five and forty conversions, chiefly young men of promise, and thirty-two accessions. The Church here has been strengthened. Several of these young men are already at work, and there are others yet to join. I understand there are but few persons in Jacksonville left out of the church; few remained unaffected; a happy state of feeling prevails among the different churches here. Our Muscadine Camp Meeting closed with thirty-six accessions and about twenty conversions. The rumor of distress in Mobile has materially affected our Missionary Collection. We are, however, creeping on the round number of $300.

October 1. W. E. M. LINFIELD.

MOUNT HERMON CAMP MEETING.—Rev. E. V. Levert reports:

Our Camp Meeting was closed on the 29th ult., giving us 105 whites, and 50 or 60 colored converts. I do not recollect that I ever saw so large a congregation south of the mountains, nor have I ever seen so good behaviour in a promiscuous assembly. There was no cause for the slightest reproof during the six days the meeting was in progress.

ARKANSAS CONF.—Rev. H. A. Sugg writes from Washington, Ark., 28th ult.: "We have glorious revivals in Arkansas at this time."

FAYETTE, ALA.—The Banner, published at the Co. Ho., of 4th instant, says: The Episcopal Methodists have been holding a Camp Meeting at Bethlehem, near this village for four days past. We attended preaching Sunday. The largest number of persons that we have ever seen assembled in Fayette county, were present. In the afternoon, after a warm and eloquent address by the young and talented minister, Rev. J. B. Belton, a collection was taken up for the China Mission, and one hundred and fifty dollars was received. Mr. Belton, we understand, will sail next spring for China, where he will enter upon the Missionary work. We wish him health and all success, and that he may be the instrument of disclosing the treasures of the Gospel to thousands of the benighted Chinamen.

OAK GROVE, ALA.—Having held my breath in painful suspense for your life for several months, and seeing that you are yet spared, I begin to breathe more freely, and will now let you hear from me again. We have had another great revival in our section at the Brush Creek Camp Meeting, at which over 100 whites professed religion, and a hundred dollar Conference collection was raised. We are having a glorious year in the Alabama Conference, which is especially encouraging to those of us who joined at the last session. Nor do I esteem it less glorious because so many of our number have gone to their reward, for they all died at their posts, and like the sun when he goes down in unclouded splendor, they gave promise of a glorious rising on the morrow. "The blood of the martyrs is the seed of the church," and no doubt as these departed ones were ascending the skies, their mantles fell upon some yet upon earth, while I trust a double portion of their spirit has been imparted to all they left behind them. May God preserve the remnant, and sanctify them to his service.

October 5. F. M. GRACE.

[For the N. O. Christian Advocate.]

"THE ECLIPSE OF FAITH."

Such is the rather dubious title of a book published in Boston sometime during the present year. The author supposed is Mr. Henry Rogers, of England, who has written some fine religious articles for the Edinburgh Review. The plan of the work is that of Plato's Dialogues, while the subject has been personified in the character of the hero, and its different bearings embodied in other persons to whom you are introduced in the progress of the work. You find represented here almost every form of infidelity which has appeared on the troubled surface of the English religious mind during the present century, with their relations to each other, and to their primogeniters of other ages, clearly set forth. The various objections that had been urged against Christianity by the literati are candidly but ingeniously refuted, with the modesty of true science and the humility of true religion. A slight biographical sketch, probably not wholly fictitious, forms a kind of texture into which are woven the more solid and useful ideas which constitute the body of the work.

A Missionary has gone to some island in the "Paradise in the Pacific;" his brother writes him of the religious news in England; and embodies this in the form of a diary of what passed in conversation while he spent some time with their nephew, a promising young scholar, who had just returned from a long residence on the continent, where he had unfortunately imbibed the principles of a most inveterate skepticism. During a visit of several weeks many religious topics were discussed by the writer, orthodox, the hero, skeptic, and various visitors, Romanist, deist, atheist, rationalist, etc. Christianity is rejected by one and the other of these successively, and on entirely different grounds. New systems are presented with reasons alike different to sustain them, which in turn are likewise rejected by this genuine doubter; and then the other company having withdrawn, the visit closes with a long and thrilling interview between the skeptic and his uncle, in which the argument is brought, ad hominem, and a most thrilling appeal made from the death of his mother, from which time the skeptic is left in a state of mingled fear, doubt and despair, till shortly removed to that land "where all his doubts are solved forever."

The style of the writing is excellent, varying from the easy conversational tone, through all the forms of the essay, the epistle, the argument, the oration, and I might almost add, the poem. Abounding with literary allusions, and imbued with classic sentiment, it is the image of a highly cultivated mind, while the religious spirit of the work is truly cheerful and refreshing. Great advantage is gained for Christianity by making the skeptic the agent in overthrowing the doctrines of the other errorists, while he himself finally falls powerless into the hands of the truth, and is at last seen sinking in despair, confessing his imbecility to believe, rather than urging his reasons for disbelieving.

As but little estimate of this work can be formed by its name, I have been prompted to make this slight notice of its contents in the hope of inducing some who are fond of that which is truly classic and beautiful in literature, (qualities not often found in new books now-a-days,) to procure it, and to read it, which I am sure they will do with a degree of refined and exquisite pleasure. I know of but one objection to it; and that is a transatlantic view of the subject of slavery. This, however, is merely incidental, and occurs but once, near the close of the book.

ALPHA.

Oak Grove, Ala., Oct. 5, 1853.

THE FEVER IN VICKSBURG.—The Whig of the 8th inst. says:

The pestilence has not, in our opinion, abated in this city, notwithstanding the sexton reports only seven deaths for the 48 hours ending at 12 o'clock yesterday. To those who are governed by the number of deaths reported now, as compared with a few weeks since, we have merely to say that there is not one man liable to the disease now, where there were ten the commencement of the epidemic. In the suburbs of the town the disease is now securing a foothold and progressing. When we consider how few there are now liable to the disease, we must think the number of new cases and number of deaths very large. Experience, and the opinion of the medical faculty alike induce us to urge upon absent citizens the necessity of remaining away until the atmosphere is completely purified.

THE YELLOW FEVER GONE.—We are enabled this morning to lay before our distant readers the gratifying intelligence that the epidemic has disappeared from amongst us. The Board of Health met yesterday, and passed a resolution declaring that no epidemic at present exists in New Orleans. To those who, for the last three or four months, have been compelled by the fell scourge to remain away from home, put up in the hotels of crowded Northern cities, or jammed at fashionable watering-places, restricted by etiquette, and consumed by longings for the retirement of their own pleasant homes, the news will be doubly welcome. Although we have not yet been visited by frost, the weather, for several weeks past, has been delightfully cool; and the fever, having seen its three months' course, has died entirely out, leaving our city as salubrious as the most favored localities. Already the tenants who had fled at the approach of the pestilence are beginning to return, and our streets present a lively, bustling air, as if we had not been scourged by the dread visitor. All our business thoroughfares seem imbued with a new life. Trade has assumed its former restless activity; commercial houses have been refitted and replenished with abundant stocks; and our levee again groans under the weight of ariching commerce. Sickness is not spoken of amongst us; and that air of anxiety apparent in the features of all during the late disastrous visitation, has given place to a prevailing cheerfulness and business activity that gives promise of the renewal of former prosperity. The fiat of the Board of Health having gone forth that the epidemic has disappeared, our absent citizens may return without fear of the consequences. They will be received with a ready welcome.

Louisiana Interior.

We learn from the Claiborne Advocate that at an election held on the 24th ult., to take the sense of the people on the propriety of laying a tax to aid in the construction of the Vicksburg, Shreveport and Texas Railroad. The majority against the proposed measure was 17.

A fatal case of yellow fever had occurred at Minden on the 24th ult.

From the Baton Rouge Comet of the 8th inst. we learn that the sugar-planters of that parish had commenced taking off their crops. Some had commenced grinding.

Things in Mobile.

The Register of the 11th inst. has the following items:

REST FROM LABOR.—The last of the Infirmaries—that of the Can't-get-away-club at the Eutaw House—is closed, and the exemplary members of that once unheeded fraternity have a day of rest after a long and dismal course of painful labors.

The help they have been enabled to yield the Orphan Asylums out of their surplus funds, proves the kindly, and most liberal generosity of our absent friends. Instead of an assessment on their private purses, the Club has been enabled to share the generous support they have met, with associations of like benevolence buttressed from similar causes. The epidemic that has carried off the parent under the Club's charge, has left their poor, poor orphans in custody of those generous beings who have so kindly provided for them; and none in the world so worthy to share this surplus.

RETURNED.—Every day, almost every hour, mingles up the familiar faces of returned citizens, with the select few who lately monopolized all the public streets. The only drawback is the pleasure of their greeting is a latent apprehension that they may have come back too soon. Jack Frost would have been a most welcome avant courier.

EXPLOSION OF THE THOMAS MCDANIEL.—The persons wounded by the explosion of the towboat Thomas McDaniel, as mentioned yesterday under our telegraphic head, were yesterday brought to town in the towboat De Soto.

One of the stokers named Samuel League, and Robert Elliott, second engineer, have both died since the publication of our dispatch.

Another stoker named Alfred Walker is so badly scalded that he is not expected to recover. We have as yet received no further particulars of the disaster.

THE TEHUANTEPEC RAILROAD.—Late advices inform us that the contract with Col. A. G. Sloo for the Tehuantepec Railroad had been completed. The contract was made with a company in Sheffield, England, to complete the plank road from Suchil, on the Contzacoalco river to the Pacific, a distance of 70 miles, in one year from the first of December, and a railroad from ocean to ocean, 163 miles, in four years from the first of December.

YELLOW FEVER IN YAZOO CITY.—Unprecedented Mortality.—The Yazoo Democrat of the 5th inst. has the following paragraphs:

Another week has passed, and still the yellow fever stalks unmercifully through our desolate city, choosing its victims without regard to age, sex or condition.

As we cannot dwell upon particulars to any great extent, we shall publish the Sexton's report as usual, referring the reader to that for information as to the number of deaths and the names of the victims—all since our last are there recorded. It will be seen that the total number of deaths since the appearance of yellow fever among us, amounts to the number of 88, which, when we consider the present population, less than 300, is alarming.

The number of cases daily reported show but little if any abatement in the disease—if any, it is for want of material. Let our absent citizens not think of returning, notwithstanding the weather is so cool and pleasant. We have had but little, if any frost yet. If those who are absent do not return, the epidemic will soon have run its course, for the material must soon be exhausted.

As we are going to press, we learn that the number of new cases are becoming more numerous within the last few hours than for several days.

Two New Orleans physicians and three or four nurses have been telegraphed for, to come to the relief of our distressed, and the core worn

THE FEVER AT VICKSBURG.—The Whig of the 4th inst. says:

Ten deaths occurred within the city limits, from Friday, 12 o'clock, M., to Monday, 12, M.—three days—as will be seen from the Sexton's Report. This shows a decided diminution in the city, but we regret to say there are many cases of sickness in the suburbs, and more deaths within the last week than formerly.

There is certainly enough of disease in the town, but we heard of fewer cases on yesterday than on former days.

The same paper of the 6th says:

The pestilence is certainly abating in the city limits proper, but we are forced to believe that it is for the want of subjects—nearly all of our citizens having been visited with an attack. In the suburbs and neighborhood it is now doing its work, and some apprehension exists that it will spread, if not checked by frost. We have heard of but very few new cases in the city within a few days.

The nights have been cold enough recently for frost, and we should certainly have had a visit from hoary Old Jack, but for the heat of the sun during the day, and no rain to cool the parched earth. We were informed by the Sexton that there were no interments on yesterday.

SICKNESS IN JACKSON.—We regret to state that there is still a great deal of sickness in Jackson—indeed, considering the sparseness of the population, and the number of new cases for the last three days, we cannot announce that there is any abatement whatever. We give the Sexton's report up to 12 M. yesterday, republishing the whole list from the 1st September. On Wednesday there were four deaths, three of fever, and eleven new cases up to the time our paper went to press. The physicians are unanimously of opinion that families who have left town should remain away. [Mississippian, October 7.

OBITUARY:

DIED.—At Oakdale, the residence of Ira Bowman, Esq., Tensas Parish, Louisiana, on the 30th of September, in the third year of her age, MARGARET EMILY, youngest daughter of F. D. Richardson, Esq., Parish of St. Mary.

The sun was descending, as slowly, in sadness.
We bore the sweet cherub away.
To her little grave on the Indian mound
Where the bones of the warriors lay.

The wild bird was singing its sweet song above us.
The zephyrs came murmuring by.
And seemingly mourned, as slowly it wandered.
That one so lovely should die.

The low wail of sorrow was heard from the mourners
As we laid the babe in the ground.
Then we filled up the grave and planted sweet flowers
To bloom o'er the newly made mound.

O'er her freshly made grave, the flowers we planted,
In radiant colors will glow;
But none, I am sure, will rival in beauty
The sweet little sleeper below.

DIED.—MRS. ELIZABETH C., consort of Mr. Wm. Lyon, was born in Germantown, Stokes County, N. C., on the 17th of April, 1804, and died in Demopolis, Ala., on the 29th of September, 1853.

She became a professor of religion in the year 1826 or '27, and united with the M. E. Church, in which communion she remained a faithful and useful member, until called from the church militant to the church triumphant. As far as her health and circumstances would permit, she was a regular attendant upon the services of the church. Often have we met her in class, and heard her tell, with tears, of her trials, her temptations, and her spiritual comfort. Much of the strength with which she met and overcame her trials, she gathered amid the blessed privileges of the class-room.

Less than two days before her death, her heart was cheered by the news that a beloved son had embraced Christ by faith, and received the forgiveness of sins.

After an illness of only a few days, we were called early one morning to see her die. When questioned as to her faith and prospects, she assured us of her confidence in God, through Jesus Christ. When told that Christ would be with her to the last, she answered, Yes, yes, to the last, to the last." She several times repeated the words, "Jesus, Jesus, sweet Jesus, sweet Jesus," with such an emphasis as assured us that that name was enshrined in her heart, and that she heard the soft and thrilling whispers of his voice cheering her through the Valley of Death.

While the sun was yet climbing a cloudless sky, her spirit entered the shadowless glories of an eternal morning. Whether we take into account her blameless life or peaceful death, we may be equally assured that she dwells with God.

She leaves a husband and a large and interesting family to mourn her loss. May they so live that husband and children may meet the beloved wife and mother, where separations are unknown, and "God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes."

THOS. H. FUSTEN.

DIED.—In Union Town, Ala., on the 14th September, GEORGE W. BRADFIELD, in the 23d year of his age.

He embraced religion during a protracted meeting in this place last year, was constant in attendance on the means of grace, and consistent in his whole deportment. His suffering during his illness, which was of sixteen days' continuance, was intense, yet he bore it meekly, being sustained by the Grace of God. He frequently spoke of his approaching dissolution with the utmost composure, assuring his friends of his readiness and willingness to depart and be with Christ. His end was peace.

J. D. FISHER.

DIED.—At Wetumpka, Sept. 25, 1853, Mrs. SARAH ANN LEAK, consort of Tilman Leak, Esq., and daughter of George and Elizabeth Childers.

She was born April 26, 1818, in Georgia. In 1836, she was married to William R. Munson, who died in 1847. In 1852, she was married to Mr. Leak, with whom she lived little more than one year.

Though she was the mother of several children, and they all died in infancy, yet in the midst of her bereavements, afflictive as they were, she evinced a Christian resignation, and maintained a Christian equanimity. She was firm in her attachments, and faithful in her friendships, and as a wife was ever confiding and affectionate.

Trained from childhood under religious influences, she in early life joined the M. E. Church, of which she continued an acceptable member until death.

She loved the institutions of the Church of her choice, and, when circumstances permitted, was a regular attendant at the sanctuary, and in the class-room.

The fruits of such a life were to be seen and enjoyed during her last illness. She knew that she would die, and spoke of death as calmly as though it was but a sleep. When asked if she was willing to die, the reply, in substance, was, that if it was God's will to remove her, she was ready, and although willing to live, yet it was better to depart, and be with Christ.

Here was a peaceful, tranquil death, as one as the going down of the setting sun.

Let not a bereaved husband and friends sorrow as those who have no hope, for they have a blessed assurance that our sister "is not dead, but sleepeth."

RESOLUTIONS OF THE FRANKLIN STREET M. E. CHURCH, MOBILE.—October 2.—At a meeting of the membership of the Church, the following preamble and resolutions were adopted:

Whereas, It has pleased God in his wise providence to call away in the midst of his labors and usefulness, our dear Brother and Pastor, the Rev. J. S. HUGHES. And, whereas, in this sad dispensation, the Church has lost one of the most vigilant and laborious watchmen—society a valued and warm-hearted friend—a grieved and disconsolate family a kind husband and father—the cause of moral reform in all its associative aspects, a true and successful advocate. Therefore, be it

Resolved, That whilst we mourn the loss of our esteemed brother and friend, regarding with the profoundest sensibility this seemingly mysterious visitation, we feel to bow in the deepest humility before God, and with faith realize the truth of inspiration, that God doth not afflict willingly, nor grieve the children of men.

Resolved, That we deeply sympathize with our deceased brother's bereaved wife and orphaned children, who are sorely afflicted, and recommend them to the clemency of Him who has promised to care for the widow and the orphan.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be handed to Sister Hughes, and a copy for publication be sent to the New Orleans Christian Advocate.

C. GASCOIGNE, President.

DIED.—It is with feelings of more than usual sorrow, I record the death of Miss MARY A. WILLS, who died September 30, at the residence of her father, J. Wills, in Greene county, Ala.

The deceased was just seventeen years old; the youngest daughter of her parents, and very remarkable for her filial respect and affection. But bitter is our grief, in the loss of her society, that sorrow is greatly mitigated by the reflection that we are not without a comfortable hope in her death. She had attended a Camp Meeting two weeks previous to her death, where she was impressed with the importance of securing the favor of God. Her attack of sickness came on the day after she returned home, and during her whole sickness she seemed constantly engaged in prayer. Two days before her death, she said to her father, "I feel like going all about the house, shouting the praise of God." Oh may God bless the fond parents in their bereavement, and sanctify this affliction to such members of the family as think not of the uncertainty of human life.

October 3.

DIED.—In Texas, Sept. 2, AUGUSTUS SADLER, aged 53 years. He professed religion, and joined the church in 1822. Last of August he visited Texas in company with a son. He was taken sick, and found a kind reception in the house of Rev. D. Morse. He was perfectly resigned to death, though he would have liked had it been God's will to die in the bosom of his family: he said it was as near to Heaven from Texas as from any other part of this world. Turning to his son, he repeated two lines of that beautiful hymn

How vain are all things here below,
How false and yet how fair.

Then said he, "When you return home, tell my dear wife, my children, my servants and my neighbors, to meet me in Heaven, for thither I am going," and fell asleep in Jesus. He was a pillar in the church, and esteemed most by those who knew him best.

A CONSOLATORY LETTER.—The St. Louis Republican of the 1st inst, has the following:

A young member of the bar of this city, not long since, while riding on horseback, lost, in the street, a pocket book containing $200 and several notes which had been left with him for collection. He advertised his loss in the Republican of the next day, and offered a reward for the return of the money and notes. Day before yesterday, he received the following letter through the post-office. The author disguised his hand-writing by imitating printed letters:

DEAR SIR: I was fortunate enough to be the finder of your wallet, and assure you that the "needful" it contained, was quite a god-send to me, as my pocket had caved in some time since. Like my friend Micawber, I had long indulged in the hope that "something would turn up," and you can imagine my "feelings" when, as my eye lit on your wallet, I cried "Eureka."

You doubtless think I ought to disgorge; but I regard this as a true case of "flotsom, jetsom and ligar," (as you lawyers call it,) which being interpreted, means, I believe, that the finder "exoficio," (isn't that the term,) acquires a property in.

The papers not being convertible into cash, in their present shape, I send them to you for the proper endorsements, with the remark that if you want them collected, all you have to do, is to send them to me in proper order.

Yours affectionately, BUMBLEBEE.

P. S. If I ever get a sufficiency of the "root of all evil" on hand, I shall feel under obligations to liquidate.

NO ACCOUNTING FOR TASTE.—As a very general thing, you will mark it, observant reader, that a great, overgrown, tall man will contrive to be wedded to a very small, short woman; and, on the contrary, you will see a diminutive man linked to a woman of bredbignag dimensions. You will also observe that over-fleshy persons will wish that they were of the "lean and hungry" make; while you will hear the "men of paths" sigh that they are not "fat and sleek-headed"—such as did Cæsar delight in. So is human nature.

It is amusing to witness the attempts of your short people to appear tall, and tall ones to attempt to conceal their giant dimensions. Instance: you will almost invariably see a dapper little man in very high heel boots, and a hat of the tallest proportions; while, on the other hand, you will observe a very tall man sporting a castor of the shallowest mould—all of which tends only to make both the parties supremely ridiculous to persons of correct taste. I have noticed, too, as a very common thing, that little men will very generally display a bold, round, and dashing penmanship; while I have observed that the handwriting of many a giant-framed and strong-handed, burly man was formed in the most effeminate charactore.

AN IMPORTANT FACT.—It is often remarked that the advertisements of a large city journal are among the most interesting reading to be found in its pages, and certainly no one can have a complete idea of what is going on in the world without occasionally perusing that department of the paper he takes. It furnishes the reader with a vast amount of information of the various businesses transacted in a large city, and gives him often useful hints in the conduct of his own business.

General Intelligence.

THE HEALTH OF MOBILE.—The Tribune of the 8th inst. says:

Day before yesterday there were only two deaths reported by the Board of Health. One was a case of consumption at Spring Hill, some miles beyond the corporate limits; and the other was a case of teething within the city.

Strangers, however, had better not "pitch in" yet awhile. We shall have a frost within a few days, if the present signs be not delusive.

The advertiser of the same date has the following:

The abatement of the epidemic has not been so rapid during the past week as might have been hoped. We are inclined to think, however, that the decrease in the amount of sickness has been more rapid than that indicated by the reports of deaths. We trust that the mortality of one or two days of the present week has been but an effect of the spasmodic flickering of the fiery pestilence, that may betoken its speedy and final exhaustion.

The interments of the week ending at 6 o'clock of yesterday (Friday) evening, have been 60, being a decline of 31 from the week preceding

Our tabular statement now stands as follows:

NEW LINE OF PROPELLERS.—The Charleston Courier of the 4th inst says:

We perceive that a line of steam propellers is to be established between this city and New York, which are to leave each port every Friday, and that the vessels selected for the purpose are, the William Penn and the Benjamin Franklin, which have recently been running between New York and Boston and New York and New Orleans. These steamships which have been, we understand, thoroughly overhauled and are in complete order, are well known for their speed and safety, and are of 750 tons Burthen, strongly built, being braced with iron and copper fastened, and have comfortable accommodations for about fifty cabin and fifty steerage passengers. Messrs. T. S. & T. C. Budd are the agents in this city, and Messrs. T. Lincoln & Co in New York. The line is to go into operation, we are informed, on Friday, the 14th inst, and we trust that those concerned in it may meet with all the success they can desire.

THE PROSPECT OF THE COTTON CROP.—From every section of the country, our exchanges speak of the injurious effects of the red and the boll worm, and in some sections the caterpillar has made its appearance and is committing extensive ravages. The opinion is generally expressed that these causes, with the other unfavorable influences of the season, protracted drouth and excessive rains must certainly produce a considerable diminution of the incoming crop. It has always been found extremely difficult to estimate correctly the effect of these causes, and often results prove that apprehensions were nearly untounded, but from the general reports from many sections, we think some diminution from last year's crop may reasonably be expected. [Brandon (Miss.) Republican 6th inst.

THE EASTERN QUESTION.—We take the following from the "Talk on 'Change" in the New York Herald of the 30th ult.:

The aspect of the foreign news was considered decidedly more warlike, as far as Turkey and Russia were concerned; yet there were many strong believers in the continuance of peace, and few expressed any fears of war. It was contended that had war been certain, or very probable, that breadstuffs would have experienced a more decided improvement; that the English funds would have undergone a greater decline.

None were disposed to believe that the door to negociation had been closed. The bare fact of the Emperor's visit to Poland and to Austria, accompanied by the Ministers of State, was evidence that he would be in a position to hear and canvass propositions, and to decide more promptly than could be done by the delay attending the movements of the carriers to and from St. Petersburg. Conferences would probably be opened between the five powers, in which the Emperor would participate personally, or through his Ministers. The only danger of immediate collision rested with the Turkish troops, gathered near the banks of the Danube.

Some suggested that England and France would retire from the contest, and leave Turkey to fight her own battles, as she had seen fit to modify the terms agreed upon. Yet no one could believe that England could, with a due regard to the safety of her East India possessions, ever consent to see Russia in possession of Constantinople.

LETTER FROM THE AMERICAN MINISTER AT LONDON.—The Hon. James Buchanan, in declining a dinner, tendered through Wm. Brown, Esq., M. P., on behalf of the Liverpool American Chamber of Commerce, says:

"For my own part, I firmly believe that the unsettled questions known to exist between Great Britain and the United States, judged alone according to the value of the material interests involved, are not worth six months' suspension of the trade between the two countries. It is, therefore, greatly to be desired that these questions should be speedily, honorably, and finally adjusted, and that hereafter both nations should enjoy a smooth sea and a cloudless sky for friendly competition in all the pursuits calculated to enlighten and benefit the human race. The greatest revolution, so far as the interest of commerce and manufactures is concerned, which has ever been commenced among men, is that now apparently in successful progress in China. Should this terminate in opening a free access to that vast empire of, three hundred millions of human beings, the United States and Great Britain will have a harvest presented before them, which, even with all their energy, enterprise, and resources, they will scarcely be able to reap. Then will a noble and generous rivalry also spring up between them, which shall contribute most effectually to promote the cause of christianity, civilization, and freedom among this ancient and strange people."

INDIAN DIFFICULTIES ON THE ARKANSAS FRONTIER.—We announced in the last Intelligencer the painful news of the atrocious murder of the Messrs. Adair in the Cherokee Nation, by a mob of over one hundred men. This bloody work was only the beginning of the end contemplated by the actors. A number of the Adairs and connection, who were marked for a similar end, fled to this State, and have taken refuge among our citizens.

We have been informed, in a reliable quarter, that this mob increased in numbers to over two hundred, when divided into three parties, proceeded to the residences of Messrs. Thomas Bigler, Lafayette Adair, and William Foreman, who fortunately heard of the murder of the Adairs in time to make their escape. When called upon as principal Chief of the Nation, to cause these parties to be dispersed, the leaders arrested, and that the persons and property of the threatened parties be protected, Mr. Ross, we understand, dispatched a messenger to the mob, but they refused to disperse, and since that time the principal chief has been unable to put down this intestine warfare.

Two or three hundred men are under arms, bidding defiance to the authorities, so far as to refuse to give up to the present sheriff; although they have agreed to surrender to the new sheriff who comes into office on the 1st of October. It is openly boasted that these men cannot be hung if they should be convicted, as "over two-thirds of the nation are on their side."

The Creeks, of the hostile towns who rescued a prisoner from the U. S. Deputy Marshal some time since, still occupy this attitude of defiance. The grand jury at the May term of the United States Court, in this place, found bills against the leaders, who were engaged in the affair, yet as those towns, under the organization of their local chiefs, are banded together and resist the Government officials, the culprits have not been arrested.

Col. Hays, U. S. Marshal, had an interview with Rolly McIntosh, Ben Marshall and other principal chiefs of the nation, a short time since, at Fort Gibson, in the presence of the commanding officer of that post. These chiefs assured him that it was impossible to arrest these men without disturbing the peace of the nation. There not being a sufficient number of troops to aid the Marshal in the arrest, that officer has been compelled to defer the arrest of these men for the present. [Ark. Intelligencer

The following, from the St. Louis Republican, will show the opinion entertained of the Northern route for a railroad to the Pacific:

We have private information that the route to be communicated will satisfy Congress and the country that this route will not do. If it be practicable to construct a railroad at all, it must be at an enormous expense, and over a country not adapted to it, nor likely to be populated for ages to come. One fact may be stated in proof of this. The expedition traveled eight days without seeing a tree or wood in any shape. There were evidences also that much of the country was subject to annual overflow and a very considerable portion of it was marshy land. The distance, too, already traveled, over seven hundred miles, and an examination of the map for the further route in the direction of San Francisco, must make it no great as to take this route out of all competition with those which have been directed to be surveyed. It must be several hundred miles longer. Indeed, every fact which we have learned in regard to the Northern route for a railroad to the Pacific convinces us that it must be abandoned."

ARKANSAS OVERFLOWED LANDS ON RED RIVER.—The Washington (Ark.) Telegraph, of the 28th ult., says:

The State Engineer, Mr. McSheehy, has completed his examination and survey of Red River, from the Choctaw line to the Louisiana State boundary, and the work is now ready for contractors. From the mouth of Little River to the Louisiana line fourteen cut-offs have been projected, the aggregate length of which are about five miles actual excavation, and the distance saved is ninety-five miles. The distance by the present channel of the river, around the bends to cut off, is upwards of one hundred miles. Several of these cut-offs have already been allotted to contractors.

This plan we regard as decidedly the cheapest, the speediest, and the most certain and permanent mode of reclaiming the overflowed lands. With these cut-offs completed, but little leveeing will be necessary between the points mentioned. Above the mouth of Little River a great portion of the levee has been located, and several miles of the work has been awarded to planters on the river. The whole work necessary to the entire reclamation of the overflowed lands on Red River will be placed under contract, and in process of execution with as little delay as possible, and will be prosecuted with vigor to completion.

HEALTH OF PHILADELPHIA.—The Philadelphia Evening Bulletin, of the 1st inst. says:

The number of interments in the city and liberties of Philadelphia, reported during the week just closed, is one hundred and eighty-six—a decrease of fifteen from the reports of the previous week. This is about the usual average at this season, and it proves that Philadelphia is much more healthy than any of the other Northern cities. The proportions of deaths to inhabitants is only about 1 to 2000

TOO GOOD TO BE LOST.—At a literary dinner in London, where Thackery and Angus B Reach were present, at table, Mr. Thackeray—who had never before met Mr. Reach—addressed him as Mr. Reach, pronouncing the name as its orthography would naturally indicate. "Re-ach, sir—Re-ach, if you please," said Mr. Reach, who is punctilious upon having his name pronounced in two syllables, as it spelled Re ach Thackery of course apologized, and corrected his pronunciation; but in the course of the dessert, he took occasion to hand a plate of fine peaches across the table, saying, in a tone which only he possesses, "Mr. Re-ach, will you take a pe-sch?"

ASHLAND.—We see it stated that this beautiful property belonged on an early day to Daniel Boone, whose fame is intimately associated with the history of Kentucky, and whose name is coupled with many of the thrilling and fearful legends of Western adventure. Col. Nathaniel Hart, who fell at the battle of the river Raisin, afterwards purchased it, and subsequently descended to Mrs. Clay, whose maiden name was Lucretia Hart. [Louisville Courier.

We have already mentioned that Russia has dispatched an expedition to Japan in the wake of the one from the U. States. It is now stated that in consequence of this movement on the part of Russia, that the English government intend also to send one, and the ships named as likely to form it, are her Majesty's steam vessels Encounter, 14; Leopard, 12; Stromboli, 8, and Barra Cuita, 6 guns. A recent Amsterdam paper mentions a rumor that the Russian expedition is intended to resist the attempt of the Americans to open the ports of Japan, but the story is hardly probable.

It is stated in a special dispatch from Albany to the N. Y. Times that Mr. Hulsemann, the Austrian Charge, arrived in that city on Sunday, and was closeted with Secretary Marcy, who is on a visit there, all the forenoon. It is also stated "that arrangements have been agreed upon for the release of Koszta. The terms are that he is to return to this country."

It is stated that the Queen of Sardinia, who recently paid a visit to the U. S. frigate Cumberland, at Nice, was so pleased with what she saw, that she gave an order to distribute 4,000 livers among the crew.

TALKING GERMAN.—At a table d'hote, in Cologne, a manufactur of Sheffield, says the Leeds Intelligencer, who spoke nothing but English, was seated next to a German lady, who did not speak it at all. Handing her a plate of peaches he said "Have a peach, marm?" "Nein," (no,) replied the lady. "Vine!" said he staring with astonishment, first at her and then at the other guests at the table. "Why, marm, there's only six in the dish; but there they are for you," at the same time rolling them upon her plate.

PAYING FOR THE MISCHIEF.—Mr. Finent, of Lancaster City, Pa., whose wife was killed on the New Haven railroad, at Norwalk, last spring, and himself much injured, has been paid $10,000 by the company, the Inland City says, as a remuneration for the loss and injury he sustained The damages already paid by this company for the injuries inflicted by the Norwalk catastrophe would more than maintain a proper and efficient superintendent over the whole route, whereby such accidents would be prevented.

GREAT CRANBERRY CROP IN MINNESOTA.—The papers speak of the abundant yield this year of this valuable fruit The berries are gathered both by Indians and whites. They are worth from $5 to $7 a barrel in Minnesota. There are a great many cranberries in Indiana and Michigan, near Lake Michigan. The regular price there a few years ago was 50 cents a bushel; now, it is $2 to $3. So much for railroads.

LATER FROM RIO.—Advices from Rio de Janeiro to the 15th of August, state that yellow fever and diarrhea were still acquiring numerous victims In Para, Brazil, there were fears entertained of the scarcity of corn, and the municipality had issued an order creating a public depot in the city. There was a project about being realized for building a railroad and electric telegraph between Bahia and Joazeiro.

FIRE ARMS.—The U. S. Government have in contemplation to attach Maynard's Patent Primer to the United States muskets in the Armory in Springfield, paying Mr. Maynard $25,000 for the right to use his invention, by which an arm can be discharged thirty-six or more times without reprimingg.

FRANCE versus RUSSIA.—It is said that a European letter, received in Washington, from reliable authority, states that France is treating with Sweden and Denmark for an alliance, offensive and defensive, against Russia, in the event of France becoming involved in a war on the Turkish question. Russia is also endeavoring to form an alliance with the same powers. The people of Sweden and Denmark, it is alleged, are in favor of the alliance with France, but the Governments will endeavor to maintain strict neutrality. If forced to take position, they will side with France and Turkey.

Hon. Mr. Barringer, the U. S. Minister to Spain, recently had an audience with the Queen, when he presented his letter of recall, and made quite a flattering address to Her Majesty, who responded in equally complimentary terms, expressing her desire to maintain friendly relations with the American Government.

Observations on the Late Comet.

BY PROFESSOR J. ROSS ELLIOTT

Of all the celestial objects which have attracted the attention of mankind, in all ages, none have excited such universal and lively apprehension as the comet. No doubt they were launched into their respective orbits at creation's dawn, "when the morning stars sang together, and all the sons of God shouted for joy." To tell of them as chariots conveying the souls of departed heroes to the skies or as vehicles transporting spirits to the realms of Paradise or the regions of eternal woe, would fill a volume of confessedly foolish matter

Yet the strong and many of the great among the ancients have been moved by the apparition of

"The blazing star
Threat'ning the world with famine, plague and war:
To princes death, to kingdoms petty curses,
To all estates inevitable losses
To herdsmen, rot—to ploughmen hapless seasons,
To sailors storms—to cities civil treasons."

Thus they were viewed till science tracked them through almost infinite courses and brought back the record of their harmlessness

Aristotle and his followers thought them meteors, born and perishing in our atmosphere; but science, with a kind of prophetic vision, said they ought to be ranked among the eternal works of nature; they have their proper places and are not easily moved from them—they go their courses and are not extinguished but run off from us.

From all points of the heavens they come to pass round our sun in obedience to that firm law which bids the earth and the planets pursue their annual orbits. Tycho Neate first placed them beyond our atmosphere, and even beyond the region of the moon. Hevilius ascertained the concavity of their orbits. Newton demonstrated their path round the sun to be elliptical, yet hesitated in saying "they would return." But Halley examined, compared and decided, and twice has one returned to confirm his conclusions

Since then an Encke, a Biela, Faye, De Vico and Brosson have determined the times and places of these seeming wanderers, and with perfect accuracy.

To determine their wondrous paths, requires the highest powers of the mathematician; hence comparatively few have been accurately examined. During the age of cemetary astronomy to the present time, the orbits of only about 150 have been observed, while millions are floating through the universe, or as one astronomer, on being asked their number, said; "as many as fish in the sea"

The three principal features of a comet are nucleus, envelope and tail. The nucleus in the above comet was strongly defined, and may be termed the central density. It was surrounded by the envelope, or kind of nebulosity, the "horrid hair" of poetry. The tail of this comet was very distinctly visible, especially to those living near the northern tropic, and when at its perihelion, was exhibited in this latitude (32) at from 11 deg. to 10 deg. in length. In our atmosphere, the nucleus and central portion of the tail appeared quite red. This was not the case in higher latitudes, and may account in part for its appearing of greater magnitude than some have represented it.

The above diagram has been prepared, not to give its position with astronomical accuracy, but to show how the various positions of cometic, meteoric and aerolitic objects may easily be represented by the common observer, in all parts of the globe.

And as a knowledge of these bodies depends chiefly on the observation of their multifarious phenomena; it would certainly advance the cause of science if more watchmen were appointed "to tell us of the night."

As the stars appear to be fixed in their relative positions, they may serve as points with which to compare the other innumerable moving bodies; and in the absence of various astronomical instruments, a cord stretched between the hands across visible stars, will determine relative positions very well, and with the aid of line and plummet, give vertical direction; many hundred persons may, with good judgments, become useful observers.

A few evenings more, and we may expect some fine exhibitions of a meteoric and aerolitic character. Then we would turn to the heavens and learn that "not to the earth are those bright luminaries officious, but to thee, earth's habitant."

A MAN FROZEN TO DEATH.—The following sad description of the death of a draughtsman attached to the Geological Survey Expedition at Portage Lake, is from the Lake Superior Journal of the 17th ult.:

Not many days since we had a conversation with one of the persons who first saw Mr. Schlatter after he was frozen to death last winter, near the Quincy mine, on Portage Lake. The whole affair is so sad and striking that it deserves more notice than it had received. Mr. S., it is well known, was one of the best draughtsmen in the United States. His maps made for the Geological Survey, were mistaken by many persons at Washington City for engravings. His sketches and plans of the mines are familiar to every one who has visited Lake Superior. He had been in the country from the commencement of mining operations, engaged in surveys, explorations and maping of locations, and was a good woodsman. His health and strength, owing to an unfortunate falling not uncommon in the early days in the mining region, had become impaired, and as he had some pride in performing his part well, he set out for Portage Lake, on the day previous to his death, alone. He did this because he knew the country well, although there was no road, and because his surveying instruments were with him. There was a track in the snow made by snow-shoes of other parties who preceded him. He left the North American location about ten o'clock in the morning, without a blanket or food, and without matches or flint and steel, expecting to reach the Quincy mine that night.

The distance is about fifteen miles, through the woods, and is easily walked on snow-shoes in half a day. The next day some parties came through and stated that Mr. Schlatter had started in the morning just related, and that on the way his track had been seen leaving the usual route. Mr. Sheldon, Mr. Van Anden, and others at the Quincy, at once concluded he must have been lost, and although it was now night, immediately started out to find him. About sundown they discovered the place where he left the track, and following his trail entered a thick cedar swamp. It was evident he had been in the swamps the night previous, and that he was lost. He had crawled under logs and tree tops to find shelter from the snow, and wandered about crossing and re-crossing his own track as people do when they are bewildered, but did not go to sleep or remain long in a place. It is supposed that in the morning he left the swamp, but did not take the proper course for the mine, and did not use his compass to determine the direction.

Although the night was a cold one, even for this region, and the snow deep, it does not appear that the feet or hands were frozen. When it became dark, the party lighted torches, and pursued the steps of the lost man by the blaze of parcels of birch bark. His strength was evidently failing; his pace were slow and short, with frequent rests—he was no doubt aware that he was in a bewildered state, for he followed not a straight course, but the valley of a brook. About 9 o'clock in the evening, the party came upon the body, lying at full length under the shelter of a stout cedar. The tops and drooping limbs of this tree are so thick as frequently to keep the snow from falling for a space around the roots. Mr. Schlatter, conscious that his fate was fixed, had crawled under this shelter, and calmly lay down to die—his compass was laid one side, his hat and wig remained on the other; and he was found—the vital warmth not all gone—lying with his hands folded across the breast, his limbs and body perfectly straight, and the face upward.

What a scene! The venerable cedar crested with the snow, the wluter wind moaning a sad dirge through its branches. The torches illumining for the first time its black limbs, and the dreury expanse of snow that lay on the surface of the ground. In the midst of the circle, a dead body, not frozen or disfigured, the countenance not even disturbed by agony, the eyes closed, but no doubt ramained that it was the repose of death. By the glare of the lights the face of the living contrasted vividly with that of the dead, expressing the deep emotions of the human heart—pity, wonder and sympathy. The body was taken on a litter to the Quincy mine, and is buried there.

From Santa Fe.

We copy the following from the St. Louis Republican of the 24th ult.:

Yesterday Mr. E. Riggs, of Washington city, arrived in this city from Santa Fe. Mr. R went out for his health with Lieut. Beale, and was with him at the time of his misfortunes on the Grand river. He returned with the party to Taos, for an outfit of provisions. There he and Mr. Rogers equipped themselves for a journey to the Salt Lake City. They procured a guide who was highly recommended to them—"Jose Martin." His name ought to be remembered by travelers. They crossed the Sangre del Christo, between the Arkansas and the plains of San Louis, and followed for some days the emigrant route to the Salt Lake, crossing the Platte. After traveling some three hundred miles, they were informed by their guide one morning, that there was a large body of Indians ahead of them, and he advised them, as their party was small, to turn off to the south.

After traveling two days in that direction, their guide deserted them, taking with them some of their arms, mules, etc. They, however, continued on the trail for six days, making about forty miles per day. On the morning of the seventh day they struck a desert—pursued their route for about fourteen hours, without water or grass, and at last came to a pool of brackish water. Here they encamped a few hours, and then went on a forced march for seven hours, and came to a running stream of brackish water, but entirely destitute of grass or vegetation. They encamped there a few hours—crossed the stream, and proceeded as fast as the exhausted condition of their animals would permit, in a more northerly direction, when they halted at the base of a mountain, where neither water nor vegetation was to be found—the weather being excessively warm.

Messrs. Riggs and Rogers ascended the mountain, and as far as the eye could reach the country presented no appearance of water or grass. They had no maps or guide to inform them where they were, and it required about double the time to get back that it had to reach the mountain. They were exhausted, and they lost a large portion of their mules. They supposed, from subsequent information and their own observation, that they had passed the Parks, and were upon the desert bordering on the Grand river.

On reaching the Arkansas, Mr. Rogers fitted himself out, and proceeded to the emigrant route to Salt Lake City. Mr. Riggs returned by Fort Massachusetts to Santa Fe.

At Fort Massachusetts he met Captain Gunison and his surveying party. They had been proceeding very slowly, but meet satisfactorily. They had formed and made a good wagon road through the Sangre del Christo, but its elevation was thought to be too great for a railroad. A pass to the north of that, it was supposed would be more favorable. Captain Gunison had engaged the services of Mr. Larcux to guide him to the Grand river. From that point Captain G. and his party would go forth, to winter in the valley of the Salt Lake.

Mr. Riggs speaks of the Coo-cho-tone pass as one of very easy passage, as also of the Sangre del Christo, etc. In a brief interview with him, he furnished us many interesting incidents of the country, and his own adventures, which time will not permit us to allude to. The organization and manner in which Captain Gunison was traveling, he thinks render it certain that he will successfully accomplish all that is required of him this season.

UPS AND DOWNS OF WALL STREET.—In walking up Broadway a day or two since, our attention was arrested, in common with thousands of others on the sidewalk, by the appearance of a very dashing equipage. A pair of dandy horses, with rigolettes on their heads, and an uncommonly highly polished carriage. The whole turn-out, including the sable driver, may be fitly described as "nigger fine." On glancing at the occupant of the carriage, who sat with folded arms "alone in his glory," in the back seat, we were somewhat surprised to recognize a man who, two or three years since, was apparently in very different circumstances—hard up, we may say, for "such a thing as a five dollar bill." On expressing some astonishment at this brilliant appearance and remarkable metamorphosis, a friend explained the secret by saying that the Fifth Avenoodls in the dashing vehicle had been gambling in stocks—and had won!

Presently we met another gentleman in "high feather," who but a year or two ago was known as a "lame duck" in Wall street. "That man," said our friend, "has had a lucky turn of the cards. He has made a hundred and fifty thousand dollars within the past year on the fall of Cumberland Stock."

And this is the way sudden fortunes are made in New York; and this accounts for the sudden appearance of those nouveau riche who "astonish the natives" by dashing in such dazzling splendor through Broadway. When you see a very glittering equipage rolling through the streets, you may be pretty sure that its owner plays see-saw in Wall street, or—keeps a house up town [N. Y. Mirror.

MRS. PARTINGTON AT THE SHOW.—Mrs. Partington and her son visited the menagerie yesterday. The old lady was introduced to Fred Hunt, the very gentlemanly and polite agent. She remarked that she had always been deeply affected by the sight of any display of the wild denizens of the African jungles—Inquired if Mr. Barnum hadn't a "Geological Intuition" in Boston. Fred, from the deep respect he had always had towards the old lady, gave her all the information required. "Dear me," said she, giving him one of her own sunny smiles, "what a wonderful man he must be, and what an aggressive age I have lived to see; I have just been examining the white pole bear." "Oh! ew!" said Ike, (who was spitting tobacco juice at the monkey in the adjoining cage,) here's a beauty." The old lady moved along, her eyes wide open with wonder, and looking right through her silver-bowed specs, "Oh, Isaac," she said, "look at the rabboon." "Ladies and gentlemen," said the attendant, "this is the man monkey." "Ah!" said Mrs. Partington, "we are fearfully and wonderfully made." She took the agent's arm, called Isaac, who was sedulously endeavoring to imitate the tiger's growl behind some visitors, and moved on towards the wax figures. "Isaac," said she, "this is Mr. Hunt, the regent for Mr. Barnum's great amusum; he is going to show us all the wonders attained in this canvassed. Who is that done up in wax there?" said she. "That, madam," said Fred," is the royal family, and the particular figure is the Iron Duke." "La, now!" said she, "well," we all have our pickit-illoes, but what Queen Victoria ever wants with an iron statute in her pelise, I don't see. Well, there's no counting for taste." Just then the agent was called away, and the old lady made an engagement to meet him and finish her inspection to-day. As many of our readers have neither seen the menagerie or the old lady and her interesting son, they can see both by going to-day. [St. Louis Herald.

ENTERPRISE AND TACT.—"I don't see how it is," tells out the merchant of the slow kind, "but I can't make both ends meet; and the profits on what I sell are very great—I cannot understand it."

Well, let me tell you, for you have yourself betrayed the secret. Large profits never yet paid in the end. Commence on a new tack, sir. Let your profits on each article be small, and if your custom be sufficient to pay expenses for the first year, you are very fortunate. But continue your small profits principle; make yourself known to the public by advertising, and "quick and constant sales" will join your "small profits." Put the two together and you have the secret of success.

A young lady at Newport, who was about leaving the "gay and festive scene" which the parlors of the "Ocean" presented, with the intention of retiring for the night, turned to her friend and remarked: "Well, Mary, I've done my duty; I have seen all the clothes, and every body has been mine, so I shall now go up stairs Good night." What could be more graphic. The very mottoes of a fashionable watering place—to see and be seen.

MR. EVERETT'S LETTER.

The New Orleans Christian Advocate.

MR. MARCY'S LETTER.

The Austrian Protest and the Reply of the United States.

The Washington Union of the 30th ult, contains the protest of Mr. Hulsemann against the conduct of Capt. Ingraham in the Koszta affair, at Smyrna, and the reply of Mr. Marcy on the part of the United States, declining the claim for satisfaction on the part of Austria. The correspondence fills night columns of the Union.

The Union, in the course of some editorial remarks, prefatory to the publication of the documents, makes the following important statement:

It will be remembered that the Austrian government, several weeks ago, and immediately after the occurrence of the Koszta affair, permitted itself to give to that transaction, and to all the negotiations consequent upon it, a very unusual aspect, by addressing to the principal European cabinets, in advance of any communication to the Government of the United States, a circular letter of complaint and protest against the course adopted by the American authorities. The speedy publication, apparently not unintentional, of the circular in the leading European journals, from which, of course, it was widely copied in this country, was manifestly calculated, if not designed to invoke from other governments and nations not immediately interested in the transaction a premature judgment in relation to it, which, as resting upon a mere ex parte statement, could not be considered as fair or free from undue bias. It is to be regretted that this departure by the government of Austria from the established usages and proprieties of diplomatic intercourse should have been so far countenanced by the cabinets of St. Petersburg and Berlin as to induce those governments to assume the position of voluntary parties, to the controversy, by instructing their representatives in Washington to intimate to the President their general concurrence in the view taken by Austria of the proceedings in the case of Koszta. It is gratifying to state, however, that the governments of France and Great Britain, to which the Austrian circular was equally addressed, have deemed it proper to proceed with far more praiseworthy circumspection. It is understood, indeed, that the cabinet of Paris has not failed to make known to that of Vienna its disapprobation of the proceedings of the Austrian functionaries in regard to Koszta at Smyrna, even upon the Austrian statement of those proceedings; and that the view it takes of the transaction looks rather to the maintenance of the rights and territorial sovereignty of Turkey than to the interests or pretensions of Austrin. The government of Great Britain, though it has made known to that of the United States the fact that its attention has been drawn to the subject, has yet given no intimation that it regards the course of the American functionaries in the transaction as open to censure.

Under these circumstances it is evident that Austria, in advance of any claim upon us for satisfaction, and in a manner wholly unwarrantable, has arraigned the government of the United States before the tribunal of the other great powers of the world for the conduct of its agents in the affair of Koszta. This extraordinary proceeding has left to the President no other course than at once to give to the world the reasons upon which he rests the vindication of the American functionaries, and the views applicable to this case upon which his policy is based. To the end that a just and impartial judgment may be formed upon the whole controversy, it is deemed proper at the same time to publish the Austrian view of the transaction, as set forth in the dispatch of Mr. Hulsemann.

The protest of Mr. Hulseman opens with a statement of the Austrian view of the facts, and says:

There are two distinct questions involved in this discussion. One is the main question relating to the dispute about the rights of jurisdiction which has risen between the legations of Austria and of the United States at Constantinople, concerning Koszta; the other question, at least fully as important, is that which has reference to those formalities in virtue of which the agents of the United States have deemed themselves authorized in urging their pretensions.

Mr. Hulseman declares, in regard to the first question, that the imperial government adopts entirely the views of Baron de Bruck; "In our opinion, Koszta has never ceased to be an Austrian subject. Everything combines to make the imperial government persist in this estimate of the matter. The laws of his country are opposed to Koszta's breaking asunder, of his own accord, and without having obtained permission to expatriate himself from the authorities of that country, the ties of nationality which bind him to it. The very declaration of that refugee on board the "Hussar," in the presence of the American consul and of the commander of the "St. Louis," shows that he still considers himself himself as a subject of the Emperor. In short, even according to terms of the law of the Union, such a declarntion, supposed to have been signed by Koszta, and from which Mr. Brown has pretended to infer his naturalization in the United States, is not sufficient to produce that effect. The undersigned thinks he may dispense catering into any further details in regard to this question, seeing that the Department of State of the United States constantly refuses to grant passports to individuals who find themselves in this category, and that official publications have been made from time to time to that effect."

Mr. Hulseman assumes that on these grounds, the Consul-General of the Emperor at Smyrna was without doubt perfectly justified, when, in virtue of those treaties which subject Austrian subjects in Turkey to consulnr jurisdiction, he seized the person of Koszta within the pale of his jurisdiction, and concludes that such being the case, the imperial government trusts that the government of the United States will hasten to instruct its consul at Smyrna not to interpose any obstacle to the extradition of the aforesaid Koszta by the Consul-General of France to the Consul-General of Austria at Smyrna.

He then proceeds to notice "the act of violence" committed by the commander of the sloop-of-war, St. Louis, against the Austrian brig Hussar, and designates it as an "act of war," "committed in full peace, in a neutral port, the fatal effects of which were only averted by the prudence and moderation" of the Austrian Consul-General at Smyrna, and which he says constitutes an outrage upon the principles of the law of nations; and (says Mr. Hulseman) the imperial government has no doubt but that this act, viewed in such light, will have been condemned by the government of the United States, said government being itself interested in preventing the repetition of similar occurrences.

These points are thus discussed with reference to the principles laid down by the writers on international law, and the protest closes with the following paragraph:

The imperial government entertains too high an opinion of the sense of justice and of integrity of the government of the United States to doubt, for a single instant, its anxiety to disavow the conduct of its agents, under the circumstances above mentioned, and that it will hasten to call them to a severe account, and tender to Austria a satisfaction proportionate to the magnitude of the outrage.

SECRETARY MARCY'S REPLY.

After the usual diplomatic compliments, and expressing the hope, though differing very much from the views expressed by Mr. Hulsemann, that the Austrian Government will be induced to look at the transaction in a different light, Mr. Marcy says:

To bring out conspicuously the questions to be passed upon, it seems to the undersigned that the facts should be more fully and clearly stated than as they are in Mr. Hulsemann's note.

Martin Koszta, by birth a Hungarian, and of course an Austrian subject at that time, took a conspicuous and active part in the political movements of 1848-'49, designed to detach Hungary from the dominion of the Emperor of Austria. At the close of that disastrous revolutionary movement, Koszta, with many others engaged in the same cause, fled from the Austrian dominions, and took refuge in Turkey. The extradition of these fugitives, Koszta among them, was demanded and pressed with great vigor by Austria, but firmly resisted by the Turkish government. They were, however, confined at Kutahia, but at length released, with the understanding or by express agreement of Austria that they should leave Turkey and go into foreign parts. Most of them, it is believed, before they obtained their release, indicated the United States as the country of their exile. It is alleged that Koszta left Turkey in company with Kossuth—this is believed to be a mistake; and that he engaged never to return—this is regarded as doubtful. To this sentence of banishment—for such is the true character of the expulsion from Turkey—Austria gave her consent: in truth, it was the result of her efforts to procure their extradition, and was accepted by her as a substitute for it. She had agents or commissioners at Kutahia to attend to their embarkation, and to her the legal consequences of this act are the same as if it had been done directly by herself, and not by the agency of the Ottoman Porte. Koszta came to the United States, and selected this country for his future home.

On the 31st of July, 1852, he made a declaration, under oath, before a proper tribunal, of his intention to become a citizen of the United States, and renounce all allegiance to any other State or sovereign.

After remaining here for one year and eleven months, he returned on account, as is alleged, of private business, of a temporary character, to Turkey in an American vessel, claimed the rights of a naturalized American citizen, and offered to place himself under the protection of the United States Consul at Smyrna. The Consul at first hesitated to receive him as such; but afterwards, and some time before his seizure, he and the American Charge d'Affaires ad interim at Constantinople, did extend protection to him, and furnished him with Tizkereh—a kind of passport or letter of safe conduct, usually given by foreign consuls in Turkey to persons to whom they extend protection, as by Turkish laws they have a right to do. It is important to observe that there is no exception taken to his conduct after his return to Turkey, and that Austria has not alleged that he was there for any political object, or for any other purpose than the transaction of private business. While waiting, as is alleged, for an opportunity to return to the United States, he was seized by a band of lawless men—freely, perhaps harshly, characterized in dispatches as "ruffians," "Greek hirelings," "robbers"—who had not, nor did they pretend to have, any color of authority emanating from Turkey or Austria—treated with violence and cruelty, and thrown into the sea. Immediately thereafter he was taken up by a boat's crew, lying in wait for him, belonging to the Austrian brig-of-war, the Hussar, forced on board of that vessel, and there confined in irons. It is now avowed, as it was then suspected, that these desperadoes were instigated to this outrage by the Austrian Consul-General at Smyrna; but it is not pretended that he acted under the civil authority of Turkey, but, on the contrary, it is admitted that, on application to the Turkish Governor at Smyrna, that magistrate refused to grant the Austrian Consul any authority to arrest Koszta.

The Consul of the United States at Smyrna, as soon as he heard of the seizure of Koszta, and the Chargé d'Affaires of the United States, ad interim, at Constantinople, afterwards interceded with the Turkish authorities, with the Austrian Consul-general at Smyrna, and the commander of the Austrian brig-of-war, for his release, on the ground of his American nationality. To support this claim, Koszta's original certificate of having made, under oath, in a court in New York, a declaration of intention to become an American citizen, was produced at Smyrna, and an imperfect copy of it placed in the hands of the Imperial Austrian internuncio at Constantinople. The application to these officers at Smyrna for his liberation, as well as that of Mr. Brown, our Chargé d'Affaires, to Baron de Bruck, the Austrian Minister at Constantinople, was fruitless, and it became notorious at Smyrna that there was a settled design on the part of the Austrian officials to convey him clandestinely to Trieste—a city within the dominion of the Emperor of Austria. Opportunely, the United States sloop-of-war, the St. Louis, under the command of Capt. Ingrnham, arrived in the harbor of Smyrna before this design was executed. The commandar of the St. Louis, from the representation of the case made to him, felt it to be his duty, and it unquestionably was, to inquire into the validity of Koszta's claim to American protection. He proceeded with deliberation and prudence; and discovered what he considered just grounds for inquiring into Koszta's claim to be disobarged on account of his American nationality. During the pendency of this inquiry he received notice of the design to take Koszta clandestinely, before the question at issue was settled, into the dominions of the Emperor of Austria. As there was other evidence of bad faith besides the discovered design of evading the inquiry, Captain Ingraham demanded his release, and intimated that he should resort to force if the demand was not complied with by a certain hour. Fortunately, however, no force was used. An arrangement was made by which the prisoner was delivered to the custody of the French Consul-general, to be kept by him until the United States and Austrin should agree as to the manner of disposing of him.

Mr. Marcy next proceeds to present the views of the President in relation to the matter in question, and his reply to the several demands of the Austrian government, and says:

His Imperial Majesty demands that the government of the United States shall direct Koszta to be delivered to him; that it shall disavow the conduct of the American agents in this affair, call them to a severe account, and tender satisfaction proportionate to the outrage.

In order to arrive at just conclusions, it is necessary to ascertain and clearly to define Koszta's political relation with Austrin and with the United States when he was seized at Smyrna. This is the first point which naturally presents itself for consideration, and perhaps the most important one in its bearing upon the merits of the case.

There is great diversity and much confusion of opinion as to the nature and obligations of allegiance. By some it is held to be an indestructible political tie, and though resulting from the mere accident of birth, yet forever binding the subject to the sovereign; by others it is considered a political connexion in the nature of a civil contract, dissoluble by mutual consent, but not so at the option of either party. The sounder and more prevalent doctrine, however, is, that the citizen or subject, having faithfully performed the past and present duties resulting from his relation to the sovereign power, may at any time release himself from the obligation of allegiance, freely quit the land of his birth or adoption, seek through all countries a home, and select anywhere that which offers him the fairest prospect of happiness for himself and his posterity. When the sovereign power, wheresoever it may be placed, does not answer the ends for which it was bestowed, when it is not exerted for the general welfare of the people, or has become oppressive to individuals, this right to withdraw rests on as firm a basis, and is similar in principle to the right which legitimates resistance to tyranny.

The conflicting laws on the subject of allegiance are of a municipal character, and have no controlling operation beyond the territorial limits of the countries enacting them. All uncertainty, as well as confusion on this subject is avoided by giving due consideration to the fact that the parties to the question now under consideration are two independent nations, and that neither has the right to appeal to its own municipal laws for the rules to settle the matter in dispute, which occurred within the jurisdiction of a third independent power.

Neither Austrian decrees nor American laws can be properly invoked for aid or direction in this case, but international law furnishes the rules for a correct decision, and by the light from this source shed upon the transaction at Smyrna are its true features to be discerned.

Koszta being beyond the jurisdiction of Austria, her laws were entirely inoperative in his case, unless the Sultan of Turkey has consented to give them vigor within his dominions by treaty stipulations. The law of nations has rules of its own on the subject of allegiance, and disregarde generally all restrictions imposed upon it by municipal codes.

This is rendered most evident by the proceedings of independent States in relation to extradition. No State can demand from any other, as a matter of right, the surrender of a native born or naturalized citizen or subject, an emigrant, or even a fugitive from justice, unless the demand is authorized by express treaty stipulation. International law allows no such claim, though comity may sometimes yield what right withholds. To surrender political offenders (and in this class Austria places Koszta) is not a duty, but, on the contrary, compliance with such a demand would be considered a dishonorable subserviency to a foreign power, and an act meriting the reprobation of mankind."

As rendering needless all further controversy on this point, Mr. Marcy recalls to Mr. Hulseman's recollection, the events of 1849 and 1850, in relation to the reclamation of Polish refugees in Turkey by Russia, and of Hungarians (of whom Koszta was one) by Austria. These demands, he shows, were refused by Turkey, and both Russia and Austria submitted to the refusal, and neither ever imputed to Turkey a violation of their rights. To show that the same claims to rights now set up by Austria were repudiated in 1849 and 1850, he refers to the contemporaneous views of eminent statesmen, and to the concurrence of the governments of Europe, among which the question was discussed and decided against Austria. Mr. Marcy expresses his regret "that this claim for the surrender of Koszta and his companion, so fully considered then and so signally overruled, should be again revived by Austria under circumstances which make the United States a reluctant party in the controversy. The claim has been repudiated by the general judgment of Europe, and this government is unable to discover any sufficient reason for dissenting from that decision.

Mr. Marcy denies that Turkey was under any treaty obligations to deliver Koszta to Austria, or that her Consul-General had a right to seize him; and this, notwithstanding the inferential declaration of Mr. Hulsemann to the contrary. In support of this he resorts to the declarations of the public men of the Porte, and says: "Their explicit denial may be fairly considered as equivalent to Austria's affirmation without proof, where proof, if it existed, could be so easily adduced."

These considerations, says Mr. Marcy, have led him, "as he believes they will lead all others who duly reflect on them, to the confident conclusion that there exist no treaties between Austria and Turkey which could justify, or in any way countenance, the seizure or imprisonment of Koszta by the Austrian functionaries."

"But if Austria really has such authority by treaties as she now claims," Mr. Marcy contends "that it confessedly extends only to Austrian subjects," and it could not apply to Koszta unless he was such a subject at the time he was seized.

Mr. Marcy next proceeds to discuss the question whether Koszta was a subject of Austria at the time he was seized. After detailing the manner in which the Hungerian refugees were expelled from Turkey (and among them Koszta) and exiled to the United States by the coercion of Austria, he argues thus:

By the consent and procurement of the Emperor of Austria, Koszta had been sent into perpetual banishment. The Emperor was a party to the expulsion of the Hungarian refugees from Turkey. The sovereign by such an act deprives his subjects to whom it is applied of all their rights under his Government. He places them where he cannot, if he would, afford them protection. By such an act he releases the subjects thus banished from the bond of allegiance. Any other result would make the political connection between the subject and the sovereign a state of unmitigated vassalage, in which all the duties and no rights would be on one side, and all the rights and no duties on the other. Koszta must be regarded as having been banished by Austria; for he was one of the Hungarian refugees whom she procured to be expelled from Turkey in 1851. They were released from confinement at Kutahia on condition of submitting to perpetual banishment, and she had two persons present at their departure "who claimed and obtained there an active share in the arrangements." Koszta could never thereafter be rightfully demanded as an Austrian subject.

Another ground he urges why Koszta at Smyrna was not an Austrian subject. It is this:

By a decree of the Emperor of Austria of the 24th of March, 1832, Austrian subjects leaving the dominions of the Emperor without permission of the magistrate and a release of Austrian oltizenship, and with an intention never to return, become "unlawful emigrants," and lose all their civil and political rights at home. (Enoy. Amer. Tit. Emigration, 2 Kent's Com. 50, 51.)

Koszta had left Austria without permission, and with the obvious and avowed intention never to return; he was, therefore, within the etriot meaning of the imperial decree, "an unlawful emigrant." He had incurred and paid the penalty of that offence by the loss of all his civil and political rights. If he had property, it had escheated, and he was reduced to a state worse than absolute allegiance; for allens have, by right, the benefit of the civil laws for protection. In whatever country they may be. Stripped by this imperial decree of civil and political rights, Koszta had, in Austria, no redress for personal wrongs, and abroad he had no claim to protection from the Government that would still hold him asa subject. He was, in regard to Austria, an outlaw. What right can a sovereign have to the allegiance of a person reduced by him to such a miserable condition? It seems to have been the very object of the Austrian decree to dissolve the previous political connection between the "unlawful emigrant" and the Emperor. In Koszta's case it was dissolved.

As some importance seemed to be attached by the Austrinn government to the declarntion of Koszta when imprisoned on the Austrian brig, that "he was a Hungarian, and would live and die a Hungarian," Mr. Marcy produces the testimony of Captain Ingrahem that "he did not hear Koszta say so;" and proceeds:

It may well be doubted whether Koszta ever used any such language. Should it, however, be admitted that he did make that or a similar declnration, it cannot be fairly understood to imply an acknowledgment that he was then a subject of the Emperor of Austria. To apprehend rightly what he meant by such a declaration, it is proper to consider his situation, his known sentiments, and his antecedents. In his mind no two things could probably be more distinct from each other than Austria and Hungary. One was an object of his aversion—the other an object of his love. His affections clustered around the land of his birth, and were the more intense because he thought that country had been cruelly wronged, and he knew it was unfortunate. In his visions of the future he saw a happier destiny for Hungury. He saw her standing proudly among the independent nations of the earth, under a clement government emanating from the will of the people, and dedicating its constitutional authority to their general welfare. In the fallen condition of Hungary he thought it base to disown her, and glories to claim her for the land of his birth. His situation when this decisuration is supposed to have been made is also to be regarded in interpreting his words. He was in the hands of Austrian agents, loaded with fetters, and warned of his doom by the knowledge of the sad fate of so many of his unfortunate companions. In this forlorn condition he could not have intended, by the language ascribed to him, to acknowledge any unbroken tie which then bound him to the Emperor of Austrin.

By a fair application of the sound principles of law, and by a careful consideration of the facts, Mr. Marcy is brought to the conclusion, "that those who acted in behalf of Austria had no right to seize and imprison Martin Koszta."

To pince the justification of the American agents still farther beyond controversy, Mr. Marcy proceeds to show "that Koszta, when he was seized and imprisoned at Smyrna, had the national character of an American, and the government of the United States had the right to extend its protection over him." This he proves by Koszta's declaration of his intention to become an American citizen, by which he was clothed with an American nationality, in virtue whereof the government of the United States was authorized to extend to him its protection, both at home and abroad. This position he sustains by reference to voluminous authorities, and arrives at the conclusion that, "giving effect to these well established principles, and applying them to the facts in the case, the result is, that Koszta acquired, while in the United States, their national character; that he retained that character when he was seized at Smyrna, and that he had a right to be respected as such while there by Austria and every other foreign power. The right of a nation to protect, and require others to respect, at home and abroad, all who are clothed with its nationality, is no new doctrine now for the first time brought into operation by the United States. It is common to all nations, and has had the sanction of their practice for ages; but it is new that at this late period, when the United States assert a claim to it as a common inheritance, it should at once be discovered that it is a doctrine fraught with danger, and likely to compromit the peace of the world. The United States see no cause for alarm; no reason for renouncing for themselves what others have so long and so harmlessly enjoyed."

In order to justify Captain Ingraham in his interference in behalf of Koszta, Mr. Marcy says:

The first aggressive act in this case was the seizure of Koszta at Smyrna, committed by the procurement of the Austrian functionaries—the first improper use of a national ship, the imprisonment of Koszta therein, was made by the commander of the brig Hussar. That ship was converted into a prison for the illegal detention of a person clothed with the nationality of the United States, and consequently entitled to their protection. If Austria upholds, as it appears she does, the conduct of the commander of the Hussar, she is in fact the first aggressor. The act of the commander of the Hussar led to the series of other acts which constitute the ground of complaint against the United States. The alleged authority of Austria under treaties being set aside, no one would have questioned Captain Ingrahams right, had he been present, to arrest the proceedings of the kidnappers in the streets of Smyrna, and rescue Koszta from their hands. They were acting without and against the civil authority of the place; they were committing an atrocious outrage upon a person invested with the nationality of the United States. If he could have properly interfered in the first stage of this lawless transaction, he might do so in the last. The act was, in all its stages, a continuous wrong, and the character of the actors, though there was a succession of persons, was the same; they were all wrongdoers; and if they chanced to have the possession of a national ship, and converted it into a prison for the purpose of consummating this wrong, that ship, thus desecrated, was not entitled to the privilege of a sanctuary. Those who had the right to claim, and the power to release the prisoner illegally confined therein, might treat it as a prison, and while it was degraded to such an ignoble purpose, might forget, and be excused for forgetting that it was a national ship.

The Government of the United States, says Mr. Marcy, exceedingly regrets that Captain Ingraham should have been reduced to the alternative in which he acted; but it cannot find, after a full consideration of all the circumstances, any good reasons for disapproving the course he pursued. It is not just to Captain Ingraham to look at the affair as it was at the precise point of time when the demand for the release of Koszta was made. The antecedent events qualify and legalize that act. The Austrian functionaries had obtained the possession of the person of Kosztu, not in a fair or allowable way, but by violating the civil laws of Turkey and the rights of humanity. Under these circumstances, their custody of him was entitled to no respect from the agent of the Government which, by virtue of his nationality, had a right to protect him. Had all the circumstances been as they were, except a change of place—instead of being taken from the territory of the Ottoman Porte, had he been taken from that of the United States, could a question have been raised as to the propriety of Captain Ingraham's conduct? If the conclusions heretofore arrived at are correct, the Austrian agents had no more right to take Kosztu from the soil of the Turkish dominions than from the territory of the United States, and Captain Ingraham had the same right to demand and enforce his release as he would have had if Koszta had been taken from American soil, and incarcerated in a national vessel of the Austrian Emperor. In this question, confined as it is to the United States and Austria, the place of the transaction is immaterial, unless the Austrian municipal laws extended over it.

After giving expression to the pacific inclinations of our Government, Mr. Marcy declares that "in relation to international rights, the United States ask no more than has been conceded to others, and will not be contented with less. They put forth no new principles, but claim the full benefit of those which are established."

Before closing his communication, Mr. Marcy says he "will briefly notice the complaint of Austrin against Capt. Ingrahsm for violating the neutral soil of the Ottoman empire. The right of Austria to call the United States to an account for the acts of their agents affecting the sovereign territorial rights of Turkey is not perceived, and they do not acknowledge her right to require any explanation."

He concludes his long letter thus:

If any thing was done at Smyrna in derogation of the sovereignty of Turkey, the Government will give satisfactory explanation to the Sultan when he shall demand it, and it has instructed its Minister resident to make them known to him. He is the judge, and the only rightful judge in the affair, and the injured party, too. He has investigated its merits, pronounced judgment against Austria, and acquitted the United States; yet, strange us it is, Austria has called the United States to an account for violating the sovereign territorial rights of the Emperor of Turkey.

The conclusions at which the President has arrived, after a full examination of the transaction at Smyrna, and a respectful consideration of the views of the Austrian Government thereon, as presented in Mr. Hulsemann's note, are, that Koszta, when seized and imprisoned, was invested with the nationality of the United States, and they had, therefore, the right, if they chose to exercise it, to extend their protection to him; that from international law the only law which can be rightfully appealed to for rules of action in this case—Austria could derive no authority to obstruct or interfere with the United States in the exercise of this right, in effecting the liberation of Koszta; and Capt. Ingraham's interposition for his release was, under the peculiar and extraordinary circumstances of the case, right and proper.

These conclusions indicate to Mr. Hulsemann the answer which the undersigned is instructed by the President to make to the Emperor of Austria to the demands presented in Mr. Hulsemann's note.

The President does not see sufficient cause for disavowing the acts of the American agents which are complained of by Austria. Her claim for satisfaction on that account has been carefully considered, and is respectfully declined.

Being convinced that the seizure and imprisonment of Koszta were illegal and unjustifiable, the President also declines to give his consent to his delivery to the Consul-general of Austria at Smyrna; but, after a full examination of the case, as herein presented, he has instructed the undersigned to communicate to Mr. Hulsmann his confident expectation that the Emperor of Austria will take the proper measures to cause Martin Koszta to be restored to the same condition he was in before he was seized in the streets of Smyrna on the 21st of June last.

The undersigned avails himself of this occasion to renew to Mr. Hulsemann the assurance of his high consideration. W. L. MARCY.

WIDOWS AS PRINTERS.—The Pittsburgh Gazette says the attempt to introduce women as compositors in that city has been remarkably successful, and that widows make the most rapid advancement, "as their intellects are more mature, and their knowledge superior to that of most boys when they commence an apprenticeship to the printing business." Besides this, we presume their previous experience in small caps, bodkins, washing forms, and press work, generally, has already initiated them in several of the details of the craft.

THE ECHOING HORN.....By Sidney Dyer

When evening's soft twilight the day-doll is closing
And the reaper returns with his wain-load of corn,
Far o'er the west valley in silence reposing,
We hear the full strains of the echoing horn
The echoing horn—Go-le-oo, Go-le-oo

As the night in its beauty is calmly advancing,
And the hum of the village is hushed on the ear,
Then o'er the still waters with echoes entrancing,
From yon distant hamlet, its mellow notes cheer,
Its mellow notes cheer—Go-le-oo, Go-le-oo

A charm o'er the spirit is tranquilly stealing,
As it list to the swell of that heart-stirring strain,
It brings to the bosom a wild gush of feeling,
And all the bright dreams of my boyhood again,
Sweet echoing horn!—Go-le-oo, Go-le-oo.

CENTENARY INSTITUTE, ALA

This Institution of Learning has been in successful operation for ten years, is situated eight miles north of Selma, and is the child and property of the Alabama Conference.

There are two departments, male and female. In the male department young men are prepared for the junior class in any college or if they chose, complete their education here. The female department is regularly organized as a college.

The course of study is extensive, and the instruction thorough. The teaching is done mainly by men of age and experience, (not by girls.)

The President (Rev A. H. Mitchell) is a minister of the gospel, of twenty odd years standing, and during most of that time has been connected with literary institutions of the church in Georgia, South Carolina and Alabama. He is assisted by seven others, most of whom are persons of age and experience; and all, with one exception, professors of religion. A majority of the Board of Trustees are members of the Alabama Conference, which fact is a sufficient guarantee of its successful management.

Board and tuition are as low as can be afforded, and lower than most institutions of similar grade.

The next term opens the first Monday in October, and closes the first Wednesday in July. For further particulars, apply to the President, at Summerfield, Ala.

H. J. HARRISON, Secretary.

Summerfield, Alabama.

OAK BOWERY FEMALE COLLEGE.

This Institution of learning is under the supervision and control of the Alabama Conference of the M. E. Church, South, and has been in successful operation for six years. It is situated about five miles north of the Montgomery and West Point Railroad, in Chambers co., in a healthy country, and among a population, moral, industrious and intelligent.

The Board of Trustees take great pleasure in announcing to the public the election of the Rev. ALEX. SPEER, of Georgia, to the Presidency of the College. We think it only necessary to be known, that the Institution will be for the next year under the charge and direction of Brother Speer, to awaken a deep interest in behalf of the enterprise throughout the community, and impart confidence of success. His long and faithful service in the M. E. Church as a minister—his age and experience—his natural judgment and sound discretion—his acknowledged literary attainments and ability, authorize the expectation of full patronage on the part of an enlightened public.

A complete corps of Instructors whose names will hereafter be published, will be provided to supply the demand for instruction.

Miss MARY J. TOOMER continues Principal in the Music Department; and the unbounded satisfaction hitherto given by Miss Toomer, who we consider has no superior in any country, is a sure guarantee that all who patronize will be pleased.

Through the kind offices of the former President, the Rev. Wm. F. Samford, who solicited contributions for that purpose, a fine and judiciously selected Library, of several hundred volumes, has been purchased, and is now in the possession of the College, embracing some of the most approved and standard literary works, and such as are peculiarly adapted to the purposes of Female Education.

The Tuition Fees will be no higher than usual, and the course of study as extensive as that in any institution of the same grade in the country.

The College Exercises will begin under the proposed organization, on the first Monday in January next—its second session will begin on the first Monday in September, and close at Christmas.

A circular, containing fuller information, will appear over the signature of the President.

FEMALE MASONIC INSTITUTE,

Dayton, Marengo County, Alabama.

Rev. E. D. Pitts, Principal.

TO PARENTS, GUARDIANS, AND THE FRIENDS OF EDUCATION GENERALLY, we would announce the opening of the TENTH Annual Session of the Institute. The healthful locality—the spacious and beautiful grounds—the commodious and convenient buildings—the full supply of Musical Instruments—the fixed purpose of the Trustees to spare no expense or efforts to promote the true interests of FEMALE EDUCATION—and the assiduous devotion of an efficient Faculty to promote the comfort and improvement of Pupils, lead us to expect with confidence a liberal support.

The Principal alone has taught with marked success in Alabama, Mississippi and Florida, and will consecrate all his energies—physical, intellectual, and moral—to the proper training of the head and heart of those committed to his tutelage.

The services of Miss MARY W. HOWZE, who has been for two years past connected with the Central Masonic University, have been secured. Her intelligence, energy, piety, and felicitous manner of communicating, have justly placed her in the first rank of educators.

The Musical, French, and Ornamental Department will be conducted by competent and skillful Teachers, and all due attention given to the arts and accomplishments that so beautify and adorn the gentler sex.

The Primary Department will be confided alone to a choice and gifted Lady, for we design to attend carefully to that sadly and unjustly neglected class of Pupils.

The Scholastic year is divided into Two Sessions of nearly Five Months each—with no intervening recess. The School opens on the first day of October, and closes with Examination Exercises in the latter part of July. Pupils received at any time, and charged to the end of the Session. For fractions of Sessions each week is counted one twentieth.

The School is not Sectarian or denominational; and the only religious tuition embraces the principles of a pure morality based upon the cardinal doctrines of the Bible.

The Principal and his wife have charge of the Stewards Department, and will tenderly care for the health, manners and morals of those who Board in the Institute. Each boarder will be made to feel as far as possible that she is the loved subject of parental solicitude, and every reasonable wish will be promptly and cheerfully gratified. Yet, Discipline will not be forgotten, and the needful restraints of family government will be thrown around them.

CHARGES PER SESSION OF FIVE MONTHS.

Primary Class	$12 50
Preparatory Class	15 00
Junior and Senior Class	20 00

BOARD (including Washing, Fuel and Lights) per month 10 00

Each Boarder must furnish her own Towels, Brushes and Combs, and have each article distinctly marked with her full name.

AN INVARIABLE RULE.—Board and Tuition one-half in advance, and the balance at the end of each Session; and every account must be closed at the end of each Session, by Cash, or by Note.

SPECIAL ARRANGEMENT.

Each Lodge in Marengo County is entitled to select within its jurisdiction, a worthy object of benefaction, and have her taught in the Institution without charge, provided said Lodge secure the payment of her Board and supply her with Books and Stationery.

As the Principal is so extensively known, the Committee have forborne to speak of his character and qualifications, and refer Parents and Guardians to the persons named below.

LET'S SIT DOWN AND TALK TOGETHER.

Let's sit down and talk together
Of the things of olden day,
When we, like lambkins loosed from tether,
Gayly trip'd along the way.
Time has touch'd us both with lightness,
Leaving furrows here and there,
And tinging with peculiar brightness
Silvery threads among our hair.
Let's sit down and talk together;
Many years away have passed,
And fair and foul has been the weather
Since we saw each other last.
Many whom we loved are living
In a better world than this;
And some among us still are giving
Toil and thought for present bliss.
Let's sit down and talk together;"
Though the flowers of youth are dead.
The ferns still grow among the heather.
And for us their fragrance shed.
Life has thousand blessings in it
Even for the aged man;
And God has lild in every minute
Something we may wisely scan.
Let's sit dow nand talk together;
Boys we were—we now are men;
We meet awhile, but know not whether
We shall meet to talk again
Parting time has come: how fleetly
Speed the moments when their wings
Are fann'd by breathings issuing sweetly
From a tongue that never stings!

LETTER FROM FRANCE.

THE FRENCH CONFERENCE.

PARIS, September 22, 1853.

The second French Methodist Conference has just been held in this city. The first met last year in the South of France, and was attended by all the Ministers. This one was only attended by the preachers of the Northern District, and by two delegates of the Southern one, this arrangement having been agreed upon a year ago, in order to save something on the travelling expenses. The meetings began on the 7th of this month, and lasted till the 15th. They were characterized by much brotherly feeling, though perhaps not by that legislative decorum and dignity which is found, I am told, in your Annual Conferences. They partook in fact more of the conversational form than of that of speech-making and oratory. However, the resolutions passed are of the highest importance, especially those which refer to the formation in Paris of a Methodist Book Room, with an Editor or Publisher, who is requested, under the supervision of a committee of three ministers, at once to edit, translate, reprint and complete whatever may help to forward or strengthen the cause of Methodism. This Editor must, of course, first obtain from Government a bookseller's license, no small matter, I assure you, and it is not yet known whether he will succeed or not. Chances are as much against as for him.

Four candidates to the Ministry were presented by the District Meetings, but only two were received as preachers on trial. The two others remain evangelists or salaried local preachers for the present year. The reason for this difference is a financial one, viz: the fear of being embarrassed by engagements above our pecuniary means, or by accepting too hastily candidates who might become a burden on our funds. Should we next year be in a situation to make a provision for the future wants of those two local preachers, they will at once be received amongst us as ministers, and their time of trial will probably be shortened.

The report of the Committee of Evangelisation was of a most cheering nature. An Evangeliet has been supported in the department of the Haute Marne, in the midst of a Roman Catholic population of nearly 300,000 souls, where he is the only Protestant agent. Another has been employed amongst our old friends in Normandy, who are not numerous enough to require a minister, but are faithful and liberal according to their means. A third agent has been helping the ministers of the Droms Circuit, whose work was greatly increased by the late revival. Two day schools had been opened in Nohiez, one for boys and the other for girls, and they are prospering under the care of three teachers.

After giving interesting details on these different undertakings, the report proceeded to state that there were some new openings for usefulness, which recommended themselves to the attention of the Conference. Thus an Evangelist was earnestly requested for St. Malo, opposite the shores of the islands of Jersey and Guernsey, and forming an intermediate link between that district and ours of the North. A petition from Roman Catholics in Corsica, including a priest, had been received, asking for Evangelical Ministers and Colporteurs. Demands for schools had come from Lizieng, a Catholic town in Normandy, and from the Higher Alps, the chosen field of labor of Felix Neff. The Calais Circuit was in great want of a Colporteur, to visit the poor, and place copies of Holy Scriptures. Having for the present neither the men nor the means, the Conference was unable to give a favorable answer to all these urgent calls, but a standing committee was appointed for the purpose of finding agents and money, in order that these Providential openings may be successfully occupied as soon as possible. The collections amongst our people for purposes of Evangelisation, or what you would call in the United States, I think, the Home Mission, have amounted to about $540, which is considered very good for the first year. The collections made in the classes for our worn out preachers fund have produced $160.

The statistical returns of last March, presented to Conference, were as follows: 26 chapels and 79 other preaching places, (increase 13;) 19 ministers, 5 evangelists and 21 local preachers; 831 members of society, (increase 49) besides 111 on trial; 28 Sabbath Schools (increase 1) with 148 teachers, and 1462 scholars; 3 day schools, with 4 teachers and 84 pupils. Were similar returns to be made now, they would no doubt show a much larger increase of members, since the extensive revival I mentioned in my last, has lately brought a great many souls into our church.

I must not forget to state that the public services held in Paris during the sittings of Conference were well attended, especially the Conference prayer meeting, and the parting service, in which the Lord's supper was administered to the ministers and people by the President and Secretary of the Conference.

Upon the whole, our Conference has been a good and happy one, and the facts brought to light are such as ought to encourage us, and make us thankful. A gracious revival has taken place in our congregations; doors of usefulness are opening before us; laborers have presented themselves and pecuniary aid has been afforded to a greater extent than hitherto, although not yet in proportion to our wants; liberty of worship has generally been granted throughout our circuits, although our brethren of other churches have been sorely persecuted in some parts of the Empire; oneness of purpose and a spirit of self-denial prevail among our preachers, and mutual love amongst our members; such are some of the blessings vouchsafed. Are they not sufficient to make us sing praises to the Lord?

Since I wrote my last letter I have been on a tour of some 1200 miles, to the South of France, as a delegate of the Paris Sunday School Society. I had not visited the South (my birth-place) for the last six years, and felt it a great privilege to be able to revisit the scenes of my childhood, to see the olive, the almond and the jujub trees, to hear the song of the cicada, to feel what heat really is, and to notice the numerous improvements that have taken place of late in cleanliness of towns, the home comforts in villages, and the mode of travelling, railways having now come into very general use. In the Cevennes, where so much blood of the Protestants was shed by means of the Dragonnades, under the reign of Louis XIV, I saw some of the first Sunday Schools established in France. One of them has had the same female superintendent from the beginning, 36 years ago. The general results of my inquiries were very satisfactory indeed. I found that of late a spirit of inquiry had been awakened almost every where in favor of Sunday Schools, and that the pastors had taken the matter in hand in real earnest, seeking to obtain information on the best modes of conducting them. The teachers are few in number, but intelligent and pious, so that I doubt not but that revivals amongst children will become a common occurrence. Adult classes are frequently met with in the schools, and in one village they contained as many as sixty old women. But, on the other hand, I regret to say that the male scholars were very few indeed. In no case were they as numerous as the girls, whilst in some instances, (though never in Methodist schools) the only children were females, none of the boys being willing to come. This indicates the prevalence, to a greater extent than I imagined, of the old notion, that religion is good for females only. There is in this respect a very perceptible difference between the North and the South of France. Before I returned to Paris, I was pleased to see some of the new converts I mentioned in a former letter, children from eight to fourteen years old, attending the prayer and class meetings, and taking an active part in them with a zeal and an earnestness which might well put to shame many adult worshippers.

An important meeting was held at the end of last month at Hamburg, near Frankfort, in Germany, for the purpose of examining whether any means could be devised by the Christians of various denominations in Europe for the protection of religious liberty. There were nineteen persons present, chiefly ministers from various parts of England, France, Germany and Switzerland. After various resolutions, too lengthy for your columns, a Provisional Committee for the defence and propagation of religious liberty, was formed, composed of Lord Shaftesbury, Sir Culling E. Eardly, President of the Evangelical Alliance, Rev. Dr. Steane, Rev. Dr. Blackwood, Rev. T. R. Brooke, T. Macgregor, Esq., and G. H. Oliphant, Esq., with power to add to their number. This committee will meet at the end of next month, in order to examine any cases of persecution laid before them, and to decide upon the means of action; they will correspond with the various branches of the Evangelical and of the Protestant alliances, with the German Diet or Kirchentag, and with the Society of Gustavus Adolphus. They will also convene a general meeting in August or September, 1854, in Belo, or in some other central Continental city. It was remarked at one of the sittings of this meeting, that the very day they were assembled, (24th of August) was the anniversary of the massacre of St. Bartholomy, in 1572. In presence of such souvenirs as this, and surrounded by members of a church which persecutes as often as it dares to do it, how necessary it is to protect and defend the religious liberty of all Christians.

A fortnight ago, I saw and conversed with another victim of the Grand Duke of Tuscany's persecuting spirit. After the affair of the Madiai, which made such a stir in the Christian world, the Grand Duke takes good care to bring no more before the regular courts of law persons accused of heresy. They are now condemned, without being judged, in order that no one may hear of it. Gardueci, the Florentine I saw, had thus been condemned to one year's imprisonment, because a Bible was found in his house, and he was suspected of having read it! However, the clemency (?) of the Grand Duke commuted this punishment into two years' exile, and Guarducci is now in England, where he has obtained a situation.

REGENERATION.—The necessity of regeneration is a fact lying at the very foundation of Christianity. No church has ever advanced in the divine life which has discarded it. Whenever it has been rejected, the spirit and life of Christianity have disappeared. It is a truth that must be believed and taught by the church before it can ever expect to extend a really spiritual influence over the world.

BIOGRAPHICAL.

REV. JACOB SLATER HUGHES.

In the autumn of 1837, I received my appointment from the Tennessee Annual Conference, to the Columbia station. Shortly after entering upon the duties of my charge, I received by certificate, into the membership of the church, the beloved brother, whose name stands at the head of this article. He was then a young man, and a fine specimen of manly beauty. His occupation was that of cabinet maker, and he was regarded as a master workman. As a church member, I found him partetual to the calls of duty; and in his experience of Divine things, a Christian of more maturity than is ordinarily found in men of his age and opportunities. He was a valuable accession to our Sabbath School, as an efficient teacher; and in the class meetings and prayer meetings, his godly conversation, fervent and sensible prayers, were always refreshing and edifying. Even then, he was regarded as a young man of much promise; and his pastor, and many of his elder brethren felt that he was called of God to preach the gospel. But he entertained a high sense of the dignity and responsibility of the holy calling, and humble views of his fitness for the work, consequently, he hesitated, and some years were added to his life before he consented to surmount every difficulty, and give himself wholly to the ministry of the word. Subsequent to the time of which I speak, he lived in Nashville, and then in Murfreesboro,—made a trading tour to Texas, speculating in flour.

He was successful, made money; but was taken sick,—was robbed, and left to die, penyless in a strange land. But God in mercy raised him up, and in process of time he returned to Tennessee, and soon after, entered the traveling connection.

Not having the printed Minutes of the Conference at hand, I must rely upon my recollection of the time of his admission, and the fields of labor he occupied. If I am correct in my remembrances, he was admitted on trial in the Tennessee Conference, October, 1840; and appointed to Rockbreak circuit. The next year to La Grange College, as chaplain and Station preacher. The next to Russell's Valley circuit; in which he was the instrument of an extraordinary and extensive revival. Some two or three hundred were added to the church. The next year, he was stationed in Pulaski, Tenn. Then Bible Agent and distributor in North Alabama.

At the Conference held in Huntsville, 1845, he was transferred to the Alabama Conference, from which he took his first appointment, early in 1846, which was "Agent for the American Bible Society"—for a few months at the close of this year, he filled the Columbus Station. The years '47 and '48, he was continued in the Agency with such success and usefulness, that the Board has uniformly tendered him the appointment every year since. But Brother Hughes, felt that it was more compatible with his sense of duty to the Church, and his family, to engage in the regular pastoral work. Accordingly he resigned the Agency, and in 1849, he was appointed to Lafayette Station. In 1850 he was Presiding Elder on the Talladega District: but the labors being above his strength, he asked the Bishop at the close of his first year to relieve him, which was done; and in 1851 he was appointed to the Camden Station. Here our reunions were at last, quarterly, and in these we reviewed the past, and spoke to each other freely of all that concerned us for time and eternity, by which, I obtained an insight into the depths of his piety, the cultivation and grasp of his intellect, his devotion to his work, the spotlessness of his character, that made him doubly dear to me, as a friend and brother in the Lord. And I may say, with all safety, no man ever did, or will more effectually win all hearts to admire and love him, than did brother Hughes in Camden and vicinity. In 1852, he was stationed in Auburn; and in 1853, in Mobile city, Franklin street charge, where he ceased at once to work and live. He died of yellow fever, on the 12th September, 1853.

How this dear brother was employed for days, and weeks before his death, will more fully appear from the following extract of letters. The first is from Bro. Hughes himself to a friend in Auburn:

"Who is my Neighbor."

COL. DRAKE:

Since Monday morning I have visited 79 families; and seen, perhaps, 150 cases of fever. In a number of cases the whole family was down, and utterly destitute of means and attentions. It is amongst the poor and destitute, mostly, that the great suffering and mortality prevails. I have seen families who, in a few days, will be extinct. I saw one family, on Wednesday, consisting of 8 persons—2 were lying dead, the other 6 lying with the fever: 3 of them have since died. Our noble, self-sacrificing, relief associations, are doing almost super-human deeds! Glorious men and women! May the Eternal God reward them. But with all that is done, many will die for want of money and nursing.—Can't my old Auburn friends send us a few hundred dollars?

Enclose it to me, or to C. C. Langdon, Mayor. Three of the Methodist preachers, Hearn, Powell and Herwig, are down with the fever. Send us money—Sympathy—Prayers; God will bless the man who helps us in this time of need. My own health—thank God—is (for me) very good.

Yours, Affectionately,
J. S. HUGHES.

Mobile, Ala., Sept. 3d, 1853.

No monument, the tribute of a nation, will ever press the sleeping dust of this, more than here, and yet, who dares say, but here was bravery and generosity, which the deeds of the world's so-called heroes can never eclipse.—"Let another praise thee, and not thine own lips," is an adage which some might apply here, if so, the following will be in point:

COTTAGE HILL, NEAR MOBILE,
September 17th, 1853.

Bro. Ferguson:—Our deceased brother, the Rev. J. S. Hughes, died at his post in the city of Mobile, of yellow fever, the 12th inst.

I learn from Sister Hughes, that you, perhaps, know more of the history of our deceased brother, than any other friend in the Alabama Conference. As this is the case, and you were regarded as a particular friend, you must write his obituary.

Bro. Hughes had his family at my house, and went into the city daily, some seven miles, to visit the sick. His visits averaged about 20 to 30 families per day, to whom he offered the consolations of the gospel. He had endeared himself to a good many by his kind attention in hours of deep affliction and distress. His purse, though scantily filled, was always open to the calls of the needy. Bro. Hughes remarked to me that he never felt so happy as he did whilst visiting the suffering sick. In the discharge of duty he took the epidemic, and within six days the song, "Jesus lover of my soul," which he so often sung to cheer the gloomy passage of many a hapless soul through the vail of death, was sung to buoy him up through the same narrow passage. He died in the faith of the gospel which he preached. He said his stay was on God, his Saviour. Bro. Hughes was a good man. I had a warm regard for him, and feel I have lost a relative.

Thus the Lord calls away his workmen.—Powell, and Hughes, and now Bro. Starr is down with the fever. It is a sad and solemn time with us indeed, and what is to be the end is known only to the Lord. Remember us in your prayers.

Your friend and brother,
G. K. D. MCLELLAND.

From another reliable source, I have learned, that Brother Hughes when dying said: "All is well, I shall soon be with Bro. Powell!" Yes, glorious reunion; to which Bro. Starr, and others of our bore band, have since been added.

Brother Hughes was born in Virginia.—When about twelve years old his father died. Soon after, his mother moved to the State of Ohio. His mother marrying again, so displeased him, that he left home, and became an apprentice to learn a trade. He professed religion when about fifteen years old, and became a member of the Methodist E. Church. His educational advantages were few, nevertheless, by giving attendance to reading, he laid up stores of knowledge, intitling him to rank among our best preachers. He was not only a zealous, powerful preacher, but he was devoted to the Bible and Sabbath School cause; and the State had no man, more alive to the Temperance cause, than he; so much so, and so great the demand for his services, that if all his speeches were collected they would make a large volume. He has for years been in feeble health, and had made his calculations to die young, and to me, he often expressed but one regret, the less he might be to his excellent wife, and children. Alas! my brother, I feel how poorly my pen is doing thy memory justice, but thy record is on high, and it is my purpose to meet thee in the resurrection of the just!

FEELING IN PREACHING.

Rev. Samuel Davies was one of the most eloquent, powerful and successful preachers of modern times. One principal secret of his power consisted in his own intense feeling of the truths he uttered. In his Diary he mentions a sermon preached from Deut. x. 13, which he had previously preached "with great satisfaction and prospect of success," and remarks: "But alas, I have lost the spirit with which it was at first delivered; and indeed I can but rarely retain the spirit of preaching in the hurriss of a journey.—The materials of the sermon were very solemn, and nothing appeare to me a more unnatural incongruity, than to speak the most solemn things with a trifling spirit. Indeed, the incongruity appeared to me so great, that I was obliged to omit sundry things, though written before me in my notes, for want of a heart to express them with suitable tenderness and fervor."

Those ministers who pay the same attention to the state of their hearts, and to the correspondence between the truths they utter, and the feeling with which those truths are uttered, can scarcely fail of interesting their audiences, and of finding success in their work. A realizing sense of the nature and importance of the truths of the Gospel, gives clearness of view, fluency in declaring them, and pungency and persuasiveness in the application. Besides, strong feeling, if there be reason for it, communicates itself to the hearer, and fastens his attention upon the truths proclaimed. And, best of all, God blesses his servants when they realise the value of the treasure committed to them, and are moved with intense desire to impart imperishable riches to perishing men.

Doubtless a closer and more interesting study of the Scriptures, with more frequent and earnest pleadings at the throne of grace, to be delivered from a barren ministry, would give unwonted eloquence and power to many a discouraged minister, and rapidly fill up the vacant seats in his church.

QUESTIONS FOR SOMEBODY.—1. The building in which the church worship of which you are a member, cost several thousand dollars before it was fitted to accommodate a congregation. When would that church edifice have been built, if the other members of the church had taken no more interest in the matter than you have ever taken, or had left the contributions necessary to meet the expense just when you left?

2. In order to maintain public worship, and secure the observance of the ordinances of the gospel, the church elected a pastor, and pledged themselves to support him. If all the members of the church, according to their means, had paid into the treasury as you have paid, according to your means, what kind of support would the pastor have received?

DEATH.—Death is not to the Christian what it has often been called, "Paying the debt of nature." No, it is not paying a debt; it is rather like bringing a note to a bank, to obtain solid gold in exchange for it.

LEAVE THY GIFT.

Leave it there at the altar. You have come to pray, but you have forgotten a previous duty. Think a little: you remember all whom you have injured or offended, and to whom you have made neither retribution nor acknowledgment. Mercy is better than sacrifice. Leave thy gift—suspend your prayer—go and be reconciled to your brother.

How could the Lord more strikingly set forth the duty of forgiveness and reconciliation! Even prayer is hindered by anger and ill-will. Unless we forgive, we shall not be forgiven; and we must forgive "from the heart," and that to the extent of "seventy times seven."

Leave your gift, and go, take your brother by the hand. Has he wronged you? Forgive him, even as God for Christ's sake hath forgiven you: Christian forgiveness is not a formality, or a profession, or a transient feeling; it is operative. It is important to observe this, because there are persons who think thus: "I forgive my brother, but I never wish to see him again;" and so they pass in the street him whom they pretend to forgive without speaking, or shut the door of their house against him. "My little children," says the apostle John, "let us not love in word, neither in tongue, but in deed and in truth."

No prayers, no sacrifices, no gifts, no devotedness to means of grace and external acts of service, can make up for the want of forgiveness. We must be reconciled to our brother. We must at least make the attempt; and the steps to this are laid down in the eighteenth chapter of Matthew. Remember him who took his fellow servant by the throat, and consider his doom. Matt. xviii, 23-35. "So likewise," says Christ, "shall my Heavenly Father do also unto you, if ye from your hearts forgive not every one his brother their trespasses." Matthew xviii.

THE SOLITARY CHRISTIAN.

It would also seem that, in some solitary instances, God gives us to understand that sinners may be led to Christ without any agency of ours. We once had the happiness to meet with such a case. The individual was about sixty years of age. His residence was remote from all religious advantages and associations. He was a living, practical Christian, and expressed views which none other than such a Christian could truly utter. And how, said we, did you obtain these views? "It happened in this way; I had been a very industrious, hard working man; and when the affliction under which I am suffering came upon me, I was unable to attend to my little farm, and seldom moved far from the chair in which you now see me; time began to hang heavily upon my hands. I was much alone, and I knew not what to do, to amuse myself. The newspaper came once a week, but I soon read it through, and then I often said to myself, "What has a dying man like me to do with news?" Well, one day, to pass away the time, I took down that old family Bible which lies on the drawers there. I am ashamed to tell you that I had not looked into it for years. I believe that the last time I had opened it, was to write down the birth of my youngest child. It was put out of the way, on a high shelf, among some lumber, and it was covered with dust and cobwebs. I brushed them off, and began to read the gospel of John. I went on till I reached the third chapter, where it speaks about being born again. I then perceived that there must be something in religion more than I knew. Oh, how I wished for somebody to teach me, but I could think of no one. As I was closing the book, I happened to see that verse in James where it says, "If any man lack wisdom, let him ask of God, that giveth to all men liberally, and upbraideth not, and it shall be given him." "Now that," thought I, "is just what I want. If this verse be true, God will give me wisdom, if I ask him." So I prayed God to teach me what was meant by being born again. And though no angel came to tell me, like Cornelius, that my prayer was heard, by degrees I began to read my Bible with new eyes, and I trust with a new heart."

Somewhat curious to ascertain the doctrinal views of one who had obtained all his theological knowledge from the reading of the Scriptures alone, we tried him on many points, and found him well instructed in the mysteries of the kingdom of Heaven. He was a man of one book, but that book was the Bible. [Exchange.

ENCOURAGEMENT TO THE CHRISTIAN.—Ah! Christian, know your resources. Hear your God saying, "Call upon me in the day of trouble; I will deliver thee, and thou shalt glorify me." Make use of him as your "hiding place," your "dwelling place." Beware, in your distress, of crooked policy, of unlawful means of relief, of impatience, of dejection. By nothing can you so much please God as by your confidence in him; and by nothing can you so recommend your religion, as by showing the peace of God, which passeth all understanding, keeping your heart and mind, through Jesus Christ. Check, therefore, every tendency not only to murmuring, but to despondency, and after the example of your model, this evening, say, "What time I am afraid I will trust in Thee." "Why are thou cast down, O my soul, and why art thou disquieted within me? Hope thou in God, for I shall yet praise Him, who is the health of my countenance and my God." [Jay's Exercises.

Some men are not forward to examine themselves, because they rest in the good opinion of others. Alas! how vain is this. One may be gold and pearl in the eyes of others, yet God may judge him reprobate silver; others may think him a saint, yet God may write him down in his black book. [Watson.

ANOINTING WITH OIL.

Professor Simpson, of Edinburg, has been the means of bringing to light a curious corroboration of the sanitary value of the ancient practice of anointing with oil. It appears that the learned professor, when recently visiting the manufacturing town of Galashiels, was casually informed that the workers in the wool-mill in that place were exempt from the attacks of consumption and scrofula. On enquiring of the medical men in the vicinity, the truth of the statement was confirmed, and it was then deemed expedient to pursue investigations, on a broader scale.—Communications were accordingly sent to physicians residing in Dunfermline, Alloa, Tillicoultry, Inverness, and other districts where the wool-mills are in operation; and in the case of all it was ascertained that similar immunity was enjoyed from the fatal disease mentioned. It further appeared that in some of the localities scarlatina had been added to the list; and, also, that employment in the mills not only preserved health, but children of delicate constitutions were sent to be wool workers, for the express purpose of acquiring strength—a result in almost every instance attained.

A REMARKABLE ADMISSION.—The Freeman's Journal, the well known leading paper of the Romanists, in an editorial on Chaplains in Public Institutions, finds much fault with the appointment of Protestants to such posts, and contends for the appointment of Romish Priests, assigning a very extraordinary and significant reason.

"The rule is exceedingly plain," says the Journal, "in reference to prisons, poor houses, and all institutions supported by public money. Under our Government we do not see what business such institutions have with salaried chaplains—but if such are to be, it is evident they should be chosen of the religion most generally professed by the inmates of such institutions."

What sort of a religion must that be which furnishes most of the inmates of poor houses and prisons? Popery, its own chosen advocate, being witness, sends to the poor houses and prisons most of those who go there.

Christians! love the truth in truth; love the truth of God in truth; justify the truth, and the truth will justify you. Till you can love the naked truth, you will never love to go naked for the truth. Remember that, I pray you, Christians! [Dyer.

THE FRAUD OF FASHIONABLE EDUCATION.—The Southern Ladies' Companion has a valuable article upon the education of girls, from which we extract an important passage:

"The popular fondness for numerous and showy attainments, even were the system of teaching perfect, can lead to nothing but shallowness. Take up the plan or programme of our fashionable schools, and ask yourself how could it be otherwise? Here is a four years' college course—forty months of instruction—and see what is to be learned in that brief period. Take a sample—Grammar, Arithmetic, Geography, American History, Botony, Writing, Composition, Rhetoric, Logic, Criticism, Algebra, Geometry, European History; Evidences of Christianity, Natural Philosophy, Chemistry, Trigonometry, Mensuration, Moral Philosophy, Latin, French, Grecian and Modern History, Astronomy, Geology, Mental Philosophy, Mineralogy, Animal Physiology, Rhetorical Readings, Instrumental Music, Vocal Music, Drawing, Painting, Embroidery, Ornamental Needlework, Wax work, Shell work, etc., etc. Here we have some twenty sciences, two languages, extensive historical readings, fine arts, and sundries, some forty distinct studies to be mastered in forty months, and among them two languages, the natural, moral and exact sciences, and instrumental music. Perhaps no student ever mastered those two languages thoroughly in four years, (and Greek is often included,) and few, if any, ever become accomplished performers on the piano or harp in so short a time. But by what magic is it that girls beginning Latin in the latter half of their junior year, and French in their senior year, can master them before the end of the course. Pardon us for speaking plainly; but we can hardly look on this course as less than fraud. A girl studies Latin twelve or fifteen months; and French half as long—at the same time having a dozen other studies on hand—and graduates with credit, and takes her diploma as having taken the regular course, Greek, French, Latin, and all. Is not the girl cheated into the opinion that she understands the languages—of which she can know nothing of any value—and the parent cheated out of his money? Any man, capable of teaching the languages, knows that such a mere smattering as can be acquired in so short a time, can be of no value to the student; then what is the object? What can it be, if it be not to give a false character to the school, and get money virtually by false pretences? Perhaps some palliation may be found in the vitiated public taste, and the false pride of parents, which leads them to seek as large a literary name as possible for their daughter, whether true or false; but this cannot, it would seem, be a full justification of trustees and teachers, who are the persons to correct those errors, rather than by bowing to strengthen them. With defective modes of teaching, and an amount of studies pressed into the course, much greater than could be compassed by the best possible teaching, it must necessarily happen that female education must be superficial, and in the same proportion liquific."

DO LADIES LIKE FLATTERY? The Southern Ladies' Companion answers the question very sensibly, in the following article:

It is said that woman love flattery. They may like to be praised for good qualities which they think belong to them; but if they do not think themselves entitled to the praise given, or do not believe that he who bestows it thinks so—when it becomes flattery—it will hardly be found acceptable. And as weak men resort so much to this means of seeking favor with the fair, sensible women receive such offerings with great distrust, especially from one who is known to be in the habit of bestowing praise lavishly. Indeed, ladies would consult their interest and happiness generally by discountenancing everything that wears the appearance of flattery. If a man truly admires a lady, he can find better, and to sensible ladies more acceptable means of proving his admiration, than by stereotyped adulation and overwrought eulogy, from which true female sensibility must shrink. A wise man has said that as the slanderer is the most poisonous of wild beasts, so the flatterer is the most dangerous of tame ones. And if a lady be bitten by any of the class of gross flatterers that abound at this day, she is hardly entitled to commiseration. This sort of serpent sounds his rattles before he strikes, and when the charm is heard, though it may charm the silly, the woman of good sense will guard against the poisoned fang which she suspects to be concealed in the grass. If we wished to instance a specimen of delicate flattery, we should quote the letter of Steele to his wife: "You tell me you want a little flattery from me. I assure you I know of no one who deserves so much commendation as yourself, and to relieve saying the best things would be so little like flattery. The thing speaks itself, considering you as a very handsome woman, that love of retirement—one who does not want wit, and yet is exceedingly sincere; and so I could go through all the vices that attend the good qualities of other people, of which you are exempt. But, indeed, though you have every perfection, you have one extravagant fault, which almost frustrates the good in you to me, and that is, that you do not love to dress, to appear, to shine out," etc. Here Steele not only asserts that no good thing he could say of his wife would be flattery, but he affects to blame her for the virtue of despising display. But even the praising of a wife or husband, and especially before others, is attended with danger, and especially does it subject the parties to suspicion of attempting, by a fair outward show, to cover up a private state of affairs not the most pleasant. It is encouraging to a wife to know she has her husband's approbation in her endeavors to do her duty—and so vice versa—but for the parties to be ever ministering to each other's vanity, by flattery or constant praise, is a weakness, is in bad taste, and can do no good. Weak husbands frequently praise the beauty and wit of their wives in their presence, to strangers—assuming virtually that there is so little of those qualities as not to be discernible to others, without being informed of their existence. This, to a wife of good sense, whether merited or not, is matter of humiliation rather than pride.

BIENVILLE, THE FOUNDER OF NEW ORLEANS.—We take the following communication from the National Intelligencer:

Messrs. Editors: In your paper of this morning I noticed an article purporting to be copied from the Montreal Herald, which contains some allusions to "Bienville, the founder of New Orleans," which it may not be amiss to notice and correct before they have secured sanction to misrepresentations concerning that ancient Colonial Governor, and impressed the present generation with an undue degree of veneration for the memory of "the one in heavy mail." With an entire disregard of such superior merit, the article referred to, represents the subject thereof to have been "famous above all others for half a century in the early annals of Louisiana." It is certain that Bienville was at one early age made Governor of Louisiana; but as the article referred to narrates the circumstances of his death at Paris in 1767, "where he retired at last, ending his days there on the 7th of March, at the age of over 80 years," and as history states that "in 1740 his public career terminated under a cloud of censure, and the disapprobation of his sovereign," it is difficult to reconcile therewith the statements in the article concerning the portrait copied for Mr. Dr. Bow, of Louisiana; for, supposing Bienville to have been famous for half a century previous to the royal disgrace he incurred in 1740, (which he merited long previous,) we would necessarily carry back his connection with public affairs to 1690, when, unfortunately for the truth of the article in question, he was but five years of age; and we would furthermore be enlightening the editor in relation to the [illegible] by the French some dozen years.

Independently, however, of these cardinal errors respecting the character and services of Bienville, whose transition from "hostile movements against the Indians" is effected so gently to Paris "at last," as to almost preclude the idea that thirty years previous to his death he had been disgraced by his monarch. He had frequently disgraced his name and race by the most pernicious conduct towards the Indians, and been the cause of the untimely death of the noble and brave D'Artaguette, and the occasion of the massacre of the colony of St. Catherine. While Bienville was in early years distinguished for courage, and perhaps prudence, his whole history leaves but little to sanction his memory to veneration; and that my view is correct I will take occasion shortly to make appear at greater length. It seems to me a little curious that one who died as late as 1767, should be painted as old in a coat of "mail." Some pieces of a coat of mail were found in possession of the Southern Indians in 1800, which were presumed to have been preserved among them from the time of De Soto, more than two hundred years previous to the death of Bienville, when chain armor was worn; but, unless I am much out of my reckoning, no portraits were painted with the mail armor during the life of Bienville.

KRONEM.

Opium Smoking.

The following graphic description of opium smoking and its effect among the Chinese and adjacent Islands of India, is furnished by an English gentleman at one time connected with the China mission. He says:

One of the objects at Singapore that I had the curiosity to visit, was the opium smoker in his lurem; and certainly it is a most fearful sight, although perhaps not so degrading to the eye as the drunkard from spirits, lowered to the level of the brute, and wallowing in his filth. The idle smile and death-like stupor, however, of the opium debauchee, has something far more awful to the gaze than the bestiality of the latter. Pity, if possible, takes the place of other feelings, as we watch the faded cheek and haggard look of the being abandoned to the power of the drug; whilst disgust is uppermost at the sight of the human creature leveled to the beast by intoxication.

One of the streets in the centre of the city is wholly devoted to the shops for the sale of this poison; and here in the evening may be seen, after the labors of the day are over, crowds of Chinese, who seek these places to satisfy their depraved appetites. The rooms where they [illegible] and smoke are surrounded by wooden couches with places for the head to rest upon, and generally a side room is devoted to gambling. The pipe is a reed of about an inch in diameter, and the aperture in the bowl for the admission of the opium is not larger than a pin's head. The drug is prepared with some kind of conserve, and a very small portion is sufficient to charge it, one or two whiffs being the utmost that can be inhaled from a single pipe, and the smoke is taken into the lungs as from the hookah in India. On a beginner, one or two pipes will have an effect, but an old stager will continue smoking for hours. At the head of each couch is placed a small lamp, as fire must be held to the drug during the process of inhaling; and from the difficulty of filling and properly lighting the pipe, there is generally a person who waits upon the smoker to perform the office.

A few days of this fearful luxury, when taken to excess, will give a pallid and haggard look to the face; and a few months, or even weeks, will change the strong and healthy man into little better than an idiot skeleton. The pain suffer when deprived of the drug, after a habit, no language can explain; and [illegible] when, to a certain extent, [illegible] their faculties are alive. In the end, to their ruin, these infatuated people may be seen at 9 o'clock in the evening, in the different stages—some entering half drunk to feed the craving appetite, others [illegible] obliged to subdue during the day; others smoking and talking wildly under the effect of the first pipe; whilst the smoker around are [illegible] with their different companions, who lie [illegible] with an idiot smile upon their countenances, much under the influence of the drug, [illegible] for passing events, and [illegible] wished-for consummation. The [illegible] this tragic play is generally [illegible] of the building—and [illegible] lie stretched there who [illegible] state of bliss that opium [illegible] an emblem of the long sleep to which [illegible] blindly hurrying.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

TO MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

A telegraphic dispatch, received Thursday, at our office, from Rev. H. H. Montgomery, gives to our brethren of Mississippi information of a change in the place of their Conference session. The case is an extraordinary one, and calls for extraordinary measures. We hope the dispatch may reach them in time. It is as follows:

CANTON, Miss., Oct. 19, '53.

Yellow Fever continues at Port Gibson. The citizens of Canton invite the Mississippi Conference to meet here and shall expect it. No fever here. Preachers will please call at R. Harrington's Store.

H. H. MONTGOMERY.

CONFERENCE NOTICE.

The members of the East Texas Conference, Travelers, Visiting Brethren of other Conferences, and Local Preachers attending to receive Ordination, on their arrival in Marshall, on the 20th of November next, will please call at the Grand House, where they will be received and conducted by ready, respective Boarding-Houses during the Session of Conference. Those who expect to bring their families will please inform me by mail in due time. The Church Papers will please give this a few insertions.

MAIL FAILURES.—We would have complained of the irregularity of many of our exchanges for a few months past, but guessed with good reason they might have a similar complaint against us. The loss of our mail [illegible] office clerk, threw this important [illegible] new hands. Indeed the postal [illegible] of the whole South have been [illegible] though temporarily disturbed from [illegible]. At one time during the summer [illegible] heard that the Department would [illegible]city. A Mobile paper before us, [illegible] through a disappointed subscri[illegible] not been distributed for weeks [illegible] certain places in the interior of [illegible]. The complaint is general, and [illegible] the subscribers of the Advocate [illegible] in it—but we very much appre[illegible] their forbearance, as but few have been [illegible] us. Be patient—it will all work [illegible].

DEBTS.—We make acknowledgments to [illegible] courteous friend, D. C. Lowber, Esq., for a string or bundle, or if you please, a mess, of them, sent up last Tuesday, from his passenger seat, over Lake Pontchartrain. They are quite the go with our French and Creole citizens, just now, under the name of petits de lauriers. This is the season for them: fat on the ripe berry of the magnolia, they are agreeably and strongly spiced of nature, and cooked a la mode, lose nothing of [illegible]flavor. Reader—would you know the cookery? The cleaning consists in taking off the feathers—this is all. Every thing else is to be eat, except the feet—every thing. We confess, wings, neck, breast, and petit drumsticks being off, we did rather trim around the center. We can't be a Frenchman. There is a difference between an oyster and a bird.

INSANITY AND QUININE.—The frequent cases of insanity reported in the city of late have drawn attention to the "vigorous practice" of some M. D. quacks during the Epidemic. This powerful febrifuge was murderously abused by some of them. Many patients who will not be sent to the Lunatic Asylum, will go through life with a diseased nervous system in consequence.

AN OLD P. M.—We are pleased to see that the vacancy in the Postmastership of Montgomery, Ala., has been officially filled by the appointment of M. P. Blue, Esq., an old and efficient P. M. This is an important distributing office.

RENTS.—We are not in the secrets and speculations of the real estate market of the city. It was a confident prediction of many that the late Epidemic would greatly depreciate it. But house rent maintains itself, and if any thing, has advanced.

THE HOME CHINESE MISSION.—The Rev. J. L. Shuck has accepted the appointment of the Domestic Mission Board of the Southern Baptist Convention, as their Missionary to the Chinese population of California. It is his desire and purpose to embark for his interesting field by the 15th of November, if a sufficient amount of funds can be raised by that time to meet the expenses of the mission for the year.

☞ An English lady, Miss Cunningham, has been imprisoned at Lucca for distributing tracts in the neighboring villages. She was mobbed, in the first instance, by peasants, and then taken in charge by the police. Her friends promised her immediate departure, if she was released, but the Grand Duke declined to interfere, and said that the law must have its course. By the new civil code the punishment for endeavoring to convert the people from their faith, is fixed at five or ten years' imprisonment, with hard labor.

A DISTRESSFUL MAN.—Must be treated as they do Hebrew letters, spell backwards to be read.

NOTES OF A READER.

COMING ELECTIONS—COMMON SCHOOLS—THE PRESS AND ADVOCATE—THE PICAYUNE, A UNIVERSALIST PAPER.

Mr. Editor: The observations on "the coming election," in your editorial of the 15th instant, and also some notice of Unitarianism, in the preceding number of the Advocate, are suggestive of weighty reasons, for an enlarged and rapid circulation in the limits of the patronizing Conferences, and especially within the bounderies of Louisiana. It is now patent to the world that Romanism is moving with concerted strength and characteristic shrewdness upon one of the most cherished and vital institutions of our country. In several States the Papists have entered the Legislative Halls, and have had the treasonable effrontery to demand the destruction of the American common school system; a system as inimical to religious intolerance and bigotry, as it is friendly to enlightened opinions and public liberty. This conservator of national freedom, and the fountain of public intelligence, is the object of an attack upon which the Catholic strength of the United States is concentrated. In New York, Ohio and Michigan, the political deep has been made to boil like a pot; California was carried temporarily by a Jesuitical ruse; and Louisiana was only saved from being the victim of a like trick "by the discretion of her Legislature."

Popery has fairly entered the political arena—the Jesuits, sub rosa, have taken the stump. Last winter in the lobbies; they now seek a place within the bar. In this old field of hierarchial policy, but lately ventured on here, they are organising a legislative influence, beneath which, if not speedily opposed, Protestantism and liberty must fall together. The canvass approaches which is to decide the question—a question dear to the friends of truth and liberty.

But, whilst such interests are pending, the political and commercial press maintain a dogged silence. The city and country journals of Louisiana observe a cowardly non-committal aspect. For aught that may be found in their columns, we might suppose that the school question is dead, and that the Jesuists have left the State. But one paper has spoken out upon the subject, and that is the New Orleans Christian Advocate.*

It is necessary that the public mind should be awakened to the tricks and manœuvring of the Papists, and the political issues which they are springing upon our State legislation. The secular journals are muzzled by a temporising policy. The Advocate alone is out up to this mission of sounding the alarm, and of placing the truth before the people. In order to do this it must have an extensive circulation, especially in the country parishes. It must penetrate every village, every precinct and every home. The strength of the Protestants lies in the rural Districts, and this one organ must be made to reach them. Here then is an incentive to circulate—an appeal addressed to agents, based upon the broad grounds of evangelical truth and civil liberty.

We pass to another consideration, suggested by the question, "What is Unitarianism?" Whatever it is elsewhere, and however it is elsewhere propagated, here it is masked Universalism, circulated in the columns of a commercial and secular newspaper. Universalism and Unitarianism are usually associated, the world over. They are one and the same thing almost necessarily. Their doctrinal affinities are marked. The Unitarian development in our city, known as the "First Congregational Church," is built upon the doctrine of ultimate salvation to all, of no eternal punishment to any. Dr. Clapp, its pastor, not less distinguished for his private virtues, than for his pulpit eloquence, openly teaches this doctrine. However he may explain himself, the orthodox cannot otherwise understand him—the world neither will, nor can, make any thing else out of his theology. So far as his influence extends, it operates against the teachings of every Evangelical pulpit. He is tearing down what the Orthodox are building up; he is making the faith of the gospel of "none effect." His views are promulgated through one of the most extensively circulated commercial papers of the South. No one can censure Dr. Clapp for seeking such a medium as the New Orleans Picayune for the propagation of his doctrines, but those Evangelical denominations, who patronize that sheet, have a right to protest against the prostitution of its columns to weekly attacks upon their cherished doctrines.

To those who are unacquainted with the facts of the case, the course of the Picayune may not appear to be such a violent outrage upon the rights and confidence of the public. Other denominations are virtually excluded from it. Whilst those sermons preached in the "First Congregational Church," or addressed to that "Congregation," are sought with avidity by the conductors of the Picayune, and published without charge, answers to them from other quarters, are charged at advertising rates, and sometimes have been refused upon any terms whatever. This is in reality a proscription of the orthodox, whilst every means are used to disseminate the tenets of Universalism. From the silence of the Evangelical, the impression may have obtained where the facts are not known, that the views of Dr. Clapp are either endorsed by them, or that they are incapable of refuting them, when, in reality, this impunity is owing to an editorial favoritism wholly incompatible with the principles of a just and impartial journalism.

A public journal, avowedly commercial and unsectarian, which has grown rich from public patronage, violates the public trust when it descends from this position, and becomes the guardian and propagator of a baneful dogma. As an antidote to this abuse, we can only look to the circulation of the Advocate. The cause of Protestantism and of Evangelism look to the Advocate, and the Advocate looks to its friends and agents. Shall these expectations be disappointed?

PROTESTANT.

THE OVERFLOWING SCOURGE.

The yellow fever having left its starting point here, has made and is still making great ravages in the villages and towns of the interior. Of this our readers have been generally kept advised. At our last accounts it lingered with singular and fatal tenacity.

THE HEALTH OF NATCHEZ.—The Free Trader of the 12th says: "The epidemic has taken its departure from our city, whether from a subsidence of the causes of disease, or from want of subjects, we cannot decide. We hear of no new cases, and those who are sick are recovering or doing well. There was but one death on Sunday, and none on Monday and yesterday. The deaths in this city since July 17, now amount to 306, of which about 270 have been by fever. The interments in the city grave-yard for the same period, have been 392, of which about 355 have been by fever."

YAZOO CITY.—The Whig, of the 7th inst. says, in relation to the epidemic in that city: Although the report of the Sexton shows a slight diminution in the mortality during the past week, yet it is our melancholy duty to state that there is no abatement in the progress of the fever. Indeed, taking the present diminished population into consideration, it is, if any thing, worse than it has been. There have been 83 deaths in Yazoo City since the commencement of the yellow fever.

WOODVILLE.—The fever is slowly subsiding at Woodville, but only for the want of subjects. Up to the 7th instant, there had been 130 cases; discharged, 98; under treatment, 23; dead, 9. Of these six were foreigners.

Up to the 7th instant, there had been sixty deaths from yellow fever in Port Gibson.

The Herald also contains acknowledgments in addition to those before made, of $1550 received for the Howard Association of Port Gibson. It states that nearly $1000 more will be needed to meet the existing and current demands for charity.

GRAND GULF.—At Grand Gulf from Sept. 2 to October 2, there were 55 deaths, of which all but two were of fever.

VICKSBURG.—Rev. C. K. Marshall writes us, October 13: "Since I saw you I have seen little else but sadness, sorrow and death. For two months past, the yellow fever has swept through our city and its immediate vicinity in a most frightful manner, sparing neither priest or people, the hoary sire, or the infant of a few days. Nor is the work yet done. The melancholy tidings of death have just reached me as I write, and others lying on the margin of time must soon close their career, and see the "last of earth." We have lost many valuable members of our church, and many noble and good citizens.

"The clergy have suffered no little. The Rev. Mr. Patterson, the Episcopal Minister here, died. In my rounds among the sick, I met a priest who was ministering to the dying—the Rev. Mr. Friebras; he was called two days after to Port Gibson, and in a week was among the dead. The resident priest was down and powerless—hence another priest was sent for to Jackson, before the plague reached that place—he came at once. I met him one night in a den of filth, enough to have polluted a whole city—he sickened—died. His name was Babhanean. They were good men. Soon after, Rev. Mr. Bradford France fell in the neighborhood, of the same fever. He had visited among the sick at Warrenton, where he imbibed the disease and soon died. The Rev. Mr. More, Presbyterian, took ill at his residence here, went to the Mississippi Springs, and in a short time, thence, to the silent grave! The Pastor of the Presbyterian Church was taken down in August, and has been sick until within a few days. He looks ten years older. Our city is full of widowhood and orphanage, sorrow and mourning, and yet so few have been seen in our streets, that one would almost believe the city deserted.

MOBILE, ALA.—The pestilence seems to have done its work in Mobile, and for several weeks has been mainly prevalent in the hilly and heretofore healthy summer seats back. The fever broke out last week in the Jesuit College at Spring Hill, and the students have been disbanded. This spot had professed peculiar immunity. Information as late as the 17th instant enables us to announce that Rev. J. H. Gibbs, who was stationed in Toulmanville, near Mobile, and about the last minister prostrated, is in a fair way of recovery.

DEMOPOLIS.—Rev. T. H. Foster writes, Oct. 11, the following: I drop you a line to let you know about the health of our town. Two weeks since, the yellow fever appeared here, and we have had, up to the present, more than sixty cases. Only about five hundred of the population remain. We have had nine deaths. I am expecting several more to die soon. Mrs. Lyon, whose obituary I sent you lately, we are now satisfied died with it.

It was introduced here from the boats. A number of cases in the surrounding country of persons who left here, or visited here, recently. To us, who are unaccustomed to them, such things are terrible. Of the whites who have taken it, about one-fourth have died. Several more doubtless will. But one negro out of nearly twenty taken has died. Unless we have frost soon, we may nearly all expect to have it.

NEW ORLEANS.—Our city items indicate the state of health. As new facts, we may mention that the Parish Prison and the Ursuline Convent, which places have been considered as enjoying immunity from the epidemic, have of late had victims in them. Several have died in both, and the Convent School, two or three weeks ago, was disbanded in consequence.

SHREVEPORT.—Many of the most valuable citizens of this town have died of the fever. It has been virulent in type, and the panic at its introduction very great. Yet the sick have been well cared for. The Gazette of the 1st instant gives for the week ending 30th September, 39 new cases and 17 deaths. The same paper says, "Dr. Alison died today and Dr. Scruggs yesterday. If there is any spirit of charity in our country friends, now is the time to show it. Doctors are worn out—the members of the Howard Association wearied almost to faintness, the pestilence spreading, and hope almost banished from us. Wont some of the country doctors come in and relieve their brethren?"

LAKE PROVIDENCE.—Few places have had so severe a visitation as this. M. Dubose, writing 29th ult., speaking of the flight and panic, says: "I suppose there remained in town a population of not over 160, and of that number 85 have died. Many who fled to the country, died, in whom the disease was not developed before leaving. One physician has died."

Our correspondent speaks in high terms of the devotion of the Methodist pastor, Rev. Z. Thompson, to the sick and the dying and dead. Indeed, our ministering brethren have very generally exhibited this Christian courage. They both theoretically and practically hold the doctrine that a pastor should not leave his post of danger and distress till he leaves it in his coffin. Our church cannot doubt of the self sacrifice and devotion of her pastors. This has been a test season, and yet they stand fire unshrinking, and lay down their lives with the sheep if not for them. Let us not fear, but that Christ who has set us both a lesson and example in this, will supply and more than supply all the vacancies in the Ministry it has caused; that two shall rise up where one has fallen, and a more copious baptism of the Spirit come upon all.

We have before spread before our readers the latest, but sad news from Jackson, Miss., Bayou Sara, Thibodaux, Plaquemine, Washington, Alexandria, Baton Rouge, Clinton and other places. In all these death has reaped a mighty harvest, and these people have had great warnings. Hearts and homes have been desolated. Many toilsome pilgrimages have ended and happy souls gone home to God. Many others, alas! but why write that? Our people have died well, and the ministers have abided with their flocks and made one lot with them in sickness and death, as in the halcyon times of health and life.

LITERARY NOTICES.

Messrs. Carver & McGinnis, 36 Camp street, have laid on our table—

POSITIVE THEOLOGY.—A small volume, by Rev. A. M. Lowry, of this year's publication. Mr. L. furnishes a book for beginners in theology—those who wish to knew at the outset what is Scripture doctrine on various cardinal points—what it is, not what it is not. He would introduce the reader at once to the central truths of Christianity, discarding polemics. He states no objections, heresies, etc. His method is yea, yea—all the time.

PEEP AT NO. 5, AND LAST LEAF OF SUNNY SIDE.—The latter is the life of the author of the former little book. Mrs. Phelps—daughter of late Professor Stuart.

SHADY SIDE.—Akin to the above, gives the shady side of the Parish Minister's life. It is a lively picture, if there can be a lively picture of a sad thing. The authoress must have known it by experience. Ministers wives will be Colporteurs for Sunny Side, Shady Side, and Peep at No. 5. A late writer says of them all: What Dickens has done for the English school system by the publication of "Nicholas Nickleby"—for the Poor Law by writing "Oliver Twist"—for the Fire and Life Insurance Companies of England by his "Martin Chuzzlewit"—and for the Chancery Courts by his "Bleak House"—the writers of the works named have done for the question of ministerial support in this country. They have thoroughly exposed that mean, niggardly and contemptible manner in which a scanty subsistence is doled out to God's ministers in various parts of this highly favored land. And although the works were not written with a reference to Methodist economy, yet no Methodist preacher, nor Methodist preacher's wife, can read them without seeing many points of their own painful experience clearly brought to view.

PUBLIC DOCUMENTS.—Hon. Mr. Penn, of the Custom House, has obliged us by seven well put up volumes, containing U. S. Patent Office Reports for 1851-2-3, on Mechanics, Agriculture, etc., and the Last Census Tables.

CHEAP.—Certainly China will become distinguished by its cheap literature. The "Pilgrim's Progress" has just been translated and printed at a cost of $200, and a single copy of the immortal work of the Tinker of Bedford may be purchased and read by a Chinese, in his own monosyllable tongue, for something less than sixpence. New Testament (Chinese) costs only fourpence.

METHODIST PRESS.

A PRACTICAL NECROPHILIST.—The Richmond Advocate shows up a downeaster Abolitionist who visited that city lately, under the name of Rev. P. Wood. He honored the Editor with a call:

We treated him with such ordinary courtesy as for some years past, we have felt ourself obliged to treat men of that ilk. He circulated about here for some days, visited the African Baptist Church, some of the slave auction houses, and where else we know not. Since his return to Massachusetts, he has published a letter in Zion's Herald, in which he gives his impressions of the "sunny South," and of what he saw, and of what he did while here, not omitting "a certain Doctor." He is quite free as to what he thinks of the darkies, and the "thousands of advocates of Christianity" living hereabouts. Perhaps it may be edifying to this rover in strange places to know what the darkies think of him; for they claim the right to think, too; and they have what they regard as a very good standard of what constitutes a gentleman and a Christian. If he will inquire of such of them as waited on him at the Clifton House while here, he will find a class of settled convictions not at all flattering. We happen to have several personal friends at this excellent house, and we learn that the colored gentlemen about the establishment have no very exalted ideas of the Rev. P. Wood. He was not slack in requiring their services, and got his baggage toated all the way to the railroad—and then went off without even excusing himself for having no small change about him! Now, in their judgment this is a most ungentlemanly way of doing things. But what else is expected of a pirating Abolitionist!

We are informed that this same gentleman was quite anxious, not very long since, to come South, and take an appointment in the Virginia Conference, under the persuasion that he could be useful here. Well, we are glad he didn't come. Any one who treats colored folks as he did the waiters, had better stay where, on the subject of slavery, people are too generally hypocritical to suspect each other; or too sensible to the enormities of such craftiness to care any thing about it beside keeping up appearances.

SEEING HIM AGAIN.—The Editor of the Buffalo Advocate is giving his experience:

A fellow in the State of Ohio, recently told the preacher who married him, that he had no money, but would give him his note, payable in a year or two.

This is infinitely better than the treatment we once received from a miscreant of the same genus. We rode a comfortable distance to marry him, performed the service in our best taste, and received the very unwelcome intimation, "I will see you again." The next time we met the poor fellow was in the State Prison. A solemn warning to those who forget to pay the parson when married!

COMPLIMENTARY.—We find in the Advocate and Journal, (N. Y.) the following singular item. Certainly it ignores bigotry and sectarianism. We are pleased at such a practical recognition from others of the superior efficiency of the Methodist plan of Evangelical operation:

We mentioned some months ago that a Mr. Champion, a wealthy and benevolent Presbyterian gentleman in Rochester, had authorized Dr. Lackey to draw on him for ten thousand dollars, to be appropriated equally toward the building of five Methodist churches in that city or its vicinity. One of these churches, located in Edinburg street, is now nearly completed. The building is of brick, 45 feet front by 80 deep, with the basement entirely above ground. It cost, with the lot, between six and seven thousand dollars, the balance of which, over the $2000 from the Champion fund, was made up by private subscriptions.

BARNUM ON TEMPERANCE.—A correspondent of the North Western Ch. Advocate, writing from Millwaukee, describes a lecture of Barnum' before the Temperance Convention there. We have not doubted, since hearing this "Universal Yankee" lecture in the Lyceum Hall on Temperance, two years and a half ago, that he was one of the strongest platform and stump men on that subject.—He warned the Millwaukee people of the politicians—they would cheat them out of their votes; he represented them all as claiming to be as good friends of temperance as any body else, and in this connection he announced his determination to give more money for the politician, could he be found, who was not "as good a friend to temperance as any body else," than he would give for any other "live critter," as he would be a most remarkable curiosity, which he could convey to his menagerie in New York, and show him for twenty-five cents, and children at half-price, and cheap at that—nor would that be one of the humbugs with which he was sometimes charged. The correspondent says:

Mr. Barnum being introduced, opened his remarks by requesting that person present, who had never been, either directly or indirectly injured by intemperance, to stand up for a few moments. As no one arose, he proceeded to comment on this universal evil, and advocated prohibitory enactments for the entire suppression of the manufacture and vending of ardent spirits. For a time his mood was serious, but he soon warmed into a comic strain. He maintained that the most generous men were the most exposed, and that such could be least spared by society. As illustrative of how generosity scatters the mischief among the frank and social, he referred to an honest Irishman who was in the habit of taking too much in company. Patrick's wife was a prudent woman, who resolved to reprove her husband in his sober moments; so one morning Pat led his horse to the trough to water, seeing which, Biddy watched the opportune moment, and just as the horse had quit drinking, she said, "See, Pat,—see how much more sinse the horse has than yourself—he drinks no more than enough, and stops when he has got a plenty: but you will drink a whole night." "Ough! Biddy the horse is a horse sure—and there is nobody with him—but I tell you what it is, if there was another horse at t'other end of the trough, saying all the while, 'your health, sir,' he would drink all night and all day too, sure he would."

Another point with the speaker, was to show the ruinous effects of intemperance on the mind—that in some instances he had known it to rob the victim of all memory and recollection, so that his place of residence, and even his name was forgotten; as illustrative of this, he declared that he knew a friend who after a night's debauch, was compelled to hunt in the City Directory to find on what street he lived. And another equally laughable case, of a gentleman named Ami Hubble, who was truly a respectable man, but would sometimes drink too much, on one such occasion he staggered homeward, directed more by instinct than reason, for it appears that he had not only forgotten the place of his residence, but his own name. Staggering up in front of his own house, he looked up, and seeing double, as drunken men sometimes see, he discovered two houses in the place of one, and concluded that as he lived in but one house, that double house was not his. So, reeling back, he was overheard by a watchman, uttering the following soliloquy—"This is not my house—this is not the house of Ami Hubble; but am I Ami Hubble? or, am I somebody else? And may not somebody else live in this double house?"—and then, after another reel over the pavement, continued—"Am I Ami or am I not?—if I am not Ami, who am I?"

CONFERENCE SCHOOLS.—The St. Louis Advocate, reporting progress of the doings of the Conference, says: The prevalence and constant increase of Schools under the patronage of the church, is truly gratifying. Every part of the State of Missouri is rapidly filling up, and whatever else we may do as a church, we will not and cannot meet the obligations resting upon us, to their full extent, without organizing and sustaining good schools.

CAN IT BE TRUE?—After our article on "Counting Noses" was in type, we found the following editorial in Zion's Herald, 12th instant. The reader may regard it as a significant coincidence:

The St. Louis Republican has a correspondent who says that there is a prevailing impression that our present Postmaster General, Mr. Campbell, "being a bigoted Roman Catholic, decides many, if not most, of his appointments on sectarian grounds, making attachment to that sect as a test of fitness for office." Is this a fact? If so, Mr. Campbell is unfit for his post, and ought to be removed forthwith. Let the people see to this, and observe whether the charge is true or not! If it be true, Church and State are in closer proximity than is at all desirable, especially when the political character of Romanism is taken into the account.

COUNTING NOSES.

The Baton Rouge Correspondent (whom we take to be a priest) of the Catholic Messenger, 13th inst., in the course of exulting at the indications of prevailing Romanism, says:—

"By way of consolation, however, we would say to our Protestant brethren that notwithstanding Campbell in the cabinet, Taney, chief-justice, Gregg, commissioner to the Sandwich Islands, and the appointment of new bishops, we do not design taking the country by storm. Sleep quietly, friends, there is no danger in finding yourselves in inquisitorial dungeons when you awake. But this we say, &c."

That is kind to tell us to sleep quietly.—Thank ye. But the animus of Romanism is betrayed in that sentence. Why keep count so carefully of the men "we" have, and their political places and positions? Those who have no sinister intention in acquiring and using political influence would hardly be found thinking, much less boasting that way. Why should Postmaster General Campbell in the Cabinet, Chief Justice Taney and Commissioner Gregg, be coupled with "the appointment of new bishops?" The appointment of new bishops was by a late Bull of the Pope, and we see no impropriety in our Catholic "brethren" entertaining hopes from it. But it seems they calculate upon other resources. They watch every movement of the political chess board; not in reference merely to national welfare, but mainly to Propagandism.

Methodists, Episcopalians, Presbyterians, Baptists, Congregationalists, as they cast their plans for "taking the country" by increasing the number of bishops, creating new conferences, new dioceses, new conventions, &c., include in the enumeration of their legitimate means of propagandism, the government offices held by Statesmen belonging to their several denominations! No. They are not used to such perversions of political place and power, and therefore they are never heard calculating upon it. Such ideas are alien to a republican mind, as whom have we in the Cabinet? on the Supreme Court Bench? on the Diplomatic list? But such ideas and calculations are woven into the texture of Romanism.

We would not intimate that these prominent statesmen play into the hands of "Mother Church." Far from it. Publicity of their names in such connection, must be offensive to them. But it betrays the animus of Romanism, and reminds us again that it is far from being an exclusively spiritual power. It is its very life and soul to go beyond the boundries of religion, and enter the fields of policy.

REVIVAL INTELLIGENCE.

CHOCTAW INDIANS.—The last and most pleasant round upon my work is now concluded. Just one hundred souls were added to the Church. This wilderness and those solitary places seemed glad, and desert soils and thirsty, rejoiced and blossomed as the rose, as the times of refreshing from the presence of God, were sweetly realized.

Arkansas, Oct. W. L. MCALISTER.

BELMONT, ALA.—A very commodious and handsomely finished Church was dedicated at this place, by Rev. E. Calloway, P. E. of this District, on the Saturday before the fourth Sabbath in last month. The meeting was continued fifteen days, and resulted in the conversion of eighteen, and thirteen accessions. The yellow fever at Demopolis, six miles distant, together with some other circumstances, forced us to close very abruptly, and which we greatly deplore, as the revival influence had obtained a prevalence never known here before. Of our success on the Circuit generally, I may write you again.

Quite a number of conversions among the blacks—say 30. Three appointments compose the Circuit. NewOrleans Christian Advocate a great favorite here. The Lord prosper you and us, and our beloved Zion every where.

DANL. DUNCAN.

Oct. 14.

HOLMES CIRCUIT, MISS.—Please say to the friends of Zion that the Lord is blessing his people on Holmes' Circuit. A revival influence to some extent is now pervading this portion of God's heritage. This heavenly influence, however, has not been so deep and extensive as the friends of Zion desired. Yet I have seen penitents flocking to the altar of prayer like doves to the window. And I have heard the shout of the new-born soul, and have seen God's people built up and strengthened in the faith of the glorious Gospel of the Son of God. About fifty white have been added to the Church, most of which have been converted to God. Many colored people, too, have yielded to instructions.

The preacher in charge has been much aided in his labors by the zeal and industry of Rev. T. C. Raynor, a local preacher, through whose labors this year many souls have been converted to God, and several appointments added to the Circuit.

October. J. T. DAY.

MILTON, FLA.—I merely have time to say, we have had some gracious revivals on the Milton Circuit—but for the yellow fever, which has raged with more virulence in Milton than it did in New Orleans in proportion to the population, we would have had a fruitful year. Our prayer is that the Lord may overrule this severe dispensation to our spiritual good.

GERMAN MISSIONS.

To the Rev. E. W. Sehon, D. D., Secretary of the Missionary Society of the M. E. Church, South.

DEAR BROTHER IN CHRIST!—Duty demands that we should give you a report of our Missionary labors among our German countrymen in the city of New Orleans. This report should have appeared before this time, but sickness in the city, of which your humble servant was not exempted, has been the cause of delay.

The Good Lord has raised me up again, whilst thousands around have fallen victims of the plague! German Missions have suffered considerably; a great number of our members were taken down with yellow fever. For some weeks our meetings were entirely broken up; but blessed be God we are beginning to gather again. Our Gospel Banner is unfurled again, and the Heralds of the Cross are following up closely the fearful visitation of our just and holy God.

The first Mission, now served by Brother Paule, has enjoyed some prosperity. A number have joined the Society, and some were happily converted to God. The Missionary has graciously been spared in health until now; but death has made sad havoc in the Society. About ten were carried off in a short time by the fever; but most of them gave signs that they have died in the faith which they professed.

With the exception of the unpleasant task of expelling some who did not walk worthy of their vocation, the Mission is still in a promising state. The Sabbath School connected with it is flourishing. It numbers seventy children, and has a very able band of officers and teachers.

I am sorry that we have to report that the contemplated Mission Church for the Mission is not built yet. But by the assisting grace of God it shall be built! It would have been unwise to commence the building, and involve ourselves in a debt with no prospect of discharging it. It was my determination to make another tour this summer up to Alabama, for the purpose of collecting funds for this object. Some of the brethren in the Ministry had given me an invitation to come, also those dear friends I visited last summer bade me come and try it again, with the promise that I should not go away empty. But this unforeseen visitation of God over our suffering city has destroyed our plans.

The second Mission, now my field of labor, is in a healthy and prospering condition. We have sustained a loss of about eighteen members within four months by expulsion, removals and deaths. Six were cut down by the hand of the fell destroyer, and more than half had to pass through the ordeal of yellow fever. A number were also added to this Mission since Conference, and some truly converted to God. Our Sabbath School is in a healthy condition. We have pious and devoted officers and teachers. The school numbers from forty to fifty children. My labors thus far have been very pleasant to me in this Mission. The most of the members in this Society are poor in this world's goods, but they are rich in faith, in the love of God, and good works. Our prospects are very encouraging. We have some signs of a reviving of the work of God. I should not wonder at all if we were placed under the necessity next year hence, to pull down our little frame chapel, and build a larger, better one.

The third Mission is not as fruitful as we could wish, although the Missionary has been at his post, and labored with all faithfulness and diligence; yet will we not be discouraged; if we conquer at all it must be by patience and fervent prayer. If we will not get weary in well doing, we have the promise that in due season we shall reap.

In the Fourth District, (late Lafayette,) a fourth Mission was commenced shortly after the session of the last Conference. Brother Busmann, a local preacher, was appointed by the Presiding Elder to labor in it. There is a vast number of Germans in that part of the city, more than in any other of Orleans. We should at least have three Missions in Lafayette at different points, and able preachers to occupy them. We have tried for several years to gain some hold there, by keeping up preaching in connection with a Sabbath School, but on account of not having a suitable meeting-house, our success was very limited. This spring we concentrated our little force, bought a lot, and built a neat frame chapel on it. About eight hundred dollars have been collected in the city among the friends of the Gospel, but still a debt to the same amount on the lot and chapel is hanging over us. We hope, however, that we shall not be left struggling under this debt without further assistance. This would be but a trifle if some of our more wealthy American brethren, whom the Lord has blessed with this world's goods, would open their benevolent hearts and hands to expunge it at one stroke.

The Lord has struck a heavy blow in this small Society; two of our dear brethren have died, but one week of each other, with yellow fever. The one, Brother Bauer, was a very able Exhorter and Superintendent of the Sabbath School; he has done much good in eeping up the meetings regularly, and in nducting the School; he is missed very uch. The other was n Steward, a very ady and pious brother. Two years ago, better, he came recommended by the Rev. S. Jakobi, German Missionary in Bremen, the M. E. Church. He has now gone up join the church triumphant in heaven. these brethren died in great peace, and. ll assurance of a glorious immortality.' Six ve died of this small society.

Our German Missions are steadily gaining interest in the city. We can truly say hat they are, and will be, what our lighthers are on the ocean shore, they beacon the mariner, weather beaten and faint, to the port, and here the poor forlorn wanderer pointed to the Saviour of sinners.

Your Missionaries have given themselves entirely and unreservedly to the work of God. ey have no desire to seek ease and bodily nforts; no, the work committed to our harge is the burden upon our heart by day nd by night. For it we willingly toil and ent our strength, our time and our life. With tears and prayer are we watering the d which we are thus permitted to sow; nd we are confident that, should we not be ermitted to see with our eyes the work enarging and spreading according to our ord's desire, yet after we shall sleep in our raves, God will answer these prayers, and ess these Missions with heaven's choicest essings.

The German Missions in this city are n ost and important work; hundreds, may e say de of souls are to be gathered yet into e folds of Christ's Church. And though ese thousands have been carried off to their raves by the epidemic, twice the number ll lost in again during the gemiug seasons. e call upon the Church of God to pray for s that we may stand upon our posts as men God, at all times ready to guide the erring ouls to the blissful port of heavenly rest.

HYMENEAL:

MARRIED.—By the Rev. R. Y. Rew, on the th day of Oct., Dr. ANDREW J. CRAWFORD to iss VIRGINIA C. PARKE; all of Marion, Mississippi.

October 16, by Rev. J. F. Walsh, Rev. D. Wells, of the Memphis Conference, to Miss ary E., daughter of Major Mark Harwell, Tippah county, Miss.

OBITUARY:

DIED.—REV. BENJAMIN B. DYE, died August th, 1853, in Caldo Parish, Louisiana, from nflamation of the stomach, received by a ere jolt, in consequence of his horse stepping a hole while riding. His last end was peace. After giving his wife the necessary irections about their temporal affairs, he calmly resigned his spirit into the hands of God, assuring his friends that he would change this, for a better world.

Rev. Dye was born in Elbert County, Ga., April 20th, 1800. While young, his widowed mother moved to North Carolina, and educated him at Midway, where he graduated in 1822. He professed religion in 1829. A few years afterwards he was licenced to preach in the Methodist Episcopal Church, in which he continued a faithful, useful, pious Local Preacher, for twenty years. His talents as a preacher were above mediocrity. His sermons were deeply imbued with spirituality, the peculiar glory of Methodism, and had a powerful effect on his hearers.

As a teacher of youth, in which he was engaged for thirty years, he had but few equals. At Linkington, Milton, and Centre-ville Springs, in North Carolina; at Laurensville and Columbia, South Carolina; at Cartersville, Paris, and in Hardeman County, Tennessee; at Liberty in Louisiana; at Union Academy, and in Cass County, Texas, he taught, and hundreds will bless God in time and eternity for the moral and intellectual instructions of Bro. Dye.

He was a loving and devoted husband,—affectionate and attentive father,—good and humane master,—kind and benevolent neighbor,—an excellent and respectable citizen. Filled with overflowing love for all mankind. He said, just before his death, that he had not an unkind feeling towards any human being in the world. He spent nearly whole nights in prayer for the advancement of religion.—A wicked neighbor said, when he heard of his death: "If Parson Dye is not gone to Heaven, no person ever went there!" Such was his character and end. No doubt but he now beholds the King in his beauty.

DIED.—August 16th instant, in Lowndes County, Mi., Mrs. MARTHA R. L. LOCK, wife of Wm. H. Lock, and daughter of James H. Thompson, formerly of Northampton County, North Carolina.

In her twelfth year, she embraced religion, and maintained her christian integrity until death. During her last illness—of about three weeks—but little, if any apprehension of death was entertained, either by herself, friends, and hence, but little was said to us in reference to her future prospects. (It was so, that the minister had no opportunity of seeing her.) But we are not to judge in all cases of one's future state by what may be said in view of death, and eternity. Death may be an honest honr to come, but to others it is not so. Therefore, we say, let the entire life of our deceased sister be considered, and we have a sufficient guarantee, in saying, "all is well," with her now. She has left a husband, and four little children, together with many relatives and friends to mourn her departure.

May the God of Comfort be with the bereaved ones. J. A. CLEMENT.

DIED.—Of yellow fevor, in the city of Mobile, on the 4th day of September, Brother ABRAHAM HENDERSON.

He was born in Washington County, Ala., on the 1st day of January, 1831, and at a Camp meeting held for this (Lauderdale) circuit, in the fall of 1850, made a profession of religion and united himself with the M. E. Church.

During his illness, he gave the clearest evidence of a preparedness to meet his God, and his conversation with the minister, and friends who attended him, shewed clearly that he was well acquainted with the principles of true heartfelt Religion, and that he placed a proper estimate upon his interest in the blood of the Lord Jesus Christ.

Thus died one whose many virtues had won for him the confidence and affection of all who were brought within the circle of his acquaintance, leaving behind a numerous circle of relations and friends, to mourn their loss. ROBT. Y. REW.

Our dear ANN LEVINIA is no longor one of our family circle: she no longer cheers us with her company and smiles, for God hath taken her.

She was attacked with yellow fever, Sept. 16th, but not violently, and her fever readily yielded to remedies. She continued to get better for four days, but on the fifth day she relapsed, and her fever returned with greater violence. She was the first to apprehend danger. Her sister Martha, who was the only person present, was beside her, and turning to her, she said: "Kiss me, Patty, for I am going to die, but I am not afraid; pray for me." A little while after she said: "Patty, I see angels." Soon after this she became delirious, and lingered but an hour or two.

She professed religion July 1852, and immediately connected herself with the Church—attended regularly her Class meeting, and was frequently called upon to pray by her leader, which she never declined, although exceedingly timid. She never failed to commune on sacramental occasions; was fond of reading her Bible, and devout in secret prayer. She bore her sickness with patience and resignation.

Ann Levinia was born in Greenup County, Ky., December 7th, 1839. Died Sept. 11th, 1853, in Galveston, Texas.

"Thou art gone to the grave, we no longer behold thee.
Nor tread the rough paths of the world by thy side—
God gave thee, he took thee, and he will restore thee,
And death hath no sting for the Saviour has died."

Galveston, Texas, October 12th, 1853.

N. A. CRAVENS.

P. S.—Some two or three weeks after the death of our dear Ann Levinia, her mother discovered in her trunk a neatly folded package, tastfully tied with a narrow blue satin ribon, upon the back of which was written, "Allie's letters." Upon the inside of the envelope containing these letters, (which were from a school-mate with whom she boarded at Dr. Bradfield's, Woodville, Ala), the inclosed reflections, which were perhaps the last that she ever wrote, was written in a neat hand writing. I send you a copy, as your paper is read by many of her former schoolmates, which, if you see proper, you may give a place in it. N. A. C.

Friday, July 1st, 1853.

It was about this time last year that my dear friend Alice Cole died. She was cut down in the bloom of youth. Like many young persons, she had fair prospects for long life, and thought little of being laid in the cold and silent grave ere we met again. Alas! it is true that many friends are severed. We were true friends; I loved her as I did myself. We were confidants. And can it be that she is gone? Yes, gone to a brighter world than this, where she will never have to suffer the pains of death again.

I have just finished reading the letters she wrote to me (for we were regular correspondents). It is certainly a privilege to read these sacred memorials of her's. They will ever be treasured by me as priceless gifts.—With them I never will part; but I will look over them when I feel gloomy and sad; they will never fail to revive my drooping heart. We all have friends in heaven. Is not this an inducement for us to try to get there, too? This, then, shall ever be my aim in life, to live daily in the approval of my God, so that when life shall cease on earth, I, too, may join that happy host above, where there will be no parting tears, nor sorrow, but one continued song of praise to our blessed Redeemer. It is my daily prayer that all my friends may meet me in heaven, for I am determined, by the grace of God, to serve him while I live, and praise him when I die.

"We are all wanderers through life's sinful race,
Pilgrims that have no certain dwelling place—
God grant to all to whom life's talents given,
When life shall fail, a happy home in heaven."

ANN LEVENIA.

DIED.—In Mobile, of yellow fever, 12th instant, Mrs. MILDRED W. GOODMAN, long a pious member of the Methodist Church, in the 65th year of her age, the mother of Duke W. Goodman, Esq.

DIED.—At Spring Hill, (near Mobile) 6th instant, of the prevailing epidemic, Miss MARY G. BATTLE.

"OVER TRUE."—The following toast was given at a railroad dinner at Detroit lately:

Editors—Leaders on which politicians climb to power; pioneers in all great enterprises; the only class whose labor is its own reward; the hardest worked and the poorest paid—most self-sacrificing, and the best abused of all the professions.

A new discovery has been made to relieve deaf persons. Two artists in London have invented an instrument which is placed within the ears, without projecting, and being of the same color as the skin, and not perceptible. It enables deaf persons to enjoy general conversation, to hear distinctly at church, and at public assemblies; the unpleasant sensation of singing noises in the ears is entirely removed, and it affords all the assistance that possibly could be desired.

The Madison Journal of the 7th inst. has the following:

DEATHS AT LAKE PROVIDENCE.—Since our last publication the following names have been furnished us as deaths that have occurred in Lake Providence, in addition to those published by us last week:

J. K. Merry, wife and son: John Kelly, Robert Hamilton and wife, H. McGuire, Mrs. Hoffman, Mrs. F. B. Richardson, Mrs. Ferry, William White, Jerry Berry.

The above are reported to have died on Thursday and Friday of last week—twelve in two days, out of a population of less than 250. It is a fearful mortality.

We select the following paragraphs from the Iberville Gazette of the 15th inst.:

A number of the sugar planters of this parish have already commenced grinding. The cane, although not as large as last year, is said to yield well. The quality of the sugar made this year will doubtless be good; but the number of hogsheads will fall off considerably, when compared with last year's crop.

There have been but two or three deaths in this place since our last issue. The type of the disease has materially changed for the better. Five or six are still sick, but with good nursing, and the best of medical aid, they will doubtless soon recover.

THE CROPS.—A correspondent of the Baton Rouge Gazette, writing from West Feliciana under date of the 11th inst., says:

The season throughout has been unpropitious for the cotton crop. We have conversed with several intelligent planters, who inform us that the cotton crop is more backward this year than it has been for many years past—so much so that they have not been able to get out as many bales as they had out this time last year by one third. The army worm has made its appearance on most of the plantations in this parish, but it is thought they can do little more damage, the season being too far advanced. The cotton has greatly suffered with the "rot," but since the dry weather has set in it has ceased its ravages, and the remaining bolls are opening and maturing well. It is estimated that the cotton crop of this parish will fall short of about 5000 bales. The cane crops are good on some places, but it is the general impression that the yield will be less than it was last year.

We take the following from the Bayou Sara Ledger of the 15th inst.:

YELLOW FEVER.—Since our last publication we are happy to be able to state that the fever has considerably abated here; we opine, however, that it is in consequence of a want of material to work upon. Most of our citizens have had the fever, and there are none here now who are liable to take it; however, we cannot say to a certainty what would be the result of an influx of persons who have not passed through the ordeal, though we should think, even if we should not report more than eight or ten cases per week, it would be prudent for that class to keep away until after frost.

The Planter's (Attakapas) Banner, of the 13th inst., has the following paragraphs:

YELLOW FEVER.—Some new cases have occurred in Pattersonville and the neighborhood, but our communication with that town being so restricted, it is difficult to arrive at anything near the truth respecting the sickness there, and reports of all kinds are rife; some endeavoring to hide the existence of the disease, and others, again, largely contributing to the excitement by exaggeration. Franklin remains healthy.

THE CANE CROPS.—On Sunday last we rode out to some of the plantations in the neighborhood to see the cane on the approach of the grinding season. It looked as good as usual, promising a fair yield, yet considerably behind that of last year, which was an extraordinary one for the planter. The aggregate produce of sugar may possibly amount to that of last year; but, were the cane equal in substance, it should far exceed it, a much larger quantity having been planted. If there is any reliance to be placed in reports, the yield will be very unequal throughout the parish; some planters holding favorable opinions, while others speak disparagingly, stating that the crops will be very short. The latter we can hardly credit for want of sufficient evidence. The crops we have seen look well, and we have no reason to think so great a sectional difference should exist in the parish. What the actual yield will be no one can tell. Some of our planters intend to commence grinding on Monday next, which will shortly throw more light on the subject.

The Pointe Coupée Echo of the 15th instant says:

The epidemic fever, which two or three weeks ago was evidently on the decline in this parish, has, within the last eight or ten days, resumed all its violence, and is now at least as bad as at its first appearance among us. Its ravages are still confined to places situated on the Mississippi. False River and the Island, by far the most densely inhabited parts of the parish, have entirely escaped, as also the different bayous and back settlements. We must attribute this fortunate exemption to their being out of the general route of extensive traveling. On the river it attacks whites and blacks, the old population and the more unacclimated, Americans indiscriminately. Indeed, we must believe it to be identical with the disease which has proved so deadly this year all through the South, from the extreme west of Texas to Florida, and which we pronounce to be yellow fever in its worst form. Our parishioners are all praying for a change of weather, as the few days during which the north wind prevailed, two or three weeks ago, were marked by a rapid decline in the disease. Business in this parish is almost dead, in consequence of the panic which prevails in those portions of it which have as yet escaped.

We learn from the Comet of the 13th that Baton Rouge is now quite healthy, the fever having entirely disappeared.

Mobile Items.

MOBILE ITEMS.—The Advertiser of the 18th has the following items:

The Alabama river continues falling, and the large boats are now compelled to bring the greater portion of their freights in barges. Unless rain set in shortly, a cessation of river navigation may be anticipated.

The Bigbee is so low that the hitherto regular packet, Azile, has been compelled to suspend her trips for the present.

Cotton.—Our great staple continues to arrive pretty freely. Yesterday the wharves presented quite an animated appearance, the clerks, samplers and draymen, being busily engaged in doing their respective parts towards the clearance of the two thousand and odd bales that arrived on Sunday.

The weather is as changeable as a coquette, one day dark and overcast, the next fine and hot, and the following one cold and raw. It has threatened rain and frost half a dozen times in succession, but has always changed as the moment of performance seemed to draw near.

THE FEVER IN MISSISSIPPI.—A gentleman in this city received a letter yesterday from an acquaintance in Greenwood, Miss., informing him that the yellow fever had broken out there in the most malignant form. Greenwood is a small town at the head of Yazoo river, with a population not exceeding two hundred. Our informant states there had been seventeen deaths there in one day.

THE FEVER IN ALABAMA.—The last Butler (Clarke county) Standard has the following concerning the yellow fever:

The yellow fever has extended, further into the county than ever before. In our neighboring town of Grove Hill, in Clark county, 7 or 8 deaths have occurred. Grove hill is a high, healthy region. We heard of a case the other day which occurred in Clarke county, Mississippi, a region of country remarkably healthy and free from winter courses or malaria. The epidemic this year has come like a freshet—its unusual overflow coming out into the hills like a back water.

THE FEVER IN FLORIDA.—Though we were disappointed in the hope expressed last week, that the epidemic had its last victim among us, our obituary head shows, nevertheless, a large decrease. We believe there is one case yet, about which some slight apprehension is felt. All of the recent cases have readily yielded to medical treatment and careful nursing, except the one alluded to.

We are now in October, and it is not unreasonable for us to suppose that the weather must continue to get cooler and cooler, until a frost shall come, (which may be about the 16th, the full of the moon,) and destroy every seed of the disease, if it does not entirely disappear before. We have had no new case since Sunday, and we may have no more. Let us cheer up, and thank God that the calamity which has befallen us as a community was no worse.

This morning we count four whites under medical treatment. The blacks, we believe, with one exception are all able to be about. Not a death has occurred among them. [Wakulla Times, October 5.

THE FEVER AT BRANDON, MISS.—The Vicksburg whig of the 11th inst. has the following paragraph:

We have been shown a letter from Brandon, dated the 9th, which says that two deaths from yellow fever had occurred there on Saturday night, and great apprehension prevailed among the citizens. We also learn that the fever has broken out with violence at Washington, the pleasant little Natchez No. 2, to which many of the citizens of Old Natchez had fled for safety, and that a general stampede had taken place.

RAILROAD MEETING IN ALABAMA.—We learn from the Beacon that a large and enthusiastic meeting was held in Greensboro' on the 8th inst., to promote the project for constructing the railroad from Uniontown to Greensboro'. In the course of the meeting, Mr. W. J. McDonald, who had been appointed to solicit subscriptions for stock in the proposed road, made a statement as to the amount of stock which had already been taken, and also as to the additional amount promised to be taken as soon as the work was commenced. The amount then subscribed he stated, only fell twenty-seven shares short of $100,000, the amount required to be raised preparatory to the organization of the Company and the election of Directors. That deficiency, the Secretary is happy to state, was made up by the meeting. Steps will therefore be taken for the organization of the Company at an early day.

THE ESTATE OF THE LATE MR. RANTOUL.—It was stated, some time since, that the administrators of Robert Rantoul, Jr., of Massachusetts, had received the enormous sum of $650,000, for his share in the Illinois Central Railroad. This statement is pronounced erroneous by the Chicago Democrat. As one of the corporators, Mr. Rantoul had one-twelfth of the capital stock of the Illinois Central Railroad Company. He died insolvent, and his right to the first million of the capital stock of the company had became extinct, under a mortgage that his friends knew nothing of until too late. The family lost their rights, and this was the first particle of stock that ever passed from the corporators. When the capital stock was increased, the question arose, who should have Mr. Rantoul's share. The holders of Mr. Rantoul's original stock claimed it, but the company resolved to give it to Mrs. Rantoul. The matter was referred, and it resulted that Mrs. Rantoul and children got the above amount of unpaid stock. But five per cent. has been called in upon it, which her friends and relations have provided for. This is the whole story.

THE TROUBLES AT THE SANDWICH ISLANDS.—The New York Tribune, in an article on the revolutionary movements in the Sandwich Islands, learns that "this attack of the American residents (upon the Ministry) is to be repelled from an unexpected quarter. The Englishmen on the Islands came up to the defence of the Ministry with great unanimity. We suppose they will be able to counteract the influence and intrigues of the Americans and relieve the King from the embarrassment which would be likely to ensue from either refusing or granting the prayer of the malcontents. The real object of the latter is evidently not so much to change the Ministry as to excite a feeling of hostility to the King's Government, to prolong agitation, and finally, by means of aid expected from California, to turn the natives entirely out of power, set up the Republican system, and add a new State to the American Union."

Hon. Jefferson Davis, Secretary of War, has written a letter relative to the position he occupies in reference to the two wings of the democratic party in New York. He states that he does not consider those who stand firmly on the platform of the Democratic Convention of 1852 to be freesoilers, but if in the progress of the campaign either division should array themselves on the side of the enemies of the Administration, or become the agitators of questions which the democratic party is pledged in all time to prevent the revival, then he shall look upon them as foes of the democracy, and disturbers of that peace and fraternity essential to our Union; and as such, to be opposed by all who entertain the views and are influenced by the motives which govern himself.

TURKISH STONE FOR THE MONUMENT.—A block of marble is now in Constantinople waiting for a conveyance to the United States, intended by the Sultan as a testimony of his respect for the character and memory of Washington. The carving and inscription are richly gilded. In the centre of what is called the toogra is the monogram, or cypher, of the sovereign, and is equivalent to the arms of other countries. It contains the legend—"Abd ul Majid Khan, son of the Sultan Mahmood Khan. May his victories be perpetuated." To the right of the toogra is a sprig of fresh roses, which is the particular sign of the present young Sultan. Beneath this are two lines in the Turkish language (which is thus translated into English,) with the date of the hegira 1269, A. D. 1853: "To aid in the perpetuation of the friendship existing between the two countries, Abd ul Majid Khan's name is written on the Monument of Washington."

LEGAL DECISION AS TO THE RIGHTS OF TRAVELERS.—A gentleman brought an action recently in one of the Ohio courts against the owners of a steamboat on which he had lost a trunk containing $2,000. The Court held that they were bound to pay for the loss of ordinary baggage, but not for anything of unusual value unless it was made known to them beforehand, so that they could take extra care, and charge an extra price for carrying it. Accordingly, the jury brought in a verdict allowing him $300—the value of the trunk and the clothing in it—but disallowing the $2,000.

REAL ESTATE IN SAN FRANCISCO.—A lot on the corner of Front street and Broadway, San Francisco, 137½ feet square, recently sold for $50,000. It is said the purchaser was subsequently offered for a ten years' lease, (with the privilege of a renewal for five years more,) the sum of $1000 per month, and agreeing to fill in the lots, (at perhaps a cost of $25,000) and stipulating to erect thereon first class fire proof warehouses—at the end of the lease, the improvements to revert to the owner of the land at two-thirds their then valuation; and yet this offer was rejected.

CLOSING OF THE CRYSTAL PALACE.—It is advertised that the Crystal Palace will be closed in December, and as that may mean the first of December. It is possible that little more than six weeks remain for visiting the exhibition, and the New York journals are therefore calling upon the resident citizens to visit it, as, thus far, nearly all the visitors have been strangers. The stock is selling at 55, or 45 below par. Before the opening it was up as high as 170.

NEWSPAPERS IN CALIFORNIA.—There are published in California thirty-eight newspapers, twelve of which are dailies, one tri-weekly, two semi-weeklies, and the balance are weeklies. Sixteen of these are printed in San Francisco, four in Sacramento, two in Marysville, two in Stockton, and two in Placerville. Three are printed in foreign languages, and two devoted to two different languages. Total weekly circulation, 160,000.

APPOINTMENTS BY THE PRESIDENT.—John C. O'Neill, of Pennsylvania, Consul of the United States for the port of Belfast, Ireland.

D. W. Johnson, Collector of the Customs, District of Pearl river, Mississippi, vice John H. Williams, deceased.

A PHENOMENON.—The Winchester Virginian states that during the rain on Wednesday evening quite a number of little shells, measuring from half an inch to an inch and over, fell in that place and vicinity. Handsfull were picked up in some places by the curious.

The peach originally was a poisnous almond. Its fleshy parts were then used to poison arrows, and it was for this purpose introduced into Persia; transplanting and cultivation, however, not only removed its poisonous qualities, but produced the delicious fruit we now enjoy.

THINGS IN WASHINGTON.—We copy the following from the Star of the 10th instant:

A Forgery upon the Secretary of the Treasury.—A week or two ago, an affair occurred here which has created some conversation, viz: a negro presented at the banking house of Psiro & Nourse, for discount, a note for $400, drawn by James Clark, payable to the Hon Secy Guthrie, at 30 days, endorsed by the Secretary apparently. The bank sent it over to the Department to have the endorsement verified, when the forgery was discovered. At 2 P. M. of the same day, another negro called for the note, saying that Mr Clark, presuming that they did not design accommodating him, desired to have the paper returned to him. Strange to tell, we can hear of no efforts to arrest the rogue. It should, however, be remembered that under our laws the negroes would be no evidence against the man. Their story was that he was to them a perfect stranger, having hired them casually on the street to carry and go for the forged paper.

The Overland Emigration to Oregon and California.—The commanding officer at Fort Kearney reports that the last of the overland emigration for Oregon and California of this season passed that port about the 15th of August. The total number, during the season, were as follows: 9009 men; 2252 women; 3058 children; 5477 horses; 2190 mules; 105,702 cattle; 3708 wagons, and 48,495 sheep. This does not include that part of the emigration which passed on the north side of the Platte river.

VERY IMPORTANT.—Mr. Soule's Court Dress. The Paris correspondent of the Courrier des Etats Unis, in his letter of September 15, writes as follows: Mr. Soulé, who has been received somewhat as one of their Messiahs by the democracy of Europe, has not yet been able to quit Paris, where he has been detained by an indisposition of some days' duration, and for the purpose of buying a complete set of furniture, which he takes with him to Madrid. For the purpose of harmonizing the simplicity recommended by Mr. Marcy to the representatives of the American republic, with the usages of the Court of Madrid, so exacting in matters of etiquette. Mr. Soulé has employed one of our tailors most famous for his tact, to make a coat for him, which is to be neither that of a courtier nor that of a peasant of the Danube—that is to say, of the Mississippi. The tailor has ingeniously extricated himself from this difficulty by substituting black velvet for plain cloth, and silk embroidery for gold lace. It is very nearly the dress of the first representatives of the American Union at the Court of Louis XVI. Mr. A. Belmont, who is also in Paris, will no doubt have a similar one made for the Court of the Hague, and the grand problem set by the puritanism of Gov. Marcy will be solved to the satisfaction of every body.

PENSACOLA AND GEORGIA ROAD.—Subscriptions to stock in this road are gradually progressing in this county. On Monday last $60,000 were taken, making the subscription thus far, with scarcely no effort, nearly $100,000 in Leon. The recent movement by parties interested in the Brunswick Road, to bring about a compromise and union between that road and the Florida, Albany and Savannah Companies, makes it of the first importance that active efforts be at once made to secure the $800,000 pledged by our Convention.

Since writing the above, we learn that individuals in this county have subscribed the whole amount pledged by the Convention, to-wit: $800,000. The subscribers are all citizens of Leon, and well able to meet their subscriptions. It is expected that by the first day of January next at least two hundred hands will be placed on the road.

The stock was taken this morning. This movement will not cut off the other counties in the middle from the opportunity of sharing in the cost of the work, but they are still expected to subscribe liberally, as we are confident they will promptly do.

We make this announcement with the most unalloyed satisfaction, feeling assured that an impetus is now given to the work that must result in its success. [Floridian and Journal, 8th.

NACHVILLE—Its Capitol.—The editor of the Charleston Advocate, in a letter from Nashville, thus speaks of the new building now being erected by the State, in that city:

The Capitol, one of the most magnificent buildings in the world, is now nearly completed. It is built of solid limestone, quarried near the hill on which it stands, and covers exactly an acre of ground. The architecture is of the Ionic order, and the ornamental part exceedingly rich. Its roof is of Tennessee copper, and the platform for the Speaker of Tennessee marble. The cost of the edifice is a million of dollars. From the base of the dome a striking panorama meets the eye. The city lies below on a bend of the Cumberland river. At a distance of a hundred miles the blue peaks of the Cumberland mountain rise above the horizon. An amphitheatre of hills sweeps around the city, the population of which approaches twenty thousand. Coming down from our noble "post of observation," we passed the house formerly occupied by President Polk. It lies at some distance from the street, and has in front a monument erected over the remains of the late statesman. Many of the houses of the town are built with elegance. It is the fashion to paint in oil colors the brick houses, and these colors being generally light, drab there is an air of freshness which we miss in the Charleston houses.

The following, translated from the last Paris Constitutionnel, gives an account of a recent attempt by a Russian prince to assassinate the distinguished General-in-chief of the Turkish armies:

Prince Gortschakoff had resolved to remove Omar Pacha, and for this purpose he or his emissaries had tried to poison that gallant General who has already done so much towards the regeneration of Turkey. It appears that a European physician, who arrived some months back at Constantinople, obtained by dint of solicitation the direction of the military hospital of Schumla. It seems that Omer Pacha soon perceived that this person kept up mysterious relations with Russian spies, and in consequence he kept on his guard. Soon after, being warned that there was an intention to poison him, he feigned to be indisposed, and sent for the medical man in question to attend him. This person, after examining the patient, went out to prepare a calming potion, which, on his return, he presented to Omer Pacha to drink. The General-in-Chief of the Turkish army requested the physician to taste it first himself, and as the other refused to do so, he forced him to drink the whole of it in his presence. Seeing that the physician then wanted to hurry out, he forced him to remain in the tent, in order that he might judge of the effect of the potion. At the end of some hours the physician died from the poison.

THE GUANO TRADE AT THE CHINCHA ISLANDS. It appears that from the 8th of July last, to the 12th of September, there arrived at, sailed from, and remained at, the Chincha Islands, 70 vessels, of an aggregate tonnage of 47,120 tons. These vessels had either sailed with, or taken on board, 65,858 tons of guano. Among them were the following for Baltimore: Ship Herman, Skinner, with 600 tons; Juniata, Burnam, 1100 tons; Ratler, Stamp, 750 tons, and St. Peter, Dillingham, 700 tons—total guano for Baltimore, 3150 tons.

For Hampton Roads—Ship Danube, Chase, with 1200 tons; Dakotah, Davis, 1250 tons; Element, Osgood, 700 tons; Helen McGaw, Lunt, 900 tons; Lone Star, Boutell, 800 tons; Lucknow, Plummer, 860 tons; Lebanon, Hale, 970 tons; Matilda, Peterson, 600 tons; Mountain Wave, Paine, 800 tons; W. H. Harbeck, Marshal, 1300 tons; and Amelia, Brown, 600 tons—total for Hampton Roads, 9980 tons.

Four vessels, with 3800 tons, were for New York, one with 800 tons for St. Thomas, and the rest for Callao, including two Baltimore ships with 2350 tons.

LATER FROM RIO JANEIRO.—The barque Joseph Mexwell, of Baltimore, which arrived at New York on Sunday, from Rio, August 25, brought 2,116 bags of Coffee. She sailed in company with the bark Cora, with 3,409 bags, and the brig Poultney, with 1,000 bags, of coffee, both for Baltimore.

The Rio Coffee market was quiet, and but little doing for two or three days previous to her sailing.

The Senate had been occupied with the third reading and the discussion of the bill approving the contract made by Government for the navigation of the Amazon river. It was finally adopted.

PARTICULARS OF THE EASTERN NEWS.

CHOLERA SPREADING.

NEW YORK, October 16, 9 P. M.

The following are the most interesting items of intelligence brought by the steamer Atlantic:

EASTERN MATTERS.

Omar Pacha, in behalf of the army on the lower Danube, has demanded of the Sublime Porte leave to fight the enemy before the winter season sets in, and the last report says that hostilities had already commenced. The Russians are reported as moving to attack the Turkish position at Roustchouck.

The Conference of the Emperors of Russia and Austria at Olmutz terminated with assurances on the part of the Czar that he had no desire to subvert the Ottoman Empire, but that he wished to put an end, as quickly as possible, to existing difficulties. Immediately upon the close of the Conference, special couriers left Olmutz with Russian, French and English dispatches for St. Petersburg. Orders were generally issued to the Russian army on the Danube to winter in the Principalities. The head-quarters of the combined fleets still remained at Besika Bay.

Notes have been issued to all the members of the British Cabinet to reassemble in London immediately.

The French Government is reported to express surprise at the conduct of the British Ministry on the Eastern Question, and intimates that Frenchmen must be ready for any emergency. All officers and soldiers, absent on leave, are ordered to join the army immediately.

Russia has made preparations for a fresh attack on Circassia, and the latter has called upon the Ottoman Porte for assistance.

MISS CUNNINGHAM.

The Grand Duke of Tuscany has refused to interfere with regard to Miss Cunningham, and that lady is still in prison.

THE CHOLERA.

The cholera is increasing in Liverpool. This disease is reported as spreading among the Russian troops.

FRANCE—DUTIES ON BREADSTUFFS.

The term of the suspension of the differential duties on Flour, Corn, etc., imported into France in foreign vessels, has been extended nine months.

DEPARTURE OF KOSZTA.

Martin Koszta has embarked at Smyrna for the United States.

STEAMER ASIA.

HAVRE COTTON MARKET.

The sales of Cotton at Havre during the week ending September 30, embraced 5000 bales. Low to good ordinary was quoted at 70 to 100 francs.

NEW YORK, Oct. 19, 3:52, P. M.

The Cunard steamer Asia arrived here at 8 o'clock this afternoon, bringing dates from Liverpool to the 8th instant, three days later than the accounts brought by the Atlantic. The following is a summary of her news:

LIVERPOOL MARKETS.

LIVERPOOL, Oct. 8.

The Cotton market here continues quiet and the sales of the week reach barely 30,000 bales, of which 4,000 have been taken for speculation and 2000 for export. Prices have slightly declined for most descriptions since the departure of the Canada, and the market closes at the following quotations: Fair Orleans 6 9-16 to 6¾; Middling Orleans 5¾d; Fair Uplands 6 3-16 to 6¼, and Middling Uplands 5 7-16 to 5¾d. per lb.

Breadstuffs have been quiet, and the advance for Flour recently noticed, has been lost. The closing rates are 34f. per bbl. for Western Canal and 35f. for Ohio brands. Corn has been heavy and closes at 41f. for yellow, and 42f. per quarter for white.

Lard has been in moderate request, and the rates have slightly declined.

Rice has met with a good demand at previous rates.

MONEY AND TRADE.

The Money Market at London was rather easier. Consols had advanced more than one per cent., and closed at 92¼.

Transactions in American securities have been small.

GENERAL NEWS.

The Eastern Question—War not yet Declared.

It is now generally conceded that war has not been declared by Turkey, the reports to that effect being at least premature. The London Times of Saturday morning publishes a telegraphic dispatch from Paris, dated Friday evening, stating that news had been received in Paris confirmatory of the report that the Sultan had declared war on the 20th of September. The Morning Post of the same date, however, published a dispatch from Paris dated Friday night, announcing that a dispatch had just been received from Vienna, which stated that the Sultan had fixed a term of four weeks, within which period the troops of Russia should evacuate the Principalities, but had said nothing about immediate war. There is, however, no question that the Grand Council at Constantinople had declared for war.

FURTHER BY THE ASIA.

THE EASTERN QUESTION.—The Paris correspondent of the London Times writes that the English and French Governments had notified the Emperor of Russia in very strong terms that it is now too late to issue new modifications, and that the integrity of the Turkish Empire must be maintained.

The Czar at Olmutz expresses a strong desire for peace.

ADVANCE IN INTEREST.—The banks of France have raised the rate of interest to four per cent. In Russia the rate is advanced to five, and at Warsaw to six per cent.

MR. SOULE.—Mr. Soulé, the American Minister to Spain, arrived at Madrid on the 29th of September.

Arctic Expedition—North-West Passage.

NO TIDINGS OF FRANKLIN.

Captain Englefield has returned from his expedition to the Arctic Ocean. He reports that Lieutenant Cresswell has accomplished a passage between the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans, having passed into the Arctic sea by Behring's Straits, and reaching the Atlantic by Davis' Straits. No intelligence was obtained of Sir John Franklin.

SLAVE CASE AT BOSTON.

BOSTON, October 18.

A female slave belonging to a gentleman from New Orleans was this morning brought before one of the courts of this city by the abolitionists, with the complaint that she was detained against her will. The girl denied that she was thus detained, and the case was dismissed by the Judge.

LATER FROM BUENOS AYRES.

BOSTON, October 18.

Advices have been received here from Buenos Ayres to the 20th of August.

There is no news of importance. Produce continues high, and the country quiet.

LATER FROM THE FAR WEST.

BALTIMORE, October 18.

Advices from Independence, Mo., state that F. C. Aubrey had arrived at Santa Fe on the 14th instant, from the Far West. He crossed the Sierra Nevada at Tesau Pass, and struck the Rio del Norte at Cheralk. He states that this route presents no obstructions for either a railroad or wagon road.

Mr. Aubrey found gold at the crossing of the Colorado, and at other places on the route. He also found silver and copper ore in great abundance.

He found the Indians very numerous and hostile, and for thirty successive days his party had to fight its way. Every member of the party was wounded more or less severely, and Aubrey himself received eight wounds on different occasions during the journey. Two hundred miles west of Santa Fe, the party met a tribe of Indians who used bullets of gold in their guns.

Mr. Aubrey reports that Fort Atkinson has been entirely abandoned, and everything there has been removed to Fort Reilly. The road from Council Grove to Fort Union is entirely unprotected, and apprehensions are entertained of Indian depredations.

THE FOREIGN MAILS—J. R. INGERSOLL.

THE TROUBLESOME NEIGHBOR.

A SET TO BORROWERS.

BY CARL CANTAY.

Mrs. Brown and Mrs. Adams were near neighbors. If this had been in the city, they might have lived there for many years without making each other's acquaintance. As, however, the village in which they lived was but a small one, it was naturally led to familiar acquaintance, and this to an interchange of neighborly courtesies. It will not do to cultivate exclusiveness in a country village—to "keep one's self to one's self," as the saying is. Every one makes it a point to know all about every body else, and feels aggrieved if any impediments are thrown in their way. This, however, is something of a digression.

We have only further to premise that Mrs. Adams had but lately become a resident of the village where my story is located, and that her acquaintance with Mrs. Brown was therefore of but recent date.

"Bridget," said Mrs. Adams to her Irish maid of all-work, entering that lady's precincts one morning, "how much sugar is there left in the barrel?"

"Faix, ma'am, and there isn't more than enough to last to-day."

"Is it possible?" said Mrs. Adams in surprise; "I ordered only got last week. What makes it go so fast?"

"I'm thinkin', ma'am, it's because Miss Brown has sent to borrow it three times."

"And hasn't she thought of returning it?"

"Well, first and last, she'o borrowed about ten pounds, and a few days ago she sent in two pounds of dirty brown sugar; full of sand and sticks, that wasn't fit for any Christian at nil to eat."

"Has she borrowed anything else lately?"

"I should like to know what she hasn't borrowed. Yesterday she borrowed a har of soap, and a quart of milk, half a dozen pounds of flour, and a pint of molasses. Every day she sends in her Jane to borrow something or other."

"And doesn't she return other things better than she has done in the case of the sugar?"

"Faith, ma'am, and it's lucky you may think yourself if she returns anything at all."

"If that is the case, Bridget, matters must be looked into a little. When Jane comes to borrow anything more just let me know of it before you let it go."

"I don't understand," thought Mrs. Adams, as the retired away, "what a woman can be thinking of to depend so constantly upon her neighbors. To my mind, it's just as bad to borrow articles without intending to return it, as to pick a person's pocket."

Just then Bridget herself presented herself to her mistress, when Bridget popped her head in at the door and called—

"Missus! ma'am, Jane is here, and she says Miss Brown sends her compliments, and would be much obliged for the loan of a coaster."

"Haven't she got one of her own?"

"Yes, ma'am, but it has got rusty; and she's going to have some company to dinner."

"Very well; we can do without ours for one day; but you must tell Jane to return it before dinner hour to-morrow."

"Yes, ma'am," and she disappeared, but returned in the course of a minute.

"She forgot to ask for the loan of a tablespoon, a quarter knives and forks."

"And the woman mean?" said Mrs. Adams in surprise; "she has only got last week. What makes it go so fast?"

"I'm thinkin', ma'am, it's because Miss Brown has sent to borrow it three times."

"And hasn't she thought of returning it?"

[From our English Correspondent.

THE RIGHT HON. LORD NOEL BYRON.

GEORGE GORNON BYRON was born in Harley street, London, on the 22d of January, 1788. He was the son of Captain Byron, of the Guards, by Miss Catherine Gordon, his second wife, whose fortune he quickly dissipated, and then deserting her and the son, fled to France, where he died. Lord Byron possessed the advantage, (if such it be) of lofty ancestry, but it does not appear to have been one of his foibles to be vain of it; indeed such a feeling was totally beneath one who had such personal claims to distinction. His constitution was nationally weak, but became much improved by frequent exercise on the mountains in the vicinity of Aberdeen, to which town his mother had retired on being deserted by her husband. He succeeded to the title and estates on the death of his great uncle, August 17, 1798, he being then only in his eleventh year; and the effect which this sudden elevation produced on his mind is worthy of remark, it being so decidedly the contrary of that which most boys of his age would exhibit under similar circumstances. On his first arrival after the event at the Grammar School of Aberdeen, which he had attended since his seventh year, the master, in calling over the roll of the school, of course designated him by his newly acquired title, which intimation of the change in his fortune was hailed by his fellow-scholars with a shout, on hearing which he burst into tears, and was with difficulty restrained from leaving the school. On leaving Aberdeen he was placed at the public school, at Harrow, and thence, at the age of sixteen, removed to Trinity College, Cambridge, where he rendered himself more remarkable by his eccentricities, than by an application to study.

In 1807, appeared his first volume, entitled "Hours of Idleness," the poems composing which were only remarkable as having occasioned that criticism in the Edinburgh Review, which at once fanned into flame the dormant energies of the youthful poet, and provoked a satire perhaps the most perfect in our language, with the exception of the "Dunciad." In this production, ("English Bards and Scotch Reviewers") is occasionally displayed a feeling which it is to be regretted Lord Byron so soon discarded, for that affectation of gloom and misanthropy by which his most perfect productions are deformed—which cloud his most brilliant passages.

In 1809, Lord Byron left England with his friend, Sir John Cam Hobhouse, and traveled through a portion of Spain and Greece. While at Yannia, he had an interview with Ali Pashp, from whom he received much courtesy. It was during this tour that he performed a feat, of which he was ever after extremely proud, in consequence of a discussion among the officers of the Salsette, in which frigate he sailed, respecting the possibility of swimming across the Hellespont. He, in company with Lieut.. Ekenhead, attempted it, and succeeded, starting at Abydos, on the European shore, and landing at Sestos, on the Asiatic, a distance, (allowing for the currents) of upwards of four English miles.

In 1811 he returned to England, and in the following year appeared the first and second cantos of "Childe Harold." In the poem he introduced descriptions of those natural or artificial objects which had most impressed him during his travels, and expressed his own opinions and tenets in the character of the fictitious Childe; and although deeply tinged with that sombre coloring of misanthropy which is the counterbalancing defect of almost all his beautiful productions, the sublimity of thought and richness of expression which pervades it, at once established his reputation as a poet; and the "Giaour," "The Bride of Abydos," "The Corsair," "Don Juan," and "The Siege of Coriuth," followed in rapid succession.

Lord Byron married on the second of January, 1815, the daughter and only child of Sir Ralph Milbank Noel, Bart. In less than a twelvemonth, however, a separation took place, and they were never re-united. Many circumstances are etated as the cause of this rupture, but the real one it is impossible now to determine. His Lordship himself attributed it to the duplicity and malevolence of a certain female, and he has recorded his feelings on this subject in lines the most powerful perhaps that ever proceeded from a poet's pen; but whether he consulted his dignity in thus concentrating the energies of his genius to crush a woman, may be doubted; but allowances must be made for him on account of the lacerated state of his feelings.

He immediately left England with the avowed intention of never returning to it; and he never did. In this second tour he visited France, Brussels, the Rhine, Switzerland, and Italy, and the result was a third canto of "Childe Harold's Pilgrimage," in every respect decidedly superior, not only to the former cantos of the same work, but to all the preceding productions of his pen. His subsequent poems are numerous, but did not attract equal attention with their predecessors.

In 1823 a new scene of excitement opened on his view. Greece, his beloved Greece, was bravely struggling against her old oppressors, the Turks, but she was deficient in resources, and stood in need of a predominating character and an illustrious name under which to unite and consolidate her distracted councils. Each of these Lord Byron possessed, and with his usual decision, abandoning the pen for the sabre, he fled to her assistance, and devoted to her service without reservation, not only his fortune, but his powers, both mental and physical. It is needless to say that he was welcomed with enthusiasm by all parties, and not least so by the memorable Marco Bozaris, who, immediately previous to his executing one of those warlike enterprises which were habitual to him, but which proved his last, sent his Lordship a warm invitation to Missolonghi, whither he afterwards proceeded. A glorious career appeared now to lie before him; having arrived at the summit of his fame as an author, an opportunity here presented itself for distinguishing himself as a warrior, and that too in a cause fruitful in real glory.

But how short-sighted is man. In a very few months after his arrival, and before an opportunity occurred of his engaging in actual conflict, he had become a corpse. On the 9th of April, 1824, he was, while on horseback, for some time exposed to a heavy rain, and remaining several hours in his damp clothes, a severe cold was the consequence, which was succeeded by a fever, which carried him off on the 19th of the same month.

Thus perished Lord Byron, in that land which, above all others, has such irresistible charms for the poet and the scholar, and whose beautiful and romantic scenery had, during his youthful wanderings amidst it, communicated additional tinge to the rainbow of his fancy. There is scarcely one of his poems in which some allusions to the country of his idolatry are not to be found, and among them all perhaps are none more exquisite than the following resemblance of her to a corpse:

"He who hath bent him o'er the dead,
Ere the first day of death is fled,
The first dark day of nothingness,
The last of danger and distress,
(Before decay's effacing fingers
Have swept the lines where beauty lingers,)
And mark'd the mild angelic air,
The rapture of repose that's there,
The fixed yet tender traits that streak
The languor of the pallid cheek,
And—but for that sad shrouded eye,
That fires not, warms not, weeps not, now,
And but for that chill changeless brow,
Where cold obstructions apathy,
Appals the gazing mourner's heart,
As if to him it could impart
The doom he dreads, yet dwells upon;
Yes, but for these, and these alone,
Some moments, ay, one treacherous hour,
He still might doubt the tyrant's power;
So fair, so calm, so softly seal'd,
The first, last look by death reveal'd!
Such is the aspect of this shore;
'Tis Greece, but living Greece no more!
So coldly sweet, so deadly fair,
We start, for soul is wanting there.
Hers is the loveliness in death,
That parts not quite with parting breath!
But beauty, with that fearful bloom,
That hue which haunts it to the tomb,
Expression's last receding ray,
A gilded halo hovering round decay,
The farewell beam of Feeling pass'd away!
Spark of that flame, perchance of heavenly birth,
Which gleams, but warms no more its cherished earth!"
The Giaour.

It is not surprising, therefore, that when she exhibited symptoms of returning vitality, he should espouse her, or rather the cause of freedom embodied in her, with all the vehement enthusiasm of the poet; but, to his credit, be it spoke, that when the speculative dreams of the theorist gave place to the more arduous duties of the practical patriot, he placed his shoulder against the wheel of the revolution, and urged it forward with an ardor undiminished by the obstacles which impeded it, and by the impurity with which it was clogged. He had, indeed, many and serious difficulties to contend against—the fierce and ungovernable temper of his troops—the dissension of the Greek leaders themselves—contrariety of opinion amongst the volunteers to the cause, and lastly, with indisposition; yet his zeal remained unabated, his efforts unrelaxed. In one of his letters, he says, "For my part, I will stick by the cause while a plank remains which can be honorably clung to." And in another, "I hope things here will go well some time or other; I will stick by the cause as long as a cause exists." And these expressions were no vain boast, his words were amply confirmed by his deeds. Greece lost in him her most zealous and powerful champion, and she bewailed him throughout her islands with the lamentations of deep and heartfelt sorrow.

His letters are, perhaps, even more characteristic of their author than his poems; but they too frequently exhibit a tone of levity which was habitual to Lord Byron's mind in the absence of deeper and more reprehensible feeling, and well would it be if no graver charge remained to be preferred against him than this; but, alas! there are others, and those of the deepest dye; moral defects, which are criminal in the man, doubly so in the poet, and the criminality of which increases in exact proportion with the powers he possesses—skepticism and licentiousness. He, however, usually contented himself with insiduous attacks on Christianity, for he had too much wisdom to hazard the theory of a substitute, and thus expose his weakness, or rather that of the cause he was advocating, an example which the more puny myrmidons of infidelity would do well to imitate. But his sneering attacks on revealed religion, however beautiful and logical their appearance, in the exquisite covering which he has cast around them, when tried by the test of argument vanish like mists at sunrise. The following lines, which occur in Childe Harold, and which are generally known, will serve as examples:

"Son of the morning, rise! approach you here!
Come—but molest not you defenceless urn:
Look on this spot—a nation's sepulchre!
Abode of gods, whose shrines no longer burn,
Even gods must yield—religions take their turn
'Twas Jove's—'tis Mahomet's—and other creeds
Will rise with other years, till man shall learn
Vainly his incense soars, his victim bleeds;
Poor child of doubt and death, whose hope is built on reeds.

Bound to the earth, he lifts his eye to heaven—
Is't not enough, unhappy thing to know
Thou art? Is this a boon so kindly given,
That being thou would'st be again, and go,
Thou knowst'not, reck'st not, to what region, so
On earth no more, but mingled with the skies?
Still wilt thou dream on future joy and woe?
Regard and weigh yon dust before it dies;
That little urn saith more than thousand homilies."

And what does this urn prove which his Lordship so ostentatiously parades before us, demanding, triumphantly,

"Still wilt thou dream on future joy and woe?"

That the body is not immortal; for the question of the immortality of the soul is totally unapproached. Yet his Lordship imagines his vein of argument so good, that he does not easily resign it, but determined that we should have line on line, and precept on precept, in order to our perfect conviction of the folly of believing in a future state, in spite of the unanswerable argument of the decay of our mortal remains, conducts us from the urn to its contents, and repeats his argument thus:

"Remove yon skull from out the scatter'd heaps:
Is that a temple where a God may dwell?
Why e'en the worm at last disdains her shatter'd cell!
Look on its broken arch, its ruin'd wall,
Its chambers desolate, and portals foul;
Yes, this was once ambition's airy hall,
The dome of thought, the palace of the soul;
Behold through each lack lustre, eyeless hole,
The gay recess of wisdom and of wit,
And passion's host, that never brook'd control
Can all saint, sage, or sophist, ever writ,
People this lonely tower, this tenement refit."

Admirable and conclusive reasoning! Behold a skull, the worm having made her meal on it, deserts it: its arch is broken—its chambers are desolate—and "all saint, sage, or sophist ever writ," cannot recall the intellect which inhabited it, nor fix it again on the shoulders of him to whom it belonged—ergo, the soul is not immortal! But with logical powers such as these, why did Lord Byron content himself with merely demonstrating the mortality of the soul, since these arguments would have been equally effective in disproving the existence of the mind itself, or even of the animal functions. We might, for instance, examine the skull of the noble poet, and arguing from the appearance which it would no doubt present to us, prove, in his Lordship's manner, the non-existence of "Childe Harold," "The Corsair," and "Don Juan."

"Can all saint, sage, or sophist ever writ.
People this lonely tower, this tenement refit?"

Did his Lordship ever hear of a single individual of either of the above denominations so incurably mad, as to assert that the skull shares the perpetuity of its ethereal inhabitant? Certainly, never. Why then has he taken such pains to prove to us what every hour presents us with some monuments of, the mortality of nature: it was known that "worms destroy this body," before Lord Byron published his "Childe Harold;" this cavil, therefore, is as absurd in its conception, as it is futile and inconclusive in its reasoning.

The above is a fair specimen of the weapons Lord Byron was in the habit of using in opposition to Christianity, the passage having been selected not as more easy of refutation than many others, but as more familiar. His writings, therefore, carry with them very little of danger to the contemplative and reasoning mind. But when it is recollected that of poetical readers, the overwhelming majority is composed of those who peruse only for amusement, and whose minds are affected and governed, not by the specific arguments, but by the general tendency of a work, their baneful character becomes apparent. Those baseless quibbles which are spurned by the argumentative, enveloped as they are in the sweet and intoxicating vehicle of his poetry, glide into unsettled or indifferent bosoms, and becoming the seed of infidelity, take root, and at length shoot forth their deadly branches, like the night-shade, while the better feelings of the heart wither beneath their shadow.

A few words will be sufficient on the subject of the licentiousness which too frequently makes its appearance in his writing. It has not the grossness of Swift, nor of Smollett, nor of Fielding, nor of the exceptionable portions of the writings of Dryden or Pope, but it is of a voluptuous, fascinating, and seductive character. It effects its evil, not by exhibiting to the mind the regions of error, and inviting it to inhabit them, but by strewing flowers over the boundary which separates virtue from vice, so that the mind wanders over it unconsciously, and pursuing one path after another, is only aware of its deviation when it finds itself on the brink of the precipice, and endeavors in vain to return. The feeling which prompts a parent to exclude these writings from the hands of his children cannot be too much commended, but it is impossible to admire the consistency of many who do so, and yet allow their access to the authors before mentioned, and to others equally improper.

As a man, Lord Byron was generous, brave, impetuous, warm-hearted, and facetious; but his generosity too frequently became profusion; his valor, rashness; his impetuosity, peevishness; his esteem, caprice; and his wit, scurrility; yet he possessed many qualities which, united with his towering genius, would have commanded universal respect but for the heavy counter-balances which have already been dwelt upon—qualities to which, perhaps, we attach more value, when contrasting him with those patriotic gentlemen who rendered themselves so conspicuous by their ceaseless attacks, not on his errors, but on himself; or if they did sometimes make disloyalty and profaneness in him the ostensible objects for these attacks by which their private malevolence and political rancor were gratified, did so with "Wat Tyler" peeping forth from one pocket, and "Borkeley Ballads" from the other, whose implacable hatred even death could not quench, and whose mean cowardice prompted them not to omit the opportunity of flinging their hoof at the dead lion.

As a poet, Lord Byron was never exceeded in power, in originality, or in beauty. The ample burp of poesy was within his grasp, and he swept with the hand of a master every intermediate chord from the grand and the severe to the playful and the pathetic. English poetry had already been enriched by the sublimity of Milton, the originality of Shakspeare, the terseness of Dryden, the humor of Butler, and the melody of Moore, but never did these qualities unite in their highest excellence in the compositions of one man until Byron arose in his strength, and snatching the laurels from the brows of his contemporaries, placed them on his own. Always before the public, and "spontaneously casting off his thoughts," as an illustrious poet happily expresses it, "as a tree does its leaves in autumn," every thing which he presented to us is, in its kind and degree, perfect; or if he ever betrays inferiority, it is inferiority to himself alone. His more sublime passages are frequently terrible, rather than grand, or at least the supernatural gloom in which his deeper scenes are shrouded mingles a feeling of terror with those of wonder and admiration; and the lustre which his genius flings over them, resembles less the sparkling brilliance of the sun than the lurid glare of a conflegration. His lighter pieces possess considerable sweetness and pathos, and occasionally even tenderness.

Such was Lord Byron, possessing genius, rank, fortune, heroism and beauty—possessing all these, yet lacking that one thing without which all these are valueless. He had a love for and a perception of the beauties of nature, such as few men have ever possessed: and he beheld her alike in her rougher and in her milder moods with the enthusiasm of a lover; yet, strange inconsistency, he never raised his eye to Him who created her—to Him who gave the flower its sweetness and its dye—the bird its plumage and its melody—who fixed the mountain on its base, the waters in their courses—who gave the planets their light and their motion, and by whom all these are momently preserved in existence and in order. If he beheld a beautiful picture, his words were warm in praise of the painter—if he contemplated a fine statue, his pen was employed to record his admiration of the sculptor—yet he could discern and appreciate the sublimities of nature, without one thrill of devotion, one expression of admiration towards its Author. Tell us not, ye infidels, of the sufficiency of man's reason to guide us to eternal truth, when we behold a mind, so competent and powerful on all other subjects, so irrational on this. No longer need we wonder at the absurdities into which skepticism plunges its pigmies, when it has betrayed a giant such as Lord Byron into sophisms and puerilities for which a school-boy would have been whipped.

NOTES ON NEW ORLEANS.

MR. EDITOR: I had intended long ago, since my brief sojourn in New Orleans last April, to give your readers a brief sketch of my feelings, excited on the appearance of Methodism generally, in that city of bustle and business; but especially to express my gratification at the appearance of McGeehe Chapel, or Carondelet Street Church, which was dedicated to the worship of Almighty God, while I was in the city, and in the spacious lecture room of which I preached on Thursday evening.

I wanted to say to many who misjudge of things because they are away from them, and are misled by false prejudices. "Why," says some distant brother, who has been worshipping all his days, in an old hull of trembling scantling, which could not have been sold to him for the kitchen of his respectable mansion, "Have you heard of the pride of some of our NewOrleans Methodists; how they have built a house there which cost fifty thousand dollars. Thus we go!" says the troubled brother. And to such causes as these do many of our dear folks attribute all the falling off among our people, from class-meetings, love-feasts, family prayer, and from general piety.

But no, brethren. If worshipping in old, cheap, and incommodious houses would have promoted old fashioned, warm-hearted, Methodistic piety, we had been ahead of ourselves to-day. I have to say, the reverse is true, as far as my knowledge goes. I do not know a place where Methodism was begun years ago in a shanty chapel; and where the people have become well off and improved every thing else, until the stables and carriage houses of many of them are better than the old chapel—that is still there, a monument of neglect, dilapidated, badly patched, and contemptible in the eyes of the community: I say I know not a place where this is the case; but that Methodism is in awful sympathy with the old house. I have never believed in the pure piety of any congregation that is willing to worship God in any sort of a place, so it costs little.

So that it seems to me while it is possible that the Methodists may, at last, get to spending money unaccessarily on gorgeous show, at present, and especially among our wealthy, planting communities in Circuits, the evil is clearly on the side of a suspicious indifference towards God's house; and if there is indifference, it is because the meeting-house is only intended to worship in! Be afraid, my brethren, of this marasmus on your constitutional piety.

But of your Carondelet Street Church in NewOrleans, extravagant as $55,000 might seem to be to some, to my mind it was money well laid out. The Methodists needed such a house in that part of your city. I am glad it is there. I am glad my esteemed friend, Harry R. W. Hill, lived to see it occupied; and that he was pleased and satisfied with it. And I hope it will be as well taken as intended, when I express my sincere desire that James Dick Hill, the only living representative of his excellent father and mother, may be God's friend and ours, in planting Methodism in NewOrleans as his parents desired to see it, unadulterated.

I was in two only, of your city churches, and in both of these I was much pleased with Methodism in NewOrleans, particularly with their singing. They sang God's delightful praise with a holy zest, opened their mouths and poured out their hearts in sweet melody. The congregation all united in this general duty: from altar to doors they sang. And they did it as if they had prepared themselves for it. So congregations ought to do; and then we should have that soul-soothing and soul-inspiring music proper for a worshipping assembly.

I hope you will keep on in this "good old way." Never let the congregations in New Orleans farm out the singing of God's praise to a gallery choir. Let our people learn to praise in person and in heart—not by proxy. Choirs are apt to sing tunes unknown to the congregation. They do this frequently to prevent discord, but then it takes away singing from the congregation, and leads to rovings of the mind, because not down to the hymn and to the tune. In our order of public worship it is peculiarly needful that we cultivate congregational singing. How poorly must the singing portion of public worship pass off by a congregation, all standing, and nearly all doing nothing but stand. Let us all sing, who can, and in order to do so, let all pastors encourage, not fashionable singing schools, often the bane of early piety, but singing associations for Congregational singing: let the tunes be well selected, suited to the one end of God's praise in the assembly of his saints.

Our people in most of the cities, to say nothing of villages and country, are shamefully negligent in singing. They wont sing on Sunday, before the crowd, because they can't sing cleverly; and they wont meet as a singing association in the week, and learn to sing hymns of praise to God, because it is too heavy a tax on their time and ease. These things ought not so to be; and let NewOrleans lead in this beautiful accomplishment, Congregational singing. Let all the people praise the Lord.

RELIGIOUS NEWSPAPERS.

The advantages of a religious newspaper can hardly be over estimated. It does a great deal of work which can be performed in no other way. To no person does it afford greater aid than to a faithful pastor.

It helps him to preach. It goes once a week to the people, and discusses themes of holy importance. It preaches to men who never enter a church, and induces them to come out and hear the Gospel. It preaches all day; to the farmer when he comes in to his meal, to the mechanic when he leaves his toils, to the young maiden who sits down in the afternoon, and to the old man whose eye is dim.

It helps him visit. Every week it goes for him to the homes of his people, comforts the mourner, rebukes the wanderer, says things which he would not wish to say, heals difficulties, produces peace, and never tires.

It helps him in benevolent appropriations. It precedes him, and convinces the people of their duty to give freely; relates a fact, tells an anecdote, urges argument and presents an appeal. It helps him settle church troubles. It shows the members their duty one to another, leads the troublesome parts to see his folly, and rebukes his spirit when he has no heart to be offended. There are various ways in which a newspaper helps a pastor, and every wise minister would wish to have it spread far and wide. We saw a pastor on one occasion going from house to house, collecting subscriptions for a Baptist journal. In reply to a question asked about his labor, he said, "I am an unlearned man, and can not preach much, so I do what good I can in distributing religious papers through this district." He was a wise man, and his labors proved it.

THE BETTER PHILOSOPHY.

"And you really think you would not fear to meet death this moment?" we said to our skeptical friend, at the close of a long interview, in which almost the whole ground of discussion had been covered. "You think you could, without fear, depending upon your philosophy, enter into the spirit-land?"

"As calmly," he replied, "as I shall lie down to rest to-night, provided I could retain the physical strength and nervous control which I can now command."

"What do you mean by all that?" we inquired; "do you mean to say that you fear, after all, your philosophy would fail you, as disease made inroads upon your body; that, as your physical strength began to give way, your faith would go with it; that, like many others of your opinion in health, you would want to see a minister of religion before you would depart hence?"

"I mean to say," rejoined he, "that any exhibition of ularm that I might manifest on a sick bed, when the mind would necessarily sympathize with the body, would be the result only of physical agitation, and its influence on the mental condition, and not any evidence of the want of thorough and settled principle in me."

"My friend," we rejoined, "one thing is a little remarkable. Your principles are principles that seem peculiarly susceptible to influence from conditions of the body; when the body is strong, then they are very strongly and emphatically expressed; when the body becomes weak, they fail you. Did it ever strike you that the very opposite is the result with the principles of our beloved Christian faith? As the body sinks, grace triumphs! As the grave approaches, consolations abound. "Thanks be to God who hath given us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ." Is not that the better philosophy which sustains the soul, no matter whether the body be strong or in ruins!"

Our friend could not answer us. But we feel assured the truth impressed him. [Meth. Protestant.

GOOD REASONING.—"If you are not afraid of God, I am afraid of you," said a merchant, as he passed a counting-room on the Sabbath and saw it open. The next day he refused to sell his produce to the Sabbath-breaker on any credit whatever. He acted wisely. In three months the Sabbath-breaker was a bankrupt.

Plato being once asked how long he meant to be a disciple, said, "As long as I am not ashamed of growing better and wiser."

HINDRANCES TO AGRICULTURE.

Mr. Rives, in his address at the late Agricultural Fair of this State, very truly stated some of the advantages of the American over the European farmer. In this country there is not only land enough for farms of respectable size, but it free from the incumbrance of debt, bad government, aristocratic institutions and various other social evils which curse society in the old world. The hindrance arising from the land monopoly of England, and the too great division of estates in France, is alluded to as follows:

"In England, for example, the actual cultivator or occupant of a farm is very rarely the owner. In ninety-nine cases out of a hundred he is a tenant, frequently for a short term, without sometimes even the security of a lease. It is not in human nature under such circumstances that the farmer should be very solicitous to make improvements, of which the chief benefit may accrue to another, and it is indeed wonderful, and a fact most honorable to the tenant farmers, that, in spite of this prevailing discouragement and that other oppressive tradition in the shape of tithes, which subjects them to increased burdens in proportion to their skill, industry and experience in improvements, English agriculture should be what it is.

"In the country which is separated from England by a narrow sea, and yet more by strongly contrasted national character, institutions and manners, the discouragements of agriculture are of a precisely opposite nature.

"There is not the monopoly but the extreme and unnatural subdivision of landed property and the diminutiveness of farms, almost to the verge of the infinite divisibility of matter, that opposes the most serious obstacle to the general progress of agricultural improvement.

"What would we think on this broad continent of ours, of a field measuring one and one half yards by two, and a farmer owning and cultivating a single furrow, and that by no means a long one? And yet in Lorraine there are examples of the former, attested by the authority of a grave and respectable French writer; and in Brittany the common name applied by the peasantry to his possession is sillon, or furrow, and it is, in fact, often nothing more. It is estimated that there are about a million and a quarter proprietors in France, none of whom hold more than two hectares, or five acres of land."

PREACHING.

The following is an extract from the valuable essay of Professor Phelps, in the April number of the Bibliotheca Sacra, on the Distinctive Idea of Preaching:

Preaching is distinguished from the religious essay and the hortatory effusion on the one hand, and from the theological treatise on the other, by being at the same time spiritual and practical. These terms, therefore, are not so much descriptive of a particular kind of preaching, as a sort of exegesis of the term preaching itself. That is, preaching is the methodical and clear presentation of the principles of Christianity, with direct reference to their bearing on the practical conduct of men, and for the immediate object of the salvation of their souls. In so far as it touches on the vital principles of Christianity, as substantial and discerned by faith, it is spiritual, that is, it is the old; in so far as it concerns the conduct of men, it is practical, that is it is the new. In order, moreover, to its being truly either, it must be, at the same time, both; for no preaching is in reality practical, when it is not thoroughly spiritual; and no preaching is in reality spiritual when it is not thoroughly practical. We may hence perceive the erroneousness of the common opinion, that all kinds of practical teaching, and practical preaching especially, are contradistinguished from that which is grounded on principles. The proper opposite to spiritual, or doctrinal, is not practical, but empirical. The proper meaning of the term practical is the reduction of principles to practice. It is the utterance and enforcement of truths which concern our spiritual being, our spiritual wants, our spiritual relations, and the spiritual world, as bearing directly upon, and involved in our daily life and conduct; thus furnishing the interior life, out of whose silent, but constant energy, all right and moral conduct must spring and derive its character. Whatever is designed merely to influence the conduct at the moment, and which contains no element proper to influence it under all circumstances, is of all things the most unpractical. It is, by its own express terms, an expedient for the time, and is not intended for practice. It is a mere make-shift, whereby a man may evade a duty or seem to perform it, by changing his apparent relations to it. The true idea of the practical, therefore, contemplates that which may be applied in life, not in a single instance, only, or under a given set of circumstances—for so one would be ever learning and never be able to come to the knowledge of the truth—but every where, and always, as a principle of life, as the spirit of the conduct, as the habitual practice, in distinction from a mere expedient, an isolated act, with no more solid ground than the convenience of the hour. And this affords one test of true spirituality of doctrine, namely, that it reaches a man in all his moods and states, in all his circumstances and occasions, both pointing out the line of duty, and communicating the vigor and constancy which shall urge him onward and sustain him in the discharge of it.

EXPERIMENTAL EVIDENCE OF CONVERSION.

The truly converted man has experimental evidence of the truth of Christianity as well as of his own conversion. Let none change this assertion with enthusiasm; it is sustained by the statement of the beloved disciple, and of our Lord himself. "If any man will do his will, he shall know of the doctrine, whether it be of God:" chap. vii, 17. "He that believeth in the Son of God hath the witness in himself." 1 John, v. 10.

This evidence of conversion may be of little account to others, but to the Christian himself it is one of the strongest, and entirely satisfactory. During one of our visits to an uneducated, but pious old lady, who had been sick, but was now convalescent, she made the following statement. "You know," said she, "Dr. ——, the physician who attends me, is an unbeliever, and makes fun of religion. Yesterday, when he called, he found me reading the Bible, and said, "What! are you again reading that old, worn-out book of fables?" and then he went on with his learning to prove that the Bible is not true, and those who believe it are crazy," etc. "And what did you say?" we inquired. "Well, what could I say? You know the Doctor is a learned man, and I could not argue with him. So, when he was done with his long talk, I just said, "Doctor, though I can't answer your learning, I know better than all that, and you and all the Doctors in the world can't shake my faith in the Bible. I know that God has converted me, for I have the witness within me; I know that the Bible is true, for since my conversion I feel that the truth by which the Spirit renewed me, is the truth of God and nothing else. I feel all this in the depths of my soul, and the conviction I have is deeper and stronger than all your arguments; and if you would do the will of God, you would also know that the doctrine of Christ is of God, and that there is an everlasting reality in religion." "And what did the Doctor say to this?" "O, he just laughed at me, and said he must leave me to my own superstitions."

SPASMODIC PEOPLE.

There are people who love and hate, laugh and cry, work and play by spasms. If they are good for any thing it is for keeping their families and the world from stagnation. The spasmodic housewife is famous for turning the house up-side down, and splashing the soap-suds in your face when no body expects it. The spasmodic husband brings home love and poultry by the wholesale one day—the next love has taken wings and the chickens are spoiled. The spasmodic mother hugs her children with the maternal fervor of a bear, while the fit is on, and then whips them for soiling her collar. The spasmodic fidget goes paddling about your kitchen, beats your meat with saleratus, and tells your friends what a miserable cook you are. The spasmodic Christian reads the Bible through in a week, and forgets it for a year. The spasmodic alms-giver puts down a thousand dollars for an improved soap-bubble, and gives a starving man—good advice. The spasmodic student dips into forty languages, and never commits beyond the first letter in the alphabet in each. The spasmodic invalid fancies ice cream in December, a hot bath in June, and diets on sarsaparilla.

In fine, to enumerate the great family of spasmodics, would take from January to January, for three score years and ten. The only way to rid the community of this, not evil disposed but evil working progeny, is to take the fits in hand from one year old and upwards when they are tender. These sort of spasms never come to maturity unless they are either nursed or neglected; and the only remedy we would suggest for the cure of young spasmodics, is, the formation of regular habits and Solomon's rod in small quantities.

TEACH CHILDREN TO HELP THEMSELVES.—The thoughtless mother who hourly yields to the requests—"Mamma, tie my pinafore," "Mamma, button my shoe," and the like, cannot be persuaded that each of these concessions is detrimental; but the wiser spectator sees that if this policy be long pursued, and be extended to other things, it will end in hopeless dependence. The teacher of the old school who showed his pupil the way out of every difficulty, did not perceive that he was generating an attitude of mind greatly militating against success in life. Taught by Pestalozzi, however, the modern instructor induces his pupil to solve the difficulties himself; believes that in so doing he is preparing him to meet the difficulties which, when he goes into the world, there will be no one to help him through; and finds confirmation for this belief in the fact that a great proportion of the most successful men are self-[Herbert Spencer.

A FACT FULL OF MEANING.—Here is the finest hit we have seen at the present popular distinction between religion and morals:—

In a religious excitement, in Boston, a person met a Christian neighbor, who took him by the hand and said—

"I have become a Christian."

"You are a Christian, then, all at once," said the other; "you profess to act [illegible] Christian principles. I am glad of it. I congratulate you. Suppose we [illegible] a settlement of our little [illegible]. Pay me what thou owest."

"No," said the new-born [illegible] turning on his heel; "religion is [illegible] business is business."

So the pious sell us. A [illegible] so very pious [illegible] full of pugh [illegible]

Intense [illegible] reacted to pause [illegible] of all distinction.

If a man deliberately violates his finest sense of rectitude, he inflicts an irremediable wound upon his moral nature, and, as it were, poisons the fountain of his energies.

NEW ORLEANS:

Saturday Morning, October 29.

CONFERENCE NOTICES.

The members of the Alabama Conference, on arriving at Tuscaloosa, will call at the Methodist Church. Those brethren who expect their wives to accompany them, will please give me timely notice. O. R. Blue.

Mississippi Conference is expected, according to notice of Rev. H. H. Montgomery last week, to meet at Canton, on acconnt of prevalence of yellow fever at Port Gibson. Preachers call at R. Barrington's store.

MISSIONARY COLLECTIONS.

Not yet too late to complete the assessment on stations and circuits. This is a Missionary era of the true church of Christ. The Conference treasurers hold the pulse of real gospel vitality. Their figures go far to tell us how much of the spirit of love, of zeal, of soul and sacrifice is among the people. Enlarged demands are made. And all around in all Evangelical churches these demands are being met by enlarged contributions. The Missionary Secretary of the M. E. Church, North, suggests, as he visits them, and witnesses their liberality, that at no distant day the contributions in the Western Churches would exceed those in the Eastern. And as an evidence, he mentioned the rapid advance during the last few years in the contributions from the Churches in the West. The last year Michigan advanced 70 per cent., Rock River 100 per cent., North Indiana 40 per cent., and in the Cincinnati Conference over 20 per cent.

How about the South Western Conferences? Brother laymen—don't wait till the preacher catches up with you. Go and poke your $10, $20, $50, $100 bills right into his face, and tell him to take it up to the Conference Missionary Society, for the Lord hath need of it.

CONFERENCE SESSIONS.

Louisville Conference.—This body met in Owensboro', Ky., 28th nlt., and adjourned 4th instant. The Nashville Advocate says: "The reports from the various districts were truly encouraging; thousands have been converted and added to the Church, and Methodism is rapidly advancing in most portions of the Conference. Indeed, in all things considered, we know of no portion of the Southwest where the interests of our church are more rapidly extending than in Southern Kentucky."

Delegates.—E. Stevenson, N. H. Lee, A. H. Redford, Z. M. Taylor, C. B. Parsons.

Reserves.—E. W. Sehon, J. D. Barnett.

Missouri Conference met in Palmyra and adjourned 5th instant, Bishop Andrew presiding. We see no coming in of young itinerants in any of these Conferences in sufficient measure to meet the demand. The Church in Missouri is pronounced by the Editor of the St. Louis Christian Advocate to be in a prosperous condition. "Every interest of the church has gone forward." In the Missouri Conference the disposition was strong to cut ont work for the General Conference.

Resolutions pro and con in reference to the action to be taken by that body in reference of the section in the Discipline on the subject of slavery, were offered, and laid on the table.

A resolution in reference to the securing by Congress in all treaties hereafter made, the privilege of citizens of the United States residing in foreign countries, of worshipping God agreeably to the dictates of their consciences, was introduced and passed.

This last resolution we give, and wish that its substance were passed deliberately at every Annual Conference. This is the way to make the voice of the people heard—

"Resolved, by the Missouri Annual Conference of the M. E. Church, South, in Conference assembled, That we contemplate with admiration the dignified patriotism and truly Christian position assumed by the Committee on Foreign Relations of our last Congress, in their report designed to secure in our future national treaties with other powers, to the citizens of this country residing in foreign countries, the privilege of worshipping God according to the dictates of their own consciences.

"Resolved, That the Secretary of this Conference is hereby instructed to furnish the Representatives and Senators in Congress from Missouri with a copy of the above resolution."

After premising that there must be an East and West Branch of the Book Concern for the M. E. Church, South, the delegates are instructed to get St. Louis selected for the latter. It was resolved that St. Louis was "the place."

A memorial is to be got up and signed on Temperance, setting forth—

"Whereas, in the opinion of your memorialists, the rule in our Discipline in reference to the manufacture, sale and use of intoxicating liquors as a beverage, is exceedingly indefinite, and in its present form difficult of administration, and in view of the prevalence of intemperance, the long catalogue of crimes and curses it has entailed on our world, and its baneful influence upon the piety and usefulness of the Church, and in order that our beloved Zion may be forever preserved from its polluting touch:

"Your Memorialists would respectfully petition your venerable body to insert in our Discipline a specific rule prohibiting the manufacture, sale and use of intoxicating liquors as a beverage.

"Delegates—W. Patton, W. G. Caples, E. M. Marvin, B. S. Ashby.

Reserves—A. Monroe, H. Brown.

MORAL SUASION.

Many good sort of people can't find in them to believe what they hear of spiritual despotism, where Popery is backed by superstition and civil power. That a Romish priest—a mere citizen, not an officer of the State—should horsewhip a spiritual trunnt. Oh! incredible says a charitable soul.

Well, it does look so to an American—a native born freeman. But even here, in New Orleans, "in the middle of the ninoteenth century," something was brought to our knowledge last week, thnt shows what may be. A sprightly Irish youth was invited by a clergyman (not Methodist) to go to church. Indeed he would like to, but durst not—except to the Catholic Church. "Why, didn't Bridget, the housemaid, go for a little bit into the Methodist Church in Felicity street there, and Father M. made her do a heavy penance for it. He did that same! And I went too, and when I told Father M. at confession of it, he said if he caught me going there again, he'd cowhide me, sure."

Now Father M. is as mild a mannered, saintly looking man as ever elevated a crucifix. To see him scouring about in long coat, one would never imagine that such moral 'suasion as this ever entered his thoughts. We perceive how it is that the priests can keep the children of Catholics out of the public schools. There is a raw hide in terrorem.

THOSE MIXED COMMITTEES.

The attention of the Louisiana Conference is urgently invited to this matter. Let each Quarterly Conference have its representative at Mansfield in December. Provision is made for them—see fifth resolution. Representatives of our Conference Methodism—men of large views and devoted hearts, and devising wise and liberal things—men who love the Church well enough to spare a few days and make a short journey for a good cause. It will be an infusion of a generous and useful, and happy element into the Conference proceedings. It will add to the interest of the occasion, make all love the Church better, understand its wants better, and do better for its promotion.

For sake of reference, we republish from the minutes, the whole action of the last Conference under this head:

11. Lay Committee Co-operation—Resolved—First, That the Louisiana Annual Conference earnestly desires the co-operation of brethren, members of the M. E. Church, South, within the bounds of the Conference, to advance the several benevolent and financial interests which have heretofore been under the sole care of the Conference.

Second, That it hereby pressingly invites each of the Quarterly Meeting Conferences within its bounds to select some one gentleman, a member of the Church, to attend at the place where the next Annual Conference shall meet (Mansfield) to give aid and share in the Committee-action of the Conference upon the cause of Missions—the cause of Education—the Sabbath School cause—the Church Publications, and the Support of the Ministry.

Thirdly, That the Conference shall now appoint, from its members, the Chairmen of the several Committees on the aforesaid benevolent interests, who will be expected to prepare for, during the year, a report upon the various interests they represent, excepting the Committee on Missions, which shall meet and act with the Board of Managers on the first day of the meeting of the Conference.

Fourthly, That upon each afternoon of the days on which the Conference shall meet, the Conference shall resolve itself into a Committee of the Whole, upon some one of the aforesaid benevolent causes; and shall, together with the Committee-men from the Quarterly Meeting Conferences, constitute the Committee on Education—the Committee on Church Publications—the Committee on Sunday Schools—the Committee on Missions, and the Committee on Ministerial Support. The aforesaid Chairman shall preside, and shall report upon rising to the President of the Conference, the action of the Committee of the Whole, in a written report.

Fifth, That the preacher in charge of Mansfield be requested to make provision for the entertainment of the Committee men of the Quarterly Conferences during the next Conference Session.

Sixth, That the following be the chairmen of the several committees for the next Conference:

Chairman of Committee on Missions, R. H. Rivers, President of the Missionary Society.

Chairman of Committee on Sunday Schools, J. B. Walker.

Chairmen of Committee on Education, C. A. Frazee.

Chairman of Committee on Church Publications, Linus Parker.

Chairman of Committee on Ministerial Support, S. J. Davies.

LITERARY NOTICES.

Men and Things I Saw in Europe; by Kirwan. Harper & Brothers, New York, 1853. Another book from Dr. Murray, much to the gain of his readers. The tour was made in 1851—when there were men and things to be seen; and the author had the best opportunities for seeing. He is a Presbyterian—that sticks out in every chapter: he must have been predestinated to it, it is so strong. The abominations of Popery is his hie vein; he strikes it often and works it in his incomparable way. His judgment of men and things is independent—did not fancy D'Aubigne, has a mistrust of Dr. Achilli, the Bishop of Oxford preached the poorest sermon he heard in Europe—the London Tower and St. Paul's no great things. Though only an adopted one, he looks at foreign sights with the most American pair of eyes we wot of. Not dazzled by eclat, his estimates have an air of fairness, as well as independence. We have never been introduced to men and things so easily, briefly and satisfactorily. One's traveling appetite is taken away—he feels that he is acquainted with those people—has been to those places—knows as much about them as he cares to know. The conclusion of the whole matter forces itself upon us—that Americans have nothing to learn or gain by the politics, the habits or the religion of Continental Europe.

We have the book through McGinnis & Carver, 36 Camp street.

Southern Methodist Quarterly.—The October number is before us, looking fairly. The list of original contributors, besides the Editor, does not display names distinguished in literature—but that we take it is the business of a Southern Quartorly, to cultivate Southern literature. This legitimate work our Quarterly is doing well and to its honor. It forms no small part of its claims on a Southern public. Among other interesting articles we find Asmodai, a translation from a Hebrew Encyclopedia by the Josephus who furnished a series of valuable communications to this paper, some months ago.

National Magazine, for November. Always prompt and readable.

CITY CORRESPONDENCE.

Whilst there are these and other marks of a growing oblivion, we greatly mistake, if we suppose that the late visitation leaves no indelible impression.

In less than three months, twelve thousand or thereabouts, have died within the city proper, an army greater by three times, than won the field of Buena Vista, and greater by one-sixth than shared the celebrated retreat of the immortal Xenophon. The mortality, when we take numbers into the account, exceeds that of Napoleon's largest battles—Wagram, Borodino and Waterloo, not excepted.

Death has been impartial in the selection of his victims. The greater number has been taken from the poor; this is always the case, because the greater part of the people is poor. Many in the higher walks of life have fallen; some of the rich and great. In other years, color, character and circumstances have made a difference, but during the past season these have not been respected.

Nor, as in other seasons, have birth and age been the grounds of discrimination. The home-born, Creoles and infants, who have hitherto lived in alliance of amity with the yellow fever, have been subject to its attack.

Neither has place secured exemption. Those cities of refuge, where our citizens have found safety, and where nature seemed to have shut out the pestilence, have vainly pleaded their accustomed immunity. Blue waters, pure air, and invigorating breezes have only seemed to entrap, not to deliver.

But one partiality is observable. Comparatively few members of the Protestant churches have died. The German Mission of our Communion has probably suffered most. The report shows eighteen deaths of fever. In our other charges it has not been so great, probably not six per cent. I notice this exception because it is one—its signification is left to others, except so far as it may bear upon the conclusion I wish to reach—that this impartiality argues that the late Epidemic was of a peculiarly providential character.

In this fact, and in the exception, one of the most marked features of the Divine government is brought out; a discrimination upon moral grounds alone. Always mysterious, this year the yellow fever has been a greater mystery than ever. It has traveled beyond the limits which long experience had fixed. It has set at naught the canons of medical practitioners, and in derision of the laws that were supposed to govern it, it has gone whither it listed, and it has taken whom it pleased.

Whilst our skilful and noble-hearted medical men are at "their wits ends" for a solution, the devout, Bible-educated believer sees in it the indications of an extraordinary visitation. This remarkable impartiality, exhibited at the expense of laws, till now thought immutable, shows the finger of God not less clearly than when Egypt was darkened with plagues, and the plain of Jordan became the sepulchre of Sodom and Gomorrah.

Regarded in this light, the scourge has left its mark. A godless population, with singular unanimity, publicly recognized, and for the first time, a God of righteousness working in Providence. For a day at least, a great city paused in its infidelity, and did a constrained homage to the Supreme Being. Thousands, hitherto living without reflection, have become thoughtful, and our congregations can attest that many of them have become regular and hopeful hearers of the gospel. Strange forms, in mourning garb, steal into the sanctuary, and, publican-like, sit in the back-pews, even where the seats are free.

The pastor's experience will testify that the Epidemic has been strikingly efficacious in revealing backsliders—lifting the veil of worldly indifference from those ex-Christians, whilom class-leaders and Camp-meeting graduates, who, in other parts, filled the "amen corners" of prosperous churches. Some of these histories have been unfolded over the coffin, as a forlorn hope to the bereaved, and out of which an ingenious divine is tasked to make a hopeful burial exhortation. Other of these "o'er-true tales" have come from the lips of the lapsed saint himself, already nearly sealed in death. Others still, after the chastening, have returned, like the leper of the gospel, to give glory to God. The covenant of other years is renewed, the rusted armor is re-furbished, and the buried disciple is "raised and changed." These blocks, hewed from the revival quarries of other States, and for awhile, lost in the dissipation and business of the city, have become as "corner stones, polished after the similitude of a palace." The note-book of a resident minister would furnish volumes illustrative of this.

Our church members have been incited to increased ardor of devotion, more self-searching, and greater carefulness of conversation. The half Christians, in many instances, have been made whole ones; the lukewarm have been stirred to zeal, and the faithful have been confirmed in their estimate of religion.

In many mansions, the dance, the gossip, and the flirtation go bravely on as of yore. Not so, however, in all. Some houses, two months ago, tenanted with life, and all of life's relationships unbroken, are strangely dark and silent. They are all dead there—all! Of course, there is no music, no light, no dance, for death's revels need them not. But there are other houses, where "one is taken, and the other left," where some areas of the circle have been broken out, fragments are there still. Few visitors are seen; but the minister of the gospel, not much acquainted there before, enters these abodes of sorrow, and receives the welcome of subdued and chastened hearts. Religious words are not elbowed out of conversation; the cross is not of set purpose ignored; the parting prayer is neither evaded nor forgotten. A new conviction has come into those houses. Death opened the doors and let it in, and it is nursed in the lap of bereavement. In those gay and happy homes, there was no place for the family Bible, no welcome for the man of serious mien; no room for God. Death has emptied them of some of their idols, and Jesus finds a place in the hearts which are left.

Thus we gather fragments from the repast of the pestilence, and it may perhaps appear in the progress of these reflections, that "nothing shall be lost." The history of its feasting is rich in virgin prayers and new made vows; and doubtless its sequel will be filled with the record of converted hearts and better fashioned lives. Woodeman.

REVIVAL INTELLIGENCE.

Columbus, Ga.—The Times and Sentinel of the 18th instant says:

For the two last weeks a very extensive revival in religion has been going on in the Methodist Church in this city, under the pastoral charge of Rev. W. G. Connor, who has been assisted in his labor of love by Revs. Evans, Arnold, Duncan, and the local ministry of this city. We are informed that about 90 have professed religion, and upwards of 60 accessions have been made to the church.

Bayou Gauss Tete, La.—The P. Elder from this, "one of the most beautiful regions he has ever seen," writes October 20:

"Had a good meeting—two were added to this church; raised one hundred dollars Missionary money, and ten dollers Conference Collection."

Eufaula, Ala.—The Eufaula Spirit of the South says: For the last three weeks a religious revival has been in progress in the Methodist church in this place; and we think that much good has resulted to the community from it. The meeting was conducted throughout with great calmness and deliberation, and without any undue excitement, such as is too frequently witnessed on similar occasions. About 30 professed religion and joined the church. The exercises were closed on Sunday last, in that church, and a protracted meeting is now commencing in the Baptist Church. We trust it may tell upon our community for good; for there is evidently much use yet for moral reformation in our midst.

Columbus, Miss.—We have just closed an interesting meeting in this charge. Thirty or more professed conversion, nearly all of whom have joined the church. Many of the membership were much revived.

October 17. Thos. W. Dounaw.

Brownsville, Miss.—A camp meeting held here (near Belton Depot) closed 12th instant, and as a correspondent informs us resulted in 25 or 30 conversions, besides much strengthening and reviving the church.

Suggsville Circuit, Ala.—We have just closed a deeply interesting Camp Meeting on this Circuit. Although we had but few Ministers with us, yet the Lord was with us, and the meeting resulted in about thirty conversions, as near as we can ascertain, and 52 accessions to the church. Among those who professed religion were a goodly number of promising young men. I trust God will send some of them into the vineyard, as laborers, to supply the place of those who have fallen in battle this year. The meeting was characterized throughout for good behavior and attention to preaching. During the whole time I saw no cause for the slightest reproof. It cannot be but that God would bless these people. Oct. 22. T. S. Abernathy.

Marriage for Money.—I never knew a marriage for money that did not end unhappily. Yet managing mothers and heartless daughters are continually playing the same unlucky game. I believe that many think that they will not have a better chance, and dread being dependent. Such marriages, no doubt, sometimes prove tolerably comfortable, but a great number would have been far heppier single. If I may judge by my observation of such matters, marrying for a home makes that home a very tiresome one. [Mrs. Child.

A Long Farewell.—Misses M. W. and C. P. Webster, the only survivors of the late Professor John W. Webster, now in this country, bade a farewell to our shores yesterday, having sailed for the Azores in the ship Ion. They have just paid the last melancholy rites over the remains of an idolized mother, and a most estimable woman [Boston Bee.

METHODIST PRESS.

Dancing It.—This is the significant heading of an article in the California Advocate, exposing the dupes and duping of the raffling system. Raffling, not only in California, but in the old States, and even at those resorts, yclept "Church fairs," is but gambling, poorly disguised—only another way of dancing it.

The scheme is this: You wish to make thirty or thirty-five thousand dollars. You have goods worth $15,000, consisting of worm eaten boxes, old Chinese fans, brass jewelry, pinch back watches, a few gold watches and silver card cases, etc., etc. You could not sell them for $10,000 to a wholesale dealer in the land! You cannot make them go at daily mock auctions in three months for $18,000. That would not pay much. You could not build a splendid hall for that. What now can be done? One man could not be found with fool enough in him to give you $55,000 for $15,000 worth of goods. You must go to work and get a regular decoction of all the dance out of sixty or sixty-five thousand people, then you can make it work. So now comes the raffle theory of "Dancing it." Get a gold bar worth $5,000, and offer it as the first prize, then all the host of other nothings as prizes. Prizes for what, pray! Is there any virtue to be rewarded—any bold, generous spirit to be crowned? No, nothing but "dunces" to feed and fatten. Well, then, give $10,000 or $15,000 to newspapers, runners, clerks, expresses. Blow yourself up into a gentlemanly, fighting size. Puff your own house of "well-known reputation," and offer 65,000 tickets for a dollar each. Open your rooms, hire a nigger bell-ringer and dancy orator, and noisy, dancy clerks, to cry "Down with that dollar—where's that last dollar," and sell and raffle the tickets. Perhaps you can find in two or three hundred thousand people, dunce enough to buy 65,000 tickets. There could not be found dunce enough in 50, 60, or 500 men to take the tickets. You must get all the dunce out of a multitude to make it go. Hence the raffle is a scientific method of dancing it. Some have become apostles of dancing, and the prospect is that others will become martyrs!

Manners and Dress.—The locum tenens of the Nashville Advocate (who is Dr. Wadsworth) gives us a capital editorial on the manners and dress of ministers. We endorse the editorial only—not the concluding quotation:

We have long been convinced of the truth of the saying, which ought to be put in the class of maxims, 'Manner is something with every body and every thing with some.' One's taste is seen frequently in his manners, and especially in his dress. Propriety in dress, and politeness in manners, ought to be studied by all preachers of the gospel, and then they ought to be practiced uniformly. These have assisted many in advancing the usefulness and eminence. Some things which are fashionable, may be tolerable in gentlemen of the world, but intolerable in gentlemen who stand in the pulpit. A visitor from Canada who attended the session of the Protestant Episcopal Convention recently held in Buffalo, writes about what he saw among the clergy there. We give one paragraph of his letter below, for the benefit of some of our good brethren whom it may concern:

"In concluding our observations, we would remark, that there was only one thing which marred the otherwise to us unmingled pleasure of the occasion, and we noticed it with no unkindly feeling, but because it is alien to our ideas of what a clergyman's appearance should be, and so unlike any thing we ever saw in the English branch of the church. We allude to the fashion adopted by several of the American clergy, of the younger ones, in particular, of having their faces covered with hair. To be a hairy man may be, in their estimation, a mark of distinction; but when we see almost every fop that walks the street presenting the same hirsute appearance, we cannot but regret that there should be a difficulty in deciding, judging from external appearance, which is the Minister of Christ. The latter, according to our old-fashioned notion, should ever be distinguished by a meek countenance, and an entire absence of conformity to the foppery of the world."

Our confrere would put scissors and razor upon every preacher's face, making a clean sweep. Let us see: some men have throat affections. After those parts are warmed by vocal exercise, the cold strikes into the exposed surface, and works downward to the bronchiale. We have known such, under medical advice, to beard as a natural protection. Then others have long, lank faces, that need filling up. It takes the razor a good while to travel over their length and breadth, and it must be mettle at that. To these the whiskers are at once a saving of time, a saving of labor, and a saving of appearance. It is not every body that has a comfortable under chin, and those blessed with short, plump side faces, can't appreciate the difficulties of a cheek abounding in wrinkles and notches, and cavities, among which the shaver toils with eager blade, grimacing before the glass, and pinching his flabby flesh out of all shape, that he may cut down the last struggling heir.

We could say more—"the subject invites" but we have said enough to qualify the editorial. In this we would both agree—condemning the goatee—a pure disgusting foppery, not subserving health in any way, and consuming more time to trim up to it nicely and around it, than it would take to curry a horse. The good old P. Elder was right who took out a young man offering for admission into the Conference, whose chin was graced with one of these hirsute appendages, "Look here, you must take that thing off, or I would be ashamed to recommend you, and I know you would'nt pass. You couldn't have got through the Quarterly Conference, even, with that thing on."

A New Committee.—A correspondent of the Pittsburgh Advocate makes the following reflections:

The Western Virginia Conference acted wisely, at its last session, in appointing a committee to examine the local preachers, who will be candidates at its next session for Deacon's and Elder's orders. Such a committee, in our opinion, ought to have been appointed by the Pittsburgh Conference, and doubtless would, had it not been for the senseless precipitancy that characterized the winding up of the business of the session.

The Discipline recommends for the candidates to whom we refer a judicious "course of study," and surely the Conference ought to know what proficiency they have made in it, before it is prepared to elect them to the sacred and responsible office of Deacon or Elder.

TRIENNIAL CONVENTION.

The Triennial General Convention of the Episcopal Church in the United States met September 28, in New York, and adjourned on the 14th instant. There were present, by representation, thirty dioceses, (California not included) with twenty-eight bishops and two bishops elect, besides a majority of clerical and lay representatives. As this meeting is of the highest grade known to this section of the Church, we propose to lay before our readers some of its doings.

The Convention is composed of two houses, the upper or house of Bishops, and the lower, of clerical and lay delegates. The former hold their sents, ex-officio, and sit in secret session, exercising a veto power over all laws and canons, and all resolves on discipline, which can only emanate from the lower house.

These two houses are conformed very much to the Senate and House of Representatives, the lower house sitting with open doors.

The opening sermon was preached by Bishop McIlvaine. We give the concluding sentence of the reported sermon:

"The third class of this discourse, therefore, is our third division: "Pray ye the Lord of the Harvest that he will send forth laborers into the harvest." The first reason, you perceive, is the absolute dependence of the Church upon the Lord's sending. It is impossible that there will be laborers such as God will approve for his harvest, except they are sent of God. There is a wide difference between our ordaining and the Lord sending. We are not authorized to ordain, except as we have reason to believe that the Lord had already chosen and called. We need not a stronger declaration of this than the language of our Church. At the threshold of the ministry, before a single word is allowed to be asked, the candidate for ordination is asked this question: "Do you trust that you are inwardly moved by the Holy Ghost to take upon you this office of ministration? In other words, did God choose you for his ministry, and was it God who sent you here to receive it?" Divers motives may bring you here to take upon you this office. You may come with nothing better than a worldly or professional spirit. What if a candidate when asked that question should answer, "No; I have no reason to believe that I am moved by the Holy Ghost to take upon me this office. I desire to enter the ministry, I have fulfilled all the requisitions in point of study, but I do not believe that the Holy Ghost has moved me to it." If such were his answer, of course the ordination will not proceed. He wants the primary preparation, the call of God, and, therefore, the Church cannot call him. His doctrine may be all right, his knowledge all sufficient, his morals perfect and excellent; but he has not been called by God to the office; and, therefore, God's minister cannot ordain him to it. What if a person so uncalled of God, should, nevertheless, through ignorance or otherwise, respond to the question in the affirmative, and so be ordained? What would he be? A minister? Certainly; but a minister made by man only. His acts are those of a minister, and his responsibility is that of a minister. He has the same visible authority as others of the same degree, but he is self-chosen, self-moved, self-called. He is not one of those whom we are to pray the Lord of the Harvest to send, because the Lord of the Harvest did not send him."

The sermon being finished, four deacons, in surplices, collected the alms and oblations of the congregation.

The senior Bishop, (Brownell) assisted by Bishop Doane, of New Jersey, and other Bishops, then proceeded with the administration of the Lord's Supper.

The Provisional Bishop (Wainwright) received the alms at the Offertory, from the deacons, in the superb and massive golden plate, presented in London, last year, to the American clergy, for the church here. The display at the opening scenes of the Conventions were magnificent, not exceeded by any thing in this country since the Catholic Convocation of Archbishops and Bishops in Baltimore in 1852. A delegation of Church of England clergy were present. Dr. Creighton was elected President of the Lower House.

After business got under way, Mr. Duncan (a lawyer of this city, who seems to be a pillar) moved that the names of the mover and seconder of a resolution should be placed on the minutes, and supported his motion in a long speech, the gist of which was, that without such a check, some delegates might make crude and indiscreet motions, and express opinions adverse to the interest of the Episcopal body without being responsible for them; further, the name of a man of sound judgment and well accredited responsibility appended to a resolution gave it weight. Another argument advanced by him was to the effect that these records will be the data for some future Episcopal historian. He contended that the omission of the names of authors of resolutions was opposed to the established usages of all legislative bodies, secular or religious. The House of Bishops had no such rule, and he thought their example was worthy the imitation of the House of Deputies.

Judge Chambers, of Maryland, said the old rule had worked well in times gone by, and he thought it an essential benefit now, as a check on the morbid ambitions of many who pant to see their names in print. He would assure the gentleman from Louisiana that if he rested his prospects of future immortality on the minutes of this House, he would not be known or remembered (humiliating though the reflection be) many hours after he had retired from active participation in the proceedings of this life. He would leave out the name of the mover of a resolution.

Some gentleman moved, as an amendment, that the name of the mover be inserted at the option of the House, when such mover, by position or reputation, should warrant it. (Some quiet sarcasm there.)

Dr. Higbee, of New York, hoped the resolution of the gentleman from Louisiana would prevail, and contemned the allegation that members of that body—men who are selected by their constituents for their moral worth and stamina—would be capable of cherishing an ambition so petty, as to crave distinction by having their names appear on the journal, and make propositions for no other purpose.

Mr. D.'s motion prevailed after warm debate, and a contested vote.

The Convention was fully alive to California. Dr. Potter brought forward a resolution, which he prefaced by enlarging upon its great importance, and urging it on the earnest consideration of the Convention. "Resolved, unanimously"—he said unanimously, because he hoped it would be so carried—"That this House make it their earnest request to the House of Bishops that they will be pleased to take into consideration, at the earliest moment, the importance of sending a Bishop and several inferior clergy to California; and in the event of their so doing, this House pledges itself to unite with them."

A great empire was about to escape out of their hands; and it was intimated the House of Bishops had made a faux pas in not taking this step three years ago.

Dr. Burroughs, of New Hampshire, wished to make one amendment to the resolution; he wished the words "inferior clergy" to be altered, as he did not consider any clergy "inferior." (A laugh.)

A rather informal delegation was present from California, asking its admission as a diocese. This many were inclined to grant—the informality to the contrary notwithstanding. But if it become a diocese, with its five or six preachers, it would have the power of electing its bishop! Not admitted, the Church could appoint a Missionary Bishop. So says the Register (from which we obtain most of our information) it was judged most expedient that "a Bishop to stamp the character of the future Church of the Pacific coast of the United States, should be chosen by the experienced wisdom of the House of Bishops, than a Convention of a few young clergymen and some laymen, inexperienced in Church matters, and not very conversant with the names and characters of the prominent members of the Presbyterate."

The Convention was of one mind, that California wanted a Bishop—indeed that was the want.

Dr. Meade next moved that the future sittings of the Convention should be from 9 o'clock until 4, each day, except Saturday, when the Convention should rise at 2 o'clock.

A Clerical Deputy suggested that they should rise at 2 o'clock every day, as that was the dinner hour in the house where he stopped. (Laughter.)

Notwithstanding the urgency of this reason, however, the motion was carried.

A serious difficulty arose in recognizing the Bishop elect of North Carolina, instead of Dr. Ives. This difficulty was referred to the Committee on Consecration.

Mr. Duncan, of Louisiana, read a minority report, disagreeing with the report of this Committee, on the ground that certain legal impediments existed against the election of Rev. Dr. Atkinson—that no vacancy had taken place, according to the Ecclesiastical rules of the Church.

Mr. Duncan also offered the following very comprehensive resolution: "Resolved, That no men can take upon himself the office of Bishop in these United States, except by the authority of the sovereign power vested in the Conventions, in accordance with the laws of the Protestant Episcopal Church."

And another, which smacks of post facto. "Resolved, That it is lawful for the legislative power of the Church to provide a canon law for the trial of a Bishop for any offence, and even if said canon be subsequent to the commission of said offence."

It seems our Episcopal brethren had provided for getting rid of demons and ordinary preshytors when they fell off, but the idea that a bishop should ever stand in need of a deposing service had not occurred. But a canon was made to suit the case, and on the 14th instant, Ex-Bishop Ives was duly and canonically disposed off. We hope they may not have occasion again to use that piece of ordnance.

Mr. T., of South Carolina, moved an amendment to the fifth section of the eighth canon of some date, enlarging the tabular view of the state of the Church in their Dioceses, hitherto prepared by the Bishops and Standing Committees of the Dioceses. Mr. Trapier, in proposing these resolutions contrasted somewhat unfavorably the statistical information of their church, as compared with that of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

Arranging Dioceses into Four Provinces.—Rev. Arthur C. Coxe offered the following resolution, in connection with a resolution on the Journal of 1850, on the expediency of arranging the dioceses:

"Resolved, That a committee be appointed to confer with the House of Bishops in reference to a resolution offered by the Bishop of Western New York, recorded on the 140th page of the Journal for 1850, with a view to the early introduction of the subject to the consideration of this Convention."

The reading of the resolution was called for. The Secretary read from the record of the House of Bishops as follows:

On motion of Bishop Delancey, seconded by Bishop Otey,

"Resolved, That the following resolution lie on the table for consideration at the next Triennial General Convention."

"Resolved, That the House of Clerical and Lay Deputies concurring, that a joint committee, to consist of five bishops, and of five clergymen and five laymen, be appointed to report at the next Triennial Convention, on the expediency of arranging the Dioceses according to geographical position, into four Provinces, to be designated the Eastern, Northern, Southern and Western Provinces, and to be united under a General Convention or Council of the Provinces, having exclusive control over the prayer-books, articles, offices and homilies of this Church, to be held once every twenty years."

The New Orleans Christian Advocate.

After reading the extract, Mr. Coxe conceded that the matter should be acted upon by the present Convention. Rev. Mr. Williams, of Va., thought it better to defer a consideration of this important subject until they had first heard from the House of Bishops. He moved to lay the subject on the table. Carried.

The Convention had before it a matter on which suitable legislation was asked by the diocese of NewYork. It seems that Diocese has been for several years trying to turn out a preacher charged with two of the gravest sins. He was presented in May, 1851, and not brought to trial till March, 1853, from which time it continued till 13th June. He was found guilty; but in the meantime he had taken injunctions of one sort and another, sued the presentors for libel, etc., etc., till the trial had cost the Convention over $4000—besides pains and scandal. To cap the climax—when the Bishop was about deposing the accused, he received an injunction from a judicial officer to hold, and so he was stayed. No "cause" was made, as far as we can see, fixing, as requested, "the proper adjustment of the rights of a citizen, and the right of the Church to enforce her discipline."

The Board of Missions held a meeting.

The Secretary reported the
Total receipts for the year ending June 16, 1853	$42,500
Expenditure for same year	47,237
Excess of Expenditure	$4,737
Receipts from June 16 to Oct. 1	$8,515
Expenditure do. do	11,700
Excess of expenditure	$3,185

The Convention adjourned on the 14th instant.

HYMENEAL:

MARRIED.—In Muscogee county, Georgia, October 18, by Rev. J. Blakely Smith, Mr. CHARLES A. GORSUCH, of New Orleans, to Miss PARTHANNA L. COOK, of Muscogee county.

In Jacksonville, October 6, by the Rev. W. M. Linfield, Mr. JAS. F. NUNNELLY, to Miss SARAH HAYNES.

October 13, by the same, Mr. THOMAS J. STILL, to Miss RACHEL E. TAYLOR, daughter of Rev. Harris Taylor, deceased.

October 13, by Rev. Joseph T. Roper, BENJAMIN F. LOFTIN and Miss A. REBECCA MIDDLETON, all of Montgomery county, Ala.

OBITUARY:

DIED.—October 11, ISAAC TOOMER, in the 83d year of his age. He was born in St. John's Island, South Carolina, served in the war of the revolution, and we presume there are few, if any, who fought for American Independence at that time, who survive the subject of this notice. After the close of the war he lived for a number of years in Charleston, subsequently moved to the northern part of the State, where he remained until the year 1825, when he emigrated to Mississippi, and settled near Columbus. He remained in this region of country until the year 1849, when he went to reside with his son John Toomer, who lives in Pearlington, Miss., where he died. His whole life was marked by the strictest integrity: in all his dealings with his fellow men none were more scrupulous in the observance of that golden rule of doing unto others as he would they should do unto him. For many years he filled the office of Elder in the Presbyterian Church, and for the last ten years of his life he was almost entirely blind. This severe affliction he bore with Christian patience and resignation.

He leaves seven children to mourn the loss of him who has so long been to them a kind father and faithful guide. May they imitate his virtues, practice his precepts, follow his example and meet him in Heaven. Truly a full and ripe sheaf has been gathered into the garner of the Lord. * *

When I wrote the brief obituary of the late Rev. JAS. O. WILLIAMS, which you published, I had not then received definite information about the state of his mind when he died, from home. Since then I have received the desired information, and I have been requested, even at this late day, to make known through your paper, to his numerous acquaintances, the manner in which he died. This I do with great pleasure, and therefore send you the following statement on that subject:

When it became apparent that his life was in danger, he manifested a good deal of solicitude about his children, who would be left without a parent to guide and protect them. But with reference to his spiritual state, he never evinced the slightest doubt. He spoke of his death with a firm and trusting faith in Jesus Christ. To a local minister who spent a night with him, and that the last he lived through, he said "there is not a single cloud between me and my heavenly home." Thus he died.

I will just add that one of the most intelligent laymen of the State wrote me when he heard of his death, "I have known him long and intimately, and he was in some respects superior in intellectual strength to any man I ever know, and although I have heard nothing about how he died, yet I know he died right." J. E. NEWMAN.

Livingston, Ala., Oct. 18, 1853.

THOMAS INGRAM, a native of Virginia, died in Coosa, Ala., 72 years old. Father Ingram had been a member of our church five years only.

In 1848 he professed to "be justified by faith," and all who knew him must concede that his change was a miracle of grace. He had spent nearly his allotment of time in the service of sin, and was as little piously disposed as any man. It is due to his memory, however, to say that he was a good neighbor, a clever man, but never religiously inclined.

His experience was that the struggle was hard—the leprosy deep, but the grace of God was sufficient. During the time of his membership in the church he showed himself a little vascillating, but in the main walked circumspectly. He closed his days peacefully on the 23d September. May his aged widow, together with their children, meet him in Heaven. R. R. DICKINSON.

On Friday morning, 21st instant, FRANCIS LARKEN HOPKINS, eldest son of J. W. and Elizabeth Ann Hopkins, aged 13 years, 5 months and 17 days.

An intimate acquaintance, for some years, with the family which now mourns this afflicting bereavement, has given the writer of this notice abundant opportunities of knowing the characteristics of the deceased. He was truly an interesting child, obedient to his parents, attentive to his duties, both in the public and the Sunday School, (as every child of American Christian parents should be) and was an orderly and attentive hearer of the gospel. Often and often hath the writer of this brief tribute employed a half hour of a Sabbath evening, in company with this child, questioning him concerning the sermon to which he had been listening; and it was not a little gratifying to witness his understanding and answers.

How especially gratifying to parents, when losing a child, to know that he loved the Sabbath day, and the holy employment of God's house! Many a child of faithful and believing parents is sanctified even from the birth. The Bible tells us of some. And faith beholds some in this generation. "In the morning sow thy seed." In the morning and through all the day of life pray this petition to the Father in Heaven: "Sanctify them through thy Truth. Thy word is Truth."

General Intelligence.

FEVER AT PENSACOLA.—We learn from the Pensacola Gazette, of the 22d inst., that the fever had again made its appearance in that place. Little hope was entertained for its disappearance until the coming of a frost.

THE FEVER AT CLINTON.—On Friday and Saturday last there was a deceptive lull in the progress of the sickness, which raised our hopes that its force was moderated. On Sunday evening, however, is broke out with renewed virulence, and since that period the number of cases is greater than in other periods since the epidemic visited our town. For the 24 hours ending this day at 12 o'clock, there are reported eight new cases. Deaths none. The disease, we are happy to state on the authority of the physicians, has assumed a milder character, and yields more readily to treatment. [Feliciana Whig, 20th.

YELLOW FEVER IN MONTGOMERY.—We regret to state that sickness has increased in our city within the last few days. The disease is a malignant fever—and if not yellow fever, only differs from it in being worse. Several new cases and some deaths have occurred within the last two days.

Though we still hope to escape anything like a severe epidemic, we think our citizens who are absent had better for the present remain away. [Montgomery Advertiser, 20th.

FEVER AT JACKSON, MISS.—We received a private letter yesterday from Jackson, dated Oct. 15, which says: "the yellow fever is on the increase, and many are stricken with sorrow at the desolation around. The Penitentiary has heretofore escaped, but within the last few days the scourge has appeared within its walls. Five convicts are reported to lie down. Upwards of one hundred cases are under treatment at this time. Business has been entirely suspended for four weeks." [Mobile Tribune.

It is stated by the New York Tribune in a recent paragraph, that the estimated annual expenditure of the business men of that city, in advertising alone, is more than two millions of dollars, of which three-fourths were spent upon their own journals. No business community in the United States seems to be so fully aware of the importance of the newspaper press, as a channel for gaining a wide and advantageous notoriety, as that of New York; and it has been used by them with the same liberality with which they avail themselves of every other means of aggrandizement, and they are now reaping the bountiful benefit of their economy in this particular.

CALIFORNIA NOMENCLATURE.—Some of our people in the interior have a most extraordinary taste in nomenclature. The recent election has brought to light such delectable localities as Whisky Creek, Jackass Gulch, Humbug City, One-Horse Town, One-Mule Town, Drunkards' Bar, Murderer's Bar, Shirt-Tail Canon, Lower Humbug, Negro Hill, Fiddletown, Coon Hollow, Jay Hawk, Condemned Bar, Grizzly Flat, Musquito Canon, Poverty Bar, Mule Canon, Greenhorn, Mugginsville, Mad Muletown, Sucker Flat, Rattlesnake Bar, Yankee Jim's, Peppermint Bar, Mad Canon, Humbug Canon, Rough and Ready, French Corral, etc. [San Francisco Herald.

HARVARD UNIVERSITY.—The number of Students connected with this University is 700, a greater number, probably, than has ever before belonged at one time to any Literary Institution in America. They are from 28 of the States and Territories of the Union, from the District of Columbia, and from Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Canada, Yucatan, British Guiana, Brazil, the Sandwich Islands and Ireland. Law students, 142, scientific students 63, divinity students 26, medical students, 119, resident graduates 15. There are 329 under-graduates. The senior class contains 88, junior 78, sophomore 93, and the freshman 70. One hundred and five undergraduates have been admitted this term. The examinations have been critical, and the faculty seem determined to maintain as high a literary and moral standard as is practicable. [Cambridge Chronicle.

LUMBER.—There are now between 60 and 70,000 logs valued at rising a million of dollers, lying on the west branch of the Penobscot, between Milrocket river and the Five Islands on the Penobscot, and for want of water cannot be got down. Rain for this purpose is very much needed. There are also about 150 rafts, making 20 cargoes, from five to ten miles above the city of Bangor, waiting for a freshet sufficient to bring them down. The demand for lumber is great and cannot be supplied. The consequence is, that what there is in the market commands a good price. The export of long lumber from Bangor, for the year, is estimated at 2,000,000 feet; of short lumber 150,000,000 feet.

Abbot Lawrence has announced his intention of bestowing $50,000 on the Lawrence Scientific School at Cambridge, in addition to the same amount given by him to that institution some eight years ago.

Dean Swift proposed to tax female beauty, and leave every lady to state her own charms. He said the tax would be cheerfully paid and very productive.

Arago.

The death of Arago, who has so long occupied the position of the first of the philosophers of France, is perhaps the most memorable item of the recent European news. He has been for a long series of years alike celebrated as a savant, philosopher, astronomer and statesman. He was the eldest brother of a numerous family, all of whom have won respectable positions, and was born at Estogel, near the borders of Spain, in 1786. He was early sent to the Polytechnic school at Paris, where he made rapid progress, and gave early token of his independence of character by refusing to subscribe his adhesion to the articles of the Empire. He became an instructor in that institution in his eighteenth year, and a year later was appointed Secretary to the Bureau des Longitudes. A short time afterwards he was selected to accompany the astronomer Biot who was to complete the admeasurement of an arc of the meridian in Spain. While in Spain, war broke out between that country and France, and M. Arago was arrested, and after several months of imprisonment, succeeded in getting back to Paris. The discoveries are endless with which he has enriched science since that time. Of these, the most important, perhaps, are his determination of the diameter of planets, afterwards adopted by La Place; the discovery of colored polarization, and that of magnetism by relation. He was a member of every great scientific society of Europe.

In the revolution of July, he espoused the democratic cause and went to Murmont, his friend, to persuade him not to attack the citizens. He afterward sat in the chamber of deputies for the department of the Pyrenees Orientales, and voted with the extreme left.

For many years he was at the head of the Paris Observatory and has superintended all the operations which have given that institution such a distinction. Arago was perhaps as distinguished as a litterateur and orator as in any other capacity. He was in politics a warm republican, and was a member of the Provisional Government of 1848. Since the elevation of Louis Napoleon to the dictatorship of the Empire he has lived in retirement. At the time of his death he was in his sixty-eighth year.

Interesting to Merchants.

CONSULATE OF THE UNITED STATES,
Rio de Janeiro, August 27.

Merchants and owners of ships trading with Brazil are earnestly requested to be very cautious in having every article shipped to any of the ports in the Brazilian empire inserted in the ship's manifest; for, however the bills of lading may accurately show every thing imported, yet if any goods be omitted from the manifest, the omitted article is forfeited, and the vessel in which it was imported is liable to a fine to the Government equal to one-half of the value of the confiscated goods. The forfeiture of the omitted article is most rigidly enforced, although it may most manifestly appear the omission has arisen from no design to do wrong. Two cases of a very striking character have recently occurred here, in which the forfeitures have been stringently enforced, and in one, I fear not only the loss of the goods, but that the fines may amount to the whole value of the vessel. [Washington Union. ROBT. G. SCOTT.

FROM BUENOS AYRES.—The N. Y. Journal of Commerce has received files of the British Packet with dates to the 13th of August:

As a consequence of the wanton devastation of cattle by the "late" rebellion, the Packet says, thousands of families will be obliged to abandon their erratic life of herdsmen, and adopt the pacific life of the husbandman. A great social change, the editor adds, "forced upon us by a crude and unsavory means."

Free and unrestricted commerce in corn is one of the terms which the Packet says the Government is ready to grant to those unfortunate families.

The new Legislature would be installed on the 11th September.

In reference to the condition of things in the Interior Provinces, the Packet says, the system of isolation continues as rigorously as during the recent siege. Rumors were current of a change of Government in Cordoba, but nothing definite on the subject was known.

The Constitution promulgated by the Congress of Santa Fé had been very generally accepted, and sworn to in the interior.

Drs. Alsina, Gamboa and Sarsfield had declined their appointments of President and Members of the Supreme Court of Justice.

The Minister of Finance had presented the account of expenses of the late rebellion, amounting to $254,921 4 metallic, and $74,620,680 3½ rials currency.

LATER FROM NEW MEXICO.—The St. Louis Republican of the 18th instant has the following late intelligence from New Mexico:

Independence, Oct. 17.—We have just received letters from Santa Fe. F. X. Aubrey, the celebrated skimmer of the prairies, arrived there on the 14th ult., from California. He writes us, that he crossed the Sierra Nevada at the Tejon Pass on the 12th July, and struck the Rio del Norte at Peralta on the 10th of September. The route has no obstructions whatever for either a railroad or wagon road. Full details will be sent to you by the earliest opportunity.

Mr. Aubrey found gold at the crossing of the Colorado and other places, and silver and copper ores in great quantities.

The Indians were very hostile and very numerous. They fought them for thirty days. Almost all of his party were wounded, and he himself received eight wounds, at different times. The fighting was chiefly with the Gerreteros. Mr. Aubrey's party subsisted more than a month on moth meat. [So the dispatch has it.]

They met a tribe of Indians two hundred miles west of Zuni, who used gold bullets for their guns.

Mr. Dyer is just in from Fort Atkinson. He reports that post entirely abandoned, every thing having been removed to Fort Riley.

The road from Council Grove to Fort Union is entirely unprotected by garrisons between them, and you may look out for Indian depredations from this time onward.

TELEGRAPHIC ITEMS.

Mobile, October 26.—The intermenis in this city yesterday were four, including deaths from yellow fever, three.

The Eastern maill has arrived bringing dates from New York of the 19th and 20th inst., with the foreign letters brought by the steamer Asia. [Eve. papers.

Washington, Oct. 18.—The National Intelligencer of this morning says that the treaties with the Argentine States have been received at Washington.

Philadelphia, Oct. 18.—Governor Bigler has issued a proclamation, naming the fourth Thursday of November, the 24th, as a day of Thanksgiving and Praise for Pennsylvania.

New York, Oct. 17.—The following is the weekly statement of the New York Banks: Capital, $48,450,000; loans $88,000,000; specie $11,330,000; circulation $9,464,000; deposits $59,000.

ENGLISH TREATIES WITH SPAIN.—It is said that Lord Howden, British Minister to Madrid, in June last, made a treaty with Spain, by which English cruisers are permitted to land men to search the plantations of Cuba, on which slaves are suspected to have been carried from slavers. Lord Howden, it is said, is now urging upon the Spanish Government, with a prospect of success, a treaty by which the English Government offers to withdraw her cruisers from the coast of Cuba, and permit any number of slaves to be landed provided they shall be made Emancipados for ten years, and that slavery shall be abolished in the island at the expiration of fifty years. The New York Times says that the above is confirmed by letters just received from Havana, dated October 1, which state that Mr. Crawford, the English Consul there, was procuring letters from prominent persons urging this plan, in order to send to England to fortify her demands on Spain. No British cruiser had been on the coast for a month, and slaves were landing in crowds.

The News by the Atlantic.

Our New York exchanges of the 17th instant contain at great length the details of the news by the Atlantic. The opinion that war had been declared appeared to be very generally adopted. The following highly important dispatch was received at Liverpool on the 4th inst. by submarine telegraph, and is the latest information upon the subject:

VIENNA, Monday Evening, Oct. 3.

The Divan, at the Grand Council held this day, resolved upon a declaration of war against Russia.

Against the advice of the Four Powers, the Sultan has signed the declaration of war.

Report says that hostilities have already begun.

The above dispatch was in part corroborated by dispatches received by the London press. The London Globe has received intelligence, which is well authenticated, that the Sultan had, on the 27th ult., convoked a grand council consisting of one hundred and twenty of the principal ministers, counsellors, pachas and others; that the question of peace or war was submitted to them by him, and that they had decided in favor of the latter alternative, which goes to show that the main feature of the Vienna dispatch may be correct.

It is said that Prince Gortschakoff was moving troops towards the Danube, and he intended to cross it for the purpose of attacking the Turkish position at Roustchank.

The conference between the Emperors of Russia and Austria at Olmutz had ended, and the Czar has returned to Warsaw, whither the King of Prussia has gone to meet him, and the Emperor of Austria was to follow. New propositions were concerted at the Olmutz meeting, and particulars were sent to the English Government direct from thence. Stronger hopes of a pacific solution were therefore entertained in diplomatic circles.

A letter from London, (October 4, evening,) written after the news that the Sultan had declared war against Russia, says:

"A cabinet council is to sit to-day—or, if not, when all the ministers have reached London to-morrow, and the question of active interference will be discussed. The resignation of Lord Aberdeen is by no means improbable."

The French Government, notwithstanding the large advance in breadstuffs in other European markets, insists on keeping the price of bread down to 40 cents per kilogramme.

The Monitor publishes a convention between France and Mexico for the payment of all moneys due French subjects.

A Brest paper mentions that under the recent decree lowering the import duty on salted provisions, large orders had been sent to Central America.

M. Francis Arago, the celebrated French astronomer and politician, is dead.

A royal decree extends the permission to import all sorts of grain into the Two Sicilies duty-free, up to the end of May, 1851.

Later from Texas.

By the arrival yesterday of the steamship Louisiana, from Galveston and Indianola, we have dates to the 21st inst. from Galveston and full files from the interior. The Louisiana brought the following passengers:

Mrs Darcy, Misses Lane, Mrs Anderson, Mr Rosenfield and lady, H Easton and lady, Messrs H W Stevens, A P Allen, Capt J Smith, Jr. E A Kink, Clemstide M Fisher C Keefe, C Hughes, and 22 on deck.

The yellow fever had not abated at Houston. From the Galveston News of the 18th we copy the following:

SICKNESS IN HOUSTON.—We regret to learn by the officers of the boats that the sickness in Houston appears to be getting worse. We learn that the number of deaths on the 13th, 14th and 15th, was from seven to nine per day.

Report of Interments from the 6th to the 12th inst

Oct 6 Col Henry Wright, Am; E Eggleson, Eng; Mrs Wright, Am; T D Daugherty, Am; Gloria Higginbotham, Ger, Grimsaulty; Henry Picture, boy, Eng

7 Negro man of James Cox; Mrs Colbert, Am; Augustine, French.

8 Negro boy of Hogans; Mrs Stowe, Ger; Germanlady, James Terry, Am; Charles Borger Am; Mr Yarmouth, Ger.

9 Negro man of Mrs Mosleys; Mr Norman, Ger; Mr Walter Gibs Am.

10 Negro man of J Cruger; Conrad Bowman, Ger; negro man of Col Wright; S W Cook, Am; negro man of Mr Clink.

11 Mr Flick, Ger; Mrs Wolfe, Ger; Mr T Kolmesz, Ger; Mr J P Bailey, Am.

12 Robert Cobbman, Am; Wenzel Kwesson died on the steamboat; W J Y Lidstone, Eng; infant son of Mr Jordan Total, 32

At Galveston the epidemic appears not to be abating. The interments for the seven days ending October 20th had been 28, of which a great proportion were from yellow fever.

The News of the 21st says:

Still the sickness continues in our city with scarcely any perceptible abatement for the last three weeks. It will be seen by the Sexton's report that the interments will average four per day, notwithstanding the greatly diminished number of those supposed to be liable to take the disease. This is strong evidence that the infection exists in this city with little or no mitigation of its virulence. Our hope for relief depends on a change of weather, which still continues warm.

At Lavaca, from the 9th to the 17th, the following persons died from the yellow fever:

Dr. Hamilton, of Louisiana; Mrs. Dr. McKinney; Mr. J. James; Mr. J. S. Williamson; Mr. Richard Parker, nephew and partner of R. M. Forbes, Esq.; Mr. James Smith; Mrs. Kent, wife of Captain Kent, schooner W. A. Spafford.

In Indianola the following deaths had occurred from the epidemic:

An old German lady, extreme age; Mr. Fleming and child, German shoemaker; Franklin ——, orphan boy at Mr. Howerton's; Mr. Reid, stranger, at Mr. Shannon's; Mr. Hersfeldt, a German; two charity patients in hospital; Captain Roseau, French, schooner from Mobile; L. Rehner, German; son of Mr. Wagener, German; F. Vonder Ruhr, German. Total 12.

The above deaths are confined mainly to strangers and late emigrants.

The Indianola Bulletin says:

Mr. James M. Foster, of Indianola, is now shipping large numbers of beeves to New Orleans. Each steamer takes over about one hundred head.

One of the lumber houses, Huck & Ogsbury, in addition to corn, are arranging to ship cotton and mules to Pensacola. They will shortly have vessels enough in the trade to afford a good market for these articles.

THE CROPS.—Allowing for the very limited effects of the cotton worm in some neighborhoods, the crops of Western Texas this year will surpass the yield of any previous season—hence, on the restoration of health here and in Port Lavaca, we may anticipate a fine business.

The Galveston News says:

By a gentleman from Gonzales, we learn that cotton-picking is progressing in the upper counties—the yield is large and the staple good. Considerable amounts are now coming into this city for shipment.

The 8th Regiment Infantry left the vicinity of San Antonio on the 3d inst. The 5th was preparing to remove, and is now doubtless on its way to the frontier. No more troops will concentrate at that city.

The Austin Gazette of the 8th says the removal of the troops from the posts on the Northwestern frontier, has again turned the Indians loose on the settlements. The Camanches came down below Fort Graham, and succeeded in driving off twenty-five head of horses. Fears are entertained that their success in this instance will lead to further depredations.

The San Antonio Ledger of the 13th has received dates from El Paso to the 27th ult., and from Santa Fé to the 10th ult. Loud complaints were made at El Paso of Indian depredations.

The election had taken place but the Santa Fé Gazette of the 10th could give nothing official. It was rumored that the counties of Taos, Santa Anna, Bernabillo, Valencia, Socorro and Dona Anna have gone for Governor Lane, some of them by considerable majorities. The counties of Santa Fé, Rio Arriba and San Miguel have gone for Gallegos.

The University of Virginia has commenced its present session under the most flattering auspices. The number of matriculates is much larger than that of any other season, so it will not fall short of 500, which is an increase of 75 over the last session.

Latter from California.

SOUTHWEST PASS, Oct 25, 4 P M.

The steamship Texas arrived at the Bar this morning at 10 o'clock from Vera Cruz, with dates from San Francisco to the 30th September. She reports that the steamship Pacific left San Francisco on the 1st instant for San Juan del Sud, and the steamship Panama for Aspinwall, at the same time. The Pacific had on board 450 passengers, and one million five hundred thousand dollars worth of gold. The Panama had one million one hundred thousand dollars in gold.

In addition to the above, we have been furnished with the following California news, by express from Acapulco to Vera Cruz.

THE NEW ORLEANS RELIEF FUND.

At a meeting of the Committee held yesterday, at 12 o'clock, a report from the Treasurer, C. J. Brenham, was read, showing the following amounts handed over to him up to that time:

Later from California and the Sandwich Islands.

By the arrival of the Texas we have received dates from San Francisco to the 1st of October. The news is of little importance. We gather from the San Francisco Commercial Advertiser the following items of intelligence:

The news by the last steamer from Europe has had the effect of imparting confidence to our merchants, and a more favorable state of the markets is anticipated.

Joaquin has turned up again in several places, but principally on the Monterey road, between San Juan and Los Angeles.

We have intelligence from the lower country (San Diego and Los Angeles) to the 23d of September. Everything is quiet there, and the quality of grapes, pears, melons and other fruits, coming thence every week, attest to the flourishing condition of the vineyards and ranches.

The American whaling bark Harriet Thompson had arrived at San Francisco with intelligence from the whaling fleet. Two American ships, the Susan and the Liverpool, had been lost, but the crews were all saved. Captain Fordham thought that all further search for Sir John Franklin was useless. On the 15th of August, he saw one of the ships of the exploring expedition, supposed to be the Plover. She was in the Arctic sea, heading north.

The brig Arrow was seized in the harbor of San Francisco on the 30th, and placed in the custody of the U. S. Marshal. She is supposed to have been engaged in a contemplated expedition to Sonora, and a large number of individuals are connected with the affair.

There had been more Indian troubles in Siskiyou county, at the extreme northern portion of California. Several hard fights had taken place, in which the whites got the best of it.

SANDWICH ISLANDS.

The news from the Sandwich Islands is to the 30th of August. It possesses more than usual importance. The Commercial advertiser has the following significant piece of intelligence:

We learn from private advices received in the city that a vast emigration of Russians, said to be 12,000 in number, is in preparation for the Sandwich Islands, under the immediate auspices of the Emperor. If our information is correct and we have no reason to doubt its truth, it will be necessary for the Government of the United States to take immediate possession of the Islands or they will fall into the hands of some one of the European powers. It is not probable that the jealousy of France or England would permit a Russian invasion of the Sandwich Islands under pretence of colonization. They will consequently anticipate this movement, and in doing so, anticipate ourselves.

Benjamin F. Angell was officially received on the 23d as Consul of the United States.

The King has refused to dismiss his ministers, Judd and Armstrong, although a petition asking it had been signed by 250 Americans and 11,500 natives. The refusal of His Majesty to comply with this petition has caused much excitement and ill-feeling.

JENNY LIND AND HER HUSBAND.—Dr. Cox, of Brooklyn, has published a card in which he states, on the authority of letters received from Jenny Lind Goldschmidt, that the stories some time since put in circulation, that she and her husband did not live happily together, are totally unfounded. The very reverse of the rumors, he says, is true to the letter.

The Wetumpka (Ala.) State Guard states that there are now 160 convicts in the Penitentiary in that place. That, up to September 26, 92 new ones had been received, and 32 had been discharged, 24 pardoned out, 5 escaped, 5 died; and one taken out by mandamus.

Should the population of the United States progress for a century more as it has done for the past sixty years, and the Union continue, the number of its inhabitants would exceed 300,000,000.

THE TIMES' CORRESPONDENT.—The Paris correspondent of the New York Times gives the following description of the comfort and dignity attached to the position of correspondent to the London Times:

Next to the berth of British Embassador at Paris, I suppose that the post of correspondent to the London Times is most to be desired. Let me rehearse a few of the immunities and privileges of that individual. His salary is $5,000 a year. He has a handsome suite of rooms, furnished and paid for by the paper. He has two clerks constantly in his employ, who read the French journals, translate, collate, cut out items from Galignani, and add their eyes, invention, experience and observation to his. These gentlemen are paid by the Times, of course. The correspondent buys and charges to the paper any books of which he may stand in need—and the library is a very choice and complete collection of standard authors, cyclopedias, dictionaries and other books of reference. He is empowered to pay for any important intelligence, just what it may cost.

When the post-office closes early, to the infinite annoyance of all its correspondents of low degree, he writes on merrily till sunset, and then hires a man to jump in the seven o'clock train and take his letter to London! The Times pays the bill. Besides all this, his position is such that a great many things come to him, without his giving himself the trouble to go to them. Thus, a proclamation of Henry V. desires to see the light, M. Berryer sends it to the correspondent of the London Times, who gives it to one of his clerks to translate. All the other correspondents, when they see it in print, throw up their hands, and wonder how the man knew there was such a proclamation in existence, and where he went to get it. In short, it is a great thing to represent the London Times in Paris. To be able to say you are the Russian Embassador, is one thing; to be forced to confess you are the Envoy from Venezuela, is another. To stand up and say you are the correspondent of the Times, is to locate yourself between the two, and rather nearer the top than the foot of the column.

DEATH OF TRISTRAM BURGES.—Our Northern exchanges contain lengthy notices of the death of Hon. Tristram Burges, who died at Providence, R. I., a few days since. It has been some eighteen years since his retirement from public life, in which as a member of the House of Representatives of the United States, he acted quite a conspicuous part. Mr. Burges was, says the Providence Journal, born on the 26th of February, 1770. In 1790 he graduated at Brown University with the first honors of the class. He studied law with Judge Barnes, and was admitted to the bar in 1793. In 1801 he married the daughter of Welcome Arnold, then one of the most distinguished merchants of Providence. They had seven children, of whom only one now survives. In 1811 he was elected a member of the General Assembly from the town of Providence; in 1812 he was chosen Chief Justice of the Supreme Court, which station, however, he retained but a year. Soon after he was appointed Professor of Oretery and Belles-Lettres in Brown University. In 1825 he became a member of the House of Representatives of the United States, where his first speech established his reputation as an orator and statesman, and placed him in the foremost rank of the public men of the day.

No man, adds the Journal, ever represented New England with more fidelity than Mr. Burges. Although he always adhered to the principles which unite the North and the South under the constitution, he never permitted his own consistency to be alluded to with disrespect without a merited rebuke. No person familiar with the history of his life can fail to recollect his eloquent and successful appeal in favor of the survivors of the revolution, and at all times and on all occasions he was ready to defend the interests of his constituents.

As an orator, Mr. Burges was one of the greatest our country has produced. His mind was early familiarized with the best models, and he thoroughly trained himself to the art which made him most known by the people. At the bar he was an able and effective advocate, and his sallies of wit and sarcasm, as well as his eloquent and pointed sentences, are daily repeated by his professional brethren who survive him.

Mr. Burges was a firm believer in the truths of Christianity, a constant and life-long student of the Bible, and learned in all theological controversy, in which he especially delighted.

FROST AND THE TOBACCO CROP IN VIRGINIA.—A letter in the Lynchburg Virginian from a gentleman in Nelson county, Va., dated the 11th inst., says:

The frost last night, to my great surprise, made a clear sweep of all the outstanding tobacco in this region. I am now convinced that the frost and knife together have shortened the crop about one-half. All of the tobacco standing on James River, where it was thought that the fogs would protect it from the frost, is bitten black; no mistake about it, as I have seen it with my own eyes.

On the 8th inst. there were but 1200 hogsheads in the warehouses at Lynchburg, and the Virginian estimates that the sixty manufacturing establishments in that town will require from 60 to 90 hhds. a day. The high prices at which tobacco has ranged through the season, it says, must have drawn in nearly the entire stock from the country. The result is obvious. The supply will fall far short of the demand in Lynchburg, and the factories will be compelled to suspend, or greatly diminish their operations. From Richmond and Petersburg there are no counts of a like scarcity of stock on hand.

The Richmond Enquirer also states that many planters, not only in Nelson county, but in Amherst, Buckingham, Prince Edward, Appomattox, Rockbridge, Campbell, Bedford, Botetourt, Rounoke and Franklin counties, as well as counties lower down on the Roanoke River, suffered severely by the frost catching much unripe tobacco in the fields.

FROST AT CHARLESTON.—The parishes above us had a considerable touch of frost last Sunday morning. It extended pretty low down towards the city, being probably within six or eight miles of us. It seems to have put a stop to the fever, which has prevailed to some extent among the negroes in St. James', Goose Creek. Strange as it may seem, the usual order has been reversed there this summer, the negroes have been sick, whilst the white persons have enjoyed unusual health. [Charleston Standard, 19th inst.

The Quebec Morning Chronicle says:

The Americans want Cuba, and the same writer has frequently told us they wanted Canada. Canada is fast going to them. Our lumber goes to New York, our flour to Boston or Portland; our very steamships go to Portland in the winter; and it must be borne in mind that a commercial is the most solid of all political annexations. Canada is already part and parcel of the United States, and we are sorry at it. Nothing but a rush of immigration can

THE FIRST MARRIAGE.

It is not good, Jehovah said,
That man should be alone;
We'll make for him a help-mate chaste,
Bone of his very bone—
To be the sharer of his joy,
The solace of his life,
The wingless angel then was sent,
Intended for his wife.

Who gives this woman to this man?
The Mighty Father cried;
Unto the precious bean confer,
The son of God replied.
Then to the man, by Heaven was linked,
The sweet angelic fair;
When next, the deity thrust came down,
And blest the happy pair.

For bride and groom in Eden's bowers,
A banquet rare was spread—
The Muses came from Paradise,
And deck'd the bridal bed;
The spotless guests that hid them joy,
Were angels from above.
God made, and watched, and tied their hearts,
With silken cords of love.

THUGS AND PINDARIES OF INDIA.

BY AN "OLD INDIAN."

The following short narrative may perchance prove of interest to the fireside reader by affording some insight into the character and proceedings of the "Thugs," a notorious race which long infested not only the native states, but even some of the British possessions in the East.

While traveling in the Deccan, during the cold season of 183–, I had occasion to halt at Gundee, a small hamlet about thirty miles North of Hyderabad, the capital of Nizam's Dominions. A hard day's shooting and stalking antelopes, with which the neighborhood abounds, had sent me to court "nature's soft nurse," the sweet restorer, rather earlier than was my wont, and I was falling into a state of dreamy unconsciousness, when a sharp challenge from my sentry in front of the tent arrested my attention; and from a brief conversation that ensued, I gathered that some gentleman had arrived and that I was the object of his inquiries.

In a few minutes, Captain ——, with whom I had some previous acquaintance, was ushered in. After making him welcome, and providing such comfort for his inner man as the absence of my cook would admit of, we settled down to a quiet chit-chat, in which he informed me that he was then in pursuit of that extraordinary class of murderers known as "Thugs," he being one of the officers employed by Government for their suppression in the territories of Hyderabad.

The companion who had thus so unexpectedly favored me with his company, was on his return from a successful expedition, in which he had succeeded in surprising and capturing a band of notorious Thugs, who had hitherto baffled his previous endeavors, having been concealed in the stronghold of an influential and powerful native zemindar, or landholder, who was supposed (with good reason) to connive at their plundering and murderous career while sharing largely in their nefarious gains.

My friend gave me much interesting information concerning these men, and others of the fraternity that had come under his notice whilst in the execution of his duties. He had several in his custody at the time, and amongst them a very intelligent young man who had been allowed to turn approver, and who, like all the tribes, appeared to take a peculiar pride and pleasure in recounting the many atrocities in which he had borne a part, and in hunting down his quondam associates. Far from feeling any remorse for the numerous, cruel, and cold-blooded murders in which he had participated, he seemed to consider them as so many meritorious acts, highly acceptable to Bowhunneo or Kales, the fell Goddess of Destruction, whom every Thug, Mahommedan or Hindoo, regards as his protecting deity.

On Capt. —— once asking him how many murders he had been engaged in, he said they were so numerous he really could not tell; or even remember when he first took the part of "Bhuttote," or "Sangler, in the scenes with which he had been familiar from his earliest youth.

On the Captain remarking that it was a singular fact that Thugs had never been known to murder one of their own people—

"Have they not?" replied the Thug. "Go to Panpiah Byragee, who lives in the village of Undoor, near Masulipatnm, and ask him where sleeps the Thug Lall Khan? He will show you the spot, and tell you that he was strangled by my uncle and myself. His death occurred under the following circumstances: In 1835 I was out in the Masulipatan district with three other Thugs. We had amassed about three thousand rupees by the murder and plunder of several travelers whom we had fallen in with in those parts. Lall Khan was practising Thuggee on the same road, with a stronger party than our own, but had met with very indifferent success. One day a man of his band, who was friendly to us, came and told us that Lall Khan had determined to murder all our people that very evening, and thus secure our rightful gains to himself. We were, therefore, strongly advised by our informer to get out of the way. This we lost no time in doing, and returned at once to our respective homes. We afterwards learned that Lall Khan had guessed the cause of our sudden departure, and being suspicious of his followers had broke up the party and returned to his own country.

"In the following year my uncle and myself again went on a Thugging expedition to the same part of the country. One day we ingratiated ourselves into the confidence of two travelers for the purpose of getting an opportunity of throwing over them the 'roumal,' (the 'roumal,' or handkerchief, is the instrument with which the Thug strangles his unsuspecting victim,) and we were all sitting under the hund of a tank, drinking toddy, and smoking our calcoons, when who should pass but the identical Lall Khan, alone, and closely muffled up. He evidently wished to conceal himself from our observation, but we knew him, and my uncle sent me to call him towards us. He was at first greatly alarmed, but we took him aside, and pointing to the two travelers, persuaded him in joining us in murdering them, promising him their horses as his share of the booty, should he accede to our request. Lall Khan's avarice overcame his fears. We murdered the travelers, and while he was sitting with us, talking the matter over, we suddenly turned upon him, strangled and buried him on the very spot where he sat.

"On another occasion, we fell in with two Thugs at Lingumpilly (who told us they had got three hundred rupees.) We determined to murder them, in order to appropriate their spoils. To effect this object we agreed to start with them at midnight in quest of some travelers who were expected on that road. At the appointed hour they awoke us, but we were very sleepy, and disinclined to move. However, Bowhanee had determined to deliver them into our hands, and they persisted in urging us to start. At last we did so, and before we had proceeded many hundred yards from the village, we threw the fatal noose around their necks, strangled, and buried them forthwith. We then spread our mats upon the spot, slept there till daylight, when we quietly smoked our hookahs, and left the place with their booty, consisting of three hundred rupees, the object of our cupidity."

The native bankers in many parts of India are in the habit of sending their remittances by a particular caste, who, though very poor, are wonderfully faithful and trustworthy. They travel in small bodies, with the money artfully concealed in quilted cotton jackets; and though entrusted with some that would make their fortunes for life, scarcely a single instance of dishonesty has been known among them. But these poor fellows are the favorite victims of the Thugs, who, in different disguises, and under various pretences, join them on the road, and keep company with them until they have completely lulled all suspicion on their part. When a favorable opportunity presents itself, the leader of the Thugs gives the accustomed signal, whilst his accomplices, having previously stationed themselves each beside his intended prey, the whole party are instantaneously strangled; and they pride themselves upon performing this horrid act so adroitly that not a shriek or groan is heard. The eyes of their miserable victims start from their sockets, and gasping fruitlessly for breath they fall lifeless to the ground.

On one occasion, while Captain —— was talking to the young Thug above mentioned, one of these money-carriers, who had been summoned as an evidence, happened to be standing at the tent door. The Captain purposely asked the Thug how they were able to distinguish the money-carriers.

Thug: "Oh, in a hundred ways. In the first place, they walk in a peculiar manner, from the weight they have about them; for the same reason, when they sit down they cannot easily rise again without the assistance of a stout stick, which they always carry with them; and, besides, they invariably wear a jacket like that," pointing at the same time to the money-carrier, who was listening to what was said.

The poor fellow had been all attention, but at this last remark he started as if bitten by a snake, and, no doubt, took an opportunity to divest himself of so marked and dangerous a costume.

Captain —— asked the Thug how long it usually was before life was extinct in their victims?

Thug: "About as long as it would take you to walk six paces."

Captain: "Does it occupy as much time as when a person is hanged?"

Thug: "I never saw a person hanged, and God forbid that ever I should (he here seemed to shudder at the idea). I saw some poor wretches in a cart, on their way to be hanged at Juthilpore, but I could not bear to witness the execution."

Captain —— told me that he had caused than a hundred bodies of murdered persons to be disinterred within the past few months in the neighborhood of Hyderabad, and that they were discovering others daily at a place called Lajoora, which has been for many years a grand rendezvous of the Thugs. The misfortune is that these miscreants purchase the connivance of many of the heads of villages and other natives in authority in the Hyderabad country, and until a severe example is made of some of these abettors, there is little hope of the evil being eradicated. However, Captain —— had two or three of these persons then in custody, who were no doubt made to pay the penalty of their villainy.

I observed to the Captain that I had seen a whole family of Thugs in the jail at Salem, about twelve years before. They had been in jail about fifteen years, and I understood they were to remain there for life: but he informed me that they were released about three years after I had seen them, and again betaken themselves to their old trade, and, with the exception of one, then in his custody, had been again captured, tried and executed; the remaining one being also likely soon to get his deserts.

On my remarking that the party I saw were very respectable looking men, and particularly pleasing in their address, he assured me that this was generally the case, and that they made it their study to acquire a winning and conciliatory manner, in order that they might the more easily ingratiate themselves with travelers, and more readily accomplish their nefarious ends.

Captain —— happened to have with him at the time, a large dirk, of peculiar construction, which had formerly belonged to Dalla, a celebrated Pindarry chief, for whose apprehension Government had offered a reward of ten thousand rupees. He was then acting as an assistant to the political agent at Bhopaul, and was using every means for the capture of this Pindarry, but was beginning to despair of success, when a Seikh, of the name of Ram Sing, came to him, and said that he had formerly belonged to Dalla's band but had left him in consequence of some disagreement between them. He then went on to state that he would engage to produce Dalla, dead or alive, provided that, in addition to the promised reward, Captain —— would guarantee, on the part of the British Government, full pardon for former misdemeanors.

The Captain asked him what were the misdemeanors he alluded to? He replied they were mere trifles: that in once attempting to rob a party of travelers a skirmish had ensued between them and his band, in which some of the former had been killed. On hearing this, the Captain agreed to his terms, and the Seikh went off in quest of the Pindarry chieftain, with five followers of his own. In about a week he returned, bringing with him Dalla's head and the dirk aforesaid, for which he received the promised reward.

Of his proceedings on this occasion, the Seikh gave the following account: After quitting Captain ——, he made the best of his way to a wild and secluded tract of country on the banks of the Nerbudda, where he fell in with Dalla and some of his followers, and proposed to the old Pindarry that they should forget their former differences, and unite their fortunes once more. To this the Pindarry agreed.

"I then," said Ram Sing, "wished to ascertain if I were equal to the old man in personal struggle, as I wished, if possible, to take him alive. I accordingly took an opportunity one day to propose a wrestling match with him, by way of amusement, but I soon found I was a mere child in his powerful grasp. Therefore I resolved on using the knife. The same evening old Dalla was sitting in his hovel, quite alone. Having consulted with my followers, it was agreed that I should suddenly rush upon him and stab him, while my people attacked those of the chief. Everything succeeded as we wished; three of the Pindarry's people were killed on the spot, and the rest, seeing that I had killed their master, fled instantly for their lives."

The same Ram Sing died a year or two ago, and Captain —— has since ascertained that the villain was a Jamaudar, or chief of Thugs, and the numerous atrocious murders in which he had in that capacity been engaged were in fact the "trifling misdemeanors" for which he had bespoken pardon ere engaging himself to aid in the capture of Dalla, the Pindarry chieftain.

CUSTOMS OF THE FEJEE ISLANDS.

A work recently published in London, entitled, "Cruise among the Islands of the Northern Pacific," by Captain Erskine, contains some spirited descriptions of the manners and customs of the natives of that region. The Captain visited the Samoan Islands, where he found the inhabitants very peceable, and so little disposed to war that, were they attacked, they would probably practice the injunctions of the Peace Society. Very different from these inoffensive folk, and affording a striking contrast to them, are the inhabitants of the Fejee Islands, among whom cannibalism prevailed until quite recently, and is still far from unknown. Lying off the shore at night, you will hear a drum beating tap-a-tap, tap-a-tap, tap-a-tap—it is the death-drum of a cannibal feast. Not only do the Fejeeans eat their prisoners taken in war, but the same horrible doom awaits the wretched victims of shipwreck. Vainly may the stranded mariner present himself as a consunt traveler, requiring hospitality—the hungry villagers detect what they term "salt water in his eyes," and spring like tigers on their prey. So habitual indeed has been the practice, that the missionaries say the Fejeeun language contains no word for a simple corpse, but the term used implies the idea of food, just as we might have no other word than mutton to describe our sheep. It is even asserted that at periods of scarcity families will exchange children for this horrible purpose. But the ordinary mode of obtaining a supply in time of peace is by kidnapping, and as the flesh of women is preferred to that of men, these raids generally fall upon the softer sex. We shall quote one narrative from the many horrors related by Captain Erskine, because the noble conduct of the English women in some degree mitigates its revolting features. Thakombeau, the chief min of Bau, having to give a return banquet, has surprised and captured fifteen women, who came down to the beach to pick shell-fish for food.

"On Sunday, the 29th of July, 1849, the hollow sound of the awful 'lei,' or sacred drum, bore across the water to Viwa, the intelligence that a cargo of human victims had arrived in Bau, and a native Christian chief, (I believe Namesemalnu,) who had quitted the capital to bring the information to the missions, related to the shuddering ladies, whose husbands were absent at Bau, in Madalwood Bay, in Vanua Leny, on their usual annual meeting, the whole of the circumstances of the capture. In the course of the day, reports as to the intentions of the authorities were brought over, but in the evening came a definite one that all were to be slaughtered on the morrow.

"An then was enacted a scene which ought to be ever memorable in the history of this mission.

"On the Monday morning, Mrs. Lyth and Mrs. Calvert, accompanied by the Christian chief above mentioned, embarked in a canoe for Bau, to save the lives of the doomed victims. Each carried a whale's tooth decorated with ribbons, a necessary offering on preparing a petition to a chief; for even in the exciting moment, these admirable women did not neglect the ordinary means of succeeding in their benevolent object. As they landed at the wharf, not far from the house of old Tanoa, the father of Thakombau, and in this instance the person to whom they were to address themselves, the shrieks of two women then being slaughtered for the day's entertainment chilled their blood, but did not daunt their resolution. They were yet in time to save a remnant of the sacrifice. Ten had been killed and eaten; one had died of her wounds; the life of one girl had been begged by Thakombau's principal wife to whom she was delivered as a slave, and three only remained, regardless of the sanctity of the place, it being 'tabooed' to women, they forced themselves into Tanoa's chamber, who demanded with astonishment at their temerity, what these women did there?

"The Christian chief, who well maintained his lately adopted character, answered for them, that they came to solicit the lives of the surviving prisoners, at the same time presenting the two whale's teeth. Tanoa, apparently still full of wonder, took up one of these, and turning to a messenger desired him to carry it to Navindi, the executioner, and ask 'if it were good.' A few minutes were passed in anxious suspense. The messenger returned, and 'it is good,' was Navindi's answer. The women's cause was gained, and old Tanoa thus pronounced his judgment: 'Those who are dead, are dead; those who are alive, shall live.' With their three rescued fellow-creatures, these heroic women retired and already had the satisfaction of experienced that their daring efforts had produced a more than hoped for effect. A year or two ago, no voice but that of derision would have been raised against them, but now, on returning to their canoe, they were followed by numbers of their own sex blessing them for their exertions, and urging them to persevere."

Medals of humane societies and what not—how trumpery are such decorations compared with a memory like this!

But cannibalism is only one phase of the general blood-thirstiness of these savage Islanders. When the king builds a house, a man is buried alive at the foot of each post to insure the stability of the edifice. At the death of a chief, one or more of his wives are invariably strangled; and the chiefs themselves, when grown old or infirm, are buried alive; their wives in such cases being previously put to death and thrown into the grave, to make a bed for their doomed lord. The women, indeed, often make it a point of honor to die in this manner, and reject the efforts of the missionaries to save them. In order that canoes may be fortunate, they are frequently launched over the bodies of living slaves, as rollers.

There are instances of all these atrocities in the very interesting narrative of John Jackson, an English sailor, who lived a prisoner in those Islands for two years, and they are amply confirmed by the Captain's own personal observation. But in Jackson's homely language these horrors are too revolting for quotation.

The object of Capt. Erskine's cruise was the encouragement and protection of commerce, and we regret to learn that the white trappers of these seas are too often disgraced by treachery and cruelty worthy of the Feejee Islanders. A principal article of traffic is sandal-wood, and the foulest means are sometimes adopted to obtain it; natives of one island being kidnapped and carried off to out it in another, where they are then abandoned to their fate. The mate of a Sidney vessel boasted of having shot six men, as he sailed along the coast of Eromango, one of the New Hebrides, merely to spoil the market for those who might come after him. In 1834 the commander of a French vessel, to obtain facilities for trading, permitted an Island chief to cook and eat the body of an enemy on board his very ship. What wonder, that in a subsequent dispute with his ally, he was himself, together with the greater part of his crew, subjected to a like fate? The white residents, more over, are in the habit of purchasing and maintaining female slaves—the common price being a musket—and the missionaries complain that even Christian women are sometimes thus bought, and, of course, forced into concubinage by Englishmen. Such persons are by law amenable to the courts of New South Wales; but the distance, or prolixity of the necessary proceedings, render the jurisdiction almost nugatory.

CURE OF STAMMERING.—At the last monthly meeting of the members of the Franklin Institute some remarks were made on the subject of stammering by G. W. Smith, Esq., who described a new method of cure, by mechanical agency, the invention of Mr. Robert Bates, of this city. Mr. Bates, it appears, had himself labored under this infirmity, of which he had effected a radical cure by means of his ingenious contrivance. "The method," as we find it described in the proceedings of the Institute, "consists in the employment of a tube for the passage of air from the mouth, when the muscles that close the orifice and stop the egress of air in speaking, are suddenly contracted by spasmodic action, and the employment of a strap around the throat provided with a spring pad (regulated by a screw,) pressing against the throat, keeping the glottis or larynx open; thereby allowing a free passage through the throat and mouth from the lungs, the arrest of which causes stammering. The tube is shaped to fit the roof of the mouth, is flattened and open at each end, and is about seven-eighths of an inch long, 3-8 x 1-16, extending down to the teeth, where it can be fastened by passing a small wire between them; the lingual or dental sounds are thus made; the labial sounds are made by an additional extension of the tubes beyond the lips; the gutturnl sounds are accomplished by the pressure of the pad. By constant use of these instruments for a short time the correction of a bad habit is effected, and the tube is gradually contracted and the spring of the pad eased, until a continuance is no longer necessary. RENTS IN NEW YORK.—A New York correspondent of the National Intelligencer, has the following statement relative to the enormous amounts paid for rent in New York:

"I am perfectly astonished at the rate of rents in this city. I know a single basement room on Wall street, to reach which you must descend five or six steps from the footway, with a low ten foot ceiling, and the room not more than thirty by twenty feet, which rents for $6600 per annum. A lot, twenty-five feet by seventy-five, on high up in Broadway as the corner of Fulton street, was recently leased for twenty-one years, at $14,500 per annum, at the end of which time the ground landlord is besides to have the building, which is now being erected on it, and will cost $20,000. A building on Broadway, immediately adjoining Trinity church yard, forty feet front and two hundred deep, opening on a side alley, and cut up into corridors and offices, brings an aggregate rent of $80,000 per annum; and a gentleman who has built himself a splendid dwelling as high up as Union Square, at least two miles above the City Hall, says he plainly sees that he must be driven away in a few years by the encroachment of hotels, stores and shops, and told me he had already been offered a rent of $10,000 per annum for the house."

HOW TO WEAR SPECTACLES.—The following is copied from a "Treatise on the Eye," by Mr. West, an eminent optician:

"In the proper use of spectacles there is no circumstance of more importance than their position on the head. They should be worn so that the glasses may come as close to the eye as possible, without touching the eye-lashes. They should also be placed so that the glasses may be parallel to the paper when the head is in an easy position. To accomplish this, let the sides of the spectacles bear on the head about midway between the top of it and the ear: the eyes will then look directly through the glasses to the paper, and make the most advantageous use of them, instead of looking obliquely through them to the paper, as spectacles are usually worn, with their bows in contact with the ear, in which position they produce a distorted image on the retina. The sides of the spectacles should also be placed at an equal height upon the head."

CURIOUS CALCULATION.—The New York Tribune, basing its calculation upon the railroad statistics furnished by the London Statistical Society, which giving, among other things, the number of miles traversed to one passenger killed, comes to the conclusion that if a Railroad should be built to the sun, every passenger would by the laws of chance be killed before reaching his fiery destination. At the ordinary rate and speed, it would take 514 years to reach the sun; but 298 years of continuous railroad travelling brings the passenger up, and this would only carry him a little more than half way to the sun. In Germany, however, the statistics are more favorable to human life, for during the years 1848-'49, and 1850, on a length of railway open of 1,480 English miles, the number of passengers conveyed was 51,713,207, the miles traveled 1,155,436,890, only one passenger killed. It will be altogether best, therefore, that when the railroad is built to the sun, it shall be under German management.

ON VISITING NIAGARA FALLS, SUMMER OF 1853.

Hark! what low, distant murmur do we hear,
That gently breaks upon the listening ear?
Is it the swelling of the summer breeze,
That floats along to kiss the trembling leaves?
It gathers force, now like the rustling of a host,
Or hollow sound upon the sea-girt coast;
And now—it breaks as the eternal roar,
Of countless oceans on one only shore.
Thou greatest offspring 'mong Uvalin's daughters,
That pours thy deep libation from the God of waters—
Stupendous shrine! Oh dread Supreme, we see,
'Tis thine alone, and worthy only thee!
We feel mere insects in thy day of wrath;
We feel as nothing in this, thy glorious path;
This tumbling gulf that would seem to drain
Old Erie's waters to the billowy main.
But thou, exhaustless as that boundless love
Which called these into being thus to move,
Whose mighty power subdues man's shrinking soul,
Whose powers sublime thy awful thunders roll,
The same that shook Sinai's sacred hill
When Moses trembled, and his host stood still,
Or as the Apostle, struck with fearful awe,
As he the mighty miracle astounding saw,
Fell at his master's feet, we hear his suppliant cry,
"Leave me, oh Lord, a sinful man am I."
Thou here, at this thy Altar, beyond all art to raise,
We prostrate fall, and humbly sing thy praise.

EDUCATION.

CENTENARY INSTITUTE, ALA.

This institution of learning has been in successful operation for ten years, is situated eight miles north of Selma, and is the child and property of the Alabama Conference.

There are two departments, male and female. In the male department young men are prepared for the junior class in any college, or if they chose, complete their education here. The female department is regularly organized as a college.

The course of study is extensive, and the instruction thorough. The teaching is done mainly by men of age and experience, (not by girls.)

The President (Rev. A. R. Mitchell) is a minister of the gospel, of twenty odd years standing, and during most of that time has been connected with literary institutions of the church in Georgia, South Carolina and Alabama. He is assisted by seven others, most of whom are persons of age and experience, and all, with one exception, professors of religion. A majority of the Board of Trustees are members of the Alabama Conference, which fact is a sufficient guarantee of its successful management.

Board and tuition are as low as can be afforded, and lower than most institutions of similar grade.

The next term opens the first Monday in October, and closes the first Wednesday in July. For further particulars, apply to the President, at Summerfield, Ala.

B. J. HARRISON, Secretary.

FEMALE MASONIC INSTITUTE,

Dayton, Marengo County, Alabama.

Rev. E. D. Pitts, Principal.

TO PARENTS, GUARDIANS, AND THE FRIENDS OF EDUCATION GENERALLY, we would announce the opening of the TENTH Annual Session of the Institute. The healthful locality—the spacious and beautiful grounds—the commodious and convenient buildings—the full supply of Musical Instruments—the fixed purpose of the Trustees to spare no expense or efforts to promote the best interests of FEMALE EDUCATION—and the assiduous devotion of an efficient Faculty to promote the comfort and improvement of Pupils, lead us to expect with confidence a liberal support.

The Principal has taught with marked success in Alabama, Mississippi and Florida, and will consecrate all his energies—physical, intellectual, and moral—to the proper training of the head and heart of those committed to his tuteiage.

The services of Miss MARY W. HOWZE, who has been for two years past connected with the Central Masonic University, have been secured. Her intelligence, energy, piety, and felicitous manner of communicating, have justly placed her in the first rank of educators.

The Musical, French, and Ornamental Department will be conducted by competent and skillful Teachers, and all due attention given to the arts and accomplishments that so beautify and adorn the gentler sex.

The Primary Department will be confided alone to a choice and gifted Lady, for we design to attend carefully to that sadly and mischievously neglected class of Pupils.

The Scholastic year is divided into Two Sessions of nearly Five Months each—with no intervening recess. The School opens on the first day of October, and closes with Examinatiou Exercises in the latter part of July. Pupils received at any time, and charged to the end of the Session. For fractions of Sessions each week is counted one twentieth.

The School is not Sectarian or denominational; and the only religious tuition embraces the principles of a pure morality based upon the cardinal doctrines of the Bible.

The Principal and his wife have charge of the Stewards Department, and will tenderly care for the health, manners and morals of those who Board in the Institute. Each boarder will be made to feel as far as possible that she is the loved subject of parental solicitude, and every reasonable wish will be promptly and cheerfully gratified. Yet, Discipline will not be forgotten, and the needful restraints of family government will be thrown around them.

CHARGES PER SESSION OF FIVE MONTHS.

Primary Class	$12 50
Preparatory Class	15 00
Junior and Senior Class	20 00
Music on Piano, Guitar and Harp, (each)	25 00
Drawing, Painting and Embroidery, (each)	10 00

Incidentals	1 00

LATIN included in the Regular Course.

BOARD (including Washing, Fuel and Lights) per month 10 00

Each Boarder must furnish her own Towels, Brushes and Combs and have each article distinctly marked with her full name.

AN INVARIABLE RULE.—Board and Tuition one-half in advance, and the balance at the end of each Session; and every account must be closed at the end of each Session, by Cash, or by Note.

SPECIAL ARRANGEMENT.

Each Lodge in Marengo County is entitled to select within its jurisdiction, a worthy object of benefaction, and have her taught in the Institution without charge, provided said Lodge secure the payment of her Board and supply her with Books and Stationery.

As the Principal is so extensively known, the Committee have forborne to speak of his character and qualifications, and refer Parents and Guardians to the persons named below.

OAK BOWERY FEMALE COLLEGE.

This Institution of learning is under the supervision and control of the Alabama Conference of the M. E. Church, South, and has been in successful operation for six years. It is situated about five miles north of the Montgomery and West Point Railroad, in Chambers co., in a healthy country, and among a population, moral, industrious and intelligent.

The Board of Trustees take great pleasure in announcing to the public the election of the Rev. ALEX. SPEER, of Georgia, to the Presidency of the College. We think it only necessary to be known that the Institution will be for the next year under the charge and direction of Brother Speer, to awaken a deep interest in behalf of the enterprise throughout the community, and in part confidence of success. His long and faithful service in the M. E. Church as a minister—his age and experience—his natural judgment and sound discretion—his acknowledged literary attainments and ability, authorise the expectation of full patronage on the part of an enlightened public.

A complete corps of Instructors whose names will hereafter be published, will be provided to supply the demand for instruction.

Miss MARY J. TOOMER continues Principal in the Music Department; and the unbounded satisfaction hitherto given by Miss Toomer, who we consider has no superior in any country, is a sure guarantee that all who patronise will be pleased.

Through the kind offices of the former President, the Rev. Wm. F. Samford, who solicited contributions for that purpose, a fine and judiciously selected Library, of several hundred volumes, has been purchased, and is now, in the possession of the College, embracing some of the most approved and standard literary works, and such as are peculiarly adapted to the purposes of Female Education.

The Tuition Fees will be no higher than usual, and the course of study as extensive as that in any institution of the same grade in the country.

The College Exercises will begin under the proposed organization, on the first Monday in January next—its second session will begin on the first Monday in September, and close at Christmas.

A circular, containing fuller information, will appear over the signature of the President.

The fees for the first half the scholastic year are as follows:

Primary Department	$12 00
First, Sophomore and Middle Classes, each	20 00
Junior and Senior Classes, each	22 50
Music	25 00
Use of piano	2 50
Contingent fee	1 00
Board, including lodging, washing and fuel	60 00

The above fees are required to be paid on the first day of October.

Fees of the same amount, for the second half of the scholastic year, are required to be paid on the 25th of February, 1854.

An extra fee of $20 is charged for French.

The course of study in this institution is as extensive as that in any institution for the education of females, and the instruction is of the most critical and thorough character. Every provision has been made to ensure success. A philosophical and chemical apparatus adequate to all the purposes of instruction has been provided, together with maps, charts, globes, etc. The instructions are experienced in their work, and highly approved for capacity, fidelity and skill.

This institution has just closed the first year of its existence, with the most satisfactory results. And the public may feel assured that the Trustees will watch over its interests with the utmost solicitude and care, and spare no pains to render its system of education as perfect as possible.

The tuition fees have been somewhat reduced, and are below those of many Southern institutions of no higher grade. It is impossible to engage teachers of the highest character for talents, attainments and skill, without paying liberal salaries—but we offer as an equivalent, above all price, a faithful and skillful application of the most approved means of developing and training the mind.

Printed circulars, containing fuller information, may be had by application to Alex. Glascock, Esq., Secretary of the Board.

FACULTY.

REV. JAMES K. ARMSTRONG, A. M., Principal, and Professor of Mental, Moral and Natural Science.

H. M. DALY, A. M., Professor of Vocal and Instrumental Music.

MISS E. L. HASKILL, English.

MISS M. J. BONBURANT, English.

MISS PHEBE FULLER, Drawing, Painting, French and Guitar.

MISS J. V. CLARK, Primary and Preparatory Department.

MRS. L. J. ARMSTRONG Governess.

MRS. REBECCA CLARK, Matron and Nurse.

This institution has just closed a prosperous year, with one hundred and twenty-six pupils.

The ensuing session will commence on THURSDAY, the 29th day of SEPTEMBER.

It is very desirable that pupils enter at the beginning of the session.

The main building is a new and superior brick edifice, one hundred by fifty feet, three stories, and for elegance, convenience of arrangement—for number, size and comfort of school and private rooms—is not surpassed by any similar one in the country.

The Principal resides in the building, and superintends the Boarding Department. He has in his employ a gentleman and his lady, who discharge with faithfulness and satisfaction the duties of this position. Pupils boarding in the Seminary are under the immediate control of the Principal at all times—are members of his family.

The Matron and Nurse, a lady of great amiability and kindness of heart, united with long experience and untiring faithfulness, secures to pupils, at all times, the kindness and attentions of home.

The Principal and his lady, with the aid of the Female Teachers, all of whom reside in the Seminary, diligently guard and form the morals, manners and habits of the young ladies.

There is but one session, of nine and a half months. Pupils can enter at any time during the session, charges able from the beginning of the month in which they enter to the close of the session.

One hundred and forty-five dollars will pay the board and tuition of a young lady for the entire session, in the collegiate department; one hundred and seventy-four dollars will embrace the languages; two hundred and thirty-five dollars will embrace board, tuition in the collegiate department, on the piano, and in the languages.

The above estimate does not include books, stationery, sheet music, ornamental materials and lights; all of which articles are furnished by the Principal on moderate terms.

The institution is furnished with a new and complete Chemical, Philosophical and Astronomical apparatus. It also has a large collection of globes, terrestial and celestial; and celestial maps, atlases, charts plates and diagrams, for simplifying the various branches of Natural Science.

The Library consists of more than one thousand volumes, embracing a choice collection in every department of Literature, Art, Science, History, &c., &c.

The Cabinet consists of several hundred specimens.

The institution is furnished with a large and superior assortment of musical instruments.

The Church and Sabbath School facilities are unsurpassed by any school in the country. Of the number that have entered its walls during the past session, more than seventy were or have become professors of religion.

Pupils are not allowed to attend parties, balls, dancing classes, &c.

Visitors are not received, except with suitable introduction to the Principal from patrons.

The usual regulations of the best boarding schools are enforced respecting visiting, correspondence, pamphlets, periodicals, novels, and dental operations.

They retire and rise at regular hours through the year.

Great attention is paid to exercise in the open air, or within doors, when the weather is inclement.

Every Saturday morning is devoted to plain sewing and the repairing of clothing, under the direction of an officer.

No accounts will be opened in Marion, but with the expressed permission of patrons. When articles are to be purchased, it must be done with approbation and under the eye of the lady of the Principal.

The wants of pupils should be supplied from home, as far as practicable. All jewelry is prohibited. All pocket money, or other sums for the use of pupils, should be deposited with the Principal. They are allowed to spend fifty cents of their pocket money per month.

Social entertainments, composed of invited married gentlemen and ladies, the teachers and more advanced boarding pupils, are held monthly, which afford the young ladies

THE SABBATH.

[From the new edition of the Poetical Works of Sir Edward Bulwer Lytton.]

Fresh glides the brook and blows the gale,
Yet yonder halts the quiet mill;
The whirling wheel, the rushing sail,
How motionless and still!

Six days of toil, poor child of Cain,
Thy strength the slave of Want may be;
The seventh thy limbs escape the chain—
A God hath made thee free!

Ah, tender was the Law that gave
This holy respite to the breast;
To breathe the gale, to watch the wave,
And know—the wheel may rest!

But where the waves the gentlest glide
What image charms, to lift thine eyes?
The spire reflected on the tide
Invites thee to the skies.

To teach the soul its nobler worth
This rest from mortal toil is given;
Go, snatch the brief reprieve from earth,
And pass—a guest to heaven.

They tell thee, in their dreaming school,
Of Power from old dominion hurled;
When rich and poor, with juster rule,
Shall share the altered world.

Alas! since Time itself began,
That fable hath but fooled the hour;
Each age that ripens Power in Man,
But subjects Man to Power.

Yet every day in seven, at least,
One bright republic shall be known:
Man's world awhile hath surely ceased,
When God proclaims his own!

Six days may Rank divide the poor,
O Dives, from thy banquet hall!
The seventh, the Father opes the door,
And holds His feast for all!

POPERY

AGAINST

COMMON SCHOOL EDUCATION.

The following letters, from the Rev. Menthon W. Jacobus, D. D., will speak for themselves. They were occasioned by the bold assaults of the Roman Catholic (so called) "Bishop of Pittsburgh," on the popular system of common schools, recognized and sustained by the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania; and by the insidious attempts to introduce legislative action for the support of the very worst form of sectarianism. The Bishop of Pennsylvania has united in an evidently concerted measure, by which the Roman Catholic Bishops in the United States hope to accomplish one of two favorite objects, viz.: to subvert the system of common school education, now so prevalent in the country, or at least to divert a part of the general fund, raised for this purpose, to their own contracted, illiberal, and anti-American schemes. The views of this able writer require little or no alteration to adapt them to our latitude. The spirit is one, the aim one, the means are every where. The whole history of Popery shows its enmity to free institutions. It is throwing off its disguises and rapidly losing all traces of those modifications by which many unreflecting people supposed it was adjusting itself to the genius of our Republican institutions. We must be awake to its developments, and counteract its intentions. We present the first of the series: the rest will follow—four in all. [Editor N. O. Christian Advocate.

LETTER I.

JANUARY 25, 1853.

You have taken occasion, from a passing reference to yourself, in a late article, to deliver to this Commonwealth a protest against our American system of popular education. You will allow me to remind you of a public call upon you, much more gravely and directly affecting yourself, which you have left unanswered since last March, even though you stood committed, through your organ in this city, to give it notice. The public had good reason to calculate that at least you would not seek to interfere with our popular institutions, without first making it incontestably clear that you are not under an oath of allegiance to the Pope, as a temporal sovereign. Since that time you have sat in secret council of the Romish Bishops at Baltimore, and have made a visit to the Pope himself, to await his sanction, as we suppose, to those undivulged proceedings. Your profound silence in regard to a charge which it so behoved you to deny, if you could, must be taken as a tacit confession of its truth.

The bearing which this fact of a foreign allegiance, has upon the point now at issue, is neither trivial nor obscure. This does, indeed, explain to us your great aversion to that system of public education which you find here established. We open to your two thousand children of this vicinity the common school, and you demand an uncommon price. You claim always some special legislation in your favor, though you choose to talk of it as only "equal rights." If we are not satisfied with this public provision, and choose to set up parochial schools, for a more religious education, we are compelled to sustain them without aid from the State. You very well know that no sectarian school is sustained by the State as such. Why should you claim the exemption for Romanists against the spirit of our free institutions? We complain of you this—that you persist in a Jewish separation, not allowing your people to send their children where they would be with our American children, and receive the training that belongs to our American principles. You prefer them to live in ignorance, and roam about the streets uneducated, rather than that they amalgamate with the rising generation of our own land. And this is all in keeping with that spirit of Jewish exclusiveness which arrogates to your own church that it is the true and only church of God; and to your Roman Catholic people that you are the chosen seed, and that this land of promise is of right yours. And so you are in effect training your children to look with suspicion and hatred upon our system of education—to become opposers of our laws, rebels against the State, and enemies of our institutions.

If it be asked what training you promise to repay for the State funds which you demand, it is plainly a Roman Catholic training, which recognizes the Pope, as of divine right, the one and only sovereign and head of the Church; which regards Protestant governments as unauthorized, and Protestant laws as invalid; which regards the Bible, whether in the school or in the family, as a pestiferous book, fit only to be burned, and Protestantism as a heresy, fit only to be extirpated with the sword. And you ask to be sustained by the State in such a system of education! Your system puts all the funds into the hand of the Bishop, and demands that he and all his clergy be exempt from civil jurisdiction. If you deny that you make such claims in this country, we adduce the boasted unity of your Church, and show that this is what it claims wherever it dares. Before such concessions are made in these United States, it may be demanded that you show the very terms of the oath which every Romish Bishop has sworn to the Pope.

We very well understand the light in which you view the system of popular education, as bearing upon the progress of your own political religion in this land. We see daily the effort which Jesuitism is making in Continental Europe to seize the portfolio of public instruction, so as to have all educational establishments under Papal control. And we know very well that this is what you aim at in our land. We cannot give up our free principles to promote sectarian legislation, least of all for such as are in league with a foreign political power, and which avowedly aim at our subjection to a foreign State. We are willing and anxious that Romanists here may understand the true genius of our free institutions, and may enjoy equal rights with all our citizens; but never that they be recognized as Romanists by the State, and sustained as such by special grants for their political religion.

It is plain to be understood what you require. Your letter is explicit to this point, that nothing will suffice you but a system of Romish education. You expressly declare that all our educational institutions are equally an offence to you; all in the same sense sectarian, as being not Roman: all in the same category, and odious in your eyes. How then can we suit you? By paying you a bonus for this denunciation of our free institutions, and by patronizing this foreign Papal policy in our midst? You plead your conscience! Would the conscience of any American be respected a moment, if you had the power to control our legislation? Ask in Naples, in Tuscany, in Rome itself. Conscience! The plea comes with ill grace from those who trample upon conscience all over the world, where it squares not with their pleasure. What is the conscience of the Madiai and Guarducci to the Grand Duke, or to the Pope, or to yourself? But only the conscience of the Grand Duke is sacred, and to be respected in such case—that good son of the Church, and next neighbor and near friend and ally of his Holiness. Will you allow your plea to be used on their behalf, and show at Rome and Florence how base it is to force men to subjection in religious things?

But it is undeniable that the grand aversion of your church to our system of popular education is: 1st, That your religion opposes the diffusion of knowledge among the masses. This is capable of most conclusive proof from official documents abroad; but we quote from your organs at home. "The Shepherd of the Valley," in a late article on popular education, holds the following language: "This teaching every one to read is bearing its fruit in our own days, here and elsewhere, and a very unwholesome fruit it appears to be." You speak guardedly on this point as we might expect. You say; "It is not from a fear of real information of any kind that we apprehend danger. Gladly would we see true knowledge diffused." This we understand—that by "real information," and "true knowledge," you mean Roman Catholic information, and so insinuate that ours is false.

But, secondly, another secret of your aversion is, that your system opposes free education. This is the high hand which Popery is showing among the imbecile and craven governments of the European continent—to claim the right of teaching and the control of all educational institutions. Here, on our borders, as you know, the government of New Granada lately adopted a constitution, providing for itself a system of popular education, and Pope Pius IX., in his "allocution," from the Sacred College, denounces the laws as utterly null and void. Here is the very express language in which he begins the onslaught: "Nor must we pass over in silence that by the new Constitution of that Republic, among other things, the right also of free education is defended." The document is worthy only of the middle ages.

Your system essentially denies us the right to educate our own children, no less than yours; and free education, independent of Rome, is its special abhorrence. This position you have not yet thought it prudent to take amongst us; but New Granada is near at hand. Witness also in Sardinia. The famous Sicardi laws provide, among other things, for "the right of all classes to the benefit of the schools and universities, without regard to sect or party." And this brings down upon that government and people the hottest fulminations of the Vatican.

But the head and front of offending in our Public School system, is the use of the Bible. Even in the smallest measure, it is too much for your interests. It endangers your religion even with the noisy urchins who never hear the chapter read. The shadow of it is a spectre of evil to your eyes. The same deadly hatred of this sacred book which shows itself in Rome, at this day, hunting even the Old Testament from the poor Jews of the Ghetto; the same spirit which, in Florence, against the united outcry of the Protestant world, dooms husband and wife apart to gloomy cells, for reading the simple Gospel, "Il puro evangelio," that foul spirit, which, at the Pope's demand, has lately repealed the tolerant laws of the first Leopold in Tuscany, and made heresy punishable with death, and which now arrests a man for reading the 15th chapter of the gospel by John, "I am the true vine," etc. The very same spirit is here, shunning and denouncing our most precious, popular education, because it includes any opening of the word of God! You construe this, in Tuscany, into an offence against the State; for they are one! And by the same reasoning, you do before the world admit all our allegation, that whatever here is for the Romish church, is for the Romish State, and so is against the American State. Then ask no legislation for Romanism.

Let me say again, that, though Romanism shows itself all round us, in such persecuting acts against the rights of conscience, though it denies American freedom of worship wherever it rules, yet we throw our arms open to as many Romanists as will come to us; and we cheerfully accord to them the religious liberty which they deny to us. But this is not enough. Our free institutions are denounced because they are free. And you demand for Romanists, as a sect, what we grant to no sect in the land—special recognition and legislation. We have no laws against Romanism. We make no difference in favor of ourselves.

We note your discourse on the sacredness of a man's religion—the rights of conscience—the shame of being forced to act against it, even in receiving favors, and the sense of justice in our land. Will you join in the petitions which are now pouring in, to our national Congress, on the measure now before them, viz.: to secure by treaty, to our citizens, the right of religious worship in Papal lands? Your name, as a Roman Catholic Bishop, would have great weight, I am sure, with the Pope. The moment is opportune. And be assured, my dear sir, I have no motive in this communication other than the interest of truth and freedom, and the honor of our Lord Jesus.

We ask you to join with us in making such an appeal where it belongs—on behalf of the poor, imprisoned, and doomed subjects of Romish governments abroad, and especially of that faithful son of the church, who declares that he will extirpate heresy from his dominions, though he may gain the name of being the bloodiest tyrant in history. We know his relations to the Pope.

And again, for the satisfaction of this community, we ask: Have you not sworn a like fidelity to the Pope, and are you not under oath and allegiance to him as a temporal ruler?

THOUGHTS ON THE PAST AND THE DEAD.

MR. EDITOR: It is a cloudy morning. Nature looks gloomy, and having been in my room for nearly two weeks, part of the time very sick, I am in a fine state to sympathise with nature, and feel gloomy too. But I never indulge in melancholy moods. But often do I court the serious, nor suffer it to depart from me. I feel that seriousness is befitting my age, and well does it suit my will.

If I look at the past, and ask where are the companions of my youth and early manhood, the answer comes from the grave—we are all here. Of a noble class that entered the Itinerancy in the years 1804 and 5, along with me, not one save my venerable brother Reddick, of the South Carolina Conference, lives to tell the triumphs of Methodism in those days when most of our conserts resembled captives more than simple converts. Very few persons in those days had intended to be Methodists. They were as literally converted to the Methodists as they were to Christ.

But they were genuine Methodists after they came. In those days there was but one of the general rules broken, and that only by a few. It was the rule which prohibited dram drinking. Liquor gave us most of the trouble we had. But where are those old true-hearted, warm-hearted friends of ours? The most of them are in heaven. Their lives and their deaths declare it. Oh! may their children and their children's children imitate their bright example. But when I look for these friends of my ministerial infancy they are nearly every one passed away. And even since the noon of my life death has thinned out my more immediate friends until I see that I must die at last among comparative strangers. This, however, gives me no sorrow, for they will be kind to me for their father's sake.

Harry R. W. Hill was one of my middle life friends. In 1836, on my return from Cincinnati, I made his acquaintance in Nashville. But, how affecting is the thought that out of a half dozen of us, who were so cordially entertained by Brother Hill and his lady, I am, I think, the only survivor. And if there is another, it is Brother W. Arnold, of Putnam. Brother and Sister Hill are gone. My acquaintance with Harry Hill was renowned in New Orleans in 1845, when my bible agency called me there. His house was my happy home. He was particularly immersed in business in those days, but he made me feel at home. Sister Hill I found to be a jewel of richest value. She was a lady, reposing in the tempting bosom of a princely fortune—a model Christian. She was one of the precious few who did not have respect to persons. In her house, a man with gold ring, in goodly apparel, was preferred to an seat above a Christian brother in vile raiment. She was never ashamed of the poor, because poor. In her heart, at her table, in her parlor, she made the worthy poor feel free and welcome. In this Mr. Hill was as remarkable as his pious lady. It seemed to me, from all I could see, that this happy couple took more pleasure and interest in the worthy poor, than they did in even the worthy rich. This trait in their character is the best in it. It was fulfilling one of God's special directions—that of caring for the poor. But one says he did not leave some large legacy for benevolent purposes. Well, it was because he done himself all along through life what many wealthy men now think they will have done by their executors and children after them, and which will likely never be done at all. Brother Hill's course was decidedly the best. Some one in a biographical sketch of him says, his charities, during his life, amounted to three hundred thousand dollars. If so, he exceeded the old Jewish tithe law in his bestowments, large as was his estate at his death. And where will you find another such prince among us! Harry Hill has for a long time occupied a very high seat in my affections and admiration. And when I was last at his house in April, while alone with him in his office, I told him after all he had done for Methodist preachers and for the Methodist Church, I could never die satisfied unless he was in our closest fellowship. We both wept much. Brother Hill told me all his heart—I felt that he did. He gave me his views concerning the Church, South; and also his plans for Methodism in New Orleans. They were enlightened and liberal like the man, and worthy of him. He told me pleasant things, which I knew not of before; and above all, made me voluntary promises in reference to himself, most pleasant then, but peculiarly so now, he is gone. I shall always thank God that we had that conversation. Much that he promised me he did not live to carry out, but it was in his heart to do it; and God knew his heart:

Thou art gone to the grave, we will not deplore thee,
Thy God was thy ransom, thy guardian and guide;
He gave thee, he took thee, and he will restore thee;
Death hath no sting, for the Saviour hath died.

I hope you will all freely forgive my saying any thing about the deceased; one living as far away from his place of residence as myself. The name of Harry Hill was endeared to me years ago, by the beloved Bishop McKendree. This venerable apostle of western Methodism had a home in his house, and in his heart. Well do I remember how Mr. Hill spoke of Bishop McKendree, and showed me a few simple relics of the Bishop's travelling apparatus, which he seemed to hold sacred in memory's cherished affections. To the kindness and liberality of H. R. W. Hill, we Methodist preachers owe a tribute of united respect. Peace to his ashes, and honor to his name.

CENTENARY INSTITUTE.

MR. EDITOR: It is proper that I should say a few words to the patrons of the Centenary Institute, and I beg leave to do so through the medium of your columns. There has been for the last few weeks considerable excitement throughout all this country on the subject of yellow fever, and reports have gone abroad, I learn, that it had reached even Summerfield with its dreadful ravages. I am not at all surprised at these reports, for it is a fact that the disease has been raging with considerable virulence at Selma for a few days, a point only eight miles distant from us, and when report comes within eight miles of the mark, she does well, much better than usual.

When the disease broke out in Selma a number of persons fled to this place for refuge, and to my certain knowledge not one of them has been sick; and so far from having yellow fever among us, we have really not had a serious case of sickness of any kind among us for months.

Those of us who know Summerfield best, and very little apprehension that fever of any kind would prevail here, still some anxious parents did send for their children, acting, I presume, more from a fear growing out of our proximity to the infected region, than from any want of confidence in the healthfulness of this location. Facts are stubborn things, and while I am on this subject I want to mention just one. This Institution has been in operation ten years, and during that time we have had yearly an average of two hundred pupils, which gives an aggregate of two thousand, and out of that number but three have died, while here at school, and two of these were taken sick before they had been here one week. Can any other place in Alabama or any where else, say as much? which fact goes far to confirm the wisdom and discretion of those who first located the Conference Institute at this place. We have now fine weather, this long-wished for frost has at last come, the disease is rapidly subsiding in Selma and Montgomery, and there is no longer any reason why the most timid should longer stay away. We are flattering ourselves with a very prosperous and successful term. A larger number have already entered than have been enrolled at this early period for a number of years. Our Senior class is large, and will do us great credit at our next Commencement. In the male department we have a large number of young men of age and promise, several of whom are preparing for the ministry. Yours, etc.,

FREEDOM OF CONSCIENCE SECURED.—A treaty formed between our Government and the Oriental Republic of Uruguay, on the 28th of August last, provides: The citizens of the United States, residing in that Republic, "shall not be disturbed, molested, or annoyed in any manner on account of their religious belief, nor in the proper exercise of their peculiar religion, either within their own private houses, or in churches, chapels, or other places appointed for public worship, which places of worship they shall be at liberty to build and maintain in convenient situations, interfering in no way with, but respecting the religion and customs of the country in which they reside." This is beginning well. Let the principle be carried out in all our treaties.

Let petitions still be sent to Congress until freedom of conscience is provided in every treaty.

THE GONDOLA.—Mr. Hillard, in his book of travels, in speaking of the gondola, says: "No form of locomotion ever gratified so well the two warring tendencies of the human soul, the love of movement and the love of repose."

[From our English Correspondent

WILLIAM COWPER.

William Cowper was descended from a family of very high respectability, and was born at Berkhampstead, in the month of November, 1731. He had the misfortune to lose his mother while yet very young, soon after which event, in 1739, he was removed from a school in Hertfordshire, which he had hitherto attended, to the public seminary at Westminster. At the age of eighteen he was articled to an Attorney for the period of three years, and at the expiration of that time entered himself a student of the Junior Temple, but did not eventually pursue the profession. About ten years after this, he was appointed Reading Clerk and Clerk of the Private Committees to the House of Lords, in the stead of which office that of the Clerk of the Journal was afterwards presented to him, as being more capable of affording indulgence to his peculiar infirmity, an unconquerable apprehensiveness and timidity. But a necessity unexpectedly arising for his personal appearance before the House, he, after a long struggle with this constitutional peculiarity, relinquished the post, and with it all hopes of political preferment. The consequence of this misfortune was a more serious one—the derangement of his intellect. He was now placed at St. Alban's, under the care of Dr. Cotten, himself a poet and a scholar, through whose kind attentions and judicious treatment he became gradually restored. In 1765 he removed to Huntingdon, where he formed an acquaintance with the family of Rev. W. Unwin, of which he very soon became an inmate. On the death of Mr. U. in 1767, he removed with his widow to Olney, the result of which removal was a long and unbroken friendship with the Rev. J. Newton, which is not only commemorated by their letters, but also by a volume of poems, their joint production. During the last five or six years of his life, he was constantly, more or less, under the influence of his former affliction, which haunted him to the hour of his death, which took place on the 25th of April, 1800, at Dunham, in Norfolk, where he was buried.

Gentle, tender, affectionate and pious, it is needless to say that he was sincerely lamented by his friends; but his character is so blended and identified with his writings, that it is no inaccuracy to assert that he was personally regretted by thousands to whom he was personally unknown. As a poet, his forte was the playful and the familiar; but not of necessity so, for he possessed an eloquent and powerful command of satire, and, which does not always accompany it, great judgment in calling it into exercise; and that the thunderbolts of poesy were within his reach, many of his minor productions afford ample proof. It would be difficult, through the whole range of English literature, to select a piece exhibiting a more perfect combination of nature, pathos, and power, than "The Negro's Complaint."

In addition to "The Negro's Complaint," may be mentioned "Alexander Selkirk," "On the Receipt of My Mother's Picture," "The Needless Alarm," and "My Mary," as being perfect in their several kinds. His translation of Homer is more literal, but less poetical than that of Pope. His longest original production, "The Task," although abounding with beautiful poetry, as a whole is perhaps somewhat too heavy. His letters are scarcely less delightful than his verses. They are models of epistolary style; playful without levity, elegant without effort, and possessing the ease and simplicity of nature, without being puerile or common-place. They are free from that cold correctness and repulsive rigidity which usually characterize the correspondence of literary men. Nothing can be more interesting than the letters of men of genius and eminence, where it is apparent they were intended alone for the eye of him to whom they were addressed; but they have too frequently the appearance of having been for the future inspection of the public, and are consequently essays rather than epistles.

The prevailing characteristic of Cowper's mind was extreme sensibility. The poetic temperament is, indeed, most eccentric. The philosopher, the man of science, and of professional skill, may possess, in a pre-eminent degree, the talents necessary for their several pursuits, yet not be the less, but in many instances the more fitted to contend with the rough vicissitudes and routine duties of life. But the mind of the poet is like the sensitive plant, it shrinks instinctively from the contact of those petty annoyances and vexations which mingle with the most ordinary affairs of existence. Those fine fibres along which the perception of beauty and of harmony carries the thrill of ecstatic delight, vibrate in an equal degree to the jarring touch of grief, imaginative or real, generating the one, and exaggerating the other. This peculiar faculty exhibited itself in Cowper, in an extraordinary and painful excess, and it was accompanied in him as it usually is in others, with a delicacy of constitution, which, if not an effect of the former, is perpetuated and aggravated by it. From this exquisite susceptibility of feeling emanated that cloud which darkened his infancy, occasionally threw its blackness over his maturer years, and at length concentrated itself in murky density around his decline. How melancholy the reflection, that that mind which, like the sun, shed warmth and delight on all beneath its influence, bore within itself a shadow which occasionally involved it in obscurity. Those who permit no opportunity to escape them of directing their clumsy attacks against religion, have assumed this constitutional malady to be the result of his piety, and it is a representation which proves alike their regard for truth, and their correct knowledge of the tendency of religion. It is scarcely necessary and totally hopeless, to meet them with a refutation; facts will not convince them, for these they set at defiance in the outset—argument will not avail, for there is no bigot as blind as he who, in the ignorance of his prejudices, without examination, or without understanding, denounces what he chooses to term bigotry, or superstition. Nature, not religion, was the author of poor Cowper's infirmity, for he writhed beneath the influence of the one, before he experienced the impressions of the other, while the most serene and happy years of his life were those during which he was most constantly and completely occupied in the performance of its delightful duties. It was not religion which gathered around his bright and ethereal spirit that gloom in which it was unhappily shrouded, but it was religion which, for a time broke through and dissipated it, introducing peace and serenity where before they had been strangers; which is now its bliss in that region where sadness cannot reach it, where sorrow can encompass it no more.

His writings must ever be popular where taste and feeling are not extinct. Centuries hence a tear for his misfortunes shall mingle with the smile of pleasure, which his works have called forth, upon the cheeks of thousands. If England has in her brilliant roll of illustrious characters some names of more lofty bearing, more exulted pretensions, she has not one of which she has more cause to be proud than that of Cowper!

MAN'S RESPONSIBILITY FOR HIS BELIEF.

The following letter, on "Man's Responsibility for his Belief," is from the correspondence of Dr. Chalmers, recently published in London:

My dear Madam: Lord Byron's assertion, "that man is not responsible for his belief," an assertion repeated by Mr. Brougham and several others, seems to have proceeded from the imagination that belief is in no case voluntary. Now it is very true that we are only responsible for what is voluntary; and it is also true, that we cannot believe without evidence. But then it is a very possible thing that a doctrine may possess the most abundant evidence, and yet the evidence not be attended to. Grant that belief is not a voluntary act—it is quite enough for the refutation of Mr. Brougham's principle, if attention be a voluntary act. One attends to a subject because he so chooses; or he does not attend because he so chooses. It is the fact of the attention being given or withheld, which forms the thing that is to be morally reckoned with. And if the attention has been withheld, when it ought to have been given, for this we are the subjects of rightful condemnation.

It is enough to make unbelief a thing of choice and a thing of affection, that we have power over the direction of our noticing and investigating faculties. You are not to blame if you have not found some valuable article that you have lost in an apartment of the thickest darkness; but you are to blame if you might have opened the shutters, or lighted a candle, so as to have admitted enough of light for the discovery. Neither are you to blame, if you do not find the hidden treasure of the gospel, provided it is placed beyond the reach of all our strenuousness, and of every expedient that can be used for its discovery; but you are to blame if you have not gone in quest of it, or if you have wilfully and determinedly shut your eyes against it, or if you have not stirred up those powers of your mind over which the mind has a voluntary control, to the inquiring after it. The Discerner of the heart will see where the lurking deficiency lies, and make it manifest to all who remain in the darkness, that they loved the darkness of all who have not come to Christ, that they were not willing to come.

Christianity lays no unreasonable service on men—and far less that service which were most unreasonable of all, the homage of your belief, without confirming such evidence as, if attended to, would constrain the belief. Our religion has its proofs, and it also has its probabilities. Its proofs can only be got at by patient and laborious inquiry, and when gotten, they carry the belief with them. Its probabilities again may, be seen at first sight, and though not enough to compel our belief, yet they form a sufficient claim upon our attention. They form that sort of precognition, which entitles Christianity at least to a full and fair trial; and if not worthy all at once of a place in our credit, it is worthy of a further hearing. Now, all I want is, that the hearing shall be given; that the evidences of Christianity shall be studied—that the Bible shall be read with patience and prayer, and moral earnestness—and on the principle that he who seeketh findeth, I have no apprehension of such a course not terminating in a full and steadfast conviction that the Bible is an authenticated message from heaven to earth, and contains in it the record of God's will for man's salvation.

I am, dear madam, yours truly,

THOMAS CHALMERS.

A LEGEND OF LADY LEE.....By LONGFELLOW.

[IN THE CHURCHYARD AT CAMBRIDGE.]

In the village churchyard she lies,
Dust is in her beautiful eyes,
Nor more she breathes, nor feels, nor stirs;
At her feet and at her head
Lies a slave to attend the dead,
But their dust is as white as hers.

Was she a lady of high degree,
So much in love with the vanity
And foolish pomp of this world of ours?
Or was it Christian charity,
And lowliness and humility,
The richest and rarest of gifts and dowers?

Who shall tell us? No one speaks;
No color shoots into those cheeks,
Either of anger or of pride,
At the rude questions we have asked;
Nor will the mystery be unmasked
By those who are sleeping at her side.

Hereafter? And do you think to look
On the terrible pages of that book,
To find her failings, faults, and errors?
Ah, you will then have other cares,
In your own short-comings and despairs,
In your own secret sins and terrors!

LIFE.—The woes of human life are relative. The sailor springs from his warm couch to climb the icy topmast at midnight without a murmur, while the rich merchant complains of the rattling cart which disturbs his evening's repose. In the time of peace we announce the breakage of a bone as a "melancholy event;" but in war, when we read of the slaughter of our neighbors, and thousands of the enemy, we clap our hands and shout "glorious victory."

A METHODIST MUSEUM.

Why, what a strange concern that must be!—a collection of old Methodist books, old coats, or old shoes, worn by Wesley and his coadjutors? O no, dear reader, nothing of the kind. It is kept in almost every village in New England. Our old Conference preachers always have one. You go to the first Itinerant you find, and ask him for the key to his museum, and if he gives you admittance, you will see a wonderful and curious collection of articles, strange, indescribable, nondescript things.

I have seen some large, good-sized museums; I have a little one of my own, quite a small one, just a beginning.

Would you like to know some of the things sometimes found there? Well, you shall have a short list without any fee.

1. A professor of religion praying with great fervor that God would convert the world, and yet never giving a cent for missions.

2. A man getting shouting-happy, and telling how much he loves the cause of God, and how much he is willing to deny self, yet fretting and scolding if any one asks for a little money.

3. A professor too poor to take a religious newspaper, yet taking two or three political ones.

4. A Christian brother, very much hurt in his feelings to hear his minister refer to politics on the Sabbath, yet spending the whole Sabbath afternoon conversing on doings in Congress, and the probability of Taylor or Calhoun being our next President.

5. Another one, who thinks it decidedly wrong to desecrate the Sabbath by holding temperance meetings on the evening of the Lord's day, yet spends the same time in visiting his neighbors, or going to see his hired man about the work for Monday morning.

6. A Christian brother, very much opposed to anything like ornamenting our churches, such as furnishing them with blinds, carpeting the aisles, or cushioning the pulpit, yet furnishing his own dwelling with rich carpets, astral lamps, and splendid sofas.

7. A follower of the Prince of Peace, with his heart running over with the war-spirit, and rejoicing in the destruction of his fellowmen.

8. A professing Christian family asking the minister to pray with them, and not one of them kneeling with him.

9. Christian parents who take no interest in the Sabbath school.

10. Christian parents permitting their children to attend a dancing-school.

11. The man who has a periodical headache, always returning on Sabbath morning.

12. The man who dare not expose his health by going to meeting on a stormy Sabbath, yet is very robust the next Monday, and can sled wood all day though it storm and blow.

This enumeration may suffice to give a little idea of what may be found in the museum. I do not like to keep such a museum. It is a very disagreeable business. I would to God, brethren, that we had no such concerns; and sincerely do I pray that no additions may be made to the number or variety of the objects. [Pittsburgh Christian Advocate.

BEYOND THEIR POWER.

The Apostle Paul records the example of certain churches that ministered to the necessities of the saints even "beyond their power." They gave more than their ability would apparently justify. They were forward to contribute. He had no need to urge them, to spread out in an affecting form the wants that called for relief, to animate them by pictures of great result to follow after, much less to reason with their sense of duty, to appeal to the force of conscience. He had only to receive their bounty, and testify of it to others.

These must have been remarkable churches—not for their wealth, they were less able to give than some who gave less than they. Whether their members had more general intelligence than others, does not appear. But they must have had a larger development of love to Christ and his cause, thus to set it above all those prudential considerations which might, without blame we should infer from the account, have limited their munificence. It is likely, too, whether they were or were not well informed on other matters, that they took some pains to know the state of the good cause, how it was prospering in this place or that, so as to understand the need of liberality. The subject was undoubtedly much conversed about. They might not have met regularly, once a month for this purpose, but their minds must have often flowed together, as from time to time news came of the welfare of the churches growing up in different parts of the world. We may be pretty sure, too, that they entertained humble views of their own agency; they did not regard their self-denial as specially meritorious, but counted it a privilege to contribute to the prosperity of the kingdom of Christ.

It is evident from the description that there was much prayer in those churches on behalf of the cause to which they contributed. This appears, because the Apostle expressly attributes their liberality to "the grace of God," which implies as a matter of course, fervent prayer through which alone peculiar grace is communicated. Paul seems to have been in the habit of attributing to the grace, or special favor of God, what to some other minds would have appeared something hard to be borne. To him, "the least of all saints," he said, was "this grace given," that he should preach among the gentiles the unsearchable riches of Christ, a service full of peril, of weariness and painfulness, of persecution and suffering. So, here he speaks of these churches as specially blessed, receiving an unusual degree of grace or favor from God, in being permitted to do what many regard as a very self-denying duty. There is something extraordinary in all this, and well worth studying. All the world is striving after improvement, and the churches, if they would make progress in the right direction, need to study the best models.

NEW ORLEANS:

Saturday Morning, November 5.

Frost.—Two or three good palpable frosts the last week, here. Our exchanges throughout the country, weary and wasted by the fever, rejoice over the same. They greet the hoar frost as the poor Israelites did the manna.

In Memoriam.—The proposition of the member of the Alabama Conference to that body, will, we donbt not, meet a hearty response. The suggestion had occurred to us before, on learning that they were buried side by side, but we waited for it to come from the proper quarter—knowing that it would come. Let the memory of the just be blessed.

Bishop Doane's Case Again.—The three presenting Bishops, Meade, McIlvane and Burgess, who were conspicuous in the trial of Bishop Doane, at Camden, publish a card in the Church Journal of the 21st, stating that though they have agreed to submit to the decision of the Beach of Bishops, they hold original opinion, that the dismissal of the presentment was repugnant to their sense of both legal and moral propriety.

NOTICE—MISSIONARY REPORTS.

We would respectfully and most earnestly urge upon all the officers of our Annual Conference Missionary Societies, the necessity of forwarding immediately their different reports, intended for the Parent Board, to this Office.

The annual report for the present year must be published six or seven weeks earlier than usual, and in order to do so correctly, we must have these Conference Reports.

I hope that none will neglect this call.

E. W. Sehon, Missionary Secretary.
Louisville, Ky., Oct. 17, 1853.

LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.

It is now time to let the preachers know how they are to get to Conference. The water in all probability will be low at that time. You will have to come to Alexandria, then reship, take a small boat, as there are several running above the Falls, and stop at Grand Bayou, which is about eighteen miles from Mansfield, and we will make arrangements to bring you out. Mr. Poag, who lives at Grand Bayou, will take care of you should you be detained there a day, etc.

You will please let the preachers know that on their arrival at Mansfield, they will call at the store of Philips, Ball & Co., whence they will be conducted to their homes.

If the Presiding Elders would furnish me with the probable number of lay members which they expect from their respective Districts, it would assist me in providing better for them at the Conference. John Pipes.

LOSS OF CLERGY.

The Protestant Episcopal Church shared in the afflictions of this summer. Rev. Mr. Cleaver, rector of St. Andrew's Church, Jackson, Miss., died of yellow fever there October 13. Rev. Mr. Chadbourne died of same disease, at the residence of his father-in-law, Ex-Governor Quitman, on Sept. 27. Mr. C. was at the time of death Rector of the P. E. Church, at Natchez, Miss. Rev. A. H. Lamon died of black vomit, 28th ult., at West Baton Rouge, La. Mr. L. was an Episcopal clergyman, and candidate for Superintendent of the State Schools. All died in the midst of days and usefulness.

At the late Episcopal Triennial Convention in New York, resolutions were offered and adopted, relating to the various Episcopal Clergymen at the South who fell victims to the yellow fever, commending their families to the care of the church.

ALL SAINTS' DAY.

On the 1st, in pursuance of immemorial custom, the ceremony of decking the tombs was observed with something more than the usual "pomp and circumstance" in the different cemeteries. This solemn observance of the 1st of November is of Catholic origin, and was instituted in commemoration of those unremembered Saints whose names have not found a place in the Calendar.

It was a various and a dusky congregation that thronged those crowded avennes; and from among the strange people that made the pavements groan under their hurrying tread, the searching eye might pick out singularities of every hue, and representing every nationality. There was gray-haired antiquity, that seemed the resurrection of a forgotten age, and blushing loveliness warm with the quick blood of a new and nervous life. Not before midnight were the decorations complete. It was then that thousand tapers and waxen lights everywhere covering the tombs were lit up, and a light flashed over the scene, imparting to it an almost magical brilliancy.

Strange figures flitted along the narrow aisles, their features tha while assuming a ghostly pallor in the uncertain light. Some bowed in silent adoration before the dark houses wherein mouldered their perished affections, while some whispered audibly their "Ave Maria" for the peace of departed souls. Strange and bearded men were there in that solemn congregation, whose hardened features gave mute denial to the softer sentiments uttered by their lips—young girls, too seeming joyous for the black melancholy brooding over all, and withered old women, dry and parched, making ghostly shadows on the tombs. A scene it was, so wild and wierd, that it looked not of the world. There was an unearthly twang in the singing of the winds that smacked of the spirit land. The keen gusts as they howled around the sharp corners of the grave stones, and as they swayed hers and there the snowy decorations, made them show like ghosts that seemed to threaten the disturbers of the solemn solitudes.

All night was this strange picture presented to the wandering eye of gazing curiosity, and the morning found these patient devotees still at their supplications for the ease of departed souls. Throughout the ensuing day the crowds increased, and at night-fall such a congregation had assembled that it was a wonder to see.

TENNESSEE CONFERENCE.

This venerable Conference met on the 12th ult. in Franklin. Bishop Capers having been detained till Friday, by low water, Rev. A. L. P. Green acted as Chairman. Dr. McFerrin sends to his paper the following, among other items:

The question, "Who are admitted on trial?" was taken up, when James H. Campbell, Phillip L. Henderson, W. P. Warren, John J. Comer, David J. Harris, and M. P. Hickerson were admitted on trial.

Loyd Richardson was re-admitted in Elders' orders.

William Sheffield, William H. Riggon, Elijah M. Fitz, J. L. Colemnn, Elbert J. Garrett, John P. Bingham, were admitted on trial.

Rev. David C. Kelley, who has been designated to the China Mission, was examined in open Conference by the Bishop, preparatory to his admission into full connection, and his ordination to Deacons' and Elders' orders. The scene was most affecting. The young preacher bathed in tears, in a firm and feeling manner, answered all the questions propounded to him. The members of the Conference manifested deep interest in Brother Kelley, and his prospective mission, and each heart seemed to go up to God in solemn prayer for his prosperity and success. The manner of the Bishop was most tender and affectionate; but none were more feeling and yet firm than the father of our beloved brother, the Rev. J. Kelley, who cheerfully gave his son and only child to the Missionary work.

Delegates.—On the first ballot eleven were chosen: They are as follows: J. B. McFerrin, J. W. Haaner, A. L. P. Green, M. M. Henkle, John F. Hughes, F. P. Scruggs, F. E. Pitts, T. W. Randle, A. R. Erwin, G. W. Taylor, and Edward Wadsworth.

Three reserve were appointed, namely, E. C. Slater, A. S. Riggs, and Thos. Maddin.

At 3 o'clock, Dr. Jenkins addressed a large congregation at the Methodist Church, on the subject of the China Mission.

The Anniversary of the Missionary Society was held at the Methodist and Presbyterian Churches. In all, including the annual subscriptions of the members of the Society, there was contributed about $775 in cash and pledges. Most of it already paid in.

The Sabbath was a day of great interest. The Methodist, Presbyterian, Baptist and Reform Churches were all occupied and filled to the utmost capacity. The preaching was generally spiritual and powerful. The sermon of Bishop Capers is mentioned as being truly a gospel sermon, full of interest and power. At the close of his sermon, he ordained thirty deacons, and at 3 o'clock, he set apart ten to the order of Elders.

TO THE MEMBERS OF THE ALABAMA CONFERENCE.

Dear Brethren—This will be a memorable year in our history as a Conference—memorable because of the large number of those who have been called from labor to rest, by the Good Shepherd. In our annual meeting we shall miss them from the Council Board, and when we exchange our brotherly salutations, we shall remember with sorrowful hearts, that their manly forms now sleep in the cold grave.

Some of them died full of years, and ripe in Christian experience—as faithful veterans, they died with their armor on. Others of them have died in their youth, just as they began to do efficient service in the vineyard of the Lord.

We rejoice to know that all of them died right—all were prepared by the grace of God, for the last and most dreaded trial. We may, therefore, confidently conclude that their happy spirits now dwell in the presence of God. But three of those dear brethren died under peculiar circumstances. When the wasting pestilence reached the city of Mobile, they, with several of their brethren, who survive them through the mercy of God, were found actively engaged in the discharge of their ministerial duties; and though the inhabitants of the city fled by thousands, those faithful men remained where God and the Church had sent them, and they gave themselves wholly to the work of ministering to the sick and the dying; until they too were stricken down. One by one, they fell in quick succession, and now these three brethren sleep together in the same grave-yard. It is right that they should thus be buried together, for they were animated by the same spirit of love for the souls and bodies of men, and were alike comforted in the hour of death with the same blessed hope of eternal life.

The noble example of our brethren, who remained at the post of duty, in the late day of trial, should not soon be forgotten by us. And as a Conference, we ought in some suitable way manifest our high appreciation of their ministerial and Christian faithfulness.

I, therefore, suggest, that when we meet again in Annual Conference, we do adopt measures for the erection of a monument in the city of Mobile. Let it be placed over the graves of our brethren who have recently died there. Let us inscribe their names thereon, so that in after years, when days of trial shall again come, those who supply their places shall be reminded of what the Church expects from her faithful pastors.

LITERARY NOTICES.

Monthlies.—Putnam is out for November. The "Potiphars" appear again—they are in Paris this time. The publishers speak of great success. We have this early copy from McGinnis & Carver, 36 Camp street, to whom we are indebted for heavier table favors to be noticed next week.

Harper is here, too, via 36 Camp street—full and rich—more so than common to Southern readers. The article "Incidents in the late Epidemic of New Orleans," is full of mournful interest. From coincidences of expression and opinion, we suspect it to be from the pen of the Editor of the Delta. T. B. Thorpe gives a capital article, with rather poor pictures, on Sugar and Sugar Making in Louisiana. Table of contents next week.

Blackwood for October concludes Lady Lee's Widowhood, a scandalously well written affair that would make any author's fame—but we suspect it was made already in this instance. The review of Uncle Tom's Cabin is true Tory English. By the way, this reminds us of a late editorial in the National Era, the oracle of Abolitionists. The Era explicitly claims for these Foreign Reviews and Quarterlies, republished by Leonard, Scott & Co., the great agency for diffusing freesoil doctrine in the South. They circulate largely and without suspicion: are written for by the ablest contributors; and though their character is literary, they discuss this one subject, more or less, in every number. This is indeed an unguarded approach upon the "peculiar institutions of the South." Much might be calculated on from it, if the Abolitionists here would teach their transatlantic co-operators some tactics; (we suspect them of collusion and correspondence.) They blunder characteristically and egregiously. This article in Blackwood and others in the London and Westminster, hint of Northern Annexation with England! of the sin of the free in not separating from the slave states, etc. They are trying to get their wedge into the Union. Jonathan's patriotism and shrewdness must be gone on a journey when he gives an ear to these disinterested counsellors. English philanthropists (?) have a vast diplomatic and financial (cotton) interest to serve in their treatment of Southern Slavery. Thus far these Reviews and Quarterlies have shown the cloven foot, and their only tendency has been to excite and confirm American suspicion. Characteristic selfishness and intrigue is seeking its ends under the garb of a mawkish philanthropy.

This frank expression of opinion may cause us to be struck off the exchange list of L. Scott & Co., 79 Fulton street, New York. That would be a loss—for they are valuable exchanges, and Scott & Co. are good republishers—but so it is, and it is so. Such are the expectations of Abolitionists in this country, and we doubt not in England, from the circulation of these republications, and such has been the unskilful handling of the subject on their part.

REVIVAL INTELLIGENCE.

Clinton Circuit, Miss.—This small section of the great "Moral Vineyard," has been for some months past, the happy object of gracious increase. The example of the good, the preaching of the word, and the prayers of the righteous, have been made the Power of God unto the salvation of many.

Among the whites about 250, and of blacks 160, making 410. Of these two hundred and twenty-four whites, and one hundred and twelve blacks have joined the church, and I hear there have been about one hundred and fifty accessions to the Missionary Baptists in the same region, during this year. To God's grace be the praise. We recently closed a Camp Meeting near Brownsville, at which Christians of different denominations enjoyed the gracious presence of God. Good deportment—the best we ever saw on such an occasion, characterized the large assembly during the whole term. Brethren, young and old, local and itinerating, preached under the unction, with much acceptability.

Our Missionary Meeting at 3 on Sabbath Eve, was truly interesting. I send you the minutes for publication at your convenience. The sum of one hundred and twenty dollars was paid to constitute Rev. L. Campbell and lady, Rev. James A. and Ann M. Godfrey and their children, Miss Lee and Master Jemy, life members of the Missionary Society. Also for Brownsville, Liberty and Chapel Hill Churches, each one bale of cotton. Public collection forty-seven dollars, making about $300 to this good cause. In fine, Clinton Circuit is now prospering religiously and financially. She will pay her preachers the last farthing of a liberal assessment, and send more than $100 to the Conference for the widows and orphans thereof.

There is one fact in connection with our revivals here, I wish to mention, and that is, of those who have joined the church near one hundred are married citizens, and of the residue, with the exception of a few, young gentlemen and ladies of majority, no "school boy and girl excitement," as some have been pleased to term some of the revivals of this county.

Once more, if you please. I am happy to say, that so far as I am aware, there is a spirit of union and more love than usual in existence here, between different branches of God's great family. We, not long since, had the pleasure of administering the Lord's Supper to kneeling scores, and among them Episcopalians, Presbyterians, Cumberland Presbyterians, Methodists, Campbellite Baptists, and Missionary Baptists, all enjoying the presence of the Lord, around "His sacred Board." So mote it be.

May God continue his grace and favor among us. James A. Gonfrey.
Oct. 26.

Mansfield, La.—We have had a succession of interesting protracted meetings on this Circuit for the last four weeks. They commenced on the 10th of September, at Union Church. This meeting continued five days, and resulted in several happy conversions, four accessions to the church, and a general awakening up of the whole. We were mostly dependent on our local brethren for preaching. This was, to sum up all in one word, an unusual good meeting. To God be all the glory.

On the 17th, we commenced another meeting at Loganport, which we expected to protract four or five days; but in consequence of the death of Sister Haden, who was the principal supporter of the church at that place, and for the want of ministerial assistance, we had to close it after two days, and from the seriousness manifested by many, we hope that lasting good was effected. We think it due the memory of Sister Haden to say that after a long and useful life of Christianity, she died in peace and has gone to reap her reward. Many of the preachers of the Louisiana Conference will recollect her with the warmest gratitude. On the 24th, we commenced our third Quarterly Meeting at Pleasant Hill. This meeting lasted some twelve days. There were from 25 to 30 bright conversions, and 31 accessions to the church—14 blacks and 17 whites. Many backsliders were reclaimed, united with the church, and were made shouting happy, and sang in good earnest, "I'll never turn back any more," and a great many others such like hymnology. Singing and shouting, and loud shouting, outbursts of Hallelujahs to God and the Lamb, were every day occurrences during the meeting. This was a happy meeting. Brother Doty, Bro. Ivy, and Brother Manly were with us, and we are especially indebted to the indefatigable labors of Brother Ivy for the success of the meeting; being left alone for two days he hung on till help was obtained.

During this meeting we made a Missionary collection of about $90, a handsome collection for one appointment. On the 8th of October we commenced a meeting in Mansfield, which is still in progress. Up to this time there have been 55 accessions to the church, and as to the number of conversions I cannot say—some 30 or 40 at least. The whole place seemed to be under the influence of the revival. Among those who have been converted there are quite a number of young men. We hope that the work will continue till Conference, and then hope that we shall take the place. But we have been already too lengthy. Brother Ivy has done the most of our preaching, though he had to leave us yesterday to attend another meeting.

We have had several cases of yellow fever in our town, two of whom died and another is not expected to live. The people were perfectly panic stricken, and at one time nearly all left town; but we hope there will be no more cases as the weather is cool and pleasant, and the country otherwise healthy. They are still suffering greatly in Shreveport from yellow fever. John Pipes.
Oct. 20.

Greensboro', Ala.—I am about closing another protracted meeting here—35 conversions, 26 accessions to our branch—9 to be divided ont.

This makes 125 converted at our meetings in this place this summer. Glorious camp and protracted meetings all around us. 85 converts at one and 105 at another. A greater religious interest awakened than I ever knew before. More than 600 people have been converted recently in a circuit of 25 miles radius.

This is some sunshine to cheer us amid the gloom of wasting pestilence, and the tears that fall thick and fast over the sweet memories of our departed fellow-laborers.

October 22. J. J. Hutchinson.

Amite Circuit, Miss.—Say to the friends of Zion that the Lord has and is still doing great things on the Amite Circuit, Miss. We have had two Camp Meetings, at which places much good was done; much for Camp Meetings here in after days. At the last one more than 100 were converted, and 72 added to the church. In all this year on this Circuit, 345 have joined the church, and about that number converted. Allen Castle.
October 18.

Pike Co. Ala.—We had one pretty good protracted meeting recently—over 20 joined in probation—making some 40 this year on this Circuit. This meeting was carried on mainly by Dr. Banks, local preacher from the Clayton Circuit. Pike county is improving in substance and morals, principally by immigration. Wm. M. Shockley.

Talledaga, Ala.—God has revived his work at every appointment in my small Circuit but one; and at that, the Sixth Appointment, we are about commencing a protracted meeting. Above one hundred whites and fifty blacks have been received on trial.

Our ecclesiastical warrior, Brother McDaniel—our spirit-stirring Brother Linfield, and our sweet-spirited Brother Scales, with an excellent band of local preachers, have done effective service in this region.

Our missionary collection will be literally excellent, for it will excel every thing before done in this part of the work.

October 29, 1853. E. J. Hamill.

Blountsville District, Ala.—The work of the Lord is gloriously progressing in almost every appointment in the bounds of this District. At some places we have had quite refreshing seasons from the presence of the Lord. We shall be enabled to report a handsome increase in the membership from this mountain region the present year. To God be all the glory. L. B. McDonald.

METHODIST PRESS.

Increasing the Bishops.—The Richmond Advocate quotes our late article under the head of Methodist Press which notices that the S. C. Advocate joins in the call for a strengthened Episcopacy. The editor "heartily coincides" with both:

Among the grave matters thought to be incumbent upon the approaching General Conference of the Southern Church is the augmentation of the number of our Bishops. Several of our contemporaries have taken ground in favor of a large numerical increase of these chief pastors of the Church. We desire to unite with them in the expression of opinion on the subject. It seems to us that sound policy dictates the proposed measure, i. e., if it is desirable to have Bishops for any other object besides presiding over Annual and occupying the Chair of the General Conference. If this is all we desire of the Episcopacy, perhaps, there are already enough. But if they are to exert any influence out of this limit, to visit and preach in places where Conferences are not held, to exercise their Ministry in the Church, and to give the weight and authority of their presence and counsels to those who need them most, and will most appreciate them, then we think there ought to be many more added to the list of Bishops. A variety of considerations might be urged in support of this opinion that we reserve for some future occasion. Intending mainly to introduce the subject to our readers, and also to lay before them, the views of two of our contemporaries, we are indisposed, and without the leisure to make any extended remarks.

Itinerant Bishops.—A correspondent of the Memphis Advocate, signing himself Paul, puts his ideas on paper with a good deal of force and clearness on this subject. We have heard it talked over a good deal in private circles, but now, for the first time, see the plan in print. It, (or the substance of it, with little modifications) has many and strong friends—to our knowledge. "Paul" begins at the beginning. Speaking of the principle of an Itinerant Ministry as a New Testament one—it may become nominal, but must not be abandoned. How can it be revived? This brings him to the point of an Itinerant Episcopacy. Verily the sight of a Bishop moving—going to his District—leaving one Parsonage, with family and chattels, for another—why it would set the whole church in motion. It would put the preachers on rollers."

Saith this Paul:

We cannot conceive of any plan for the renovation of the Itinerancy, which will not include its head and front—the Episcopacy. We have nothing to say against the venerable men who fill the office; the whole face of matters has changed since Bishop Asbury visited yearly every Conference and almost every part of the work; to do this now, would not be desirable, even if it were possible. The work has so extended itself on every side, that many men are required to cultivate the ground that then required but one; and yet by judicious arrangements the work might as well be done now as then. As it is, our Bishops sometimes have their field of labor hundreds of miles from their residence, and are compelled to spend months together from their families; and this is not the only evil; many portions of the work are never seen by our Bishops, unless they pass over them in their hurried flight from one Annual Conference to another, and many old and venerable members of the Church have never looked upon one of their faces; thus the almost incalculable benefits which would be realized by the Church from the active personal oversight and ministrations of these our Chief Shepherds, is altogether lost.

To remedy, as far as may, be, these evils, we propose the following plan, which we hope will have the effect of drawing the thoughts of our brethern to the subject, and leading them to suggest any thing they may suppose to be better.

First, That the whole work be divided into eight Episcopal Districts. California being one.

Second, That there be as many effective Bishops, as Districts, and that each District receive its Superintendent at the General Conference, to serve for the ensuing four years.

Third, That it be ineligible for a Bishop to serve on the same District for a succession of more than four years, or to return to it until after an interregnum of eight years.

Fourth, That a Bishop's parsonage be provided on each District, at which it shall be expected that the Bishop reside, and that it be furnished with every necessary appurtenance for comfort and convenience.

Fifth, That in addition to attending and presiding at the sessions of the Annual Conference in this District, the Bishop be expected, at some time during his term of four years, to visit if possible every presiding Elder's District in his bounds.

Getting the Case.—A correspondent of the N. W. Christian Advocate, writing from the seat of the Gennessee Conference, very good humoredly hits off the eloquent agents of our benovolent institutions in the following style:

We have had the usual number of agents, all of them quite sure that their one idea is, or ought to be, the idea of the world, and many of us were half inclined to believe it so, at least as long as they were pleading their several causes. We were like the Dutch judge, who, on hearing the attorney for the plaintiff, said, "You be got the case," and on listening to the attorney for the defendant, remarks, "Now you be got the case." The fact is, we gave the case to all of them.

Father Sleer who is gathering up bricks for the Metropolitan Church, made us believe that as the United States are in the centre of the world, and as Washington is the metropolis of the States, and as Methodism is the metropolis of all evangelical isms, so of course we should have a metropolitan church, worth not less than $50,000. Of course we gave him the case.

Next came on that indescribable, nervous, vivacious compound of New England clay "wet up with lightning"—Rev. A. Stevens, with his tract cause. I should like to sketch his speech; but you might as well attempt to daguerreotype chain lightning. A sketch would look about as well, compared with his speech as pronounced before the Conference, as he once said the D. D. would look appended to his name. On declining the compliment when offered by a certain college, he remarked, that the D. D. would befit his name about as much as a donkey's ears would befit his head.

The tract cause of course was the cause. The prophets and apostles, and Luther and Wesley, were tract writers and distributers, of course we should be. As the press was the emblem of earthly omnipotence, as tracts were the voice of the press, as Methodism was charged with the religious guidance of one-fifth of all the minds in the United States, and as our denominational theology was peculiar, so we should have a denominational tract society, and all the Conferences should be committed to its support. We had nothing to do but to give the ease to Brother Stevens, and our money to the Tract cause.

Then came Dr. Kidder, pleading right earnestly the cause of the Sunday Schools. His predecessors had all won their case; but what was the Metropolitan Church or the Tract cause to the Sunday School enterprise? Who were the Sunday School scholars but miniature Congressmen, tract writers and distributers? As the "boy is the father of the man," and as it was the Sunday School that made the boy, could anything be made more clear than that Sunday Schools and the Sunday School cause was of the first importance?

Bro. Kidder got the case—they all have it, and let all the people say amen."

The Imprisoned Nightingale.—A peasant one day went to the mansion of a distinguished man. There he heard a bird sing in a gilded cage. He drew nearer to it, and beheld it was a nightingale. With a feeling of sadness he leaned upon his staff and listened.

Presently, the servant of the rich man came to him and said: "At what dost thou wonder, and wherefore standest thou here musing thus?"

"I wonder," answered the peasant, "that your master can bear to hear that sad complaint of the imprisoned bird in its splendid habitation."

"Thou fool!" replied one of the servants, "does the song of the nightingale seem sad to thee in thy fields and groves?"

"Not so," answered the peasant, "there, on the contrary, it fills my soul with joy and admiration."

"And are its notes different here?" asked the man, with a smile of mockery,

"Certainly," replied the peasant. "Our nightingales, amid bruuches covered with leaves and blossoms, proclaim the praises of reviving nature; they sing beneath the azure sky the song of liberty, and over their brooding mates the notes of love."

At these words the servants laughed scornfully, and called the peasant a simple clown.

But the peasant held his peace, and returned to his cottage and his fields. [Mrs. St. Simon.

The editor of a Western paper says: "We witnessed two important days while in Washington. The first was the fourth of March, and the other was March fourth." The first was most interesting—the latter the most solemn.

The Nation of London.

It was a most heavenly day in May of this year, (1800,) when I first beheld and first entered this mighty wilderness, the city—not the city, but the nation—of London. Often since then, at distances of two or three hundred miles or more from this colossal emporium of commerce, wealth, arts, and intellectual power, have I felt the sublime expression of her enormous magnitude in one simple form of ordinary occurrence; viz: in the vast droves of cattle, supposed upon the great north roads, all with their heads directed to London, and expounding the size of the attracting body, together with the force of its attractive power, by the ever-enduring succession of those droves, and the remoteness from the capital of the lines upon which they are moving. A suction so powerful, felt along radii so vast, and a consciousness, at the same time, that upon other radii still more vast, both by land and sea, the same suction is operating, night and day, summer and winter, and hurrying forever into one centre the infinite means needed for her infinite purposes, crowds the imagination with a pomp to which there is nothing corresponding upon this planet, either among the things that have been, or the things that are. Or, if any exception there is, it must be sought in ancient Rome. We, upon this occasion, were in an open carriage, as I chiefly (as I imagined) to avoid the dust, we approached London by rural lanes, where any such could be found, or at least, along by roads quiet and shady, collateral to the main roads. In this mode of approach, we missed some features of sublimity belonging to any of the approaches upon a main road; we missed the whirl and the uproar, the tumult and the agitation, which continually thicken and thicken throughout the last dozen miles before you reach the suburbs.

Already, at the three stages' distance, (my forty miles from London,) upon some of the greatest roads, the dim presentiment of some vast capital reaches you obscurely, and like a misgiving. The blind sympathy with a mighty but unseen object, some vast magnetic range of Alps, in your neighborhood, continues to increase, you know not how. Arrived at the last station for changing horses, Barnet, suppose, on the western, you no longer think (as in all other places) of naming the next stage; nobody says, on pulling up, "Horses on to London"—that would sound ludicrous; one mighty idea broods over all minds, making it impossible to suppose any other destination. Launched upon the final stage, you soon begin to feel yourself entering the stream as if it were of a Norwegian maelstrom; and the stream at length becomes the rush of a cataract. What is meant by the Latin word trepidatio! Not anything peculiarly connected with panic; it belongs to the hurrying to and fro of a common battle, as of a coming fight; to a marriage festival as much as to a massacre; agitation is the nearest English word. The trepidation increases both audibly and visibly at every half mile, pretty much as one may suppose the roar of Niagara and the thrilling of the ground to grow upon the senses in the last ten miles of approach, with the wind in its favor, until at length it would absorb and extinguish all other sounds whatsoever.

Finally, for miles before you reach the suburb of London, such as Islington, for instance, a last great sign and augury of the immensity which belongs to the coming metropolis forces itself on the dullest observer, in the growing sense of his utter insignificance. Everywhere else in England, you, yourself, horses, carriage, attendants (if you travel with any,) are regarded with attention, perhaps even curiosity; at all events you are seen. But after passing the final post-house on every avenue to London, for the latter ten or twelve miles, you become aware that you are no longer noticed; nobody regards you; nobody hears you; nobody regards you; you do not even regard yourself. In fact, how should you, at the moment of first ascertaining your own total unimportance in the sum of things—a poor shivering unit in the aggregate of human life? Now, for the first time, whatever manner of man you were, or seemed to be at starting, squire or "squireen" lord or lordling, and however related to that city, hamlet, or solitary house, from which yesterday or today you slipped your cable—beyond disguise you find yourself but one wave in a total Atlantic, one plant (and a parasitical plant besides, needing a alien props) in a forest of America.

These are feelings which do not belong by preference to thoughtful people—far less to people merely sentimental. No man was ever left to himself the first time in the streets, as yet unknown, of London, but he must have been saddened and mortified, perhaps terrified, by the sense of desertion and utter loneliness which belongs to his situation. No loneliness can be like that which weighs upon the heart in the centre of faces never-ending without voice or utterance for him; eyes innumerable, that have "no speculation in their orbs which he can understand; and hurrying figures of men and women weaving to and fro, with no apparent purpose intelligible to a stranger, seeming like a mask of maniacs, or, oftentimes, like a pageant of phantoms. The great length of the streets in many quarters of London; the continual opening of transient glimpses into other vistas equally far-stretching, going on at right-angles to the one to which you are traversing; and the murky atmosphere which, settling upon the remoter end of every long avenue, wraps its termination in gloom and uncertainty; all these are circumstances aiding that sense of vastness and illimitable proportions which forever brood over the aspect of London in its interior. [De Quincey.

Gone Astray.—Cold words to fall on a loving heart—he has gone astray. And this the time to desert him? This is the time to taunt him with words that roll like lava from your passion, and only scar his soul? No! he passes under clouds; be his light now; perhaps he has no other.

Many a true heart, that would have come back like the dove to the ark, after its first transgression, has been frightened beyond recall by the angry look and menace, the taunt, the charity of an unforgiving soul. Be careful how you freeze the first warm emotions of repentance. Beware lest those pleading words, unheeded, sting you in some shadowy vale of your future sorrow. Repentence, changed by neglect or unkindness, becomes like melted iron hardened in the mould; trifle with it never. Be the first to meet the erring with outstretched arms. Wipe the tear from his eye—pour the balm of consolation on the wound that guilt has made. Let you hearts be the grave for his transgressions, your pity find vent in bearing his burden, not in useless words. O forgive the erring! Did not He who died on Calvary? Shield him from the contempt of grosser minds; make brightness and beauty where all was cloud and storm before in his sad life.

Romance in Married Life.—A married couple in Paris, after living on bad terms for some time, resolved, a few days ago to separate. They sold off all their furniture; but, finding that the sum it realized was not very important, they proposed to commit suicide; and they went to the Canal St. Martin to execute the design. The husband leaped in first, but after awhile, being a capital swimmer, he raised his head above water, and perceived his wife standing quietly on the bank watching him. He began abusing her and said, according to their agreement she ought to drown herself. Instead of complying, however, she accused him of intending to let her drown whilst he saved himself by swimming. He called on her to plunge in at once, but she refused. Thereupon, he got out of the water and gave her a tremendous whipping. Some persons who came up, went to seek the guard, and the loving pair were immediately arrested. On being questioned, they made the facts known.

Carpet for the President's House.—It is stated that a gorgeous carpet has just been finished at Glasgow, Scotland, for the White House at Washington. It measures 80 feet long by 40 feet broad; the portion woven in the loom without a seam being 72 feet by 31 feet; and the remainder consists of a handsome border sewn on. The filling in of the carpet is a ruby and crimson damask, with three tasteful medallions in the centre, and a rich cornerpiece to correspond. The medallions are filled up with boquets of flowers, designed and executed with magnificent taste. The entire piece weighs upwards of a ton, and is valued at $2500. [Balt. Sun.

Sweet Thought.—Whenever we find our temper rallied toward a parent, a wife, a sister, or a brother, we should pause and think, that in a few more months or years, they will be in the spirit land, watching over us, or perchance we shall be there watching over them left behind. OBITUARY:

I never witnessed such a complete triumph of Divine Grace over suffering, affliction and death, as that exhibited in a youthful disciple the subject of this brief memoir.

EDWIN PECK MAY, son of the late John and Virginia May, was born April 30, 1838, and departed this life in this place, (Greensboro', Ala.,) last evening, October 21, about eleven o'clock. When about four years old, he received an internal injury by a fall from a carriage, which permanently affected his health. This prevented his remaining at school except at short periods together. He was however, of quick apprehension and good memory. About eighteen months ago his injury resulted in a rheumatic affection of a confirmed and constitutional character. My acquaintance commenced with him in the spring of this year, but was but of a passing character, until about three weeks since, when I was sent for to visit him in his last illness. About this time he experienced converting Grace, and a marked change was manifested by the meek and patient spirit which hitherto irascible and impetuous by nature, had grown fretful and impatient by disease. I found his mind clear and bright, and well stored with Scripture truths and promises. The spirit of quiet submission and of joyous exultation was soon manifested and never has it been my let to witness so complete a triumph of the free spirit over the pains and agonies of the afflicted body as in the case of this little sufferer. His body, emaciated and attenuated to the least possible dimensions, was racked with almost constant pain, and yet visiting him daily I found him ever joyous and exultant. His assurance was perfect, and his sky undimaged by a single flitting cloud. At his request I baptized him, and on another occasion the Sacrament of the Supper was administered. I scarce ever witnessed such rapturous joy as broke from him on these occasions. The whole household, white and black, were called in by him to partake of his joy. Hearing a sob escape his weeping mother, he exclaimed, "O, mother, why not rejoice with me; I am going to a home where there are no tears, no sorrow, no pain. I thought once I could not give you up, could not part with you, but now I have given you up, given all up for my Saviour. O I feel his everlasting arms are under me; I feel like I was in his arms all the time!" We sung "Why should we start and fear to die." "Bless the Lord," he exclaimed, "I have no fear. Ready, more than willing, and yet God's will be done. If he will that I should lie here and suffer, yet an hundred years, I know it is right—his will be done. O my precious Saviour was mangled and suffered on a cross, while I only suffer here in a bed, surrounded by friends."

Thus he continued daily and hourly to talk, exhorting all to meet him in Heaven. His favorite expression was "Bless the Lord, O my Soul." His favorite hymns "Thou art gone to the grave," etc.; "The Old Ship of Zion," and "O Sing to me of Heaven." He would frequently shout aloud and slap his hands while we prayed or sung with him.

I was with him on the last night to within a few minutes of his dissolution. His vision became dim, and his words occasionally incoherent, but his consciousness was perfect and his sky bright. He seemed to struggle hard for breath and ease, and occasionally a moan and outcry of pain would be wrung from him, but it was always mingled or terminated by a line of some favorite hymn, and an attempt to sing such as "What never part again!" and "When we've been there ten thousand years." His last words to me were, "I know Jesus loves me," and I may say he died shouting, in scarce audible tones, the chorus "Oh Hallelujah!"

Thus set in a sea radiant with his reflections of gospel glory, his little sun of life. May its parting rays long gild the leaflets of memory in the hearts of his friends and family.

Greensboro, Ala., Oct. 22, 1853.

At Spring Ridge, Hinds county, Miss., MARGARET AMELIA, daughter of Jesse and Nancy Thompson, born March 24, 1836, joined the M. E. Church when quite small, and received into full membership before she was twelve years old, and a short time after was soundly converted to God. On the 5th day of October, 1853, she died in the full triumphs of faith, after patiently enduring several days sickness. She called her friends to her side, and bade each farewell, telling them not to weep for her, but to take good care of her little brother, then upon a bed of languishing. She gave directions as to her coffin and burial, as calmly as though she was talking about every day matters, requesting her friends to sing to her that sweet hymn commencing

"O sing to me of Heaven."

This amiable young lady was much attached to her Bible class and Sunday school, and her place, I fear will not be easily filled. But she has gone to a better world, giving strong assurances to those who prized her on earth, that she is now a part of their treasure in Heaven. How appropriately may it be said—

> The blossom opening to the day,
> By dawn of Heavan refined,
> Could naught of purity display,
> To emulate her mind.

Departed this life September 20, 1853, Sister NANCY CENTERFIT, wife of Henry Centerfit, and daughter of J. L. and K. A. Gafny, born in Fairfield District, S. C., September 15, 1802, joined the M. E. Church as a seeker of religion in the 24th year of her age, and professed conversion about a year afterwards under the ministry of the Rev. John Reynolds, of the S. C. Conference. Although of a naturally doubtful cast of mind, she occasionally had very clear manifestations of God's love. Soon after their arrival in Alabama, her name was entered on the Church Register, and there remained untarnished till registered (we trust) on high. She has been seriously afflicted for the last twenty years, but always evinced the spirit of the resigned Christian.

Several times during her last attack she had very clear manifestations of her acceptance. When she was thought to be dying, and in a very happy frame of mind, she called her physician and family to her bedside for the last parting—and what a scene it was—after thanking the former for his kind attentions, exhorting him and his kind family to meet her in Heaven, she bade him adieu. Then in a similar manner she gave directions to her family, urging them all to meet her in that happy, happy land, commending them to God and the word of his grace. She passed away in a most happy and triumphant manner from the sorrows of earth to the joys of Heaven, where "the wicked cease from troubling, and the weary are at rest."

General Intelligence.

END OF THE SUGAR WAR.—A gentleman who is at the head of a commercial house here has furnished us with the following extract of a letter received by him from a correspondent in New York. The decision referred to puts an end to the much talked of concentrated molasses question:

The Board of General Appraisers have just rendered their decision in the much talked of case of Belcher & Bro., St. Louis, the concentrated molasses question. The invoices of those gentleman have, so far as the price of the merchandise is concerned—the real question at issue, by the way—been fully approved. This is completely exculpatory of the Messrs. B. & B. from the charge of undervaluation, so generally, and, as it is now apparent, unjustly preferred against them. The appraisers at large, have, however, added twenty-five cents each to the value of each barrel, and have also decided that an export duty should be charged on the molasses in their invoices, although none is exacted in Cuba. They did this, probably, because of the character of the article approximating sugar, and particulary as it carries sugar duties. You are aware that Additional charges to invoices carry no pencilrice. This case has excited much attention here as well as in New Orleans, and the complete vindication of Belcher & Bro. from any improper conduct in the matter, has given satisfaction.

Louisiana Interior.

We learn by the Baton Rouge Comet that Rev. A. H. Lamon, of West Baton Rouge, died at his residence on Friday morning of yellow fever. Mr. Lamon was pastor to a large congregation at Baton Rouge, and will leave a large circle of acquaintance by whom he was ardently beloved. Mr. Lamon was the whig candidate for Superintendent of Public Education in this State.

The Baton Rouge Advocate of the 27th, speaking of the health of that city, says: "On Tuesday there were four deaths in town from yellow fever, and yesterday there was one new case. Taking these facts into consideration, together with the variable weather which has prevailed since the frost, our physicians and the Board of Health advise our citizens not to return to town. It is better to wait yet a little longer."

We learn from the Red River Republican, published at Alexandria, that the planters in that vicinity have commenced grinding cane, which is yielding well, and turning out an excellent article of sugar.

The Republican informs us that the epidemic is still raging in Alexandria, with little decrease of mortality since our last advices from that place. For the week ending the 22d there were twelve deaths by the yellow fever, among which was James T. Flint, Esq., an attorney of that place, and a man of eminent talent.

SHREVEPORT.—The pestilence appears to be raging in this village with little abatement since our last advices. For the week ending the 12th there were 24 deaths from yellow fever. For the week ending the 18th, there were 20, showing only a decrease of four upon the returns of the preceding week. The Democrat of the 13th has the following:

THE ABSENT.—Stay, away yet longer; there is still no improvement in the health of our town. Many are sick—many are dead since our last issue. One day hope is in the ascendant, the next day it is dashed to the earth. It is a grievous sight to witness the manly form struggling with the terrible enemy, after passing unscathed to the present time. The most devoted—the most actively benevolent are stricken down. All ages, conditions and habits of life fare alike. Three medical men are dead, four are now sick, one only has escaped entirely, Dr. Clarke.

Considerable consternation was created among the few remaining citizens of the village, says the Caddo Gazette of the 15th, by a rumor that a plot was on foot to de-troy Shreveport by fire by a gang of runaway negroes headed by several white men. The rumor however proved to be totally unfounded.

The Pointe Coupee Echo, of the 20th ult., says:

On the morning of the 25th, we were gratified at seeing the face of Nature completely covered with hoar frost, and we have been assured that ice was also found in different parts of the parish. On the night of the 26th fell the heaviest rains that we remember. It was accompanied by wind, thunder and lightning, and must have thoroughly purged the atmosphere of the deleterious influences from which we have lately suffered much. If after these wintry visitations, any new cases of yellow fever occur, we will be much disappointed and completely at fault as to the causes which put an end to the Southern epidemic.

The cane in our parish is yielding finely and all the circumstances of the weather have as yet been in its favor. We hardly hope, however, that it will come up to the monster crop of last season. Our planters find it very hard to procure hands from abroad in consequence of the opinion entertained of the state of health prevailing in Pointe Coupee. We are confident that in our next issue we will be able to announce the entire disappearance of all sickness.

We find in the Red River Republican, published at Alexandria, the following:

We are happy to say that the yellow fever appears to have ceased in our midst. Two heavy frosts, and long continued North winds, have put an end to its dreadful career. There has been no death or new case of it here for several days, and of the old cases there remain only one or two in town and two or three in the country.

The fever at Clinton has nearly subsided. The Whig of the 29th says there has been but four new cases for the last four days.

The Whig gives the following list of those who have died since the 24th of September:

Mrs Mary Saunders, Br W M Stone, Mrs Emily White, Ernest Rist jr, Frank. Mayer, Maley, Mrs Caroline Wharton, Benj Butler, Miss Sophia Canfield, S W Watkins, Major Montgomery, Thomas Blackmon, Capt John Killian, A H Killian, Charles Leyden, R L Bell, T Dreyfuss, James Oair, Adam Raupp, Samuel Lee jr, Mdrat, B Melchior, John Cantelin, Caroline Koch, infant of B F Wharton, infant of Mr Koch, infant of Dr Langworthy, Edward Tilden, Hiram Foreman, Mrs Bass, A German, three sons of Mr Hyman, sister of Mrs Dreyfuss, H Kaucas, A J Garrison, Miss P Killian, Miss Jane Wood, Mrs Butler, Watson Ward, Frances, daughter of F W Ward, Postmaster, B W Hatch, Mayor of Clinton, Meyer, Mrs Jackson, Mrs Ann Silliman, Mrs Bets, Mrs Louisa Wynn, Russel Button, B Adler.

Five negroes have died since the commencement of the sickness.

The Franklin Banner, of the 27th ult., reports the fever to be still raging in that town, and in that vicinity, with little abatement. Ten deaths had occurred in that parish since the last issue of that paper.

The Baton Rouge Gazette notices, on the 28th ult., in that city, the death of Hon. James S. Bailey, who was a member of the last Legislature of this State.

Mobile Items.

The Advertiser of the 1st inst. has the following items:

"The Cry is Still they Come."—The steamer Octavia arrived on Sunday with one hundred and eight cabin passengers and nine hundred and eighty-seven bales of cotton.

The Pilot Town, on the same night, brought down sixty-two cabin passengers and seven hundred and forty-nine bales of cotton. Both boats are from Montgomery.

Rumors.—Our citizens, who have been spending the summer at the south, are now returning with great rapidity. Over three hundred have arrived within the past thirty-six hours. Royal street presents quite a lively aspect at this moment.

Mississippi.

The fever appears to be abating at Jackson. The Mississippian of the 28th ult says:

Since our issue of the 14th instant the epidemic has raged with increased violence in this community. During the past week, however, there has been a decided abatement. The number of cases have been fewer, and the disease less malignant. For the last twenty-four hours we have heard of no new case. On Tuesday morning last there was a white frost, and we were encouraged to hope that the scourge would take its final departure from our afflicted city; but an Wednesday night and yesterday there was a marked change in the weather favorable to the continuance of the fever, and we now apprehend the prospect was definitive. We do not feel that, in view of the existing state of the weather, and the fact that there are a number of cases still in town, it would be proper for us to advise our absent friends to return.

HEALTH OF VICKSBURG.—The Whig of the 27th says, relative to the health of that city: "We are very anxious to see our friends return home, but we confess that the greetings of those who returned on yesterday were not as cordial as they would have been if we could have felt assured that all was safe. We hear of some new cases since frost, but they are not unexpected—the seeds of the disease were in the system before the change in the weather. We hope to be able to chronicle another frost in a few days."

The Vicksburg Whig of the 29th ult notices the death of Capt P. C. Wallis, who died of yellow fever at Yazoo City on the 25th ult. The Whig has the following relative to the health of Vicksburg:

Very many of our citizens who have been absent during the prevalence of the epidemic, have returned home. Many, however, are yet absent, waiting to hear of such an atmospheric change as will render it perfectly safe for them to return. We believe that the opinion is general, that no one can return with safety till we have another good frost. We give no advice, but simply state what is the current opinion, so far as we have been able to gather it.

The Port Gibson Herald of the 28th has the following items:

RAILROAD.—The work on the Railroad will be resumed on Tuesday next, and vigorously prosecuted. Mr. Crump will commence with seventy-five hands and increase his force in a short time to one hundred.

HEALTH.—The frost on last Monday night was a most welcome visitor. The boon was seen in several places in our town, on Tuesday morning there was great rejoicing among our citizens, and it was believed that our troubles were at an end. The opinion is entertained by physicians and others, that no cases of yellow fever will hereafter occur among those who had not at that time the seed of the disease in their systems. We understand that many of our citizens in the country are making preparations for a speedy return to town.

MISSISSIPPI.—There seems to be little or no abatement of the fever at Yazoo City at last dates. Among the recent deaths are Dr. Mills and Mr. A. S. Perkins, editor of the Democrat.

At Biloxi several cases of fever have recently occurred, but few of them have terminated fatally. There was a slight frost on the morning of the 25th.

Alabama.

The Greensborough Beacon of the 28th ult. says:

After a moderate and most acceptable rain last Sunday night, the weather turned much cooler, and on Monday night (the 24th) we had quite a heavy frost. Cotton on the bleck lands, as also on low and damp places generally, was killed. The cane and corn, except on the low places, was not entirely killed, though even that suffered very considerably.

HEALTH OF MONTGOMERY, ALA.—The epidemic appears to have nearly ended its ravages in this city. The Advertiser of the 26th says:

As we have already mentioned, we had a very heavy, killing frost on Monday night. At the time we write (Wednesday evening) the weather is cool and cloudy, with a prospect of heavy rain. All this betokens that the "sickly season" is over, and we may reasonably hope that disease has taken his flight from amongst us.

The Montgomery Times of the 29th ult. says, relative to the health of that city:

Upon inquiry we can hear of no new cases of the fever since the cold weather set in. We therefore say to our country friends and absent citizens that they may now come in with entire safety. Our premises are ready with a heavy stock for the fall trade, and certainly they ought to be well patronized, to make up for the lost time caused by the suicidal panic that was raised. The cotton buyers also are anxious to commence business, and we expect ere long for our streets to assume their usual busy appearance at this season of the year.

The Whig, published at Eaton, Greene county, says:

"The Circuit Court for this county adjourned on Tuesday evening last. J. H. Caldwell, indicted for killing R. H. Kennon, was acquitted."

The Selma Sentinel of the 29th ult., says the Alabama River at that place had been rising since the Wednesday previous. The fever in Selma has nearly subsided. The Sentinel gives the following statistics: "Since the 13th of October, the day on which the first death from yellow fever occurred, there have been 38 deaths in the city, 25 of which were from yellow fever. Of the 38 deaths there were 25 whites and 13 blacks."

COTTON CROPS.—The Statesman, published at Butler, Choctaw county, Ala., has the following item relative to the cotton crop:

"So far as we have been able to learn, the cotton crops in this county are generally short. The weather, though, is fine for gathering what has been made.

THE FROST—COTTON CROP, ETC.—The Charleston Mercury of the 27th ult. says that the frost of the Tuesday previous has extended throughout the cotton-growing regions. By the following extract of a letter in the Mercury, dated Lagrange, October 25, it seems the frost has extended to the Ohettahoochee:

Last night we had a killing frost, and all cotton is killed perfectly dead. The crops in this section will be materially cut off.

The Savannah Journal of the 26th says:

There was a heavy frost in Augusta yesterday morning, and though it made but little show upon the ground, owing to the rains of the day previous, the roofs of the houses were white as with snow. We presume the frost was very general throughout the State, and higher up the country. It has doubtless left an unwelcome mark upon the cotton crops. The potato vines for several miles this side of Augusta have been effectually blighted by the cold.

The Cotton Crop.—In some parts of this county the cotton crop is considerably exceeding that of last year, while in others it is falling very short. On the whole, we doubt if the aggregate production will vary much from the last crop. In the neighboring section of Georgia, especially in the plantations on the river, there is a great falling off. [Eufaula (Ala.) Spirit of the South.

The First Snow.—The Chattanooga Gazette of the 25th ult says that quite a snow fell night before last on the mountains, and could be seen yesterday morning from this place. Old Lookout looked as though she had put on her winter cap.

WEATHER IN TENNESSEE.—The Nashville Gazette of the 22d says: "There seems to be a general drouth all through this section of country. It is fine weather for the cotton crops, but from the long absence of water, the creeks, etc., are becoming quite dry. There is little done in the way of shipping in the city at present. The river is still falling, and is now nearly at low water mark."

WEATHER AT BALTIMORE.—The weather yesterday was decidedly winterish, and coming so early on the heel of the pleasant weather of last week, was not at all agreeable. Early in the morning the snow fell heavily and perseveringly, and a cold northwest storm prevailed throughout the day. At night, however, the skies cleared, and we have the prospect of a fine day for the opening of the Agricultural Fair. [American, 26th ult.

WEATHER AT WASHINGTON.—The atmosphere raw and chilling, sharp winds, the heavens clouded, the streets sloppy, overcoats in demand, and fires necessary within doors—with alternate falls of rain, hail, and snow, (the latter not immediately melting, as is usual with the first of the season.) We yesterday had sudden wintry weather following the dry, bland, and bright Indian summer. [Sentinel 25th.

SLEIGHING IN OCTOBER.—Persons who arrived in the city yesterday from western portions of the State, and from Pennsylvania, report a depth of snow of some eight or nine inches on the ground, and over which they had a merry sleigh ride, some of them, eight or ten miles, in coming to the cars. The country people generally—that is, such as were not of the immense throng coming to Baltimore to attend the Agricultural Show and Institute Fair—were getting out their jingling teams for "good time" among the lads and lassies in sleigh-riding. In the upper part of Montgomery and Frederick counties there was quite a hard crust on the snow. Southward, the storm on Monday extended as far as Richmond, Va., where snow fell in the afternoon, and fires and overcoats were very necessary. [Balt. Sun, 26th ult.

FIERCE AND HORRIBLE DEATH.—Arthur Stevenson, a confirmed inebriate, in Concord, Lewis county Ky., about eighteen and a half miles above this city, went home drunk late on Saturday night, and while carelessly walking about the room with a candle in his hand, it is supposed accidentally set fire to the musquito bar of the bed in which his wife lay asleep. The flames spread so fast that before Mrs. Stevenson could get out of bed her clothes were all on fire and she was burned almost to death, surviving but a few hours. The house was burned to the ground, with its contents. The old man was going about on yesterday talking wildly like a lunatic, and refusing to believe that his wife was burned to death [Louisville Democrat.

THE NEW YORK THEATRES.—The New York Herald gives the following table of the receipts, expenditures and profits of the six theatres of New York:

	Receipts.	Expenses.	Profits.
Broadway Theatre	$800	$300	$500
Burtou's "	450	300	150

ARAGO.—The correspondent of the New York Commercial Advertiser writes as follows of the last hours of Arago:

On his death-bed and on the day of his death, he revised for a new edition, his tract on thunder, and sent one of his secretaries to find out the exact length of certain undulations in a given column of air. Three hours before his death, he said to M. Biot—his colleague in the meridian experiments in Spain—"I must hand in my resignation as Perpetual Secretary of the Academy, as I can no longer fill the duties." "Very well, do," replied M. Biot, "and we will all come in procession, to give it back to you, and reproach you for your ingratitude."

Africanizing Cuba

[From the Washington Union, Oct 29.]

The rumors which have prevailed for some time, as to the interference of Great Britain in the slavery question in Cuba, are revived, such circumstances of corroboration so strong that there is but little room left for doubt as to their truth. It has been about twelve years if our memory is not at fault since Sir Robert Peel justified the proposition to indemnify the owners of slaves in Jamaica for their emancipation, upon the ground that the measure of abolishing slavery in that island would exert an influence upon this continent and that twenty millions of pounds sterling would be well-spent for such an object. That policy, as we believe, has been steadily pursued by the British Government, and is now actually consummated or about being consummated, in the scheme of introducing apprentices from Africa into Cuba with the consent of Spain, and under the protection of British ships of war, to be worked for ten years as slaves, with the further agreement that slavery shall cease to exist in the island at the end of ditty years. We have reason to believe, from our private advices from Havana, that the wealthy Spaniards in Cuba are now negotiating for the sale of African apprentices at fixed prices, in anticipation of importations, for which arrangements have been made with the Government of Madrid, and sanctioned and guaranteed by the British Government. In the spirit of free-spoken freedom which ought to be the ruling characteristic of an American press, we deem it our duty to call the attention of the American people to the information derived from these significant facts. It becomes us to survey them with calmness and determination. We would not indulge in passionate denunciation, but we would speak as we would have our Government to act, with promptness, firmness, and energy.

As a question of humanity, the practical execution of the scheme of Africanizing Cuba is revolting to human nature. It has but to be looked at in this point of view to see in it a retrial, in its most hideous form, of the slave-trade. It is to be remembered that the condition of the apprentice, for the ten years of his servitude, is to be stripped of those features in the slavery of the United States which make humanity of treatment an object of interest as well as of duty to the owner. The apprentice is to be sold into bondage for ten years, and during that period to be subjected to such system of labor and treatment as will prove most profitable to the exactions of unfeeling avarice. Ten years of such bondage will be infinitely worse than a lifetime of three score years and ten of the slavery which exists in the Southern States. Ten years will become the limit of physical capability in the apprentice; and if he survives this limit with his life, it will only be his lot to take his freedom with no capacity to enjoy it. On the mere question of humanity, the sentiment of the civilized world ought to rise up, and denounce it as too shockingly barbarous to be tolerated.

But it is our duty to look at the movement in its intended and its probable bearing upon our national interests; and in this point of view it presents a question of momentous magnitude. Forming our opinion upon well authenticated historical facts, we are justified in attributing to Great Britain now the same motive which Sir Robert Peel avowed in regard to the abolition of slavery in Jamaica—the motive of exerting an influence on the institutions of the United States. If that motive was sufficiently strong in regard to Jamaica to induce so distinguished a British statesman to advocate an expenditure of twenty millions of pounds, how much more potent may we not suppose the inducement to be was in the African-ization of Cuba! That the question is not confined in its range to the probable influence which a nation of free negroes may exert upon the institutions of the Southern States, and, consequently, upon the integrity of the federal Union. Viewed in this light, the efficient action of our Government is invoked by the most obvious principles of self-preservation.

Bearing in mind that this movement originates with, or at least owes all of its hopes of success to the counsels and the interferences of Great Britain, we cannot avoid the conclusion that as it is to be executed under the guarantee of the British navy, so it must be made effectual by a continued British protectorate over the Island of Cuba. The effect is the transfer of Cuba from Spain to Great Britain—making it substantially a British instead of a Spanish province or colony. In this aspect of the case, the decided action of our Government is demanded by that universally approved American sentiment, which is prepared to resist, at all hazards, any attempt of any European power to interfere with the affairs of this continent. Upon all these grounds the intelligence from Cuba indicates the approach of a crisis which must settle the destiny of the Island. We have every assurance in the past course of the President and his cabinet, that they will discharge their duty with firmness and courage; whilst we have equal guarantee that their action will be the result of the most deliberate and patriotic convictions.

In view of a crisis so momentous, the heart of the patriot President must swell with emotions of national pride to know that, with the exception of a few contemptible fanatics, he will be backed and sustained to the last extremity in his determination to follow the dictates of humanity, to guard the constitutional rights of all the States, to preserve the integrity of the Federal Union, and to resist the aggressions of British monarchy, by the united voice and energies of a people who are jealous of their honor, who are informed of their rights, and who are ready to stake life, liberty, and property on the preservation of both. By all these considerations of interest, of honor, of blood, we have appealed to Great Britain to desist from her mad interference in our domestic concerns; but our appeal has been in vain, and we shall be compelled to throw ourselves back upon our rights; and our Government, guided by a helmsman who knows neither fear nor dishonor, must stand by these rights, and leave the consequences to an overruling Providence.

THE "SHORT BOYS."—Senator Dickinson, in a recent speech at Rochester, gives the following striking description of the bullies said to have been taken by the softshells to Syracuse, for the purpose of controlling the proceedings of the convention. Any one who has visited New York will recognize the truth of the picture:

There was there, said Mr. Dickinson, to take part in the proceedings of the convention, the spawn of a general jail delivery from the city of New York; the black vomit of the Tombs and Blackwell's Island; the bilge, slitted ears, broken noses, blear eyes, and on an average only about two whole ones to three men; creatures vagrant as Lazarus and murderous as Cain; mutated with disease; foul with stench; creeping with vermin; shaggy with drunken ferocity, and armed with the implements of their trade, slung-shots and bowie-knives.

MELANCHOLY SUICIDE.—Yesterday morning an abandoned woman known as Mary P. Smith, committed suicide by shooting herself in the heart, in a back room in the second story of the block adjoining the Post Office, on Cedar street. An inquest was held, and a verdict rendered in accordance with the above facts.

Some of the particulars of this unfortunate woman's history are of a peculiarly melancholy nature. We learn that she received, in one of the best female schools of this State, located in a neighboring town, a finished education, and at the age which young ladies generally leave the seminary, was an accomplished, handsome and interesting girl. But in an evil hour, she departed from the path of virtue, and became dishonored. About eighteen months since she came to Nashville, and has ever since been an inmate of one of the numerous houses of ill-fame which infest the city. Yesterday morning, awakened at about daylight by her paramour, she arose, and with the remark that she presumed he had become tired of her, she opened a drawer, from which she took a loaded pistol, and deliberately shot herself. We learn that she was only about nineteen years of age. [Nashville True Whig.

THE ALLEGHANY ABANDONED.—We learn that this steamer, which cost the Government some million of dollars, has been found unfit for service, and will only be used hereafter as a storeship at the Navy Yard. The Secretary of the Navy, who visited her on Saturday, will doubtless acquiesce in this disposition of the unfortunate steamer. We notice several of her officers in the city, who, with the men, expect soon to be transferred to other duties. [Washington Sentinel, 25th ult.

LIQUOR SUIT.—A suit has been commenced by Mr. Corson, Chief Engineer of the New York Fire Department, against the New York Tribune for recent libels alleged to have been published in that paper. The damages are laid at $20,000.

USHAAND OR DESERTER.—In Hilson county, Ind., Euclid Willis ran away with the wife of Joseph Frederick, the lady leaving two children behind her, probably to console her husband is loneliness, and the gentleman leaving his father a corpse to await sepulture at the hands of strangers.

FROM HAYTI.—Letters from Aux Cayes to 28th ult., state that the yellow fever was raging there, with almost incredible destruction to human life. Of foreigners frequenting that place, 7 out of 10 fall victims to the scourge. Native prodnce was high and scarce. Business extremely dull. The changing the island from a republic to an empire has given no better security to life, liberty and property. Taxes were accumulating, and much discontent created by the arbitrary power of the Emperor.

LARGE FIRE IN MILLEDGEVILLE.—A disastrous fire occurred in Milledgeville, Ga., on the morning of the 25th ult. It broke out in a workshop about 10 o'clock, and destroyed the entire square of buildings opposite Huson's Hotel. The brick block containing Child's jewelry store was also consumed. There are but two or three stores left in the town. None of the hotels are injured. The loss is computed at one hundred thousand dollars.

ANOTHER COMET.—According to an English paper another illustrious stranger, a comet, is taking a tour through the heavens, within the scope of our earthly vision. It was discovered at Berlin on the 11th of September, and on the 24 of October was visible to the eye. The head equalled in brightness a star of the fourth magnitude; and the tail could be traced about one degree. It had a rapid Southerly motion.

VALUE OF LAND NEAR ST. LOUIS.—The St. Louis Democrat of the 21st ult, has the following item of intelligence relative to the value of land near that city:

Mr. Laukam's farm, lying fifteen miles from the city, and containing 333 acres, was sold on Tuesday for $16,650; and also a tract in the vicinity, fronting on the Grevecoeur lake, containing 110 acres, for $2700; and lastly, a tract of forty acres, near Murdock's farm, for $2100. The rates may serve to show the value of lands in these localities.

[illegible] —The Cincinnati Price Current of the 15th says:

We heard of sales of about 5,000 head during the week, deliverable from the 10th to the 25th of November, at $5 per 100 lbs. net. There have been more sellers than buyers at this price, but the former are firm in their views—and good hogs cannot be bought at any lower rate. From present appearances, there will be a greater number of early hogs in market this season than usual. Slaughterers are contracting for killing at 25 to 30c. per head premium.

DROWNED.—A little girl—by the name of Josephine M Potter aged about 7 years, was drowned in a cistern at the residence of Capt. Case, on Broadway yesterday morning. The circumstances attending it are of a most distressing character. Herself and mother, who lives in Iowa, arrived in this city day before yesterday, on their way to Virginia, and stopped at Captain Case's who is a relative. In the morning the little girl was missed by the family, and a search was instituted for her, when, in the course of about an hour they found her body in a cistern which is situated in the back yard, near the kitchen. The cistern has a cover over it, and it is supposed that she raised it for the purpose of looking in, when she lost her balance, fell and was drowned. [St Louis Republican.

Particulars of the Eastern Question—Active Preparations for War—More Arrests in Paris—Further from the Japan Expedition—Trouble Among British Manufacturers.

NEW YORK, October 30—9 o. m.

The following are the most interesting of the details of the foreign news by the Arctic:

MOVEMENTS OF THE RUSSIANS.—Dispatches from Constantinople of the 5th instant state that the Russian army on the Danube was moving for their winter quarters at Bucharest.

General Luders, with his Russian corps, was at Odessa, awaiting his marching orders.

Prince Gortschakoff had replied to the summons of Omer Pacha to evacuate the Principalities, refusing to do so.

General Paskiewitch has assumed the chief command of the Russian army in the Principalities.

Austria and Prussia will remain neutral.

THE TURKISH MANIFESTO.—The London Times states that the Turkish War Manifesto is the most unanswerable document of the present century. When it was read by the Emperor Nicholas, he aware he would wage a war of extermination against the Turks.

PROTECTION OF AUSTRIA.—All the Russian subjects remaining in Turkey have been placed under the protection of Austria.

THE COMBINED FLEETS.—The fleets of England and France had not passed the Dardanelles, but were preparing to do so, and to proceed to Constantinople.

FRENCH PREPARATIONS.—Great activity was shown in the French navy yards, in preparing for emergencies.

AUSTRIAN AND PRUSSIAN SUBJECTS.—All the subjects of Austria and Prussia, engaged in the Turkish service, have been recalled by their respective governments.

RUSSIA AND CIRCASSIA.—A great battle had been fought between the Russian and Circassian armies, the latter led by Schamyl in person. The result was the defeat of the Circassians, with great loss on both sides.

FRANCE—ANOTHER CONSPIRACY.—Another conspiracy has been discovered in Paris, and two hundred arrests have been made of suspected parties. Among those arrested is M. Houdchiana, the Minister of Finance in the Provisional Government of 1848.

ITALY.—There is considerable agitation in the Italian States, and more trouble is anticipated.

ENGLAND.—TROUBLE AMONG THE OPERATIVES.—There has been a great strike among the operatives in the Lancashire manufactories. All the mills in Preston have closed, and 25,000 hands are idle.

JAPAN EXPEDITION.—During Commodore Perry's stay at Jeddo, he had interviews with two of the princes of the empire, to whom he delivered the letter of the President of the United States. He is to return for an answer in the spring. Presents were mutually exchanged between the Japanese and the Americans, and they separated with strong expressions of friendship.

THE NEW YORK COLLECTORSHIP.

NEW YORK, October 31.

The merchants of this city have held a meeting to consider the subject of Judge Bronson's removal from the Collectorship of this port. The attendance was very large, and embraced many of the principal business men of the city.

Resolutions were passed disapproving of the conduct of Secretary Guthrie, and denouncing the removal of Judge Bronson on the grounds alleged.

MORE LIVES LOST.

NEW YORK, October 31.

It is believed that four or five persons were burnt to death in the fire at Rogers's clothing establishment on Saturday night.

THE NEW YORK COLLECTORSHIP.

NEW YORK, November 1—8 a. m.

The democrats and free sailers of Massachusetts have generally coalesced, and at a meeting held at Concord last night Judge Bronson was denounced as a traitor.

NEW YORK MARKETS.

NEW YORK, November 1.

There has been a good demand for Cotton to-day, and 2250 bales have been sold at firm prices.

NEW YORK, October 31.

The Cotton market here is quiet, with sales of about 1000 bales to-day. Prices, however, are firm at 10½c. for Middling Orleans, and 10¼c. per lb for Middling Uplands. Flour is active under the influence of the steamer's news, and 18,000 bbls. have been sold at an advance.

FURTHER BY THE ARCTIC—THE EASTERN QUESTION.

NEW YORK, October 31.

It is the opinion of the English and French diplomatists that the war between Russia and Turkey will be confined to the frontiers, and will not spread over Europe.

Turkey had given permission for neutral flags to remain on the Danube till the 25th October, but no longer.

LARGE FIRE.

LOUISVILLE, November 1.

A fire broke out this morning in this city between Second and Third streets, on Main, greatly damaging the telegraph office of the House line and Bast'e tobacco factory, and destroying a large grocery store. Loss not ascertained.

TELEGRAPHIC ITEMS.

New York, November 1.—The Bank of the State of New York was robbed last night of $37,000.

Washington, November 1.—The Washington Union of to-day, publishes a letter from Caleb Cushing, addressed to the editor of the Boston Post, denouncing the recent coalition of the democrats and freesoilers in several counties in Massachusetts. He declares the purpose of the President to crush abolitionism, and assures the community that he (the President) will never allow his policy to be shaken by abolitionists.

Washington, November 1.—Dispatches have been received here stating that a party of citizens arrived at St Louis last night, from the Plains. They belonged to the party of Maj. Fitzpatrick, who was sent to distribute annuities to the Indians. They report that Maj. Fitzpatrick has succeeded in making treaties with the Camanches and Kiowas of a very favorable character.

The United States stipulates to pay these two tribes one thousand dollars per annum, for a limited number of years, and in return for which the tribes granted the United States the right of way over their lands, for a railroad, or other kind of road, without other payment. They grant the right of all emigrants to pass unmolested, and consent to the establishment of military posts, missions, etc., throughout their territory. The Indians further agree to surrender immediately all American or Mexican prisoners now in their hands, and for the future to maintain strict peace towards all American citizens.

Major Fitzpatrick also obtained from the several tribes of Cheyennes, Arapaches, Ricaras and Sioux, important amendments to this treaty made by Colonel Mitchell at Fort Laramie. The Indians, throughout, manifested a friendly disposition.

Hunting parties of the Pawnees have been troublesome to some of the emigrants.

The report of the death of James Bridger, the outlaw, is contradicted.

The health of Fort Laramie and Fort Kearney is good.

The great Salt Lake mail had encountered a party of Pawnees, who, after a parley with the driver and guard, compelled the party to give up their blankets, after which the mail was allowed to proceed.

New York, Nov. 1.—The steamer Ocean has foundered in a heavy gale, and thirteen persons who were on board of her have perished.

FAREWELL TO THE SWALLOWS.

Swallows, sitting on the eaves,
See ye not the falling leaves?
See ye not the gathered sheaves?
Farewell!

Is it not time to go
To that fair land ye know?
The breezes as they swell,
Of the coming winter tell,
And from the trees shake down
The brown
And withered leaves. Farewell!

Swallows, it is time to fly!
See ye not the altered sky?
Know ye not that winter's nigh?
Farewell!

Go—fly, in noisy bands,
To those far distant lands
Of gold, and pearl, and shell,
And gem—of which they tell,
In books of travel strange,
And range
In happiness. Farewell!

Swallows, on your pinions glide,
O'er the restless, rolling tide
Of the ocean, deep and wide,
Farewell!

In groves far—far away,
In summer's sunny ray,
In warmer regions dwell;
And then return to tell
Strange tales in foreign lands;
In bands
Perched on the eaves. Farewell!

Swallows, I could almost pray
That I, like you, might flee away,
And to each coming evil say
Farewell!

Yet 'tis my fate to live
Here, and with trouble strive,
And I may some day tell
How they before me fell
Conquered: then calmly die,
And cry—
"Trials and toils, farewell!"

From Dickens' Household Words.

AN ARTIST SERVANT GIRL.

I do not believe that either quinine nor saline draughts were so effectual in curing me of the marsh fever which prostrated me in Rome as the good little stories my excellent Doctor used to tell me. One of the best was about a servant-maid.

Maria, the heroine, was the daughter of a farmer; but became, at a very early age, the servant of a sculptor of some celebrity in his day, named Pulci, who had removed from Florence to Rome, to court inspirntion in the Metropolis of Art, for a great work. He was a grave, serious man; and after having instructed Maria in the duties required of her, retired within himself, and allowed her to do pretty much as she liked, so that she governed his little household in her own way. She was a comely girl, of quiet manners, and soon became a favorite with all Pulci's visitors. The engraver, Savorini, was struck with love at first sight for her, and offered to make her his wife; but she replied calmly that she had engaged with Signor Pulci to be his servant for three years, and could not think of breaking her engagement. "I will find a substitute," said Savorini. "I can not be replaced," she replied. The engraver called her a Proserpine of pride; and his courtship ended for the time.

Master Pulci was busy with an important group; the subject being Religion leaning upon Science and Art—an allegory which Italians are fond of developing. Although not a first-class sculptor, he still occupied a sufficient rank to bring him in contact with all the celebrated artists of the day, who used to come from time to time to his studio. Maria was often called in for one purpose or another, and listened greedily to their animated discourses on genius and its consequent fame. From the very outset she began to feel yearnings after earthly immortality. A year, however, passed before a definite plan succeeded to her vague impulses.

One day Pulci invited some of his friends to dinner, Savorini amongst the rest. The meal was taken in the studio, and the conversation naturally turned upon art. All spoke enthusiastically; for all were Italians, and were deeply devoted to their various departments. Savorini, who still retained a strong sentiment for Maria, and perhaps wished to dazzle her, (she was moving quietly to-and-fro, performing her usual duties; but listening to all that was said with respectful attention) rather exaggerated the dignity and the privileges of the profession to which they all belonged. Kings and Emperors, the Pope himself, he said, ranked below great artists, and it was better to have produced that Diana, pointing to a clay model which Pulci had just finished, than to guide the councils of nations. "I place my art," he added, "not quite on an equality with yours, Signori, but I own no superior except you; for I also feel that I have a spark of something divine within me."

He talked much in this strain, being excited by the good Lachryma Christi, and by the presence of Maria. Although the girl admired what he said, she in no wise set it down to his account in the way he would have desired. She looked upon him only as an interpreter of truth, and went about the room—and backward and forward between it and the kitchen—pondering whether she had not also a spark of something divine in her. "Yes, I have it," she said at length. As she said this, she pushed against Angela, an old dame who had come in to assist her in her duties, let go the dish that held the stewed prunes, and broke it, splashing the rich red juice over her own white stockings.

"Are they quite spoiled?" inquired Savorini. She gave him a familiar push, as if she was removing one of her father's heifers out of her way. "Let her alone!" cried Pulci, "we must not punish her for her accident. She has not chipped a statue or a model since she has been with me."

"I would rather break one of my own limbs," she exclaimed. "Bravo!" cried they all; and, after complimenting her, they went on talking of their art, as cheerily as if they had not been disappointed of stewed prunes. Meanwhile, Maria became more and more convinced that there was a spark of something divine within her.

From that time she began in secret—in her own little bedroom—to endeavor to produce some of the forms of beauty that filled her mind. The clay became life-like in her hands; and, in a very short time, she almost started with surprise at beholding a lovely countenance looking out from the unformed mass which she had placed on her window-sill. A natural fear of being ridiculed and repressed, prevented her from confiding her projects and her studies to her master. But her secret was too troublesome to be kept entirely to herself. At first she thought of the engraver, Savorini; and possibly it would have been well had his honest love then found favor in her eyes. But the remembrances of his rough gallantries made her fearful of confiding in him. There was Caterina, the daughter of Angela; but, when she came to gossip of evenings, all her talk was about the handsome cavaliers who looked at her in church—impious men—and followed her home, trying to talk nonsense. This was not a proper confidant; so she chose my old doctor, Corona, who had attended her in an illness, and won her confidence by his benevolent manners. She went to him, made him promise secrecy as if he had been going to confess a murder, and revealed that she felt the power to become a great artist.

"My fame will fill the world," said she.

"But will it fill your heart?"

"That is full already—of hope."

He saw that she did not come for advice but encouragement; and he encouraged her. He would have preferred had she told all to Master Pulci; but the artist, though good and kind, had something cold and satirical in his manner.

"He will never believe in me," said Maria, "until he sees that I can do something. He is not a man of faith. Besides, who will admit genius in the person that cooks one's dinner? These hands that have made so many messes can do nothing but spoil marble, he will think."

"She must take care," thought Corona, "not to deceive herself as to the motive that makes her unwilling to communicate her ambition to her master. If I mistake not, she hopes to dazzle him."

But the Doctor was mistaken. Maria's whole being was, from that time forward, devoted to art, and art alone. It is true that she did not fail to perform her household duties; but she did so mechanically; and, if Master Pulci had been anything of a gourmand or a fidget, he would have found daily grounds of complaint. However, matters went on very well; and neither he nor any one else ever suspected that the girl had turned her bed-room into a studio, and that she was robbing herself of sleep in order to make up for the hours necessarily lost in the day-time. Savorini alone noticed that her cheeks grew pale, and that her eyes gleamed with unnatural brilliancy. "Her soul is wearing out her body, Doctor," said he to Corona. The Doctor assented sorrowfully, without daring to betray the secret.

Maria afterwards said that her life seemed to have begun only from the time when she perceived the presence of the "divine spark" in her. All the former years faded from her remembrance. Her imagination became filled with beautiful forms. Her ears were ever open to catch words of instruction from her master or his visitors. Her eyes greedily devoured the models that surrounded her. She took Pulci's books, one by one, to her room, and learned all that they could teach her. Whenever she went forth, it was to some church, or to the Vatican, to admire the achievements of the schools.

At length she felt herself sufficiently prepared to attempt original productions, and she began to model a statue of Minerva. A practiced hand would probably have produced a result as good as here in a much shorter time; but she was ignorant of routine, and many accidents retarded her work. However, as time proceeded, the figure grew under her hands; and, day by day, the consciousness of her own genius increased within her. Her determination to send the figure to the annual competition for the prize—secretly—in order that she might hear the impartial opinion of the judges. The difficulties in her way were immense. But she overcame them all; and, when one day Master Pulci was absent, some porters, sent by Doctor Corona, came and took away her model. Thus it was removed to the exhibition hall without accident.

Maria entered with the crowd on the appointed day, and contrived to place herself near to her statue. Her ambition did not extend to winning the prize. All she dared to hope was to escape ridicule. But her astonishment was indescribable on perceiving by degrees all the connoisseurs collect round her Minerva, and begin to speak enthusiastically in its praise. The judges stood before it in their turn. There was an unanimous cry of admiration. Her heart swelled mightily within her, and it was with difficulty she could repress her pride and exultation. These came to their heights when the prize was unanimously given to her statue, and the crier began to exclaim, "Let the sculptor of the Minerva declare himself!" It then struck her—in her confusion—that a woman had no right to compete, and she hastened away unperceived.

Her object, however, was gained. She was now sure that she had not deceived herself by a false idea of her own merit; and she saw in the future a long series of triumphs. Doctor Corona, who had watched her, followed and complimented her. Even he had not dared to admire her work until public opinion had crowned it. He went with her to the studio of Pulci; and there she threw herself on her knees before her master, and confessed the truth. He at first thought she was mad, and it was not until Doctor Corona confirmed her statements that he could believe that his servant girl Maria had won the first prize of sculpture by the unanimous vote of the first artists of Rome.

The news soon spread through the city; and Savorini came hastily to compliment the young artist. She allowed him to embrace her, and listened gratefully when he said, "She must be at once raised from her menial capacity. It is impossible to deprive the arts of this wonder." He did not now repeat his declarations of affection; but he seemed to claim a right to watch over her future fortunes. Pulci at once agreed to look out for another servant; but Maria refused to leave his house. "I will superintend everything still," she said.

The three supped together pleasantly that evening; and Savorini began the well-known etching which represents Maria sitting at the feet of her Minerva, pausing in her work to admire it. Next day, all the elite of Roman art came flocking to hail their new comrade. For some months, indeed, the fashionable society of the city talked of nothing else but this pleasant story; and it became a popular opinion that Maria would equal or surpass the greatest masters. There was some exaggeration in this. The cause which would have made them refuse to acknowledge her talent before her public triumph, induced them to magnify it now. It seemed so extraordinary that a servant girl from the Campagna di Roma could do anything, that people began to suppose nothing was too great for her to perform. Even old Nisotti, Maria's father, undertook a journey to Rome for the purpose of seeing his daughter, and looked in at St. Peter's by the way. She received him with delight; but shook her head when he suggested that she might now marry farmer Raimondo. Savorini, who was present, ventured a hope on his own account, and he whispered something in her ear. She smiled faintly, and, giving him her hand, said: "If you ask me again in six months, I will say yes!" He did not understand.

The truth was, that the divine spark was burning too fiercely within. In vain Dr. Corona exerted his art, and endeavored, moreover, to wean Maria for a while from her studio. The hectic flush and the brilliant eyes proved true prophets.

The Minerva was the only work of the servant Maria; who died on the twelfth of May, eighteen hundred and one.

The Hungarian Regalia.

The official Temesvar Zeitung gives a particular account of the recent discovery of the royal insignia of Hungary, from which we draw the following sketch:

It was fully shown at the outset, by Auditor T. Von Kargor, that Kossuth first took the insignia to Alt-Orsova, but being unable, with any due degree of security, to conceal them there, he took them to the Heroulee Baths at Mehadia. Finding, however, still less opportunity to hide them there, he returned forthwith to Alt-Orsova, placed them in the house of a certain George Theodor, and finally, by the assistance of trustworthy persons, forwarded them at night across the Czerna toward the Wallachian boundary, on horses bought for the purpose. It was also rendered certain that companions of Kossuth had purchased on the same day, at Alt-Orsova, tools for digging, and had at night left for the Czerna. The winter on the lower Danube having come on very early, and covered the earth with snow a foot in depth, no search could be made for some months in the ground about Alt-Orsova, and when, in April, 1850, the snow and ice melted, all traces of any excavation had disappeared, and further research in this quarter was prevented, and the attention of those engaged in it turned to another part of the kingdom, by the shrewdness of the Kossuth party, who secretly removed the private marks and signals to a different place.

Early last spring, Karger was ordered to devote himself to the task of seeking the chest in which the insignia was deposited. He started on the principle that the secret could have been imparted to but few persons, in order to attain to any degree of security, and that they must have chosen some point which could be easily found again by them or by their messengers, even upon the lapse of years; and, further, that they could have crossed the Czerna only by one way, and that the place of concealment must be beyond that river—a region affording but few places suited to their object. Although a pretty thorough knowledge of the surface of this territory had been gained previously, a most thorough and careful examination was once more begun. This lasted several months in all weathers, and even throughout the clear moonlight nights of July and August. Every upturned clod, every bush, tree, broken branch, stone, rut or scratch in the earth was noted, the same spots were passed over and over again by those engaged in the search, sometimes in one direction, sometimes in other, now leaving the spot in despair of finding the clue, and yet, as if called back by some higher power—says the Austrian writer—returning again to the search. The result of all this research was the conviction that the tokens of the place of concealment must be found in some peculiar conformation of the earth or hills, or in some peculiar tree or trees.

Karger concluded finally that the desired sign must be sought among the trees. Now began anew a careful examination of the entire wooded district, and at last, in a solitary spot almost hidden from the eye, and not far from an old road, untraveled for the last fifteen years, which once led to Wallachia, was noticed a clump of trees in which many branches had been lopped off or patiently cut, and which on the whole presented somewhat the appearance of having been trimmed with some special object in view.

Next it was noticed that branches found entangled in the thorns, bushes, and in the branches of other trees, belonging to the trees in the clump, which showed that those could not have been trimmed by the peasantry for fuel. In process of these examinations an elegant watch key was found and an ax handle, which indicated that a man of the better classes had assisted in the work. This, taken in connection with the light and friable soil, the peculiar position of the trees, completely covered with creeping plants, the solitary position of the place, and yet its proximity to the Danube on the one hand, and the Turkish-Servian boundary on the other, awakened in Karger's mind a feeling of the highest confidence that the place was found. He had been instructed not to begin the work of removing the earth until he had unmistakable signs of having found the right place; but he was so sure that on the 6th of September last a space of twenty square fathoms was marked out, and men set to work examining it by digging ditches at intervals of a foot and a half, which were to be extended in each direction across the gore enclosed here in the bend of the river Allion, an which the clump of trees stood. On the 8th of September, at 8½ o'clock in the morning, a man at work in the prolongation of the second ditch struck something which gave a metallic ring, and a moment later a well locked iron box was exposed, taken to a place of safety, opened by force—and the Austrian tyrant had once more the Crown of St. Stephen in his possession."

Curiosities of History.

CONFUCIUS, THE ANCIENT PROPHET OF CHINA.

In the present awakening of the Celestial Empire, from its profound sleep of ages, and the prospect of a complete overturn and change of dynasty, with new modes of life; and the infusion of new principles, and new knowledge, consequent on the throwing open of that vast kingdom to the commerce and intercourse of the world, everything connected with it, in the history of the past, becomes matter of increasing interest. All nations have their great names. Most nations who can date their origin in remote ages, can point to some illustrious person in the dim past, some half prophet, half philosopher, whose memory they venerate, and whose instructions have remained as a lasting treasure, a vivifying influence, to mould successive ages as they came upon the stage. The name occupying this position in the history of China is that of Confucius.

This noble and inspired philosopher lived about 500 years before Christ, and was about contemporary with Socrates. The religion which he taught is still that of the literati and persons of rank in China and Tonquin. It consists in a deep inward veneration of the one God or King of Heaven, and in the practice of every moral virtue. They have neither temples nor priests, nor any external form of worship, but every one adores the Supreme Being as he likes best. Confucius did not dive into abstruse doctrines. He contented himself with teaching the deepest love and veneration for the Great Author of all being whom he represents as the essence of all purity, and the source and fountain of all things. His providence is over all his creatures; and to Him all are responsible for their conduct. No act or thought, however secret, is hidden from him, and His goodness and justice are such that he can let no virtue go unrewarded, nor vice unpunished.

The principal writings of Confucius remaining to our day are "The King," or classical books, and the Szechoo, or moral books. He strictly forbade idol worship, and the deification of men; nevertheless, his more ignorant followers persisted in deifying him; and at the present day, according to Dr. Milne, on the authority of their own writers, there are more than fifteen hundred and sixty temples, dedicated to him; and sixty-two thousand animals, chiefly pigs and rabbits, are annually sacrificed to his memory.

The most touching and interesting point in the life of this great man, is the fact, in his dying moments, he encouraged his disciples, as he had also done before, by prophesying of the coming of Christ. He predicted that "in the West, the Holy One would appear."

A reference to this singular fact is frequent in the Chinese writings. In the Cung-yung, written by a grandson of Confucius, is the following passage: "A good prince lays the basis of his conduct in himself; he establishes among his people the authority of his own example; he regulates himself, though without blind obstinacy, by the founders of the first three dynasties; he directs his actions unceasingly according to heaven and earth; he rules over minds, and finds no reason for doubt or inquietude, confidently expecting the Holy Man, who is to appear at the end of ages."

In the Ching-keau-chin-tsouen, or "True Interpretation of the Divine Law," is the following: "The Minister Pe consulted Confucius, saying: 'Master, are you not a holy man?' He replied: 'Whatever effort I make, my memory cannot recall any one worthy of this title.' 'But,' returned the Minister, 'were not the three kings (founders of the early dynasties of Hen, Shang and Chow) saints?' 'These three kings,' replied Confucius, 'endowed with excellent goodness, were filled with enlightened prudence and individual force; but I know not that they were saints.' The Minister again asked: 'Were not the five lords (five emperors who reigned in China antecedent to the first dynasty) saints?' 'The five emperors,' said Confucius, 'endowed with excellent goodness, exacted a divine charity and unalterable justice, but I know not that they were saints.' The Minister still asked: 'Were not the three august ones (personages in Chinese mythological history) saints?' 'The three auguet ones,' replied Confucius, 'may have made use of their time (i. e., well employed a long life); but I am ignorant whether they were saints.' The Minister, astonished, said to him: 'If this be the case, who can be called saint?' Confucius, somewhat moved, replied with gentleness: 'I have heard say, that in the Western Countries, there has been (or there will be) a Holy Man, who, without exerting any act of government, will prevent troubles; who, without speaking, will inspire spontaneous faith; who, without working any (violent) changes, will produce an ocean of (good) actions. No man is able to tell his name; but I have heard say that this was (or will be) the True Saint.'" [Sunday Dispatch.

THE AGE OF COMPLIMENTS.—Seemingly every body is getting so very polite to every body else that it is beginning to be almost impossible for two or three persons to get together without a meeting of two being got up to present the third with a testimonial. If a steamboat goes on a rather lengthy voyage, there is sure to be a party mustered to pass flattering resolutions expressive of confidence in the captain, although the ship may have gone several hundred miles out of its way, and there may have been a variety of other disagreeable contretemps.

The absurdity of testimonial-giving has reached such a height that we may expect it to go still higher before it finally topples over, and we shall not be astonished to hear that two persons riding together in a Hansom cab have formed themselves into a meeting for the purpose of presenting the driver with a new inch to his whip, or some other appropriate "testimonial." When we hear of votes of thanks having been passed in favor of the commander of a steamer across the Atlantic, we feel that the difficult navigation of the Thames would warrant the presentation of a piece of plate—say a toothpick—to the captain of the penny Pink, or the half-penny line, or the two-penny Citizen. If steamboat passengers are to come to complimentary votes, what reason can there be why omnibus passengers should not vote one of their body into the chair, and record a series of resolutions in honor of the driver for his able and impartial conduct on the driving seat, or the conductor for his uprightness on his footboard? [Punch.

BE GENTLE.—Violence ever defeats its own ends. When you cannot drive, you can always persuade. Few people will submit to coercion. A gentle word, a kind look, a good natured smile, can work wonders, and accomplish miracles. There is a secret pride in every human heart that revolts at tyranny. You may order and drive an individual, but you cannot make him respect you. In the domestic circle especially kind words and looks are most essential to connubial felicity. Children should never be spoken harshly to. It does them no good. If they commit a fault they should be corrected for it in a mild but firm manner, and the impression it makes upon them is sure to prove salutary.

In a gambling room at Cairo, Illinois, old Mr. Maguire quarreled with a green young man, and aimed an empty gun at him. The young man, to the delight of the spectators, ran round the room crying murder until his wrath cooled, when he drew his bowie knife and cut the old man into minute meat. Such was the effect of fear on a coward.

INDIAN SUMMER.

We do not know the author of the following pleasant poem, which we find in a recent number of the Musical Review. A sweeter fancy of the "Indian Summer," we have never seen:

There is a time just ere the frost
Prepares to pave old Winter's way,
When Autumn in a reverie lost,
The mellow daytime dreams away,
When Summer comes in musing mind,
To gaze once more on hill and dell,
To mark how many sheaves they bind,
And see if all is ripened well.
With balmy breath she whispers low,
The dying flowers look up and live
Their sweetest incense ere they go,
For her who made their beauties live.
She enters 'neath the woodland shade,
Her zephyrs lift the lingering leaf,
And hear it gently where are laid
The loved and lost ones of its grief.
At last old Autumn, rising, takes
Again his sceptre and his throne,
With boisterous hands the trees he shakes,
Intent on gathering all his own.
Sweet Summer, sighing, flies the plain,
And wailing Winter, gaunt and grim,
Sees miser Autumn hoard his grain,
And smiles to think it's all for him.

A CHILD'S PRAYER.—By Alice Carey.

Sweeter than the songs of thrushes,
When the winds are low;
Brighter than the springtime blushes,
Reddening out of snow,
Were the voice and cheek so fair,
Of the little child at prayer.
Like a white lamb of the meadow,
Beaming through the light;
Like a priestess in the shadow
Of the temple bright.
Seemed she, saying, Holy One,
Thine and not my will be done.

EDUCATION.

CENTENARY INSTITUTE, ALA

This Institution of Learning has been in successful operation for ten years, is situated eight miles north of Selma, and is the child and property of the Alabama Conference.

There are two departments, male and female. In the male department young men are prepared for the junior class in any college, or if they chose, complete their education here. The female department is regularly organized as a college.

The course of study is extensive, and the instruction thorough. The teaching is done mainly by men of age and experience, (not by girls.)

The President (Rev. A. H. Mitchell) is a minister of the gospel, of twenty odd years standing, and during most of that time has been connected with literary institutions of the church in Georgia, South Carolina and Alabama. He is assisted by seven others, most of whom are persons of age and experience, and all, with one exception, professors of religion. A majority of the Board of Trustees are members of the Alabama Conference, which fact is a sufficient guarantee of its successful management.

Board and tuition are as low as can be afforded, and lower than most institutions of similar grade.

The next term opens the first Monday in October, and closes the first Wednesday in July. For further particulars, apply to the President, at Summerfield, Ala.

D. J. HARRISON, Secretary.

FEMALE MASONIC INSTITUTE,
Dayton, Morengo County, Alabama.
Rev. E. D. Pitts, Principal.

TO PARENTS, GUARDIANS, AND THE FRIENDS OF EDUCATION GENERALLY, we would announce the opening of the TENTH Annual Session of the Institute. The healthful locality—the spacious and beautiful grounds—the commodious and convenient buildings—the full supply of Musical Instruments—the fixed purpose of the Trustees to spare no expense or efforts to promote the best interests of FEMALE EDUCATION—and the assiduous devotion of an efficient Faculty to promote the comfort and improvement of Pupils, lead us to expect with confidence a liberal support.

The Principal has taught with marked success in Alabama, Mississippi and Florida, and will consecrate all his energies—physical, intellectual, and moral—to the proper training of the head and heart of those committed to his tuteiage.

The services of Miss MARY W. HOWZE, who has been for two years past connected with the Central Masonic University, have been secured. Her intelligence, energy, piety, and felicitous manner of communicating, have justly placed her in the first rank of educators.

The Musical, French, and Ornamental Department will be conducted by competant and skilful Teachers, and all due attention given to the arts and accomplishments that so beautify and adorn the gentler sex.

The Primary Department will be confided alone to a choice and gifted Lady, for we design to attend carefully to that sadly and mischievously neglected class of Pupils.

The Scholastic year is divided into Two Sessions of nearly Five Months each—with no intervening recess. The School opens on the first day of October, and closes with Examination Exercises in the latter part of July. Pupils received at any time, and charged to the end of the Session. For fractions of Sessions each week is counted one twentieth.

The School is not Sectarian or denominational; and the only religious tuition embraces the principles of a pure morality based upon the cardinal doctrines of the Bible.

The Principal and his wife have charge of the Stewards Department, and will tenderly care for the health, manners and morals of those who Board in the Institute. Each boarder will be made to feel as far as possible that she is the loved subject of parental solicitude, and every reasonable wish will be promptly and cheerfully gratified. Yet, Discipline will not be forgotten, and the needful restraints of family government will be thrown around them.

CHARGES PER SESSION OF FIVE MONTHS.

Primary Class	$12 50
Preparatory Class	15 00
Junior and Senior Class	20 00
Music on Piano, Guitar and Harp, (each)	25 00

BOARD (including Washing, Fuel and Lights) per month 10 00

Each Boarder must furnish her own Towels, Brushes and Combs, and have each article distinctly marked with her full name.

AN INVARIABLE RULE.—Board and Tuition one-half in advance, and the balance at the end of each Session; and every account must be closed at the end of each Session, by Cash, or by Note.

SPECIAL ARRANGEMENT.

Each Lodge in Marengo County is entitled to select within its jurisdiction, a worthy object of benefaction, and have her taught in the Institution without charge, provided said Lodge secure the payment of her Board and supply her with Books and Stationery.

As the Principal is so extensively known, the Committee have forborne to speak of his character and qualifications, and refer Parents and Guardians to the persons named below.

OAK BOWERY FEMALE COLLEGE.

This Institution of learning is under the supervision and control of the Alabama Conference of the M. E. Church, South, and has been in successful operation for six years. It is situated about five miles north of the Montgomery and West Point Railroad, in Chambers co., in a healthy country, and among a population, moral, industrious and intelligent.

The Board of Trustees take great pleasure in announcing to the public, the election of the Rev. ALEX SPEER, of Georgia, to the Presidency of the College. We think it only necessary to be known, that the Institution will be for the next year under the charge and direction of Brother Speer, to awaken a deep interest in behalf of the enterprise throughout the community, and impart confidence of success. His long and faithful service in the M. E. Church as a minister—his age and experience—his natural judgment and sound discretion—his acknowledged literary attainments and ability, authorize the expectation of full patronage on the part of an enlightened public.

A complete corps of Instructors whose names will hereafter be published, will be provided to supply the demand for instruction.

Miss MARY J. TOOMER continues Principal in the Music Department; and the unbounded satisfaction hitherto given by Miss Toomer, who we consider has no superior in any country, is a sure guarantee that all who patronize will be pleased.

Through the kind offices of the former President, the Rev. Wm F. Samford, who solicited contributions for that purpose, a fine and judiciously selected Library, of several hundred volumes, has been purchased, and is now in the possession of the College, embracing some of the most approved and standard literary works, and such as are peculiarly adopted to the purposes of Female Education.

The Tuition Fees will be no higher than usual, and the course of study as extensive as that in any institution of the same grade in the country.

The College Exercises will begin under the proposed organization, on the first Monday in January next—its second session will begin on the first Monday in September, and close at Christmas.

A circular, containing fuller information, will appear over the signature of the President.

The fees for the first half the scholastic year are as follows:

Primary Department	$12 00
First, Sophomore and Middle Classes, each	20 00
Junior and Senior Classes, each	22 50
Music	25 00
Use of piano	2 50
Contingent fee	1 00

The above fees are required to be paid on the first day of October.

Fees of the same amount, for the second half of the scholastic year, are required to be paid on the 25th of February, 1854.

An extra fee of $20 is charged for French.

The course of study in this Institution is as extensive as that in any Institution for the education of females, and the instruction is of the most critical and thorough character. Every provision has been made to ensure success. A philosophical and chemical apparatus adequate to all the purposes of instruction has been provided, together with maps, charts, globes, etc. The instructions are experienced in their work, and highly approved for capacity, fidelity and skill.

This Institution has just closed the first year of its existence, with the most satisfactory results. And the public may feel assured that the Trustees will watch over its interests with the utmost solicitude and care, and spare no pains to render its system of education as perfect as possible.

The tuition fees have been somewhat reduced, and are below those of many Southern Institutions of no higher grade. It is impossible to engage teachers of the highest character for talents, attainments and skill, without paying liberal salaries. But we offer as an equivalent, above all price, a faithful and skillful application of the most approved means of developing and training the mind.

Printed circulars, containing fuller information, may be had by application to Alex. Gisssock, Esq., Secretary of the Board.

MARION FEMALE SEMINARY.

MARION, PERRY COUNTY, ALABAMA.

FACULTY.

REV. JAMES K. ARMSTRONG, A. M., Principal, and Professor of Mental, Moral and Natural Science.
H. M. DALY, A. M., Professor of Vocal and Instrumental Music.
MISS E. L. HASKILL, English.
MISS M. J. DONDURANT, English.
MISS PHEBE FULLER, Drawing, Painting, French and Guitar.
MISS J. V. CLARK, Primary and Preparatory Department.
MRS. L. J. ARMSTRONG, Governess.
MRS. REBECCA CLARK, Matron and Nurse.

This institution has just closed a prosperous year, with one hundred and twenty-six pupils.

The ensuing session will commence on THURSDAY, the 29th day of SEPTEMBER.

It is very desirable that pupils enter at the beginning of the session.

The main building is a new and superior brick edifice, one hundred by fifty feet, three stories, and for elegance, convenience and arrangement—for number, size and comfort of school and private rooms—is not surpassed by any similar one in the country.

The Principal resides in the building, and superintends the Boarding Department. He has in his employ a gentleman and his lady, who discharge with faithfulness and satisfaction the duties of this position. Pupils boarding in the Seminary are under the immediate control of the Principal at all times—are members of his family.

The Matron and Nurse, a lady of great amiability and kindness of heart, united with long experience and untiring faithfulness, secures to pupils, at all times, the kindness and attentions of home.

The Principal and his lady, with the aid of the Female Teachers, all of whom reside in the Seminary, diligently guard and form the morals, manners and habits of the young ladies.

There is but one session, of nine and a half months. Pupils can enter at any time during the session, charges from the beginning of the month in which they enter to the close of the session.

One hundred and forty-five dollars will pay the board and tuition of a young lady, for the entire session, in the collegiate department; one hundred and seventy-four dollars will embrace the languages; two hundred and thirty-five dollars will embrace board, tuition in the collegiate department, on the piano, and in the languages.

The above estimate does not include books, stationery, sheet music, ornamental materials and lights; all of which articles are furnished by the Principal on moderate terms.

The institution is furnished with a new and complete Chemical, Philosophical and Astronomical apparatus. It also has a large collection of globes, terrestial and celestial; and celestial maps, atlases, charts plates and diagrams, for simplifying the various branches of Natural Science.

The Library consists of more than one thousand volumes, embracing a choice collection in every department of Literature, Art, Science, History, &c., &c.

The Cabinet consists of several hundred specimens.

The institution is furnished with a large and superior assortment of musical instruments.

The Church and Sabbath School facilities are unsurpassed by any school in the country. Of the number that have entered its walls during the past session, more than seventy were or have become professors of religion.

Pupils are not allowed to attend parties, balls, dancing classes, &c.

Visitors are not received, except with suitable introduction to the Principal from patrons.

The usual regulations of the best boarding schools are enforced respecting visiting, correspondence, pamphlets, periodicals, novels, and dental operations.

They retire and rise at regular hours through the year.

Great attention is paid to exercise in the open air, or within doors, when the weather is inclement.

Every Saturday morning is devoted to plain sewing and the repairing of clothing, under the direction of an officer.

No accounts will be opened in Marion, but with the expressed permission of patrons. When articles are to be purchased, it must be done with approbation and under the eye of the lady of the Principal.

The wants of pupils should be supplied from home, as far as practicable. All jewelry is prohibited. All pocket money, or other sums for the use of pupils, should be deposited with the Principal. They are allowed to spend fifty cents of their pocket money per month.

Social entertainments, composed of invited married gentlemen and ladies, the teachers and more advanced boarding pupils, are held monthly, which afford the young ladies a healthful and pleasant recreation, opportunity for musical exercise before a select audience, acquaint them with the usages of refined society, and give them ease and grace in manners.

For catalogues or further information, apply to the Principal.

A CHILD EMBRACING ITS MOTHER.

BY THOMAS HOOD

Love thy mother, little one!
Kiss and clasp her neck again—
Hereafter she may have a son
Will kiss and clasp her neck in vain—
Love thy mother, little one!

Gaze upon her living eyes,
And mirror back her love for thee—
Hereafter thou may'st shudder sighs
To meet them when they cannot see;
Gaze upon her living eyes!

Press her lips the while they glow
With love that they have often told—
Hereafter thou may'st press, in woe,
And kiss them till thine own are cold;
Press her lips the while they glow!

Oh! revere her raven hair,
Although it be not silvery gray;
Too early death'led on by care,
May snatch, save one dear lock, away.
Oh! revere her raven hair!

Pray for her all ove and morn,
That Heaven may long the stroke defer,
For thou may'st live the hour forlorn
When thou wilt ask to die with her.
Pray for her at eve and morn!

POPERY

AGAINST

COMMON SCHOOL EDUCATION.

[The following is to the Governor of Pennsylvania, who did not bid for the Catholic vote, in his course on the School Question.] Ed. N. O. Ch. Advocate.

LETTER II.

JANUARY 27, 1853.

SIR—Your worthy zeal for the perfecting of our public school system, as exhibited in your annual message, has drawn forth a notable manifesto from the Roman Catholic Bishop in this city. I make no apology for this counter address. The subject is momentous. It is not too much to say that the proverbial sophistry of the school of Loyola appears in this new device, and entitles it to public examination. And it is not to inform you, be assured, but to reach the community for whom "the letter" is specially framed, that I undertake this running review.

The letter is, in substance, a protest, a plea, and a plan. The protest is against our noble and universal school system. The plea is for Roman Catholics alone, who are alone aggrieved. The plan is not to remove public burdens, and promote the general weal, but, as is frankly avowed in the concluding paragraph, to redress the grievances referred to in the protest. We look, then, in the protest, for the burdens complained of. Is it that the Romanists, being the wealthiest and most numerous class, are paying the largest tax, and virtually providing for the education of Protestants in our land? No; for the very opposite is the well known fact. And on this score the heavy burden is upon Protestants to provide the means of education for the Roman Catholic children. This, however the boon may be rejected, is the intent of our public school system—to offer to a class not over-wealthy, nor ever numerous, except in children, the benefit from tax on Protestants. How is it, then, that what was meant for a favor, and works as a favor in every other case, proves, with these, a grievance? This question is a grave one, and affects the whole subject, and must throw light on all the sequel. Whence is it, that a system of free principles, which enfranchises all others, disfranchises, as the Bishop declares, every Roman Catholic! It is worthy the attention of our legislators, how far this difficulty must keep up a steady and incessant war upon all our free institutions. There is no disguise here. The Roman Catholic religion is here confessed to be that very unique, peculiar, implacable thing, which is not suited for our free institutions. But this admission absolves the State; nay, it warns against legislation on such grounds. For the moment you legislate for any one religion, to suit its interests and plans alone, that moment the sacred principles of our Government are violated. That the plan of the Roman Catholic Bishop proposes this special legislation, under the guise of a most general system, will be shown.

But first observe our public school system is truly an American system. It is framed for the masses. Its kind and wise object is to amalgamate from such various elements, all national interests, and to run into the new mould of our institutions the children of all others with our own. A vital condition of our liberties is, that all must be American—must be trained to the same sense of individual responsibility, and to the same freedom of conscience—as freemen, fitted for free institutions. This has been held an object worthy the highest care and most liberal expenditure of the State. To this same end all our institutions bear. And the fostering of national, sectional, or sectarian prejudices, is counted hostile to the public interest. But this plan is essentially anti-American. It stands in the way of this very working—opposes any such fusion of all varieties into this mould of our free principles, and aims to wall up and hedge around this Roman Catholic body in our bosom, as an empire of its own. Can we pay a bonus for this? Can we legislate on such behalf and for such an end? It comes forward, even in open protest, against the institutions which are our pride and boast. Our motto "of equal rights" is complained of as inequality to them. And where, as in this case, they have the same vote in the choice of the public school officers as any, the grievance is, that somehow, and how it is not said, our popular plan does not suit them. And we are gravely called upon to break up our whole system of popular education, and conform it to the demand of the Roman Catholic hierarchy among us.

But let us examine, first, the planning; second, the plan.

1st. We see in this an ingenious attempt to get indirectly what has been so often applied for directly in vain—sectarian legislation. This it is the just and peculiar policy of our American government to refuse, however covertly brought forward. And here, by a plausible device, worthy of Antonelli, we are called to break in upon this first principle of our religious liberties, "protection for all, provision for none." The aim is, to open a way for Roman Catholic recognition and discrimination on our statutes—to begin at the beginning, and where a plea of religion and conscience can be made, so as to have Roman Catholic employees, as such, in the pay of the State. It is an easy step from school teachers to other officials, till this very precedent be pleaded for Roman Catholic judges and justices, on the plea of properly guarantying Roman Catholic oaths! The principle being once conceded, we have it carried in all state and national affairs. And the plan is, in effect, to open the way for a re-union of Church and State, however remotely connected with this beginning. This measure would give them their first finger in the public purse.

2d. The planning aims, as will be seen, to accomplish indirectly what cannot be done directly—the control of our public education. According to the present system, this is made impossible. Hence it must be demolished, as in the change they could not be losers, and in the new arrangement their tactics might work great gains. Jesuit education, with all its complicated apparatus, has been the curse of all other lands, politically and morally, and to open the door to it has been the ruin of governments. The Jesuit reasoning here is plainly in the face of their well-known principles, and therefore is only a device. In all Papal countries, the position is, that the State is bound to control public education. Witness the demands to this effect now making in France, and in all Papal quarters. But what if the State be Protestant? Then indeed they can do better by having the field open for competition. And at once education is not a social thing, but an individual matter—not for the State, but for the parent! Mark the concerted movement to this end in these United States. To-day, Roman Catholic Bishops are reported as "leg-rolling" in the Legislature of Michigan. The war has been raging in Ohio; and after many a battle and defeat, has broken out afresh in New York. And the Bishop of Pittsburgh, in his measure, works at the same wheel, taking his cue from the editor of the Freeman's Journal of Jan. 3. Something is hoped for from this loose-and-wide-open plan, echoed by the Bishop from his head-quarters.

Let us see—"every one setting up a school" would draw per capita from the State fund. At once, from the over-running foreign supply, these Jesuit solitaires would swarm among us. There would soon be a dozen schools where there should be one, and all located so as best to serve the plans of the Roman Catholic Church.

"The working" is, that easily our American children are drawn in, and obtain a Roman Catholic education. The plea of economy or convenience of location will avail with many. Indifference will rule with more. And the competition, which in commercial things is equal, becomes here, in ecclesiastical things, vastly unequal, by their better tactics, more numerous ecclesiastics, and more determined sectarian aims.

This measure, which could not be at all reached without State funds, would thus be fostered by our own Protestant taxation, and by our own government patronage. And while there is the faintest remembrance of our freedom from Popish rule, as our choicest birthright, the State will sooner be dissolved in anarchy, than this will be conceded.

But the planning is, thirdly, to increase the forces of Popery among us, and the power and agencies of the hierarchy. We can see "the working" in other lands. Where the State sustains, in any way, this Jesuit system, they defy all competition—make headway against all resistance, and soon become the organized police of the Pope—the spies in every district—the gens d'armerie of this church despotism. We have reason to know that it is not the Roman Catholic people, but the priests, who are at work against our school system. They refuse to the parents the privilege of sending their children to any other than their own schools, and to this end they control them by the terrors of excommunication and perdition. This is, therefore, a movement of the hierarchy, and we should first ask, are not these, the functionaries of the Pope, under oath to him as a temporal sovereign?

But yet further, the planning is—to do indirectly what has been attempted directly in vain—to drive the Bible from our Common Schools. The scheme hints boldly at this. It can be in this only, that their religion is interfered with, except it is negatively opposed by preventing its positive inoculation. The Bible, which all other denominations tolerate, because each claims to find its own religion there, and which only Romanists and infidels so attack—this is driven out by the scheme! Or, rather, the scheme is secretly to head off what cannot openly be proscribed among us. Yet the State is no less to be the patron or supporter of the schools. It is to be drawn into a measure so decidedly infidel—a la Girard—while the Bishop is crying out against infidel indifferentism! Let us see the working. The Roman Catholic Schools, we know, would set aside even their own Bible, for it is against their system to have it vulgarly read. The other schools would be on the footing of our select and private schools, with no guaranty for the use of the Bible, and under no regulation to that effect. It would be left, except in mere denominational schools, to the taste or policy of the teacher, and at least the State would abandon the great principle! And this is a leading object that is aimed at by all the new schemes of the Papacy for regulating our public education. Here observe the attack is not directly upon the Bible. This has been tried in New York, and has signally failed. And now, under a guise of facilitating the legislation, simplifying the machinery, economising the offices, etc., a blow is struck at the root of our free institutions, by disowning and discarding the word of God!

Let us note, then, some of the more practical objections to the plan itself, and to its working:

1st. Its effect would be to create a warring of religious sects—to array every district of the community into such divisions—even the children "hailing" as Methodist, Presbyterian, Episcopalian, or Protestant and Roman Catholic, with all the petty strifes growing into maturity, widening into families, stretching into politics, reaching into State finances, and subverting the fair fabric of our society by sectarian feuds, far worse than sectional dissensions. It is a plan for relieving the Bishop of heart-burnings, and increasing them every where else.

The schools themselves would thus degenerate into nurseries for polemics—as Roman Catholic schools are now, from the Propaganda down, discarding "the sciences as heathenish," and teaching nothing so much as Romanism. And thus a proper education would be lost.

2d. The effect would be to destroy the public school entirely, with all its peculiar advantages. Breaking up the well appointed system into fragments, what have we? A host of petty private schools, kept alive only by this State patronage, without any State system or supervision; nothing left for the State, on the Bishop's plan, but taxing and disbursing, which had as soon be abandoned also. Will the Bishop propose to give up the whole State system, tax-fund and all? There will be no controversy, be sure, if there is no money to distribute. But the question will yet remain, whether the State does not owe this boon of general education to the rising masses. Though the pretence is to favor the freest action under the State patronage, the effect is to destroy popular education.

Parents would find Roman Catholic schools always at hand, but not always others of any kind. Now the State secures these to every district. This is at least "the perfecting of the plan" which would be "the perfecting of oppression" to the Bishop. In many quarters, the difficulty of "getting up" a school, and maintaining it, would discourage education with multitudes, and the poor especially would go often unprovided for and untaught.

The "competition" which is urged by the Bishop as so advantageous, would be most disastrous. It would lead to such a splitting up of every district as to make teaching no longer respectable nor profitable. And this the rather, as the competition would be with men who lead a solitary life, can live on nothing, and whose chief aim it would be to step in everywhere, and by such rivalry, underbidding, etc., to break down or crowd out all Protestant schools. With grants from Propagandas in Lyons and Vienna, we have enough of this foreign competition. If the Bishop sees no difference between employing a tailor, a butcher, or a school-teacher, we do. The "Monopoly" which the Bishop speaks of as he would of the most odious commercial establishments, with vested rights, is a necessary monopoly, like our city water-works, employing a large capital, to do for the multitude what private enterprise could not reach—supplying, by convenient conduits, through every house, and to all the rooms, if you please, and for the poor too, what your private pumps and cisterns could never do. The State resources are requisite to build school-houses, convenient ones—no cellars of Roman Catholic churches—to provide suitable furniture, necessary apparatus, valuable libraries, etc. This can be done on our public school plan, just because there can be consolidation (misnamed monopoly) by which there can be compassed what would be impossible to the hundred petty schools of the Bishop. The new plan, by splitting, scattering, dividing, would be fatal to popular education in any large and liberal sense. It would answer the Roman Catholic aim of teaching Ave Marias. But look at the noble district school-houses, upon which the Bishop looks out with such discomfort, and see the well-appointed rooms, desks, libraries, maps, philosophical apparatus, and see how utterly all the splendid advantages would be sacrificed, where the six hundred children would be separated and scattered into fifty puny schools.

And does he tell us that his plan would secure greater efficiency! Or that it would be any advantage to parents to be left to find their own teachers? How absurd! The poor have commonly not the time to examine the teacher, if they could, as the State arrangement does. Usually, the laborer can only know that his children go to school. But, alas! he cannot, in most cases, attend either to comparing teachers, or books, if he were competent. This, therefore, knowing the case, the State does for him.

With many, too, who are careless of their children's education, the school-house, with all its perfected plans, needs to be brought to their door, at the smallest cost, and with the least trouble. The Bishop's plan would be void for the multitude, as too expensive, except for Roman Catholics, who could either retain the advantage of a large district school, as they could gather all in one, or could get their teachers for the smallest pay. And were all parents left to get up a school, as must often be done, how many would fail of an education, who now crowd into these nurseries of knowledge, and who now come out well furnished for the walks of life, in general information? In scattered districts, too, how expensive would this become, and how grievously would it bear upon the poor.

Besides, another grievance of such a system for the masses, would be the vast variety of class books in use, for lack of system, among these scattered schools. Now, in our cities, where families are moving so often from one district to another, the children are not compelled at every new school to be furnished with a whole set of class-books anew. But, under the same system, the pupil enters the same curriculum, and only in a different district, goes on with his course of study the same.

This difficulty of the Bishop's plan, again, would not bear upon Roman Catholics. They would have their general system under the Bishop's control. But Protestants have no such headship for all. And here again, the scheme that boasts such equality would be all unequal to us.

But further. The effect of the Bishop's plan is to make Protestants pay for Roman Catholic education. We make no objection to be taxed, as now, for Roman Catholic pauperism, which might be urged as a serious grievance if we chose. We cheerfully pay a large proportion of all the tax for the public institutions, educational and charitable, to which Romanists have as free access as ourselves. But we will never consent to be taxed a dollar for a Roman Catholic training. We are willing that sectarian teaching be excluded from the public schools, in order that no conscience may be reasonably offended. In all this, we make an open and united testimony against that oppression of conscience which so characterizes Roman Catholic lands. We are willing to be taxed for Roman Catholics, but not for Roman Catholicism. And the moment they turn away from our free system, and must be taught Popery, that moment we protest against being taxed a farthing for their establishments. If we wish our children educated in our Catechisms—and we have many parochial schools of the different denominations—we cheerfully sustain them, and sustain in our measure the public school besides, for the masses who care not for church schools, or come not within their reach. So let the Roman Catholics do!

But finally. Why does the Bishop propose a plan which is every way the most seemingly equal, but the most really unequal. He would have all receive, per capita, for their scholars according to the number taught in the district. Here, again, it would be all in their favor, because they do not bear an equal share with Protestants in the amount of tax. The scramble, then, would be for scholars, by arts and traps, to which reputable men would not descend, and merely for the public bonus. And they who pay the least, and work no more—where twenty can be taught as well as ten—would often reap the most of the State fund. Why not propose that Roman Catholics receive according to their ratio of taxes paid to the State, deducting the State expenses for pauperism?

This, if the exclusiveness is to be pressed, would keep a separate and strict account with them, to the oppression of none on their sectarian behalf. The Bishop's plan, at best, would in effect make them a privileged class, having their sectarian and divisive plans sustained, as others do not ask.

But one thing is plain, that unless the State is willing to succumb to the plans of Rome, as lately received and delivered, they can never give up the Bible from any system of Public Education. And we doubt not, that to require the present regulation for the use of God's Word in the schools, as a condition of receiving the public fund, would most effectually spoil the plan for the Bishop. At once all the beauty of its working as simplifying the machinery, relieving the State, giving efficiency to the work by a healthful competition, and so every way promoting the public good, would vanish into thin air!

I would respectfully urge that, before any concession is made by the State to the plans of Roman Catholic Bishops, a commission be instituted to make earnest inquiry into their relations to the State, and to take evidence of their being functionaries of a foreign political power.

SINGING.

Though but a poor singer, yet I have a habit of singing when alone. A little thing sets me off—a bit of green on the earth, or a bit of blue in the skies. Yes, yes; I like singing, and often sing with my heart when my lips are silent. I like to hear a milkmaid sing in the green meadow, when her heart is so happy that she cannot help it. I love to hear a song uncalled for. Who asks the birds to sing? They sing to relieve their heart, and this is the sort of singing that I like. I love to hear a loud hallelujah—not by the clear, musical voice of one who is paid for it, but by a thousand tongues, singing with the heart and the understanding.

You shall have my favorite song. I sang it in my youth and in my manhood, and now I am singing it in my years:

"When all thy mercies, O my God!
My rising soul surveys,
Transported with the view, I'm lost
In wonder, love, and praise."

Many a green field and parched heath, many a hill and valley, have been made vocal by the humdrum voice of Old Humphrey; and I have sung this song with a loud voice on lonely Salisbury Plain, and in a low voice in crowded Cheapside and the Strand. I have sung it on the mountain-top, and a hundred fathom deep in the heart of the earth, in the ruins of the Kenilworth and Tintern, and in the palaces of the Tuileries and Versailles, among the waving woods on land, and amid the waves of the heaving ocean.

Another favorite song of mine is the old hundredth psalm, composed by John Hopkins, the co-adjutor of Thomas Sternhold. For seven years, in the days of my youth, I heard it sung on every Sabbath; and, instead of being weary of the words, unpoetical as they are, I like them better than ever.

"All people that on earth do dwell,
Sing to the Lord with cheerful voice;
Him serve with fear; his praise forthtell;
Come ye before him, and rejoice.

The Lord, ye know, is God, indeed;
Without our aid he did us make;
We are his flock—he doth us feed,
And for his sheep he doth us take.

O enter then his gates with praise;
Approach with joy his courts unto;
Praise, laud, and bless his name always,
For it is seemly so to do.

For Why? The Lord our God is good;
His mercy is forever sure;
His truth at all times firmly stood,
And shall from age to age endure."

Perhaps you will laugh at an old man's singing this psalm by himself, as it is more suitable for public worship. Well, well; let an old man have his own way; it reminds me of old times, and makes me happy. My voice may not be very melodious, but I try to sing with my heart; as the apostle says, "I will sing with the spirit, and I will sing with the understanding also."—Old Humphrey.

BIOGRAPHICAL.

REV. RICHARD L. CHILDERS.

The subject of this sketch was born in Macon, Georgia, October 12, 1827. He was converted in the Fall of 1844 at the Bibb Camp-meeting, four miles west of Macon, in his fourteenth year. From this time till 1846 or '47 he remained, for the most part, in his native town, engaged in elementary studies, and in the acquisition of a practical business education. At this period he entered Emory and Henry College, Virginia, then under the superintendence of President Collins, where he graduated, with more than usual honors, June 20, 1850. Seven days after he was married to a young lady of Washington county, Virginia, whose acquaintance he had made during his college course. In the December following he removed, with his father's family, to Pleasant Hill, De Soto parish, Louisiana, where he was some time engaged as teacher in the Masonic Academy.

But a few months after his settlement in Louisiana, and in the first year of his marriage, his wife died. Of a lovely and winning deportment, and eminently pious, she was endeared to all whose fortune it was to know her. She passed from the bridal to the grave, leaving only the legacy of a sainted example, and the consolations of a peaceful death. But a few weeks after, in August, 1851, I became acquainted with Brother Childers. Broken, and subdued, his bereavement was borne with Christian resignation, and had, even then, received a sanctified application. He had just then received license to preach, and fully made up his mind to offer himself as a probationer at the ensuing meeting of our Annual Conference.

It does not appear that his call to preach assumed a more definite form than a sincere desire to consecrate his time and talents to works of usefulness, until he entered college. Even then he was perplexed, doubted whether he should assume the responsibilities of the ministry, and after his marriage, though his call to preach was undecided, his convictions of duty as an itinerant were dismissed. It is due to the memory of his wife, that she neither influenced or sanctioned this conclusion; and her dying sentiments, more than any thing else, seems to have shaken her husband's confidence in its correctness; facts, in themselves, of no mean significance, in the estimate of her character as a woman of truth and godliness. Over her grave he vowed fidelity to the Cross, and consecrated his life to the Methodist Itinerancy. His short career shows how faithfully that vow was fulfilled, and how gloriously that consecration has been illustrated.

He was received as a probationer by the Conference, held in Thibodaux in the last of December, 1851, and was appointed, in connection with a senior preacher, to the Caddo Circuit. This, his first year in the regular work, was one of usefulness and acceptability. His second appointment was to the New Orleans Circuit, embracing a number of important preaching points adjacent to the city. At this post of duty, in the midst of useful and arduous labors, he sickened and died of the yellow fever August 30.

One other fact of his history should be mentioned. A few months before he received his first appointment, whilst on a visit to Virginia, he offered himself to Bishop Andrew as missionary to China, and was accepted. This offer was the result of much prayer and deliberation. It was made in good faith; but, on his return home, the advanced age of his parents, the precarious health of other members of his family, along with other weighty consideration, induced him, reluctantly, to consent to its withdrawal, provided such a course should receive the Episcopal sanction. I believe that both Bishops Paine and Andrew, and his most intimate ministerial brethren, approved of his course. Considering our want of men of this sort in the Louisiana Conference, and the reasons alluded to, his conduct in this affair is remote from the least censure. But, though hindered from the China mission by uncontrollable circumstances, he continued till his death to cherish the hope of embarking in some distant mission of Evangelical enterprise. He died in the missionary spirit, which is the spirit of a hero and a martyr.

The particulars of death have been given already, so far as they were of interest. His sickness of about ten days was borne with resignation; but the closing scene was sudden, unexpected, and veiled in speechless unconsciousness. The testimony of the dying sinner's hope is confined to the death-bed. If it be not given then, the world has nothing upon which to rest its charitable solicitude. It is not so with the Christian. When the circumstances of dissolution are such as to preclude the manifestation of parting assurance, we turn to their lives, and find there a surer testimony than even dying words can give. Here we rest our consolation in the present instance. A life of piety, of ministerial sacrifice, of fidelity even unto death, speaks in trumpet-tones that to him an abundant entrance has been administered into the everlasting kingdom of our Lord Jesus Christ.

As a preacher, his sermons were characterized with severe plainness, excellent method, and searching application. Some of his discourses exhibited the budding, but not the blossoming of imaginative power. The shortest way of reaching his point, and the surest way of fastening it, marked all his pulpit efforts. The Cross was always the centre thought, about which the materials of sermonizing were gathered in such close neighborhood, that the whole structure glowed with its warmth, unction, and power. Pleasant to us is the memory of our departed friend and brother. In life and death we can contemplate his character with satisfaction. His is an enviable portion, to stand with those who have not loved their lives better than their Saviour; and who have, in their death, left a moral legacy to the Church, and have commended their names to the keeping of all time.

FROM RAPIDES, LOUISIANA.

Our Parish has suffered. The merciless plague has been in our midst. Of this you are informed. It made its appearance the last week in August, but was not generally acknowledged until the first week in September. Then it was before us without disguise. No longer did we read and think about it, we saw and felt it.

Many of the citizens fled; but a number remained, and acted nobly; of whom were the generous and praise-worthy young men of this place.

During the month of September, the cemetery receipts were about sixty or sixty-five; in October, thirty or thirty-five. Making near one hundred altogether; which some have estimated at twenty-five or thirty per cent. on the remaining population. A heavy per cent., that. And it is made heavier by the loss of some of our most worthy citizens; among whom are H. and J. Flint, Willis Bonner, —— Hickman and H. Neal. Also, Mrs. H. C. Overton, consort of Gen. W. H. Overton, of this parish, deceased. These were citizens whose places (taken altogether) it will be hard to fill.

Returning health, however, begins to make "men and things" look cheerful. Drooping nature begins to look up as bent branches on the forest trees after a storm. That welcome and expressive smile of health, so long concealed by the curtain around the sick bed, begins to spread; and is only disturbed by a few relapse cases which loiter behind as the rear-guard of the army of death; or, when the thought turns to those almost irreparable breaks in society, caused by the fall of some of its most lovely and substantial oaks.

This year will be remembered long; and with your permission, I will make a suggestion to the friends and members of our Church.

When attacked by disease, your ministers are expected to stand in the front of the battle. And properly so. But to do this, they must have some external fixtures as well as preparation of heart. Like the soldier, they must have a ready mind and armor complete; but they must also have other external supplies to sustain life, and strengthen and facilitate their courage and efforts in the struggle. During the epidemic, some of our preachers occupied a disagreeable and disadvantageous position. By the arrangement of the stewards, (which all thought for the best,) they have had to stay alternately with the country friends, while they must meet an appointment of some kind in town every week. So when the epidemic came, the people in town wanted their preacher with them all the time. But he has no place provided for him in town; no money to pay his way at a tavern; and he must continue in this line marked out by the stewards. This makes his position embarrassing. For the people in town soon complain because the preacher does not stay with them; but he has not the ways and means to do so. On the other hand, the friends in the country tell him, that he must either quit going to town, and stay in the country altogether, or, he must go to town and not return to the country. But he cannot stay in town for the want of means. And to stay in the country and not go to town, would be to call down public censure and condemnation without any notice of the cause that compelled his course. Thus, for the want of being provided for, as he should be, necessity throws him in a very disagreeable cross-fire. How shall this be remedied? Provide for your preacher. Put him on a footing with ministers of other denominations. Build parsonage. Provide for your minister so as to free him from any and all disadvantages. Supply all his actual wants. Remove all burden of care except that of saving souls. Well, how can this be done? In this way. Let every man give something. Let that something be according as God hath prospered him; and let it be done cheerfully. Dont stop to sum up what Brothers A. and B. wont do; just tell us what you will do. And we will call on Brothers A. and B., and show them what you have done; and they will be encouraged to do something. These three cheerful gifts, will increase the encouragement in others; this will command greater means, and so on, until the work is done. Then away with your negatives. Turn out that gang of "can'ts and won'ts." Untie those "cannots" and "will nots," which cripple and bind the hands of your ministers, and gather a good supply of warm hearts and willing minds. These, combined with effort, will thoroughly free your ministers from embarrassment of every kind. And he will be where you can always find him—God will be glorified—you will be served, and saved. Amen.

THE MORAL CODE OF TRADE.

BROTHER McTYEIRE: New Orleans has always looked more like an epitome of the world than any other city ever visited by me. A walk along the levee with nothing to do but look on, and contemplate the busy world, as it may be seen and studied there, is worth the attention of the moralist and Christian for one week, if they had no other inducement to do so, but simply to study human nature in a great mart, where sales and purchases range from many thousands down to a very few dollars. Such a place will disclose to any one the fearful fact, that it is the fewest number of mankind who seem to have any higher notion of moral obligation in the transaction of a common levee, or street business, than a few vague lines of punctuality, which have been drawn up by men of that particular profession, and which are sufficiently spongy to be contracted so as to meet every demand for variation.

Punctuality, we say, is the only stringent element of the moral science which can be found in this manual of business men. I only, however, apply the term business men here to that class of chafferers, usually found about all theatres where a multitude of articles are brought together for sale, and many of them belong rather to the irregular than the regular articles of trade—and in reference to which it seems to me, there has come to pass a sort of settled system of unconfessed swindling. The purchaser knows he is to be cheated less or more, as the case may be, and the seller knows the same. What a state of things for men to bring on themselves! Who does not see, that if in a trade between two such minds and hearts, a just value was given, there would be no virtue in it, just because the common principles of business transactions was only suspended—not entertained—each of the parties would have done what he would have called better for himself, if he could.

This ruinous element in the directory of many of these unfortunate dupes of the world, leads them into such dilated and corrupted views of right and wrong as to leave them always so completely within the net of evil as to render their disentanglement at all times both difficult and uncertain. Indeed I may say, that I have never known a common trader, in all my life, who had abandoned himself to the loose, and iniquitous error, that in a common mart, where every thing brought in, in an irregular way, and offered at whatever can be got for it, may be chaffered for, in view of a speculation, that could ever be made to adhere to religion in a degree which would allow him to enjoy the reputation of a consistent Christian. Hence many a clever man, when is led into this enchanted ground, feels that any connection with religion, would require at his hands more circumspection, and in his dealings a nicer observance of equity than is looked for, or demanded by the men who establish the business ethics of the levee and the market. Hence he resolves to lay over all attention to religion, as it should be professed, and lived, by an avowed Christian. He often delves on day and night, sometimes not omitting to profane the Sabbath, on the common ground that it is a business interest. This he does under the delusive hope and desire that he will soon pick up enough to enable him to go into business in a more regular way. Sometimes he does; but more frequently such men barely live on, and having no experience in any other art of living, become doomed to influences and temptations of the most corrupting kind. But suppose a man should be what is commonly called fortunate, and should glean from these fields of trade what he intends shall form the lower stratum of a more ample fortune, enlarged by trade in more regular and honorable business.

But then, Oh my soul, how awful is the thought that upon all this nucleus of fortune rests the curse of God. It is the income of obscenity and Sabbath-breaking gathered in and laid up, outside of every soothing promise. For let it be well remembered by all these deluded adventurers, that whatever is wrongfully obtained can never be rightfully kept. Your well intended end can never atone for your reckless means. You have sown the seeds of a certain consumption in the constitution of your fortune, and it will leave in desolation; or else you have been allowed, as a judicial curse, to prepare a net for your souls in the tangled meshes of which you will live and die, with your table a trap and a snare—set by incensed justice on slippery places. The curse of God must and will pursue ill gotten gain. It may exhaust its claim by a merciful overthrow of fortune thus commenced, which is the least evil that can follow, or it may deliver over the agent to that sort of infatuation which assumes that gain is godliness. But nurses alone must follow wealth gotten not by right: at the end the possessors will see that they acted most foolishly.—See Jeremiah, xvii, 11.

But I do not apply these remarks to New Orleans, only as a wider field for this sort of operation, than any other known to me, and because I would warn all against the adoption of such latitudinarian views in business deeds.

L. PIERCE.

Columbus, Oct. 26th, 1853.

REGARD FOR CHILDREN, TRUE BENEVOLENCE.—Of all our benevolent institutions, those which regard children seem to me to hold the first rank. The aged will soon cease to exist, and the poor of middle-age have formed characters which yield slowly and reluctantly to any means of improvement. But the child has just begun to live, with a mind pliant and tender, with habits not yet rigid, with a heart not yet tainted and hardened, yet with propensities which, if unchecked, will probably issue in guilt and misery. Abandon him to ignorance, and his youth, if he struggle through its hardships, will train him to crimes for which society has reared the prison and the gallows. Who can think without an aching heart of a youth subjected to the example of an intemperate mother, the tyranny and blows of an irritable and intoxicated father; and, at last, cast out upon the world without one moral or religious principle. Take him under your protection, ye followers of Christ, ye managers of Sunday Schools, and you may hope to form him to intelligence and virtue, to a life of cheerful and useful labor, and to the happiness of a better world. Do not—do not let him perish; remember he is a human being, created in the image of God, retaining power, has a mysterious importance, and his good is worthy the exertion and care of the proudest of his race.

SONG.... By J. HAMILTON REYNOLDS.

Go where the water glideth gently over,
Glideth by meadows that the greenest be;
Go listen to our beloved river,
And think of me!

Wander in forest, where the small flower layeth
Its fairy form beside the giant tree;
Listen the dim brook piping while it playeth,
And think of me!

Watch when the sky is silver pale at even,
And the wind grieveth in the lonely tree;
Go out beneath the solitary heaven,
And think of me!

Ah! when the moon riseth, as she were dreaming,
And I tread with white feet the lulled sea;
Go, silent as a star beneath her beaming,
And think of me!

NEW ORLEANS:

Saturday Morning, November 12.

SITUATIONS WANTED.—Those who are directed by the two modest advertisements in our columns, will not only serve themselves, if in need, but the family of a hardworking itinerant and good man.

HEALTH OF THE CITY.—From the last weekly report of interments in this city, it appears that the deaths were only 130. From the crowded appearance of our streets—the rapid filling up of the hotels—the great influx of strangers and country people—many of the latter belonging to the settlements on the coast, which it is not deemed prudent to visit just now—we are led to estimate our population as considerably over 100,000. The last report of deaths would, therefore, show a mortality about equel to that of New York and the other large cities of the Union.

REV. J. HAMILTON, D. D.—The friends of this excellent man and divine, says the Mobile Tribune 7th inst., were pained to learn a few days since that he was severely suffering from disease, at Selma, and not expected to live. We have the pleasure of announcing, however, that news was received yesterday, stating that he was much better and expected soon to be restored. He seems to be suffering under a complication of diseases, resembling, so far as developed, bronchitis. We hope that he will speedily recover and long be spared to fill his mission on earth.

D. MARTINDALE, A. M.—Last week we had information from Rev. W. P. Barton, the Methodist pastor in Clinton, La., who has done noble service there during the late epidemic—that this intelligent and energetic young man was lying ill, dangerously; he has since died. Mr. Martindale was a son of Rev. Stephen Martindale, of New York Conference. He was for some time Professor of Natural Philosophy, in Centenary College, La., and at his death the District Attorney of Feliciana parish. His position as Chairman of the Relief Committee, exposed him much and gave fitting opportunity for indulging a heart of largest benevolence and humanity. Hearing of the sickness of G. McLelland, Esq., at Jackson, La., Mr. M. left Clinton to attend his friend, and there took and died of the same disease—yellow fever. Requiescat in pace.

GEOGRAPHY.—There is, somewhat, in the mapping off of this good country of ours that stumps English geography. Would not an Editor of Olney sell in London? Mr. John ought to add it to his library, without credit, as he has done Worcester's Dictionary.

The latest blunders we find in the London Watchman. On 5th October it says: The yellow fever continued to diminish at New Orleans, but at Lake Coast it was very prevalent.

October 12th: At New Orleans and Mobile the yellow fever was fast disappearing; but at Louisiana and Mississippi it was proving very destructive to human life.

PROGRESS OF REFORM.

The friends of Temperance may take courage. Their principles are taking root and spreading. Pot-house politicians will soon be—aye, already are—at a discount where once the liquor ballot prevailed. At the late election in Baltimore, the Temperance legislative ticket was carried, and a Temperance Sheriff elected by 1000 majority.

HOLSTEN CONFERENCE.

This body adjourned 19th ult. Bishop Paine presiding. The Holsten Advocate informs us that ten preachers were admitted on trial and two located. This Conference is larger than we had supposed, and flourishing. About 80 preachers were stationed at the late session. Besides it has 13 superannuates. Next Conference to be held at Cleveland, Tenn.

DELEGATES TO GEN. CONF.—S Petton, E E Wiley, W Hicks, T Sullins, D B Carter, and J Atkins. Reserves, T K Catlett and David Flemming.

THE LEAVEN WORKS.

South America will yet shake off its priest riders, and we hope offer an open field for Circuit riders. Who does not say, Amen? The leaven works there. May the whole inert but rich lump of States and peoples be leavened soon with religious liberty.

The Panama Herald has received advices from Valparaiso to the 30th Sept., and Calao to the 12th. From the Herald's summary and remarks, we extract the following:

"A serious dispute between the clergy and the civil authorities has taken place in the department of Los Andes. The Governor having summoned the curate in a civil suit, the latter refused to appear, whereupon he was arrested and sent to the capital of the province. The Archbishop of Santiago immediately issued an order suspending the administration of all sacraments throughout the department of Los Andes until the Governor is removed. We trust that the Government will support the civil authority, and not yield to the despotic act of the Church.—Chili is unfortunately priest-ridden, and the sooner she shakes off the yoke of the clergy the better for her social, civil and religious progress.

EVANGELISATION DES ESCLAVES.

The last number of Archives du Méthodisme, (Sept. 2) the official journal of the French Methodist Conference, is before us; a neat quarto form. Each article, by legal constraint, is signed by the author—whether editor or contributor—which gives the sheet a singular appearance of candor. A Methodist paper in Paris!—this is a step forward. It is filled up more with information than argument—as its readers have to learn principles, denominational statistics, etc.

What is said of Etats-Unis, in a world-review of Methodism, is all included under the above head. This is worth remarking. A pious and intelligent foreigner, contemplating American Methodism, is struck with this characteristic—its benevolent care for the spiritual welfare of the Slave. This is a peculiarity of American Methodism compared with other American Churches—of Methodism compared with itself—of Southern Methodism. Those who labor in this arduous field will see that their labor is appreciated. It is distinctive, special, honorable. The following will interest our Creole readers:

Le nombre des nègres devenus membres des diverses églises des Etats-Unis est de 300,000 environ. L'Eglise Méthodiste des Etats méridionaux compte à elle seule 150,000 de ces esclaves parmi ses membres. Cent deux missionnaires sont employés exclusivement à visiter les plantations, sans compter les services tenus par les pasteurs à poste fixe. Les écoles de ces missions sont fréquentées par 16,657 enfants.

L'Eglise paraît comprendre toujours plus l'importance de pareils efforts. On pourra s'en convaincre en parcourant quelques extraits des derniers rapports des Conférences pastorales Méthodistes du midi.

Voici comment s'exprime l'un des rapporteurs: "Les missions en faveur des nègres se recommandent d'une manière spéciale aux églises des Etats du Sud. C'est sur elles que semblent reposer le devoir, l'œuvre glorieuse de prêcher Christ crucifié à cette partie de notre population. Les autres dénominations religieuses semblent reconnaître que c'est aux Méthodistes surtout qu'est dévolue cette œuvre importante. Notre position nous y appelle. Eh, bien! acceptons-la et en la poursuivant avec un redoublement de zèle, comptons toujours plus sur la bénédiction du Seigneur. Partout les plantours et les inspecteurs nous accueillent; les portes s'ouvrent, et la moisson, blanchissant sous nos pas, nous invite au travail."

Un autre Conférence s'exprime en ces termes: "L'œuvre de l'évangélisation des nègres est notre œuvre spéciale. Il ne faut pas que nous la négligions ni que nous l'oublions. Si cela arrivait, le Seigneur nous en demanderait compte. Quelles que soient les difficultés de l'entreprise, et quels qu'en soient les frais, il faut que nous subvenions aux besoins religieux de nos esclaves. Les nègres sont nos domestiques, les cultivateurs de nos terres, les autours, en quelque sorte, de nos richesses; ils sont nos fidèles gardiens dans les temps de maladie comme dans les temps de santé, la nuit comme le jour; il faudrait donc que le cœur qui voudrait les priver des bienfaits de la religion fût bien dur et bien ingrat."

Mais, outre ces efforts collectifs, il se fait, semble-t-il, des sacrifices individuels en faveur de l'évangélisation et de l'amélioration du sort des nègres. En voici un exemple entre mille: M. Hill, riche négociant de la Nouvelle-Orléans, s'est vu forcé, par suite de sa position commerciale et des lois dupays, de devenir propriétaire d'esclaves; il en possède près d'un millier. Mais il a aussitôt demandé à l'Eglise Méthodiste, dont il est membre, un missionnaire pour chacune de ses terres. Bien entendu que le salaire de ces pasteurs et les frais de cults sont entièrement à sa charge. Chaque plantation de ce maître chrétien est pourvue d'un pasteur pour les nègres, en même temps que d'un inspecteur pour les travaux.

We take it well—this cordial acknowledgment from the French branch of the Methodist family of our substantial care for the slaves. It contrasts strongly with the invidious and meddlesome prating of those across the Channel about the relations of Southern Methodists to a civil institution. Instead of vetoing the laws of Congress, and adopting high-sounding preambles and resolutions reported by the "Committee on Slavery," Southern Methodists are trying to evangelize the slaves—preaching Christ to them, and baptizing them—which is their commission. This is their proper business, and not playing into the hands of politicians. They have "reports" touching the matter it is true, and pass resolutions every year; but it is to acknowledge indebtedness to the bond and free, and make provision for their spiritual wants. We are comparatively indifferent about the judgment of man, pro or con; but the time is not far when calm men, judging from an unbefogged stand-point, will not hesitate to decide between us and our abusers, which is fulfilling Gospel functions toward the servile population.

The writer, above quoted, concludes by telling his readers why he presents these signs of religious movements in the United States (ce grand foyer du Protestantisme). He would have them comprehend (what, if they had abolitionists only as instructors, we reckon they would never have dreamed of) "que les Chrétiens d'Amérique ne sont pas pourtant indifférents à l'état de leurs esclaves."

Perhaps he may not have learned that the "M. Hill," spoken of with just eulogy in this respect, is dead; and, among other legacies, he left one to the Abolitionists. It is this:

"I want my negroes well treated. But for Abolitionism, I should have been able to do more for them."

THE CHURCH SUIT.—According to the New York Commercial Advertiser, the pending lawsuit, relating to the property of the New York Book Concern, is to be submitted to Judge McLean for arbitration, by consent of the commissioners on both sides.

METHODIST PRESS.

The editor of the Christian Advocate and Journal is trying hard to beat back the wave of Northern fanaticism, by persuasive reasonings, logical blows, special pleadings, etc., etc. We see the North Indiana Conference taking action on slavery, recommended the rule of turning out all who held slaves for gain. It is some consolation to Dr. Bond that this Conference "does not endorse the 'Hosmerite Rule of Discipline,' which is to be urged upon the next General Conference, by which 'all slaveholders are to be excluded from the Church, without regard to their characters or circumstances.' It only proposes to get rid of slaveholders for gain."

Dr. Bond, in his last issue, quotes in full the letter in the N. O. Advocate from Col. Cobb to the Missionary, attesting the value of his labors. He prefaces it with a column of editorial and breaks it, as a stick to his purpose, over the pates of all Hosmerism. Slaves can be Christians—there is use in preaching to them—the Church ought to keep free access to this field—it has a large duty and large fruits there, and the Church, South, is there, at the work. Strange the venerable editor does not see the sequitur—that the M. E. Church, South, acted wisely and scripturally in separating from a body which, by its action and agitation, would embarrass our ministry, and cut it off from a very large population of these States. But for the separation of 1844, so opposed and embittered by the editor of the Christian Advocate and Journal, the Slave Missions of Methodism—its glory and praise everywhere—would now be a desolation.

MENDING AND INNOVATING.—Rev. B. Crouch, Sr., writes a letter of warning to the "progressives" in the Nashville Advocate. They are going too fast: pause; think. He gives some instances of these innovating tendencies. At the late session, he says Rev. L. D. Huston—a man of mark—

"Moved a resolution instructing the Kentucky delegation, in the next General Conference, to urge the erection of a conference or council of laymen, to meet simultaneously with the itinerant ministry, and exercise, as we understood the matter, co-ordinate authority and control with the ministry, especially in directing the finances of the church. The exact provisions of the resolution we do not distinctly recollect, but the principle of it was obviously radical; and, unless we entirely failed to gather the features of our excellent brother's nursling, it could only live by drinking up the vitals of our church polity, and by superceding itinerancy with a settled pastorate. It is true, the resolution was not adopted by the conference—it was acted on—but it had friends, and yet has them."

Again, "Rev. T. N. Ralston, a minister long and favorably known in our connection, an applauded author, and the scholar of his conference, offered a resolution, which, without debate, was sustained by at least two-thirds of the voters, comprising the strength and talent of the conference, and which, if finally adopted, and made the law of the church, cannot fail to work great injury, if not ultimate ruin, to Methodist itinerancy in our own department of the Wesleyan family.

To extend the time which a preacher may be allowed to remain in the same station from two years to three—which is the sum of the measure in question—is regarded by many as a mere item of changeable policy, wholly inoperative as to any effect it might have upon the organic polity of Methodism, and, therefore, ought not to be strongly objected to. But a careful and unbiased examination of this measure, in view of legitimate results, might probably enable even its devoted friends to detect in it a radical genius. Let the following points be properly weighed, and perhaps they may cast some light upon the tendency and probable results of the measure under consideration."

Mr. Crouch gives many objections to this three years' term—the gist of which is that the difficulty of removal will be increased and the itinerancy which requires it, full proportionately into disfavor with preachers and people. And more, the temptation to gather about him impediments will beset the itinerant—and thus the best, who will be three-years-term men usually, will be lamed. Now, says he, send preachers, who have a turn that way any how, to "a station or circuit with a fair prospect of remaining three successive years, and you will virtually invite them to open shops, or stores, or schools, or to go to 'digging in the earth'—whether to 'hide their Lord's money' or not, judge ye—and by the time the three years have expired, they have become localized in business, in interest, in feeling, in fact, and now, to prevent them from locating in form, and to compensate them for having chained the itinerant one to a store-house, they must receive the hire of such appointments as will accommodate their temporalities, while the good of the church, and the well-earned claims of those self-sacrificing ministers who feel themselves bound 'to employ all their time in the work of God,' must be treated as secondary considerations."

BIBLICAL DEPARTMENT.—The Pittsburg Advocate gives an item that cannot be mistaken in its bearings upon the mooted point of Ministerial Education:

"The Erie Conference at its last session appointed a committee to take into consideration the expediency of establishing in Allegheny College a "Department of Hebrew and Biblical Literature," and also to confer with the sister Conferences on the subject. The matter has been presented before the College Trustees, and has received their approval. The committee think some further steps should be taken in the matter before the next session of the Conferences; and to ascertain the views of brethren in relation to it, they have appointed a meeting of the friends of the College in the three Conferences, to be held at Pittsburgh, November 23, 1853.

FINANCIAL DEPARTMENT.—The Advocate publishes the plan of the St. Louis Conference, adding pertinent remarks on the desirableness of uniformity on this head. The Methodist Church has already received compliments from unexpected quarters, as to the fullness and accuracy of statistics. Let it be so in this matter:

"The Financial Plan" of this Conference differs in its details from that of most other Conferences in the connection. The Plan requires that the amounts received for house-rent, table expenses, &c., be reported separately, by the preachers severally. To ascertain, then, what any one preacher did receive from the Church where he labored, it is necessary to add the amount in the column for quartorage, and the column of receipts for house-rent, etc., together with the amount received for traveling expenses, and the sum will be the total of the preachers' receipts."

TENNESSEE CONFERENCE.

The Treasurer of the Conference Missionary Society sums up the collections from the last session in October, 1852, to the one just closed at $9257.

From the Nashville Advocate 27th ult. we learn of the formation of a singular kind of Society—under a singular name. The getting up of petit societies, though for good purposes, has a limit of usefulness. It tends to complicate the connectional machinery and increase the friction; to draw off attention and means from those larger and indispensable auxiliaries, and distract the people with much begging for small sums. Fewer collections, larger funds and judicious disbursements are preferable. We do not, however, implicate the society this Conference has organized in these reflections. It is called the "Society of Perpetual Patrons." The P. Elders are a board of managers. The funds to be legally invested, etc. A gift of $20 to the society endows a Perpetual Patronship, provided, if the person be deceased, that the endowment be accompanied by an additional sum of one dollar for each year that may have elapsed since the death of said person; and provided also, that the person for whom the perpetual patronship is endowed be, at the time of his or her death, a member of our Church in good standing.

"The proceeds arising from the loan or investment of said funds are to be appropriated to defraying the board of the children of the members of this Conference, and of those members who have died, or may die, in the work, at the schools; provided, that not more than one-half of said proceeds shall be thus appropriated, and that the remainder, be it half or more, shall be passed into the hands of the Treasuror of the Tennessee Conference Relief fund, to be appropriated as are the other moneys of said Relief Fund."

We quote above the first and fifth articles of the Constitution. Following are the—

THE INDIAN PREACHER.

Under the obituary head of a religious cotemporary, is a notice which it seems to us deserves a "passing remark." 'Tis the notice of the death of an Indian—John F. Boot—a Methodist preacher and itinerant. He was a member of the Indian Mission Conference.

Lo the poor Indian! A trophy of Christianity has been garnered in the skies. Nor is the fruit of missions, in him, all told. What good has he not done among his fading race! A touching interest, bordering on the "Romance of Religion," attaches to such a case. Might not materials for a charming chapter in Christian Biography be found and felicitously worked in the simple apostolic lives of some of the Indian Conference? We confess to a desire to know more particularly of John Boot, the Indian preacher.

The obituary says: He died at his post, away from his home. His work this year was on the Canadian, an out-post of the Cherokee Nation; and though far from his large family and interest, he went cheerfully. Such is the true greatness of a good man—that he is capable of filling the highest places, and yet willingly fills the lowest. Many a heart is filled with joy and grief at his death—joy in the reflection of such a loan to our Zion, and that he has entered into his rest; but grief at his removal from us; but the midnight cry found him ready.

"He fell, but felt no fear,
Tranquil amidst alarms;
It found him on the field,
A veteran, slumbering on his arms.
Beneath his red cross shield,
His sword was in his hand,
Still warm with recent fight.
Ready, that moment, at command,
Through rock and steel to smite."

He was truly the John Fletcher of the Cherokee Nation, whose name he bore.—Cheerful and happy, there was a sunshine about his countenance that drew all around him. He was whole-souled in God's work, and bore the brunt at the quarterly meetings and camp meetings near him, while he was no less efficient in the pulpit.

"One single blast of his bugle horn
Was worth an hundred men."

But his record is on high, and his work with his God, where he has entered. May his sons in the Gospel catch his mantle, and follow him as he followed Christ.

THE TRIENNIAL CONVENTION.

From the proceedings of this body in New York, we present some further items, gathered from the Register of October 20th.

Rev. W. J. Kip, of Albany, N. Y., has been elected Missionary Bishop of California, and Rev. T. F. Scott, of Columbus, Ga., Missionary Bishop for the Territories of Oregon and Washington. These elections seem to meet with favor. We admire this Episcopal policy, as thus extended.

An attempt was made vigorously but failed to have this canon enacted—

"Every Bishop may at his discretion set forth forms of prayer for his own diocese, to be used under his license, revocable to his pleasure, on occasions of public worship in places where there are no organized parishes, and in newly appointed Missionary stations—provided that such forms be composed wholly of portions of the Book of Common Prayer, and that no prayers be used but such as may be found in said book."

And to repeal the following—

"Every Minister shall, before all sermons and lectures, and on all other occasions of public worship, use the Book of Common Prayer, as the same is or may be established by the authority of the General Convention of this Church. And in performing said service, no other prayer shall be used than those prescribed by the said book."

Great devotion—reverence was professed for the Prayer Book. The Bishop could not be trusted with such discretion as the amendment proposed. High conservatism ruled. Urgent as were the reasons offered for adapting the Book to exigencies, it could not be permitted.

"The Rev. Dr. Trapier, of S. C., in supporting the amendment under discussion, said, that in circumstances such as he was subjected to, it was eminently necessary. Most of his congregation were domestic negro servants, whose time was limited, and this canon would countenance him in the course which he was often compelled to pursue. He said the Church had hitherto been too conservative. A few years since he was at the residence of the Bishop of London, and that prelate asserted that it was their excessive conservatism which drove the great Methodist leaders from the Church of England. That same stiffness which had worked so disastrously in that Church, would be productive of similar results here. The same prelate asserted that the Church of England owed the revival of its piety to John Wesley."

A Canon providing that every new Diocese consist of at least six parishes and six regularly settled Presbyters over them, was adopted without debate.

The public life of a man teaches us to know his public character; it is his domestic life that teaches us to know the man. One day, in a hot summer, Marshal Turenne was leaning out at the window, with only his waistcoat on. A servant, who passed through the room, mistaking him for a fellow servant, came softly up to him, and gave him a hearty slap behind. The Marshal turned round, when the servant, terrified, threw himself on his knees, entreating his forgiveness, and assuring him that he thought it had been James. "And if it had been James," said the Marshal calmly, "there was no occasion to strike so hard." What do we learn from such a reply? That this great man was no less calm and composed in his house, than at the head of his army.

LETTER FROM JACKSON, MISS.

JACKSON, October 28, 1853.

DEAR BROTHER: On the 17th inst., hearing that Rev. Mr. Cleaver was prostrate with the prevailing fever, and no Protestant clergyman was left to discharge the duties of his office, I left Vicksburg and came here to supply, as well as I could, the loss of Mr. Cleaver's attentions. As I entered the city I met some gentlemen just returned from his burial!

I found several sick persons desiring to see a clergyman, and had the sad pleasure (though the sun was down when the cars got here) of visiting several habitations of sorrow and death before the noon of night.

I have been here at work—and there is enough for three to do—and shall remain as long as duty calls. There have been eight cases in the Penitentiary. Can you imagine a rainbow to bend its seraph wings over a stormy ocean at a midnight hour, and the waves enchanted by the spectre to hush their howlings and spread themselves calmly down like a mirror to reflect its loveliness? Then you may imagine a scene I witnessed in that dark and dreary place. I had been an hour in the gloomy chamber used exclusively for yellow fever patients, and had urged on each his duty to himself respecting his health, spread the bed-clothes over and again upon some, and begged others to observe the caution; but there was an apparent recklessness of life, and a sort of don't-care-if-I-die feeling that could not be overcome; till, presently, as unexpected as a midnight rainbow, a good Christian lady entered the room; one who had toiled faithfully amidst the pestilence for others, as well as her own family; and the moment the sick men saw her, every countenance changed; a sense of lost health seemed for a while forgotten, every blanket was adjusted, every hand covered, every heart seemed to throb with a healthier current, and hope seemed to rekindle in their bosoms, under the cheering thought that they were not turned over to the ravages of pestilence, the nostrums of the druggist, and the hurried offices of the grave-digger; but that woman, true to her Divine mission, had sought them out in the depths of their sorrow. God bless useful women! God bless Mrs. Bakewell!

The pestilence here is now subsiding, and the cases that remain are generally improving. I shall remain, perhaps another week, and longer if duty calls. I have promised to preach next Sabbath. There has been no church opened since the lamented Cleaver fell sick. Blest be the memory of such a man.

Tranquil amid alarms,
It found him on the field.
A vet'ran burnishing his arms;*
Beneath his red-cross shield
The voice at midnight came;
He started up to hear;
A mortal arrow pierced his frame
He fell, but felt no fear!

"Let me die the death of the righteous. Let my last end be like his."

My dear brother; for three months past I have enjoyed such a sense of the transcendent sublimity of our holy religion, and the blessedness of trying to follow the Divine Master in relieving human sufferings, that I feel as though I would willingly pursue the path of the pestilence that I might see the shining foot-prints of the Redeemer there.

The Rev. Mr. Leray, Catholic priest, has been taken down. He is cheerful and calm, though full of pain. He has relieved many a sufferer. The good people of Jackson will not soon forget his late kindness to the poor and distressed. I like the man vastly. And I tell you I never more loved our Zion than now, when I feel that, free from the embarrassing shackles of sectarian exclusiveness, like the Genius of Methodism, my heart embraces all of God's people of every name, with this simple Apostolic creed: "God is no respecter of persons; but in every nation he that feareth him, and worketh righteousness, is accepted of him."

I have seen God's mercy displayed in many forms to his people of every name, and while I have my senses no human power shall rob me of the indescribable pleasure of mingling with a people whose ministry take the "world for their parish," and can look upon all whom God owns and honors, of every name, as parts of the universal Church of Christ.

I should say that Bro. Seat, the pastor of our church here, has been suffering long from sore affliction, and his health is still so precarious that I fear his days are numbered. He left here five months ago in search of health; alas, I fear, to find a grave! And he health, he would have been here every hour in this perilous time. It would take a book to narrate the scenes I have witnessed; indeed, it seems to me I have lived three years in as many months; but I would not have missed the lessons I have learned, nor the experience I have had, for the highest earthly honor. C. K. MARSHALL.

*DEAR ME!: Is not that better? If slumbering, of course; he was tranquil; but to be rubbing the lock, and yet calm, shows courage.

[For the N. O. Christian Advocate.]

TEXAS ITEMS.

The best of timber abounds in South-eastern Texas. An abundance of lumber is being produced.

Texas supports fifty-one newspapers, three of them religious.

The book business is flourishing beyond all example in Texas. Bookstores are in demand, and would succeed well in many of the more important towns. All agencies for the circulation of valuable publications and useful knowledge are doing well.

The cause of moral reform in every department is making rapid progress in the Star State.

It is supposed that at least 200,000 persons will emigrate to Texas within the next nine months.

There is said to be 30,000 persons in Texas over twenty years of age who cannot read and write. What shall be done for their children?

The citizens of Houston have been favored with two white frosts. No fears are now entertained in regard to the further progress of yellow fever. Trade is rapidly reviving.

The Harrisburg Railroad is said to be doing a paying business.

The sugar planters of Texas are in the full tide of successful experiment in grinding their cane. Their prospects are said to be highly flattering.

The Galveston and Brasos Canal has been completed to Oyster Creek; only one mile more to be done.

The Galveston and Henderson Railroad has been put under contract, and will be forthwith commenced.

The managers of the Texas Orphan Asylum are proceeding with much energy in their noble enterprise.

The citizens of Houston are proceeding with much energy in the erection of their educational edifice, to cost $15,000.

An additional newspaper is in contemplation at Houston.

Four newspapers in the German language are now published in Texas.

The friends of the Maine Liquor Law in Texas are pushing their cause with zeal. Many of the Texas newspapers are warmly supporting it.

November 11.

First Love.

Can any one lay his hand upon his waistcoat and conscientiously say, "Until I saw the present Mrs. Jones, I never was in love in my life!" Can any man say so? He is a poor creature if he can; and I make no doubt that he has had at least forty-five first loves since he began to be capable of admiring at all. As for the ladies, them, of course, I put out of the question; they are fresh, no doubt; they never fall in love until mamma tells them Mr. So-and-so is an amiable young man, and in every way eligible; they never flirt with Captain Smith at a ball; and sigh as they lie home in bed, and think what a charming dashing fellow he is; they never hear the young curate read his sermon so sweetly, and think how pale and interesting he looks, and how lonely he must feel in his curate house, and what a noble work it would be to share the solitude and soothe the pains, and listen to the delightful doctrine of so excellent a man; and never think of attaching themselves to any mortal, except their brother, until he brings home a young friend from college, and says, "Mary, Tom Atkinson admires you hugely, and is heir to a thousand a year!" They never begin the attack as I have heard; but their young hearts writ like so many fortresses, to be attacked and carried after a proper period of siege—by blockade, or by bribery, or by espitalation, or by fiery escalade.

"Whilst ladies persist in maintaining the strictly defensive condition, men must naturally, as it were, take the opposite line, that of attack; otherwise, if both parties held aloof, there would be no marriages; and the hosts would die in their respective inaction, without ever coming to a battle. Thus, it is evident, that as the ladies will not, the men must take offensive. I, for my part, have made in the course of my life, at least a score of chivalrous attacks upon several strongly fortified hearts. Sometimes I began my work too late in the season, and winter suddenly came and rendered further labors impossible; sometimes I have attacked the breach madly, sword in hand, and have been plunged violently from the scaling ladder into the ditch; sometimes I have made a decent lodgment in the place, when—bang! blows up a mine, and I am scattered to the dues! and sometimes when I have been in the very heart of the citadel—ah, that I should say it!—a sudden panic has struck me, and I ran like the British out of Carthogena!" [Thackery.

MADAME BOCARME.—"Your readers will recollect what an exitement was created two or three years ago by a murder committed by Count de Bocarme and his wife on the brother of the wife. The Count was tried and executed, and the wife acquitted. The property of the murdered brother, which was very large, fell by right to the widow, his sister. She also became, by a decision of the Court, guardian of her two children by the Count. This lady possessed of extraordinary personal attractions, and, from this fact and the peculiarity of her position, her wealth, and her youth, has been the heroine of many novel adventures since the tragic deaths of her brother and husband. The French and Belgian newspapers have found in her a perfect mine of romance and originality. One blaze English nobleman who had sought her hand willed her all his property, and died soon after. Others traveled hundreds of miles to lay their hearts at her feet, like pilgrims going to Mecca. Several times she has been on the point of contracting an advantageous marriage, but by some means or another it has often failed. At last 'justice has been seized of her' as lawyers say. One of her relatives has cited her before the tribunal for the singular mode in which she administers her affairs; or in other words, it has been discovered that she is leading a dissolute life. That her mind is slightly turned, that she is fast squandering her property, and setting an example of prodigality before her children which it is thought improper should longer exist. The tribunal has just decided that the lady Lydie-Victoire-Joseph Fougaies, widow of M. Alfred Julien Illippolyto, Count Visart de Bocarme, cannot hereafter plead; transact, borrow, receive movable effects, and give, discharge, alienate, or squander her hypothecated goods, etc.; without the aid of a certain legal gentleman therein named, who has been called to her assistance by the Court in the capacity of legal guardian."—Paris Correspondent N. NATURE'S FALL FASHIONS.—They are out—the sylvan fashions for the fall are out in all their variety and glory, and the drapery of the forest, dyed by the Creator, shines in the richness of its tinges the fabrics dyed by the hands of man. Chemistry cannot produce, with all its "transmitting magic," such a show of assorted colors as now decorates the woods of New Jersey and Long Island. The brocades and velvets at Beck's and Stewart's, piled up in Alps of crimson, green and amber, with cataracts of silk pouring down the acclivities, or spread like shining lakelets at their feet, form a pretty picture, as seen through the clear glass-plate which transmits their every hue unimpaired: hot haste then up unmong the rainbow-tinted autumnal woods and their colors will be extinguished by the flaming grandeur of the dead foliage. Nature is greater than art, and the frost and sun have dyes at their disposal which cannot be duplicated with cochineal, or saffron, or any simple or compound substance that ever imparted beauty to the products of the loom. The fall fashions are worth seeing in Broadway, but the rags of vegetation fluttering on the limbs of the maple, the dog-wood, the red-oak, and the poplar, cannot be matched even in the shawls of India or the silks of France. RUSSIAN "MOCCHES" IN EDINBURGH.—The daily papers tell us that—

"The clouds of small black flies which were observed in many places of the island about a fortnight or three weeks ago, again presented themselves on Wednesday morning, in the neighborhood of Edinburgh."

These black flies have, we understand upon good authority, preceded Mr. Elihu Burritt from Russia; and are, indeed, only another evidence of the magical influence of the harmonious blacksmith. Those black flies were, only two months ago, wasps, Russian wasps, encountered by Elihu in the environs of St. Petersburg. He was on horseback, when his horse's foot sinking into a wasp's nest, brought a cloud of the destructive insects about the head of the traveler. Every wasp had his sting out when Mr. Burritt delivered himself of one of those marvelous orations which it had been his mission to deliver to the Czar's bondmen. In twenty minutes, the eloquent peacemaker had talked every wasp into a harmless black fly. Thus, can there be any doubt that the peace orators of the North will, in like manner, talk the Russian army out of its bayonets? [Punch.

HOW WE ARE OFF FOR SOAP.—If any one asks us how we are off for Soap, it is pleasant to be able to answer him in the most satisfactory manner. We happen to be extremely well off for soap, in consequence of the kindness of some eccentric individuals who are always sending us by post certain penn'orths of specimens of saponaceous matter, with which they invite us to shave ourselves. We have lately received in a letter a bit of something which we are told will cover our face with "a lather like thick white paint, over which the razor will glide." but as we don't want a razor to glide over our beard, we hesitate to try the experiment. The gratuitous soap is accompanied by the prospectus of a perfume which "never becomes fatal," and a preparation for the hair which makes it "soft and glossy for ever." We are quite sure that the individual who sent the announcement to us can have no idea of the disorderly haystack which does duty on top of our poll for a head of hair, or he would never undertake to render it "permanently," or even for one moment "soft and glossy." HYMENEAL:

MARRIED.—On Wednesday, 26th October, ROBERT BABINGTON to ELLEN ELLIS, daughter of Rev. Stephen Ellis, both of Franklinton, Washington Parish, La.

On the 27th October, at the residence of W. B. Montgomery, by Rev. John B. Bewen, WM. MONTOOMERY, Esq., to Miss ELIZA ALEXANDER, all of Washington Co., Miss.

On the 1st November, by the Rev. T. J. Lacy, Dr. LEONARD MAGRUDER to Miss MARY E. HYNSON, all of Rapides Parish, La.

OBITUARY:

Mrs. PENLOPE BULLOCK, wife of E. Bulloek, was born in South-Carolina, February 23d, 1807, and died in Hinds County, September 20th, 1853.

She joined the M. E. Church more than 30 years ago, and remained an acceptable member until she quit the church militant for the church triumphant. Her piety was of that quiet and unobtrusive kind which appears most lovely when most closely examined. She was the child of affliction, yet she bore her afflictions patiently—calmly. As she had lived a Christian, her end was as might have been expected—triumphant. As she neared her end she spoke freely about her departure: at first her way did not appear clear, but before her death she gathered spiritual strength, and rejoiced at her nearness to her eternal home. She exhorted her companion and children to be more faithful and meet her in heaven. T. WILEY.

DIED.—In Gainesville, Ala., October 23d, Miss MARGARET GAIGSBY. She was born in Sumter county, Ala., January 14, 1836, embraced religion in 1851, and united with the M. E. Church, in which communion she remained until death. Sister M. was a dutiful child both to parents and teachers, endeavoring to please in all things. As a student of the Bible Class, she was prompt and interested in searching the Scriptures, in order to be wise in God's wisdom.

During her late sickness the writer visited her frequently, and ever found her calm and composed, ready to respond favorably upon the subject of religion, so much so that I was satisfied that she enjoyed peace with God through Christ. As she declined her evidences seemed to brighten: she had a vision of two departed sainted relatives, who indicated that she would be next to come to them. After this her mind seemed to be drawn up to heaven. Thus passed from the sorrows of earth our dear young friend, Margret.

"Thou art gone to the grave, we no longer behold thee.
Nor tread the rough paths of the world by thy side;
God gave thee, he took thee, and he will restore thee,
And death hath no sting, for the Saviour has died."

T. MOONY.

Gainesville, Ala., Oct. 30, 1853.

TOBIAS AARAMS was born in Norway, 15th September, 1807; when about 20 years old he left his native land and became a sailor. In this he continued fourteen years, during which time he embraced the Christian religion, and soon after his came to Boston and there fell in with Father Tuyler, the sailor's preacher. He abandoned the sea and put himself under the cars and instruction of Father Taylor, joined the church and learned to speak and read our language. He came to Mobile in October, 1838, and commenced business in his small way: bought out a little Irish grogshop and emptied the spirits on the ground, and furnished the little house with family groceries, and continued to increase his stock as his means would afford. In April, 1840, he was married to Miss Mary Ann Taylor. He made a handsome property for his family, always maintaining a uniform Christian character to his death. December, 1849, he was licensed to exhort in the M. E. Church, and although his language was quite broksa, he labored in the country round Mobile with great acceptability, for to my knowledge he preached many good things in his exhortations. In June, 1852, his lunge became diseased, be resorted to every means for relief, but found none that was permanent. On the 16th of August, 1853, he left the world in the triumphs of a living faith.

EBENEZER. HEARN.

Mobile, Nov. 8.

DIED.—On the 13th of October, 1853, at her residsuce in St. Tammany parish, La., Mrs. MARY EVANS, aged 80 years.

Of her early history the writer knows but little, as his acquaintance with her began about the first of July last, at a protracted meeting in her neighborhood. Her constant rejoicing in hope of a glorious immortality, her fervent prayers in the great coagregation for the conversion of sinners, her urgent and affectionate exhortations to the mourners, and the gracious words of encouragement to Christians, young and old, were of a character to justify the saying that she lived like Anna of old, "which departed not from the temple, but served God with fastings and prayers night and day."

From her own statements we learn that she was a native of North Carolina, that when nineteen years of age she joined the Methodist Church, and about the year 1812, with her husband (Mr. John Evans) and children, she left her native State and sought a home in the far West. In the midst of the troubles, privations and dangers attendant upon pioneer life, she never lost her confidence in God, or her hope of heaven through the merits of the Lord Jesus Christ. She lived long enough to see grow up around her a numerous family of children, grand-children, &c., many of whom are on the road that leads to heaven; and not only so, but to see in her latter days the Church arising in its strength, and flourishing as the garden of God. Almost in the midst of an interesting revival of religion—of which she was in person a great co-operator and promoter—she was called to testify, in death, the truth and power of that living principle—the Religion of Jesus Christ, that had been her constant hope and support for sixty-one years. Did it fail her in the hour of death? No! Having lived long enough to say with Simeon, "Lord, now lettest Thou Thy servant depart in peace, according to Thy word, for mine eyes have seen Thy salvation," and with David, "though I walk through the Valley of the Shadow of Death, I will fear no evil for Thou art with me." Her language was "Glory, glory, glory," until her voice sank in death. Thus departed this Mother in Israel, triumphing over her last enemy, whose sting had lost its power.

Permit me to say to those left behind, and who have promised to meet Mother Evans in heaven—be not forgetful of your promise: you know how she lived, you saw how, she died; "Go and do thou likewise." Amen.

MEMORY IN MUSIC.

It was an ancient melody,
A song of other years;
I heard with joy, yet seemed to feel
Upon my heart in sadness steal
Forgotten smiles and tears!

For when she sang that song to me,
That little mouraful lay,
We thought that life would always seem
As beautiful—as bright a dream,
As soothed our hearts that day.

She never sang that song again,
Her dream of life was o'er,
Yet oft amidst the weary strife
And senseless toil of busy life
I hear its tones once more!

It sounds—the little mournful strain—
As then in other years;
I hear with joy—and yet I feel
Upon my heart in sadness steal
Remembered smiles and tears.

The Streets of Paris.

Paris is a city of all others where a foreigner is independent of letters of introduction, society and friends. He can, from morning till night, find most ample amusements in the streets; for every street in Paris has a physiognomy and an individuality. There are noble streets, respectable streets, old streets—so old that they recall the men-at-arms, the Huguenots, and the Medicis. Other streets there are, so young, and fresh, and new, that, like young girls, as yet they have no characters at all. There are busy, bustling streets. There are calm, lazy streets—which have, however, distinctive appearances from aristocratic streets. Then there are brilliant, fashionable streets—not built for the houses they contain, but evidently merely for the effect of their outward appearance: like a fashionable lady, dressed for the crowd, and not for comfort—as the Rue Vivienne, for instance. Then come dull, melancholy, deserted streets, with bluckened sculptures and mildewed walls. There are also misanthropic streets, like those of the Isle of St. Louis, which, like another Venice are a sad memorial of by-gone glories; but how different from the Rue Castiglione, the Rue Rivoli, and the Place Vendome, full of majesty, vigor and actuality! The Rue de la Paris is a fine street, but it arouses no thought of aught save shopping and display. The Rue Royals is grand and disdainful. Some streets begin magnificently, but do not carry out their promise, and end in dirty and slovenly alleys—as the Rue Montmartre, for instance, which, mermaid-like, with its Ville de Paris on one side, and its fine cafe on the other, has a handsome head and shoulders and ends in a fish's tail—an aggloueration of little intersections, populous, noisy and impassible. There are streets in which the mortality of the human species is double what it is in any other portion of the city: such are the cross-streets into which the sun never penetrates more than twice or thrice a year. Then, again, there are streets in which the people seem to live forever; such are the streets of Marais—calm, clean, and undisturbed by shops. The Place Royale, with its lofty arcades, and its beautiful though formal architecture, looks like some aged court beauty in dignified retirement. Stay but a few moments in the garden or its magnificent square, and the few stray, stately persons pacing its alleys will disappear, and it will fill with people whose very names are romance.

The Place Royale was the place of re-union of fashionable life in the reign of Louis XIII., and the first few years of that of Louis XIV., when Anne and Mazarin made love and governed, agreeing in their political meetings and quarreling in their love interviews. Hereby, when Louis XIII. held at the Louvre his solemn court, came, in one of those quaint and ponderous carriages, (drawn by sleek, fat horses, going at a pace which, compared with the present fast speed, was immobility,) the beautiful Anas of Austria, then melancholy, gentle and resigned to a harsh, unloving lord, and ever struggling with some new-born passion or lamenting over some by-gone love. With her was Mme. de Hautville, whose vivacity, wit and beauty communicated one spark of fire to the cold associe monarch—the monarch who ventured once to touch her hand, but who dared not come and take from her bosom the paper she placed there in his presence, and offered to give him if he would come and take it. There, too, in Spanish dignity and French grace, sat Mme. de Mottsville, whose voluminous memoirs are amongst the most amusing yet correct records of any of the courts of France—a court where every body wrote memoirs. There, too, had passed some lovely aurora borealis, and as pure and as cold, one of the queen's maids of honor, Mlle de La Fayette, the only woman ever loved by Louis XIII. She, like another La Valliere, loved Louis, not the King; and, like her, left his love for a Carmelite convent. But here the comparison ends; for, imbued equally with the King with profound religious principle, excessive reserve and innate purity, she scorned to degrade their love by becoming his mistress. Pure and immaculate Louis took her to the convent, (the same to which, years and years afterwards, Louise La Valliere fled,) and then she took the vows which separated them forever. One privilege alone she inquired—that of seeing her royal lover (through the eternal barrier placed by religion between devotees and the world, the iron grating,) as often as he pleased; and Louis nearly every day wended his way along the Champs Elysee—not bright and busy as now, but full of waving trees and silent groves—to the village of Chaillot, there to seek solace, consolation and advice from the being who loved him best.

In that open chariot, lined with blue satin, and painted outside with cupids and roses, the tiniest mask upon her face—revealing, however, the bright, pouting mouth, the dimpled chin, the white forehead, around which, braided with pearls, float the tendrils of a thousand ringlets sits the fair and frail Marian de Lorme. Gallants whisper sweet nothings as they pass; and before the carriage has been once round the Mall, an escort of cavaliers, on prancing chargers, had formed around. Cinque Mars is there, in happy ignorance of the ax so soon to sever the neck, white as woman's, which rises from the point lace collar, and supports the spirited and handsome face so bright and brilliant that Louis loved to look on it. Bassompierre is there with his riotous, devil-may-care companions. As he passes that carriage with the green and silver liveries, he tries to look grave, and bows to the saddle—for there sits the object of his hopeless passion, a beautiful, young, though staid and somewhat prim-looking widow, Marie de Levigni. But loudly he laughs, and quickly wit and repartee are exchanged, as he nears this other carriage, where, in easy negligence, with graceful nonchalance, sits the celebrated Ninon—then in her youth, although not more beautiful than in her age, for 'tis said she never changed. Richelieu did not disdain to mingle in this crowd. 'Tis said, too, that often, in a cloak, (called appropriately couleur de muraille—wall color,) he at night slips round the corner of the Place Royale into the Rue de Tournelles, where dwells fair Marion de Lorme.

Here, too, in the Murais, was the Hotel Rambutenu—that very curious affectation of an essentially sensual age—where refinement was carried to such a pitch, that the every day intercourse of society was deemed gross—nay, even the very commonest expression indecent; where, by a conneil of matrons and maidens—all lovely, high-born, and intelligent—it was decreed that after three years' adoration, a suitor might be allowed to kiss his lady's hand; where M. de Montansier, like Jacob, paid court perseveringly for fourteen years, though, unlike Jacob, he got but one wife instead of two—it having required fourteen years for the fair Julie de Rambeuillet to make up her mind, after she had accepted him, to the gross, unethereal bond of marriage; where it was thought suggestive of impure thoughts to ask any one to take a seat, and the formula was varied so as to ask them to patronize one of the accommodations for conversation. From this seraphic paradise, Voitus was banished for two years for having inadvertently pronounced the word night-cap, although Mme. de Rambouillet received in her bed, with her visitors seated around her.

Well, the Marais is now the cheapest place to live. There are probably thousands of foreigners who never heard of the Marais, and the sound of a foreign language would rouse an emeute. Fashions are here, as in a provincial town, six months behind the Chaussee d'Antin, and kings are made and unmade at the Chambre des Deputes and the Tuilleries before the ides of revolt penetrates into these solitudes.

How different is the Place de la Bourse—noisy, scandal-loving, full of money-leaders and gambling women—for women gamble in stocks in Paris. Not being admitted into the Exchange or Bourse, they come in carriages or on foot, according to their rank, and carry on, through their brokers, the buying and selling of each day. Mmlle. Mars ruined herself twice in this way. Here, too, are all the women of gallantry at three o'clock. They all dabble in stocks; and some of the daughters of the Chaussee d'Antin, and wives of bankers or stock-brokers—mothers of future stock-brokers—often make little private speculations which give them fortunes of their own. One lady—a lady of much penetration—was found to be enormously rich, though her husband died insolvent. She of course didn't pay his debts; but she revealed that she had studied her husband's character profoundly, and had made her fortune by always buying when he sold, and selling when he bought. The creditors offered to take her into partnership, but she was too clever for that—though she was a very woman after all, for she married a marquis younger than herself, and her dividends are squandered on the turf. She was not a Parisian, but an American.

The Bourse, the prototype of all the vices of the city in broad daylight, changes aspect by a clear moonlight. Then all is silent around it, and it looks like an emanation of Greece.

The Palais Royle has scarcely any rest or any night. It is as bustling as ever. Its shops are open, its gas burns brilliantly, and its fountains play on; but fashion has somewhat deserted it. It has gone for its restaurants to the Boulevards; but still there must be people here as ever, for its restaurants are as numerous and as full as ever. You can dine here from forty sols to forty francs a head; and an honest John Bull, accustomed to his imperturbable beef and pudding, would perhaps think you dined as well for forty sols as for forty francs. The saloons are quite as magnificent, the waitere as polite, and the dishes as numerous; but to the epicure, whether by instinct or education, Vefour's and Verey's are considered the best cuisines, and the Freres Provenceaux unimpeachable for wines. Which shall it be? You hesitate. Neither? Get into this cab. Cocher, au Roche de Cancale! Well, here we are. Now will we go en tete-a-tete into one of these cabinets particuliers—all so comfortable and so quiet, with its velvet carpet and sofas, and where the very doors shut without a clang. Here is a dumb waiter by your side—the living waiter will only come at each course. Outside our door you see there is already (perhaps you would like to leave it open?) a very pretty woman, with a short stripped petticoat, a black jacket, a cotton handkerchief crossed over her bosom, a linen cap, (contrasting so well with her brilliant braids of black hair and gold earings a quarter of a yard long,) blue cotton stockings, and high-heeled shoes and buckles. She is an ecaillière. She will open for us, and arrange nicely on their shells—the deep shall to retain the liquor—those delicious green oysters, no larger than a two-shilling piece, called huitres d'Ostend. With this, we'll have a bottle of Chablis, and then turbot à la crapandine; and then—Garcon, order for us such a dinner as shall suit its perfumes across the Atlantic in the memory of monsieur, who comes l'autre monde, where they have no turbot, but oysters as large as plates. [N. Y. Sunday Times.

NAPOLEON'S YOUNG GUARD.—A writer in the Dublin University Magazine says that after the disasters of the campaign of Moscow, when the gaps in Napoleon's legions were hastily filled up, and the young guard was created upon the wrecks of the old, it became necessary for the Moniteur to announce that the new levies were burning with enthusiasm, and loudly demanded to be led against the enemy. An old general assembled several regiments who had scarcely begun their drill, or received their arms and uniforms. He harangued them in glowing terms; told them that the eyes of all France were upon them; that a desperate service required their immediate presence; that they were destined to bring back victory to the Imperial eagles; and called upon all who were ready to follow him, to advance a pace to the front. A dead silence ensued, and a momentary pause. One diminutive conscript alone, whose soul expanded beyond the dimensions of his body, stepped resolutely forward. The rest remained motionless in the ranks. The general was disgusted with their apathy, and twirled his mustaches in indignation. He then addressed the solitary volunteer—"You are," said he, "a gallant soldier, a grenadier worthy of France, and an honor to the grand army. You shall march to the field of glory—you shall march at once with me—with the Empsror! And now," turning to the recreant battalions, "you sneaking scoundrels, (here he became almost inarticulate with rage)—you——you shall march too, all the same." The story loses by being rendered into English, for French oratory indulges in expletives which are not to be translated.

FORGET-ME-NOT.—The forget-me-not, that beautiful little flower of memory, with its blue, like the tint of the summer heavens, and its golden eye, bright as the eye of Hope itself, is consecrated not alone to the reminiscences of love, but also to those of love and friendship. The field forget-me-not, or myosotis arvensis, is often assumed as the token-flower; but the true one is the water forgot-me-not, myosotis palustris; whose flower is rather larger, and more intensely blue than that of its sister of the fields. The legeadry origin of its name proves the claim of the aquatic species to be the real blossom of remembrance. A German knight and his ladye-love were walking on the banks of the Danube, when the fair one saw a beautiful tuft of the myosotic palustris growing in the water, and expressed a wish to have it. The knight, with due chivalrous alacrity, plunged at once into the river, in all his armor, and gathered his prize; but before he could again climb up the steep and slippery bank, he was drawn by a treacherous eddy into a deep pool, and encumbered as he was, finding he could not save himself, just as he sunk he threw the flowers ashore to his mistress, and uttered with his last breath—"Vergiss meiu nicht!" (Forget me not!)

SUBSCRIPTIONS.—The Press.—The Democrat of the 31 inst says:

We can safely say to our friends this week that the epidemic has entirely disappeared from our community. Shreveport is now as healthy as usual, and persons can visit here now as safely as before the epidemic commenced. We have suffered terribly—one hundred and thirty odd of our citizens have been cut off within the space of five or six weeks, embracing, too, in their number some of our most useful men.

The River—The same paper adds in relation to the rise of the river:

The Red River has risen something more than 4 inches within the last twenty-four hours, and continues to rise slowly. Steamers no longer lighter at the mouth of the river, and should the present rise continue, the first class boats may be expected up from below much earlier than usual. The whole rise at present is about four and a half feet.

ALEXANDRIA.—The Epidemic.—The Red River Republican of the 5th has the following in relation to the health of that town:

The Health of Town—We are sorry that it is not yet in our power to announce the restoration of our town to perfect health. Three or four new cases of the fever have occurred since our last, and as many deaths of persons who have been sick for some time.

The total number of deaths this fall sum up 109.

Shreveport.—For the week ending the 28th, there were eighteen deaths in this distressed village from yellow fever. The Gazette of the 29th ult. believes the fever to be more fatal than at any prior time, and advises the citizens and others to remain away for the present.

The ladies of Marshall gave a concert on Thursday, the 20th inst., in aid of the fund of the Shreveport Howard Association. The amount raised was $120 50.

The Howard Association acknowledges the following donations:

Collinsburg, Bossier Parish	$313 00
Springhill, Ark	215 00
Also, from the Ladies of Marshall	120 50

The Gazette announces the death of J. W. Morris, late Secretary of the Howard Association, and an old and much respected citizen of that place.

The Gazette says: "Red River is rising rapidly. It has risen a foot every twelve hours during the last day or two, making four feet higher than it was at the commencement of the week."

Alexandria.—The Democrat of the 2d instant says:

The weather we have been enjoying for the past week has been delightful, resembling very much that of Indian Summer. The planters have had an excellent time for the gathering of their crops. We have had two or three pretty heavy frosts, and it hardly seems possible that the epidemic can linger much longer in such a pure-seeming atmosphere, and such beautiful serene skies as we now have. We hear of but one or two deaths since our last issue. Some of our citizens on their return have been taken down with the fever, though the attacks seem to be of a mild form.

THE SUGAR CROP.—The planters in this parish have nearly all commenced grinding. We are informed that the cane generally is very green, requiring a great deal of boiling, and yielding about a hogshead to the acre. We believe all are making good sugar. [Baton Rouge Gaz. 1st.

The Health of Baton Rouge.—At present Baton Rouge is almost entirely free from disease of any kind, but one death has occurred for a week, showing a degree of health highly gratifying. [Baton Rouge Gazette, 4th inst.

Jackson.—The health of Jackson is now quite good, there being probably not over half a dozen persons sick, and the most of them in a convalescent state. There is no more danger of an epidemic, and we hope soon to see our citizens returning, and the town resuming its wonted appearance of activity. [Jackson Mirror, 3d inst.

We have had two or three pretty heavy frosts, and it hardly seems possible that the epidemic can linger much longer in such a pure-seeming atmosphere, and such beautiful serene skies as we now have. We hear of but one or two deaths since our last issue. Some of our citizens on their return have been taken down with the fever, though the attacks seem to be of a mild form.

Concordia.—The Intelligencer of the 5th says relative to the cotton crop: "Cotton picking goes on very well, but the belief of a short crop, only assumes more the character of certain knowledge as the season advances. Very few will make average crops. The crop will all be housed by or before Christmas."

Alabama

Mobile.—The Mobile Tribune of the 6th inst. says:

The steamer Sam Dale, Capt. Frank Johnson, arrived Friday afternoon from Montgomery, with 1507 bales of cotton. The Sallie Carson came in yesterday from Wetumpka with 1038 bales. The two boats brought in over 200 passengers. We look for a considerable improvement in the business of the city during the coming week.

The Salem Reporter of the 31 inst. says that the late rains have raised the river, leaving it in fine boating order. The receipts of cotton will therefore be large within the next six days.

A correspondent of the Tribune writing from Lake Providence says relative to the cotton crop:

From the most reliable information I can obtain, I think the cotton crop in this section will be fully equal to last season, and perhaps it is safe to say a little better. The sugar crop is admitted on all hands to be as good as the most miserly could desire, and the fall has been equally propitious for gathering the cane.

The Register of the 5th has the following items:

POSTAL ARRANGEMENTS.—Yesterday, we received the Orleans papers of the previous evening issue. This seems to bring our delightful cities nearer than they have been for the last six months.

How the proposed two daily Eastern mails are to be conveyed to Orleans, we have not yet heard. Perhaps it will be time enough to inquire when sufficient horses are found to convey a double daily mail—only tri-weekly—between Montgomery and Mobile.

MAIL BOATS.—The line has again got into regular and good working order. The St. Charles—lately returned from service on Lake Pontchartrain—is now finely fixed up, and takes her place regularly in the mail line. It is her turn to go to-day, and the Captain is, as ever, at the Post!

The Advertiser of the 4th has the following:

LADIES, LADIES, LADIES!—The Sam Dale, Captain F M. Johnson's boat, came in yesterday afternoon from Montgomery, with 1507 bales cotton, and any quantity of passengers both in cabin and on deck. This beats 'em all.

Montgomery—The Montgomery Journal commenced a daily issue on the 7th inst., to be continued till spring. We are glad to see such evidence of health and prosperity in that city. The Journal says, the Circuit Court of Montgomery county will commence its fall session on Monday. Judge Dougherty is expected to preside.

Huntsville.—The Advocate of the 2d has the following items:

The rains last week, which appear to have been general, have caused a rise of four or five feet in the Tennessee River. Steamboats can now run from Decatur as high up as Knoxville.

The weather is delightful, cold frosty mornings and warm sunshiny days, bracing to the system. On Saturday morning we had a frost, and then immediately succeeding it, after daylight, a very dense fog. Hard frosts three mornings in succession. The weather is fine for cotton picking; but last week was very bad, cloudy and raining.

Selma—The Reporter of the 2d gives the following list of persons who have died since the 27th ult:

Thursday, Mr. Carter and a mulatto woman. Friday, Mr. Hambrick and two negro men. Saturday, none. Sunday, Mr. Gibson, a white child and a negro. Monday, Mrs Hagy, Mr. Custard, Mr. Beebe. Tuesday and Wednesday, none.

By referring to the above it will be seen that the number of deaths have decreased rapidly. They were all, too, old cases, which were expected to die, most of them, long before they really did, and probably not one half of them died of yellow fever.

ARKANSAS.—The little Rock Democrat of the 28th ult. has the following paragraphs relative to the weather and crops:

On Monday and Tuesday nights of last week, fell the first frosts of the season at this place. They were sufficiently severe to nip all the tender heritage. We presume it will be favorable to the opening of cotton.

From information received from every quarter of the State, we are induced to believe that the crops, both of corn and cotton, for this year, are unusually fine. The season, this far, has been very favorable for gathering all kinds of crops.

The river is reported to have swollen some few inches since our last issue; and the prospect now is, that we will have a rise that will be permanent, and afford ample water for all classes of steamers, within a short time.

The editor of the Democrat makes the following extract from a private letter from Sevier county:

"Crops of both corn and cotton are first rate; and we have had a dry fall, and a beautiful time for cotton picking.

"The people of Sevier county have just waked up, and are all entering their lands. Gentlemen from Georgia and Carolina are sweeping the lands on Red River, buying out all who will sell. Lands in the bottom generally bring $12 50 acre."

Meetings have been held in most of the counties, and delegates appointed to the Railroad Conventions to be held at Clarksville the first Monday of the present month, and at Dardanelle the second Monday in November. The object of these conventions is to take into consideration the subject of the Little Rock and Fort Smith Branch of the Cairo and Fulton Road.

GRINNELL'S ARCTIC EXPEDITION.—Letters have been received from England, announcing the arrival of the American Arctic Expedition, under command of Dr. E. V. Kane, U S N, at Upernavik, in Greenland, and their departure from thence for the waters of Smith's Sound. All were as well and prosperous as possible. Dispatches and letters from Dr. Kane, the officers and crew, may shortly be expected by way of Denmark. [New York Post, 31st ult.

HOGS IN TENNESSEE.—The editor of the Knoxville Statesman says: "During our stay at Kingston we saw and conversed with persons from nearly every section of Roane county, and all concur in representing the corn crop of this year as something better than usual. Hogs are superabundant. Holders are asking $5 per hundred. We heard of scarcely any sales. Purchasers seem indisposed to give the prices asked."

THE NORTH WEST PASSAGE.—The London Times of the 8th ult., publishes the dispatches of Commodore McClure to the British Admiralty, relative to the North-West Passage. The great point settled by Commodore McClure is this—he has managed to force his ship, the Investigator, far enough through the icy mountains of Behring's Straits to a point from which she could communicate with others which had entered the Arctic Seas by the Atlantic Passage. It is well to note this fact, particularly—the impression having been created that the Investigator had sailed from ocean to ocean, which is not the case just yet—but it will be seen by Com. McClure's dispatch, below, that he has no doubt he will be able to make a passage to England now through Davis's Straits.

There are two remarkable discoveries mentioned in Capt McClure's journal, viz: some smoking hillocks and a petrified forest. He also states, that during his intercourse with the natives he only once met with any hostile demonstrations. This occurred at Port Warren, near the Mackenzie, where, on attempting to land, two natives with threatening gestures waved them off. It was not without much difficulty that they were pacified, and then they related that all the tribe but five died and his sick son had died on seeing the ship, alleging as a reason that they feared the ship had come to revenge the death of a white man they had murdered some time ago. They (through the interpreter) related that some white men came there in a boat, and that they built themselves a house and lived there; at last the natives killed one, and the others escaped they knew not where, but the murdered man was buried in a spot they pointed out. A thick fog coming on, prevented Com. McClure from examining this locality, which is much regretted, as here is the probable position where a boat party endeavoring to return by the Mackenzie would have encamped.

We make the following extract from the Commodore's journal:

The currents along the coasts of the Polar Sea appear to be influenced in their direction more or less by the winds; but certainly on the west side of Baring Island there is a permanent set to the eastward. At one time we found it as much as two knots during a perfect calm; and that, the flood tide sets from the Westward we have ascertained beyond a doubt, as the opportunities afforded during our detention along the western shore of this island gave ample proof.

The prevailing winds along the American shore, and in the Prince of Wales Strait, we found to be N. E., but upon the coast S. S. W. to N. W.

A ship stands no chance of getting to the westward by entering the Polar sea, the water along there being very narrow, and wind contrary, and the pack impenetrable; but through Prince of Wales Strait, and by keeping along the American coast, I conceive it practicable. Drift wood is in great abundance upon the east coast of Prince of Wales Strait, and on the American shor, also, much game. In this vicinity the hills abound in reindeer and bares, which remain the entire winter; we have been very fortunate in procuring about 4000 lbs.

The health of the crew has been, and still continues, excellent, without any diminution in numbers, nor have we felt the slightest trace of scurvy.

It is my intention, if possible, to return to England this season, touching at Melville Island and Port Leopold, but should we not be again heard of, in all probability we shall have been carried into the Polar pack, or to the westward of Melville Island, in either of which cases any attempt to send succor would only be to increase the evil, as any ship that enters the Polar Pack must be inevitably crushed; therefore a depot of provisions, or a ship at Winter Harbor is the best and only certainty for the safety of the surviving crews."

No trace whatever has been met with, or any information obtained from the natives, which could by any possibility lead to the supposition that Sir John Franklin's expedition, or any of his crews, have ever reached the shores we have visited or searched, nor have we been more fortunate with respect to the Enterprise, not having seen her since parting company at the Straits of Magellan on the 20th of April, 1850.

THE N. Y. HERALD AND MR. KETCHUM.—The Herald a few days since made a contemptuous notice of a speech Hiram Ketchum made in New York. The Day Book suggests the solution to the course of the Herald in the following extract from a speech made by Mr. Ketchum in the Court of Oyer and Terminer, in New York, in 1842:

This is the character of the libel, gentlemen; and who is the libeler? James Gordon Bennett, the editor of the New York Herald. This paper, gentlemen, has been established among us for a number of years; and if within this number of years the taste of a large portion of the reading community has been vitiated and depraved; if an appetite, a morbid appetite, has been created and nurtured, which nothing but accounts of the marvelous, the horrible, the profane, the obscene, could gratify; if a restless and unauthorized curiosity to pry into the secrets of the domestic and business circles of neighbors, and to drag forth their weaknesses, their imperfections, their follies, their misfortunes, has been fostered; if private scandal has acquired fresh malignity and audacity; if our young men have become precocious in vice, and have been led to treat with contemptuous familiarity those things which their fathers held in high and sacred regard and reverence; if our young women have ceased to blush at indelicate allusions which would cover the faces of their mothers all over with crimson; the daily perusal of the New York Herald has greatly contributed to effect these most deplorable results.

Why, gentlemen, the readers of this paper must thoroughly have proved the truth of the lines—

"Vice is a monster of such horrid mien,
As to be hated, needs but to be seen;
But, seen too oft, familiar with her face,
We first endure, then pity, then embrace."

Vice—Virtue? Why, gentlemen, if your son is a constant reader of the Herald, he will tell you that the distinction between them is a mere joke. He will reason with you stoutly upon the subject—if he has read nothing else. Vice—Virtue! Why, here is the Bible Society and the Horse Races, and the Board of Aldermen; here they go—lines and black coats—all together. Ha! ha! ha! Why, gentlemen, this is the essence of the paper. I venture to say, and I say it fearlessly in this community—fearlessly of that press—that there never existed among us a newspaper which, in half the same extent, has undermined the foundations of public and private virtue. What does it live by, gentlemen? I speak only of notorious facts. It lives by levying "black mail," and gets fat on it. The merchant who desires to get off his name from the insolvent list, must pay for it. The merchant who would have his name on the solvent list to-morrow, must pay for it.

NEW KINDS OF BUILDING IN THE CITY.—There is a plan on foot in this city to build dwelling houses after the plan of many of the buildings in the cities of Paris, Edinburg, and in many of the cities of Northern Europe. It is proposed that the building shall be very large, and that each family shall occupy one flat or story, and to pay rent in proportion to the height of the stories rented. The ground floor would be common property for all parties kept by a common porter, who would have general charge of the whole edifice. These floors would have from six to twelve or more rooms, according to the taste or means of the builders, and in a moderate house, with six or eight rooms, the rent would not be over $300.

Better rooms and better accommodations could be afforded in this city in this way for $300, than for $500 or $600, when by themselves. The reasons in favor of such a plan are cheaper rents, and objections are rather imaginary than real.

We learn that houses upon the Paris, Edinburg and European plan have been built in Victoria street, London, a fashionable part of the metropolis, and the experiment works admirably. London is growing so rapidly that some such plan of greater compactness is deemed absolutely necessary for business men. [N. Y. National Democrat.

FATAL ACCIDENT.—Mr. William Murphy of Pulmyra, Mo., came to his death on the 19th ult. in the following manner: He was in the woods hunting, and, for the purpose of decoying turkies, sat down at the foot of a tree, and imitated the cry of that fowl by means of a quill or whistle thus often employed. The noise was heard by two men who were also on a hunting excursion, and who were strangers to Mr. M. They were attracted to within fifty yards of him; and being deceived, both by the sound and by a black cap worn by him, and which was observed seen through the brush, one of the two leveled his gun and fired. The charge took effect in the side and back of the head—four or five buck-shot penetrating the brain, and producing instant death.

COMPULSORY ATTENDANCE AT SCHOOL.—The Grand Jury lately in session at Pittsburgh, have recommended to the Legislature the passage of a law to secure the attendance of the entire youthful population of that city, and making it compulsory on parents to send their children to school. They recommend that the children of foreigners, particularly, should be forced to attend, in order that they may forget the language of their Fatherland; and become Americanized, through the medium of Cobb and Murray.

OUTRAGE.—The Charlottsville Jeffersonian says three young men broke into the mansion, and committed other depredations, at "Monticello," for which they were fined each 125 dollars. The same paper adds:

To us, it seems, that the name of THOMAS JEFFERSON should prevent depredations or injury to "Monticello," but if strangers are vandals enough to commit them, we are glad to know that the juries of the county will do their duty. Even the monuments which stand over the ashes of the immortal author of the Declaration of Independence, and those of his wife and daughters, are not exempt from mutilation by strangers who go there, and nearly all of whom desire to carry away something in the shape of a relic.

LITERARY FRAUD.—A literary fraud of a serious nature is charged on Henry E. Rohn, the London publisher. He has recently issued an edition of Worcester's Universal Dictionary, with the original title page so mutilated as to make it appear that Worcester's Dictionary had been compiled from Webster's materials. The passage in Worcester's preface in which he says distinctly that he "is not aware of having taken a single definition from Webster's Dictionary" is suppressed in the London edition. This said Rohn, if our memory serves us true, has been before the public prior to this for frauds upon authors of a similar nature.

AN INTERESTING WILL CASE.—In the Surrogate's Court, New York, a suit is on trial involving $250,000. It is to test the legality of a will executed by the late Abraham G. Thompson, which bequeaths a large amount of property to religious institutions, while the testator had near relatives living, on whom he bestowed but a comparatively small sum. The contestants dispute the legality of the will on the grounds that undue influence had been exerted over the deceased, by a person having enmity against them; that he was in a frame of mind to be thus influenced; and that when in his right mind he made a will favorable to them.

NORTH CAROLINA RICE CROP.—The Wilmington Herald, in alluding to the rice crop, says: "We rejoice that our planters have reason to be abundantly grateful for the rich returns of their labors the present season. The crop is more than an average, we believe, and will probably reach 200,000 bushels."

EARTH AND AIR.

How beautiful, how wonderful
Thou art, sweet Air!
And yet, albeit thine odors lie
On every gust that mocks the eye,
We pass thy gentle blessings by
Without a care!

How bountiful, how wonderful
Thou art, sweet Earth!
Thy seasons changing with the sun—
Thy beauty out of darkness won!
And yet, whose tongue, when all is done,
Will tell thy worth?

The poet's! He alone doth still
Uphold all worth!
Then love the poet!—love his themes,
His thoughts, half-hid in golden dreams,
Which makes thrice fair the songs and streams
Of Air and Earth! [Barry Cornwell.

RALPH WALDO EMERSON.

BY FREDERIKA BREMER.

Emerson, rather a philosophor than a poet, yet poetical in his prose philosophical essays, strikes me as a new and peculiar character. He seems to me as an American Thorild, who by his own strong, powerful nature, would transform the world, seeking for law and inspiration merely within his own breast. Strong and pure, self-collected and calm, but at the same time fantastical, he puts forth from his transcendental point of view, his aphorisms on nature and history, on God, (whom he does not look upon as a personal God, but as a superior soul in harmony with laws,) and on men, criticising men and their works, from the ideal of the highest truth, and the highest beauty. "The world," says Emerson, "has not seen a man," and he looks forword with longing to that man, the man of the New World, in whose advent he believes. The new man regards no laws but those within his own breast; but there he finds the unfailing wells of truth and beauty. The new man believes in himself alone; he demands every thing from himself, and does all for himself, reposes upon himself and in himself. The new man is a stoic, but not stern as such; he is beautiful and very gentle. Wherever he comes, life blooms; in the circle of friends it becomes an holiday; nectar and ambrosia pour forth at his approach; but he himself needs no friend. Emerson's language is compressed and strong, simple, but singularly plastic. His turns of thought are original; old ideas are reproduced in so new and brilliant a manner, that one fancies them heard for the first time. The divining-rod of genius is in his hand. He is master in his own domain. His strength seems to me peculiarly to be that of the critic, a certain grand contempt and scorn of the mediocre, of the weak and paltry where ever he sees it, and he sees it much and in many things. He chastises it without mercy; but, at the same time, with wonderful address. Emerson's performances in this way are really quite regal. They remind one of our King Gustavus Adolphus the Great, when he took the criminal soldier by the hair, and delivered him over to punishment, with the friendly words, "Come, my lad, it le better that the body now enffor chastisement, than that thy soul go to hell." Yet there is more in Emerson even than the intention of chastisement. The writings of this scorner of imperfection, of the mean and paltry, this bold exacter of perfection in man, have for me a fascination which amounts almost to magic! I often object to him; I quarrel with him; I see that his stoicism is one-sidedness, his pantheism an imperfection, and I know that which is greater and more perfect, but I am under the influence of his magical power. I believe myself to have become greater through his greatness, stronger through his strength, and I breathe the air of a higher ephere in this world, which is indescribably refreshing to me. Emerson has more ideality than is common among thinkers of the English race, and one might say that in him the Idealism of Germany is wedded to the realism of Britain.

I have, as yet, never gone a step to see a literary lion; but Waldo Emerson, this pioneer in the moral woods of the New World, who cuts his ax to the roots of the old trees, to hew them down, and to open the path for new planting, I would go a considerable way to see this man. And see him I will—him who, in a society as strictly evangelical as that of Massachusuetts and Boston, (Emerson was the minister of a Unitarian congregation in Boston,) had the courage openly to resign his ministration, his church, and the Christian faith, whon he had come to doubt of its principal doctrines; who was noble enough, nevertheless, to retain universal esteem and old friends; and strong enough, while avoiding all polemical controversy ond bitterness of speech, to withdraw into silence, to labor alone for that truth which he fully acknowledged, for those doctrines which the heathen and the Christian alike acknowledge. Emerson has a right to talk about strength and truth, because he lives for these virtues. And it will benefit the world which is slumbering in the Church from the lack of vital Christianity, to be roused up by such fresh winds from the Himalaya of heathenism. Yet how can Emerson overlook ——— ? Yet I will not ask about it. Emerson is just and true. Would that many were like him! * * * *

Last of all, I come to the poems of Waldo Emerson—small in dimensions, but great in their spirit and tone; and read aloud a little dithyrambic poem, which is characteristic of the individuality of the poet. Other American poets speak to society; Emerson always merely to the individual; but they are all to me as a breeze from the life of the New World, in a certain illimitable vastness of life, in expectation, in demand, in faith, and hope—a something which makes me draw a deeper breath, and, as it were, in a larger, freer world.

* * * * * * *

Emerson came to meet me, walking down the little avenue of spruce firs which leade from his house, bare-headed, amid the falling snow. He is a very peculiar character, but too cold and hypercritical to please me entirely; a strong, clear eye, always looking out for an ideal, which he never finds realized on earth; discovering wants, short-comings, imperfections, and too strong and healthy himself to understand other people's weaknesses and sufferings, for he even despises suffering as a weakness unworthy of higher natures. This singularity of character leads one to suppose that he has never been ill. Sorrows, however, he has had, and has felt them deeply, as some of his most beautiful poems prove; nevertheless, he has only allowed himself to be bowed for a short time by those griefs—the deaths of two beautiful and beloved brothers, as well as that of a beautiful little boy, his eldest son. He has also lost his first wife, after having been married scarcely a year. Emerson is now married for the second time, and has three children. He interested me, without warming me. That critical crystalline and cold nature may be very estimable, quite healthy, and in its way, beneficial for, those who possess it, and also for others, who allow themselves to be criticised by it. But—for me—David's heart with David's songs!

I shall return to this home, in consequence of a very kind invitation to do so from Emmerson and his wife, and in order that I may see more of this sphinx-like individual. From this worshipper of nature, who does not belong to any church, and who will not permit his children to be baptized, because he considers the nature of a child purer than that of a full-grown sinful man, we went to sleep at the house of a stern old Puritan, where we had long prayers, kneeling with our faces to the wall.

* * * * * * *

During the four days that I remained in Emmerson's house, I had a real enjoyment in the study of this strong, noble, eagle-like nature. I enjoyed the contemplation of him in his demeanor, his expression, his mode of talking, and his everyday life, as I enjoy contemplating the calm flow of a river, bearing along, and between flowery shores, large and small vessels—as I love to see the eagle circling in the clouds, resting upon them and its pinions. In this calm elevation, Emmerson allows nothing to reach him, neither great nor small; neither prosperity nor adversity.

Pantheistic as Emerson is in his philosophy, in the moral view with which he regards the world and life, he is in a high degree pure, noble and severe, demanding as much from himself as he demands from others. His words are severe, his judgment often keen and merciless, but his demeanor is alike noble and pleasing, and his voice beautiful. One may quarrel with Emerson's thoughts, with his judgment, but not with himself. That which struck me as most distinguishing him from most other human beings, is mobility. He is a born-nobleman. I have seen before two other men born with this stamp upon them. His Excellency, W——r, in Sweden, and ———, is the second. Emmerson the third which has it, and perhaps in a yet higher degree. And added thereto that deep intonation of voice, that expression, so mild yet so elevated at the same time. I could not but think of Marin Lowell's words, "If he merely mentioce my name, I feel myself ennobled."

He read to me one afternoon some portions of his "Observations on England (in manuscript), and scraps from his conversations with Thomas Carlyle (the only man of whom I heard Emerson speak with anything like admiration) about the "Young America," as well as the narrative of his journey with him to Stonehenge. There are some of these things which I can never forget. In proportion as the critical bent of Emerson's mind is strong, and as he finds a great want in human beings, and in things generally—measuring them by his ideal standard—is his faith strong in the power of good, and its ultimate triumph in the arrangement of the world. And he understands perfectly what constitutes noble Republicanism and Americanism, and what is nobly-framed community and social intercourse. But the principle—the vitalizing, the strengthening source—yes, that Emerson sees merely in the pure consciousness of man himself! He believes in the original poetry and glory of this source, and will cleanse away every thing which impedes or sullies it—all conventionality, untruth and paltriness. * * * He seemed to be opposed to blind or hypocritical faith. "I do not wish," said he "that people should pretend to know or to believe more than they really do know and believe. The resurrection, the continuance of our being, is granted," said he, also. "We carry the pledge of this in our own breast: I maintain merely that we cannot say in what form or in what manner our existence will be continued."

In my conversation with Emerson did not lead to anything very satisfactory, it led, nevertheless, to my still more conviction of his nobility and love of truth. He is faithful to the law in the own breast, and speaks out the truth which he instantly recognizes. He does right. By this means he will prepare the way for a more true comprehension of religion and of life; for, when once the keen glance, seeing into the innermost of everything, once more becomes aware of the concealed human form in the tree of life, like Napoleon in the tree at St. Helena, then will he teach others to see it, too; will point it out by such strong, new, and glorious words, that a fresh light will spring up before many; and people will believe because they see.

Washington Irving.

There was a whole crowd of strangers to dinner, among whom was Washington Irving, a man of about sixty, with large beautiful eyes, a large, well formed nose, a countenance still handsome, in which youthful little dimples and smiles bear witness to a youthfully fresh and humorous disposition and soul. He must be a man of an unusually happy disposition and temperament, and of the most excellent heart. He has surrounded himself with a number of nieces, (he says he cannot conceive of what use boys are in the world,) whom he makes happy, and who make him so by their affection. He says he has the peculiar faculty of liking everything he possesses, and everything which seeks his protection. He is an optimist but not a concelted one. In the afternoon I begged him to allow me to take a profile likeness of him. The handsome old gentleman now became wide awake, loquacious and lively, and there was such vivacity in his smile, and so much fun in all the merry dimples of his countenance, that it is my own fault if I have not made one of the best and most characteristic portraits that has ever been taken of this universally beloved author. I am glad to have it to show to his friends and admirers in Sweden. Washington Irving invited me and my friends to his house for the following evening; but as we were obliged to return home that day, we could not accept his invitation, but engaged to pay him a visit in the morning.

I went in the forenoon with Mory Hamilton to Washington Irving's. His house or villa, which stands on the banke of the Hudson, resembles a peaceful idyl; thick masses of ivy on the one portion of the white walls and garland the eaves. Fat cows feed in a meadow just before the window. Within, the room seemed full of summer warmth, and had a peaceful and cheerful aspect. One felt that a cordial spirit, full of the best sentiments of the soul, lived and worked there. Washington Irving, although possessed of the politeness of a man of the world, and with great naturel good natnre, has, nevertheless, something of that nervous shyness which so easily attaches itself to the author, and particularly to him who is possessed of delicacy of feeling and refinement. A portroit which hungs in Washington Irving's drawing-room, and which was painted many year's since, represents him as a remarkably handsome man, with dork hair and eyes—a head which might have belonged to a Spaniard. When young, he must have been unusually handsome. He was engaged to a young lady of rare beauty and excellence; it would have been difficult to meet with a handsomer pair. But she died, and Washington Irving never again sought for another bride. He has been wise enough to content himself with the memory of a perfect love, and to live for literature, friendship and nature. He is a wise man, but without wrinkles and gray hair. TO THE WINDS.

Talk to my heart, O winds—
Talk to my heart to-night;
My spirit always finds
With you a new delight—
Finds always new delight,
In your silver talk at night.

Come up from your cold bed,
In the stilly twilight sea,
For the dearest hope lies dead
That was ever dear to me;
Come up from your cold bed,
And we'll talk about the dead.

Tell me, for oft you go,
Winds, lovely winds of night,
About the chambers low,
With sheets so dainty white,
If they sleep through all the night,
In the bede so chill and white?

Talk to me, winds, and say,
If in the grave he rest;
For, O, life's little day
Is a weary one at best;
Talk to my heart and say
If death will give me rest.

IRISH GIRLS.—A recent traveler in Ireland makes the following remarks upon Irish girls:

It was with some surprise, and, not a little satisfaction, that I made the discovery of the remarkable comeliness of the young women of Ireland. This comeliness was frequent; and individual specimens attained the standard of almost faultless beauty—and this not merely in features, but in form and deportment. It was no slight pleasure to meet one of those rustic maidens of a morning tripping joyously along the turf in her bright colored shawl, with her small and well-shaped feet and ankle unfettered by shoe or stocking, her little upright carriage, and her profuse, glossy and well-arranged locks, and this pleasure was not a little enhanced, when a solutation or a question brought out, as it did at once, her modest smile and her pretty brogue. It is another tribute justly due to the young woman of Ireland, to record their singular decorum and modesty of demeanor, and their general propriety of conduct. I do not hesitate for a moment in giving to them decidedly the palm, in these particulars, over the rustic damsels of both England and Scotland. Unmarried mothers are, I believe, quite a rarity in Ireland—a thing which, I fear, cannot be said of any other portion of the three kingdoms."

EXTRAVAGANCE OF GENTLEMEN.—The newspapers have rather ungallantly referred to the extravagance of the ladies in articles of dress and ornament, but it would appear that the gentlemen are liable to the same censure in the prices paid for many articles of dress now in vogue. The most fashionable cravats are sold for five dollars. The full style of veste range from $10 to $25 each. Most of the desirable patterns of the best quality have been already taken at prices above $20. In the matter of vest buttons there is great extravagance. We hear of sales of single sets at upwards of a hundred dollars, and the jewelers on Washington street have elegant styles at prices ranging from $10 to $20 a button, or from $90 to $120 a set of six. At the latter price a superb set with diamond centers can be obtained. The finest shirts on exhibition in Faneuil Hall cost $12 each, and a small fortune is required for a fashionable "suit of gentlemen's clothes." [Boston Transcript.

THE SPHERE OF WOMAN.—Despise woman? No! She is the most admirable handiwork of God, in her true place and character. Her place is at man's side. Her office, that of the sympathizer; the unreserved, unquestioning believer; the recognition, withheld in every other manner, but given, in pity, through woman's heart, lest any man should utterly lose faith in himself; the echo of God's own voice, pronouncing, "It is well done!" All the separate action of woman is, and ever has been, and always shall be, false, foolish, vain, destructive of her own best and holiest qualities, void of every good effect, and productive of intolernble mischiefs!

Man is a wretch without woman; but woman is a monster—and, thank Heaven, an almost impossible and hitherto imaginary monster—without man as her acknowledged principal! As true as I had once a mother whom I loved, were there any possible prospect of woman's taking the social stand which some of them—poor, miserable, abortive creatures, who only dream of such things because they have missed woman's peculiar happiness, or because nature made them really neither man nor woman! If there were a chance of their attaining the end which these petticoated monstrosities have in view, I would call upon my own sex to use its physical force, that unmistakable evidence of sovereignty, to scourge them back within their bounds! But it will not be needful. The heart of true womanhood knows where its own sphere is, and never seeks to stray beyond it! [Howthorne.

EXTENT OF LONDON.—The capital of the British Kingdom, it is said, extends over an area of seventy-eight thousand and twenty-nine acres, or one hundred and twenty-two square miles; and the number of its inhabitants rapidly increasing, was two millions three hundred and sixty-two thousand two hundred and thirty-six, on the day of the last census.

Sir Walter Scott used to tell a story of a woman in Fife, who, summing up the miefortunes of a black year in her history, said: "Let me see, sir; first we lost our wee cullant; and then Jenny; and then the gudeman himsel died; and then the coo died too, poor hizzy; but, to be sure, her hide brought me 15-shillings."

THE SEVENTH VOLUME CLOSED,

HARPER FOR NOVEMBER.

HARPER'S NEW MONTHLY MAGAZINE closes its Seventh Volume with the issue of the present Number. Its constant and rapid increase in public favor, as shown by the fact that the Eighth Volume will commence with the unexampled edition of 135,000 copies, demonstrates the popularity of the plan on which it has been conducted hitherto, and from which it will not depart hereafter. It has been designed, from the outset, for Popular Reading; and the object of the Publishers has been, to present, at the cheapest rate and in the best style, the largest possible amount of reading matter, having interest and value for the greatest number of the American people, without distinction of profession or of class. They have spared neither labor nor expense in the effort to accomplish this result. They have not restricted their choice of matter to either American or foreign literature, but have availed themselves of the best in both. They intend to pursue the plan with increased vigor hereafter. A larger proportion of Original Matter will probably be introduced than hitherto, but not unless it shall prove to be better than can be procured from other sources. The best—that which shall combine the greatest interest with the greatest utility—will continue to have the preference, whatever may be its origin. In this way the Publishers believe they will better meet the wants and promote the welfare of the American people than in any other.

Mr. Thackeray's new serial novel of English life, "The Newcomes," has been purchased, at a large expense, for the Magazine, and will be published regularly, from early sheets, in its pages. No production of the day has been more eagerly expected than this.

Every department of Harper's Magazine will be kept up with increased attention and interest. Its Pictorial Illustrations, by the best Artists; its Original Articles, by the most popular American Authors; its Selections, Monthly Record of Current Events, Critical Notices of New Books, Summary of Literary Intelligence, Editorial Discussions of important topics, Literary, Social, and Personal Gossip, Plates of the Fashions, etc., etc., etc., will be continued as heretofore; and no pains will be spared to make them still more worthy of the extraordinary favor with which they have been received by the American Press and the American People.

EDUCATION.

CENTENARY INSTITUTE, ALA

This Institution of Learning has been in successful operation for ten years; is situated eight miles north of Selma, and is the child and property of the Alabama Conference.

There are two departments, male and female. In the male department young men are prepared for the junior class in any college, or if they choose, complete their education here. The female department is regularly organized as a college.

The course of study is extensive, and the instruction thorough. The teaching is done mainly by men of age and experience, (not by girls.)

The President (Rev. A. H. Mitchell) is a minister of the gospel, of twenty odd years standing, and during most of that time has been connected with literary institutions of the church in Georgia, South Carolina and Alabama. He is assisted by seven others, most of whom are persons of age and experience, and all, with one exception, professors of religion. A majority of the Board of Trustees are members of the Alabama Conference, which fact is a sufficient guarantee of its successful management.

Board and tuition are as low as can be afforded, and lower than most institutions of similar grade.

The next term opens the first Monday in October, and closes the first Wednesday in July. For further particulars, apply to the President, at Summerfield, Ala.

B. J. HARRISON, Secretary.
Summerfield, Alabama.

FEMALE MASONIC INSTITUTE,

Dayton, Marengo County, Alabama.

Rev. E. D. Pitts, Principal.

TO PARENTS, GUARDIANS, AND THE FRIENDS OF EDUCATION GENERALLY, we would announce the opening of the TENTH Annual Session of the Institute. The healthful locality—the spacious and beautiful grounds—the commodious and convenient buildings—the full supply of Musical Instruments—the fixed purpose of the Trustees to spare no expense or efforts to promote the true interests of FEMALE EDUCATION—and the assiduous devotion of an efficient Faculty to promote the comfort and improvement of Pupils, lead us to expect with confidence liberal support.

The Principal has taught with marked success in Alabama, Mississippi and Florida, and will consecrate all his energies—physical, intellectual, and moral—to the proper training of the head and heart of those committed to his tutelage.

The services of Miss MARY W. HOWZE, who has been for two years past connected with the Central Masonic University, have been secured. Her intelligence, energy, piety, and felicitous manner of communicating, have justly placed her in the first rank of educators.

The Musical, French, and Ornamental Department will be conducted by competent and skillful Teachers, and all due attention given to the arts and accomplishments that so beautify and adorn the gentler sex.

The Primary Department will be confided alone to a choice and gifted Lady, for we design to attend carefully to that sadly and mischievously neglected class of Pupils.

The Scholastic year is divided into Two Sessions of nearly Five Months each—with no intervening recess. The School opens on the first day of October, and closes with Examination Exercises in the latter part of July. Pupils received at any time, and charged to the end of the Session. For fractions of Sessions each week is counted one twentieth.

The School is not Sectarian or denominational; and the only religious tuition embraces the principles of a pure morality based upon the cardinal doctrines of the Bible.

The Principal and his wife have charge of the Stewards Department, and will tenderly care for the health, manners and morals of those who Board in the Institute. Each boarder will be made to feel as far as possible that she is the loved subject of parental solicitude, and every reasonable wish will be promptly and cheerfully gratified. Yet, Discipline will not be forgotten, and the needful restraints of family government will be thrown around them.

CHARGES PER SESSION OF FIVE MONTHS.

Primary Class $12 50
Preparatory Class 15 00
Junior and Senior Class 20 00
Music on Piano, Guitar and Harp, (each) 25 00
Drawing, Painting and Embroidery, (each) 10 00
French and German, (each) 15 00
Incidentals 1 00
LATIN included in the Regular Course.
BOARD (including Washing, Fuel and Lights) per month 10 00

Each Boarder must furnish her own Towels, Brushes and Combs and have each article distinctly marked with her full name.

AN INVARIABLE RULE—Board and Tuition one-half in advance, and the balance at the end of each Session; and every account must be closed at the end of each Session, by Cash, or by Note.

SPECIAL ARRANGEMENT.

Each Lodge in Marengo County is entitled to select within its jurisdiction, a worthy object of benefaction, and have her taught in the Institution without charge, provided said Lodge secure the payment of her Board and supply her with Books and Stationery.

As the Principal is so extensively known, the Committee have forborne to speak of his character and qualifications, and refer Parents and Guardians to the persons named below.

OAK BOWERY FEMALE COLLEGE.

This Institution of learning is under the supervision and control of the Alabama Conference of the M. E. Church, South, and has been in successful operation for six years. It is situated about five miles north of the Montgomery and West Point Railroad, in Chambers co., in a healthy country, and among a population, moral, industrious and intelligent.

The Board of Trustees take great pleasure in announcing to the public the election of the Rev. ALEX SPEER, of Georgia, to the Presidency of the College. We think it only necessary to be known, that the Institution will be for the next year under the charge and direction of Brother Speer, to awaken a deep interest in behalf of the enterprise throughout the community, and impart confidence of success. His long and faithful service in the M. E. Church as a minister—his age and experience—his natural judgment and sound discretion—his acknowledged literary attainments and ability, authorize the expectation of full patronage on the part of an enlightened public.

A complete corps of Instructors whose names will hereafter be published, will be provided to supply the demand for instruction.

Miss MARY J. TOOMER continues Principal in the Music Department; and the unbounded satisfaction hitherto given by Miss Toomer, who we consider has no superior in any country, is a sure guarantee that all who patronize will be pleased.

Through the kind offices of the former President, the Rev. Wm. F. Samford, who solicited contributions for that purpose, a fine and judiciously selected Library, of several hundred volumes, has been purchased, and is now in the possession of the College, embracing some of the most approved and standard literary works, and such as are peculiarly adapted to the purposes of Female Education.

The Tuition Fees will be no higher than usual, and the course of study as extensive as that in any institution of the same grade in the country.

The College Exercises will begin under the proposed organization, on the first Monday in January next—its second session will begin on the first Monday in September, and close at Christmas.

A circular, containing fuller information, will appear over the signature of the President.

TUSCALOOSA METHODIST FEMALE HIGH SCHOOL.

The exercises of this Institution will begin on the first MONDAY in October next, and close on the first THURSDAY in July, 1854. There will be a recess of a few days at Christmas.

FACULTY.

REV. THOS. H. RUSSELL, A. M., President.
MISS ELIZABETH J. MEEK, Assistant.
MRS CLARA O. LEE, Preparatory Department.
MR. F. S. WALTER, Professor of Music.
———, Teacher of Modern Languages.

The fees for the first half the scholastic year are as follows:

Primary Department $12 00
First, Sophomore and Middle Classes, each 20 00
Junior and Senior Classes, each 22 50
Music 25 00
Use of piano 2 50
Contingent fee 1 00
Board, including lodging, washing and fuel 60 00

The above fees are required to be paid on the first day of October.

Fees of the same amount, for the second half of the scholastic year, are required to be paid on the 15th of February, 1854.

An extra fee of $20 is charged for French.

The course of study in this institution is as extensive as that in any institution for the education of females and the instruction is of the most critical and thorough character. Every provision has been made to ensure success. A philosophical and chemical apparatus adequate to all the purposes of instruction has been provided, together with maps, charts, globes, etc. The instructions are experienced in their work, and highly approved for capacity, fidelity and skill.

This Institution has just closed the first year of its existence, with the most satisfactory results. And the public may feel assured that the Trustees will watch over its interests with the utmost solicitude and care, and spare no pains to render its system of education as perfect as possible.

The tuition fees have been somewhat reduced, and are below those of many Southern institutions of no higher grade. It is impossible to engage teachers of the highest character for talents, attainments and skill, without paying liberal salaries. But we offer as an equivalent, above all price, a faithful and skillful application of the most approved means of developing and training the mind.

Printed circulars, containing fuller information, may be had by application to Alex. Olascoek, Esq., Secretary of the Board.

FACULTY.

REV. JAMES K. ARMSTRONG, A. M., Principal, and Professor of Mental, Moral and Natural Science.
H. M. DALY, A. M., Professor of Vocal and Instrumental Music.
MISS E. L. HASKILL, English.
MISS M. J. BONDURANT, English.
MISS PIERRE FULLER, Drawing, Painting, French and Guitar.
MISS J. V. CLARK, Primary and Preparatory Department.
MRS. L. J. ARMSTRONG, Governess.
MRS. REBECCA CLARK, Matron and Nurse.

This institution has just closed a prosperous year, with one hundred and twenty-six pupils.

The ensuing session will commence on THURSDAY, the 20th day of SEPTEMBER.

It is very desirable that pupils enter at the beginning of the session.

The main building is a new and superior brick edifice, one hundred by fifty feet, three stories, and for elegance, convenience of arrangement—for number, size and comfort of school and private rooms—is not surpassed by any similar one in the country.

The Principal resides in the building, and superintends the Boarding Department. He has in his employ a gentleman and his lady, who discharge with faithfulness and satisfaction the duties of this position. Pupils boarding in the Seminary are under the immediate control of the Principal at all times—are members of his family.

The Matron and Nurse, a lady of great suitability and kindness of heart, united with long experience and untiring faithfulness, secures to pupils, at all times, the kindness and attentions of home.

The Principal and his lady, with the aid of the Female Teachers, all of whom reside in the Seminary, diligently guard and form the morals, manners and habits of the young ladies.

There is but one session, of nine and a half months. Pupils can enter at any time during the session, chargeable from the beginning of the month in which they enter to the close of the session.

One hundred and forty-five dollars will pay the board and tuition of a young lady, for the entire session, in the collegiate department; one hundred and seventy-four dollars will embrace the languages; two hundred and thirty-five dollars will embrace board, tuition in the collegiate department, on the piano, and in the languages.

The above estimate does not include books, stationery, sheet music, ornamental mater

MY FRIEND.

Wouldst thou be a friend of mine
Then must be quick and bold,
When the right is to be done
And the truth is to be told.

Wearing no friend-like smile
When thy heart is not within;
Making no truce with fraud or guile,
No compromise with sin.

Open of eye and speech,
Open of heart and hand,
Holding thine own but as in trust
For thy great brother band.

Patient and stout to bear,
Yet bearing not forever:
Gentle to rule and slow to bind,
Like lightning to deliver!

True to thy father land,
True to thine own true love;
True to thine altar and thy creed,
And thy good God above.

But with no bigot scorn
For faith sincere be thine,
Though less of form attend the prayer,
Or more of pomp and shrine.

Remembering Him who spake
The word that cannot lie,
"Where two or three in my name meet
There in the midst am I."

I bar thee not from faults—
God wot it were in vain!
Inalienable heritage
Since that primeval stain!

The wisest have been fools—
The surest stumbled sore.
Strive thou to stand—or fall in arise,
I ask thee not for more!

This do, and thou shalt knit
Closely my heart to thine;
Next the dear love of God above,
Such friend on earth be mine!

POPERY

AGAINST

COMMON SCHOOL EDUCATION

LETTER III.

To the Governor of Pennsylvania.

PITTSBURGH, February 1 1853.

The Roman Catholic Bishop, in this city sets out in his "Letter No. 2," with a most gross and groundless reflection on the men who have been taught in our common schools. With an air of deep emotion, he exclaims: "Oh! it is not in them the men are formed who are the bone and sinew of the Commonwealth." The insinuation is slanderous to the very men who are our pride—the men who, from the humblest walks of society, are furnished with the substantial information which else were out of their reach, and who rise every day, all around us, to stations of trust and honor. They are in our legislatures, in our pulpits, and in our national Congress.

As to the man whom the Bishop knows of, "who every morning carried a calf on his shoulders, with the hope that he could carry it when it became an ox," we strongly suspect his nationality, as not American. We vouch, at least, that he was not taught in our public schools.

The organ of Archbishop Hughes, in the same crusade, has lately gone further, and alleged that at the head of the criminal lists stand the names of those who have been pupils in these institutions. But when the editor is challenged by a city paper (the New York Times) to make good such a false accusation, he is silent.

Romish prelates very well know that any measure which would break down our grand system of popular education, would undermine the foundations of our Republic, in which, as the Common School Superintendent well remarks: "This training and disciplining of the community is in lieu of the soldiery and police regulations of despotic governments."

The Bishop's complaint is of tax, of majorities, and of religion.

But first: Is there any grievance in regard to tax! The statistics of education, crime, and pauperism will show whether we are more a burden upon them or they upon us. The difficulty of the Bishop's case is seen when we find him obliged to argue from the cheapness of the public school system in favor of its overthrow.—If, as we learn, he has commanded all Roman Catholic parents to withdraw their children from the public schools, he should rather have been satisfied that the public expense is so little. We are glad of his plea in favor of a more liberal expenditure. We believe that more should be paid to teachers than at present. Meanwhile, we should like to see a report of the salaries paid to Roman Catholic teachers in his church schools.

But he has not told the people that, under this very system, which he denounces as "an odious monopoly," the children are taught at an average cost of forty-two cents per month for each scholar. Will the cheapness be an objection with the poor among us? Will the Bishop show us any good objection to economical arrangements for the tax-paying community? In New York, at this moment, the organ of Archbishop Hughes is arguing against the public schools, that they are too expensive! But nothing will suit these prelates. Pipe, and they will not dance; mourn, and they will not lament. The real difficulty is behind all this.

We repeat, the Bishop should rather have been satisfied with the present low cost of public education, as he has withdrawn his children from the schools, and has no further interest in their improvement. As he has shown that it costs now not even one-fourth of what it fairly should, to educate the public school pupils, here is a large margin left him for defraying the extra cost of his church schools. So that, after all, with an economical church arrangement, such as we know he has at hand, his people are only paying a fair price for education, on his own showing; and the oppression of paying a fourth to the general benefit, would be slight at most. But here, again, we all know, that in the amount of tax they full far below their full proportion; so that even this small item for the public benefit would, in their case, be greatly reduced.

But let the Bishop be heard in all that is said about larger salaries for better teachers. And yet, can it be shown that the secular education obtained in the Roman Catholic church schools of our city is equal to that of the public schools? This is impossible, without an expenditure which is more impossible in the case. The Bishop's flock are not utterly unaware of this fact, if we have been rightly informed. Some of these enlightened Roman Catholics, who are to be found here and every where, rebel against the "Bull" commanding them to withdraw their children from the district schools. We know of one who submitted for six months; and, after making the experiment, and finding that his children were getting nothing but Roman Catholic learning, and were falling far behind other children in education, sent them again to the public school, determined to resist rather than make such a sacrifice; and no wonder. The advantages in some of these city schools are such as to rival those of the best academies in our land. We know of some of our most intelligent families who send their children there for their education in preference to any other.

But how immensely must the cost of tuition to the masses of our children be increased by the Bishop's plan of breaking up the very arrangement which secures economy, and without which the great majority would fail of any adequate education. It is a well-known principle in educational institutions that the cost of teaching is not materially enhanced by doubling the numbers in attendance. So that all the scattering of the scholars into different schools would be so far an increase of cost to the parents. And for the very same kind and quality of teaching as at present, the expense would be immediately increased. This, at least, would be the working for the Protestant majorities, while the Bishop would avoid this result by having the Roman Catholic children in large local schools, under his own control, and taught by ecclesiastics at the lowest rates. By such means, and with such an advantage, many of the Protestant poor would be driven into their schools as the only mode of obtaining an education. They would thus defy all competition, and would proselyte under the State sanction and support.

The whole plan of Rome, with its working, is spread out before us in its trans-Atlantic operations. A late German paper, the Folks Blatt, of Halle, in a notice of these movements, says: "In France, since the free opening of education to them, the whole kingdom swarms with 'brothers and sisters,' for school teachers—like a hunting-ground when the chase begins. The State schools decline, the Church schools overflow. And in Belgium the Liberals, by this very throwing open of education, have come to such straits that, by their official majority, after sharp opposition from the Romanists, they have restored the State compulsion. And this was on account of the social degredation and lawlessness which attend on the Jesuit teaching."

But, while the Bishop pleads against the cheapness of the public school system, and while he gives us his authority, as we have shown, for a more liberal expenditure, he would have us mark well that he would not have this in the shape of a tax—by no means! He would have us distinguish between the pleasure of paying it privately, and paying it at the public call. It is so much more agreeable to people, as he would have us believe, to expend the same amount in any other way than for taxation. He may have this aversion to support the State. It is in perfect consistency with all we have sought to show of the animus of this matter. But we trust that out of his own pale this aversion does not exist. Nay, we know that thousands of intelligent Roman Catholics, who are as good citizens as any, are public spirited men, and have not adopted this rare distinction of the Bishop. We hope they never may!

And all this plea would be good against the whole system of public taxation for the public benefit, and for the support of all our public institutions. And it will come to this! Already the organ of Archbishop Hughes declares the public school system to be "unconstitutional, and of the very essence and operation of despotism." This cry against the school tax could be used as well by those who have no children to send, or those who care not enough for education to have them enjoy the benefits. Our American system says: "Pay for your neighbors then. This bulwark of our republican liberties must be maintained. It is better than standing armies, or a Pope's police, or criminal institutions." And a true hearted American who looks with such an eye upon our free principles as all worthy to be maintained by the widest diffusion of knowledge, could not object, and would not.

It is boldly avowed that their religion is offended. This we can understand only when we consider that it is a political religion. Nothing religious is here imposed by the State.

What can we do? Will not our legislators see how futile are all attempts to conform our American system to this foreign one? Will they not say to all such pleas for special legislation: We cannot help you! If your religion is such that it cannot conform to our free institutions, there is no redress. We shall not legislate against you. We cannot legislate for you. Your system is fitted for ecclesiastical rule. Ours is not. If your conscience is offended by submitting to majorities, we cannot help it. Conscience is indeed sacred. But we cannot respect even conscience so much as to regard it when it is false, or to give up the free principles bought by our fathers' blood for any such asserted grievance. It may be a grievance that the Pope does not rule here, with swarms of friars, monks, priests, nuns, and mitred prelates. But we cannot accommodate you at so dear a rate. It may be a grievance that the Bible insinuates itself into all our public institutions, not by statute, but by the free choice of the people. But you must submit. If it be a grievance that we educate the masses independently of the Roman Catholic Church, and many do, perhaps, imbibe a spirit in our free land, and among our free children, that makes poor Romanists—we cannot help it. We wish all to be American. And we believe that universal education, and a free Bible, are the highest security, under God, of our republican principles. We do not wonder that, in this very view, you so concertedly and steadfastly oppose them. But we cannot help you. It is YOU THAT ARE INTOLERANT, NOT WE. We bid you welcome to our land as it is. And where the desert has blossomed under these auspices, we wish it not again to become a barren and desolate waste.

We say, in conclusion, that in a religious point of view, we hold our system of State education to be greatly defective. But, as provided by the State, and with a civil object, we do not expect it to conform to our Church views. Nor do we know that it could be made more strictly religious in its provisions without becoming thereby more objectionable to the Bishop himself, as well as to many others. We take it, therefore, as the civil training which the State owes to the masses for its own security. We believe that if God were more devoutly recognized in the schools, and the Bible more used in them, the State would be more secure.

How can a State like ours, which demands as a qualification for an oath or an office, that a man believe in certain great Bible truths, do less for its rising generations than to see that they are taught such truths in the public schools! Shall we yield every religious privilege to a foreign interest! We cannot. Yet the Church has also a duty, which it owes to our children. And because my church is not the same as the Bishop's I would not demand that its teaching be adopted in schools which are for the universal public. I would plead for church schools in addition to those of the State, but not as part of the State system. We pay cheerfully for our common schools, and for our church schools besides. Why cannot the Bishop do likewise? For training the multitudes whom our church schools could not reach, we cheerfully bear our share of the public burden if the cost of instruction can be called a burden when it saves from so much degradation and crime, which involves so much heavier expense.

A grave question for Protestants now arises. As it is the Bishop's policy to withdraw his people altogether from any connection with the public schools, why should we not claim for them that elementary religious instruction which is agreed upon by our common Protestantism, and which has been withheld unduly to suit the demands of the Romish Prelates among us?

Let Protestants also be awake, lest for lack of vigilance these ever new encroachments invade our most sacred rights and destroy our liberties before we are aware. Will not our State Legislators be advised by the presence and threats of Romish Bishops in the Legislature of Michigan, and see to it, that no such be conceded, where they will take an ell? Let us also demand our Protestant rights while we may. Restrictions could be imposed on such a political religion without any breach of toleration. Let us at least see to it, that the half a million of children in our public schools in Pennsylvania be taught the great truths of Scripture, and the principles of Republican Liberty. If the Bishops are to threaten our legislators with the Catholic vote, let us call for the Protestant vote, and it shall speak in a voice of thunder through the land.

I have aimed to speak plainly and earnestly, not severely. I have pleaded for my country, not for my Church. But, as I love my Bible, which is prohibited by the Pope as containing "damnable heresies," and for which new martyrs are now dying in prison by his side—and as I believe before God that the Papacy are making signal efforts to subvert our liberties, by breaking in pieces our great system of popular education, so as to gather what they may of the fragments—I have not found it in me to be silent. Especially, should we not, by holding our peace against such prelatical assaults, make it as though we lived in Rome, and dared not to speak, even for God and Liberty!

PREACHING AND PRACTICE.—Dr. Channing had a brother, a physician, and at one time they both lived in Boston. One day, a countryman in search of a divine knocked at the doctor's door, when the following dialogue ensued:

"Does Mr. Channing live here?"

"Yes, sir."

"Can I see him?"

"I am he."

"Who—you?"

"Yes, sir."

"You must have uttered considerably since I heard you preach!"

"O, I see your mistake now. It's my brother who preaches. I practice."

UNCLE TOM'S CHURCH.

There is a plain and commodious brick chapel in New Orleans, near the intersection of Poydras and St. Paul streets, built and used exclusively by the colored people. They are Methodists there to the number of 600 members—no body can doubt it who has once heard the singing. Upon a stone, inserted into the front gable, is the inscription WESLEY CHAPEL. But, for the street, it generally goes by the more picturesque title of "St. Paul's." There Bishop Andrew always preaches, one time at least, when he visits the Crescent City, and we understand the good man likes it well, and the sable congregation return the compliment of liking him vastly well. We have distinct impressions of his sermon there last winter, on "No man can serve two masters." It was made plain as could be that there was no partnership nor compromise in true religion. A man must break with the devil or God—one or t'other. "Amen—true—that's it, my Lord," was the response.

St. Paul's is to the negroes and those who take an interest in their spiritual welfare, what Father Taylor's Seamens' Chapel of Boston is, in its way. Though the house is packed, nave and galleries, there is a privileged small place in front for white folks, and among these frequently sit rep. and merch., notable visitors. The friends of Mrs. Stowe may not know that here is where "Uncle Tom" held his membership, and we have seen the name on the Church book ourselves! (A fact for the "key.") St. Clair, Uncle Tom's master, used to come occasionally and thought it better than Christ's Church, on Canal street. The cleverest preachers take it as a compliment to be offered the pulpit. St. Paul's has a history, and notwithstanding all that tourists have written, the best part of the record is on high. We seldom experience such a lively and yet pleasing impression of ministerial responsibility as we do in holding forth there, nearly every Sabbath afternoon.

We begun this to introduce Miss Fredrika Bremer, a distinguished authoress of Sweden, who made the tour of the United States a year or two since, and has embodied her observations in two stout duodecimo volumes. From the second volume, as published by the Harpers, we take the following sketch. It seems she, too, went to St. Paul's—got there too late. For her information, and all, to prevent a like occurrence, we here give notice that in winter, service begins at half-past three, precisely. Much of it is broad caricature, but it is evident she was there: [En.

"We came too late to hear the sermon in the African Methodist church, whither we had betaken ourselves. But at the close of the service, a so-called class-meeting was held. I do not know whether I have already said that the Methodist form, within their community, certain divisions or classes, which elect their own leaders or exhorters. These exhorters go round at the class-meeting to such of the members of their class as they deem to stand in need of consolation or encouragement, talk to them, aloud or in an under voice, receive their confessions, impart advice to them, and so on. I had seen such a class-meeting at Washington, and knew, therefore, what was the kind of scene which we might expect. But my expectations were quite exceeded here. Here we were nearer the tropical sun than at Washington.

The exhorters went round, and began to converse here and there with the people who sat on the benches. Scarcely, however, had they talked for a minute before the person addressed came into a state of exaltation, and began to speak and to perorate more loudly and more vehemently than the exhorter himself, and so to overpower him. There was one exhorter in particular, whose black, good-natured countenance was illumined by so great a degree of the inward light, by so much good-humor and joy that it was a pleasure to see him, and to hear him too: for, although his phrases were pretty much the same, and the same over again, yet they were words full of Christian pith and marrow, and they were uttered with so much cordiality, that they could not do other than go straight to the heart with enlivening power. Sometimes his ideas seemed to come to an end, and he stood, as it were, seeking for a moment; but then he would begin again with what he had just now said, and his words always brought with them the same warmth and faithfulness, and he looked like a life-infusing sunbeam. And it was only as the messenger of the joy, in Christ that he preached: "Hold fast by Christ! He is the Lord! He is the mighty One! He will help! He will do everything well! Trust in Him, my sister, my brother. Call upon him. Yes. Yes. Hold fast by Christ! He is the Lord!"

By degrees the noise increased in the church, and became a storm of voices and cries. The words were heard, "Yes, come Lord Jesus! Come, O come, O glory!" and they who thus cried aloud began to leap, leaped aloft with the motion as of a cork flying out of a bottle, while they waved their arms and their handkerchiefs in the air, as if they were endeavoring to bring something down, and all the while crying aloud, "Come, O come!" And as they leaped, they twisted their bodies round in a sort of cork-screw fashion, and were evidently in a state of convulsions sometimes they fell down and rolled in the aisle, amid loud, lamenting cries and groans. I saw the tropical exhorter, the man with the sun-bright countenance, talking to a young negro with a crooked nose and eyes that squinted, and he, too very soon began to talk and to preach, as he sprang high into the air, leaping up and down with incredible elasticity. Whichever way we looked in the church, we saw somebody leaping up and fanning the air; the whole church seemed transformed into a regular Bedlam, and the noise and the tumult were horrible. Still, however, the exhorters made their rounds with beaming countenances, as if they were in their right element, and as if every thing were going on as it might to do. Presently we saw our hearty exhorter address a few words to a tall, handsome mulatto woman, who sat before us, and while he was preaching to her she began to preach to him; both talked for some time with evident excitement; till she also got into motion, and sprang aloft with such vehemence, that three other women took hold of her by the skirts, as if to hold her still on the earth. Two of these laughed quietly, while they continued to hold her down, and she to leap up and throw her arms around. At length she fell and rolled about amid convulsive groans. After she rose up and began to walk about, up and down the church, with outspread arms, ejaculating now and then, "Halleluiah!" Her appearance was now calm, earnest and really beautiful. Amid all the wild tumult of crying and leaping, on the right hand and the left, she continued to walk up and down the church, in all directions, with outspread arms, eyes cast upward, exclaiming in a low voice, "Halleluiah! halleluiah!" At length she sank down upon her knees, on the platform by the altar, and there she became still.

"After the crying and leaping had continued for a good quarter of an hour longer, several negroes raised the mulatto woman, who was lying prostrate by the altar. She was now quite rigid. They bore her to a bench in front of us, and laid her down upon it.

"What has happened to her?" inquired Anne W. from a young negro girl whom she knew.

"Converted!" said she laconically, and joined those who were softly rubbing the pulses of the converted.

"I laid my hand upon her brow. It was quite cold, so also were her hands.

"When, by degrees, she had recovered consciousness, her glance was still fixed, but it seemed to me that it was directed rather inwardly than outwardly; she talked to herself in a low voice, and such a beautiful, blissful expression was portrayed in her countenance, that I would willingly experience that which she then experienced, saw or perceived. It was no ordinary, no earthly scene. Her countenance was as it were transfigured. As soon as, after deep sighs, she had returned to her usual state, her appearance became usual also. But her demeanor was changed: she wept much, but calmly and silently.

"The tornado gradually subsided in the church; shrieking and leaping, admonishing and preaching, all became hushed, and now people shook hands with each other, talked, laughed, congratulated one another so heartily, so cheerfully, with such cordial warmth and good will, that it was a pleasure to behold. If the whole raging, exciting scene there remained merely a feeling of satisfaction and pleasure, as if they had been together at some joyful feast."

BREVITIES FOR THOUGHTFUL MINDS.

FILLED WITH GOD.

Mr. P. preached from "The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, and the love of God, and fellowship of the Holy Ghost be with you." Before he had spoken ten minutes, I was filled with the triune God, and sunk motionless under an exceedingly great weight of love! My outward senses were locked up; but my spirit seemed surrounded with glory inexpressible! I believed Jesus, and was, as it were, overshadowed and weighed down by the presence and exceeding glory of the whole Deity; I knew not where I was, or whether in the body! But all was unutterable bliss and glory! After I came to myself, I continued full of the Divine presence, and a weight of love such as enfeebled my whole frame. For many days and nights I could eat but little, and could seldom sleep more than an hour in twenty-four. [Hester A. Rogers.

WHOLLY THE LORD'S

"The Lord poured his love abundantly into my soul while worshipping before Him, and I was enabled to renew my covenant to be wholly and forever His! Oh, how precious are His ways to my soul, suited to my weakness, worthy of a God! I am nothing! He is all. I momentarily live upon His smiles, and dwell under the shadow of His wings; I desire nothing but to please Him; to grow in inward conformity to His will, and sink deeper into humble love; to let the light of what His grace has bestowed shine on all around; and to live and die proclaiming God is love. [Hester A Rogers.

TEARS.

Tears are natural penalties of pleasure. It is a law that we should pay for all that we enjoy. It is well, too, that in snatching from Fortune any unusual blessing, we should not be suffered long to forget that passion is mortal, and that the very wing that bears us upward is continually shedding its brightest feathers. [Egeria.

PRICE AND VALUE.

All men have their price, says Sir Robert Walpole. It were devoutly to be desired that they also had their value. And yet it is very certain that men hold themselves quite as frequently, too cheaply as too dear. To set a just value on one's self is the true import of the aphorism "Know thyself." But most men know rather what they wish than what they are, and are far more capable to seem than to be. The habit which is taught by half of the social lessons that we learn, of deceiving others, naturally ends in the deceiving ourselves, and in the silly belief that we can deceive God also. [Egeria.

KEEP THE WITNESS OF THE SPIRIT

"I trust you still live in the Spirit of your glorified Head, Christ the Lord, growing up in Him. In order to this, it is always needful to have a clear witness to the work already wrought, both for stability and encouragement; else in time of trial we should give way to unbelief, and under the pressure of infirmities, surrounded by the powers of Hell, we should utterly be discouraged. To keep this witness (which is the seal or earnest of our inheritance) how necessary to take up the Cross daily, to be deaf to the voice of nature, and to attend constantly to the teaching of the Divine Spirit! Oh, let us go on, this is the way to glory! Walk close with God, exercise your faith for more grace, be zealous for the glory of God. Attend to these things; and you shall neither be barren nor unfruitful. [Thomas Walsh.

The following preamble and resolutions were unanimously adopted at the Fourth Quarterly Meeting Conference for Bastrop and Bœuff River Circuits, Louisiana Conference, held October 22, 1853.

Whereas, The sad intelligence has been communicated to this meeting of the death of the Rev. J. B. Emmins, Local Elder, and late a member of this Quarterly Meeting Conference; therefore

Resolved, That in his death the M. E. Church, South, has sustained the loss of one of its most consistent, pious and efficient local ministers; the community, of one of its most exemplary and useful members, and his surviving relatives of a most tender and affectionate brother.

Resolved, That while we bow with humble submission to the will of Almighty God in this melancholy occurrence, we would most sincerely offer our sympathies and condolence to the relatives of the deceased, in the indulgence of the fond hope that their loss is his gain.

Resolved, That a copy of the foregoing preamble and resolutions be presented to the relatives of the deceased, and also one to the editor of the N. O. Christian Advocate.

By order: JOEL SANDERS, P. E.

REYNOLDS TRIPPETT, Secretary.

Bastrop, October 24, 1853.

Look Around You and Sing.

Think not that your mercies lie wholly either in the past or in the future. Look around you even to the suffering, saint the suffering saint the present is fragrant with love, and let you sing in the house of his pilgrimage

"The hill of Zion yields
A thousand sacred sweets,
Before we reach the heavenly fields,
Or walk the golden streets."

—In respect of earthly things, have you not, day by day, food and raiment? This was St. Paul's standard of sufficiency and content. "What!" said the aged saint, with her crust of bread; what, all this and Christ besides!"

And when set once upon the task, the ingenuity of a grateful heart finds manifold love-tokens, besides a bare subsistence; the alleviations of medical skill in suffering, the affectionate attendance of friends who are near, the prayerful remembrance of those far away, the welcome ministrations of fellow Christians, who remember the words: "Sick, and ye visited me."

Those things; the gifts of Jesus, and Jesus himself besides! For the Gospel treasures you possess are not only the title-deeds of a future inheritance, but precious and present realities. You daily feed on Christ by faith; you live upon his dying love; you now lean upon him and find rest; you look to him and are comforted. Thus it was that the prophet Jeremiah, in his piteous lamentation, broke out into praise: "His compassions fail not; they are new every morning."

These fresh unfailing mercies are yours. It was after the Patriarch Jacob had seen in vision the close connection betwixt Heaven and Earth that he prayed that vow of singular sobriety and faith: "If God will be with me, and will keep me in this way that I go, and will give me bread to eat, and raiment to put on, so that I come again to my father's house in peace; then shall the Lord be my God."

The Christian needs no more, if only he have God for his friend, a sufficiency for his wants, and a safe arrival at his Father's house in peace.

NAPOLEON'S LAST YEAR.—About a year before his death a sudden change took place in the daily habits of Napoleon. His better angel had whispered into his ear and carried solace and contentment to his heart. He no longer secluded himself from the world. He went among his fellows as a man should mix with them, and as an Emperor might. There is work going on in his garden. The gardeners are very busy, especially the Chinese—an industrious race. Napoleon takes his place among them. He uses his spade with the rest, and the children of Count Bertrand are playing about him while he digs. Fowls trespass on the grounds, and make free with the favorite flower-beds. The Imperial gardener sends for his gun, shoots the trespassers dead, and then proceeds with his work,—superintending the raising of new walls in this place, the formation of reservoirs in another. Visions of the old time come across him while he labors, and traces out the ground of his little garden, plans and field-works for defensive operations, in the education of his officers and attendants, who group about him as he explains his ideas. Day after day, for a brief but happy interval, the gardening continues. Every man in the house has a spade in his hand, and Napoleon is very busy-putting in seed. He breakfasts in his garden, sends messengers to the orderly officer for carts, shovels and spades, and when the orderly officer looks in late in the evening, he finds the great man still busy with his innocent and healthy occupation; and he sure to be up again good time the next morning, for the said officer writes to the Governor, in his daily report of the 9th of May, 1820: "Gen. Bonaparte has got a large ball, which he rings, and immediately upon this signal all the servants turn out to work in the gardens." In less than a year after this sentence was written, Napoleon died. Where he was first buried, and where he now lies, the world knows. He maintained, during the whole of his six years' banishment, the dignified and simple bearing which he assumed for a few weeks in his little garden. Mr. Forsyth's book would not have been necessary, and there would have been a sanctity in our recollections of the last days of the still immortal Napoleon. [London Times.

Bee Hunting.

"But, about hunting bees. Venison informed me that here was the spot where he should "try 'em—that he didn't know nothing about his luck," that "bees was the knowingest critters alive"—that they lived in the "holler trees, all around us." He said "they had queens to govern 'em"—that they had "workers and drones"—that "everything about 'em was done just so, and if any of 'em broke the laws they just killed 'em, and pitched 'em everboard." This, he said, he had "seed himself; he had seen a regular bee-funeral." He "seed, once, four bees tugging at a dead body, drawing it on the back, when they throw'd it out of the hive and covered it over with dirt." And then, they have "wars," he says, and "gen'rals," and "captins," and "sogers," and "go out in fighting, and a-stealing honey;" they are "knowin' critters, and there is no telling nothing about 'em."

Venison took the little box he had brought with him, which was filled with honey, and, opening its lid, placed it on a stump. He then rambled around the wood until he found a lingering flower that had escaped the frost, with a honey-bee upon it. This he picked, bee and all, and placed on the honey. Soon, the bee began to work and load himself; and finally he rose in circles, winding high in the air, and suddenly turning a right angle, he shot away out of sight.

"Where has he gone?" inquired I.

"Gone hum where he lives," answered Venison, "to unload his thighs and tell the news."

In a few moments, three bees returned, filled themselves, and departed; then six; then a dozen, until a black line was formed, along which they were rushing both ways, empty and laden, one end of which was lost in the forest.

Venison and myself then started on a trot, with our eyes upward, to follow this living line, and after having proceeded a quarter of a mile it became so confused and scattered that we gave it up, and returned.

"What now?" I inquired.

"I'll have 'em! I'll have 'em!" he replied. "They can't cheat old Venison. I've hunted the critters more nor forty years, and I allers takes 'em when I tries. I'll draw a couple of more sights on 'em."

Venison took two pieces more of honey, and placed one on each side of his box. The bees followed him and commenced their work. Very soon, instead of one, he had three lines established, his line of honey forming the base of a triangle, while the bees were all rushing to its point, on each side of this triangle through its middle.

This, of course, was a demonstration. Venison and myself followed up again, and, sure enough, we "had 'em," as he predicted. There they were, roaring in the top of a great oak like thunder, coming in and going out, wheeling up and down through the air as though some great celebration was going on. It seemed that the whole hive of workers must have broken forth to capture and carry away Venison's honey box.

"Will they sting?" inquired I.

"Some totks they will," he replied. "If they hate a man they'll follow him a mile; and no body knows who they hate and who they don't until they're tried."

"Where's the honey?" I inquired again.

"Well, that's the next thing I'm after;" and Venison put his ear to the trunk of the tree to ascertain in what part of it they were "a-working." He listened awhile, but "they warn't low down, he know'd, for he didn't hear 'em humming." He thought the honey was "out the way, high up somewhere." So, at the tree he went with his axe, and in half an hour the old oak—older, probably, than any man on the globe—came down with a crash that roused up all the echoes of the wilderness.

Upon an examination, the honey was, probably, Venison thought, packed away in a hollow of the tree, about fifty feet from the ground, in a large knot-hole was discerned, out of which the bees were streaming in great consternation. So, he severed the trunk again, at the bottom of the hollow, and there it was, great flakes, piled one upon another, some of which had been broken by the fall of the tree, and were dripping and oozing out their wild richness.

"That's the real stuff," exclaimed Venison; "something 'sides bee-bread."

Venison had brought nothing with him to hold his honey, and I was a little curious to know how he would manage. He cut the tree again above the knot. During his labor the bees had settled all over him. His hands, face and hair were filled, besides a circle of them that were angrily wheeling about his head. But he heeded them not, except by an occasional shake, which was significant of pity rather than rage.

"Now," said Venison, when his work was finished, the tree out, the knot-hole stopped, and the whole turned upside down, "that's what I call a nat'ral bee-hive, and we'll just stuff in a little dry grass on the top, and then I'll be ready to move."

"Move!" I exclaimed, "move!" You don't expect me will carry home a tree, do you?"

"Two or three on 'em, I s'pect. Venison allers gets as much as that."

Venison was right. Before noon half a dozen hives were captured and ready for removal. I confess after the excitement was over, that I began to grow quite serious over my forenoon's labor. I sat down to rest myself, and the very solemnity of the wilderness produced a sober train of thought. A southwest breeze sprang up, loaded with the dying breath of fall flowers. It was blowing down the leaves around me, and piling them up in gorgeous drifts. Like an undertaker around the remains of the dead, it was quietly tearing down the drapery, and preparing the year for its burial. A haze overspread every thing, and the distance was mellow, the objects indistinct, and the whole landscape seemed swimming, as we sometimes see it in a dream. The trees were covered with haze, and a canoe, on its way down, appeared to be hung up in the air; the birds were hazy; and looking about me, I appeared to be sitting in a great tent of haze. The squirrels were clattering through the trees, and throwing down the nuts; the partridges were drumming; the rabbits rustling through the dry leaves; the waterfowl hurrying through the air; and the crickets, those melancholy musicians, were piping a low, dirge-like strain to the golden hours of autumn as they passed away. CONSTANTINOPLE.—The city occupies a triangular promontory of land between the Bosphorus and its inlet, the Golden Horn. It is about three miles and a half in length, and from one to four miles in breadth, and is enclosed by a triple-range of walls, twelve or thirteen miles in circumference, and entered by twenty-eight gates. It is built on an undulating declivity, rising towards the land side. Externally it has an imposing appearance, with its mosques, cupolas, minarets and cypresses, and its port crowded with shipping; but internally it consists mostly of a labyrinth of ill-paved, crooked, dirty lanes, and low-built small houses, of wood or rough-hewn stone. There are a number of public fountains, which amply supply the city with water. Its population is estimated at 400,000 including Galata and Pera, and it is composed of about 160,000 Greeks and Armenians, 20,000 Europeans, 60,000 Jews, and the remainder Turks and Arabians. There are between 300 and 400 mosques in the city and suburbs, 40 Mahommedan colleges, 183 hospitals 30 Christian Churches, 150 public baths, and 180 khans or inns, besides numerous bazars, coffee-houses, and caravan-serais. The seraglio is to the east of the city, and comprises an area of about three miles, separately enclosed by walls, and extending down to the sea of Marmora. The Golden Horn is a fine harbor, deep enough to float ships of the largest size; it can receive 1200 sail of the line, and is always full of mercantile and other vessels. On the North shore of the Golden Horn are the imperial arsenals and dock yards. There is always a very strong garrison of troops in this city, and many new barracks have been built by the late and present Sultan. The commerce of the port is

DEATH OF MINISTERS.—On the first page will be seen resolutions on the lamented death of Rev. J. B. Eddins, late member of the Louisiana Conference.

Rev. Geo. W. Morris, of the Mississippi Conference, died recently of yellow fever, near Natchez. He had for more than thirty years been a Methodist itinerant—a man without reproach, and abundant in labors.

JACOBUS'S LETTER.

Do you read them? Be not deterred at their length. It is well for every one to be informed of the real plan of attack aimed against American institutions by Popery. True, it is rather awkward to come up on the side of Public Education. Even there, however, it is hoped that, after much besieging, a breach may be made in the wall, and the Trojan horse got in. And what is this Trojan horse, whose cavernous sides are full of emissaries and implements of destruction? Conscience—the plea of Conscience! These letters show the insufficiency, insincerity and absurdity of that specious plea. And what is more—the real question at issue—the danger and the remedy. Read them.

AN APPRENTICE CASE.

Rev. A. E. Goodwyn, late pastor at Plaquemine, La., on a late visit there found the following document posted up, which is a specimen. In explanation he gives these facts:

"The said Mr. Ennis is one of the most respectable citizens of Plaquemine, and carries on a large cooperage business—hence the allusion to "Barrel." Mr. E. had a boy bound to him, to be treated as one of the family, and taught the trade. The boy goes to a Protestant Sunday School; the mother objects. Mr E. gives him his choice, and he persists in going. The boy is twelve or fourteen years old," etc.

TO THE PUBLIC.

The following note is laid before the public verbatim, and without comment.

JAMES ENNIS.

Mr. Ennis, Present.

Sir, Madame Connoro has come to complain to me for the second time, that, contrary to the agreement made with her you send her catholin son to a protestant Sunday School. This in way honorable, sir, it betrays low bigotry. I am willing to school him for nothing if you are not bound to give him an education. Now, sir, you told this poor woman, that I should go to talk to you that way. Who are you! poor man, to express yourself so in speaking of a priest. Do you think that I am come out of a Barrel? truly, sir, you are too simple and too laughable a personage to receive a priest's visit. But there is a law to redress the bigot, and I am willing to have it put in execution whenever it is necessary.

Yours, sir, C. CHAMBERT, Rector.

EDUCATION IN GEORGIA.

The Columbus Times and Sentinel hopes the Legislature of Georgia, now assembling, will get through with judicial and Senatorial elections quickly, and take up matters of interest to all the people; and one of these is a judicious and liberal system of common schools. Georgia railroads and other internal improvements are all well and good—but this material progress will profit little if the mental and moral lag behind. Yet the noble State has, first and last, spent much for public education, but to little result. System has been wanting. The Times says:

"The right or expediency of providing education at government expense, is no longer a matter of controversy. The only question now is, "how shall this be best effected?" The subject only requires attention to be satisfactorily disposed of.

"Common school education has been so perfected in Massachusetts, Connecticut and NewYork, besides in several other States, that a plan is no longer a desideratum. If our Legislators will but take up the subject with a determination to establish a system commensurate with the wants of the State, and the ability of the State, we need no longer labor under such a partial crippled system as at present disgraces our statutes and the age in which we live."

LAFOURCHE COLORED MISSION.

This Mission has been in existence since the Winter of 1849 (it was then planted in tears) during which time it has been served by the present missionary. Up to the close of last year it comprised within its bounds, besides two appointments to the whites, twelve plantations, having in all from 1400 to 1500, with a church-membership of 345, and 280 under catechetical instruction from four to twenty years of age.

The condition of the Mission, I am pained to state, is not so flattering at the close of the present Conference year, if we judge by human scan, though I am persuaded that the labor of the last five years has not been in vain or totally lost, and from it eternity will gather up some happy fruits.

The ways of Providence are wonderful and mysterious to man, and past finding out; yet all her developments, consonant with Scripture, teach us not to trust to an arm of flesh.

The Mission, strange to say, has lost five of its strongest friends and supporters; three of whom have died.* The other two have removed to other parts, causing changes in ownership or management in most instances adverse to the interest and well-being of the Mission, and in some cases parties have arisen antagonistical to the operations of the missionary, often frustrating his plans.

Under the present arrangement this is a serious and unavoidable disadvantage to which our Missions to the people of color will ever be subjected, serving them at will as we now do. The effect of which is both to bide and bind the blessed Gospel of the glorious God.

If the success and permanency of the missionary work to this people is to depend upon the will of man, that will must be sanctified and brought into subjection to Him, who fills the heart of the master and servant with joy and love, and dispenses to both a hope big with immortality. To effect this some other means is to be brought to bear besides preach in sugar-houses, out-houses, and sheds, with the absence of almost every thing to invite the planter and his family, and create in the mind religious devotion, giving the Gospel its proper elevation.

This influence, affecting the heart of the master and overseer, would stretch out at once to the missionary a hand that would lighten his heart, and guarantee to him success, enabling him to arrange and meet his classes, enforce discipline, arrest, and prevent an irresponsible ministry, which not infrequently injures this most important field of our operations.

Five plantations, with a membership of 209, and about 180 catechumens, have closed their doors to the missionary. There still remains seven plantations, with a membership of 156, and about 150 catechumens, and about 700 souls in all.

There are other plantations within the bounds of the mission who will, perhaps, have preaching to their blacks.

The epidemic has, to a considerable extent, interfered with the labors of the missionary.

LEWIS A. REED, Missionary.

*One of these gentlemen, Mr. J. W. Tucker, made provision in his Will for preaching to be continued to his blacks.

HINDRANCES TO AN INCREASE IN THE MINISTRY.

We will not say why it is that so few candidates for the ministry are being offered to the Methodist Church, and so many ministers are becoming secular—to the loss of the pastorate. But before us lies a declaration from high authority as to the cause of this decadence in sister-churches.

The Presbyterian, of October 29, holds this language:

"One of the most painfully distressing facts in the present condition of the Church is the diminishing number of those who are preparing to enter the Christian ministry. We have been reluctant to admit its truth, and have attempted to beguile ourselves into the belief that the obstacle to increase, whatever it might be, would be temporary in its operation, and that each succeeding year would introduce a new and happier state of things. The statistics, however, on the truth of which we are compelled to rely, show that the cause or causes of decrease are steadily operating, and that the results are increasingly more unpropitious. The same response comes from our colleges, theological seminaries, and education societies, that the number of pious young men ready to dedicate themselves to the sacred office is scarcely sufficient to fill up the broken ranks of the existing ministry, annually thinned as it is by death, or weakened by disqualifying old age and infirmity. For such an increase as is demanded by a rapidly increasing population and a widening extension of territory, there seems to be no provision. Thick gloom is darkening the future, and it must be admitted, however reluctantly, that unless there be a speedy change, the influence of the Church, so far as it depends on a sufficient and well qualified ministry, will be fearfully inadequate in molding, controlling, and spiritualizing the great mass of society. The question will soon force itself on our attention, in what way are churches already organized to be supplied with the ordinances of religion? And the still more depressing one, how are new churches to be reared in those places which are rapidly filling up with a thrifty population? Our Western world threatens to outgrow the Church in a proportion much greater than has yet been witnessed, and a new and painful emphasis is likely to be given to the queries: How shall the people believe if they do not hear the Gospel? and how shall they hear without preachers? and how shall they preach except they be sent? and how shall they be sent, if they are no where to be found? Those who regard the ministry and the Church as alike useless, may contemplate such a prospect with indifference; the Christian must regard it with painful solicitude. If the ministry be one of God's chief instruments for the moral regeneration of the world its probable diminution must necessarily awaken concern in the minds of those who would dread the relapse of society into a state of unmitigated irreligion and ungodliness. Deride the assertion, as some men may, the Church and ministry of Jesus Christ are the conservative principles of society. Depress or vitiate these, and the re-action is at once felt on the people at large; and all the institutions which characterize a civilized state of society undergo a gradual deterioration. The depravity of the human heart, once freed from the checks now imposed, and unrestrained by the counteractives now applied, would soon be embodied in an intenser form of infidelity and licentiousness. These exist to a fearful extent already; how much more rife would they be by the removal of their most strenuous and decided opponent, the Christian ministry? This is a point, however, which need not be insisted on here, since patriots, politicians, and philanthropists, ignorant of any special, spiritual efficacy of religion in their own cases, will be ready to admit that the extinction of the Christian ministry would be one of the greatest calamities which could befall the world.

"At a time then, when, from some cause, a check has been given to the increase of the ministry, it becomes us to search closely for the source of the evil, and its appropriate remedy."

After looking all about the subject the Presbyterian brings it down to these facts. Will our own people consider them?

"1. It is unquestionable that a very large proportion of our churches content themselves with offering the most stinted stipends to their ministers; and this, in most cases, is not because a more adequate salary might not be given, but from contracted views on the subject, favored by long custom. 2. It is equally true that, notwithstanding the great change which has taken place in economics or household affairs, by which the price of living is greatly enhanced, and which is most grievously felt by those who are dependent on fixed salaries, but very little movement is made to meet this emergency by increasing the salaries of ministers. 3. The mechanic may charge more for his work, the merchant more for his goods, the agriculturist more for his product, to meet this change in the price of living, while the minister has no resort. With economy he he could barely live before; now he must be disqualified for duty by anxious thoughts and calculations, and by the prospect of falling into inextricable debt. 4. Ministers are found in all parts of our country, whose original situation has been sadly altered by increasing families. Their first contract with a congregation contemplated a bare support for themselves, and perhaps a wife; now they are surrounded by large families, and with the same limited means of support. 5. Ministers are aware that their circumstances are likely to grow worse, instead of being ameliorated, so long as the present contracted views are entertained by their congregations in reference to their support. While their neighbors thrive, they remain stationary or retrograde; their children must, in a great measure, remain uneducated; as they grow up they have no prospect of giving them the most moderate outfit in life; they must endure the cares of poverty in addition to their other oppressive anxieties.

"Now, is it at all remarkable that young men of enterprise should hesitate to enter the ministry when these and similar facts are brought under their view? They may desire to serve God by preaching the gospel, and yet may shrink from a decision which would entail upon them and their future families these disqualifying and distressing privations. They may reason, too, and with some plausibility, that they are under small obligations to spend their talents, strength, and life, for those who do not sufficiently appreciate their labors to give them a decent support.

Here, then, we have on the one hand a decreasing ministry, at a time when all the circumstances of the case demand an increasing one; and, on the other, we have plainly before us one of the principal causes of this deficiency. What, then, is the remedy? It is equally evident. It is that the people of our congregations should relieve themselves of an enormous responsibility, by taking the remedy in their own hand, by resolving to support their ministers adequately. It must be the act of not one, two or a score of our congregations, but a simultaneous determination of all, to show their estimate of the office by relieving their ministers of the pecuniary pressure which rests upon them, and encouraging them in their work by the tender of an adequate support. With rare exceptions, the stipends of ministers should be immediately increased in our city and rural congregations. Justice demands it. It is a dictate of religious principle. The necessities of the case require it. Our regard for the Church of Christ, as we look at its positive interests, should urge to the duty of showing, by our present acts, to the pious young men of the church, that if they have a heart for the ministry, they need not be repelled by the prospect of the needless hardships and privations which a competent support would obviate."

So stands the case there, and how with the Episcopalians? In their triennial convention the following transpired. We copy the reports of the eleventh day's proceedings:

"Rev. Dr. Potter, of NewYork, proposed a resolution that, whereas the pastors of the church, owing to the rapid growth of this country, were not equal to the wants of the dioceses, therefore,

"Resolved, That this House of Clerical and Lay Delegates in General Convention assembled, make it their request to the House of Bishops to take into consideration whether, by a pastoral letter, or by some other means, they cannot so address themselves to parents, and pastors, and teachers, and make such suggestions in regard to religious instruction in schools and colleges as may, with the blessing of Almighty God, lead to a great increase in the number of earnest and devoted youth, desirous to dedicate themselves to the sacred ministry of the church. He supported his resolution by a few pertinent remarks.

"The Rev. Dr. Higbee, of NewYork, would second the resolution of his reverend colleague, and he deemed it very good, so far as it went, but he thought one great thing had been overlooked, and at the risk of being called a disciple of Mammon, he would state it—it was that the ministry were starving, absolutely starving, and that was one great reason why the church was so unable to meet the great demand for new ministers which is constantly being made on her. He deemed the laborer worthy of his hire.

"The Rev. Dr. Scott, of Georgia, thought that such a state of things was anticipated by Christ when he said: "The harvest truly is great, but the laborers are few; pray ye, therefore, the Lord of the harvest that He send forth laborers into the harvest." And, he thought that, with such a command, it was the duty of the church to "pray to the Lord of the harvest."

"The Rev. Dr. Fuller, of Massachusetts called the attention of the convention to the fact that Christ said, "Send forth laborers into the harvest," yet the injunction was not fully obeyed. He would vote for the resolution proposed by Dr. Potter, although he did not think that it fully met the case. He hoped before the convention adjourned it would devise some course to touch the hearts of the praying community. If nothing better was proposed, he would suggest that some such addition as the following be made to the Litany: "We pray the Lord of the harvest to send forth laborers into the vineyard," to which he would that the people respond, "We beseech Thee to hear us, good Lord!"

"Dr. Potter would prefer that his resolution stood alone.

"The Rev. Dr. Vinton, of NewYork, hoped his reverend brother would accept the amendment of Dr. Higbee, as "the laborer is worthy of his hire."

Subsequently the matter came up in another form. These that speak are not selfishly interested. Dr. Higbee, if we mistake not, is one of the salaried pastors of Trinity Church, N. Y.,—the richest religious corporation in America:

"The Rev. Dr. Potter proposed a resolution asking the House of Bishops to join with this House in establishing a society for the support of widows and orphans of deceased clergymen; which motion was supported in some very feeling remarks on the condition of the clergy and their families in this country.

"Rev. Dr. Higbee, of N. Y., offered a resolution to the effect that the inadequate pecuniary support of clergymen is operating throughout the church as an almost fatal discouragement to the work of the ministry, and is the cause of the present diminution of the candidates for holy orders, and that, therefore, the Bishops be requested to make this great evil and injustice the subject of their consideration.

"Mr. Newton, of Mass., supported this resolution. The laity, he said, were delinquent in this matter. For his part, he was willing to do all he could to repair the evil. He remarked that the average salary of clergymen in Virginia and Connecticut was $400 a year, and sometimes less. After some further discussion, the resolution of Dr. Higbee was adopted."

Now, if it be so under the green tree, what under the dry? For it is understood generally that Episcopal and Presbyterian pastors enjoy "fat things," compared to Methodist preachers. Food for reflection here to every Methodist layman and steward.

EAST FELICIANA.—We are sorry to hear that the yellow fever, or black plague, is still raging in the heretofore healthy town of Clinton. Mr. Noah Waddill, an old citizen, and for some years jailor of that town, was buried on Tuesday, and we understand eight or nine cases were under treatment. The disease is peculiar and unprecedented, and hoar or hard frosts do not seem to stay its progress in one of the most delightful and seemingly healthy towns in the South. We would urge upon our citizens to be careful of the health of themselves and families, as examples before us prove that if a pure atmosphere does not stem the disease, we have to trust in Providence as the wisest precaution. REVIVAL INTELLIGENCE.

It is cause of rejoicing that meetings, protracted and interesting, resulting in the conversion of many souls, the awakening of the impenitent, the edifying of the Church and the vigorous, warm diffusion of Gospel instruction—have marked this year of the Southern and South-western Conferences, and kept up to the eve of their sessions.

By the Bastrop (La.) paper we learn of a meeting of much benefit there, in the Methodist Church, under charge of Rev. R. Trippett.

For a week or more the pastor of Felicity Street Church, in this city, Rev. L. Parker, has held meetings every evening, seriously and numerously attended, and with much spiritual benefit.

Rev. Z. Dowling writes 22d ult., that the Camp-meeting, held near Geneva, Holmes county, Florida, "was attended with a most gracious heavenly influence:" the congregations orderly and attentive to the Word preached, and 26 hopefully added to the church.

Rev. J. W. Cooke, Nov. 4, writing from De Kalb, Mi., says: "Our protracted meetings have just closed. The windows of heaven have opened upon us and refreshing showers have fell in our midst. We have received upwards of one hundred and fifty into the church since our protracted meetings began. The most of the churches are in a flourishing condition. Some few are almost frozen up, and some are miserably hide-bound; (you know what I am alluding to—missionary money.) This is not the case with all."

A letter received from Rev. T. Burpo, dated Nov. 3, gives the following details of God's work on the Union Town circuit, Alabama Conference:

"It is with heartfelt gratitude to the great Head of the Church that we communicate to you the pleasing intelligence that God is reviving his work on a portion of this circuit. On the 8th of October we met at Newhope for the purpose of holding a meeting a few days. The Church had been praying for a revival and faith was in lively exercise. The promise was claimed and revival power descended. The people of God were rebaptised from on high; this was seen in the flowing tear, the sobbing bosom and the bursts of joy with which the sanctuary of God resounded. This meeting was continued day and night for thirteen days, resulting in the conversion of many precious souls. At the close of this meeting we opened another at Orrville, four miles distant; here the Lord made bare his arm in the awakening of many sinners. On the Sabbath it was estimated that not less than sixty persons asked the prayers of the Church. On Monday thirty came up to the mourners bench, and ten or twelve professed to find peace. The church is greatly revived; our class-leaders are more willing to work and help to nurse those young members the Lord has given us. May the Lord help our dear brethren to do their duty. The exact number of conversions we are not prepared to report. We believe that over thirty found peace with God; 17 whites and 6 colored joined the church. Our Baptist brethren will reap some of the fruits of our labors. We were glad to see some of their children weeping at the altar and with pleasure we pointed them to Christ and rejoiced with them when their souls were made happy in believing.

"We were greatly assisted by the efficient labors of Bro. Carmichael, from Cahaba. Brother Peebles, from Marion, was with us a few days and done valuable service, and Brother Dillard, of Cumberland P. Church, did us good service; may the Lord reward these dear brethren for their work and labor of love."

SPRING HILL CIRCUIT, ALABAMA.

The Lord has not been unmindful of us while the gospel has been the power of God unto salvation elsewhere. About 60 whites and 25 colored have been added to this circuit the present year. Four have died; Bro. Dugger, Thos. Harwood, Miss Evilena Longgon and Miss Laura Jones. These all died in the faith.

The brethern and friends are fitting up a parsonage, which I think will be ready for the accommodation of my successor.

May it be my good fortune to find a home as comfortable where I may live and labor another year.

We must have parsonages or be driven to the unpleasant necessity of securing shelter for our our families as some have already done. "Lord increase our faith."

JOHN D. WORRELL.

Jefferson, Ala., Nov. 8, 1853.

MACON CIRCUIT, ALABAMA CONFERENCE.

While writing on business permit me to say a word in regurd to my pastoral charge. I cannot report a very extensive revival, yet we have not been wholly passed by. We have been repeatedly visited with gracious revival showers. My circuit is composed of six churches, of which the central one is X Prairie, where, in the month of August, we had a very fine revival; quite a number were converted and added to the church.

Our camp-meeting was likewise productive of great good. I estimate the conversions at from 40 to 50; additions to the church 35, besides a vast multitude who heard the Word of Life with much attention, the fruits of which, it is to be hoped, will be cheering, even an hundred fold.

The Lord bless the Macon Circuit and send them a pastor the ensuing year who shall be more successful than any of his predecessors have been. ROBERT S. FINLEY.

DEMOPOLIS, ALA.—The Sentinel of the 5th inst. says that twenty-four deaths have occurred of the yellow fever. The editor acknowledges the abiding presence and benevolent labors of a band of the citizens, and further says:

"In connection with the facts relating to the prevalence of the epidemic here, we should not forgive ourselves were we not to notice the heroic and Christian conduct of some of our ministers. The Rev. T. H. Foster has by his conduct well deserved the lasting gratitude of, not only the afflicted, but their friends also. Mr. Sayre, of the Presbyterian church, was efficient until he was himself taken sick. We learn with pleasure that he is now considered out of danger."

METHODIST PRESS.

NO GO.

The Philadelphia Christian Advocate has pegged out. The last number, vol. 2, No. 44, announces its discontinuance. Cause—want of patronage: to be resumed by and by, however, conditionally. This member of the Advocate family started moderately for reform, but got to fever heat. Methodist preachers and bishops especially, and Conferences, had no quarter shown them. The spirit of the old Radicals was invoked and the poor oppressed laity told of their grievances! But the laity could not be aroused to denounce the body of preachers that served them and the form of government that had borne so successful an experiment. They would not be arrayed against the ministry: too far gone—so it is insinuated. One part of the ministry would not be arrayed against another part: too servile—so it is insinuated. And after spending five thousand dollars upon the Philadelphia Advocate these Reformers, in the bosom of the Methodist Church, give it up in disgust.

We are free to say that such has been the spirit of this paper for some time we are not sorry at the result. It is significant. It may admonish those who meditate crusades of this sort. A few discontented, sour souls are always ready to join in the cry against the economy of Methodism: it is aristocracy—monopoly—hierarchy—tyranny, etc.; but the reliable and thoughtful are not to be reached by such slogan. The Advocate has found it so and proved it again to the satisfaction of all true Methodists. After discussion the freest: after republishing the invectives of all that chose to attack our Church government—those to whom Methodism would still be an offence, reform it as you please: after being let alone by other papers: after appealing to all prejudices, political, social, ecclesiastical: after two years of violent unresisted effort at agitation—it comes to this, "our people" can not be argued, coaxed or provoked into the new: they are satisfied with the old. They do reform and will continue to reform, but never after that fashion. We present an extract from the closing editorial:

In view of these facts, it has been deemed advisable by our Publication Association to discontinue the issue of the Advocate until they can enlist a sufficient number of the friends of the Church to make it available in accomplishing the end designed. Our people in general have been rocked to sleep by our present system of government. They think no more of their Church and its interests than of the Great Bear in the northern heavens, and with our present means it is impossible to arouse them. If the friends of a vigorous, active and efficient Church will exert themselves in their several neighborhoods, and send us a list of about two thousand or twenty-five hundred new subscribers, so that we may have a better basis to work upon, we promise to use our utmost exertion to waken up an interest in these matters. If they do not accede to this request, we think we may as well spare our efforts for all the good we can do alone.

GENERAL SUPERINTENDENCY.

The Nashville Advocate talks and feels round the point of strengthening the Episcopacy, without committing itself further than asserting that bishops are not bona fide apostles. The following sentence is news to us, in what it implies. We have heard, seen, or read of no Methodist as "now" proposing "one bishop to each Conference":

"The notion of one bishop to each Conference (making it virtually his diocese) was brought forward more than forty years ago, when there were but seven Conferences in the United States, and it gave occasion for that part of the restrictive rules which guarantees an 'itinerant general superintendency,' in contradistinction from that sort of diocesan Episcopacy then and now proposed."

LIVE SO AS TO BE MISSED WHEN YOU DIE.

Zion's Herald illustrates and enforces this saying of McCheyne by a sketch of an humble but useful layman:

"We have called it a great and crushing lie to assert that uncommon endowments are necessary to extensive usefulness. And who can successfully contradict our assertion. Is it not supported by the lives of such as Nelson, Carvosso, Hicks, Reeves, Page, and a host of kindred spirits? What were they but men of ordinary intellectual endowments, without academic instruction, or peculiar opportunity? Yet they lived so as to shed sunshine on thousands during their lifetime, and to be missed and mourned by multitudes when they died. And so might thousands—yea, tens of thousands now living in the Church of God, provided they would seek a holy anointing, arm themselves with spiritual weapons, and enter the wide area of benevolent endeavor, with a fixed aim to lessen the sorrows, and increase the joys of their fellow men."

The editor of the same paper has been attending the "Commencement" at the Concord Biblical Institute.

"We were pleased to learn that the fiscal interests of the Institution are improving. During the year past it has received legacies amounting to $3250, and $5000 in donations from five noble-hearted donors. On Wednesday evening, it being announced that a few hundred dollars were needed to meet certain little conveniences, a subscription of over six hundred dollars was promptly given. This was noble; but we hope, nevertheless, that hereafter the anniversaries of the Institute may be unaccompanied by any special appeals for funds."

BOOK ROOM.

The editor of the Buffalo Christian Advocate has been to see New York and its attractions, and among the things he witnessed was the Methodist Book Concern:

"The next point to which we hastened in the forenoon of Saturday was the Book Room on Mulberry street. Here we were greeted, on our entrance, by our old friend, clever and kind as he is popular, Rev. Thos. Carlton, the principal agent of the concern. We had no more than passed accustomed salutations, before, aided by our friend, we commenced a survey of the largest publishing house in New York. As one department after another opened to our view, and all tending to the one grand moral object, the religious book, we were most forcibly impressed with the magnitude and importance of this wisely ordained agency of the Church. The reader will not be surprised with the impression made upon us when informed that 5000 bound volumes are completed in it every day, making some ten per minute during the ten hours daily work. Besides this astonishing accumulation of books, there are published weekly 33,000 copies of the Christian Advocate; there are also printed 16,000 of the National Magazine, near 3000 of the Review, 50,000 of the Missionary Advocate, and 85,000 of the Sunday School Advocate. To accomplish this amount of work every thing about the concern is in prodigious activity. Engines, men, women, girls and boys, with overseers and managers, are in a constant buzzing whirl of indomitable business energy. When the present enterprising agents took possession of it the days of old fogyism were ended, and it broke out into the light of enterprise and activity commensurate with the demands of the day. Too much cannot be said in favor of the gentlemen who now have it under their control, both of whom are capitally designed to give it a position of usefulness far beyond what has hitherto marked its career."

BIBLE AGENCY.

We meet, in the Memphis Advocate, 10th inst., with a good item for the friends of the South-western Bible House, to be built in this city. We learn from parties here that the building will soon be under way and money enough secured to finish it:

The Rev. H. C. Thweatt has been in our city for several weeks past, on his mission as Bible Agent. We are happy to state, for the cause of our common christianity, and to the credit of the enlightened Christian and very liberal spirit of the citizens of Memphis, he succeeded in raising about three hundred and sixty dollars for this best of causes. Brother Thweatt preached at the two Methodist churches several times with great power and effect, to large and attentive congregations. Many were the moistened eyes and lively emotions, created by the presence, once more, of this talented and pious man of God among his old friends in this city, where he once labored with so much success.

LATE FROM CHINA.

The S. C. Advocate, 11th inst., says:

"Just before going to press we received letters from China. We have room only to say that Dr. Taylor and the Rev. W. G. E. Cunningham and wife are in fine health. Bro. C. says he hopes to preach, or try, before many days; he finds the language less difficult than he had anticipated; and feels very much interested and delighted in the work. We shall publish an interesting communication from him, next week, in reference to the progress of the Chinese Revolution."

TEMPERANCE.

The English correspondent of the North-Western Christian Advocate draws the following melancholy picture of the state of religion in the churches of Great Britain:

"No stranger can have any thing like an adequate conception of the extent to which the use and abuse of intoxicating beverages retard the progress of the Gospel of the Son of God in this country. The workingmen of England, almost to a man, all drink; and the majority of them drink to excess, as long as they have the means of purchasing the poison. The Sabbath, too, with these men, is the great drinking-day; they are not, therefore, to be seen in our places of worship. Sometimes a revival of religion takes place, but, too often, three out of the four converted and added to our societies lose their place in the Church through what was, in its first stages, the 'moderate' use of the intoxicant. Methodists are not worse than other Christian people: all the Christian denominations are alike in looking coldly and incredulously upon total abstinence as the only effectual remedy for extirpating drunkenness from among us. It may be safely affirmed that no body of Christians could even supply a respectable minority in any Conference, assembly or union, in favor of a set of resolutions recommending teetotalism; indeed, I question if it would be possible to obtain a hearing in any Church-court for the propounders of such resolutions. But we hope better days are coming, when the Christianity of the land shall energetically lay hold of the temperance movement and guide it to a successful and glorious issue."

CHANGE OF ADDRESS.

The Western Ch. Advocate publishes the following specimen. We know something of this ourselves. Brethren must not forget to send their changes when the Conferences are over. It is impossible for an editor to keep in mind their movements; to say nothing of taking the responsibility of altering an address without order:

"An esteemed correspondent writes us as follows:

"1——, Oct. 25, 1853.

"BROTHER ELLIOTT—Please change my periodicals from G—— to I—— post-office—Christinn Advocate, Ladies' Repository and Quarterly. I can see no propriety in sending them to G——, when you know that my work is in I—— just as well as I do myself. I know it is a small matter, but there is a great number of small matters to attend to that are entirely unnecessary; the whole life of man is made up of items. I have not received an Advocate, regularly, since Conference. They pass through I—— to G——, and thence back again—please change."

MINISTERIAL EDUCATION.

MR. EDITOR: The subject of Ministerial Education is beginning to attract considerable attention among Southern Methodists. It is a question of moment to our Church, and in its discussion all considerations and all motives should be discarded, save those which tend to the good of our community and the glory of God. It is too frequently the case that those who call each other Brother, and who profess to labor with the single aim to do good, manifest the same spirit of impatience and uncharitableness in their discussions of truth which characterize the disputations of the world. Such discussions never do good; they always do harm—obscure the truth, and engender un-Christian feelings. It is manifest, from indications which have already appeared in the columns of some of our Church papers, that before the question of ministerial education is disposed of, there will be danger of the results which we have just deprecated. Why should Methodists quarrel about this or any other question of Church policy? They will disagree, of course, because honest minds come to different conclusions, and it is proper that the difference should be maintained so long as it is an honest one; but, for the sake of our common brotherhood, and the good of the cause which we claim equally to love, let us differ as Christians should, and not as those who make no professions of love for one another. If it is proper that some provision should be made for the education of our ministers, it is a matter in which we all are interested; if, on the other hand, the policy is a dangerous one, it is alike the duty of every Methodist to oppose it. In this spirit let us enter upon the investigation of this question, and let us, in the outset, invoke upon our deliberations the directing influences of the great Head of the Church, that we may determine for the true good of the cause of Christ.

There is danger that the question under discussion may be misapprehended, and therefore, it may be well to premise that the proposition is not to create any new tests of admission into our ministry, but to provide for the education of those, who being called to this holy work, are incapacitated by the want of proper mental culture, for the efficient discharge of its duties. The question whether certain attainments in mental culture should be indispensably prerequired of those who apply for admission into our Conference, is not now before us. The simple proposition is this: It often occurs that men feel it their duty to preach, who have enjoyed none or very limited, means of education. Shall the Church provide the means for affording such persons the opportunity of supplying their lack in this respect?

Before we answer this question let us propound another: Would it not be considered an additional recommendation to a candidate for admission into the ministry that he had superadded to all the necessary spiritual qualifications, the advantages of a thorough mental training? Other things being equal, does not that man give promise of most usefulness in the pulpit who brings with him the aid of a cultivated intellect? Really, I can see but one answer to these questions. Indeed, they strike me as so self-affirmative, that I could scarcely undertake to make the argument plainer. And yet their affirmation carries with it the settlement of the proposition under discussion. When a good man applies for admission into our pulpits, who is disqualified by his ignorance for usefulness, if it is admitted that his ignorance is a subject of regret, is it not lawful, nay, is it not expedient that some provision should be made for removing his disqualification?

Our own economy has gone further than this. It has declared, not only that it is proper that a minister should be educated to a certain extent, but that he shall be required to pursue a certain course of study. The principle is recognized: and now the only question is as to the mode in which it shall be carried into practice. There are several methods by which this may be done. One is by prescribing a certain course of study upon which candidates are to be examined at the Annual Conference by committees appointed for that purpose. This plan we have tried, and I think by general consent it is allowed to be inadequate. Another plan is to provide the means of affording the required instruction at our Church Institutions. This is the suggestion made by Bishop Andrew upon which has sprung up quite a discussion. The question raised by Bishop Andrew is one of expediency merely. It cannot involve constitutional inquiry, because it simply suggests a different mode (and one which is disallowed neither by the letter nor the spirit of our fundamental economy) for the accomplishment of an end which has already been seen to be legitimate. The point, then, and the only point before us, is, whether the plan proposed by Bishop Andrew is not a better one for the mental improvement of Methodist preachers than that we are now using?

We have thus consumed as much space as we intended in an introduction to this question. Having, as we hope, cleared up the avenue to it of whatever difficulty may have invested it, we propose hereafter to offer some considerations—with your leave, Mr. Editor—in favor of the superiority of the Bishop's suggestion. A LAY MEMBER.

HOW EASY HE WRITES.—"With what ease he writes!" exclaimed a young lady, as she laid down one of Washington Irving's volumes. Straightway we made up our mind that the young lady did not know what she was talking about. If she had said, "How easy it is to read his works," we might have sympathized with her amazingly. Then, finding that we could not make a satisfactory reply, without compromising our honesty, we fell to making a comparison in silence. The steamboat glides majestically and gracefully through the waters, but it is no easy power that gives to the water-traveler her steady and rapid motion. It is true she is tastefully painted and gilded; her cabins are pleasant, and her prow is decorated with specimens of the sculptor's art. But descend with the engineer to his fiery domain; dweller there in the burning pit; see the heated grease, and listen to the hurtling steam; see the tremendous power of fire and water combined, until the strained and groaning boiler threatens to burst asunder and deluge the decks with the heated fluid. You will perceive that ease, although a mild and pleasing damsel, has a confounded rough old father. Little dreamed the admirer of Irving how much agonizing toil was required to beget that ease which she so much delighted in. Yet she was not alone in her error. How many a publisher thus estimates the labor of his weary author. How many a tradesman smiles at the trifling employments of the man of genius. We have been mad enough to eat a tripe supper, when we have heard a peasant draw an invidious comparison between himself and the poor wight whose intellect supplies him with bread. "I get my living by sweat of the brow," said he, "while you are trifling away your time with books and papers." Yes, see that pale and hungry being startle from his task by the sound of the midnight bell. See how his fingers grasp the bell convulsively, as he fears his task will not be accomplished in time—a slave to men whose pockets are better lined than their periraniums, and who mete out to him his traveling pittance with the unwilling hand of an upper servant dealing out cold pancakes and sausage ends to a beggar. See him placing his hands upon his snapping brain as the fires of his finey dart upon his withering soul. Yes—"how easy he writes!" [Kidd's Louden Journal.

EUROS.

Still the angel stars are shining,
Still the rippling waters flow,
But the angel-voice is silent
That I heard here long ago.
Hark! the echoes murmur low
Long ago!

Still the wood is dim and lonely,
Still the plashing fountains play,
But the past and all its beauty,
Whither has it fled away?
Hark! the mournful echoes say
Fled away!

Still the bird of night complaineth
(Now, indeed, her song is pain),
Victims of my happy hours,
Do I call, and call in vain?
Hark! the echoes cry again
All in vain!

Cease, oh echoes, mournful echoes!
Once I loved your voices well;
Now my heart is sick and weary;
Days of old, a long farewell!
Hark! the echoes sad and dreary
Cry Farewell, farewell!

HYMENEAL:

MARRIED—In Columbus, Miss., on the 10th day of October, by the Rev. Thos. W. Dorman, Rev. JOHN B. BALDWIN, formerly n member of the Alabama Conference, to Miss ANIE M. WHEELER, of Columbus, Miss.

OBITUARY:

DIED—On the 4th inst., of yellow fever, Judge J. P. SAFFOLD. Brother Saffold has been for many years a member of the Methodist E. Church, and a more consistent member or a purer man, I think, has not come within my knowledge. He was a standing verification of that scripture which says:—"Train up a child in the way he should go, and when he is old he will not depart from it." His mother declared to the writer that she believed that he had been a Christian from four years of age, and that he had never retired to bed without engaging in prayer since he was three. Brother Saffold, I am informed, graduated at the University of Georgia. He studied the profession of law I think, under his distinguished but now deceased father, Judge Saffold. He, in entering upon his legal career, settled in a community which enjoyed very few religious advantages. This, with many young lawyers, would have been a matter of indifference or of preference, but not so with him. He could not tolerate this sort of self-denial. He loved the Sabbath and the sacred temple of God, and he longed to enjoy the privileges of worshipping in that temple upon every such day. And for this purpose he went to the city of Montgomery. His long residence here had enabled him to form many acquaintances and to win many friends. Indeed, who had more friends than J. P. Saffold? Everybody seemed to feel an interest in him, and when it was known that he had been attacked with the prevailing fever all hearts appeared saddened and constant inquiries were made of those attending him touching his disease. How is he? one would ask, and if the reply was favorable the countenance of the inquirer would brighten up, and you would hear the remark, "I do hope he won't die, for he is a very good man. What a loss he would be to our community." When his disease grew worse and the intelligence went over the city that he was no longer a living man, great indeed was the gloom which succeeded. The very streets seemed to wear an aspect of loneliness, and men of business worked as if many of them had lost their aim.

Brother Saffold was taken on Sunday and died on Friday. He was taken in church while listening to a discourse on the prevailing epidemic. He was at church again the same day at 4 P. M., in attendance upon his class so true was he to the performance of his duty. On his return home he took his bed and was not removed from it until taken to his grave.

I was at his house every day of his confinement and near by him, and closed his eyes when he died. It was a pleasure to be around the dying bed of so pure a man. During one of my visits he looked me in the face and said, "I would like for you to pray with me, it will not excite me;" whereupon I read the 103d psalm, and knelt beside him and prayed. When done he responded aloud, Amen. No words can describe the sweet and hallowed influence that rested upon my soul amidst the calm that ensued. On an after occasion, believing him dangerous, I asked him, "My brother, do you feel that if you were to die that you would be saved?" He replied in substance, "If I were to die now I feel that I would be saved, not for any merit in myself but for the sake of Christ." He was understood to say at the same time that in looking back upon his past life he saw no act he could amend.

Is there another man that can say the same, and yet he did not pretend to claim salvation upon the ground of merit but alone through grace in Christ.

Our loss, as a church, has been great, and it is hard to realize it, yet his vacant seat in the prayer and class-meetings declares it to be true. Well, be it so, since God has decreed it. What He does is right, and good and best. He is gone but he has left behind him the savor of a good name, and an example worthy of imitation. May God raise up in this Church many like him. His devoted wife is deeply wounded under the blow, almost crushed. May she find help of the Lord—grace for this her day of calamity—let her little ones be remembered by the good when they commune with God.

MRS. PHEBE DUNNING.—The subject of this brief memoir was born in Brandon, Vermont, but for many years previous to her death resided in the South, and the most of that time in this State, where she was well and favorably known. She had been for more than forty years a consistent member of the Methodist E. Church, and was remarkable for her intelligence, good sense and uniform piety.

Sister Dunning was of feeble constitution, but whenever her health would admit of it, her place in the sanctuary was always occupied. For a few weeks previous to her death, during a protracted meeting in this charge, she regularly attended the daily morning prayer meeting, in which she greatly delighted and seemed to realize much spiritual profit. While the meeting was in progress she was taken sick—the third severe attack this year, and this proved too much for her frail and shattered frame. After suffering intensely for a week or more, on the morning of the 14th of October she passed away from the residence of her son-in-law, Mr. W. D. Chapman, of this city, to her Father's house above, in the 62d year of her age.

During her last illness I frequently visited her, and notwithstanding her extreme suffering, neither murmur or complaint escaped her. She confidently spoke of her readiness and willingness to depart and to be with Christ. The only solicitude she evinced was for those she left behind her, and long, I trust, will they remember her pious example and goodly admonitions, and at last be ready to meet her in heaven. "Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord; yea saith the Spirit, for they rest from their labors and their works do follow."

A LAMENT. By T. K. HERVEY.

She sleeps that still and pleasant sleep,
For which the weary pant in vain.
And, where the dews of evening weep,
I may not weep again—
O! power more upon her grave
Shall I behold the wild flowers wave!

They laid her where the sun and moon
Looked on her tomb with loving eye;
And I have heard the breeze of June
Sweep over it—like a sigh:
And the wild rivers wailing song
Drew dirge-like as it stole along.

And I have dreamt, in many dreams,
Of her, who was a dream to me;
And talked to her, by summer streams,
Of crowds, and on the sea.
Till in my soul she was enshrined,
A young Egeria of the mind.

This years ago!—and other eyes
Have flung their beauty o'er my youth;
And I have hung on other sighs
And sounds that seemed like truth;
And loved the music which they gave,
Like that which perished in the grave.

And I have left the cold and dead,
To mingle with the living cold:
There is a weight around my head,
My heart is gnawing old:
O! for a refuge and a home
With thee, dead Ellen, in thy tomb!

Age sits upon my bread and brain,
My spirit fades before its time,
But they are all thine own again,
Lost partner of their prime!
And thou art dearer to thy shroud
Than all the false and selfish crowd!

Rise, gentle vision of the hours
Which go, like birds that come not back!
And fling the pale and funeral flowers
On Memory's wasted track!
O! for the wings that make thee blest,
To flee, away, and be at rest.

AUTUMN—A DIRGE. By SHELLEY.

The warm sun is falling, the bleak wind is wailing,
The bare boughs are sighing, the pale flowers are dying.
And the year
On the earth, her death-bed, in a shroud of leaves dead,
Is lying.
Come months, come away,
From November to May,
In your saddest array;
Follow the bier
Of the dead, cold year,
And like dim shadows watch by her sepulchre.

The chill rain is falling, the nipt worm is crawling,
The rivers are swelling, the thunder is knelling
For the year;
The blythe swallows are flown, and the lizards each gone
To his dwelling;
Come months, come away;
Put on white, black and grey,
Let your light sisters play—
Ye follow the bier
Of the dead cold year,
And make her grave green with tear on tear.

Gallantry of the Arabian Horses.

That horses should be susceptible to the charms of the gentle sex, is no more than might have been expected from their noble hearing and intelligence. Read the following extract from a lady's letter written in the East:

I fear you may deem me rather boastful of my horsemanship when I tell you the two Arab horses which threw their cavaliers did not throw me. The cause of the exception was not, however, in me or my skill. It was in the very remarkable predilection those intelligent animals feel towards individuals of the weaker sex. Let the wildest, the fiercest Arabian be mounted by a woman, and you will see him grow suddenly as mild and obedient as a lamb. I had plenty of opportunities to make the experiment, and on my own stable there is a beautiful gray Arab which nobody dares to ride, though he is my daily bearer. He knows me, my wishes, the degree of fatigue I can bear, without inconvenience, and behaves in consequences.

It is really curious to see him manage to quicken his pace without shaking me, and the different sort of steps he has invented to realize these contradictory purposes. Horses are as liable to forgetfulness as any other organized being; and my incomparable gray, sometimes, when other horses threaten to pass him, or are once in advance, forgets every consideration, and starts off, more like a whirlwind than any thing else. Woe to me, if, under such circumstances, I were to confide in the strength of arm or of the bridle. But I know better. Leaving my hand quite loose, and abandoning all thoughts of compulsion, I take to persuasion—pat him on the neck—call him by his own name—beg him to be quiet, and to deserve the piece of sugar waiting for him at home. Never have these means failed. Instantly will he slacken his pace, prick up his ears, and come back to a sort of amble, while with a gentle neigh he seems to crave my pardon for his momentary offence. Such instances of the tender penchant of Arab horses for the weaker part of creation, are quite common, and are generally explained—not a poetical explanation after all—by the circumstance that the Arab women are the natural and only grooms of their lords' stables.

When the horse is still a colt, he is reared in the back part of the tent, the moveable harem of the Arab. In the third year of his life, he is raised to the honor of carrying his master, and when he brings him home he is instantly delivered to the women's hands, who wash his eyes, walk him up and down till the foam is fallen from his mouth and the perspiration from his limbs. It is the master's wife that disencumbers him of the heavy saddle, the complicated and adorned bridle, the embroidered and gilded covering. She fastens a cord to his foot and takes him first to drink, and then to feed himself with the best bit of grass to be found in the barren country.

This puts me in mind of a story which was related to me by a Bedouin of Galilee, very fond and very proud, not only of his own horses, but of the whole Arabian breed. A young chief had a precious mare and plenty of cavalries. Once he went to a place three days distant from his own residence to fetch some money that was due to him. His enemies were apprised of his purpose, and determined to take him or at least kill him. Knowing, however, the swiftness of his mare, they divided themselves in groups of ten persons, and took their stations at three hours' distance from each other. The first group was to pursue him during three hours, and when he thought himself safe, then the second group often would start and begin a fresh race; and so on till his mare would fall from exhaustion. All was done as they had designed, but the mare never gave way; the three days' distance was traveled in a day, and more than forty-eight hours before he was expected, his old blind father, who sat smoking at the entrance of his tent, recognized the well known tramp of his son's mare.

"There is my son coming back," said the old man, and he had scarcely said the words ere his son dismounted, and, throwing the reins to his wife, laid his bag of gold dust at his father's feet. But the old man thought more of the mare than of his son himself. "Why did you ever fatigue the mare?" exclaimed he, in a reproachful voice; "bring her to me." It was done; the old man patted her head and said, quite angrily, "There is blood all over her mouth." And true it was. The son explained, that nearly driven to despair by the obstinate chase of his enemies, he had hurried the mare, or rather he had allowed her to hurry herself, so that her fore foot came in contact with her mouth, and scratched it till it was all bleeding. That night the traveling chief lay down upon his cloak in a corner of his tent, to rest himself as well as he could, but women, young men, slaves, and even Effendis crowded around the mare, giving her strengthening beverages and caulking her limbs with softening liniment; nor was quiet restored to the tribe till the mare had eaten again, and shown herself in full possession of her limbs.

In consequence of the election of the Maine Law ticket in Baltimore, nearly all the taverns in that city were closed on the 6th the proprietors anticipating a rigid enforcement of the sunday law.

MESSAGE OF THE GOVERNOR OF GEORGIA.—The Message of Governor Cobb, of Georgia, delivered at Milledgeville on the 8th, occupies six columns of the Recorder. It is a lengthy, and withal a creditable production. A number of important subjects are alluded to in it. He states the present debt of Georgia to be $2,635,472 22, and that the amount of funds remaining in the State Treasury is $74,857 35. He recommends that the remaining assets of the Central Bank be sold for whatever they will bring. To retain them and attempt their collection would, in his opinion, involve the State in continued expense and litigation without any revenue accruing from it.

Among other subjects upon which he speaks, he recommends to the General Assembly a return to annual sessions, believing that public opinion will readily sanction such a change.

He recommends the extension of the low giving judicial elections to the people, to the remaining cases of State officers elected by the Legislature.

In regard to the Lemmon slave case, he recommends if the matter is taken before the Supreme Court, that the Executive be authorised to employ able counsel in behalf of the State of Georgia. He concludes by saying that the Federal relations of the State present a flattering prospect; that the sectional strifes which for a time threatened the peace and quiet of the country, are terminated, and that all the indications of the present denote a continuation of the present calm repose in a prosperous and happy future.

THE GREAT CINCINNATI TUNNEL.—This work is now in rapid progress, and it is thought will be completed early in 1855. The total length of the tunnel is 10.01 feet, of which 964 have been completed. The width of the Cincinnati Tunnel will be 25 feet, and height 16 feet. There are three shafts leading down to it, the first of which is 119 feet, the second 194 and the third 147. These shafts are all finished. The next largest tunnel in the United States, which is on the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad, and is 4,180 feet long.

CHLOROFORMING BEES.—A statement has recently been very extensively circulated that chloroform had been found by a Mr. Smith, of Edlubury, to be a most admirable means of putting bees to sleep for a short time, during which as much honey could be removed as was desired. A writer in the Boston Cultivator has tried chloroform according to Mr. Smith's plan, and found not only that the bees were soon put to sleep, but they have been soundly sleeping ever since.

ADVANCE IN SCHOOL TEACHERS SALARIES.—The salaries of select teachers have been materially increased in Boston. The salaries of masters in the Latin and High Schools will remain as at present, $2400. Masters of the Grammar Schools are to receive $1800 per annum, instead of $1500, as at present. The salaries of Sub-Masters of Grammar Schools will be increased from $1100 to $1200—or $1.00 for the first year's service, $1100 for the second, $1200 for the third and thereafter. Ushers of the Latin and High Schools will receive $1500, instead of $1200. The salary of Ushers in the Grammar Schools will be increased from $800 to $900. Head Assistants in Grammar Schools (females) will receive $450 per annum, instead of $400, and the present pay of $350 to Female Assistants will be changed to $400. The salary of the Master of Normal School is fixed at $2100 per annum.

A VILE THIEFT.—The counting-room of the Nashville True Whig was broken open on the 8th, and the money in the desks taken off. We presume the thieves didn't make much of a haul, as there is not usually much of the dust about a printing office.

TENNESSEE COTTON CROP.—The Nashville Whig of the 8th instant says: It is now quite certain that the cotton crop has sustained serious injury from the late frosts. We know from reliable information that such is the case in this State. Our accounts from Middle and West Tennessee, all agree that in the fresh and in the rich bottom lands the top crop of bolls have been so bitten as effectually to prevent their maturing. They have in fact, to a very great extent, become addeu, and are rotting on the stalk. The same is true in regard to the plant in Georgia and South Carolina, and we may add, in Mississippi, as far as we have heard.

THE SUGAR CROP.—From all the information we have received on this subject, we are constrained to believe that the crop of this parish will fall far short of the general expectation a month or two since. Some few will make an average amount of sugar, probably; but generally speaking, the cane is small, hard and dry, and the yield is consequently poor, and particularly unproductive of molasses. One gentleman, a planter of much experience, told us the other day that he had made a bet that the sugar crop of this parish would not amount to within 5000 hogsheads of that of last year, notwithstanding the larger quantity of cane planted this year, and that he was willing to double the bet, so certain was he to win. The average yield so far we understand to be about 1200 lbs. to the acre; but we hope to speak more favorably in a short time, as our planters generally work up the poorest cane first.—[Planters' (Franklin, La.,) Banner.

MASSACHUSETTS ACCIDENT.—Quite an accident occurred on the Bulletin yesterday just as she was about leaving, by which an Irishman, by the name of Morris C. Kelley was instantly killed. On board the forecastle deck some heavy timbers, for a cotton press, were tiered up immediately in front of the cotton. The timbers coming on along side was blown by the wind so hard upon the Bulletin as to push the cotton forward, which pushed the timbers over falling among the crew and a large party of deck passengers, among whom was the deceased. It was the greatest miracle that fifteen or twenty were not killed but, fortunately for the living, Kelley was the only one killed, and on other person was seriously hurt. The deceased is from Cincinnati, and in company with friends, was going below here to work on a levee. His remains were taken care of by his friends and will be fotorred here to-day.—[Memphis Whig, 10th.

From Brazos Santiago.

The steamer Fashion, Capt. Baker, arrived Tuesday morning from Brazos Santiago, which place she left on the 11th.

The Fashion reports that the schooner Tallahassee, while at anchor off the Rio Grande, in a norther, lost her deck load. She was still outside when the Fashion left, there not being water enough on the bar to permit her to go in.

The Fashion brings the mail by which we have received the Brownsville Flag of the 5th, from which we extract the following:

It becomes our painful duty to announce the death of another victim to that fatal malady which has so long prevailed in this region of the Union. Those of our citizens who, but a short time ago, were present at the funeral ceremonies of an officer of the garrison, could have but little dreamed that within so brief a period they should again be assembled to witness the interment of another.

Col. Webster, of the 4th Regiment of Artillery, late commanding officer of Fort Brown, died yesterday morning, of yellow fever, at about half-past 8 o'clock.

Thus have the country and society lost one of their brightest ornaments—a man of the most sterling excellence of character, exemplary not only as an officer, but in every relation of life.

The deceased, a native of Vermont, entered the army from the Military Academy in the year 1823, and from that time he served his country with fidelity, zeal and integrity, and often with distinction, until the day of his death.

During the operations of General Taylor in the northern part of Mexico, at Monterey and Saltillo his services as an officer of artillery were marked with intelligence, ability and effect. He leaves an afflicted family, to whom we would extend our warmest sympathies.

The Flag notices the death, by yellow fever, of Dr. Nathaniel T. Sutherland, a member of the Texas House of Representatives, who was on his way to Austin at the time of his death.

The news in the Rio Grand region is of little importance.

Mexico.

By the arrival of the steamship Texas, from Vera Cruz, we have received files of late papers from Mexico. Those from Vera Cruz are to the 5th inst., while those from the City of Mexico are the Siglio from the 13th of October to the 6th of November; and the Orden from the 6th of October to the 5th of November. We proceed to give an analysis of their intelligence and such translations from such articles as seem to merit it. The Echo (Vera Cruz) of the 5th congratulates the country on the administrative benefits which quiet at home and peace abroad are enabling the government to confer upon it. Of these it mentions three just bestowed as instances: The establishment of a Port and Commandery at Carmen, the construction of a Mole at Acapulco, and the exemption from tonnage duties to vessels coming into the Mexican ports.

The same of the 6th, speaks with like pleasure of the "noble efforts" which the actual Chief of the Nation is making to lift it up again from the state of decay, to which a series of fatalities have reduced it, and quotes the following words from the Government Journal: "One of his (the President's) principal views has been that of re-establishing the army in all its splendor and force. For it is the armed force which forms the most solid guaranty of the State, and upholds it with a firm support, in order that it may advance in all the branches of civilization, under the auspices of peace and the public repose."

The same of the 8th mentions the various city improvements in Vera Cruz; refers to the various measures which have been proposed as remedy of the famine which seems to prevail in Durango and other departments of the interior; and speaks of the opening of a new highway from Victoria to San Luis Potosi.

The Orden of the 16th October contains a long Government ordinance regulating the municipal administration of the city of Mexico. It mentions the new tax of one real on each mule load of provisions or fruits brought into the capital; the product of the tax to be applied to the support of the Normal School of Agriculture—to the establishment of special schools of the useful arts and of trades the support of the theatres and the foundation and endowment of a Conservatory of Music and of Declamation.

It mentions the report in circulation that the Spanish Envoy, the Marquis Roverl, is about to withdraw in displeasure from his position near the Government; but says that according to the best information accessible he has not demanded his passports and does not intend to withdraw from the Republic, but has suspended his official relations with that Government until he shall have received instructions from his own.

The same of the 17th publishes an address of gratitude to the President for having re-established the order of Jesuits in conformity with the rules of its holy founder and the Bulls of the Romish Church.

The same paper of the 18th renews its exultations over the advancing condition of the country, due it says to the wise means adopted by the President for conducting it to the point at which shall be developed the elements of prosperity which it abundantly possesses. The Government has acquired the prestige and the respectability which were so much needed but been so unfortunately lost. A system inapplicable to the country, and which had governed it for many years held it palsied and ready to disappear from the catalogue of independent nations. A continual suffering, the effect of continual revolutions, and of the impolicy of the successive rulers had come at last to produce a general disgust and discouragement, sure presages of our approaching ruin." It then proceeds to enumerate the measures of order and amelioration which the Government has set on foot and is pursuing.

The Orden of the 20th copies or follows from a letter from Guaymas, of the 12th of September: "It seems that there is foundation for the news of an invasion by American adventurers on the Rio Colorado. There is the greatest enthusiasm to repel it; but the want of money is extraordinary. To secure the integrity of our territory it would be well that the Supreme Government should assign the authorities the imposts on tobacco and those of the custom-house."

The same paper of the 25th comments on the arrival at Acapulco, of our frigate St Lawrence. It was reported that she had threatened to bombard the place, in order to enforce redress in the case of the bark J. B. Allen.

ONE WEEK LATER FROM TEXAS

We have Indianola dates to the 8th and Galveston to the 11th inst. We copy from the Galveston News of the 11th, the following items:

The bark Franklin arrived from Hamburg on Sunday last with 143 emigrants. She is discharging outside.

Trade in town has assumed a more lively appearance. Several country merchants have been in and sales from store have been more extensive than for some time. Under the report that the rise in the Trinity had begun to set again the steamers, which are in readiness, have not yet commenced loading.

Of movement of the steamers on the Brazos river no advices have come in. On upper Brazos and Colorado, several flat boats were preparing to avail themselves of an early rise of the river for transporting lots of cotton—two months for hauling by wagon having been lost in consequence of the epidemic and winter being near, when ox teams cannot move for want of grass, the transportation by river will necessarily be much larger during the season before us than in previous years, and unless rivers should rise early and keep in a favorable order, there must be a great delay in getting crops to market; this probability should be considered by those who place their cotton on the river landings, and are not yet prepared for sufficient protection of it from weather in case of delay.

After a succession of warm days, a dry Norther set in on the 9th inst.; the change of temperature seems not to have had any effect on the health of the city and we can invite business men to come here now without danger of contracting sickness.

Cotton picking is progressing, but we learn from many planters in different sections as that the yield does not come up to their expectations. Reports on the advancing sugar crop are favorable and several samples of new sugar promise a very handsome quality, so that importations from Louisiana for requirements of the home consumption will hardly be necessary.

The Texan says the four companies of the 8th Infantry that had been ordered to El Paso have now been ordered to New Mexico to join them. Garland's command. Two companies of Artillery and one of Mounted Riflemen will proceed to El Paso, in place of the 8th Infantry battalion.

The Brazos river is reported to be navigable as far as Richmond. The steamer Major Harris, and one or two schooners had gone up at last advices for freight.

The planters are fast hauling in their cotton to the landings.

A gentleman from the Sabine Pass informs us that the Sabine and Neches rivers are now in navigable condition, and that there is but one boat at present there. A very considerable increase in the shipments of cotton, will take place this year over any previous year, from that port. Some other boats are expected for that trade.

The Houston Telegraph of the 4th inst., gives the following account of the continued sickness in Richmond:

Mr. S. Allen, who visited Richmond on Saturday last, informs us that the yellow fever is still raging in that town with unabated malignity. About twenty-six persons had died of this disease, and several were still sick, and in a critical situation. Only forty or fifty persons remained in the town.

The News publishes a list of those who have died from the epidemic since the 21st of August last at which time the first case of fever occurred. Since that time to October 31 there had been four hundred and fifty-five.

We take the following items from the Huntsville Item of the 5th instant:

The weather has grown cold in the last two or three days, just the same as old Winter himself. In Cincinnati we hear of no new cases of yellow fever, though several more deaths have occurred. That town has lost some of its best citizens, and some time will be required before it recovers from the shock.

Cotton has begun to arrive on the banks of the Trinity. Capt. Wynes warehouse is filling up with it. The stream has fallen some, though it is now at a stand, and probably boatable. We hear that Dr. Smith of Cincinnati is sick; it is feared that he has caught yellow fever. Inasmuch as he was with the sick during the whole of its ravages in our neighboring town. We trust the Doctor may escape it, and be speedily restored to health.

From the Indianola Bulletin of the 9th, we copy the following items:

Eight companies of the 5th Infantry, says the Ledger, left San Antonio for Eagle Pass, on the 31st of October.

A GOOD SIGN.—The schooner Emma Norton, Webster, a few days since, took from Indianola for Mobile, 21 very fine Texas mules and 10 horses. This business will, ere long, become established, and will no doubt pay well. Small lots of animals have occasionally been taken to Mobile and Pensacola for several years with success. Vessels engaged in the lumber trade have had no return cargo heretofore; but should the shipment of mules and horses do well, the difficulty will be avoided, by which freights on lumber will be reduced, and an additional market opened for our surplus animals.

TELEGRAPHIC.

ARRIVAL OF THE BALTIC.

NEW YORK, Monday, Nov 14 1853

The Collins steamer Baltic has arrived here bringing dates from Liverpool of the 2d inst. four days later than the accounts brought by the Arabia. Her advices report a heavy cotton market at 1/8 speed the demand being good and prices more in favor of buyers though without quotable change. The sales of the week are 32,000 bales of which 3000 were for speculation and 2000 for export. Flour was in moderate request, and the lower descriptions had slightly declined. Western Canal, however, closed at 35s 6d and Ohio at 39s @ 40s. If these figures are given correctly they indicate an advance over the quotations reported by the Arabia. Corn was steady. Yellow was quoted at 41s, and White, which was scarce, was held at 43s per quarter.

GENERAL NEWS.

THE EASTERN QUESTION.—The intelligence from the East is of an unsettled character, and affairs are much mystified. It is reported that an armistice had been agreed upon between the contending powers, and yet the latest accounts show that the Turks have commenced hostile movements.

A dispatch from Constantinople states that on the 27th of October the Turkish cavalry and infantry crossed the Danube and took possession of Kalafata, and more were still passing. The Russians were gathering their forces around Kalafata, and it was expected a collision would take place the next day.

Another dispatch states that on the 28th October twenty thousand Turks crossed the Danube, near the town of Wildon, and occupied Kalafata without opposition; the Russians having retired upon their advance.

NEW PRECAUTIONS.—The London Times has a dispatch from Constantinople dated October 22, which states that the Austrian Envoy at Constantinople had submitted to the Sultan the draft of a note from the four powers, the said note having been previously accepted by the Emperor of Russia. The Times still thinks that negotiations may prevent a general war.

FURTHER BY THE AMERICA.

NEW YORK, November 12.

The America's advices state that Persia had disbanded her army on the Turkish frontier.

At Constantinople the Grand Vizier had published a proclamation calling upon the inhabitants of that city to preserve order, to protect the Christians, and to pray for the success of the Turkish army.

The Turkish Minister, at the Court of France, had resigned, and his successor had been appointed.

The French expedition, preparing for Constantinople, was on a large scale. Orders for its march would not be given unless circumstances should render such a measure necessary.

The report of the abdication of the Emperor of Russia was generally doubted.

THE EASTERN QUESTION.

NEW YORK, Nov. 14.—The papers by the Baltic contain various reports of the armistice said to have been agreed upon between Russia and Turkey. A dispatch from Vienna states that the armistice was for an indefinite period, and on the credit of this, the French and English funds advanced materially. Another dispatch says that the armistice was declared in order to give time for the new proposition of the four powers to reach Constantinople. This further strengthened the funds. Another account stated that the ornistice was conditional—to have effect only in case Omar Pasha had not already commenced hostilities, and to extend to the 1st of November. This report depressed the stock markets.

RIOTS IN ENGLAND.—Terrible riots had taken place at Wigham, in Lancashire, by the operatives and colliers. Much property was destroyed, and the military was called out.

GREAT STORM—MAILS RETAINED.

BOSTON, November 14.

A great storm prevailed here yesterday, spreading over a large portion of Massachusetts and Connecticut. The railroad tracks are washed away in several places, and the mails are detained in consequence.

MR. ATHERTON.

BOSTON, November 14.

A dispatch from Manchester, N. H., states that there is no hope of Mr. Atherton's recovery.

LATER FROM CHINA.

FLIGHT OF THE EMPEROR.

NEW YORK, November 15.

The Baltic brings later accounts from China. Letters from Canton state that the Emperor had fled to Tartary. At the last accounts the rebels were on their way to Pekin and were within six days' march of that capital.

DEPARTURE OF KOSZTA.

NEW YORK, November 15.

The Baltic brings the intelligence that MARTIN KOSZTA left Smyrna on the 15th of October in a vessel bound for Boston.

NEW YORK COTTON MARKET.

NEW YORK, November 15.

There has been an active inquiry to-day in the cotton market here, and the sales embrace 2800 bales at steady prices.

DEATH OF A CONSUL.

NEW YORK, November 15.

Felix Lacoste, French Consul at this port, died here yesterday.

DEATH OF SENATOR ATHERTON.

BOSTON, November 15.

A dispatch from Manchester to-day announces the death of Senator Atherton.

MASSACHUSETTS ELECTION.

BOSTON, November 15.

The election in this State took place yesterday. Sufficient returns have been received to show that there is no choice for Governor by the people. The whigs have carried the Legislature. The new Constitution was rejected by a large majority.

ALABAMA LEGISLATURE.

MONTGOMERY, Ala., November 14.

The Legislature met here to-day and organized. Wm. B. Martin was elected President of the Senate and —— Phelan, principal Clerk. In the house of Representatives William Garrett was elected Speaker and M. Graham Clerk—all democrats.

THE CHINESE REBELLION.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 16.—The information of the flight of the Emperor of China was received by a letter from Dr. Parker, of the American Legation at Canton. The letter states that the Emperor left the Empire in charge of one of his brothers. The insurgents were within six days' march of Canton. [A former dispatch stated "within six days' march of Pekin."—EDS.]

SUICIDAL AFFRAY.—Three Persons Killed.—One of the most distressing fights it has ever been our duty to record, occurred on board the steamer Dresden last Friday, at or near Helena, Arkansas. Our information in regard to this affray is to this effect: An American lady and her children, had taken deck passage on the Dresden, on their way South. The lady was not accompanied by a male protector. Before the boat arrived at Helena, some Irishmen on the deck had interfered with and abused the lady to such a degree that she found it necessary to complain to the officers of the boat. They declined to protect her, and sent her back to the cabin. Here the Irishmen again insulted the lady, and finally whipped her children. She again appealed to the officers of the boat for protection, telling them that, although her necessities had compelled her to take deck passage, yet she was a respectable woman. But the officers again refused to interfere in her behalf, upon hearing which a noble-souled Kentuckian (whom God preserve) volunteered to protect her, and accompanied her to the second cabin. When they arrived at the door, he was accosted by an Irishman, who was standing there with an iron poker in his hand, upraised, and questioned as to his intention to aid the woman. The Kentuckian immediately shot the Irishman, when the gang rushed upon him. He killed three of them and wounded a fourth, the ball glancing from his rib and killing a woman in an adjoining berth. The Kentuckian was cut very badly with knives, and we regret to hear his life was despaired of.

We were on board of the Dresden when she landed at this port. There was a large number of passengers on the boat. It is astonishing that none of them interfered to save the life of a fellow-man assaulted by a mob.—[Memphis Eagle and Enquirer 8th inst.

DEFICIENCY IN THE RICE CROP.—By a letter from a correspondent at Smyrna, dated September 27, we learn that there is a great deficiency in the crop of figs this year. He says: "Accounts from the interior state that the falling off will be fully one-half, and many believe it will be still greater, as compared with last year. In consequence of these advices figs have advanced from 40 to 50 per cent in the bazaars since the first arrivals of camels from the interior, and the price now ranges fully 100 per cent higher than the best Erbeli figs, and more than 150 per cent. higher for the middling qualities, than the market price last year.

A merchant here, usually a large shipper to America, told us a few days since that he was fully convinced the amount of figs shipped to America this year would not be over 300,000 drums at the most against nearly 700,000 last year.—[Boston Traus.

RISE IN LIVE STOCK.—For three years past the advance in the price of horses, mules and cattle in the western States and Texas, has been steady and is still tending upward. This has been occasioned by the settlement of California and Oregon, the great number consumed during the Mexican war, the increased demand by the army in its extended frontier duties, and by the general abundance of money in the country

The New Orleans Christian Advocate.

A Beautiful Trait of an Actor.

A most popular actor (his name will be known by-and by), who had just played a series of characters with great effect, had remarked every evening in front of the curtain a young person of extreme beauty, who had watched his playing with an attention to which it was difficult to believe the motive a single one. Our actor knew well that he had inspired a profound passion, and he did not hesitate to respond to it with a full heart, although completely ignorant who the young and charming lady was that night after night cast on him her burning looks.

In the mean time, a wealthy personage wished our actor to put himself to the trouble of calling at his residence.

"Monsieur," said the banker, "I have an immense service to ask you. It is to name the sum that will induce you to leave the city for a few years."

To this strange proposition the artist replied, with a loud laugh—

"What do you think, Monsieur? I am now at the climax of my reputation and my glory, which are my fortune. I would not leave for a million f"

"Well, I offer it to you! Leave, and I will instantly count you out a million; that will materialize the fumes of glory."

"But, Monsieur, can I know the powerful motives that induce you to make me such an offer?"

"Yes, I will tell you. My daughter, my only daughter, I wish to marry to her cousin, a young man destined for the highest office in the kingdom. My daughter is foolishly enamoured of you. I cannot give her to you. It is necessary, therefore, that you leave."

"Monsieur!" replied the actor, after he had surmounted the first promptings of his pride, "if that be all, make your mind easy. I will not leave—you will not spend a million; and your daughter shall marry her cousin."

"What do you mean?"

"Detain me for dinner to-day, and place me near her."

At first the banker dared not to trust him; but the actor insisted and the other yielded. There were many of the wealthy to partake of the dinner—among others, several bankers and their wives. The guests had already arrived, and the young lady of the house appeared at the same time.

But what was the surprise, the chagrin, and regret of the actor, in recognizing in this young lady the very one of whom he had been so passionately enamoured in front of the scenery of his theatre!

She, stupefied at seeing him at her father's, stammered out a few words, and accepted his arm to go to the table, for the actor was determined, let the consequences be what they might, to keep the promise which he had made to the father of his love.

And he did keep it, in truth; and so well, that the young lady, on seeing what kind of a coarse, abject person of a clown she had given her heart to, felt as if it would break. In fact, the actor had caused a thousand inconveninnces, and concluded by insulting the guests so grossly that most of them were anxious to leave. In a word, the scenn became so stirring that as soon as dinner was over, thn young lady herself, indignant and outraged, had thn servants called and the actor pushed outsidn the door.

Bnt her cousin—her affianced—arrived in the evening. He recognized thn celebrated actor. The latter related to him how he had just brokeu his own ties, annihilated himself by an odious role, in an incredible comedy of the bon ton—hs told him the whole affair! The young lady discovered that she had been duped by an admirable ruse; that the man she had loved, and who loved her, had been immolated to the exigencies of her father. She saw her cousin no more with pleasure. She detested him from that time forth, and when pressed to determine on being married to him, she would give way to her feelings in reproaches and despair.

The whole of the next day was passed in despair by the banker, and in uneasines and jealousy by the cousin. They finally concluded that the young lady had gone to join her lover, and they hastened to take her from him. A fact soon proved to them that their suepicione were well founded; thnn the justices were applied to, in order to have thn ravisher arrested.

But the artist had not accepted the sacrifice of the young lady. He avowed his courageous subterfuge of thn previous evening, and that he loved his admirer to distraction; bnt he did not wish that she should be lost—dishonered. He catechized her, persuaded her, and brought her back to her father at thn very moment that thn latter was in search of him. The father understood the legal better than the passionate expression of thle unexpected denouement, and gradually touched, moved, conquered, it struck him he could dn nnthing better than to give the actor his daughter; he being the most honourable and honest man he had ever met.

"Well, who is the hero of this tale?" it will probably be asked; "Ilresnnte, Brindeau, Latentains, nr some olegant lovnr of the Gymnasinm, of thn Comedie Français?"

No! It happened to be the actor Garrick, who was so much esteemed, that at his death his funeral-pall was borno by the Duke of Devonshirn, Lord Camden, Earl Spencer, and Viscount Palmerston, followed by fifty mourning carriages, containing the most of the English nohility. But M. Mallville, who has made a comedy out of this anecdote, has attributed it to Geo. Sullivan, and it is under the title of Sullivan that the piece obtained on thn 11th November, at the Theatre Française, snch brilliant success.

The Danger of Musical Titles; or "One Kiss at Parting."

A lady of fashion, (the well-known Marchioness of Finshnry) had been loitering for nearly an hour in a fashionable music-shop. She had purchased a copy of nearly every piece of music that had a sentimental title. She had sent into her carriage a whole canterbury full of "love," going through every mood of the feeling, past, present, and future, and was following their example, when she paused upon the step, as if meditating whether she should take it, or some other step that was evidently turning itself over in her mind. The shopman, who had been somewhat moved by the tender tonn of voice in which she had asked him, "Wilt thou love me then as now?" watched her with an anxiety that betrayed itself too plainly in the adjustment of his shirt collar, and the arrangement of his hair. Suddenly the Marchioness seemed resolved. With one bound she cleared the pavement, breathless, paln, auburn ringlets fluttering in thn wind, and stood once more before the admiring shopman:

"I had nearly forgotten," said she, in a voice that seemed to veil her blushing words, "Dnar, dear! I cannot tell where my head is to day. I have comn back to ask you if by chance—" here she paused, as if to takn new courage, whilst the trembling shopman poised his two thumbs elegantly on the mahogony counter, and lent his body inquiringly forward, "to ask you to be kind enough to give me one kiss before parting."

"Ma-a-d-a-m?" exclaimed the astonished shopman.

"I want you," repeated the Marchioness, "to let me havn one kiss before parting—one will do if you please."

She raised her beautiful eyes full upon his, and met them boldly, unhlushingly. She, then, without betraying any emotion, repeated her question, adding as calmy as possible, "if you can not give it to me now, I will call some other time."

He could doubt no longer! Springing over the counter, he seized hold of the Marchioness' fair form and then and there gave the kiss she so earnestly begged for, previone to depurture. To his great astouishment, the only return the Marchioness made was to give him a trempendous box on the ears. This was followed by a volley of blows dealt by her parasol over his head, which wern accompanied with an equal number of shrieks that never terminated till the Police came into thn shop. The affair was carried to Bow street, but was soon dismissed, upon its being explained that "One Kiss Before Parting," was the title of a song, which the unsophisticated shopman, himsfully green from his native fields, had nevnr heard of before.

It was a favorite joke with the old Duke to ask the Marchioness, whenever she was at the Piano, if shn would mind giving him just "One Kiss Before Parting!"

CUMBRIDGE ON KEMBLE.—I always had a great liking—I may say, a sort of nondescript reverence—for John Kemble. What a quaint creature he was! I remember a party in which he was discoursing in his measured manner, when the servant announced his carriage. He model and went on. The announcement took place twice afterward, Kemble each time nodding his head a little more impatiently, but still going on. At last, and for the fourth time the servant entered, and said, "Mrs Kemble says, sir, she has the rheumatics, and cannot stay." "Add item," dropped John in a parenthesis, and proceeded quietly in his harangue. Kemble would correct anybody, at any time, and in any place. Dear Charles Matthews—a true genius in his line, in my judgment—told me he was once performing privately before the king. The king was much pleased with the imitation of Kemble, and said, "I liked Kemble very much. He was one of my earliest friends. I remember once he was talking, and found himself out of snuff. I offered him my box. He declined taking any—'he, a poor actor, could not put his fingers into a royal box.' I said, 'take some pray; you will oldege me.' Upon which Kemble replied, 'It would become your royal month better to say, oblige me;' and took a pinch.

Exploded Humbugs of other Days.

No monarch ever lived in so great a state of mistrust as Louis, yet none had more favorites, who for a time had great influence with him. He had a very summary way of getting rid of them, if once suspected, and he seldom allowed himself to doubt twice. The provost Tristan was charged with the settlement of all questions, either by drowning or decapitation. Sometimee these executions were carried on so secretly that it was frequently nncertain whether persone denounced were still in prison or had been put to death. At one time mysterous whispers circulated through France, each man demanding of the other the fate of the once powerful favorite, Antoine du Lau, created Lord of Chatennenf. He had suddenly fallen under the suspicion of the King, and was seen no more. For some time it was thought that the silent, secret, and terrible Tristan had caused him to be sewn up in a sack, a common practice, and thrown into the river; but at last it was known, by his escape, that he had been for some time in the castle of Usson, one of those dreary edifices which crown many an elevated spot in that land of extinct volcanos, Auvergne.

Louis, who had discovered that Du Lau had been in communication with the princes at the time of Le Bien Publique, was extremely fearful that he might evade his justice, and sent the model of an iron cage, in which he desired that the prisoner should be confined, to the Betard de Bourbon, Admiral of France, who was then the Governor of Usson. The Admiral, however, indignantly refused to attend to thie order, exclaiming, "That if the king intended to treat his prisoners in thie manner, he had better be the gaoler himself, and make mince-meat of them at his pleasure." Du Lau, finding the great peril in which he stood, bribed every one by whom he was surrounded, and gained many to his interest. The lady of Arcinges, wife of the captain of the castle, was chiefly his friend, and through her means he contrived to escape. As soon as Louis was aware of thie, he was terribly enraged, and sent Tristan instantly with ths torture and cord to punish all who had been concerned in his flight. Several sacrifices were accordingly made, and his master was for the time satisfied. The next suspected favorite was the Sirs de Melun, who had been even more powerful than Du Lau. He made him at one time lieutenant-general of thn kingdom, and it wae thought that to him Parie was indebted for preservation in the war for the Public Good; but he fell into disgrace for the same oaneo as Du Lau, being suepected of holding intelligence with the Count de Charlerois and the other princee. The hatred of his former protege, Cardinal Balus, and the resentment of the Count de Dammartin, whom he had injured, were the ultimate canse of his ruin and death, which took plaeo at Andeley, when he was given over to the eere of Tristan.

So promptly wne Louis accustomed to be served when his deeired to have exscution done on any person that offended him, that it is related of him thnt, dining one day in public, he obeerved, among those who were looking on, a certain captaiu of Picardy, uguiuet whom he entertained serious suspicione. He accordingly made a sign to his familiar, the provost of Tristan, who well understood what was expressed hy it; but it happened that a good honest monk, innocent of auy ill, wae etanding cloee to the captain at the time, and Tristan imagined that the gluuee of Louis had fallen on him. No sooner, therefors, had the monk descended into ths court than he was seized, put into a sack, and threwn into ths rivor. The captain, seeing the tumult, was instantly awars that it wee a mistako, of which he thought it best to profit without loss of timo: and, mounting his horse, he rodo off with all speed, taking the road to Flanders. Hn was seen on the route; and on Louis being informed, he exclaimed to Tristan, "Why did you neglect yesterday to do that for which I made you a eign about the mnn?" "Ah, siro," said the Provost, "he is far enough off by this timo." "Yes," eaid Louis, "for he has been seen near Amiens." "Near Rnuen, you mean, having drank his fill of the river," replied. Tristan. "Who are you talking of?" answered his master, eurprised. "Why, that monk you pointed out to me," eaid the Provost. "I had him thrown into the river without a moment's delay." "Paquo Dieu!" cried Louis, laughing, "he was the best monk in my dominions. What have you done? We must take care to-morrow that half a dozon masses are said for him. It was that Picard Captain that I meunt. [Miss Pardoe.

QUEER PROCESS.—It is curious to see the circulation of a great city commence in the morning—the great city that had roared itself to sleep. True, there was a feeble pulee all night; the care beat to and fro; a carriage now and then gave a flutter, but after all, there had been a quiet heur. About half a million of the people had been lying on "a deal level" for four or five hours; some on pillows of down, some on curb stones; some beneath silken counterpanes, and some beneath the great blue quilt of henven. Queer figure they make in the mind'e eye, to be surn—400,000 folks, more or less, lying on their back—lying in toars and rows, five or six miles long—lying threo or four deep. In the cellar—that'e "the primitive formation;" then first floor, second, third, and so up to the garret. Three hundred thousand people snoring—what a concert! Two hundred thousand people dreaming. Two hundred thousand people in red night-caps; one hundred thousand in white, and hero and there one trimmed with lace. Fifty thousand curls twisted up in papers, giving their owners the appearance of having made a pillow of cigar lighters. Twenty thousand curls hanging over the backe of chairs or tossed upon tables. How gently time touches such people, they never grow gray at all! Ten thousand people weeping, and new and then one dying in his sleep; dying in a dream? And then, the getting up is ridiculous enough, though going to bed—should ne eny "retire" in the refined times?—is a solemn piece of business, whether people think of it or not. But the getting up, the waking up, is funny enough for a farce. It's a process, a species of gradualism. Here's one who has elept "like a top" for nine solid hours, and now he begins to wake; first, its a half-lurch and a long breath and a yawn; then an arm is thrust out, then a foot; the muscles are waking up. Next the rattle of the early-going wagons strikes his ear; hearing is "coming to." Then, his tongue moves uneasily; taste is returning. Last, his eyes are open, one after the other—then half close, then open again, and the man's awake—awake all over—awake for all day. There's another, sound asleep this minute, and this, he shakes himself like a huge Newfoundland, springs up "perenssion," and the thing is done; the fellow hasn't a sleepy hair about him.

Snowy quilts that have just risen and fallen with the soft bosoms beneuth, begin to grow uneasy. The sweet sleepers are waking, so we'll draw the curtain and leave them to their tollette. Bundles of rags in durk; dump corners toss and tumble; there'e somethiug alive underneath. Out it comes, more rags. Misery makes no toilette, and there are no curtains to draw. [N. Y. Tribune.

Jenny Lind has got a baby. The "Otto of Roses" is distilled. The fountain that has fed multitudes with the influence of holy song, now feeds holiest humanity that does ite own singing. No more white glovee enclosing frenzied fingers, applauds the virgin cantatrice, but little hands, softer than kids, pat one another gently and joyously in the eyes of the young mother. "Ah mon fils" is sung no more over the parquetts, but over the ornelle. What u dear little darling the baby must be. We think we see Otto going into the room contuining his double treasure. What to him is the opera, as he bends over the swest litln suuh-nose that wrestles in its noble nother's arms! Think of them all thero together, and tell us, oh! ascetic old bachelor, and old unahl unmarried from choice, (if there exists such a marvel,) whether you think such happiness is to be cavalierly sneezed at? Does it not moisten the mouth of your imagination? We pause, for we have waked the baby. Jog the cradle, Otto. [Springfield Republican.

PUT THEM DOWN IN THE BILL.—A well-dressed "gentleman" went a few days ago in a fashionable restaurant, where he took an excellent breakfast. As he was sipping his coffee, the waiter, who had some reason to suspect him, had his eye upon him, and saw him slip a silver spoon and fork into his pocket, whereupon he hastened to tell his master. The latter, to avoid exposure, resolved to enter the stolen articles in the bill; and as he thought the thief deserved unaleting, he charged 45f. for them. The "gentleman" examined the bill, but, though surprised at the entry, displayed no emotion. He produced his purse, and paid the whole of the bill, merely remarking, "Forty-five francs form rather a high sum for a silver spoon and fork! But, however——." It was impossible that an affair between a thief and his victim could have been conducted with greater tact and courtesy. After a pause the "gentleman" calmly retired. [Galignani's Messenger.

INTERESTING TO HOTEL-KEEPERS.—We have heard of a new "lawyer's trick" that may be interesting to hotel and lodging-house keepers. A young limb of the legal profession in this city, without much practice, has been living for some time in fine style at one of our fashionable up-town hotels. After running up a pretty large bill, he took a sudden dislike to the house, and left without calling at the Captain's office. The landlord has been compelled to commence a suit to recover the debt; and what does the reader suppose was the defendant's plea in answer? Why this, that the steaks were not well cooked! And thie, too, after he had been devouring them for six months. [N. Y. Mirror.

When Lola Montez's palace was on fire, the King of Bavaria ordered the engines which were playing on it to be constantly supplied with Cologne water. There's gallantry as is gallantry.

A late writer says that thorn are two classes of people in England—poor devils and fox-hunters. The former spends his existence in chasing after a living, and the latter in chasing after blood-hounds.

THE SEVENTH VOLUME CLOSED.

HARPER FOR NOVEMBER.

HARPER'S NEW MONTHLY MAGAZINE closes its Seventh Volume with the issue of the present Number. Its constant and rapid increase in public favor, as shown by the fact that the Eighth Volume will commence with the unexampled sdition of 135,000 copies, demonstrates the popularity of the plan on which it has been conducted hitherto, and from which it will oot depart hereafter. It has been designed, from the outset, for Popular Reading; and the object of the Publishers has been, to present, at the cheapest rate and in the best style, the largest possible amount of reading matter, having intarest and value for the greatest number of the American people, without distinction of profession or of class. They have spared neither labor nor expense in the effort to accomplish this result. They have not restricted their choice of matter to either American or foreign literature, but have availed themselves of THE BEST in both. They intend to pursue this plan with increased vigor hereafter. A larger proportion of Original Matter will probably be introduced than hitherto, but not unless it shall prove to be better than can be procured from other sources. The best—that which shall combine the greatest interest with the greatest utility—will continue to have the preference, whatever may be its origin. In this way the Publishers believe they will better meet the wnnts and promote the welfare of the American people than in any other.

Mr. Thackeray's new serial novel of English life, "The Newcomes," has been purchased, at a large expense, for the Magazine, and will be published regularly, from early sheets, in its pages. No production of the day has been more eagerly expected than this.

Every department of Harper's Magazine will be kept up with increased attention and interest. Its Pictorial Illustrations, by the best Artists; its Original Articles, by the most popular American Authors; its Selections, Monthly Record of Current Events, Critical Notices of New Books, Summary of Literary Intelligence, Editorial Discussions of important topics, Literary, Social, and Personal Gossip, Plates of the Fashions, etc., etc., etc., will be continued as heretofore; and no pains will be spared to make them still more worthy of the extraordinary favor with which they have been received by the American Press and the American People.

A GEM.—One of the sweetest gems of poesy ever written, is the following from the pen of Frances Ann Butler:

"Better trust all, and be deceived!
And weep that trust, and that deceiving,
Than doubt one heart, that it believed
Had blessed one's life with true believing.
Oh, this mocking world, too fast
The doubting fiend o'ertakes our youth!
Better be cheated to the last,
Than lose the blessed hope of truth."

EDUCATION.

CENTENARY INSTITUTE, ALA

This Institution of Learning has been in successful operation for ten years, is situated eight miles north of Selma, and is the child and property of the Alabama Conference.

There are two departments, male and female. In the male department young men are prepared for the junior class in any college, or if they chose, complete their education here. The female department is regularly organized as a college.

The course of study is extensive, and the instruction thorough. The teaching is done mainly by men of age and experience, (not by girls.)

The President (Rev. A. H. Mitchell) is a minister of the gospel, of twenty odd years standing, and during most of that time has been connected with literary institutions of the church in Georgia, South Carolina and Alabama. He is assisted by seven others, most of whom are persons of age and experience, and all, with one exception, professors of religion. A majority of the Board of Trustees are members of the Alabama Conference, which fact is a sufficient guarantee of its successful management.

Board and tuition are as low as can be afforded, and lower than most institutions of similar grade.

The next term opens the first Monday in October, and closes the first Wednesday in July. For further particulars, apply to the President, at Summerfield, Ala.

H. J. HARRISON, Secretary.

Summerfield, Alabama.

FEMALE MASONIC INSTITUTE,

Dayton, Marengo County, Alabama.

Rev. E. D. Pitts, Principal.

TO PARENTS, GUARDIANS, AND THE FRIENDS OF EDUCATION GENERALLY, we would announce the opening of the TENTH Annual Session of the Institute. The healthful locality—the spacious and beautiful grounds—the commodious and convenient buildings—the full supply of Musical Instruments—the fixed purpose of the Trustees to spare no expense or efforts to promote the true interests of FEMALE EDUCATION—and the assiduous devotion of an efficient Faculty to promote the comfort and improvement of Pupils, lead us to expect with confidence a liberal support.

The Principal has taught with marked success in Alabama, Mississippi and Florida, and will consecrate all his energies—physical, intellectual, and moral—to the proper training of the head and heart of those committed to his tutelage.

The services of Miss MARY W. HOWZE, who has been for two years past connected with the Central Masonic University, have been secured. Her intelligence, energy, piety, and felicitous manner of communicating, have justly placed her in the first rank of educators.

The Musical, French, and Ornamental Department will be conducted by competent and skillful Teachers, and all due attention given to the arts and accomplishments that so beautify and adorn the gentler sex.

The Primary Department will be confided alone to a choice and gifted Lady, for we design to attend carefully to that sadly and mischievously neglected class of Pupils.

The Scholastic year is divided into Two Sessions of nearly Five Months each—with no intervening recess. The School opens on the first day of October, and closes with Examination Exercises in the latter part of July. Pupils received at any time, and charged to the end of the Session. For fractions of Sessions each week is counted one twentieth.

The School is not Sectarian or denominational; and the only religious tuition embraces the principles of a pure morality based upon the cardinal doctrines of the Bible.

The Principal and his wife have charge of the Stewards Department, and will tenderly care for the health, manners and morals of those who Board in the Institute. Each boarder will be made to feel as far as possible that she is the loved subject of parental solicitude, and every reasonable wish will be promptly and cheerfully gratified. Yet, Discipline will not be forgotten, and the needful restraints of family government will be thrown around them.

CHARGES PER SESSION OF FIVE MONTHS.

Primary Class $12 50
Preparatory Class 15 00
Junior and Senior Class 20 00
Music on Piano, Guitar and Harp, (each) 25 00
Drawing, Painting and Embroidery, (each) 10 00
French and German, (each) 15 00
Incidentals 1 00
LATIN Included in the Regular Course.
BOARD (including Washing, Fuel and Lights) per month 10 00

Each Boarder must furnish her own Towels, Brushes and Combs, and have each article distinctly marked with her full name.

AN INVARIABLE RULE.—Board and Tuition one-half in advance, and the balance at the end of each Session; and every account must be closed at the end of each Session, by Cash, or by Note.

SPECIAL ARRANGEMENT.

Each Lodge in Marengo County is entitled to select within its jurisdiction, a worthy object of benefaction, and have her taught in the Institution without charge, provided said Lodge secure the payment of her Board and supply her with Books and Stationery.

As the Principal is so extensively known, the Committee have forborne to speak of his character and qualifications, and refer Parents and Guardians to the persons named below.

OAK BOWERY FEMALE COLLEGE.

This Institution of learning is under the supervision and control of the Alabama Conference of the M. E. Church, South, and has been in successful operation for six years. It is situated about five miles north of the Montgomery and West Point Railroad, in Chambers co., in a healthy country, and among a population, moral, industrious and intelligent.

The Board of Trustees take great pleasure in announcing to the public the election of the Rev. ALEX. SPEER, of Georgia, to the Presidency of the College. We think it only necessary to be known, that the Institution will be for the next year under the charge and direction of Brother Speer, to awaken a deep interest in behalf of the enterprise throughout the community, and impart confidence of success. His long and faithful service in the M. E. Church as a minister—his age and experience—his natural judgment and sound discretion—his acknowledged literary attainments and ability, authorize the expectation of full patronage on the part of an enlightened public.

A complete corps of Instructors whose names will hereafter be published, will be provided to supply the demand for instruction.

Miss MARY J. TOOMER continues Principal in the Music Department; and the unbounded satisfaction hitherto given by Miss Toomer, who we consider has no superior in any country, is a sure guarantee that all who patronize will be pleased.

Through the kind offices of the former President, the Rev. Wm. F. Stanford, who solicited contributions for that purpose, a fine and judiciously selected Library, of several hundred volumes, has been purchased and is now in the possession of the College, embracing some of the most approved and standard literary works, and such as are peculiarly adapted to the purposes of Female Education.

The Tuition Fees will be no higher than usual, and the course of study as extensive as that in any institution of the same grade in the country.

The College Exercises will begin under the proposed organization, on the first Monday in January, next—its second session will begin on the first Monday in September, and close at Christmas.

A circular, containing fuller information, will appear over the signature of the President.

TUSCALOOSA METHODIST FEMALE HIGH SCHOOL.

The exercises of this Institution will begin on the first MONDAY in October next, and close on the first THURSDAY in July, 1854. There will be a recess of a few days at Christmas.

FACULTY.

REV. THOS. H. RUSSELL, A. M. President.
MISS ELIZABETH J. MEEK, Assistant.
MRS CLARA G. LEE, Preparatory Department.
MR F. S. WALTER, Professor of Music.

Teacher of Modern Languages

The fees for the first half the scholastic year are as follows:

Primary Department $12 00
First, Sophomore and Middle Classes, each 20 00
Junior and Senior Classes, each 22 50
Music 25 00
Use of piano 2 50
Contingent fee 1 00

The above fees are required to be paid on the first day of October.

Fees of the same amount, for the second half of the scholastic year, are required to be paid on the 5th of February, 1854.

An extra fee of $20 is charged for French.

The course of study in this institution is as extensive as that in any institution for the education of females, and the instruction is of the most critical and thorough character. Every provision has been made, to ensure success. A philosophical and chemical apparatus adequate to all the purposes of instruction has been provided, together with maps, charts, globes, etc. The instructors are experienced in their work and highly approved for capacity, fidelity and skill.

This institution has just closed the first year of its existence, with the most satisfactory results. And the public may feel assured that the Trustees will watch over its interests with the utmost solicitude and care, and spare no pains to render its system of education as perfect as possible.

The tuition fees have been somewhat reduced, and are below those of many Southern institutions of an higher grade. It is impossible to engage teachers of the highest character for talents, attainments and skill, without paying liberal salaries. But we offer as an equivalent, above all price, a faithful and skillful application of the most approved means of developing and training the mind.

Printed circulars, containing fuller information, may be had by application to Alex Gilaspeck, Esq., Secretary of the Board. L. C. GARLAND,

President of the Board of Trustees.

FACULTY.

REV. JAMES K. ARMSTRONG, A. M., Principal, and Professor of Mental, Moral and Natural Science.

H. M. DALY, A. M., Professor of Vocal and Instrumental Music.

MISS E. L. HASKILL, English.
MISS M. J. BONDURANT, English.
MISS PHEBE FOLLER, Drawing, Painting, French And Guitar.
MISS J. V. CLARK, Primary and Preparatory Department.
MRS. L. J. ARMSTRONG, Governess.
MRS. REBECCA CLARK, Matron and Nurse.

This institution has just closed a prosperous year, with one hundred and twenty-six pupils.

The ensuing session will commence on THURSDAY, the 29th day of SEPTEMBER.

It is very desirable that pupils enter at the beginning of the session.

The main building is a new and superior brick edifice, one hundred by fifty feet, three stories, and for elegance, convenience of arrangement—for number, size and comfort of school and private rooms—is not surpassed by any similar one in the country.

TO THE MORNING STAR.

Eye of the morning, true,
'Mid tears of pearly dew,
And many a blushing hue,
Behold!

A weeper cometh, worn;
His couch hath sorrow borne;
He riseth to the morn,
And thee.

Years of sorrow past,
And none the less, the last,
Bear him onward fast—
To the grave.

He loves the gentle ray,
That glitters but to say:
"Behold the coming day."
He loves.

Star of the morning, shine!
And may thy promise twine
Around this heart of mine
Till death!

POPERY

AGAINST

COMMON SCHOOL EDUCATION.

LETTER IV.

To the Editors of the Daily Dispatch:

PITTSBURGH, March 2, 1853.

I do not feel at liberty to address myself again to Dr. O'Connor at this present, when I have so repeatedly called for his reply to a question which most vitally concerns our argument. Why is he so silent about this one point, diverting public attention by others that are irrelevant? I ask him if he is not among us as a sworn official of that political power which rules at Rome, and he avoids the answer! I ask him to show us the Bishop's oath, that thus our free citizens may judge what hand is here working in this specious effort to break down our system of public education, and he keeps dark! Plain as it must be to all, how prompt would be his disclaimer, if it could with any good Protestant conscience be made, I shall be borne out by a just public in holding the point as conceded, and in arguing according.

Why not frankly tell us that he is under oath to the Pope, and, as in duty bound, must do battle, after his measure, against our republican institutions and our popular liberties! Why not acknowledge, what is so plain to be seen, that the uprising and aggression of the Romish hierarchy, at this moment, in a war upon our system of popular education, is in obedience to the bill, passed in the Pope's Congress at Baltimore—sent on to their Sovereign through Bishop O'Connor, for the Pope's approval, and returned by the same hand, with the Pope's signature and decree!

But waiving this for the moment, he denies that his plan involves any "special legislation" for Romanists. Let us see. He asks us now, at this late day, to adopt his method, to the subversion of our own. He demands that we break down our well established system, at vast pecuniary loss, and at immense disadvantage, every way as we conceive, to all others, to society, and to the State; and for whom? For Roman Catholics. For what? For the protection of the Roman Catholic religion, which he says is "not safe" in our schools. If this be not a call for special legislation, I know not the meaning of terms.

Observe; it is not as though we were now first seeking for plans. We have adopted our system. It does not satisfy all; but I know of none who have arrayed themselves openly against it, and called for its demolition, save Romanists and Infidels! Nine-tenths of the whole community, we may safely say, are content under the present system. It is the benignant provision of the State for her children, that they grow not up in ignorance, idleness, and vice, and that they prove not unfit for republican freedom. If this strikes a deadly blow at the root of any foreign policy, which manifestly is sustained only by popular ignorance, and which can live only by the death of the public mind, we cannot help the complainant. Our American policy is not bound to conform itself to the Romish religion and the Papal State. But when our vast and well established system involves large properties; when it furnishes, by its grand economy, the only civil education in the reach of the poor at large; when it could not be broken down, as we believe, without scattering multitudes of this half a million children to the streets; when, by the growing ignorance and vice, society would be a grievous sufferer, and the foundations of the State would be undermined, and when the nine-tenths are content; yet we are to yield the majority's interest without a whimper to the Papal demand. And this is not special legislation!

But further; the confessed aim of the complainants is to better teach the Roman Catholic religion, which cannot now be taught in our public schools. And for this it is asked; not that their amount of tax may be set to their account, deducting or not their charge upon the State; but that they may receive their numerical share of the general fund, which is contributed mainly by Protestants, and that so they may enjoy our Protestant funds for the support of the Roman Catholic religion among us! And this is not special legislation! The veil is too thin for any disguise. To think by fair pretences to conceal this, is to take for granted quite too much stupidity among us.

He tells us that this scheme—concocted by the Pope's Cabinet in the secret sessions at Baltimore—is the more equitable, and eligible, and excellent way, and so it is insisted on. But the great majority think otherwise. Shall not we be allowed our choice! Here comes in the "tyrannical majority" of which Dr. O'Connor speaks. The difficulty is, that this majority happens to be on the wrong side for his interest. But it must be on one side or other, unless we yield our government to a monarchy—to the Pope, shall we say! Do we put the minority in dungeons, and doom them to death! Aptly enough are we asked, what would be the case if Roman Catholics were in the majority! Full well do we know. And this official of Rome does not blush to point us to the Madiai, as a specimen of Protestant minorities where Popery has the sway! Talk of Red Republicanism! This is Red Religionism, which, as surely as it shows the hand among us, will rouse a giant spirit of freedom, which will sweep Popery back to its home. If, indeed, they had the majority this moment, who doubts that our mouths would be stopped—not by stout and solid arguments, but by stouter bullets, and prison walls!

But, strangely enough, we are told that "the question is not of this or that one's claim, nor of its amount." We had thought that this was the very question. But when the Bishop is pressed by the meagre amount of their claims, as measured by their tax, he takes this new position. We had thought it was a call for "justice," and this is everywhere repeated where it suits. But he is forced to acknowledge that it is a question of "grant and then presumes to demand in what channel the benefaction shall run. But it so. The simple question then is, more palpably than ever, shall we give our free contributions: or, rather, shall we allow ourselves to be taxed by the State to support the Roman Catholic schemes in the midst of us? He is perfectly willing that we should be taxed to support their distinctive and sectarian establishments. But he hurls it upon us as a shame that they should be taxed, except for their own distinctive benefit.

Let us look at this. The gross injustice of the school tax that burdens the Bishop's mind, what is it! Are we to concede that no one can righteously be taxed except where he receives the direct advantage! Because some hermit never uses the road, shall he pay no road tax? We are all taxed for many public enterprises which do not directly interest us, and for some, indeed, which we would rather oppose.

Because one has no friend in the almshouse or penitentiary, should he claim to be rid of that burden! (Will the Bishop support all the Roman Catholics in these institutions!) Because one has no property to watch at night, should he pay nothing for the night watch? Because one cares not for city lamps and chooses to carry his old lantern, shall he be exempt from that public expenditure! And because a man has no children to send to school, must he therefore be released from the school tax! Or, because he does not care for their education, and prefers that they live and die in ignorance, a public tax, a public disgrace, and a public curse, should he be excused from his quota? Certainly, on the same grounds which are here pleaded by the Bishop, that they do not, cannot, or will not enjoy the benefit. And such would be the demand upon us on all hands, if the principle were recognized. Our Roman Catholic citizens are more willing to bear their part in the public burdens than their priests are willing to fall in with our Government policy. The secret is their political relations to Rome.

The Bishop and his people have the very same benefit from the public school system that I have, and that the many among us have who send their children elsewhere. He has a benefit in the peace and good order of society, in the security of property, and in the preservation of those republican institutions, which we hope to hand down unimpaired to our posterity. These are vast benefits, unless, indeed, it be the object of this Romish movement to revolutionize the State, and to destroy the very free institutions of which every American should boast.

Not to be taxed for public education! This reveals to us, indeed, in what light the Romish hierarchy regard popular knowledge, and how the public ignorance is that atmosphere alone in which their system can breathe and develop its strength. Our theory of society and of government is totally different from theirs—opposite to it, and inconsistent with it—as is light with darkness. We hold our social and political condition to be too valuable to part with at such a solicitation. We shall resist to the last any plan, however disguised by fair religious names, which would make us, however indirectly, contribute to the inculcation of such principles as are subversive of all our liberties. Besides, we know that, like the horse-leech or the grave, their cry is: "Give! Give!" and that they can never be satisfied with concessions until the neck of this Republic be put under the iron heel of the Pope.

The public education here is a great public necessity. For obvious reasons, too, as we have shown, it is a specialty which baffles all the ordinary laws of supply and demand; it languishes on the feeble aid of individual effort, and fails of reaching the scattered masses when it is left to mere private enterprise. Hence, the State builds school houses, as it builds its other public edifices for the public good, and all must bear a share of the burden—better, too, than for almshouses and penitentiaries. Our republican principles, which rests so much on the public intelligence, makes this public education a vital necessity. The Romish priesthood know full well that this is a mighty barrier against their designs. And Rome is moving all its forces to subvert it. And Dr. O'Connor has returned from Rome with the Pope's endorsement of these loyal officials, and of these very measures here! But our free people, and not the Red Religionists of the Vatican, shall be the judges of what concerns the common weal.

Let us look another moment at this plea of conscience! Far be it from us to be intolerant towards any religion which is properly and only a religion. But what if it be a wily political system under the guise of religion? What if it be Bishop O'Conner's conscience to cut off my head for opinion's sake. Shall I yield to this on the plea of religion?

Let me call attention to the fact that this is not a simple case of conscience. It is complicated with Jesuitical plots, and with perils to our liberties. The very same stratagem is now used in Europe to crush all free principles. He may call it intolerance that we would resist foreign machinations in our beloved land, while the records of history are so plain, and the cry of new victims wakes universal sympathy, and makes the very Turk blush for a religion like this. Do we not read! Do we not sometimes see for ourselves! I have seen the gratings of the Inquisition, in the roar of the Pope's lordly Vatican, and under the eaves of his cathedral at Rome; and all for religion, forsooth. And what are we to think, when, in the face of all documents, and all facts; in the face of fresh victims every hour, whose groans come over to us from the Pope's dominions, and even in direct contradiction of his own organs here; this Bishop tells that he "knows nothing in his religion that would teach him to hate any one."

"We teach, to be sure," he adds, "that God has made a revelation; that the Church is the organ by which he communicates it, and that all under pain of sin are bound to hear her voice." Mark the words: "BOUND UNDER THE PAIN OF SIN" to hear the Romish Church's voice! We understand it! Here is the dogma which contains in it the death-warrant of the millions who have fallen victims to Papal power. The holy butchery is not for hatred, forsooth, but for love! This is the meaning of "brotherly love," which the Bishop accepts in careful distinction from anything universal. And he comes to us talking gently as a cooing dove.

Let us quote from the standard school-book of the Romanists, entitled "A Synopsis of Moral Theology, as prepared for Romish Seminaries and Students of Theology."

"Question: Are heretics rightly punished with death?

Answer: St. Thomas answers (2, 2, quest. xi, art. 3, in corp.) yes. Because forgers of money, and other disturbers of the State, are justly punished with death; therefore, also, heretics, who are forgers of the faith," etc. This is the moral and religious instruction considered so important to the dear children by the Bishops!

Hear the Shepherd of the Valley, speaking honestly out, with no Jesuitical concealment or mystification: "Heresy and unbelief are crimes, that's the whole of the matter; and where the Catholic religion is an essential part of the public laws of land, they are punished as other crimes."

I accept his admission, therefore, as quite to the point. "If any one's religion," he says, "teaches this hatred and strife, I think it may be safely asserted that whatever other portion of it he may fail to communicate to his children, he will without doubt communicate this successfully."

The Bishop thinks that "arithmetic and geometry" may be taught without the aid of Romish priests. He has probably heard of Cardinal Wiseman's discovery, lately broached at an English soirée, that the history of Galileo's persecution by the Romish Church is all a mistake!

But, alas for the Bishop, how little can be taught in these American public schools! The difference between sins mortal and sins venial—cannot be taught. The superiority of the Romish clergy to all civil law—cannot be taught. The virtue of perjury when done in the service of the Romish Church—cannot be taught. The emptiness of the oath of allegiance to a Protestant State—cannot be taught. The religious duty of persecuting Protestants to the death—cannot be taught! And such precious school-books as "Den's Moral Theology," and authors of such precious morality as Liguori—cannot pass the inspection of these "tyrannical majorities." Alas! alas!

We confess freely—that because this is the Roman Catholic religion, and this the priestly conscience, for which this official of Rome demands such special privileges, we invoke against it the united resistance of American freemen. We know this step—this favorite step—for controlling society and government, to seize upon the public instruction, and to break down all other plans. We resist at the threshold, just because, to use his own illustration, his calf is on our shoulders, and full well we know that we shall not be able to carry it when it becomes an ox!

All that Dr. O'Connor has chosen to drag into the argument in reference to sects, is sufficiently answered by his own words. He complains of the sectarianism which creeps now into the schools. Yet he would cure this by making them more sectarian, and altogether sectarian! We have said that his plan is anti-American, divisive, ruinous to the popular education, and foreign to all our interests; and, without answering this, he occupies a column in false issues about the effect of common schools on brotherly love, etc. Let it be marked that it is he that is intolerant, not we. Who is sectarian and schismatic in this very matter of public education! Who would split in pieces every fair fabric among us, rather than have Romanist children mingle with our American institutions? The Roman Catholic sect is that which carries its sectarianism so far as to dissect all whom it calls heretic; making a glorious unity by burning all who dissent.

The great problem which he flatly propounds is this: "As sects must exist, the question is now how to deal with them?" That question would be answered very summarily at Rome; but here it is a question which may puzzle all the hierarchy. That is his trouble, not ours. Our common Protestantism is not so narrow, but that we can all stand upon it—with room enough for him. And that the Protestant Church is a visible Church—that it is somewhere and somebody—has been found out, we think. And that this is a Protestant land must be apparent now, despite the labored lectures of Bishops and Archbishops to disprove it.

But, in his heated imagination of the evils belonging to our public school system, how bad does he find it! As "bad as though the State should build a common church at the expense of all, in which all should be required to worship under the guidance of the State." And, as this is the very method of Rome in all Papal lands, he cannot bitterly complain. "Such a union," he adds, "would be the union of the grave. The peace it would bring would be the peace of death." We accept this as the very analysis of Popery, and the farthest possible from our seeking. From such a union and such a peace may our fathers' God deliver us!

Doubtless, if there were nothing but Popery, there would be no sect. Just as if there were nothing but midnight, there would be no colors, and if there were nothing but death and the grave, there would be none of the various forms of life. We hold that this would be the most deplorable of all things. Conflict of opinion is salutary. It is the proper condition of truth and progress on earth. It is not inconsistent with a high principle and a personal good-will, which would disdain to thrust heretics, so called, into dungeons. They who cry for unity, and madly pursue it by putting to death all who are outside; they are the enemies of truth. We would have the Bishop know that an angel is often stirring our Bethesda, and keeping it stirred, instead of stagnant; that always, from any of the porches, any one may step in and be healed of whatever disease he has, while the demon, of whom the Bishop speaks, is busy instigating the murder of so called heretics, and grinning with a fiendish smile over this red banner of Papal Unity!

Truth is worth contending for; worth differing about, in an honest effort to get nearer to the great source and substance. And, hence, as I believe—outside of an apostate and dead Church, where the truth is first buried, there will be difference of opinion. Yet here is the very room for union, for who does not see that union implies parts? and there can be no union where there are no parts. Shame, that any one who aluins to be an ambassador of Christ, carries sectarianism so far as to swear, by solemn oath to the Pope, to persecute heretics to the utmost of his power.

The plea is now for religion in schools as the proper basis of education. This is, indeed, the very principle which we would accept and adopt. But we are met at the threshold by these very Bishops of Rome. As we have seen, this is really the dread of Romanists and infidels! So that they have been found joining in protests against introducing even the Bible, without note or comment, into the schools. Who does not see that that must be a false religion which denies the Bible as the basis of religion? This could indeed be what Dr. O'Connor calls "making men religious without religion." Could we admit heathenism—idolatry—however consecrated by religious names and claims,

All know that in the pending difficulty with New Grenada the Archbishop's protest against the new system of education is against "the use of the text of the Gospel in teaching morality in the schools;" and this, too, the Roman Catholic Gospel! I would sooner trust a schoolmaster with a Bible, than a Romish priest without one! And so would the people.

We do earnestly call for more religion in the schools. Our common Christianity calls for it; and the Romish hierarchy are they who oppose it to the death. But, as they are now withdrawing their children, we may come forward without this impediment, and ask that the great masses who accept this public boon shall be granted their common heritage—a religious education.

Dr. O'Connor takes all for granted, and begs the whole question, when he assumes that his plan, or any new plan, will please a greater number than the present; or else his is the tyranny, when, without care for the majority, he demands his own plan. He, indeed, and his interest would be better satisfied and better served. But what of the nine-tenths of our population! That would be the tyranny that would trample on the rights of the people to meet the views of a single sect; that would sacrifice the well-being of the rising generation, to suit the Pope's officials in our land.

I ask attention to this feature of the Papal movement, that the whole aim is destructive. It is not for the children; it is for the Pope. It is not to reform; but to destroy. The Bishop knows that if he can "persuade us to walk without our crutches," as his figure is, and "get us to throw our crutches in the fire, then, when once they are burned, we cannot recover them, though we find ourselves unable to walk."

We very well know how much easier it is to break down than to build up, and how little wit it requires to find fault with the best system, but how much it takes to devise a better. We have seen paper plans before to-day; plausible theories, that look remarkably well on paper, like the city lots of speculators. But it is hard to get their imaginary value. We shall not be so ready to change our well-tried educational policy, for the visionary schemes of these religious politicians. The design is plain. How ready is the Bishop to accept any plan rather than that which we have. But no; we reply, "A bird in the hand," etc. "In vain the net is spread in the sight of any bird."

This would only confuse our counsels. A hundred other plans of public education, to suit various interest, could be brought forward, and would be; and we should lose the grand object altogether by abandoning a well working American system for a specious, sectarian, and a foreign one.

And this we honestly believe to be the great ultimate intent of the complainant. The destructive plowshare is to be driven through all our American republican institutions. And just as before, and just as now, in Europe, the aggression of the Jesuit hierarchy begins with a grasp at education, to conform it to their views, and where nothing more can be done to break down all other systems.

What the people are to expect from this Papal league, if ever its strength shall warrant it, appears from the daring and defiant movements in some other States, where the Church, whose voice we are bound to hear under pain of sin, has taken the political stand, to wield the civil power. But are we to sit quietly, amidst all these developments, until the power has gone from our hands! Let us rather jealously fortify our institutions against the aggressive and destructive policy. The warfare will never be given up. Let us now demand—what is plainly called for—that measure of religious teaching in the schools which our common Christianity allows. Let our republican principles be inculcated as daily lessons. Let us mark the craven politicians who would truckle to Popery, and sell their inheritance for the "Catholic vote."

Will any in this community doubt the warrant for such imputations as I have made as to the political bearings of this movement, and the political designs which underlie it? Besides all that is openly avowed and carried on at the polls in Michigan, by bishops and priests at caucuses, and in lobbies, the movement is simultaneous in Maryland, New Jersey, Alabama and New York, and agitated in other States, "with what meaning we shall see."

I quote from the Freeman's Journal of New York since the Council at Baltimore: "This subject [of the public schools] contains in it the whole question of the progress and triumphs of the Catholic Church in the next generation in this country. Catholics! let us all act together! Let us all read and listen to the same sentiments, that we may know how to act together!"—[Sat. Nov. 20, 1852

Again: "There can be no sound political progress: no permanence in the State where, for any length of time, children shall be trained in schools without (the Roman Catholic) religion."

Again: "This country has no other hope, politically or morally, except in the vast and controlling extension of the Catholic religion."

And again, Jan. 1, 1853, where this movement is given out as the decreed plan for the year: "Eighteen and fifty-two has helped greatly to spread right principles on this subject. What will 1853 do to give effect in law and in acts to the principle that is to germinate the future glory of our country? The Catholic sentiment in a unit. Let us act. Let us speak. Let us make others hear."

In the light of these quotations we know how to understand the following: "Every Catholic church, every Catholic school, every convent, every Catholic asylum is a foundation-stone of this precious building of our country's greatness."

Then hear the "Shepherd of the Valley:" "If the Catholics ever gain the ascendency here, as they certainly will, religious freedom in this country is at an end."

And again; the same paper, referring to the Catholic Herald, of Philadelphia, speaks of this Jesuitical denial of Romish intolerance as "that cowardly system of misrepresentation and concealment which led English Catholics to attempt to throw dust in the eyes of contemporary heretics, by disavowing the practices of their brethren in better days, and other lands."

What saith the Bishop to this from his own protegé? And again: "The Catholic who says that the Church is not intolerant, belies the sacred Spouse of Christ. The Christian who professes to be tolerant himself, is dishonest, ill-instructed, or both!"

These citations will be sufficient to expose the political character of this assault upon our public school system. I have spoken as an American. I love my country. I blush to speak thus, as I must, of any system which claims to be Christianity. But a sojourn of eight months in the Romish States of Europe, and a month's residence at Rome, in busy examination of this politico-religious machinery, and some intercourse with their propagandists there, and in Egypt and Palestine, and en route for India, has opened my eyes to the deep craft, and fearful intrigue, that spreads its net-work around the globe, and marches now in a fresh crusade against all civil and religious liberty!

This Bishop concludes that "it will take time to make the people understand" his views of justice. And I earnestly pray, by all the good sense and sound patriotism of the people, even of our Roman Catholic citizens; by the memory of our fathers' blood-shedding; by the every-day report of Papal leagues with despotism, perfidy, torture, and the violation of every sacred right, that the day when this Bishop shall convert the people to his code of justice may be far distant!

M. W. JACOBUS.

END.

To meet the justice of a divine law and a divine law-giver, God has provided for sinners the obedience, atonement and suffering of a divine Saviour, who has become "the end of the law for righteousness to every one that believeth." God, therefore, is "a just God and a Saviour," "gracious and righteous," "just, and yet the justifier," "faithful and just to forgive us our sins."

"He died like a beast who hath done no good while he lived." True indeed! Go to his funeral. Not a tear is shed. Not a pain or a grief or a want has he relieved, and there is none to call him blessed. Think of it, ye time-servers—ye who seek for pleasure, ye who make self the centre of every thought and action. What an epitaph! "He died like a beast, for he did no good while he lived."

If the world suspect your well intended designs, be not uneasy. It only shows that mankind are themselves false and artful, which is the cause of their being suspicious.

A lady being in want of a cook, a few days since, published an advertisement in the Philadelphia Ledger and was waited on by any quantity of ladies wanting situations. Amongst them was one who, on being asked some questions, cut them short with "Never mind about me, Marm, let me see first if the place will suit me, then you can inquire about me afterwards."

THE VIRGINIA CONFERENCE.

The Annual Session of this body was commenced in Lynchburg, on the 26th ult., says the Richmond Christian Advocate, "and closed on Thursday evening, the 3d instant. Bishop Paine presided over its deliberations with equal credit to himself and satisfaction to the body. There was a large attendance of the members present. The business was conducted quietly and with commendable external harmony."

The R. C. Advocate gives large and interesting items of the Conference, upon which source we draw.

The Anniversary Meeting of the Missionary Society was held at the Fourth Street Church, on Saturday night. The Church was filled with from 1000 to 1200 persons, and addresses were delivered by Bishop Paine and Dr. Sehon. The annual collection was taken up at the conclusion of the addresses, and we are informed that it amounted to nearly $1000. The amount collected for Missionary purposes within the bounds of the Conference, during the past year, is about $13,000—being $5000 more than was obtained during the previous year.

A feature of much interest in this Conference occasion was the meeting and annual sermon before the Young Men's Aid Society.

The sermon was preached by Dr. Doggett, on "Study to show thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth."—2d Timothy ii; 15. He introduced the subject by speaking of the dignity, responsibility, and importance of the ministerial office, and the consequent necessity that the discharge of its duties in a proper manner should be a matter of the deepest concern. The text, he said, furnished three objects as those which every minister should labor to accomplish in the discharge of his official duties.

1. The Approval of God, which secures purity of heart, elevation above circumstances, and fearlessness and boldness in the utterance of unpalatable truths.

2. The mastery of his vocation, bringing with it confidence in undertaking duty, and success and commendation as the results.

3. The proper distribution of the word of life, which is not an indivisible, unmanageable mass, but capable of such division as will "give to each his portion in due season."

These points he discussed briefly, and then proceeded to say that no minister by nature possessed the power of accomplishing these objects, nor was he endowed with such power supernaturally or by inspiration; that the attainment of such power was the result of labor and effort similar to that employed in becoming perfect in any other vocation. The minister must "study"—show himself approved, etc. But what must he study? To the question the Doctor replied:

1. The materials of the ministry. The workman of any sort must be acquainted with the materials to be used in his vocation.—The materials of the ministry Dr. D. reckoned to be—

1. The veritiee of the gospel, as deposited in the scriptures.

2. The vehicle of preaching—language—with all its accompaniments of grammar, lexicography, rhetoric, logic, etc.

3. Helps to the understanding of the Scriptures as commentaries, expositions, &c. Here, while advocating the largest attainable degree of learning, Dr. Doggett distinctly laid it down as the position occupied by the Methodist Church, and the Young Men's Aid Society, that a clear understanding of the Scripture in his vernacular tongue, and an ability to speak "justly, readily, clearly," are the only indispensible requisites for discharge of the duty of a minister.

II. The mechanics of the ministry—that is the best method of applying and using the materials for the construction of the designed object. Every minister, he said, was compelled to use method. No house can be built by casting stones or timber into a disorderly heap; so neither can a pulpit preparation be successful if construeted at random. And not only was some method indispensable, but one method was found in practice preferable to another. Study of these methods of sermonizing, and performing other duties of the ministry, Dr. D. contended, was needful in order to a perfecting of the execution of those duties.

III. The adaptation of the ministry. The Gospel is unchangeable, but is designed to adapt itself to all the changes that shall take place in the history of the world, so that the truth shall always be capable of effecting the salvation of men. The minister should closely study the adaptations of the Gospel.

1. To persons. Individuals differing from each other, and requiring different classes of both.

2. To communities.

3. To times.

On the last point, the remarks of Dr. Doggett were particularly eloquent and effective. He concluded by a statement of the object of the Young Men's Aid Society in connection with the subject discussed, and a defence of the Society against its opposers in the mildest, most dignified and truly Christian spirit.

The Lynchburg Virginian says:

"We regard this as probably the ablest sermon ever delivered by Dr. Doggett. It gave the most unbounded satisfaction to the audience, who listened with the deepest attention for an hour and twenty minutes."

The Bishop laid before the Conference a communication from the Secretary of the Missouri Conference, recommending for the approval of the several Conferences a proposed alteration of the Discipline so as to prohibit the sale, use or manufacture of ardent spirits by members of the Church, which was read by the secretary, and discussed by Revs. Leo. Rosser, S. T. Moorman and J. K. Powers, in favor of the resolution, and Drs. Early, Smith, Doggett and Lee, and Revs. Messrs. N. Thomas, G. W. Carter, W. W. Bennett, Jos. Lear, J. H. Davis, J. D. Blackwell and G. W. Langhorne, in opposition to it. The vote being taken, the Conference refused to concur with the Missouri resolution. Yeas 65 - Nays 32.

The Bishop announced that there were two ministers in the Conference for whom he had been able to provide no work—all the Presiding Elders having declined to assign them any field of labor. He asked for action on the subject by the Conference. One of these was granted a location at his request. And like action was taken in the other case.

The avaricious man is like the barren, sandy ground of the desert, which sucks in all the rain and dew with greediness, but yields no fruitful herbs or plants for the benefit of others.

When I gaze into the stars, they look down upon me with pity, from their serene and silent places, like eyes glistening with tears over the little lot of man. Thousands of generations, all as noisy as our own, have been swallowed up by time, and there remains no record of them more. Yet Arcturus, and Orion, Sirius, the Pleiades, are still shining in their courses, old—and young as when the shepherd first noted them in the plains of Shinar. [Carlyle.

NEW ORLEANS:

Saturday Morning, November 26.

The Editor is absent, attending the Mississippi Conference, though most of the matter, editorial and selected in the present issue, was prepared by Bro. McTyeire. He will be absent some three or four weeks. We earnestly hope his tour will be largely promotive of the interest of the Advocate. Bro. McTyeire is a most efficient and self-sacrificing laborer in the sacred desk and in the editor's chair. W.

THE MINISTER OF CHRIST IMMORTAL TILL HIS WORK IS DONE.

The above remark occurs in the writings of Dr. Adam Clarke. It is a quotation from some writer unknown to us, whom the Dr. calls "a great man." It is due, however, to the memory and to the theology of the Dr. to say that he by no means endorses the sentiment.

If the sentimsnt means to teach that a Christian minister will not, and cannot, die till his work is done, and that he only dies when his work is done; then, in our apprehension, it teaches downright, unmitigated fatalism. No Methodist can consistently hold or teach this sentiment; yet, in an indirect sort of way, we have occasionally heard it in conversation. We have sometimes heard it quoted, and made to bear a practical application to ministers and their fields of labor; especially have we heard it urged in relation to foreign missionaries, and ministers at homs in sickly localities and plague-spots. We have sometimes heard it urged, no matter how uncongenial the climate, how fast the minister is wearing away, and sinking to a premature grave, he must never leave his post to seek health and the prolongation of life in a more salubrious air. No; "he is immortal till his work is done;" this is the argument. If the plagne is raging in a partionlar spot, the minister of Christ, it is urged, must not leave, though the plagne is sweeping down its thousands, and though they are dying under such circumstances that he can render no useful service, beyond the mere conventional decencies of the burial service; still, they urge, he must stay and die, if he shall, and let the Church and his dependent family do without him; for "hs is immortal till his work is done."

Let us inqnire of the admirers of this sentiment, if they were preaching in a house that had caught on fire, if they would not get ont of it if they could? If they were living in a house which had in it, or in its immediate vicinity, a poisonous and fatal exhalation, if they would or would not feel it due to themselves, their families, and the Church to remove? They could not, if consistent; for these supposed circumstances involve the same state of things that exists where any peculiar peril to human life is realized.

No one would expect a miracle to be wrought to extinguish the flames of the burning house, or to purify the poisonous air of the other. We know from Scriptural example that miracles are never wrought to accomplish what man is competent to perform at the time and under the circumstance when the miracle is wrought. We doubt not, no matter what a man's theory or opinions may be, he would leave a burning house, and seek safety beyond the reach of its flames. Why may we not, on the same principle, get out of any danger that we can which threatens us with fatal results? We confess we can see no good reason why we should not; but many why we should.

We have to say, then, in the conclusion of these observations, that we are no believers in the sentiment that "the minister of Christ is immortal till his work is done." We believe some men have been called to preach who have never preach at all; that others have bnt very imperfectly done what they were called to do; that some have backslidden like Jndas, and have labored for the flesh rather than for the spirit. And lastly, we believe that the minister of Christ is as much bound to preserve his health, and prolong his life, as any other man.

THE THOUGHTFUL MOTHER.—In the description of a good mother by King Solomon, it is said, concerning her, that "her children rise up and called her blessed." We were reminded of this, a few days ago, by an anecdote mentioned by Bishop Wainwright, at a dinner given to the English Delegation by the Vestry of Trinity Church, in ths school-room of Trinity Church. This school was founded and long supported by the Venerable Society for the Propagation of the Gospel in Foreign Parts. Mention being made of Queen Victoria, the Provisional Bishop of New York stated that the Archdeacon of London, being engaged on one occasion in catechizing the young princes, and being surprised at the accuracy of their answers, in the catechism, said to the Prince—

"Your governess deserves great credit for instrusting you so thoroughly in the catechism."

Whereupon the royal boy responded—

"O, but it is ma who teaches us the catechism."

How many American mothers, with fewer cares, and fewer temptations to luxurious indulgences, have to confess to an utter neglect of this important duty. Many boys, whose parents are nominally Christian, can say with truth, our mothers never taught us the catechism. We hope some of them may take a profitable hint from a queenly practice. EXTRACTS FROM A LETTER FROM An Elder to a Younger Brother

* * * * * * * "All this is natural, but part of it wreng, and that part especjally, which implies discontent nt the direction of Providence. God is with us to keep us in all our ways, and it would possibly have been the very werst thing for you to have engaged in business with Mr. ——. I trust you will not feel disappointed or grieved at a result that however, I labered in in my blindness to accomplish, was certainly not the best; not so good as the provision God will make for my dear young brother if he is faithful and prayerfully puts his trust in this fatherly guidance.

"I still hope for some opening that will take you out of the miasm of your swamps and river country; but the Lord may intend to make your earthly course a short one, in which event, sad as it would be to our hearts, I trust you will be ready for the great change and the soener enter upon immortal joys. Long life is not to be counted on either as a certainty or a source of happiness, but right living is, and it is therefore very foolish to waste ourselves in anxiety for what we may not command, possibly ought not to have, when rational ends of existence are forgotten, or postponed. * * * * *

* * * * * For the future I intend to trade less; and to avoid the possibility of embarrassment even. I desire an easier condition of my worldly affairs than consists with the entanglements of a trader, and besides, in my opinion, it is wiser for a man who has a competence to avoid the hazards of trade. In addition to all this, a higher consideration and one which I hope I do net make secondary, is the incompatibility of much trading and much religion. This arises chiefly from two considerations—the unfriendly entanglements and complications of business consequent on much trading; especially from the animus, the disposition and motive of the trader, which almost always is purely gain, and gain in a hurry, and in process of time this becomes so absorbing a motive that the chances are quite all against spirituality.

"I see from the New Orleans Christian Advocate that you have been blessed with a revival of religion in ———. You have, I hope, been partaker of its benefits, and you possibly are not aware of the activity with which the enemy will now work to despoil you of all that you have gained. You desire to make progress in the divine life. It is your purpose to glorify your maker; you would not be cheated out of your soul. Then hear my warning. Read your Bible more attentively and prayerfully than ever. Excitements of every sort, and religious excitements are not exempt from the operation of this rule, are apt to react. Be very watchful or you will soon find yourself through false security or some diabolical stratagem robbed of all the advantages you have derived from your excellent meeting. Study to advance in the Christian life. Merge your own will in that of Christ. Find His will in His word; forget self and live for Christ; love Him and labor to do all for Him; be wholly consecrated and rejoice in His providence. Rest forever assured that your precise circumstances are the best for you, and be thankful and humble; think—think long, deeply and prayerfully of what peculiar advantages your circumstances afford to do or to suffer God's will. So shall you happy and prosperous.

"With regard to the passage of Scripture you desire me explain, (29 v., xi chp. I Cor.) I suppose there can be no reasonable doubt. The context must be considered—the scope of the Apostle's argument. He is reproving drunkenness and sensuality in those who make an exouse of the Lord's supper to commit excesses, in themselves sinful. Their enormity is enhanced by the solemnity and sacredness of the occasion, he argues. How strongly he states the case in the 19, 20, 21, and 33d verse, you will see by reading them over. He then proceeds to give a reliable history of the institution and nature of the Lord's supper. This is contained in the 23, 24, 25, and 26th verses. He then draws a conolusion—'Whersfore' (that is, for which reason) 'whosoever shall eat this bread and drink this cup of the Lord unworthily' (that is, as the drunken revelers he has described in his previous etatement of the case,) 'shall be guilty of the body and blood of the Lord.' This is a very strong expression. It implies not only a reckless disregard of the sacred solemnity of the Lord's Suppsr, but guilt, guilt I suppose in proportion to the degree of unworthiness. The word enochos—reus—obnoxious to—accused of—chargeable with—'the body and blood' of Christ or guilty concerning 'the body and blood,' with respect to it.

"The character of the guilt is limited by that of unworthiness, and this the apostle specifies. 'But let a man (28th verse) examine himself, and so let him eat of that bread and drink of that cup.' 'So'—how! why, worthily, or in sober, affectionate, solemn 'remembrance" of the Saviour, "'tis his broken body,' and 'the new testament in his blood.' 'For he that eateth and drinketh unworthily' (29th verse) anaxios—indigne—unworthily, basely—(as when 'in eating, every one taketh before other his own supper, and one is hungry and another is drunken,') 'eateth and drinketh damnation to himself,' or judgment on condemnation, 'not discerning the Lord's body,' that is, not appreciating, judging of it rightly, condemning it and so being unworthy to celebrate the supper, and so condemning himself. It is rendered 'damnation,' and that which is rendered 'discerning,' have the same root which signifies to judge, to condemn. This, then, is the apostle's meaning; he is unworthy, because he does not eat and drink in remembrance of Christ, but for sensual indulgence, and this was the reason by which he presumes to judge and condemn the merits of Christ's shed-blood, and broken body does in fact condemn himself. It was the night of 'his betrayal,' the same night'—that night to which the mind and heart of all sincere Christians will revert, so dark and troubled in the Saviour's earthly history, unto the end of time, with affectionate solemn interest. On that same night of "his betrayal," when the last tie of earthly friendship gave way, and the last star of earthly hope went out in the heavens—that very night the Lord established this supper, and whoever desecrates it betrays him afresh; is unworthy; guilty of his body and blood. So said the fervent apostle, and so all our hearts reply!

"But did Jesus say that the broken-hearted penitent for sin, to whom the world is dark and who is in sympathy with the sorrow of that night. Did Paul say that such a child of suffering, only awaiting the crucifixion to the world, should not solemnly, hopefully, come to this supper? No, my dear brother; a worthier celebration of the Lord's death; a more appropriate remembrance of his shed-blood, heaven never witnessed. I feel that while I thus vindicate my title to the Lord's supper and your high privilege as an humble mourner to approach the heavenly feast with solemn and joyful hope, and feast on the spiritual manna, and drink the wine, that if we are faithful Christians we shall drink it now with Christ in the Father's Kingdom. I have consulted no commentary, and read the observations of no annotator, my only help in this hasty explication being a Greek Testament. I know not for what reason you ask the explanation, but I have given it to you, and sincerely hope it may afford you the pleasure to read it that it has me to write it; for I have written it almost in the presence of the Saviour-friend. "If any man hunger let him eat at home." But enough.

Affectionately, your brother,

NOTE.—Rev. H. N. McTyeire, Sir:—The above letter came into my possession a short time since, and finding it so interesting and instructive I thought it would not be unacceptable to some of your readers if you would give it a place. It is as not written with any expectation of its being published, therefore I withhold the name of the writer.

Yours, truly, S. L.

WHAT WILL OTHER PEOPLE SAY?

Mrs. Child, in one of her letters, makes the following observations, which we think are well worth heeding:

"There is a false necessity with which we industriously surround ourselves, a circle that never expands, whose iron never changes to ductile gold. This is the pressnce of public opinion, the intolerable restraint of conventual forms. Under this despotic influence, men and women check their best impulses, suppress their noblest feelings, conceal their highest thoughts. Each longs for full communion with other souls, but darss not give utterance to its yearnings. What hinders? The fear of what Mrs. Smith or Mrs. Clark will say, or the from of some sect, or the anathema of some synod, or the fashion of some clique, or the laugh of some club, or the misrepresentation of some political party. Thou art afraid of thy neighbor and knowest not that he is equally afraid of thee. He has bound thy hands, and thou hast fettered his feet. It were wise for both to snap the imaginary bonds nnd walk onwards unshackled. If thy heart yearns for love, be loving; if thou wouldst free mankind, be free; if thou wouldst have a brother frank to thee, be frank to him.

"But what will people say?

"Why does it concern thee what they say? Thy life is not in their hands. They can give thee nothing of real value, nor take from thee anything that is worth the having. Satan may promise thee all the kingdoms of the earth, but he has not an acre of it to give. He may offer much as the price of his worship, but there is a flaw in all his title-deeds. Eternal and sure is the promise, 'Blessed are the meek, for they shall inherit the earth.'

"But I shall be misunderstood, misrepresented."

And what if thou art? They who throw stones at what is above them, receive the missiles back again by the law of gravity, and lucky are they if they bruise not their own faces. Would that I could persuade all those who read this to be truthful and free—to say what they think, and act what they feel—to cast from them, like ropes of sand, all fear of sects and parties, of clans and classes.

"What is there of joyful freedom in our social intercourse? We meet to see each other, and not a peep do we get under the thick, stifling veil which each carries about him. We visit to enjoy ourselves, and our host takes away all our freedom, while we dsstroy his own. If the host wishes to work or ride, he dares not lest it seem impolite to the guest; if the guest wishes to read or sleep, he dare not lest it seem impolite to the host; so they both remain slaves and feel it a relief to part company. A few individuals, mostly in foreign lands, arrange this matter with wiser freedom. If a visitor arrives they say, 'I am busy to-day; if you wish to ride there are the horses and saddle in the stable; if you wish to read, there are books in the parlor; if you want to work, the men are raking hay in the fields; if you want to romp, the children are at play in the court; and if you want to talk with me, I can be with you at such an hour. Go where you please, and while you stay, do as you please.'

"At some houses in Florence, large parties meet without invitation, and without the slightest preparation. It is understood that, on some particular evening of the week, a lady or gentleman always receive their friends. In one room are books and flowers, in another pictures and engravings, in a third music. Couples are esconed in some shaded alcove, or groups are dotted about the rooms, in mirthful or serious conversation. No one is required to speak to his host, either entering or departing. Lemonade and baskets of fruit stand here and there on the side-tables, that all may take who like; but eating, which constitutes so large a part of American entertainments, is a slight and almost unnoticed incident in these festivals of intellect and taste.

"Wouldst thou like to see such social freedom introduced here? Then do it. But the first step must be complete indifference to Mrs. Smith's assertion, that you were mean enough to offer only one kind of cake to your company, and to put less shortening in the under-crust of your pies than in the upper. Let Mrs. Smith talk according to her gifts; but be thou assured that all living souls love freedom better than cakes or under-crust."

From the Buffalo Christian Advocate.

A CATHOLIC BISHOP'S OATH.

We ask the serious attention of our readers to points in the following OATH administered to John Loughlin, elect Bishop of the See of Brooklyn, in this State, at his consecration in New York on Sunday before last. We wish it might be read also, to a class of Catholics in Buffalo, who, though attached to the church, have still something of American freedom to cheer and arouse them. The oath was delivered in Latin, and the most materinl parts of it were suppressed in the published proceedings of the consecration. Another deception! Horrible! What an obligation! The same, probably, was administered to John Timon, Bishop of Buffalo. Each have sworn to fight and persecute all Protestants. God save the Republic!

"I, Father Loughlin, elect of the See of Brooklyn, from henceforward, will be faithful and obedient to St. Peter, the Apostle, and to the holy Roman Church, and to our lord, the lord N. Pope N., and to his successors, canonically coming in. I will neither advise, consent, nor do anything that they may lose life or member, or that their persons may be seized, or hands anywise laid upon them, or any injuries offered to them, under any pretence whatsoever. The counsel which they shall intrust me withal, by themselves, their messengers, or letters, I will not knowingly reveal to any, to their prejudice. I will help them to defend and keep the Roman Papacy, and the royalties of St. Peter, saving my order, against all men. The legate of the Apostolic See, going and coming, I will honorably treat, and help in his necessities. The rights, honors, privileges and authority of the Roman Church, of our lord the Pope, and his foresaid successors, I will endeavor to preserve, defend, increase and advance. I will not be in any uction or treaty, in which shall be plotted against our said lord, and the said Roman Church, anything to the hurt or prejudice of their persons, right, honor, state or power; and if I shall know any such thing to be treated or agitated on, or devised by any whatsoever, I will hinder it to the extent of my power; and as soon as I can, will signify it to said lord, or by some other, by whom it may come to his knowledge. The rules of the holy Fathers, the apostolic decrees, ordinances or disposals, reservations, provisions and mandates, I will observe with all my might, and cause to be observed by others. HERETICS, SCHISMATICS AND REBELS TO OUR LORD, OR FORESAID SUCCESSORS, I WILL, TO THE EXTENT OF MY POWER, PERSECUTE AND FIGHT AGAINST. I will come to a council when I am called, unless I be hindered by a canonical impediment. I will, by myself in person, visit the threshold of the apostles every three years, and give an account to our lord, and his foresaid successors, of all my pastoral office, and of all things anywise belonging to the State of the Church, to the discipline of my clergy and people, and lastly, to the salvation of souls committed to my trust: and will, in like manner, humbly receive and diligently execute the apostolic commands. And if I be detained by any lawful impediment, I will perform all the things aforesaid by a messenger hereto specially empowered, a member of my chapter, or some other, in ecclesiastical dignity, or else having a personage; or in default of these, by a priest of the diocese; or in default of one of the clergy, by some other secular or regulnr priest of improved integrity and religion, fully instructed in all things above mentioned. And such impediment I will make out by lawful proofs to be transmitted by the foresaid messeugor to the cardinal proponent of the holy Roman Church to the congregation of the sacred council. The possessions belonging to my table I will neither sell, nor give away, nor mortgage, nor grant unew in feo, nor anywiso alienate,—no, not even with the consent of the chapter of my Church, without consulting the Roman Pontiff. And if I shall desire any alienation, I will thereby incur the penalties contained in a certain constitution put forth about this matter. So help me God, and these holy Gospels of God."

THE DARDANELLES.—The old gates of Janus were opened when Rome was at war, and their modern prototypes, the Dardanelles stairs, are open only when a state of war makes treaty stipulations void, and the Porte deems it necessary to admit his allies through them to protect his capital. The accounts we have are that they are now open for the passage of the British and French fleets.

The Dardanelles, from which the strait, or Hellespont, derives its name, are four strong castles built opposite to each on the European and Asiatic coasts; and are the keys of Constantinople. Two of these castles were raised by Mahommed II, soon after the conquest of Constantinople, in 1453, the other two, the new castles, were built in the middle of the seventeenth century, to protect the Turks against the Venetians. The latter command the entrance to the Hellespont, and the distance from each is about two miles and a quarter. In four hours sail up the strait are the old castles, which are about three quarters of a mile apart. These are well mounted with formidable batteries.

All along the European shore to the Marmora, the aspect of nature in its ruggedness corresponds with the frown of the guns; but the scenery on the Asiatic shore is beautiful. The region abounds, too, in places famous in classic story. Here it was that Leander paid his nightly visit to Hero; here the ill-fated hosts of Xerxes crossed on a bridge of boats: here Solyman crossed on a bare raft; and in modern times, here Byron swam from Sestos to Alydos.

MISSIONARY APPROPRIATIONS OF M. E. CHURCH.

In the Secretary's monthly bulletin we find the M. E. Church, North, still going on finely—improving in itself. Good examplo to us. TWO HUNDRED AND SIXTY THOUSAND DOLLARS for 1854. But those domestic missions are a heavy item. Are these the border Conference Mission?

We copy, entire, Dr. Durbin's statement:

Let not the members and friends of the Methodist Episcopal Church be startled at the large draft made on them for the service of her missions during the year 1854. God hath prospered us much, and given us a great heritage, and a great work to accomplish, and we must not fail. But the Church has a right to know how the draft came to be authorized, and how the amount was ascertained. We will explain.

The General Conference, at its last session, appointed a General Missionary Committee of seven, being one from each episcopal district. They were Rev. Dr. Bangs, of New York; Rev. George Gary, of Western New York; Rev. W. H. Collins, of Michigan; Rev. C. Houts, of Missouri; Rev. J. F. Wright, of Ohio; Rev. H. W. Reed, of Iowa; and Rev. Geo. Weber, of Maine; together with Rev. Thomas Carlton, Treasurer, and Rev. J. P. Durbin, Corresponding Secretary. It is the duty of this committee, in conjunction with the Board of Managers, and with the concurrence of the Bishops, to determine the aggregate amount which may be drawn for the service of our missions during the next year, and to divide it between our foreign and domestic missions; then to distribute the amount appropriated to foreign missions, to the said missions severally. The amount appropriated to domestic missions is distributed by the General Conference Committee, in conjunction with the Treasurer and Corresponding Secretary, to the several annual conferences, for the domestic missions under their care respectively. In this distribution to the annual conferences the Board can take no action.

In order to arrive at just conclusions the Board of Managers appointed a committee of their own body, consisting of seven, viz: Rev. H. Bangs, Messrs. F. Hall, Wm. Truslow, P. E. Coon, Dr. Phelps, E. L. Fancher, and F. Godine.

We will now explain how the results were reached. The joint committee of the General Conference and Board of Managers, together with Bishops Waugh, Janes and Simpson, met in the Mission Rooms Thursday morning, November 3, at 9 o'clock, and labored diligently, having three sessions a day until their work was done. Estimates were received from the different foreign missions, and communications from the absent bishops, and from presiding elders and others; so that the fullest information was in the possession of the committe. They then proceeded to inquire, not what the churches could be induced to contribute, but what each mission required for its service during the year 1854. The foreign missions were first considered severally, the amount required for each was put down; then the German missions under the care of the several conferences were considered, and the amount required for this service was put down; then the missions to Europeans in the United States, other than German—viz: French, Swedes, Danes, Norwegians, and Welsh—were considered, and the amounts entered; Then the India mission in like manner; then the domestic mission proper, under the care of the several annual conferences; that is, those missions in which the service is in the English language, were carefully considered, and the amounts necessary for their support put down. Finally, the duty of the Church to extend her foreign missionary work was carefully considered, and the necessary amount set down.

In this way the questions were answered, namely: What does each department of our missionary work require for its proper encouragement and support during the year 1854? and what is the whole amount?—When the several appropriations were added up, and the aggregate amount declared, the committee felt a little startled, and the question was timidly asked: "Can we venture to report this large amount to the Board of Managers and to the Bishops for concurrence?" It required but a few minutes for the joint committee to come to the conclusion, in humble reliance on the blessings of God, that as the missions severally needed the amounts appropriated, it was their duty to report the same to the Board for concurrence.

Friday evening, at 7½ o'clock, the Committee and the Board met in joint meeting, together with the bishops, and the appropriations recommended by the joint committee were as follows:

Liberia, Africa	$32,957
China	12,000
Germany	10,000
France, in aid of Methodist missions	5,000
Norway and vicinity	2,000
Buenos Ayres, South America	1,000
Montevideo, for renewing the mission	2,000
For commencing a mission in India	7,500
For commencing a mission in the East	5,000
	$77,457
For English domestic missions under the care of the several annual conferences	$107,050
Indian missions	13,440

Upon the announcement of these heavy appropriations to the Board, there was evidently a slight distrust prevailing for a few minutes, but a free conversation soon removed all hesitancy, and the predominant feeling in the Board was that, as in its judgment our missionary work required these appropriations, it was its duty to concur with the committee. After the concurrence of the Board, Bishop Waugh made a brief but appropriate address, and announced the concurrence of the bishops in the aggregate appropriation of two hundred and sixty thousand dollars for the service of our foreign and domestic missions, for the year 1854, and in the distribution of it as set forth above.

This is the result of the most careful and prayerful deliberations of the general missionary committee, board, and bishops before the Church. It is for her, through her pastors and missionary committees and societies, to make such response as will show that we have not misjudged her ability or her willingness to take her proper place in the phalanx of the Protestant Churches in the great and holy missionary cause. It will require an aggregate increase of twenty-five per cent. over last year's contributions to meet the appropriations for next year. If they are met, as we doubt not that they will be, the missionary cause among us will advance. Our sister Churches expect this of us, God requires it of us; and, with his blessing we will do it.

WHAT CAN BE DONE BY ONE MAN.—It is cheering to see what can sometimes be accomplished by one liberal-hearted, energetic Christian, to whom God has given an abundance of this world's goods. A very elegant church edifice has just been completed in Rochester, New York, which was built at the expense of a single individual. We find the following notice of it in the Genessee Evangelist:

"The Presbyterian church, St. Peter's, [!] was dedicated Tuesday, 25th ult. The edifice is in the Romanesque style, one hundred and twenty long and fifty feet wide. The pulpit is on the east end, and a gallery on the west end. Under the gallery, separated from the main room by a screen of stained glass, is the lecture room, twenty-seven by fifty feet. As a specimen of architecture it is greatly admired. The entire cost, including bell, organ and other apendnges, is about $30,000, the whole of which has been cheerfully paid by Hon. L. A. Ward. Mr. Mellvaine, in his sermon, said he had never learned the secret motive that led to its creation; but he would deem it the sacrifice to God from a parent's heart for the triumphant and happy death of a beloved daughter."

A RUSSIAN PRIEST'S SERMON ON THE COMET.—The comet which has lately been visible has served a priest not far from Warsaw with materials for a very curious sermon. After having summoned his congregation together, although it was neither Sunday nor festival, and shown them the comet, he informed them that this was the same star that had appeared to the magi at the birth of our Saviour, and that it was only visible now in the Russian empire. Its appearance on this occasion, was to intimate to the Russian Eagle that the time was now come for it to spread out its wings and embrace all mankind in one orthodox and sanctifying church. He showed them that the star was now standing immediately over Constantinople, and explained that the dull light of the nucleus indicated its sorrow at the delays of the Russian army in proceeding to its destination, &c.

THE PHILOSOPHER AND THE CHILD.—The "Reaper" for November is an interesting number. We copy from it the following article:

A philosopher once asked a little girl if she had a soul. She looked up into his face with an air of astonishment and offended dignity, and replied—

"To be sure I have."

"What makes you think you have?"

"Because I have," she promptly replied.

"But how do you know you have a soul?"

"Because I do know," she answered again.

It was a child's reason; but the philosopher could hardly have given a better.

"Well, then," said he, after a moment's consideration, "if you know you have a soul, can you tell me what your soul is?"

"Why," said she, "I am six years old, and don't you suppose that I know what my soul is?"

"Perhaps you do. If you will tell me, I shall find out whether you do or not."

"Then you think I don't know," she replied, "but I do: "it is my think."

"Your think!" said the philosopher, astonished in his turn; "who told you so?"

"Nobody. I should be ashamed if I did not know that, without being told."

The philosopher had puzzled his brain a great deal about the soul, but he could not have given a better definition of it, in so few words.

PUBLISHING HOUSE OF THE HARPERS.—We extract from an article by the editor, in the November Repository, the ensuing paragraph respecting the extent and operations of the great New York publishers:

"The aggregate results of this establishment are summed up in a catalogue comprising some twenty-two hundred volumes. The method by which their catalogue is made up is as thoroughly systematic as are all the mechanical arrangements; and no dealer in fancy wares, or in delicate and costly fabrics, manifests greater skill in catering to popular taste. The foreign agent of the house transmits immediately any foreign work of merit that is published. Half of such books are rejected as soon as received; the instinct of the publishers assuring them that their republication will not pay. The others are read by competent sub-editors employed for that purpose. Not one-tenth of them, however, pass safely through the ordeal. A course somewhat similar is pursued with reference to manuscripts offered; a still larger proportion of them being rejected. Their list comprises a large proportion of the standard works in the English language. Over one-half of their works are original publications, for the copyright of which they have paid. So far as we know, they are as liberal to authors as any other firm in the country. Certain it is, several authors have received immense sums from them. Dr. Anthon, for his series, is in receipt of about $6000 per year; Jacob Abbott, some $2500. Stevens, the traveler, received from them nearly $60,000; and Prescott, the historian, over $60,000. The holders of Noah Webster's copyright, enormous sums; and, indeed, hundreds of other American authors have received large sums from them. The annual profits on Barnes's Notes on the New Testament amount to $25,000. The sale of many of their works has been on a proportionate scale. Of Macaulay's England, they have sold some 100,000; of Webster's Octavo Dictionary, over 100,000; Prescott's History of Mexico, nearly 40,000; of Jacob Abbott's books, 90,000; and of their splendid edition of the Holy Bible, 50,000.

A new Orphan Asylum has recently been opened in Baltimore, which is under the patronage of several religious denominations. It will be capable of accommodating 300 orphans—200 girls and 100 boys, with apartments for matrons, teachers, etc.

HYMENEAL.

MARRIED—At Wetumpka, Ala., on the morning of the 25th of October, by the Rev. Otis Saxton, BENJAMIN D. FOSCUE, of Jefferson, Texas, to Miss MARY E. LYON, of Wetumpka.

OBITUARY.

Departed this life, October 21st, Mrs. MARY GREEN, in Hollywood, near Mobile, of yellow fever. She professed religion and joined the M. E. Church at Prattville, in his 11th year, under the ministry of J. P. Pothan.

Possessing an honest heart she was confessed and lamented his coldness and inconsistency as a church member; and with a few aberrations consistency marked his whole career of life to the last. The only son is tenderly beloved is gone, and like many others no sister's hand or mother's heart near to administer or console him in his moments, though, (happy coincidence) when the son was struggling in death a mother's were struggling for him at the gate of heaven. His last words evinced his triumph. "Pray for my mother," said he, "that my trust in God; I have a father and friends in heaven, and I am going to see them." He desired to say more but his strength failed. Alas! brother, then art gone; we give thee up with hope to join thee again in the resurrection of the just.

DIED—On the 15th Sept., at the residence of J. G. Fullilove, Caddo, Parish, La., W. HOLMES, son of Robert and Sarah Holmes, Oglethorpe co., Ga., deceased, in the sixth year of his age. For many years was a very acceptable member of the M. E. Church. His mother, who was a devout, pious woman, instilled into his youthful mind a reverence for God and for holy things which he never forgot. He was a gracious Christian, and in the hour of trial God sustained him. In his deep suffering he said to me, "Sir, I have never trifled with religion; nor have I deceived myself; I know whom I have believed."

His wife having died more than a year previous, an infant daughter is left an orphan (but kindly cared for) and many friends who, while they honor his memory deplore his loss. J. C. BRASS.

DIED—On the 25th of September, in Millionville, Parish of Lafayette, Louisiana, of the recent epidemic, Mrs. MARY ANN MILLS, wife of Dr. W. G. Mills. The deceased was a native of Louisiana, of French parentage, and was united to her now widowed husband in June, 1837. She was raised in the Catholic faith; but after her marriage she became acquainted with Protestant people and Protestant principles, and embraced the doctrines of the Gospel in their purity and simplicity, as presented in the volume of inspiration.

She was a kind friend, a loving sister, a devoted wife, and a fond mother. To the sick and distressed of every condition she was indeed an ministering angel. During the prevalence of the late epidemic in the village of her residence, while her husband night and day professionally engaged visiting the sick she was ceaselessly employed in attending them, till she fell a sacrifice to the self-imposed labors prompted by the kindness of her heart. She has left an almost heart-broken husband, six sweet children, a loving band of brothers and sister, many relations, and numerous friends, to mourn her loss. Her absence from the home-circle is most keenly felt. There all the affection of her nature was drawn out, and all her domestic virtues were kept in lively exercise. She was ever assiduous in the duties of mistress, mother and wife. How keenly must that band of lovely children feel the mother's loss—the youngest of whom is only six months old! Who, but Heaven, can comfort the bereaved husband's sorrowing heart? But "they sorrow not as those without hope." She died in the Christian's faith, with the Christian's hope. Let her husband strive, by aid of grace in the vine, to meet his departed Amaza in her happy home above. May her children become the children of their Father in Heaven, that their mother's abode may be theirs!

R. W. KENNS.

She's gone to the land of the pure and the blest,
To dwell with her Saviour forever at rest;
Where sin cannot tarnish or sorrow invade,
And the glory of God is forever displayed.

Oh! selfish the feeling that weeps at her lot,
That calls her pure spirit from such a bright spot.
That bids her inhabit this cold earth again,
Whose heritage ever is sorrow and pain!

We know our loss is her infinite gain,
Yet the tear-drops will glow, and the lone heart complain
For the home she enlivened is gloomy and still,
The chambers deserted, the hearth-stone all chill

The sunshine her presence diffused is no more;
The charm she cast round her no power can restore
Oh! never again will her sweet voice be heard
Warbling forth her loud songs like a light-hearted bird.

All radiant in beauty and blooming in health,
Till mowed like a flower by the sickle of Death;
Surrounded by all things which make life so dear,
She dreamed not the hour of parting so near!

Could love have averted Death's merciless dart,
We had not been forced from our idol to part!
Could fond adoration have wooed her to stay,
She had not been torn from our circle away!

The grief of her heart-stricken husband and friends,
With the wail of her children unceasingly blends!
Their woe like the tossing of ocean's dark wave,
Now rises to heaven, now bursts o'er her grave!

Oh! could her bright spirit look down from above,
She'd whisper in accents of tenderest love—
"Weep not! I am happy! oh! hasten to me,
And we'll dwell with the Saviour eternally."

ELIZABETH JULIA KENNS.

ARABIAN COURTSHIP.—An Arabian, having brought a blush on a maiden's cheek by the earnestness of his gaze, said to her, "My looks have planted roses on your cheeks, why forbid me to gather them? the law permits him who sows to reap the harvest."

NOT AT HOME.—When Cibber once went to visit Booth, and know that he was at home, a female domestic denied him. Cibber took no notice of this at the time; but when in a few days afterwards Booth paid him a visit in return, he called out from the first floor that he was not at home. "How can that be?" answered Booth, "do I not hear your voice!" "To be sure you do," replied Cibber; "but what then? I believed your servant-maid, and it is hard, indeed, if you won't believe me!"

TITLES.—Several years ago there was a young English nobleman figuring away at Washington. He had not much brains, but a vast number of titles, which, notwithstanding our pretended dislike to them, have sometimes the effect of tickling the ear amazingly. Several young ladies were in doubt, going over the list—he is Lord Viscount so, and so, Baron of such a country, etc.. "My fair friends," exclaimed the gallant Lieutenant N., "one of his titles you appear to have forgotten." "Ah!" exclaimed they, eagerly, "what is that?" "He is Barren of Intellect," was the reply.

RED RIVER.—Cotton Crop, etc.—The Shreveport Southwestern of the 18th says:

We traveled through Caddo, Bossier, DeSoto and Harrison counties, Texas, and examined the crops particularly, and made many inquiries of the most intelligent planters respecting the probable amount of the present crop of cotton. Bossier, we learn from the most reliable sources, will fall at least four thousand bales behind last year. One gentleman alone will not come up to his last year's crop by eight hundred bales. Other smaller planters will fall behind from fifty to one hundred bales. This article will make probably about three-fifths of the crop of last year, and DeSoto will make about the same. It will be about the same in Harrison county, Texas, but Rusk Smith and a few other counties will do something better. Taken altogether the cotton crop in Northwest Louisiana and Eastern Texas will fall considerably below the crop of last year, per acre, but as there is more ground cultivated, especially in Texas, the aggregate crop may equal it if it does not surpass that of last year.

The Southwestern has the following additional items:

Yellow Fever.—It having been reported that this disease had again broken out in our town, we waited upon many of our physicians, and received from them the following report for the 24 hours ending at 2 o'clock, P. M., yesterday. Dr. Clark, new cases, none; Dr Gilpin, new cases, none; Dr. Logan, one new case, (negro girl); Dr Lower, one new case, (beyond the Angle-house, upwards of a mile from town).

The Railroad Tax.—The police jury of this parish has ordered another election to be held, for the purpose of ascertaining the sentiments of the owners of landed property on the propriety of the parish levying a tax for the benefit of the Vicksburg, Shreveport and Texas Railroad. This question has already been sufficiently discussed by the press, and it now becomes the duty of the land-owners to settle it in a definite manner.

The river at this point is falling slowly. The last Alexandria Remocrat states that there was sufficient water on the falls for boats to get over them. A heavy rain would give us through navigation.

Brick.—Our levee on Monday presented an unusually animated appearance. The steamboats Texas, Runaway and Francis Jones arrived during the day, and together with a large number of cotton wagons, gave indications that the business season had commenced.

During the past week our streets were enlivened by a large number of emigrants on their way to Texas. They were accompanied by their slaves, stock, cattle and farming utensils generally.

From the Baltimore American.

New Orleans and her Merchants.

Nothing shows the unconquerable energy of the American character in a stronger point of view, than the devoted philanthropy with which the citizens of New Orleans have combatted the ravages of the yellow fever, and the renewed activity with which they engage again in the business of commerce appropriate to the season. The life, hope and happiness of thousands have withered under the remorseless pestilence but like the resolute soldiers who re-form and advance in the very red breath of the battery, the merchants of that noble city are pressing the great object of commercial prosperity, and manifesting their position almost in defiance of nature. Nothing daunted, with the distinguishing characteristic of their race, they are employing resources adequate to the physical condition which surrounds them. They are preventing by drainage against the evils of humidity. They leave the swamp covered with the foliage which protects it from the unhalesome influence of the summer's sun, they extend railroads into the interior, thus promoting the hygiene of the city, not only by uninterrupted communication with fresh supplies of provisions during the year, but enabling them to send their women and children to the green meadows and sparkling springs of the mountains, wherever the epidemic threatens its fatal visitation. In any other country, a city ravaged as New Orleans has been, would not recover for years, perhaps it would be even abandoned. But the misfortunes which have befallen it seem only to have animated the humanity and fired the zeal of its citizens.

But, not only has Newitrleans had to contend with an unseen and irresistible enemy, but at the same time her formidable competitors for the trade of the Ohio valley have been steadily pressing their progress into what was deemed her peculiar territory. Already have four of the Atlantic cities opened conduits of trade, which like the crevasses of her mighty river, bid fair to draw off a large portion of that trade-current which has heretofore flowed without interruption to her warehouses. Already have these lines competing amongst themselves begun to reduce the cost of transportation—until the trade, arrested in its progress, has reversed its current and poured out its produce at Sandy Hook or Cape Charles instead of the Balize. But all this does not daunt this energetic people. They have held a survey of their resources. They find that the trade of the interior is larger than ever, and that whilst much of the upper trade must inevitably seek the conduits which we have described, there will still remain an immense amount which nothing can divert. The value of the produce of the interior exported through New Orleans for the year ending 31st August, is one hundred and thirty-four millions of dollars. It had steadily risen as follows: 1849-50, $96,987,874; 1850, $106,924,093; 1851-2 $108,051,708; 1852-3, $134,233,735; of these the principal items consist; as we have said, of articles which cannot be diverted by any competition. They are cotton, $68,250,424; sugar, $15,452,688; molasses, $5,140,000. Total, $87,842,112.

Here is nearly eighty millions of dollars, the product of the circumjacent country. We have not set down the provision product of the North-west, and the tobacco, of which NewOrleans must always export that portion demanded by ourincreased trade with the Gulf and Southern Ocean. Nor have we taken into consideration the immense transfer of productive labor from the Atlantic States to Texas, or the inevitable development of the adjacent continental and insular States, all of which will find their mart and market at NewOrleans.

In the spirit of sympathy for the suffering of this gallant city, of admiration for her labors in behalf of the stricken victims of a pestilence, and of confidence in the result of her energies, acting upon the unrivalled and illimitable resources which surround her, we bid her God speed. There is enough in the broad valley of the Mississippi, and in the expanding capacities of the American people, for herself and for us; and if there was not, we would never rejoice in the decline of a community which has maintained itself in a conflict with every enemy save that against which the progress of man can make but a futile resistance.

RAILROADS IN ARKANSAS.—Notwithstanding the adverse circumstances with which the people of this State have to contend, from the signs of the times, we feel assured that they will yet succeed in building the several roads contemplated. We have had and still have many difficulties to overcome. The indebtedness of the State—the want of wise men who have the capacity and the will to do at the head of affairs—all bear heavily upon us; but these obstacles may and will be surmounted. The natural resources of the State—her unrivalled mineral wealth and rich soil, are sufficient to enlist private capital and individual energy in the construction of roads for their development.

Thus far no benefit has been derived from the grant of land to aid in building a road from Cairo to Fulton with branches to the eastern and western boundaries of the State. Indeed, unless the policy by which it has hitherto been controlled is speedily managed, it will tend to embarrass rather than aid them. Had we had wise and patriotic men at the head of affairs, much might have been done ere this, toward their completion. As it is, while the lands remain valueless, and their disposition is daily becoming more embarrassing, private or individual enterprise is discouraged. If no grant of land had been made the work would in all probability be further advanced than it is.

As an evidence of this, we might point to the Gaines' Landing and Fulton Railroad. No aid has been extended to it by the State or General Government; but such is the energy with which it has been urged by the public-spirited men who have engaged in it, that nearly $700,000 of stock has been taken and the survey is begun. From present appearances it will be far advanced before the road for the construction of which a negative grant has been made is begun. The success which has attended this project so far, removes all doubt of its ultimate success. Its management has inspired public confidence and will enable the company to obtain the necessary means to carry it out.

The projected roads from Helena and Memphis to Little Rock, is further illustration of what can be accomplished by the people independent of the Government. Although it depends upon the will of the Legislature, which, or whether either of them will get the benefit of the grant of land, they have both resorted to their own resources, and will both of them build their roads without the lands. The Memphis route has already been surveyed as far as the St. Francis, and will be completed in a short time. The survey of the Helena route will be commenced in a very short time if it has not been already.

The Fort Smith and Little Rock, the Western Border, the Napoleon and Little Rock roads will likewise be pushed forward to an early completion.

One of the most gratifying, and to us, encouraging considerations connected with these works, is the fact that there is really no conflict between them—they are component parts of a whole system—all demanded by the us-

Gaines' Landing and Fulton Railroad will be enhanced in value by its connection with the Cairo and Fulton Railroad. It will place the wealthy and flourishing counties of Ouachita, Bradley, Drew, Ashley, Columbia and Calhoun, in direct communication with the Mississippi river, giving them choice of the markets on that river, and with New Orleans, St. Louis, Memphis and other places by railroad.

A road West, no matter which side of the river gets the land, is demanded by the necessities of the people, and both can command the necessary capital to build them.

The road to Napoleon will traverse the richest cotton country in this, or perhaps, any other State in the Union. The uncertainty of the navigation of the Arkansas river is such as greatly embarrasses the operations of the planter, and is a heavy tax upon his industry. There is wealth enough in the counties it traverses to build it almost without an effort. When built, it will afford them advantages similar to those afforded by the Gaines' Landing Road, to the counties lying upon it. [Little Rock Whig, 10th

ARKANSAS.—We copy the following items from the last Fayetteville Independent

Our streets are daily crowded with emigrants' wagons, on their way to Texas. We hope that the new settlers may have as good a time as they anticipate, but we fear they will not Apples to Texas.—Several wagons have gone from this county lately with apples for Austin, San Antonio, and other points in Western Texas.

INDIAN CLAIM TO NORTHERN VERMONT.—There is now in attendance upon the Legislature of Vermont, in session at Montpelier, a deputation of Iroquois Indians, to press a claim to a considerable portion of the State. The Springfield Republican says the claim is no new affair. It was presented first in 1780, and has been renewed at frequent intervals since. It embraces all that portion of the State North of Otto creek and between Lake Champlain and where the water begins to flow into the Connecticut. This territory belonged originally to the tribe now laying claim to it, and they insist that they have never ceded it away. They ask that their claim should be fairly investigated, at any rate. The deputation at Montpelier are awaiting the arrival of Eleazer Williams, of "Dauphin" notoriety, upon whom they rely for a proper presentation of their case.

FATAL ACCIDENT.—A melancholy accident occurred in the neighborhood of Cross Hill, Catahoula parish, on the 17th., A Mr J Ligon was out duck hunting, accompanied by a lad, aged ten years, named William Carter, son of Capt. H. N. Carter, his nephew. The boy it seems was anxious to shoot at the ducks which they had come in sight of, when Mr. Ligon took the gun from him, and leaning it on his arm, put a cap on the tube, cocked it, and, in the act of returning it, the hammer fell and the gun went off, lodging the whole load in the breast and heart of Carter. The little fellow immediately ran towards Mr. L. and exclaimed, "Uncle you have shot me," then fell and instantly expired

DIED IN A TRUNK.—In San Francisco, on the 10th ult., a death occurred in the most singular and distressing manner. A lady had seized her child, only a year old. She supposed it had lost itself in the street, and advertised for it, but could learn nothing. On the 13th she had occasion to open her camphor wood trunk, and there lay her child, dead. It had fallen into the trunk, and in trying to get out had pulled down the lid which closed with a spring and fitted so closely, that the child had smothered to death.

IRON FOR THE BRUNSWICK AND FLORIDA RAILROAD.—The ship Agnes arrived at Brunswick, Ga., we learn by the News, on the 14th with 1305 tons of T iron for the Brunswick and Florida Railroad. The Agnes sailed from Middleborough, river Tees, England, on the 24 October, and was forty-four days out. Reports having spoken her Melissa Ann, from NewYork, in 30 46 North latitude, bare hull, no spars and entirely deserted

TELEGRAPH OPERATORS.—Mr. Justice Meredith, in the Superior Court at Quebec, has decided that the operator of a telegraph company cannot be compelled to divulge in a court of justice the contents of a telegraphic dispatch sent or received by him

DESTRUCTIVE FIRE IN ALTON.—The St. Louis Republican says that a fire occurred in Alton, Ill., on the 13th, by which property to the amount of $20,000 was destroyed. Mr. A. H. Quigley's Stove establishment was consumed with a loss of $15,000.

According to the last census, Georgia grows, 1,068,835 bushels of wheat; South Carolina, 1,060,277; Alabama, 294,041; Mississippi, 137,364. But neither of these States produce as much as a single county (Monroe) in the valley of Genesee, New York

MOBILE.—The Advertiser of Tuesday has the following items:

The Higher River.—This stream, which our readers are well aware has not been navigable beyond Hemopolis for some time, is reported, by the steamer Aalle, as falling. The Aalle arrived yesterday from Demopolis and grounded on her downward trip. She brought 580 bales cotton, and 85 cabin passengers, and leaves again for the same point this evening

The Very First.—Dubose's flat, with two thousand bushels of "corn on the cob," arrived on Saturday night from Pine Jackson, Clarke county. This is the first flat-boat load received this season

A MISER.—The Boston Herald says that recently, in examining the assets of Jonathan Kimball, Esq., of Lisbon, who died lately, aged about 80 years, the appraisers found near $6000 in his trunk, most of which had been there for several years. With the rest was $200 in bills of the Lancaster Bank, dated twenty years ago, and as fresh as when first issued.

VERDICT AGAINST THE HUDSON RIVER RAILROAD.—In the Superior Court of NewYork, on the 12th, $1 750 damages were awarded to Mr. Richard Crane, against the Hudson River Railroad for injuries received by a collision on that road in 1851

LOUISVILLE AND MEMPHIS AIR LINE RAILROAD.—A large meeting was held at Louisville on the evening of the 10th for the purpose of taking into consideration the project of a straight line railroad from Louisville to Memphis.

Mississippi Central Railroad.—The citizens of Marshall county, Miss., gave a barbecue on the 16th inst., at Holly Springs, at which time the ceremony of breaking ground on the above road took place.

PROFESSOR DRIFTOW.—The Washington Union, of the 17th, says we are informed that Professor Bellows, the Superintendent of the Census Bureau, leaves the city today on a visit to Columbia, South Carolina, where, by invitation, he is to deliver an address before the Convention of Southern Planters on the first Monday in December. Mr. Bellows is a native of the Palmetto State. He expects to be absent about three weeks.

THE U. S. ARMY.—Gen. Scott has issued a General Order assigning the command of the Departments as newly organized. Gen. Wood takes the Eastern Department; then Twiggs, the Western; then, P. F. Smith, the Texas; then Garland, the New Mexican; and then, E. A. Hitchcock, the Pacific Department.

THE LARGEST COLLEGE IN THE UNITED STATES.—The whole number of students in the theological, collegiate and preparatory departments of Oberlin College is 1505 of whom 726 are male and 579 are female.

THE PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE.—It is stated that President Pierce's message will be sent, as usual, to the postmasters of the most important cities in advance, to be given to the newspapers the moment it is presented to Congress

NEW LINE OF OCEAN STEAMERS.—Messrs. Reed & Wright, of St. John propose to place upon the route between St. John and Liverpool, a line of screw steamers, to ply monthly—provided the Provinces will contribute £10,000 a year for ten years towards the undertaking. The probability seems to be that their proposition will be accepted

THE ERICSSON.—The caloric ship Ericsson, which has been undergoing repairs at Williamsburg, N. Y., for several months, it is said, will be ready to make another trip in a few weeks, and that her projectors entertain confidence that she will perform to their satisfaction.

ONE OF THE BEST.—One of the best "hits" ever made at an impropriety in a lady's dress was made by Talleyrand. During the revolution, when asked by a lady his opinion of her dress, he replied, "it began too late, and ended too soon."

THE BANK OF ENGLAND.—The amount of gold coin and bullion in the Bank of England, at the return dated October 28, was £11,960,206—a decrease of £341,288 since the return of the previous week

SHIPWRECK.—Two Hundred and Fifty Lives Lost.—Letters by the overland mail convey intelligence of the lamentable wreck of a British ship supposed to be the Lady Evelyn, and a fearful sacrifice of life. She was 748 tons burden, commanded by Capt M'Lellan, and was the property of Messrs. Herring, of Liverpool. She was chartered for the conveyance of 250 Chinese emigrants to San Francisco, and departed in every apparent safety with her living freight. The catastrophe is reported to have occurred on the night of the 20th July, on one of the cluster of islands known as the Tytoongsan, in the Eastern or China Sea. She quickly went to pieces and out of 250 souls on board, including the crew, only six European sailors and twenty Chinamen were saved.

FIRE ON THE PRAIRIES.—During the past week the skies to the North and North-east have been brilliantly and beautifully illuminated. It is occasioned by the long grass burning upon the prairies. Passengers down on the night trains of the Alton and Chicago road represent the sight as exceedingly grand. Easterners particularly to whom a prairie is a novelty, and a prairie on fire a wonder, cannot suppress their astonishment on witnessing the fiery phenomenon for the first time. THE CAPITAL OF GEORGIA.—The editor of the Savannah Georgian writing from Milledgeville says:

The removal of the seat of Government is a question now receiving much attention. It is by no means a new opinion with me, that its central position, accessibility and superior hotel accommodations designate Macon as the most eligible point for the Capital of Georgia. I therefore hope that the present Legislature will not adjourn without providing for the erection of a suitable State House in that city.

LOUISIANA.—Gov. Hebert has appointed the 23d of December as Thanksgiving day

We copy from the Democratic Advocate the following appointments by the Governor:

Notaries Public for the Parish of Orleans.—Edward Hebert, vice P McKittrick deceased

Commissioners to take Depositions.—Messrs R Mackey, Jos B Nunes, A M Harris, New York city; David H Barney, Leonard Meyer, Philadelphia; Charles H Hawes, Henry D Black, Charleston S C; Wm H Wiggins, Wilmington, Del.; A W Campbell, Jackson, Penn

District Attorney Seventh Judicial District.—William F Kernan, vice Daniel Mortindale, deceased.

Notary Public Parish St. Landry.—Wm Morton, vice F Gauthman deceased

Surveyor.—Franklin Parish.—Jacob P Bulden

Additional Delegate to World's Fair, N. Y.—Dr. E. H. Barton, of New Orleans.

The Vicksburg Whig of the 15th has the following items:

The weather is delightful, crops yielding well, planters are busy, girls smiling, health good, and everything denotes prosperity and happiness in our parish.

Our distinguished U S Senator, Hon. J. P. Benjamin, passed through our village on last Sunday, on his way to Washington. He looks remarkably well, and seems to defy the cares and troubles incident to the Senatorial toga.

The Baton Rouge Gazette of the 18th announces the death of Col. Webster, formerly stationed at the Garrison at that place.

THE FEVER AT ALEXANDRIA.—The Alexandria Democrat, of the 16th, announces that the epidemic has not yet left that town, although hopes had been entertained that it would disappear with the first frost. It advises citizens and strangers to remain away for the present. It says: "There were six deaths from fever last week, and a number have been attacked in the town and vicinity within the last three days. We heard of four new cases yesterday, two being of a malignant type. We heard last evening of recent deaths in Natchitoches and Campte—among them the Superior of the Convent in the first named place."

Washington.

The following paragraphs are from the Washington Star of the 15th:

Acting Assistant Commissaries of Subsistence.—On the recommendation of the Secretary of War, which has been concurred in by the second Comptroller, in consideration of the necessities of the service and the former practice, Acting Assistant Commissaries of Subsistence in the Army are allowed the additional pay of $20 per month (but not at the same time, the additional ration granted to Captains and subalterns by the act of March 2, 1827) while actually in the performance of said duty. The legislation upon this subject is in a state of singular confusion, which ought to be remedied by an additional statute

A Resignation and Re-appointment and Promotions in the Revenue Marine Service.—Second Lieut R. A. H. Handy, resigned.

Third Lieut Thomas Moffet to be a Second Lieutenant, vice Handy resigned.

John M Nones dropped at the reduction of the service in April last, to be a Third Lieutenant vice Moffat promoted.

Second Lieut Moffat detached from the James C. Dobbin" and ordered to the Pinney at Eastport, Me.

Third Lieut John M Nones ordered to the "James C. Dobbin" at Wilmington, N. C.

Midshipman William G. Dozier detached from the sloop-of-war Albany and Midshipman Bennet Riley ordered to her in his stead; the former having the usual leave of absence

First Assistant Engineer Henry Mason resigned.

Acting Gunner Wm. W. Fisher resigned. [Washington Star

FROM BERMUDA.—The N. Y. Commercial Advertiser of the 16th has received dates from Bermuda to the 8th inst. The Colonial Parliament was prorogued on the 7th. The Governor in his closing speech thus refers to the visitation of that island by yellow fever:

The fame which Bermuda has so long enjoyed as a healthy residence has been endangered by a visitation unparalleled in malignity, and beyond precedent fatal. I confidently hope and pray, however, that the worst is passed, and that it may please Divine Providence in his mercy to withdraw from us this plague and grevious sickness, and once more restore these Islands to their wonted healthy condition

It becomes of think a matter of great public importance to consider how far, in any future epidemic, so awful a sacrifice of human life may be, if not altogether avoided, at least mitigated, by attention to the improvement of the towns; nor can I but feel a conviction that during the season of recess measures may be concerted to secure so desirable an object

MORE MORTALITY AT SEA.—The ship Delaware arrived this morning from Bremen, has had fifteen deaths during the passage, out of two hundred and fifty

The ship Emma Fields, arrived this morning from Liverpool, had forty-two deaths during the passage, out of 440.

The packet ship Calhoun, from Liverpool, has lost forty-eight passengers, the second mate, four seamen, and a boy on the passage. The C. when she left Liverpool, had one hundred and seventy-five passengers [N Y Commercial Advertiser.

WORDS.—There is a perennial noiseless, and even sacred-ness, in work. Nor is ever so benighted, forgetful of his high calling, there is always hope in a man that actually and earnestly works; in idleness alone is there perpetual despair. Doubt, desire, sorrow, remorse, indignation, despair itself—all these, like hell-dogs, lie beleaguering the soul of the poor day-worker as of every man; but he heeds himself with free valour against his task, and all these are stilled—all these shrink murmuring far off into their caves. [Thomas Carlyle.

RAILROAD ACCIDENT AND MIRACULOUS ESCAPE.—A few nights ago the express train from Buffalo for Cleveland, with four hundred passengers, while going at the rate of forty miles an hour, came in collision with a tree which had been blown across the track. The crash was awful. The tree, two feet in diameter, was broken in three places, and shivered as if struck by a thunderbolt. The locomotive was smashed to pieces and destroyed. It turned over and over three times. The baggage was broken, letting the stoves and boiling water pour, and it took fire also. The tender and two baggage-cars were hurled upon the fragments of the locomotive, and smashed into one common wreck. The first three passenger-cars, filled with people, were dashed upon the ruins of the baggage-cars and engine. They were badly broken and turned bottom side up. The screams, yells and shouts that filled the night air, after the accident, it is stated, were horrible. The men behaved with less coolness and presence of mind, in many cases than the women. But, what is truly wonderful, after the excitement was over, it was ascertained that not a single passenger was killed or had a limb broken. All, however, were more or less bruised and scratched. [Balt. Sun 16th.

NEW ORLEANS AND OHIO RAILROAD.—We learn from the Paducah Journal there are now over four hundred laborers at work on this road, and the force is daily increasing. Nearly all the timber on the line, in McCracken, is cut, and the work is now going on in Graves county. The stockholders in Graves and McCracken counties are paying their installments without a murmur, and the spirit of discontent which, a short time since, was whispered in the counties, has ebbed and now, in these sections, every bosom is pregnant with joy at the flattering prospect of the speedy consummation of this enterprise and the advantage to be derived from it. The contractors feel fully able to complete the first ten miles by the 1st of April, and are confident by the 25th of July a train of cars will be running from Paducah to Mayfield [Louisville Journal.

CHARLESTON AND NASHVILLE.—The train of the Nashville and Chattanooga Railroad, says the Chattanooga Advertiser of the 15th inst., ran over this end of the route for the first time, some 22 miles of the way. This is within five miles of the bridge, and most of that track is ready for the engine. A few weeks and the connection is made, and Nashville will be only 10 hours from our city [Charleston Standard, 17th.

ALABAMA.—The Message of the Governor of Alabama was received on Wednesday by the Legislature, which voted to dispense with its reading on account of the great length of that document. The message is published in none of the Montgomery papers. When it is received we shall give a brief abstract of its contents.

LARGE ARRIVAL OF EMIGRANTS.—The British ship Blanch, from Liverpool, Oct. 7, arrived at this port yesterday afternoon with 400 emigrant passengers. They had experienced excellent health during the voyage.

THE SWAMP LANDS OF ILLINOIS AND MISSOURI.—The number of acres of swamp land lying in the State of Missouri is reported to be 2,765,871, and in Illinois 2,270,055. Much of this land can and will be reclaimed, and, in general, the soil is as rich as to make it very valuable.

A GOOD VOYAGE.—The Boston ship Meridian, Captain Manson, from Liverpool in thirty-five days, arrived on the 13th at Boston with upwards of 500 passengers, all in good health, and not a death on the passage

CHOLERA AT SEA.—The ship American Union arrived at New York from Liverpool, on the 15th, with 620 passengers. Seventy-five others had died on the voyage besides several of the crew.

FROM THE BAHAMAS.—By the arrival of the bark Cordelia, at Philadelphia, we have advices from the Bahamas to the 30th October. Salt is reported as very scarce throughout the islands, and none was to be had at Curacoa or Bonaire.

Later from Havana

Much inconvenience was being felt in various parts of the Island of Cuba from the great lack of negroes from cholera and other causes during the late summer.

Great preparations were being made in Havana for the celebration of the Queen of Spain's birth-day, on the, 9th inst.

The new Captain General is to arrive about the beginning of December.

The Diario de la Marina of the 17th, makes the following particulars:

In its local news it says that some of the sugar mills have commenced and others are about to commence their grindings. Those whose fields are old and planted with the chrystaline cane may, it thinks, do it with advantage, but not those whose fields are new and planted with the otaheitecane.

It says that the Trinidad railroad has been supposed by some to be suspended in its construction, but that the work is about to be resumed with activity. It goes on to exhort the Cubans to bestir themselves in enterprises of this sort. It afterwards mentions the arrival of Senor Sagebien, Chief Engineer of the road, accompanied by some of his assistants, and that on the morrow the work of survey, of leveling and tracing the line of the road, will be begun.

Later From Texas.

By the steamship Mexico, which arrived at this port, Saturday evening, we have received files of Galveston papers to the 17th. From the Galveston News of the 17th we extract the following items:

A letter from El Paso, of the 27th ult., says that on the 20th the Indians had attacked a company of Americans and stole five hundred head of horses and mules, and also the blankets and clothes of the party. The writer says that the depredations of the Indians are of daily occurrence, and that they even venture within a few hundred yards of the fort occupied by the United States troops at that place.

Gen Rainey arrived this morning by the Louisiana. He proceeds direct to Corpus Christi. We understand he will take command on the frontier between the Rio Grande and Red River.

The Western Texan says the Fifth Infantry Regiment, under Col. Loomis, left San Antonio on the 31st ult., to take up their line of march for the Rio Grande, and that Col. Capron and James Dawson have contracted with Maj. Gabbit for the transportation of the commissary stores now at Indianola to El Paso. One hundred and fifty wagons will be required for the transportation

The bark Lamartine arrived off on Sunday and came to the city yesterday, with one hundred laborers who are engaged to work the Galveston and Houston Railroad. They were taken the morning by Virginia Point, with all their tools and implements, to commence the great work

The Galveston Journal of the 17th says:

We have just learned from a gentleman who came passenger in the pilot boat, direct from Matamoras and Brownsville, that the epidemic is carrying off the inhabitants in alarming numbers. The Mexican population especially, are carried off like sheep with the rot. That ignorant and superstitious race have no faith in medicines and the prescriptions of physicians; no sooner are they taken than they resort to the mummeries of charms and senseless ceremonies. It is deemed necessary to say that this plan of treatment is not eminently successful.

The soldiers and officers of the garrison at Brownsville he had been exempt. Many of the former had died and two of the latter—Lieut. Webster and Lieut Dunigan. The garrison was, at last accounts, but about three hundred and fifty strong.

The State Gazetteer says the press is well represented in the Legislature. The following members are or have been editors or printers, or both. Hon Wm Fields, of Liberty; J. Marshall, of Marshall. Harrison county, the man who was tied by his competitor in two elections, but cut the Gordian knot by a single vote, on the 103rd trial. Horace Cane, editor of the Columbia Democrat; Benj F. Neal, formerly connected with this paper, and since the proprietor of the Nueces Valley; J. W. Ferris, former editor of the Jefferson Herald; G. W. Crawford, founder of the Lone Star, at Washington, and E. B. Scarbrough, of the Brownsville Flag.

From the Brazoria Planter of the 9th, we make the following extracts:

We believe that all our sugar planters are now busily engaged in making sugar, and the general report is that they are made a fine article or more to the acre than they are making this season. We have seen several samples and they are as fine as we ever saw. The weather has been favorable, and should it continue so for another month, Brazoria county will produce a larger supply of this article than she has ever done before.

LIPAN INDIANS.—Major Howard started a party of Lipans, on Monday morning last, for Austin, where delegations from various tribes will meet for the purpose of having "a talk" with Gen. Sam Houston. Good results are anticipated from this interview—the General being a favorite of the red men and having great influence over them. [San Antonio Ledger.

The Galveston News of the 15th says:

We are sorry to learn that the yellow fever still prevails in Houston to some extent, though not so bad as some reports make it. Passengers by Sunday morning's boat say there were four deaths on Saturday, and several other cases were considered dangerous, and among these Capt. Bodmun, who is well known to our citizens.

Passengers by the steamer last night say there were four or five deaths in Houston on Sunday, and two yesterday.

The Legislature met and was organized on the 9th. The Senate was called to order by Lieut Gov Henderson and James P. Johnson was elected Secretary; M. B. Hearing and C. J. Garrison, Assistant Secretaries; Robert W. Hartin, Engrossing Clerk; H. W. Raglin, Enrolling Clerk. In the House, T. H. Duval, Secretary of State, presided, and H. R. Runnells, of Bowie county, was elected Speaker, and Benjamin T. Hill, Clerk.

In his message Gov. Bell comments at great length on the importance to Texas, of the consummation of the Pacific railroad plan, and recommends to the Legislature to encourage it by every means within their power. The amount of money now remaining in the State Treasury reaches the large sum of $3,966,125 08.

By the arrival of the steamship Louisiana at this port Tuesday morning, we have Galveston papers to the 18th and Indianola to the 19th. We copy from the Galveston News of the 18th

Our trade is still waiting for the moving of waters. The whole country is reported to be dry. This is favorable to gathering in of crops, but not to getting them to market. We have several boats on rendezvous, both for the Trinity and Brazos rivers, by the first rise, and some others are expected daily. Our planters may rest assured their crops will be speedily brought to our market as soon as we have navigation.

Liberty County.—By a letter from Liberty county dated the 13th inst., we learn that a severe frost occurred there on the morning of the 10th. The ice was a quarter of an inch thick.

A project is on foot to establish a saw-mill on the Trinity, at the mouth of Reed-head slew, about a mile from Broad Cane. The capital is set at $20,000, which is intended to include the cost of a steamer to transport the lumber to this market. This is a most commendable enterprise and if conducted energetically must prove lucrative.

The health of Liberty is good, and produce cheap. Some Mormon preachers have been trying to convert the citizens of the upper portion of the county, and at last accounts had succeeded in making two proselytes.

The State Gazette gives a table with the names of all the members of the Legislature, the ages, the time of their coming to Texas, the State or country from whence they came, the place of nativity, their occupation and their present address. Their ages vary from 23 to 56 which are the youngest and oldest. There are in all 33 Senators when all are present, and 80 members of the House of Representatives; 26 of them are from Tennessee, 12 from Georgia, 11 from North Carolina, 10 from Kentucky, South Carolina and Virginia each, 8 from Alabama, 6 from Mississippi, 3 from Illinois, 2 from Massachusetts, Ohio and Louisiana each, and 1 from Connecticut, Missouri, Germany, France and Texas each. There is but one native Texan, namely, James H. Durst, from Rio Grande City, Star county, 34 years of age. There are 63 farmers, 31 lawyers, 6 physicians, 3 merchants, 2 printers, 2 mechanics and 1 teacher.

The Galveston, Houston and Henderson Railroad.—The ceremonies usual in the commencement, of works of great public importance were opened and gone through with on this road, at Virginia Point, on Wednesday morning, the 16th instant, in the presence of a numerous and respectable assembly of ladies and gentlemen, and the operators who have been engaged to grade the road.

The hands began to work on Thursday last, and we have every assurance that it will be completed with vigor to its ultimate terminus at Henderson, if the Legislature should mete out the same measure of justice in the distribution of bounds in public domain which it has extended to other companies chartered in the State. If this there can be no manner of doubt.

From the Rio Grande.—The pilot boat Water Witch, Captain King, from Brazos Santiago on Monday night arrived here on Wednesday, the 16th inst:

We learn that the yellow fever had not prevailed at Point Isabel or the Brazos, but at Brownsville and Matamoras it was very severe.

There had been fifty-two deaths in the garrison at Brownsville, including Lieut Henry Whiting, Lieut Duncan and Col Webster the Commandant of the post. The total number of deaths from the fever in Brownsville had exceeded two hundred chiefly from amongst the Mexican population.

In Matamoras the mortality is said to have been very great, but as the authorities prohibited tolling of bells for funerals and records of burials no estimate could be formed of the number of deaths. The disease was rather on the increase at last advices.

The Houston Telegraph says:

We recently met with Mr Criliver, who accompanied the party of Mr. Stewart to the Guadaloupe mountains, and were shown by him several beautiful specimens of galena or sulphuret of lead, and a specimen of silver ore of a very excellent quality. He says that thousands of tons of the galena are found directly on the surface of the ground in these mountains and extensive forests of pine, beech and maple, are found close to the mines. Fuel of the best quality is thus found close at hand for melting the ore. He states also that the party visited a salt lake near the head of the Colorado, which was more than a mile long, and a quarter of a mile broad. The bottom of the lake was covered with a layer of beautiful white salt more than four inches thick.

The News by the Baltic.

We copy the following items from the NewYork Herald of the 16th:

The Cunard mail steamship Baltic, Captain Comstock, arrived at this city on Monday. She left Liverpool on the 2d inst., and Queenstown on the 3d inst., and consequently made the passage to Sandy Hook in 11 days and 13 hours. On the passage she encountered very severe weather, and was detained off the Banks of Newfoundland by a dense fog for 36 hours. The Baltic has brought out 175 passengers, and 1,500 bags of mail matter. The Europa was passed on the 3d inst., at 2 P. M., off the Mersey, and the Canada on the 4th inst., at 2 P. M., off the Mersey.

THE FORGET-ME-NOT.

[FROM THE GERMAN OF MEISSLER.]

I.

By yon brook, so softly streaming,
Springs a flow'ret, friendly, fair;
Gentle as the moonlight's beaming,
Pass it not unheeded there.

II.

Bright as heaven's unclouded azure,
Symbol flower of mem'ry's truth,
To the pensive heart a treasure,
Whispering words that cheer and soothe.

III.

Mild as starry hours, whose splendor
Tells of faith that knows an spot;
From afar, its warnings tender,
Doth it speak, "forget me not!"

IV.

When thy farewell-tears are flowing,
When to part must be thy lot,
By thy path its blossom blowing,
Meekly pleads, "forget me not!"

V.

Dear one! to this flow'ret listen!
Words of love each leaf hath got!
See! its tears are dews that glisten,
And it sighs, "forget me not!"

Last Days of Mozart.

This gifted composer—unfortunately, like most men of genius, impulsive and erratic, now on a mountain wave of joyous emotions, and anon in the deep and gloomy vale of melancholy—was, alas! too often the victim of seductive wiles and his high and noble nature frequently yielded to appetite and passion. Would that it had been otherwise; but the snares and blandishments of fashionable life were around him, and he must have been more than a man to have withstood their powers.

One of the most pleasant reflections connected with his eventful history was the unwavering attachment and tenderness of his faithful wife, who stood by him in every hour, and would not allow her affections to become alienated, notwithstanding the misgivings of her heart, and the many rumors which came to her ears. In the midst of all, this noble woman clung to him to the last.

A frame so delicate as that of Mozart's, could not always stand the heavy draws made upon it. The days and nights of intense mental labor, added to the dissipation which almost necessarily connected itself with the circles in which he moved, made fearful inroads upon his health. It was during the composition of the Zauberflote that the manifestation of those symptoms, which portended the decay of his vital powers, and a general breaking up of his constitution, first appeared. As usual, he grew interested in his work, and wrote incessantly by day and by night, but not, as formerly, with impunity. He often fainted away over his compositions, and remained for several minutes before consciousness returned. His health suffered so much, that he was obliged to suspend his labors, and take an excursion to Baden While there he executed his "Ave Vernum Corpus," a strain of such calm but exalted religious feeling as may well interpret his sensations in sickness and solitude.

About this period one of the most curious, if not mysterious incidents of his life occurred. As he sat musingly in his study one day, he was surprised by the entrance of a stranger, who presented him a letter without any signature, the purport of which was to inquire whether he would undertake the composition of a Requiem, and also to ascertain when he could have it ready, and what would be its price? Mozart, after consulting his wife, agreed to the proposition of the unknown, fixed the price, and received twenty-five ducats as part payment, but would not determine the time of its completion. He was informed by the stranger that it would be vain to trouble himself about who his employer was, and that he would never regret the undertaking.

After the departure of the mysterious messenger, Mozart fell into a deep reverie, and suddenly calling for pen, ink, and paper, he began to write. His progress, however, was interrupted, being called away on professional business to Prague. Just as he was entering the carriage the stranger appeared and, looking intensely at Mozart, said, "How will the Requiem proceed now?" On Mozart's giving him a satisfactory answer, they separated. While at Prague, in the midst of its mirth and revelry, he had a long presentiment of his death; and went to think, on leaving, that he should see his numerous friends no more.

On his return he re-commenced the Requiem; but the thought of his death filled him with melancholy. He labored in unusual silence and dejection, and seemed to be possessed of one idea, which entirely absorbed his mind. Friends called, and his affectionate wife tried to rally him, but all in vain; he seemed like one a spell-bound, and labored on in silent abstraction. On a fine day, seated in a grove with his wife, he said to her, "Constance, I am writing this Requiem for myself." She tried to reason him out of his gloomy fancies, but in vain. His eyes filling with tears, he answered: "No, no; I cannot last long; I have certainly been poisoned." On consulting a physician, his Requiem was taken away from him. This produced a momentary relief, and he so far recovered as to be able to attend a lodge of Free Masons, which greatly revived his spirits.

Being partially restored, he was allowed to have his Requiem, which he so much desired. With it came his former illness, and he was confined to bed; but his Requiem was constantly beside him. At 2 o'clock on the same day on which he died, he desired some performers to sing the Requiem, himself taking the alto part. When they proceeded so far as the first bars of the Lacrymosa, Mozart burst into a flood of tears and the score was removed. It was his last song, and—

"Swan-like, and sweet, it wafted him home."

A MAGICAL DUET ON THE GUITAR.—Bonnet, in his Histoire de la Musique, gives the following extraordinary account of a mathematician, mechanican, and musician, named Allx, who lived at Aix, in Provence, about the middle of the seventeenth century. Alix, after many years' study and labor succeeded in constructing an automaton figure, having the shape of a human skeleton, which by means of a concealed mechanism played or had the appearance of playing, on the guitar. The artist, after having tuned in perfect unison two guitars, placed one of them in the hands of the skeleton, in the position proper for playing, and on a calm summer evening, having thrown open the window of his apartment, he fixed the skeleton with the guitar in its hands in a position where it could be seen from the street. He, then, taking the other instrument, seated himself in an obscure corner of the room, and commenced playing a piece of music, the passages of which were faithfully repeated or echoed by the guitar held by the skeleton, at the same time that the movement of its wooden fingers, as if really executing the music, completed the illusion. This strange musical feat drew crowds around the house of Alix, and created the greatest astonishment; but, alas! for the ill-fated artist, this sentiment was soon changed in the minds of the ignorant multitude into the most superstitious dread. A rumor arose that Alix was a sorcerer, and in league with the devil. He was arrested by order of the parliament of Provence, and sent before their criminal court La Chambre de la Tournelle, to be tried on the capital charge of magic or witchcraft. In vain the ingenious but unfortunate artist sought to convince his judges that the only means used to give apparent vitality to the fingers of the skeleton were wheels, springs, pulleys, and other equally unmagical contrivances, and that the marvellous result produced was nothing more criminal than the solution of a problem in mechanics. His explanations and demonstrations were either not understood, or failed of convincing his stupid and bigoted judges, and he was condemned as a sorcerer and a magician. This iniquitous judgment was confirmed by the parliament of Provence, which sentenced him to be burned alive in the principal square of the city, together with the equally innocent automaton figure, the supposed accomplice in his magical practices. This infamous sentence was carried into execution in the year 1664, to the great satisfaction and edification of all the faithful and devout inhabitants of Aix.

BORES.—It is to be hoped that, with all the modern improvements, a mode will be discovered of getting rid of bores; for it is too bad that a poor wretch can be punished for stealing your pocket handkerchief or gloves, and that no punishment can be inflicted on those who steal your time, and with it your temper and patience, as well as the bright thoughts that might have entered into your mind, (like the Irishman who lost the fortune before he had got it,) but were frightened away by the bore. Carrishrooke Castle—Isle of Wight.

The correspondent of the Philadelphia Register, writing from Newport, Isle of Wight, gives the following interesting particulars relative to this noted ruin:

Carrisbrooke Castle is an immense ruin, and contains five acres within its inner walls This land is farmed at present, and thus turned to useful purposes. The gray walls of the old fortalice are noted for having been a bar at one time to Charles the First, wish to roam, and the keeper shows the room in which he was prisoner. I had a walk through good soft mud for a mile, and then as a relief, got under the lofty branches of a grove of trees, and pursuing my course over a velvety sward, ascended a high hill to the frowning castle gate, where I rang a bell and was admitted. The arch is high, and the old portcullis still slides in the stone grooves of the decaying walls. A good-natured young fellow escorted me over the ruin. From the keep, which stands on a very high piece of ground, and is approached by a flight of seventy-five stone steps, I saw Cowes, Osborne House, and the southern shore of England, miles away. In clear weather the view is more extended, and necessarily finer.

Probably Carrisbrooke Castle is better known for its great Well than for any other feaeurs. The well is under cover to prevent accident A large shaft is raised over the mouth of the cistern, at one end of which there is a wheel sixteen feet in diameter; a rope and bucket, for drawing water, are attached to the shaft. The wheel is so constructed that a donkey can get inside and turn. The guide is called Jack. He came, walked into the circle, and as the bucket had been lowered previously, the donkey, at a word of command, began to move his feet and thus turning the surface on which he had a footing, he slowly raised the "iron bound bucket with truth overflowing," to the surface and then came and tried to thrust his nose into my coat pockets for an apple, as the reward of his labors. He is an old stager, and has been at the business for years. The fellow is a source of profit to his master, and unlike donkeys of the biped class, is a respectable member of society. He is of a long-lived race, and one of his "illustrious predecessors" died in 1771, after having served in the well-house of Carrisbrooke Castle forty-five years; another died in 1798, in the thirty-second year of his age, and the twenty-sixth of his services! Old donkeys, those.

I threw some of the water back into the deep olstern. Dash, dash, dash, it sounded from side to side until it reached the bottom, where it fell with a heavy crash, which echoed up the hollow and lengthened shaft. The pebble made a clattering sound, and fell with leadlike heaviness into the abyss. A light was then lowered into the depths. Slowly it went down revealing the smooth walls as it descended until the lantern in which it was rested on the water. The circumference at the bottom looked a more span, and yet it is about thirty feet. The water is clear and excellent, and as there is a house within the castle walls it is used for domestic purposes.

The tourist soon tires of ruins, particularly if he has seen so many as I have. Castles may do to look at and moralize upon, but they are of no great value. That of Carrisbrooke must have cost years of toil, and yet it is nothing more than a monument of the rascality of nobles and the debasement of the people.

The Traveler's Story.

A party of travelers were seated around a blazing fire, in a tavern upon the Alleghany mountains. The coach had broken down, and perforce we were detained until the next morning. We had finished a substantial Virginia supper, and each one, with his feet on the fender, and a cigar in his mouth, ruminating upon the storm without, and the warm cozy comfort within. Each one in his turn told a story or related an anecdote; and at last the joke came round to a hollow-cheeked individual, who, until then, had remained silent.

"Gentlemen," said he, fixing a piercing gray eye upon one of the company—a Spaniard—who uninvited had drawn his chair up to the fire, "some ten years ago I came near being murdered in this very house."

At this moment the Spaniard got up and was going out of the room, when the narrator arose and looking the only door in the room, took the Spaniard by the arm, and leading him to an old picture surmounted by the English coat of arms, in gilt work, ran his finger along the motto:

"Honi soit qui mal y pense," said, displaying at the same time a but end of a large pistol—"Evil to him who evil thinks."

The Spaniard smiled, and said he did not feel well, but the stranger swore that no man should leave the room until he had finished the story. Requesting me not to be amazed at his conduct he proceeded:

"Some years ago, (said he,) I was traveling over these mountains on horseback and I stopped at this very house. The landlord was extremely obsequious in attending to my comfort, and, after supper he requested me to join him in a bottle of wine. Nothing loath, I consented, and before midnight, four empty bottles stood on the table and, and he was acquainted with all my business.

"I very imprudently remarked in the course of my conversation, that I had a very large sum of money in my valise and he politely informed me that he would take care of it till morning. Although somewhat intoxicated, I did not approve of leaving it in his charge, and I took my valise in my hand, and retired to bed. After I had undressed, I placed my pistols under my pillow, and carefully, as I thought, examined the room. I had laid myself down, and sunk into a fitful sleep.

"I suppose it must have been two hours after when I awoke, and collecting my scattered senses, I endeavored to think what I had been about.

"Suddenly I detected a noise under my bed What was my horror when I observed a small piece of carpet, stretched along my bed-side move as though something was under it. A cold perspiration started from every pore; but, thank God! I had presence of mind enough to prepare for the worst. Grasping a pistol in my right hand, and hiding it under the bed-clothes I feigned to be asleep.

In an instant afterwards I saw a trap-door which had been concealed by a carpet, cautiously lifted up, and I beheld my landlord with a dark lantern in his hand directing his glittering eyes towards me. Still I moved not; but as he turned his back to put his lantern on the floor, I fired and——

"You killed him, did you!" shrieked the Spaniard, almost jumping from his seat.

"Silence! till I have finished it!" said the stranger, and again he touched the end of his weapon. "The instant that I fired, the villian fell. I started up, and merely pulling my overcoat on, snatched up the lantern that he had dropped, and crept cautiously down, with my valise in my hand, to the stable. It was a bright moonlight night, and I soon saddled my horse. I galloped ten miles, when I met a party of wagoners, and in their company I returned to the house; but despite our rigid search, not even as much as the villian's body could be found. But if I can once put my hand upon him, if he costs my life, he shall die the dog's death."

The stranger arose and caught the Spaniard by the throat. Tearing open his shirt collar, he showed the mark of the wound on his neck. We need not say any more. Three weeks after that, Joseph Gomez was hanged in the city of Cumberland, upon his own confession of having murdered no less than five travelers in that very room.

THE EFFECT OF FRAUD, ETC.—We recollect, says the New York Mirror, when a boy, of ouenally overhearing a tailor tell his book-keeper that he "must make the good customers pay for the losses by the bad ones." The injustice of such a system of doing business made an impression upon our young and tender conscience, which, instead of being effaced by time, has only been deepened by experience. It exposes at a single flash the evils of the whole credit system. All trades must live—and there must be a balance on the profit side of the accounts. If Mr. Jones fails to pay for his coat, Mr. Brown must pay double price for his, or the poor tailor must starve, steal or beg. The same sort of economy enters into all mercantile transactions, and the honest industry of the better half of the community has to redouble its efforts to make up for the frauds and extravagance of the other. A large portion of every dollar earned by every man who works for a living, goes to support some lazy scoundrel, some idle vagabond, who lives like the spider, by preying on the substance of others. And we shall hardly overstate the evil in asserting that one-half of the civilized world is working day and night to support the other half in idleness and crime.

SONG....By HARTLEY COLERIDGE.

'Tis sweet to hear the merry lark,
That bids a blithe good morrow;
But sweeter to bark, in the twinkling dark,
To the soothing song of sorrow
Oh nightingale! what doth ails thee ill!
And is she sad or jolly?
For ne'er on earth was sound of mirth
So like to melancholy.

The merry lark, he soars on high,
No worldly thought o'ertakes him;
He sings aloud to the clear blue sky,
And the daylight that awakes him.
As sweet a lay, as loud, as gay.
The nightingale is trilling;
With feeling bliss no less than his
Her little heart is thrilling.

Yet ever and anon a sigh
Peers through her lavish mirth;
For the lark's bold song is of the sky,
And her's is of the earth.
By night and day she tunes her lay,
To drive away all sorrow;
For bliss, alas! to-night may pass,
And woe may come to-morrow

BOSTON NEWSPAPERS IN OLDEN TIMES.—A writer in the Cincinnati Gazette, who says that he published a paper in Boston, in 1826, a document, prepared then, giving the circulation of all the papers printed in this city. We select that of the leading ones: Daily—Advertiser, 960; Courier, 840; Chronicle and Patriot, 650; American Statesman, 450. Tri-weekly—Boston Courier, 188. Semi-weekliies—Columbian Sentinel, 2650; Chronicle and Patriot, 2640; New England Palladium, 2500; Boston Commercial Gazette, 1584; American Statesman, 650; Boston Courier, 240; Boston Repertory, 432; American Traveller, 1400. Weeklies—Evening Gazette, 1220; New England Galaxy, 2830; Masonic Mirror, 2880

Mr. Buckingham, in his "Specimens of Newspaper Literature," published in two vols., 1850, states that the first attempt to set up a newspaper in North America was made in Boston, September 25, 1690; only one copy is known to be in existence, which is in the State paper office in London. It was a quarto, three pages of print, one blank. It was printed by Richard Pierce, and the fifth person who carried on the printing business in Boston.

The first newspaper established in North America was the Boston News Letter, commenced April 24, 1704. It was half a sheet of paper, 12 inches by 8, two columns on a page. B. Green was the printer.

The second was the Boston Gazette, Dec. 21, 1719.

The third was the New England Courant, Aug. 17, 1721.

The fourth was the New England Weekly Journal, March 20, 1727.

The fifth was the Weekly Rehearsal, Sept. 27, 1731, changed to the Boston Evening Post in Aug. 1735.

The sixth was the Boston Weekly Post-Boy, Oct. 1734.

The seventh was the Independent Advertiser, Jan. 4, 1748.

The eighth was the Boston Gazette, Jan. 3, 1753.

The ninth was the Boston Gazette and Country Journal, April 7, 1755,

The tenth was the Boston Weekly Advertiser, Aug. 22, 1757.

The eleventh was the Boston Chronicle, Dec. 21, 1767. These were all the papers printed in Boston to the date of the Chronicle.

The printer in those days was a man of "all work." If a negro or a horse was up for sale, the printer was the seller. The advertisements in these old papers are curiosities in their line. What would the enlightened readers of the Commonwealth newspaper do or say to its printer should such notices be found in its advertising columns as the following, which appeared in the Boston Evening Post, printed by Thomas Fleet, in 1741:

TO BE SOLD BY THE PRINTER OF THIS PAPER, the very best NEGRO WOMAN in this town, who has had the small pox and the measles; is as hearty as a horse, as brisk as a bird, and will work like a beaver.

TO BE SOLD BY THE PRINTER OF THIS PAPER, a NEGRO MAN, about thirty years old, who can do both town and country business very well, but will suit the country best, where they have not so many dram-shops as we have in Boston. He has worked at the printing business fifteen or sixteen years; can handle ax, saw, spade, hoe, or other instrument of husbandry as well as most men, and values himself, and is valued by others, for his skill in cookery

Think of a colored slave in Boston in 1741, a printer for fifteen years, fond of visiting dram-shops, and valued for his skill as a cook! [Boston Transcript.

FORTUNE'S WHEEL.—A few days ago died, in an obsure corner of France, one of the many claimants to the name and honors of Louis the Seventh. Some twenty years ago, the wheel of Fortune—nowhere so capricious in its jorks, as in France—had thrown two men into the same dungeon of St. Pelagie. They were both little, fat, round men—with a taste for good wine and good dinners; one, lively, shrewd, sparkling, a ready talker, and ultra-liberal, and a dandy—the other, slow and prosy, much addicted to sentiment and roast capons. The first Armand Marrast, editor of the National, and one of the most formidable of Louis Philippe's discontensed subjects. The second, was the so-called Baron de Richemont, in whose coarse and kindly face the chivalry of France believed it traced the royal lineaments of Louis the Seventeenth. Marrast, in his kindly banter, called his friend what his friend called himself, Capet; made jokes for him, laughed at him, and praised his cookery—for Capet, like all his supposed race, was great in the kitchen. Another jerk of the wheel of Fortune! and the two men were once more face to face. This time, it is in the Hotel de Ville—Marrast is Mayor of Paris, and his friends are masters of France. Capet is before him with a memorial, claiming from his old friend one of the great thrones of the world. Marrast smiles: since he put on those exquisite yellow gloves, and scattered on his person those wondrous scents, he has learned to smile less sardonically than of old. He cannot give up France, even to the best of cooks, for he is already Mayor of Paris, has the Presidency of the National Assembly in his grasp, and the office of the Copete seems within his own possible reach. Capet founds a newspaper, and attacks his old friend of St. Pelagie. One more whirl of the wheel!—Capet and Marrast are both lost to sight and to remembrance. The world goes on its way, and no one thinks of the aspiration and the despair of these two rivals for place and power, till one bright day, some solitary tourist, hearing a passing knell, inquires the name of the obscure dead, and hears—not without emotion, perhaps—that it is Armand Marrast, or the Duke de Richemont. [Athenæum.

PIZARO'S GRAVE AT LIMA.—In the crypt, under the alter, are deposited the remains of the celebrated Pizaro, who was assassinated in the palace near by. A small piece of silver dropped into the hand of the sacristan, procured the admission into the crypt. Descending a few stepe, I entered a small place some twenty feet long, quite light and whitewashed, and which smelt and looked so much like a comfortable wine cellar, that I caught myself more than once looking around for the bin and bottles. The first object I saw was a large square tomb, surmounted by the erect figure of an abbot, and close by, in an opening in the wall, I noticed what appeared to me to be a collection of dirty rags; close inspection proved that this was all that remained of the conqueror of Peru. He has still on him the same clothes and shoes he wore at the moment of his assassination. Of course his body is nothing but a skeleton covered with dry flesh and skin, so that no features are discernible. The body is covered with what was once linen swathed around him; but the dust of centuries collected upon it and turned it to a light brown color, and it almost pulverizes when touched. The body is placed on a narrow piece of plank, in a sloping position merely to put it out of the way. The folks in Lima do not think anything of the remains of poor Pizarro; and I dare say a little money judiciously invested would procure for any curiosity hunter the whole of his remains.

TRI-COLOR.—In France, the tri-color is blue, white and red, latitudinal, or parallel with the staff—the blue being attached to it, and the white in the middle. In Holland it is red, white and blue, longitudinal, or at right angles with the staff—the red being uppermost. In Italy, it is green, white and red, suspended the same as in Holland—green uppermost. In Hungary, it is as in Italy, but inverted—red being uppermost. In Belgium, red, yellow and black, latitudinal; and in the German States, the same colors, longitudinal. [N. Y. Sunday Times.

A DELICIOUS DOMESTIC SCENE.—Inquiring Young Lady. "O, dear, do tell how Pharies declared his love."

Inquiring Young Lady—"Well, dear, what did he do next"——

Expectant Wife.—"Nothing, dear, but I said 'Yes,' and gracious how he kissed me! Then, dear, I laid my head on his shoulder, and then we talked dear. O, how I trembled. I thought I never could go through it!"

EDUCATION.

CENTENARY INSTITUTE, ALA

This Institution of Learning has been in successful operation for ten years, is situated eight miles north of Selma, and is the child and property of the Alabama Conference.

There are two departments, male and female. In the male department young men are prepared for the junior class in any college, or if they chose, completes their education here. The female department is regularly organized as a college.

The course of study is extensive, and the instruction thorough. The teaching is done mainly by men of age and experience, (not by girls.)

The President (Rev. A. H. Mitchell) is a minister of the gospel, of twenty odd years standing, and during most of that time has been connected with literary institutions of the church in Georgia, South Carolina and Alabama. He is assisted by seven others, most of whom are persons of age and experience, and all, with one exception, professors of religion. A majority of the Board of Trustees are members of the Alabama Conference, which fact is a sufficient guarantee of its successful management.

Board and tuition are as low as can be afforded, and lower than most institutions of similar grade.

The next term opens the first Monday in October, and closes the first Wednesday in July. For further particulars, apply to the President, at Summerfield, Ala.

B. J. HARRISON, Secretary.

Summerfield, Alabama.

FEMALE MASONIC INSTITUTE,

Dayton, Marengo County, Alabama.

Rev. E. D. Pitts, Principal.

TO PARENTS, GUARDIANS, AND THE FRIENDS OF EDUCATION GENERALLY, we would announce the opening of the TENTH Annual Session of the Institute. The healthful locality—the spacious and beautiful grounds—the commodious and convenient buildings—the full supply of Musical Instruments—the fixed purpose of the Trustees to spare no expense or efforts to promote the true interests of FEMALE EDUCATION—and the assiduous devotion of an efficient Faculty to promote the comfort and improvement of Pupils, lead us to expect with confidence a liberal support.

The Principal has taught with marked success in Alabama, Mississippi and Florida, and will consecrate all his energies—physical, intellectual, and moral—to the proper training of the head and heart of those committed to his tutelage.

The services of Miss MARY W. HOWZE, who has been for two years past connected with the Central Masonic University, have been secured. Her intelligence, energy, piety, and felicitous manner of communicating, have justly placed her in the first rank of educators.

The Musical, French, and Ornamental Department will be conducted by competent and skillful Teachers, and all due attention given to the arts and accomplishments that so beautify and adorn the gentler sex.

The Primary Department will be confided alone to a choice and gifted Lady, for we design to attend carefully to the sadly and mischievously neglected class of Pupils.

The Scholastic year is divided into Two Sessions of nearly Five Months each—with no intervening recess. The School opens on the first day of October, and closes with Examination Exercises in the latter part of July. Pupils received at any time, and charged to the end of the Session. For fractions of Sessions each week is counted one twentieth.

The School is not Sectarian or denominational; and the only religious tuition embraces the principles of a pure morality based upon the cardinal doctrines of the Bible.

The Principal and his wife have charge of the Stewards Department, and will tenderly care for the health, manners and morals of those who Board in the Institute. Each boarder will be made to feel as far as possible that she is the loved subject of parental solicitude, and every reasonable wish will be promptly and cheerfully gratified. Yet, Discipline will not be forgotten, and the needful restraints of family government will be thrown around them.

CHARGES PER SESSION OF FIVE MONTHS.

Primary Class	$12 50
Preparatory Class	15 00
Junior and Senior Class	20 00

AN INVARIABLE RULE.—Board and Tuition one-half in advance, and the balance at the end of each Session; and every account must be closed at the end of each Session, by Cash, or by Note.

SPECIAL ARRANGEMENT.

Each Lodge in Marengo County is entitled to select within its jurisdiction, a worthy object of beneficence, and have her taught in the Institution without charge, provided said Lodge assume the payment of her Board and supply her with Books and Stationery.

As the Principal is so extensively known, the Committee here forbore to speak of his character and qualifications, and refer Parents and Guardians to the persons named below.

OAK BOWERY FEMALE COLLEGE.

This Institution of learning is under the supervision and control of the Alabama Conference of the M. E. Church, South, and has been in successful operation for six years. It is situated about five miles north of the Montgomery and West Point Railroad, in Chambers co., in a healthy country, and among a population, moral, industrious and intelligent.

The Board of Trustees take great pleasure in announcing to the public the election of the Rev. ALEX. SPEER, of Georgia, to the Presidency of the College. We think it only necessary to be known, that the Institution will be for the next year under the charge and direction of Brother Speer, to awaken a deep interest in behalf of the enterprise throughout the community, and impart abundance of success. His long and faithful service in the M. E. Church as a minister—his age and experience—his natural judgment and sound discretion—his acknowledged literary attainments and ability, authorize the expectation of full patronage on the part of an enlightened public.

A complete corps of Instructors whose names will hereafter be published, will be provided to supply the demand for instruction.

Miss MARY J. TOOMER continues Principal in the Music Department; and the unbounded satisfaction hitherto given by Miss Toomer, who we consider has no superior in any country, is a sure guarantee that all who patronize will be pleased.

Through the kind offices of the former President, the Rev. Wm F. Sanford, who solicited contributions for that purpose, a fine and judiciously selected Library, of several hundred volumes, has been purchased, and is now in the possession of the College, embracing some of the most approved and standard literary works, and such as are peculiarly adapted to the purposes of Female Education.

The Tuition Fees will be no higher than usual, and the course of study as extensive as that in any institution of the same grade in the country.

The College Exercises will begin under the proposed organization, on the first Monday in January next—its second session will begin on the first Monday in September, and close at Christmas.

A circular, containing fuller information, will appear over the signature of the President.

TUSCALOOSA METHODIST FEMALE HIGH SCHOOL.

The exercises of this institution will begin on the first MONDAY in October next, and close on the first THURSDAY in July, 1854. There will be a recess of a few days at Christmas.

FACULTY.

REV. THOS. B. ROSSELL, A. M. President.
MISS ELIZABETH J. MEEK, Assistant.
MISS CLARA G. LEE, Preparatory Department.
MR. F. S. WALTER, Professor of Music.
——, Teacher of Modern Languages.

The fees for the first half the scholastic year are as follows:

Primary Department	$12 00
First, Sophomore and Middle Classes, each	20 00
Junior and Senior Classes, each	22 50
Music	25 00
Use of piano	2 50
Contingent fee	1 00

The above fees are required to be paid on the first day of October.

Fees of the same amount, for the second half of the scholastic year, are required to be paid on the 25th of February, 1854.

An extra fee of $20 is charged for French.

The course of study in this institution is as extensive as that in any institution for the education of females, and the instruction is of the most critical and thorough character. Every provision has been made to ensure success. A philosophical and chemical apparatus adequate to all the purposes of instruction has been provided, together with maps, charts, globes, etc. The instructors are experienced in their work, and highly approved for capacity, fidelity and skill.

This institution has just closed the first year of its existence, with the most satisfactory results. And the public may feel assured that the Trustees will watch over its interests with the utmost solicitude and care, and spare no pains to render its system of education as perfect as possible.

The tuition fees have been somewhat reduced, and are below those of many Southern institutions of no higher grade. It is impossible to engage teachers of the highest character for talents, attainments and skill, without paying liberal salaries. But we offer as an equivalent, above all price, a faithful and skillful application of the most approved means of developing and training the mind.

Printed circulars, containing fuller information, may be had by application to Alex. Glascock, Esq., Secretary of the Board.

FACULTY.

REV. JAMES K. ARMSTRONG, A. M., Principal, and Professor of Mental, Moral and Natural Sciences.
H. M. DALY, A. M., Professor of Vocal and Instrumental Music.
MISS M. L. HASKILL, English.
MISS M. J. BONDURANT, English.
MISS PIERCE FULLER, Drawing, Painting, French and Guitar.
MISS J. V. CLARK, Primary and Preparatory Department.
MRS. L. J. ARMSTRONG, Governess.
MRS. REBECCA CLARK, Matron and Nurse.

This institution has just closed a prosperous year, with one hundred and twenty-six pupils.

The coming session will commence on THURSDAY, the 20th day of SEPTEMBER.

It is very desirable that pupils enter at the beginning of the session.

The main building is a new and superior brick edifice, one hundred by fifty feet, three stories, and for elegance, convenience of arrangement, for number, size and comfort of school and private rooms—is not surpassed by any similar one in the country.

The Principal resides in the building, and superintends the Boarding Department. He has in his employ a gentlemen and his lady, who discharge with faithfulness and satisfaction the duties of this position. Pupils boarding in the Seminary are under the immediate control of the Principal at all times—are members of his family.

The Matron and Nurse, a lady of great amiability and kindness of heart, united with long experience and untiring faithfulness, secures to pupils, at all times, the kindness and attentions of home.

The Principal and his lady, with the aid of the Female Teachers, all of whom reside in the Seminary, diligently guard and form the morals, manners and habits of the young ladies.

There is but one session, of nine and a half months. Pupils can enter at any time during the session, charges dating from the beginning of the month in which they enter to the close of the session.

One hundred and forty-five dollars will pay the board and tuition of a young lady, for the entire session, in the collegiate department; one hundred and seventy-four dollars will embrace the languages; two hundred and thirty-five dollars will embrace board, tuition in the collegiate department, on the piano, and in the languages.

The above estimate does not include books, stationery, sheet music, ornamental materials and lights; all of which articles are furnished by the Principal on moderate terms.

The institution is furnished with a new and complete Chemical, Philosophical and Astronomical apparatus. It also has a large collection of globes, terrestial and celestial, and celestial maps, atlases, charts, plates and diagrams, for simplifying the various branches of Natural Science.

The Library consists of more than one thousand volumes, embracing a choice collection in every department of Literature, Art, Science, History, &c., &c.

The Cabinet consists of several hundred specimens.

The institution is furnished with a large and superior assortment of musical instruments.

The Church and Sabbath School facilities are unsurpassed by any school in the country. Of the number that have entered its walls during the past session, more than seventy were or have become professors of religion.

Pupils are not allowed to attend parties, balls, dancing classes, &c.

Visitors are not received, except with suitable introduction to the Principal from patrons.

The usual regulations of the best boarding schools are enforced respecting visiting, correspondence, pamphlets, periodicals

DE PROFUNDIS.

Draw my soul, Saviour, to Thee by all ties,
Until it lies
All quiet at Thy feet, nor never tries
To wander thence!

Draw it, if need be, by adversity;
I will not fly
Thy sharpest arrows, so that Thou art by
To soothe my sense.

A stimulus I'll find in corporal pain
Thy side to gain,
And there, already to be clothed upon, remain
In patience.

Or, if such warning shafts should not be sped,
Let holy dread
Of judgments following with certain tread,
Urge my steps on.

Make me to see myself stretch on that couch
Where Death's cold touch
Freezes the soul that, frighted, sees how much
Is left undone.

And since Thou only knowest the only tie
To bind me by,
Weave it, Oh Lord, till at thy feet I lie
Forever vow!

SUPPORT OF OUR MINISTERS.

MR. EDITOR: I think you will bear me record that I am not much diseased with the scribendi scribendi, and I would not now intrude my views upon yourself and readers had they found an exponent in any other of your numerous correspondents.

Quite a general interest, however, seems to have been awakened among our people on the subject of providing a more ample support for the preachers, and believing that this is the time to effect a radical improvement in one of the greatest drawbacks to our otherwise excellent Church machinery, I offer some facts and suggestions for all they may be worth. I have been pleased with several suggestions made by your correspondents, and particularly with those of Bro. R. A. Baker.

Occupying, as I have for some years past, various relations to the Church from which I could view the working of our Methodist economy from different points of vision, I have seen with much pleasure and admiration the perfect adaptation of our system to the wants, character and republican simplicity of the people.

Now, while past and present success give bright augury for the future, the few defects of the system are so apparent and glaring that a longer acquiescence and inaction would be criminal.

If I place the proper estimate upon my own views of religious progress, I am neither a "old fogy" or "a young American;" I would rather class myself as decidedly "conservative." Sure it is that Methodism in these United States, with its million and a quarter of Church members, bears not the same relation to the people or the Government that it did fifty years ago, when it was struggling for a foothold, if not for an existance, and was a sect every where spoken against. Then, among the best and most religious of the people, Methodism, with its doctrines of free grace, witness of the spirit, and univeral, though conditional, salvation, was looked upon as a dangerous and damnable heresy, and its advocates were refused a place in either the churches or the firesides of the country, and were compelled to occupy the highways and hedges for pulpits, and the open fields and untenanted barns for dormitories.

These were days that largely demanded the sacrifice of all the ordinary comforts of life in the Methodist itinerant, and such sacrifices were uncomplainingly and cheerfully submitted to. The wants of the itinerants, and the imperious necessity for all the poor and despised adherants to the cause doing something to advance the cause, and support its advocates, originated the standard of the ministers supplies. This standard was first $64, then $80, and afterwards $100 as an allowance for the personal expenditures of the man. This standard was never adjusted to the recipient's wants and necessities, but was made with reference to the ability of the then poor and scattered membership to meet and supply it. The result of this—their necessary economy—was to force from the itinerant ranks, after a few years of laborious toil and patient privation, more than one-half of all our efficient preachers.

A more hardy, zealous, efficient and self-sacrificing set of men never "turned the world upside down" since the days of the Apostles than were the early Methodist itinerants of the United States. Who will dare to charge with a want of zeal, or of devotion to the cause of Christ the memories of such men as Hope Hull, Learael Smith, Robert Greer, and a host of other immortal names. Yet these, and others, even to the number of 500, out of 650, of the New England itinerants, were forced by increasing families and temporal necessities into location previous to the year 1800. The poverty of these first societies, and the novelty of their doctrines and mode of living, certainly go far to excuse the making such meagre allowances for the preachers. It was the best they could do; and, like the Methodists of the present day, they did not always do that.

But, what a wonderful change has fifty years, and even less, brought to pass. Now the Methodist societies are the most numerous and wealthy organizations of Christians in the United States. The preachers of every order of talent and acquirement are welcomed every where, sharing alike the hospitality of the city millionaire in his palace of marble, and of the negro's hut in the swamps of Louisiana and Texas. The congregations of both city and country are among the largest, most intelligent, and too often the most fashionable. The preachers are invited to other pulpits, and are universally recognised as orthodox by all real Protestants. Their revival labors, and the fruits of their protracted meetings, are largely shared by the other denominations, whose churches are yearly supplied with evangelical believers through their instrumentality. Indeed, so completely has the little leaven leavened the whole lump, that the favorite, and once considered, only saving creede of unconditional election and reprobation, of final perseverance and infant damnation, are now no where esteemed necessary to saving faith, or requisite to church fellowship. Seldom are these tenets heard from the pulpit, except in an effort to explain away their odium, and perhaps only preserved in their printed "confessions" as venerated relics of antiquity, too mysterious for present analysis.

These may be high-sounding claims for Methodism; but are they facts in the Church's history? Who can gainsay? The question is, are the men and their successors through whose instrumentality the present numbers and success of the doctrines have been achieved, to have their wants and supplies measured by a standard that was devised in reference to the Church's poverty and scattered membership? Necessity could be plead for a standard even then too short, but which now is unreasonable, unjust and cruel.

Besides, both the manner and price of living is greatly enhanced. The last ten years has materially altered the relative value of money—articles of consumption have nearly doubled in nominal price.

Again, whether it is an improvement on our original simplicity or not, but I give you the fact when I say, that most of congregations require, even of a Methodist preacher, that in his pulpit ministrations, at least, he shall wear the ordinary garb of a plain gentleman. A similar requisition is made of his family, if he have one.

It is also necessary that a preacher have books. The people have found out there is a difference in the preaching of those who read and those who do not, and books have become necessary to insure congregations. A horse is a prerequisite to entering upon the work, a part of the capital a candidate for labor must invest, whether on a circuit or in a station, is a necessary appendage to a Methodist preacher. If this horse should grow old, wear out, or die, he must get another—if he can. Now, let us look at the ways and means, to furnish a preacher's clothing, mending and washing, buy his books, and pay all his incidental and personal expenses, purchase another horse, saddle, bridle, and saddle-bags, every five years (not a too liberal estimate) the sum of $100 is appropriated annually by the Stewards, and generally paid by the Church.

Now, does this meet the preacher's wants? I answer, emphatically, not in one single instance in this Conference, and, If the preacher has no resources of his own, or does not come across some generous hearts that will not let him suffer, he must go in debt, go in rags, or retire into locality—there is no other alternative. No small number are thus annually driven from our Conferences; many, knowing these facts, are prevented from entering the itinerant fields. Others, hoping to better their condition, make bad worse by marrying, supposing that by some financial arrangement a sufficient surplus from the allowance made for "table expenses" may be saved to meet other deficiences; or, at least, that a field of labor will now open among such as will estimate their services more liberally. But, alas! this proved the sure stepping-stone to a location. For if the measure of $100 was too short in a state of celibacy, its hardship is more than doubled with the man of family. It must be recollected that this $100 is the measure by which the preacher's wants and necessities are estimated all the way through.

A Board of Stewards are generally good arithmeticians, and when a preacher with a family is sent to them, and it becomes necessary to ascertain the amount required to be raised for their support; a calculation based upon "the simple rule of three" generally takes place, somewhat after this fashion: as the actual expenses of a preacher : is to $100 : : so is the real expenses of himself and family : to what we propose to give him. Multiply together the second and third terms, divide their product by the first, and the quotient will be what he will get at the end of the year—if they all pay up.

Who does not see that such a system will in all cases, where there are not other sources of dependence, drive the preacher ultimately into debt, or into location. Now is it not unwise and cruel to force these men from a pursuit where they are doing so much for the Church and the world, and to which their hearts are knit with almost the tenacity of life itself, into locations where, though called of God to preach His truth, they can only labor to a very limited extent, and where the deep and rosicties current of Gospel-power too often becomes a stagnant pool? But are we not doing very well, even, with our system as it is? More, perhaps, than any other religious denomination. Now, a few facts may show us why we do not do a great deal more.

There are hundreds of fields of labor in our very midst unsupplied for want of laborers. Every year we set apart a day to supplicate the Lord of the harvest for more laborers. Have people who pursue a policy that yearly drives out scores of itinerants from their ranks, any right to ask God for, or suppose that he will, send others? "Why stand ye here, calling upon me? say to Israel, go forward." A competency of victuals and clothes would bring hundreds of local preachers, and scores of promising young men, into the Conferences—men truly called of God to preach the unsearchable riches of Christ—many such there are now in secular pursuits, endeavoring to acquire such a competency as would enable them to join and remain in the Conference.

See the large number of our itinerants who are now living by secular pursuits. At every Conference there are representations made to the appointing power that certain preachers with large families must have work given to them near their residences, where there can be saved the item of house-rent, or something made by the taking of boarders, where their wives, daughters, and sometimes themselves, have schools. Now, sir, are these people in pursuit of wealth by these schemes? Is it their object to heard up? If so, the sooner the Conferences dispense with their services the better. But you know the men, and you know that is not their object. These pursuits are necessary to their living at all in the work of the ministry. The Church pays only a part of their necessary expenses, and the labor of themselves and families is necessary to supply their economical wants. From inquiries which I have recently made, I am satisfied there is not in the bounds of this Conference a preacher's family, numbering as many as five children, who are supported by the Church where he labors. One of the most eloquent men in our American Congress, and who has distinguished himself at home, and in foreign courts, was driven from our itinerant work by inadequacy of support for his family. Are we, then, doing well enough because others come in to fill the places of those who are starved out? Who will say so?

But we must not make our preachers rich, or hold out inducements to men with sinister views to join us. Amen to that! It is our policy to keep our preachers poor. But there is great difference between such policy as holds out no pecuniary inducement and that at present pursued. The emoluments may be largely increased without endangering such a result. If designing men, with sinister views, would come among us, they would as readily do so under the present as a more suitable provision; perhaps as it now stands they could better disguise their hypocrisy. Certainly, no one would ever mistake the Methodist ministry for a sinecure.

An humorous friend of mine takes the position that Methodist preachers must love money more than any other class of men, because, he says, they are willing to do more labor for less pay than any other class of laborers whatever.

No one in this day will pretend, with any hope of maintaining his position, that Methodist preachers, as a class of ministers, are not as zealous, as well informed, as eloquent, and every way as efficient as others. Why then are not their services retained as others to the Church and the world? We are better able than any other denomination in this country to take care both of them and their families; and yet it is true that the Church, by forcing them to live upon a scanty subsistence, has thereby diminished its own and the world's respect for them.

Are the Methodists, as a Christian community, more penurious than others? I answer, indignantly, NO! Their missionary and other contributions is a full refutation to such insinuation. Nor are their attachments to their preachers, as a class, inferior to others. Whers, then, is the evil or the cause of it? I answer, Mr. Editor, with all deference for others' views, it is comprehended in a nut shell. The $100 yard-stick is at the bottom of the whole matter. This is the standard, and, like the bed of Procustes, to this every thing else must be adjusted. Nor would the lengthening of this standard help the matter just now. What we want is to inform our people of the true state of the case, and their duty; and they will do right. Your standard has misled them, and the addition of 25 per cent. would only increase their difficulties in seeing their true responcibility. Most of them are contented to know that we get along, and our labors are blessed, without enquiring how! Or by what means more could be accomplished. I had an intelligent and well-informed gentleman to ask me, some weeks since, if I thought it would be proper for the people to give the young Brother who labored on their circuit $200 instead of $100, remarking that he and others desired to do it, that $200 could as easily be raised for him as $100, but that they did not know whether it would be right to do so.

Now, this gentleman was one of the Circuit Stewards. Our people need instruction upon these matters; inform them of their duty, they will do it. Strike the $100 allowance from your "discipline," and put the whole responsibility of providing a decent support for your preachers, where it ought to be, with the people to whom they are sent, and I think one of the greatest difficulties of evangelizing the whole country will be removed. Of course, it will take some little time to adjust things to their proper place, and to teach our people to pay for spreading the Gospel; but, like others, they will get used to it, and will love the cause all the better for taking a larger interest in its success.

Yours, REI RADIX.

BIBLE ANECDOTE.—The following is published in a French paper:—A poor shepherd of the environs of Yvetot, father of a large family, for whose wants he provided with very great difficulty, purchased last summer from a dealer in old clothes, furniture, &c., an old Bible, with a view to occupy his leisure evenings during the present winter. Sunday evening as he was turning over the leaves he noticed that several of the leaves were pasted together. He immediately set himself to work to separate those leaves, with great care; but can can scarcely form a conception of the surprise of the man, when he found thus carefully enclosed a bank bill of five hundred francs, ($100.) On the margin of one of the pages were written these words: "I gathered together this money with very great difficulty; but having none as natural heirs but those who have absolutely need of nothing, I make thee, whosoever shall read this Bible, my heir."

A WORD FOR THE YOUNG.—Every young man should remember that the world will always honor industry. The vulgar and useless idler, whose energies of body and mind are rusting for want of occupation, may look with scorn. It is praise—his contempt is honor.

RELIGIOUS FREEDOM IN MARYLAND.

In the comments which we made upon Gavazzi and his lectures, we alluded to the fact that Maryland, "founded under Catholic auspices," was one of the first, if not the first, of the American States that guaranticd to all men, without regard to religious belief, equal civil and political rights—setting thus a noble example of toleration in a persecuting age, that is well worthy of being remembered to the credit of that Church in this country. [Cin. Enquirer.

The Enquirer, in claiming for Catholicism the principle of religious toleration, will not find itself sustained by any consistent Catholic. Has it forgotten that wherever the Pope has supreme power, freedom of religious worship, and the liberty of propagating religious tenets, not approved by "his Holiness," are prohibited, unless where reasons of state intervene? Has it forgotten that the principle of toleration is scouted in this country by Brownson, by the Shepherd of the Valley, the Boston Pilot, the Freeman's Journal, the Catholic Telegraph, except in cases where to attempt its violation would be to provoke consequences dangerous to the Catholic Church? The Catholic Hierarchy must laugh in its sleeve at the attempts to attribute toleration to a church which claims infallibility, denies the right of private judgment, and asserts the supremacy of the Spiritual over the Civil Power.

Listen to the language of the New York Freeman's Journal, understood to be issued under the auspices of Archbishop Hughes:

"I would conclude by observing that it is easy to show that, while the Catholic Government of the entirely Catholic community is not bound, in order to be consistent to its principles, to tolerate any other religious teaching, the Protestant State, though having no Catholics established in its realms, could not, without denying the essential principles of Protestantism, oppose the introduction of Catholicity or any other religion."

Toleration is the law of Protestantism; Intolerance is the law of Catholicism. This is true. But the Journal ought not to confine itself to a negative. If the Church of Rome be infallible, it is not only not bound to tolerate any form of belief pronounced by it heretical, but it is bound to suppress it by all the means at its disposal. The Shepherd of the Valley, a Catholic paper of the West, states the case frankly.

"Heresy and unbelief are crimes, that is the whole of the matter; and in Christian countries, as Italy and Spain, for instance, where all the people are Catholic, and where the Catholic religion is an essential part of the public law of the land, they will be punished as other crimes. Here the law does not take cognizance of them, because the law does not recognize the truth of the Catholic religion.

But, if the Catholic Church could contrive to control the legislation of this country—in other words, make it "Christian," as the Shepherd of the Valley phrases it, heresy and unbelief, here also, would be regarded and punished as crimes.

We like this open way of dealing, and must say that these Catholic journals have a clearer conception of the nature of Roman Catholicism than the Cincinnati Enquirer.

Now, as to the statement of that paper concerning Religious Freedom in Maryland, let us not overlook the facts of history. Hildreth, in his severe, unimaginative history, is the best witness on this subject. He is no sentimentalist, no religious bigot, no politician, no dealer in clap-trap. He never suffers himself to be mystified. Or attempts to mystify his readers. So far as our colonial history is concerned, he is better authority, we presume, than any American author. The reader, by turning to chapter viii, first volume of his work, will find a full account of the settlement of Maryland. A rapid survey is taken of the state of religious feeling in England at that time, in which the strife between the Established Church, the Catholics, and the Puritans, was not for Toleration, but Supremacy. The Church of England was in the ascendant, struggling against both the other parties; but, as against the Catholics, she was sustained in her severities by the Puritans, and incited to new restrictions.

At the time of the settlement of Maryland the public mind of England was profoundly excited against the Catholics; and the idea of establishing a colony in which Catholicism should be established by law, and Protestantism forbidden, was not even dreamed of. George Calvert, subsequently Lord Baltimore, was a secret Catholic for many years; but he at last, with a frankness which, Hildreth says, "must be taken as proof of his sincerity," avowed his adherence to the Catholic faith. After one or two unsuccessful attempts to colonize, he obtained from Charles I. the grant of a province, to which he gave the name of Maryland. Before the patent had passed, he died; but the charter, carefully drawn up under his inspection, was issued to his son. The Enquirer, in the article from which we make an extract, represents that this charter guarantied freedom of religious opinion, etc. If such had been the case, it would have proved nothing in favor of the Toleration of Catholicism, for the simple reason that a provision against Protestantism would have at once put an end to the colony. Protestants controlled England and all its colonies, and were persecuting Catholics as they had been persecuted by them. It would then have been sheer madness for the latter to attempt the proscription of the former, who were completely dominant.

But, it seems that there was no such provision in the charter. Hildreth presents us with an abstract of it, and closes with the remark: "Whatever might have been the intention of Lord Baltimore, or the favorable disposition of the King, there was no guarantee in the charter, nor, indeed, the least hint of any toleration in religion, not authorized by the law of England. The introduction of such a provision, especially in favor of the hated Catholics, would have been altogether too abhorent to English feelings."

A short time after the settlement of the colony, deputies met in assembly to form a constitution, and pass laws. One bill created fourteen felonies punishable with death—among them, SACRILEGE, IDOLATRY, BLASPHEMY, defined to be a cursing or wicked speaking of God, the punishment in each case to be by burning! Working on the Lord's Day and eating flesh in Lent, were punished by imprisonment, fine, or whipping. Of course, where such laws were enacted, the principle of toleration could not exist. What follows is in the words of Hildreth:

"It was provided in this same act, in the words of Magna Charta, that 'Holy Mother Church within this Province shall have all her rights and liberties.' As the proprietor and most of the colonists were Catholics, it must have been the Catholic Church that was meant. Yet it was no part of Lord Baltimore's plan to establish an exclusive Catholic colony. A proclamation of the Government had expressly prohibited all unreasonable disputations on points of religion, tending to the disturbance of the public peace and quiet of the colony, and of the opening of faction in religion; and under this proclamation one William Lewis, a zealous Catholic, for his abuse of a book of Protestant sermons, which certain indentured servants delighted to read, and forbidding them to read it, had been fined, and was obliged to give security to keep the peace. It was quite as much as the state of feeling in England would permit, that the public exercise of the Catholic religion should be allowed in the colony; it never would have been endured that Protestantism should be excluded. Baltimore was no zealot; his great object was to procure settlers, and he privately sent agents for that purpose, though without success, into Puritan New England."*

No intelligent man can help seeing that the "toleration," or "religious freedom," recognised in the early settlement of Maryland was the result of necessity, not principle. This is shown further by the conduct of Lord Baltimore, during the civil wars of England. "The Parliament having completely triumphed, he deemed it expedient to displace Greene, who was a Catholic, and appoint as Governor William Stone, an inhabitant of Virginia, a zealous Protestant and Parliamentarian. The motive for this appointment, as set forth in Stone's commission, was an undertaking on his part to introduce into the colony five hundred settlers of English or Irish descent. John Price, also a Protestant, was commissioned as muster-master general, not only for his knowledge and great abilities in martial affairs, but 'for his great fidelity to his lordship on occasion of the late rebellion.' A Protestant secretary was likewise appointed, and a majority of the Council, in which, however, Greene, the late Governor, retained his seat, appear to have been Protestants."

[illegible] was no more policy, nor a sentiment of toleration, that dictated these changes, deemed expedient to propitiate a Parliament bigotedly Protestant. It is simply ridiculous to attribute to an abstract principle of right, acts springing directly from the instinct of self-preservation. The principle of Toleration was just as little appreciated in Maryland as anywhere else at that ago of the world. For example, an act, entitled "An Act of Toleration," passed in 1640, by the Assembly, denounced death, with forfeiture of lands and goods to all "Who shall blaspheme God, that is, curse him, or shall deny our Saviour, Jesus Christ, to be the Son of God, or shall deny the Holy Trinity, the Father, the Son, and Holy Ghost, or the Godhead of any of the said three persons of the Trinity, or the Unity of the Godhead, or shall use or utter any reproachful speeches against the Holy Trinity." Fine, whipping, and banishment, for the third offence, are denounced against all who "shall utter any reproachful words or speeches concerning the Blessed Virgin Mary, or the holy Apostles and Evangelists."

"After this incongruous preamble," says Hildreth, "the fifth section sets out that the enforcing the conscience in matters of religion hath frequently fallen out to be of dangerous consequence in those commonwealths where it has been practiced, and therefore enacts that, 'for the more quiet and peaceable government of the province, and the better to preserve mutual love and unity,' no person professing to believe in Jesus Christ should be molested or discountenanced on account of his religion, nor interrupted in the free exercise of it; breaches of this section to be punished by fine and imprisonment."

The draught of this act was received twelve years after the settlement of the colony from the second Lord Baltimore then residing in England, and who was aware of the state of feeling prevailing in the Parliament in regard to Catholicism. Once more we quote from Hildreth:

"Policy, it is evident, had a much greater share in the enactment of this act, than any enlightened view of the right of opinion, of which, indeed, it evinces but a limited and confused idea. Now that the Puritans were triumphant in England, an exclusively Catholic colony would not have been tolerated for a moment. The only chance of securing to the Catholics the quiet enjoyment of their faith, consisted in bestowing a like liberty on the Protestants—a policy, indeed, upon which Baltimore had found it necessary to act, from the very first planting of the colony."†

So much for the groundless claim in behalf of Roman Catholicism—that Maryland, under its auspices, was the first colony to recognise the principle of Religious Freedom. The honor of being the first champion of Religious Freedom in this country belongs to Roger Williams, and the first colony that recognized it on principle, practiced it consistently, and in the face of a most formidable opposition from her sister colonies, was Rhode Island.

THE NEGLECTED BIBLE.

The following specimen of the pulpit eloquence of the Seventeenth Century is preserved in the works of John Howe, one of the eminent divines of that period, to whom it was related by another non-conformist minister, a great man in his day, Dr. Thomas Goodwin, President of Magdalen College, Oxford. Mr. Howe says:

Dr. Goodwin told me, that being himself, in the time of his youth, a student at Cambridge, and having heard much of Mr. Rogers, of Dedham, in Essex, purposely he took a journey from Cambridge to Dedham to hear him preach on his lecture-day—a lecture then so strangely thronged and frequented, that to those who came not very early, there was no possibility of getting room in that spacious, large church. Mr. Rogers was, as he told me, at the time he heard him, on the subject of discourse that had been for some time the subject of mine—the Scriptures. And in that sermon he falls into an expostulation with the people about their neglect of the Bible—I am afraid it is more neglected in our days. He personates God to the people, telling them:

"Well, I have trusted you so long with my Bible; you have slighted it; it lies in such and such houses, all covered with dust and cobwebs; you care not to look into it. Do you use my Bible so? Well, you have my Bible no longer!" And he takes up the Bible from the cushion, and seemed as if he were going away with it, and carrying it from them; but immediately turns and personates the people to God, falling down upon his knees, cries, and pleads most earnestly: "Lord! whatsoever thou doest, take not thy Bible from us; kill our children; burn our houses; destroy our goods; only spare us thy Bible." And then he personates God again to the people: "Say you so? Well, I will try you a while longer; and here is my Bible for you; I will see how you will use it; whether you will love it more; whether you will value it more whether you will observe it more; whether you will practice it more, and live more according to it."

By these actions, as the Doctor told me, he put all the congregation in so strange a posture as he never saw any congregation in his life; the place was a mere Bochim; the people generally, as it were, deluged with their own tears, and he told me that he, himself, when he got out and was to take horse again be gone, he was fain to hang a quarter of an hour upon the neck of his horse weeping before he had power to mount, so strange an impression was there made upon him, and unto expostulation, the people's neglect of the Bible.

BUSY MEMBERS.

Church-members are the persons to whom we refer. These, if they be the living members of the living Head, are in the right position. It is impossible to account for it, how those who believingly recognize the Saviour as their Priest and King can be found standing aloof from the Church of Christ, and forming no combined part of the community who dare to be singular in a God-dishonoring world. Members of Churches are the witnesses for Christ; they show forth his death as the ground of hope; they hold the Head as the alone Lord of conscience. Happy and honorable are they in this relation; may grace and peace be multiplied among them. There are among them busy members of an amiable and useful character, who lay themselves out for the true interests of the Church with which they stand connected. They rejoice in her prosperity; they mourn over her adversity. They would do any thing to advance her interests; busy, without being obtrusive, they are ever on the wing to welcome souls who fly as doves to their windows, and are ever on their way to attend the pilgrim in his path to glory.

One such is remembered while I thus write, who was busy in the best sense of the term. She had been deeply taught in the school of affliction; she had time on her hands, and devoted it to some good purpose. She was richly conversant with her Bible, and had read and culled much from pious writings, and was capacitated to aid others in the good ways of God. She would call on her minister, and was ever saluted as having some tidings to communicate. She would now say: "Do you knew such a person? I hope there is something good there. I wish, sir, you would see her. Have you seen so and so lately? Do you know they are in trial? It would be a comfort if you would call. I am sorry for such members; I have had serious conversation with them. I was pleased, however, they took it well. Have you had conversation with young B——? He is desirous of joining the Church." Thus was truly the helper of her minister in the Gospel; yet all with pleasing modesty and undissembled piety. But she is no more with us. While alive, she used to put me in mind of Watts's beautiful lines of the bee:

"How doth the little busy bee
Improve each shining hour,
And gather honey all the day
From every opening flower."

So this dear, busy member would at home gather honey from her sweet Bible and abroad attain fresh honey from every opening flower of grace to sweeten the toil of her laboring pastor. Honor to her shade! Peace to her memory! It is still fresh in Christian veneration and pastoral regard. Now, in the full blaze of her glorious Lord, may we at last meet and sing the wonders of His grace!

But there are other busy members—busy in the world—Martha-like, troubled, and careful about many things. They want to sit more peacefully at the Master's feet. Busy in the world, and, it may be, most laudably such, when the hallowed trio is preserved entire—"Diligent in business, fervent in spirit, serving the Lord." There is some danger, in these days of mighty speculation and competition, of this trio being broken in upon. Oh, the world is too absorbing—it is a great thief of mind and time! Watch it, handcuff it; redeem the time, knowing the days are evil!

Well, but there is another busy member; still different and dangerous; it is the member busy with the tongue. Regular they may be in the ordinances of grace, but irregular in the order of converse. How do you like such a step which our minister has taken? Did you hear so and so at our chapel? I shall not hear him again. Did you not think our minister legal in his address to sinners? Have you heard what was said of such a member?" So the busy member goes round talking, breeding discontent, till, if Providence control it, the spirit of a Korah ferment may be raised, and the peace of the Church ruined. I admire the advice of the Apostle: "Let such be quiet, and mind their own business." The exhortation is important—Phil. ii, 14, etc.: "Do all things without murmurings and disputings, that ye may be blameless and sincere, the sons of God without rebuke, in the midst of a crooked and perverse nation, among whom ye shine as lights in the world." The Miller's Boy and his Bible.

The following record of one of the happy results of Bible distribution in Sweden appeared in the Presbyterian about four years since. The incident is as interesting now as when it was first related:

"The entrance of Thy Word giveth light.

I returned (says a Swedish colporteur) through a village where there are several water-mills. A Bible had been purchased from me three years since by a miller's boy, who, not long before had fallen into the water, and had narrowly escaped being crushed by the mill-wheel. Snatched wonderfully from death, John, this miller lad, had at that time begun to be concerned about salvation of his soul. Hence the purchase which he made of a Bible. He read that sacred book, and was fervent in prayers. The Lord heard his prayers, and he became a staunch confessor of the truth as it is in Jesus. He was not long in becoming the object of persecution from the millar, the millar's wife, his comrades, and persons who frequented the mill. All were determined to render it impossible for him to read the Bible; but the Lord watched over him. Shortly afterwards Andrew, the millar's son, a young man of twenty years of age, a victim to habits of impiety and dissipation, became likewise a disciple of the Saviour. This happened in the following summer. Originally they were the best friends in the world; but, since John's conversion, Andrew employed all sorts of suggestions, artifices, threatenings, and even violence, to plunge his comrade into a disorderly life. All his efforts were ineffectual. One day, while John was busy out of doors, Andrew, who was alone in the mill, took John's Bible for the purpose of casting it into the river; however, just as he was about to throw it in, he opened the Bible mechanically, and this passage: "Two shall be grinding at the mill; the one shall be taken, and the other left"—Matt. xxiv, 41. This declaration struck his conscience with the rapidity of lightning; it took possession of his heart; and under the weight of an inexpressible emotion, he placed the Bible again in John's chamber. Dating from that moment, Andrew became a new man; thereafter he showed himself to be a sincere servant of Jesus Christ. United, from that time, in heart and soul with one another, John and Andrew, young as they were, soon became, in the hand of God, instruments of a religious awakening in the village and the surrounding neighborhood.

Sleep—How Much is Necessary?

"Show us a man who sleeps twelve hours," says a cotemporary, "and we will show you a blockhead." The meaning of the writer, as we gather from the rest of the article, is that the four or five hours' sleep is sufficient for any man. This, however is an error. Difference of constitution requires different quantities of sleep; for, while one person is healthy on five hours sleep, another requires eight. Generally speaking, individuals in whom the nervous organization predominates, need the largest amount of sleep; the wear and tear of brain being so great, while they are awake, that a proportionate excess of rest is demanded. Overtasking themselves, without adequate sleep, is to such persons premature death; for, neuralgia, if not insanity, is sure to intervene, followed eventually by loss of life. For this class of individuals to endeavor to do with as little sleep as those differently constituted is like expecting a cistern, fed by periodical rains only, to yield as inexhaustible supplies of a hydrant supplied from a public aqueduct. It is like looking for crops when nothing is put on the land. It is exhausting vitality, in a word, and allowing no time for recuperation.

There are some persons fortunately constituted who, with a high nervous organization, yet require comparatively little sleep. Lord Brougham is a living instance. Napoleon was a still more remarkable example. The great Emperor rarely slept five hours. In truth, he owed his wonderful success as much to his capacity to endure fatigue as to his genius, for he could outwork two ordinary men, if not more. Yet, after periods of immense and protracted exertion, he would sleep for nearly a day. Bourrienne, his secretary, relates that after Napoleon returned from Russia, he slept eighteen hours without waking. Very few intellectual men, however, could have performed Napoleon's quantity of work, at any time, with so little sleep. Laboring with the brain is even more exhausting than laboring with the muscles, and consequently demands as much repose for the purposes of recuperation.

Nevertheless, there are persons with whom sleep has become a disease. They rise late, doze after dinner, nod in the evening, and, in fact, may be said never to be more than half awake. Such people kill themselves in the end, as surely as if they had been deprived of needful sleep; for every vital function becomes torpid, life stagnates, and death at last carries off the victim.

PRO TEM.

The question whether circumstances make the man, or the man makes the circumstances, has been agitated in biographies and debating societies. However it shall be decided, in the general, and ultimately, nothing is more certain than that circumstances make Pro Tem. It is certain, because no Pro Tem exists before them, and if he did, with his wits about him, he would surely shape himself out some other destiny. The Editor is away, and thus we have become Pro Tem. Here, on this four-legged tripod we sit, and thus magnify our office.

There be other Pro Tems than the editorial. As evanescent as we, are many other characters and things. We are but a species of the genus after which we are called. Such are subscribers as well as editors, sometimes. Short lived and soon dead, are some of those who enter upon the mail books and ledgers of Journalism. In the morning they flourish—in the evening they are cut down, and wither. Surely, all such is grass. Longevity and pay-in-advance go hand-in-hand. Even the editor shall outlive those who neglect this wholesome proverb.

Such also are some agents—not ours we hope. They did run well for a season, but [illegible] and the troubles of collection, have choked their zeal, and dampened their ardor of enterprise. They have perhaps forgotten, that "it is well always to be zealously affected in a good thing," and that a religious paper is a good thing unquestionably. We have a fellow-feeling for these. Let us get out of Pro Tem-dom as soon as possible. Let us quit this region together.

Of this sort is a species of Christians. In this wise, they too ran well for a while, but who shall say how many things conspired to hurt and hinder, until they have fallen out by the way! Christians for a time—make reprobates for eternity. Of all Pro Tems, we doubt not these are in the worst case. The Lord help such to be established in more permanent godliness!

It is so of our friends. Many of them are come, and newspapers in many things offend all. Correspondents are impatient of condemnation, emendations and delay. Their obituaries, their essays and their poetry, cannot always be admitted just as they come. Sometimes not at all. If they were so admitted, our readers and subscribers would soon be turned into Pro Tems. This writing Pro Tem is thus in difficulty between those other Pro Tems; and we verily believe, if the Editor don't come home, we will all turn into a Pro Tem chaos.

This further, and we have done. Pro Tem is written upon all sublunary things. Earth and all its inhabitants, and all its cares, are only for a time. Therefore, let us work whilst it is day, for Pro Tem hath an end.

REVIVAL INTELLIGENCE.

PALESTINE DISTRICT—EAST TEXAS CONFERENCE.

Dear Bro. M'Tyeire—God has dealt graciously with us in this district. About one thousand souls have been converted to God and added to the Church this year. It would be interesting to give you a detailed account, but this would require more time than I can well spare. The Tyler Circuit, under charge of Bro. H. B. Hamilton, and Jacksonville, under charge of Bro. W. E. George, have been the richest sharers in the good work. Kaufman, also, under charge of Bro. S. D. Sansom, has been greatly blessed. At our last Quarterly Meeting, which was also a Camp-meeting, forty-seven souls were converted and added to the Church. Conversions were clear and powerful, and the Church was greatly revived. One of the good and apostolic evidences of the genuineness of this work, was the Christian liberality manifested in bringing up the finances of the Church. The country is sparsely settled, the people generally not rich, yet they made the largest public contibution that has been made in my district this year; it amounted to one hundred and fifty dollars. There has been also a very marked improvement in the finances all round the district.

May this good work increase until all are saved. God be praised for all his mercies.

Yours in Christ, O. Fisher.

The Principal of Magdalen College, Oxford.—On Monday, September 27, Dr. Routh, the venerable President of Magdalen College, entered upon his ninety-ninth year, and according to annual custom, invited a select party to dine with him, in commemoration of the event. The learned and venerable divine some months since entered upon the sixty-third year of his office as President, having been elected to that office in 1791. He has lately bestowed a choristership on a boy whose grandfather he admitted to that office sixty years ago.

Return of Missionaries.—Bros. Kelly and Lyne passed through the city last week on their return from California; the former with all his family. All well.

Pleasure can be supported by illusion, but happiness rests upon truth.

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

This body met in Canton, Miss., 23d November,—Bishop Capers presiding. We were not able to reach the Conference sooner than Friday morning, or remain later than Monday. But this included the season of greatest interest and delight, and such a season it was to us. The proceedings were marked by ministerial dignity and brotherly kindness. Sessions were held in the court-house. With deep regret did we mark in the voice and looks of the venerable Bishop the evidences of bodily ailment caused by his laborious and inconvenient travelings. Though he left home on 8th August last in unusual good health, there are now symptoms of Bronchial and Asthmatic affections, from which in former years he suffered. Yet he bore himself up under this state of things, so as to attend dilligently and punctiliously to all conference affairs, and on Sunday went through the ordinations: in the morning preaching a sermon, we had not the pleasure of hearing, to an immense audience, and with grateful unction. When the fine band of young preachers were called upon the Conference floor to make their vows preparatory to ordination and full connection, with discipline in hand, he delivered them the most appropriate, chaste and solemn charge we ever heard on such an occasion.

On Sunday forenoon were ordained two local and 6 itinerant deacons: afternoon, 7 local and 3 itinerant elders.

The Memoirs of the dead were read and approved before Conference; some of them with just emotion. They are herewith forwarded for publication. Four or five of the Conference died the past year. But the Lord of the harvest is filling their places and carrying on his work.

The following list of accessions was handed us by the courteous Secretary, H. J. Harris:

Received on trial—J. W. Clark, George T. Mortimer, Ephraim A. Flowers, Christopher E. Godfrey, F. M. Featherston, Thos. Parish, Geo. D. Wade, Jno. W. Adams, F. A. Alford, James W. Lambeth, James S. Harris, Henry H. Shrook, Edward M. Smith, Joseph Bancroft, Geo. H. Christian.

Re-admitted—W. B. Hines, Jno. R. Lambeth, Thomas C. Thornton, Dabney F. Lewis.

Among these names are a father and son. J. R. Lambeth was the missionary to Mobile in 1825-6-7. Under his labors was built the first Methodist Church there, where now are half a dozen and several hundreds of members. Small and feeble was that day. But the "old bee hive" (every body knew it by that soubriquet) prospered. And after throwing off many thrifty spiritual communities, and with singular recouperative energy filling up again, the "bee-hive," not long ago, deserted the frail but blessed tabernacle that Lambeth built and went into substantial brick and mortar quarters. Well, the Conference recommends the son, about the age of superior educational advantages, to the China mission: recommends him heartily. Who can tell but he may build the Methodist "bee-hive" in Nankin or Pekin itself! May it be so. His appointment waits the sanction of Bishop Andrew, who has charge of this department. He is married, and his young and pious wife enters with heavenly ardor into the Missionary enterprise.

The Missionary Anniversary on Saturday night fell not behind any in interest and few in results. The crowd was great, made up of people that had money, sympathy and sense. Indeed, this region of Mississippi is not to be surpassed in turn-outs of this sort. To us was assigned the opening address—the basis of which was a good resolution, whatever the speech might be—"Resolved, that the past success of Missionary labors, and the great and effectual doors the Providence of God is now opening for the propagation of Christianity, call for the gratitude of the Church and increased effort in this behalf." The arrangement of speakers was climactoric, for the first one was followed by Rev. W. H. Watkins, and he, by Dr. Drake. The result testifies: for, to send the recommended Missionary family to China, six hundred dollars were raised and two bales of cotton. The meeting was presided over by Rev. J. Lane, and conducted with a quiet and serious order, in pleasing contrast with the levities (to use no harder name) sometimes witnessed. The Secretary's document was brief and pertinent, and the Treasurer makes a showing of $600 this year behind last. This, when considered in connection with the epidemic visitation to a wealthy portion of the Conference, that entirely prevented collections in some places and embarrassed them in others, may be counted no real falling off. Conference stewards settled at about 70 per cent.

The report of membership is as follows:

Whites this year	13,593
" last "	12,789
Increase	795
Colored this year	10,015
" last "	8,787
Increase	1,228
Local preachers this year	196
" " last "	201
Decrease	4

Inside the Conference bar and listening attentively to all that is said, but saying nothing, sits father Garrett. He began preaching in '93. In playful allusion to an article in the New Orleans Advocate, that cited him as an authority on lungs, he begs to inform us he objects: 1st. It makes him too old. 2d. Too weak. He is not ninety and can handle a plow yet and preach too. Something cheerful, very cheerful, in his face, brisk in his manner and clear in his intelligence. The sunset view gives an idea of what the noon-tide was. Not much younger, but stouter is father Bird, nearly blind now and enjoying much deference. With a heavy octogonal hickory stick he gives an occasional emphasis to a quiet cogitation, in a quiet way.

The people of Canton, though on short notice, give the Conference and visiting ministers a comfortable and most hospitable entertainment. Our friend Montgomery is a fine quarter-master and knew what he was about, in inviting the Conference here. We bring away from Canton, Miss., impressions such as one likes to retain—impressions contributed to by the refined hospitalities of one host and his family, C. C. Shackleford, Esq.—christian fellowship with men engaged in a great work and good, and very edifying religious exercises.

Conference was expected to close on Wednesday. Appointments next week. This Conference has two valuable transfers from the Memphis. But there are none, none from anywhere yet heard of, for Louisiana. Bishop Capers efforts for this end have been fruitless. The yellow fever conference is dreaded. But there is help—in God.

CITY CORRESPONDENCE.

Few persons who have visited our city have failed to notice that Protestant-looking church which fronts northward upon Lafayette Square. They have not failed to observe it, because of its fair prohiteoture, its felicitous location, and the well-earned reputation of its pastor, the Rev. Dr. Scott. What many may not have noticed because demanding a close inspection, is a small monument of marble, standing at your left as you ascend the granite steps, shaded by a single tree, which is its only companion in the little enclosure where it is placed.

Coming close up, and looking through the iron fence which protects the front premises of the church, you may read, what the present generation, else, had nearly forgotten: "Sacred to the memory of the Rev. Sylvester Larned. The first pastor of the Presbyterian Church in New Orleans, died of yellow fever, August 31, 1820, aged 24 years. His last sermon was preached from these words: 'For me to live is Christ, and to die is gain:' Phil. i, 21

I have never passed the church without pausing to renew my acquaintance with this inscription, and to court the profitable reflections which it suggests. I have often waited upon the earnest and able ministrations of the present distinguished preacher, but never without first stopping to look at the monument of Larned; and the conviction has never left me, that the more eloquent sermon was already delivered, before the living minister announced his text.

Poetry sees "sermons in stones;" but in this unadorned marble there is centered the [illegible] as it is, it proclaims the true standard of ministerial fidality; that it is the pastor's duty to die with his people, rather than forsake them in times of danger and distress. This was the final and deliberate conviction of Larned. Once he left his post; but, persuaded of his error, he returned, animated with the noble resolve to live as he should, or die as he might. Some advised him to leave; doubtless the rich invited him to share the safety and repose which their circumstances enabled them to secure. But, in accepting this invitation, and taking such advice, the poor, and those who could not leave, would be left without the solace and consolations of their pastor. Could he look these in the face, and reveal the purpose of abandoning them? The instinct of a brave and sanctified soul, without the circumlocutions of reason, could only answer—No!

This monument assumes a strong and high position; but the ground which it occupies has been questioned. The sincerity of Larned's convictions has never been doubted; but their correctness has. Many have acted in accordance with them; some have acted contrary to them. It is a question of great moment whether this monument occupies a tenable position. That it speaks the sentiments of the people amongst whom it is reared, and the sentiments of all communities subject like ours to occasional epidemic visitation, of both saints and sinners, is well known. But is this standard of ministerial fidelity, not set up in the conscience of any man, and ratified by the popular voice, but the standard which grows out of a pastor's obligations?

The commission is: "Go ye into all the world and preach the Gospel to every creature." It is clear that places of danger are not excepted; for all the world must embrace the most pestilential climates and the most deadly localities. Every creature can be reached only by exposure to those diseases which have a fearful prevalence amongst thousands and millions of blood-bought souls.

The Head of the Church, in issuing this commission, does not nominate these contingences, or rather certainties as exceptions in his charge. It would seem to follow that the exposure necessary to the fulfilment of this commission becomes a duty with those to whom it is given. He who is called to the ministry is called to obey this charge, and when he assumes the responsibility, he is pledged to this standard of fidelity.

Now, in carying out this commission, the pastoral institution arises, and becomes the source of new ministerial obligations. As the preaching of the Gospel to every creature is made imperative, unmodified by the casualties and risks incident to times and places; so, their superintendence and care would seem to be equally binding. The duty of planting churches every where creates the obligation of taking care of them every where; and, if they must be organized at the risk of the minister's life and health, there is no cogency in that reasoning which does not warrant the same hazardin their pastoral oversight. The importance of this oversight may be inferred from St. Paul's charge to the Elders of Ephesus: "Take heed, therefore, unto yourselves, and to all the flock over the which the Holy Ghost hath made you overseers, to feed the Church of God which he hath purchased with his own blood." Speaking of pastors to the Hebrews, he says: "For they watch for your souls, as they that give account." Peter delivers this charge: "Feed the flock of God which is among you, taking the oversight thereof, not by constraint but willingly, being ensamples to the flock. And when the Chief Shepherd shall appear, ye shall receive a crown of glory which fadeth not away." Now, that the letter or spirit of the Scriptures countenances a pastor in abandoning his charge during times of pestilence, or of refusing a pastorate, because in a sickly locality, is preposterous. Paul represents the Church as purchased by the blood of God; and who shall affirm that the risk of a pastor's life, is coring too dearly for its interests? The position of pastors is one of fearful responsibility. They must give account for the souls whose care they have assumed. Called and made overseers by the Holy Ghost, and thus accountable for souls, death is surely better than desertion. Peter seems to contemplate such a case as that of Larned. "When the Chief Shepherd shall appear, ye shall receive a crown of glory that fadeth not away." He gave his life for the sheep, and St. John thus proposes the argument; "Hereby perceive we the love of God, because He laid down his life for us, and we ought to lay down our lives for the brethren." It is only where the ministerial call has fallen into confusion, and the pastoral office receives a dilapidated appreciation, that the liberty of running away from imprisoned charges can be advocated. Upon this subject the doctrine of Larned's monument and a Scriptural view of ministerial obligation, is one.

Whilst the main conclusion just reached is admitted, still some may suppose the monument in error, touching a single assumption; that the pastoral obligation does not allow of a temporary abandonment, from considerations of personal safety. The monument assumes that it is the minister's duty to remain. Nothing is more common than the expression of those who think otherwise, "that the minster can do no good to compensate the risk." If this were true, it would not be necessarily relevant; since it is the preacher's business to labor where he is sent, and to leave the result with God. But it is not true. These times of visitation are peculiarly favorable for the accomplishment of spiritual good. God is in the pestilence; it is sent for a moral effect, and it is then, that [illegible] means of conviction and persuasion; and they should be at their posts to improve and apply, and thus cooperate with Providence in the accomplishment of a gracious result. When tried and afflicted, the Churches more than ever require to be fed and strengthened. If many go away, it is all the worse for those that are obliged to remain; and if the pastor is ever required to feed his flock, it is at such times that the obligation is strengthened—not weakened. It is duty to watch as they that must give account. This is the crisis with many of them—a few days or weeks and they die. Can the watchman come down at such a time? And how shall the pastor who leaves his charge of souls give an account, when he abandons them in the day of adversity, and knows nothing of their hopes or fears at the last? Besides what is due to the Church, at such times there is greater occasion than ever to warn sinners, and urge the Gospel upon their immediate acceptance. Hundreds hear for the last time—they must be saved then or never. Through the instrumentality of the faithful minister many are converted on the dying-bed. Few, perhaps, compared with the number that die; but many in the aggregate, nevertheless. Some have been knowingly instrumental in saving more souls in this way than in any other. Add to these considerations the consolations administered to broken hearts, and the timely dispensation of the sacraments and ordinances of religion—no unmeaning and useless things in themselves—and we cannot think the good accomplished by the minister's presence in times of pestilence is not more than a sufficient warrant for the risk of his life.

The monument may suggest another objection to its own doctrine. Larned was but twenty-four years of age; ministers were scarce in those days, specially in New Orleans. Would it not have been better to have fled and spared his life for long usefulness? This is not the point. When a principle of duty is already defined, and an opportunity of usefulness presents itself, we should adhere to the one, and improve the other without boasting of to-morrow. It is far from certain that long life would have followed; and if it had, his usefulness would have been destroyed. A minister of the Gospel may possibly prolong his life by such a course; but not his usefulness. It were better for all that they die early, than that, as is the case with many, they should outlive their calling, and die at last ignobly.

Nor is it probable that the Church in this case, or in any other, has been a loser. In the midst of a Romish population, whose priests have been justly celebrated for their faithfulness to the pastorate, this instance was a proud indication of Protestantism; and probably did more to commend the Gospel than a long life of eloquent ministrations could have done. Had Larned saved his life by flight, and lived to the present day, it is not likely that the cause of Christianity would have been as well off in New Orleans as it is. In dying he left the ministry a worthy precedent, and the Church an invaluable legacy. His memory is a tower of strength, stronger far than his living reputation and influence. The Church may have no ministers to throw away upon ecclesiastical sinecures, and clerical seculnrization; but she can always spare men to minister to the dying, and make a cheerful offering of their lives where fidelity to the Cross demands the sacrifice. But this monument has a controversy with the gentle and dependent. Its argument may chill the tender sensibilities of some who have a right to be heard. "Let them implead one another." Does a minister's duty to a dependent family, justify the desertion of his pastoral charge? "If any man come to me, and hate not his father and mother, and wife and children, and brethern and sisters, yea, his own life also, he cannot be my disciple." Here family ties and personal safety are proscribed as barriers to ordinary Christian discipleship. These are on no account to interfere with the profession of Christianity, and the discharge of those duties which it involves. The obligations of the Christian minister in the pastoral relation, undoubtedly came within the rule here laid down. They are of paramount importance, and cannot be set aside by the mere claims of a dependent family. If such circumstances constituted any peculiar claim to long life, it would be recognized in the Providence of God. But it is not, for in ordinary times, ministers thus situated, are as often taken as any others. If in this dealing of Providence, it is not a ground of favorable discrimination, we do not see why it should become such in determining the question of pastoral obligation. This plea would not excuse a citizen from military service in time of invasion; and no more can it free the soldier of the Cross, from the service he owes his God, in times of extraordinary peril.

The sentiment of Larned's monument should be written upon the fore-front of our Church and ministry. The Church should never count its ministers too valuable to die in the discharge of their calling; and no minister should think his life so dear, as to be purchased at the price of the smallest compromise. The call to the ministry involves this baptism for the dead; and no candidate for orders should fall below its lofty purpose. Bring the ministry up to this mark, fill its ranks with men who will "hazard their lives for the Lord Jesus," and success will mark the result.

Before we leave the name and monument of Larned, let the memory of Steele, Brown and Childers, of Powell, Hughes and Star, repose in fellowship with his. They have died in a common cause, and they have put their seal to the truth of a common principle. The Church thank God that she has such men to die, and that in dying they are not lost to her prosperity.

GERMAN MISSION IN MOBILE.

Dear Bro. McTyeire: Having sojourned in this city now nearly a week, we would like to give you a short sketch of our doings, and the object of our visit to this place.

We reached here on the 15th November, after a pleasant trip on the steamer California. Was received with a hearty welcome by the Missionary, Rev. Chas. Herwig, as also by the little band of German Methodists in this city.

We preached in the German language every evening during the week, except on Saturday evening, and trust not without some fruit. Our congregations were small, we had from twenty-five to thirty hearers. If we are to judge from appearances, they were as eager to hear the story of the Cross, as if they had never heard it before. On Sunday afternoon we administered the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper to about twenty-four communicants, and we all felt that the Lord himself was present with us.

The Missionary has now labored in this place near three years in succession under very great disadvantages. They have no suitable place of worship, and in consequence of this, but a very small congregation could be gathered. In this way, much of the time and labor of the Missionary was as good as thrown away—a thing too painful for any heart that yearns for the conversion of immortal souls. We hope, however, that ere long, this difficulty will be obviated. Steps were taken towards purchasing a lot of ground for the purpose of building a commodious chapel upon it for the sole use of the German Mission. We hope and pray that the sum required to build the chapel, will readily be collected in the city of Mobile.

The prospect for the German Mission is better now, than it was a few years ago. Without the gift of prophesy we can foretell, that after the Chapel is built, and the Society has a home, it will increase and prosper. They must have a Church, or give up the Mission, and discharge the Missionary! Which would indeed be wicked in the eyes of our great and glorious Master, who, after he rose triumphant from the grave, gave the irrevocable command: "Go ye unto all the World, and preach the Gospel to every Creature." No, the German Mission cannot be given up for the want of a Meeting-house. The labors and the tears of those that have sown the seed of God's holy Word, cannot in this wise be annihilated! We hope to see the day when a large German society shall throng the contemplated Chapel, and the song of praise, with the shout of Newborn Souls rise, as a sweet savor to our God and King upon the Eternal Throne.

I was glad to meet again with my good Bro. G. Garrott, P. Elder of Mobile District. He is a warm friend of German missions, and assisted me greatly in my collecting tour last year. He looks as well and as hearty as ever.

Also met Bro. Hearn, I think he looks younger now than he did some years ago! He is as much engaged in his Master's Work as he ever was. God bless our Fathers in Israel. It does my heart good to see these veterans of the Cross, for years they have borne the heat and burden of the Day! and still they are as active upon the walls of Zion, and with as untiring zeal, as they ever were. It nerves my heart with fresh courage, and kindles my soul into a new flame, to prosecute the work committed to me with alacrity and zeal. But the dear Brethren Powel, Hughes, and Star, I found not! These bright stars have disappeared from our Church horizon, they are slumbering in their graves! and rest from their labors. May God grant, that when we shall cease from our labors, we may meet those good and pious men in that glorious world of bliss and immortality.

In the hope, that I shall soon see you again seated in that chair at the office of our beloved Christian Advocate, busy and engaged to make it useful and interesting for its readers,

I remain, dear Bro. McTyeire, your humble fellow servant in Christ Jesus.

John M. Hoffen.

[For the N. O. Christian Advocate.

Mrs. Sarah Evans—Reminiscences.

Our great Father has been very kind in presenting to our material eyes so many beautiful things. I have always admired the words of the poet which say, that "Beauty is a wayside sacrament." Who of us, wearied with the "utile" and substantial life, have not felt our hearts rejoice and expand in the contemplation of beauty! There are some characters, whose influence on mind, or the inner life, is like that of flowers and sweet perfumes on the senses. The thing of love and beauty lingered on your page after on hour's communion with the subject of this sketch.

It has been matter of wonder with me that no lengthened memoir of this lovely character has ever appeared. My personal acquaintance with this eminent Methodist lady was limited, but from early childhood her name was as a "household word" with my parents and the Methodist preachers, who often spoke of her virtues their theme. Her mildness of hospitality, urbanity and piety were often the subjects of conversation among those "soldiers and heralds of the cross," who had found in her a sister, and counsellor, and in her home a home.

When, at last, it was my privilege to meet her personally, she impressed my feelings as one might suppose charity personified would do.

It has long been my wish to pay a tribute to the excellent character of this eminent Christian; but a feeling of ineffiency has prevented me. My want of an intimate personal acquaintance indeed me to say to my mother to supply me, in writing some items from her remembrance of Mrs. Evans. She penned for my help some "reminiscences" of her esteemed friend and sister, which I think are so much better expressed than I can make them, that I take the liberty to send them to you, hoping that my mother will forgive my forcing her thoughts into "print" without her knowledge or consent.

"My dear Mary, I will try to comply with your request, that I should describe Mrs. Evans to you as she appeared to me when I visited her at her residence. I went with your father and several friends from the neighborhood to attend a Quarterly Meeting at Pinkneyville. At the close of the meeting we were all introduced to Sister Evans, as being strangers to her except your father. She most cordially invited us home with her. Arrived at home before any of her family she received us at the door and bade us welcome in truly primitive Christian style. Her salutation and manner reminded me of Rebecca of old. We felt at once that we were at home. Our ease and comfort were consulted in all things. There was no ostentatious display of service, or attention that we did not need or desire. In observing her and her attentions to her guests, I could but say myself, 'this is the perfect christian lady.' Her servants seemed in a great degree to partake of her spirit. Her residence seemed the abode of peace and order. Her yard and garden displayed her good taste. Beauty and utility were judiciously combined. She left us in the cool of the evening through her extensive garden. Our little girls she took under her especial attention; she soon won the better of their timidity, and before we left they felt free to converse with her, and to express their feelings to her. When we bade her leave, we all exclaimed 'what a delightful visit we have had!' 'How happily does Mrs. Evans diffuse the savor of her piety in her intercourse and conversation!'

"There is one circumstance I should have mentioned before, but I will not allow myself to omit it. It was Sabbath evening; Mrs. Evans' daughter performed well on the piano, she was asked to give us some sacred music, she complied, and gave us some of the best I ever heard—her mother accompanying her with her voice. She told us that she had been particularly careful to have her daughter taught sacred pieces.

"Sister Evans was one of the pioneers in this country, consequently, she was for several years deprived of the public means of grace. Married to an intelligent, generous, high minded man of the world, he sought the society of fashionable, worldly persons; and were the guests that he invited to his house. These she always received and entertained with affability and politeness, but never in any degree letting down her character as a Christian. In her the sick, the poor and the stranger ever found a ready friend. Often was she found praying by the bedside of the sick or dying, when no minister of the gospel was near to point the dying sinner to the Lamb of God, and to direct him to the blessed promises of the Bible.

"I did not see her with her sons, but I have been told by her intimate friends, that from their childhood to manhood, she always inspired them with the greatest love and veneration for her character. When she arose them in the morning they arose to do her reverance. A stranger might have thought they were meeting after an absence of years, always kissing her and leading her to her seat.

"After she was old she had the care of a family of orphan grand-children. She retained her faculties to the last, and was always cheerful and useful. Of her last hour I do not know, but doubtless they were peaceful. Your Mother."

Mrs. Evans was of the Spencer family. One of her brothers was long a captive among the Indians. His adventures appeared in one of our Methodist journals. If I mistake not all the family were devoted Methodists. Mrs. Evans was an advocate for "Christian Perfection," and was herself a living witness of the doctrine.

All that I promise to myself in this tribute is, that I will awaken "sweet memories" in the hearts of the old friends of Mrs. Evans, who have taken sweet Christian council with her, and who remember her house as one of the pleasant resting places vouchsafed to the weary traveler on life's journey.

HYMENEAL.

MARRIED—By the Rev. B. Burpo, Nov. 9, 1853, Rev. D. CARMICHAL, of the Alabama Conference, to Mrs CAROLINE BOOTHE, of Dallas county, Alahama.

OBITUARY.

Departed this life, October 15th, 1853, at the residence of his brother, James Manning, Esq., of Macon, Marengo county, Ala., Mr. PEYTON T. MANNING, in the 42nd year of his age, after a severe and protracted attack of yellow fever. The deceased was born, Nov. 10th, 1811, near Huntsville, Madison county, in the Northern part of this State, where he resided until the latter part of 1849, when he moved to Aberdeen, Mississippi, and from thence to this county in 1851. It was his lot to be well known in all the places in which he resided—in all of which he commanded the respect and love of his fellowmen—by all of whom his death will be regretted, but particularly by those circles of warm friends that he had so happily attached to him. His qualities as a man were unexceptionable—endearing him by the strongest ties of association and friendship to all who knew him.

At the early age of seventeen, his naturally religious mind became awakened and fully imbued with the necessity and importance of a change of heart, which under the guidance of the Holy Spirit ripened into a happy conversion, that resulted in his attachment to the Methodist Episcopal Church. In prosperity and adversity, it mattered not which, the witnessing of God's Spirit cheered and upheld him—tempering all things in conformity to His holy will. The practicing of his Heavenly Father's will and requirements was his sole delight, and the searching of the scriptures, and meditation thereon, his chief employment amidst the business cares of this life—enabling him so to speak and act as to redound to the glory of God, his own individual good, and the present and eternal happiness of his fellow men. His conversations very often took a scriptural turn, and in the midst of them he would glory in the Cross of Christ—his Redeemer and Interceding Lord; his walk was close with God, and his faith streng and bright. He rejoiced in good works, and his energies at all proper times, were devoted to the spread of the the gospel, and the building up of God's church on the earth. He lived a useful disciple of Christ Jesus, and a bright example of the efficacy of saving faith. His last moments accorded with, and substantiated the genuineness of his past life. In the midst of suffering and threatening dissolution death had no terrors for him—he still prayed, and gloried in the redeeming love of God. Quietly he breathed his last, and slept in Jesus, in the glorious hope of the resurrection morn, bequeathing his life and death to his afflicted and disconsolate family and friends, as an ever to be remembered example of sterling Christian integrity and virtue. "O death where is thy sting! O grave where is thy victory" They had no sting for, and victory over him. Thanks be to God, which giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ. Peace be to his spirit. May the futher's God be the husband of the widow and the futher of the fatherless, and ever protect and bless them in this world, and eventually save them in the world to come, for His Son's sake, is the sincere prayer of

A FRIEND.

MR. EDITOR:—Suffer me through the columns of your excellent paper, to notice the death of Miss ANN ELIZA BRYSON, daughter of James and Eliza Bryson, of Noxubee county, Miss. Miss Bryson was taken off by lintestinal Inflamation, a disease which has been prevalent in many sections of the South for several years past. She had left home to attend a school in Ala., und, although the disease was not known as epidemic in the section of the country to which she went, its seeds, in the opinion of her physicians, were incorporated into her system before leaving her county of residence, where it prevailed extensively. She died on the 2nd of November, 1853, intelligent sincere in profession and feeling, possessed of an extraordinary and well cultivated talent for music, engaging in person and address—within a few short months of graduation—it was not strange that the pride and affection of her parents clustered around and clung to ANN ELIZA with more than parental fondness and tenacity. Every one who knew, loved "Bryson," as she was affectionatoly called by her associates; for, in the language of the Bible, she had "a merry heart which doeth good like a medicine."

"Bryson" was a gay, happy, laughing child, (suffer me in love to call her), merry as the birds, bright and innocent as the flowers, cheering and glidiug in the soul like array of pure sunlight, and yet she was not unmiadful of religion, for she earnestly and promptly, while in health, stated to her young associates, "that there was nothing on earth she so much desired as the religion of the Lord Jesus." A short time before she was taken sick, she became an altar mourner at a Methodist Meeting, but did not seem to be fully satisfied until she was about stepping into the valley and shadow of death, when she effectionately grasped a friend standing near her and exclaimed, "i am happy!" A few moments after, she sweetly breathed out her last. How good, how like Jesus was it, to accompany this suffering child across the dark, the fearful stream of death.

Our last privilege was to have watch-night with the dead. We placed the body of our dear young friend on a platform, tastefully decorated in white and black, and in honor of her ability in music, a fine, full toned melodeon at her feet. Ever and anon, through that sorrowful night, the soft, rich swelling notes of this delightful instrument swept mourafully over the dead, and with increasing volume, through the spacious halls of the building, in accompaniement to funeral dirges, tearfully sung by a choir of affectionate young associates.

She is gone! May God support her distressed parents and bring them safely to meet their daughter in Heaven.

W. R. P.

DIED.—At Cottage Hill, near Mobile, on the 26th October, of yellow fevor, after an illness of five days, MARTHA SPENCER, wife of Richard Spencer, Esq., in the fifty-third year of her ago. She was a native of the city of Baltimore, and has resided in Alabama since 1841. She was converted at a Camp-meeting, on the eastern shore of Maryland, under the preaching of the Rev. George Cookman, and continued to enjoy religion from that time until her death. For many years she was alone in her profession, but by and by saw her prayers answered in the conversion of her husband and two daughters, nearly about the same time. She had been greatly indulged from a child by fond parents, nor was ever subject to restraint, yet from natural hent she was methodical, and was most remarkable for system in all she did; her days and hours had their appropriate employments, and each work was allowed to consume only its proper measure of time. From this order nothing moved her; the arrival of her children and grandchildren upon a visit after long separation, nor any other event, changed the rule of her living. Wherever she might be, away from home, she settled at once into her regular ways. So that, though a very busy and finished housewife, she always had time enough to read the Scriptures and for private devotion. The same hour every day found her in the rocking chair with the Bible open before her. She had her week-day readings and her Sabbath-day readings.

She was a most devoted wife and mother, always forecasting and anxious; yet she did not lose sight of that Providence which is cognizant of everything, but cultivated more than is common with Christians, a grateful spirit to the Giver of all good. Her letters abound with expressions of gratitude. She writes just a month before her death, "I feel He has been very gracious to you and to us, thus far. Truly we do praise his Holy name, and I hope to praise him more and serve him better. I was rejoiced to hear all our dear pets were in the way to recover."

She was scarcely less devoted to her Church; a regular attendant upon preaching and class meetings; a warm friend to Methodist Ministers, and an ardent admirer of Methodism and its peculiarities.

She knew that she was dying during the whole day before the evening on which she died, and had her senses to the last. When first told of her extreme illness, she was engaged for some minutes in prayer, and soon broke forth in ejaculations of praise to God. Being asked at a later period if she was resigned, she replied firmly, "Yes, the Lord is with me! sweet Jesus is with me." From that time, to the time of her death, she frequently raised her hands, evidently in praise to God. She kept her eyes closed, but her lips moved, and her hands were raised in the attitude of prayer. She gave directions about her interment; sent messages of love and exhortation to her children; had all her servants called in, and exhorted each by name to serve the Lord and prepare to meet her in Heaven. Just before she died, she commenced praising the Lord and said she knew there was a reality in religion, that the Lord was good, and so continued as long as she could utter. At the very last, she opened her eyes and looked clear and bright; her countenance, before contracted by pain, changed, became calm, a smile lighted up her face, then she closed her eyes, composed her features, laid her hands across upon her heart, and so fell asleep in Jesus.

RIDGELY, MACON CO., ALA., Nov. 23, 1853.

DEAR BROTHER:

By order of the Quarterly Conference of Herbonr Circuit, held at Olivet, 5th inst., I send the following resolutions, and request for them a place in your invaluable paper:

1. Resolved, That in the judgment of this Quarterly Conference, the day has arrived when such alteration should be made in our disciplina as to allow to our itinerant ministers better wages for their services, and more aid for their families, and that we recommend the next General Conference to make such alteration.

2. Resolved, That the above resolution he forwarded to the Southern and N. C. Christian Advocate for publication. Yours, etc.,

THE STREAM OF TIME.

It is a silent stream:
Calm as a quiet sleep;
To strange repose,
This stream still flows,
Where the mourners cease to weep.

It is a wide spread stream,
And every valley dile;
It covers the plains,
And the high domains
Of the everlasting hills.

It is a ceaseless stream;
Forever floating fast,
Like a solemn tide,
To the ocean wide,
Of the far, unfathomed past.

It is a mighty stream;
Resistless in its sway;
To the loftiest things,
The strongest things,
It carries with ease away.

It is a precious stream;
For pearls of price untold
Reward the care
Of the searcher there,
And its sands are seeds of gold.

Through silent realms of night;
Through every glorious chime;
By night and day,
On its wide spread way,
Fast flows the stream of time.

A VERITABLE DOGBERRY.—A Mayor of one of the Communes in France lately made the following entry upon his register:

"I, Mayor of ——, found yesterday, in the forcet of ——, a man by the name of Rollin, committing an act against the laws. I commanded him to surrender, whereupon he set upon me, heaped me with insult and contumely, calling me a ragamuffin, an ass, and a precious dolt and a scarecrow—all of which I certify to be true."

There is a mustache mania at present in England. Mechanics and others who are employed in the open air, seem to be very generally discarding the razor.

General Intelligence.

Alexandria—The Yellow Fever.—The Democrat of the 23d says:

Since our last publication, we can count three deaths from Fever; and we have heard of fresh cases, though the number is small. One of those who perished was a stranger among us—a nephew of Hugh Lynch, Esq.; and every one who knew him regrets his loss.

The weather is cool and has been detestable. With easterly winds, a warm humid atmosphere, the only wonder is that the pestilence does not prevail to a greater extent, as in Shreveport and other points. We again warn our countryfriends to stay where they are. Cold weather will come, anon, and the scourge disappear; but until such announcement is made, it were madness for persons to venture within our lines.

The Red River is receding at Alexandria, Shreveport, and all other points along the river heard from.

POTATOES IN GREAT BRITAIN.—A recent number of the North British Mail, an Edinburgh paper, says, that at the time of publication, there were in that city about three miles of trucks, loaded with potatoes, waiting to be discharged on one of the railways, for conveyance to London. Potatoes were bought up in Edinburgh at about £6 per ton. The freight to London amounted to £2 per ton; value in that city, £10, leaving the Scotch dealer a clear profit of £3 per ton.

LARGE EAGLE.—A Grey Eagle was killed near Mcellson, Ga, a few days since, which weighed twelve pounds and measured two feet one inch from tip of wings and three feet from tip of tail to tip of bill.

IMMIGRATION.—For the week ending the 17th there arrived in New York from Europe in seventeen ships 19,231 emigrants, which is at the rate of about 1,300 a day. From October 21 to November 10, there were 18,272 arrivals. The New York Post remarks sensibly that in any other country than this a speedy revolution would be the consequence of the daily arrival of a thousand strangers on its shores.

MARQUESS AND MEN.—The London Diogence says: "A League in just three miles; yet persons who join an Association so called, very often make up their minds to go any length."

BEEF PACKING IN CHICAGO.—It appears from statement in the Chicago papers that 25,163 cattle have been packed in that city during the present year, the whole amounting to 14,869,427 pounds.

CLEVELAND, OHIO.—The Cleveland Plaindealer gives the result of the census just taken in that city, which shows a population of 44,206. This is a very great increase since the last census, and is probably equaled by that of few towns in the Union.

EMIGRATION TO TEXAS.—Large numbers of emigrants to Texas have left the States of Alahama, Mississippi and Georgia this fall and many more are preparing to leave during the winter.

GENEROSITY.—The merchants of New York and Philadelphia, with their characteristic liberality, here, during the ravages of the yellow fever in the town of Jackson, Miss., sent to the aid of the sufferers in this town alone the sum of $745.

THE COLLEGE OF ARKANSAS.—The number of students now in attendance at the Arkansas College at Fayetteville, Ark., is 132. This ranks among the best conducted institutes in the Southwest.

THE NEW ORLEANS CUSTOM HOUSE.—The entire cost of this structure will be, it is estimated, about $3,000,000. $1 406,000 has already been expended upon it.

FOREIGN MINISTERS TO BE RETAINED.—It is stated that the President has determined to delay the departure of Judge Mason for Paris, of Mr. Robert McLane for China, and Gov. Seymour, of Connecticut, for St. Petersburg, until they have been confirmed by the Senate.

BALTIMORE AND OHIO RAILROAD COMPANY.—Considerable excitement has existed in Baltimore for several days past on account of the threatened bankruptcy of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company. The Company asked the city to endorse for it to the amount of $5,000,000, to which request the Common Council acceded on the 22d.

COLLECTION OF THE CUSTOMS.—It is said that the Secretary of the Treasury is engaged in reorganizing the United States collection districts, and that the new arrangement will, when completed, embraces the territories. The district of St. Louis will be the largest, extending over a million of square miles.

LATER FROM CURACOA.—The brig Agatha, Capt. Gorum, which arrived at New York on the 21st, from Curacoa reports salt to be very scarce and high at that place, and some to be had at Bonaire. Peter Nelson died with fever at Lavelaide, Coro. William Wheeler(boy) died on board at Curacoa.

THE PHILADELPHIA NAVY YARD.—In the Philadelphia Navy Yard work is going on actively. The steamer Fulton has been hauled off from her moorings there into the stream, having been overhauled and thoroughly repaired. She now awaits orders. The U. S. sloop-of-war Cyane is also refitted and equipped and ready for a three years' cruise. Steamer San Jacinto is on the ways repairing, having already received considerable improvements in cabins, hold and forecastle. She is now ready to receive her new propeller and engine. About 400 men are employed at present in the yard.

BLOCK FOR THE WASHINGTON MONUMENT.—The last block which arrived for the Washington Monument was received on the 20th, from the city of Baltimore. It will be presented in a few days by the mayor and city council of Baltimore. It is one of the largest stones yet received of Baltimore county granite, inscriptions in raised letters, and the centre represents a correct fac simile of the Battle Monument. Its cost was $4 000.

PRESENT TO CAPT. MCKAY.—The New England Mutual Marine Insurance Company have presented to Capt. L. McKay, of the new ship Great Republic, a massive silver pitcher, for his noble conduct while commander of the ship Sovereign of the Seas

WASHINGTON—A Clerical promotion and Appointment in the Treasury Department.—Edward Wright, Esq., of New York, has been promoted to a second class clerkship (1200 per annum) in the office of the Commissioner of Customs, vice Evan Edwards, deceased. H. Lockwood, of the District of Columbia, has been appointed to the first class clerkship vacated by the promotion of Mr. Wright.

Naval Officers Detached, Ordered, etc.—Lieut. John G Misercon detached from the Boston Navy Yard, and has three months leave of absence.

Lieut. Theodore P. Green ordered to the Boston yard in his stead. [Washington Star.

THE MORTALITY AMONG THE OFFICERS OF THE ARMY.—Thirty-one of the nine hundred officers of the United States army have died off since the 1st of January last. This, in time of peace, is a very large per centage of deaths, proving beyond question the hazardous nature of the services they are at all times called to render to their country. [Washington Star.

TWO MEN DROWNED.—On Wednesday night last, while the steamer Emma Dean was lying at Aurora, a party of Irishmen brought down to the boat a mass on a litter who had a broken back. They were proceeding to take him on board that he might be conveyed to his family in Cincinnati, and were on the short planks reaching from the wharf to the boat, when the steamer John C. Cline passed up near by, drawing the Emma Dean out in the river so far that the planks slipped off and the men with the litter were all precipitated into the water.

Some five Irishmen, the sick man, and Billy tittle, the clerk, were all thrown in the river, and strange to say, the man with the broken back was the first to get out. One of the men grasped Mr. Little by the throat and would have drowned him had not the hawser been near the water's edge. He caught it and by the most vigorous exertions reached the shore. The others floundered for several minutes and would have all drowned, but for the quick assistance of deck hands who saved three of them. We could not learn the names of the two men who were drowned. [Louisville Democrat, 21st.

WEATHER AND CROPS IN FLORIDA.—From a letter in the Charleston Courier, dated Jefferson county, Fla., Nov. 10, we make the following extract relative to the prospects of the crops in that region:

Old Floridians can tell you easily of years in which no killing frost was felt until the Christmas holidays, and then there were blooms on our cotton plants, and forms and bolls yet opening. Two weeks' delay at this season will add, on some plantations, fifty or one hundred bales certainly lost if frost occurs within that time. This is more certainly the case this year than usual. The twelve weeks drouth from which we suffered in the spring and early summer so retarded planting that some of our best planters find themselves thrown back more than at any previous season. With the proviso, however, that we have no serious frost till late, we are safe in marking the cotton crop of this year up to if not a little leading that of the last. The corn crop throughout the State, so far as we can learn, is light. The failure is felt more deeply coming as it does after a previous crop of unequalled abundance. Still it is borne resolutely, and the farmer in answer to the query whether his crop will supply him, tells you often "it must do."

YELLOW FEVER AT NEWPORT, FLA.—A letter to the Charleston Courier, dated Tallahassee, Nov 15th, says:

"The general health of this country has been uninterrupted since you left us, but I am sorry to add that the yellow fever has broken out again at Newport, with even greater virulence. The citizens had been back but a little while when it re-appeared, and there have been several deaths—Dr. Goldwire, and Smith (the merchant,) among them. It shows the impropriety of returning to places so infected, before hard frost. Nothing is killed here yet, and indeed we have had summer weather nearly all the time. The frost of the 25th of last month was so slight that none of its marks are visible, and you would never imagine that there had been any."

THE DISTRIBUTION OF THE CALIFORNIA MAILS.—We understand that the Postmaster General has very recently issued an order directing the Postmaster at San Francisco to re-arrange his distribution of mails for the Atlantic side, so as greatly to facilitate and hasten their receipt at their respective destinations in the interior. Heretofore all these mails were made up in California (at San Francisco) for New York, where their distribution of course occasioned so little delay. Under the new order, the San Francisco Postoffice is to make up mails for New York, Boston, Philadelphia, Baltimore, Washington, D. C., and Chicago. These instructions designate the States and counties of States for which mail matter shall be sent to each of the points named above. We presume that this change will facilitate the delivery of letters from California at least two days almost every where throughout the United States, and in many cases more. [Washington Star.

By the Perseverence we have received Galveston papers to the 25th and Indianola to the 23d. The News of the former piece of the 25th says:

No arrivals from Northern ports have taken place.

In business generally there has been no great movement—few persons from the country are visiting our city, and receipts of produce continue small, for the advanced season.

From the rivers we have no information promising for early opening of navigation; weather was dry and warm favoring cotton planters in finishing their crops, while for sugar-making the season is not as propitious as is desired, the yield will be two-thirds only of last year's crop in Brazoria county.

At Houston the receipts of cotton have been pretty considerable, and store business is reported active. On account of the low stage of water, the steamers have brought but little cotton from Houston for shipment from here.

Sickness has not altogether disappeared from this city and Houston, owing to the continuation of changeable weather, and a high range of the temperature for this late season.

We understand from Col. Potter, who has recently returned from the country, that, owing to the sickness of Judge Buckley no Courts have been or will be held this fall, in Polk, Tyler, Jefferson, Orange and Liberty counties, all of the 7th District.

Judge Hancock is holding court in this, the 1st District, having exchanged with Judge Townes. We understand no court was held in Richmond in consequence of the yellow fever. The court in Brazoria will commence next Monday.

We learn that the health of Indianola and Lavaca is completely restored.

The streets of Lavaca are thronged with wagons. Cotton is coming in rapidly, and merchandise as quickly going out.

At Indianola, business has revived and now presents its usual animation, corresponding to the season. The Bulletin remarks:

A few weeks ago where was wide depopulation, and not an echo of gladness sounded, new is activity and joy, and business and pleasure walk hand in hand. Though many new-made graves dot our prairie, and many vacancies exist at our domestic boards, yet there is no vacancy in our streets.

The Columbia Democrat says that town is now very brisk with business. The season, it states, has fairly opened, and the town is every day full of people. The sugar crop now being taken off is very large, and the success of the sugar planters all of course add much to the prosperity of the country. The present crop of sugar will much surpass that of previous years. The cotton, though a partial failure, is yet good. There are but few planters who have not made an average crop.

The same paper says that good mechanics are in demand in that town just now. Good coopers, shoemakers, etc., etc., command the best compensation.

LITERARY BLUNDERS.—We once heard of a young lady who cast away the the "Pilgrim's Progress" with contempt, because as she declared, it was so ridiculous to think of going to heaven on foot. It seems she has companions in blunders almost equally as great, and some of these even among the learned, as we are advised by the following, which we clip from the Parlor Magazine:

When Dante published his "Inferno," the simplicity of the age accepted it as a true narrative of his descent into hell.

When the Utopia of Sir Thomas Moore was first published, the learned Budaeus and others took it for a genuine history, and considered it as highly expedient that missionaries should be sent thither, in order to convert so wise a nation to Christianity.

It was a long while after their publication, that many readers were convinced that Gulliver's Travels were fictitious.

The "Hermippus Redivius" of Dr. Campbell, a curious banter on the harmetic philosophy and the universal medicine, deceived, for a length of time, the most learned of that day. His notion of the art of prolonging life, by inhaling the breath of young women, was eagerly credited. A physician, who himself had composed a treatiss on health, was so influenced by it, that he actually took lodgings at a female boarding school, that he might never be without a constant supply of the breath of young ladies.

LETTER FROM A RUNAWAY LUNATIC.—The Augusta (Me.) Age has the following anecdote of a lunatic, who seems to have had no little method in his madness:

An inmate of the insane hospital in this city, named Samuel M. The only clue to his whereabouts is derived from the following letter, since received from him by Dr. Harlow, superintendent of the hospital, who had taken special pains to securely lock him up the night previous to his escape. The letter is the coolest one imaginable. Here it is verbatim et literatim:

New Orleans, Jackson and Great Northern Railroad Company.

At a meeting of the Board of Directors of the New Orleans, Jackson and Great Northern Railroad Company, held on the 24th inst., the following report was read and its publication ordered:

TO THE DIRECTORS OF THE NEW ORLEANS, JACKSON AND GREAT NORTHERN RAILROAD COMPANY:

Gentlemen—The undersigned has the honor to lay before you a report from James H. Grant, Chief Engineer, which will inform you of the progress made in the surveys and location of the company's road, and the condition of its work, with an estimate of the cost of completing the same from the city to the State line. I also beg leave to submit the annexed statement, from the Secretary, of receipts and expenditures.

The estimates of the Chief Engineer exhibit $1,027,099 as the sum necessary to complete the road from the city to the State line, and to meet this expenditure, the means and resources of the company available within the period when needed are deemed sufficient.

The resources of the company, over and above the cost of the road to the State line, amounting to about two millions of dollars, will be applicable to the grading and construction of the road from thence in the Tennessee river, and there is a reasonable expectation that the citizens of Mississippi, on the line of the road, with proofs in favor of its ultimate completion, will here every motive to accelerate its progress by increasing their subscriptions; and I would respectfully recommend the early adoption of a plan best calculated to effect this purpose. With the means secured to grade the road from the State line to the Tennessee river, a distance of three hundred and twenty-two miles, there is no reason to distrust our ability to command, when required, on the faith of the works of the company, the means necessary to procure the iron and a complete equipment.

The undersigned, with Mr. Slidell, appointed as your commissioners to negotiate the mortgage bond of the company, with a view of providing a sufficient fund, in addition to resources already secured, to complete, at an early period, the entire road from New Orleans to the Tennessee river, proceeded to London in July last. On our arrival in that city, we ascertained that owing to the advancing rates of interest, caused by the apprehension of a serious deficiency in the harvests, and the probability of political troubles, calculated to disturb confidence among capitalists, it was quite impracticable to effect the sale of new bonds. Finding this unfavorable state of affairs, we deemed it advisable to defer placing the bonds on the market for sale, and what has since transpired, in respect to the general depreciation in the value of public stocks and railroad securities, will, I hope, be deemed a sufficient and satisfactory reason for the postponement of negotiations, which we are not without encouragement to renew on the appearance of a favorable change in monetary affairs. If the company had been prepared to sell its bonds a few months earlier, I am entirely satisfied that the basis of their security and the promises of the scheme, would have assured success. Now that its works are more advanced, and in a few months the section between the city and the State line will be finished and in operation, with over two millions of dollars of expenditure, there is still more reason to regard success as neither equivocal nor doubtful, on the revival of confidence and a demand for stocks of acknowledged security.

If we look to the history of improvements commenced in other States of the Union, the progress we have already made will compare favorably with any similar enterprise. We have before us a certainty of being able to complete nearly ninety miles of road on or before the ensuing July, besides having overcome in its construction, difficulties by many deemed insurmountable, but now ascertained by the Chief Engineer to be of no serious importance.

While daily experience is demonstrating that natural channels of commerce are ineffectual in competition with those of an artificial character, and in suggestive of the necessity of counteracting the powerful efforts made to impair our commercial superiority, we have derived from the late afflicting epidemic fresh motives to animate our zeal, and to persevere in the prosecution of the works of the company. Aside from the immense commercial importance they possess, the convenience and facility they will afford to our citizens and those of the interior States can not be overestimated in value, when, with the connections of our road with others completed and in progress under the fostering aid of the States of Tennessee and Virginia, Washington City may be reached in two days, at a speed of twenty-five miles per hour.

In the present condition of the company, the progress made in its works and the remaining resources for their extension, we have every thing to hope and no cause for discouragement

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

JAMES ROSS, President

NEW ORLEANS, JACKSON AND GREAT NORTHERN RAILROAD, Engineer Department, New Orleans, Nov. 24, 1853.

JAMES ROSS, Esq., President:

SIR—In compliance with your request, communicating the wishes of the Board of Directors, that I should submit to them an accurate statement of the condition and progress of the works of the company under my charge, I respectfully report as follows:

SURVEY, LOCATION AND CONTRACTS.

The entire line of road from New Orleans to Nashville, a distance of 540 miles, has been carefully surveyed, and a final location made of 409 miles, between New Orleans and Ohickasaw, on the Tennessee river, intersecting the Memphis and Charleston Road in Deer Creek Valley, 400 miles from New Orleans, 256½ miles have been placed under contract, viz: 87½ miles from New Orleans to the State line, 95½ miles from the State line to Jackson, 23¼ miles from Jackson to Canton, and 50 miles from Aberdeen south. The entire line of road is free from any engineering difficulty, and the route will compare favorably with any in the Union; not only with reference to the gradients, alignments, facility and cheapness of construction, but in the elements of travel and traffic necessary to insure a certain and profitable return on its cost.

PROGRESS OF THE WORK.

The graduation, cribbing and piling of near seventy miles, have been constructed between this city and the State line, 62 of which are ready for the reception of the crossties and iron rails. The track-laying has been commenced at the main depot, also between the North Pass and the Pine Woods, and from the latter point it is progressing towards the State line. The bridges at the North and South Pass Manchac are in a state of forwardness and will be speedily completed in a substantial manner. In regard to the portion of the work of the company, I am entirely satisfied that the plans adopted for crossing the passes are attended with no practical difficulty whatever, and that the structures will be permanent and safe for the passage of your trains. The same remarks apply equally to the cribwork in progress of construction across the Saamp Prairie, and the whole series of swamps between the city and the "Piny Woods" will be passed without encountering any material engineering difficulty.

COMPLETION OF THE ROAD TO THE STATE LINE.

The agreement as to the time for the completion of the contract of Messrs. Thos. C. Bates & Co., from the South Pass Manchac to the State line, a distance of 51 miles, will enable them to deliver it in a finished condition on or before the 1st of July next, and the state of forwardness of the work between the city and the South Pass is such as to insure its completion within the same period of time. This being done, there are no obstructions in the way of having the entire road, from the city to the State line, in operation, with a daily train of cars running, on and after the 1st of July next.

COST OF FINISHING TO STATE LINE.

The following is an estimate of the expenditure necessary to cover the cost of completing the road to the State line.

Thos. C. Bates & Co., balance of their contract,	$296,012
Contractors from depot to South Pass,	178,500
Expenses of laying track,	65,500
Iron rails, chairs and spikes for 87½ miles less amount received and on hand,	474,987
Engineering and superintendence,	25,500
Total,	$1,027,099

Plans for the main depot buildings have not been prepared, and it is not deemed advisable to commence their erection until the road is completed to the State line. The temporary building constructed on the company's grounds will answer all purposes for the present. Any further expenditures at this time for that purpose would be premature and unsolicited for. The company have received 3700 tons of iron rails, and have advices of the further shipment of 3300 tons, expected to arrive in December and January, making in all 7000 tons, which will iron the road for a distance of 65½ miles. The remaining 3000 tons due on the contracts for 10,000 tons made by Messrs. Wilson, Hallatt & Co., of Liverpool, are deliverable in February next. Three locomotive engines have been purchased; also a sufficient number of burthen cars to transport the necessary materials for laying the track.

OPERATIONS IN MISSISSIPPI.

In Mississippi, between the State line and Jackson, a portion of the clearing for the road-way is opened, and on the division between Jackson and Canton, embracing a distance of 23¼ miles, about one-half of the graduation is finished. From Aberdeen, South, the work has been commenced, and for the present will be prosecuted to the extent of collections made from the subscribers in Monroe county.

The foregoing is respectfully submitted as a general outline of the operations of the company up to this time, deferring to the period of the annual meeting of the stockholders the detailed report made up from plans, maps, profiles and notes belonging to surveys and location, exhibiting the progress of the work, rolling stock on hand, description of location, grades and curves, and a careful estimate of the entire line to Chickasaw, on the Tennessee river, including a complete equipment of engines and cars.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

JAS. H. GRANT, Chief Engineer.

ARRIVAL OF THE ATLANTIC.

NEW YORK, Nov. 29, 8.32 A. M.—The Collins steamer Atlantic has arrived here, bringing dates from Liverpool to the 16th inst., four days later than the accounts brought by the Canada.

LIVERPOOL MARKETS.

LIVERPOOL, Nov. 16.—There has been only a moderate demand in the Cotton market since the departure of the Canada, and the sales of the three business days reach barely 10,000 bales, including 2,000 for speculation, and 1,000 for export. Prices have been rather more in favor of buyers, but without any actual change in the quotations, which close as follows: Fair Orleans 6¾d., Middling Orleans 6d., Fair Upland 6¼d., and Middling Upland 5¾d. per lb.

There has been a good demand for Flour, and prices have advanced 6d. per bbl. Western canal is quoted at 37s., and Ohio at 38s. per bbl.

Corn has been in moderate request at 45s. per quarter.

Provisions are without any material change, the demand from the trade being moderate. Lard has been in fair request

THE INFANT ASLEEP

[FROM THE PARISIAN OF VICTOR HUGO.]

In the dusky eve,
Near the altars laid
Sleeps the child in shadow
Of his mother's bed
Softly he reposes
And his folded toes,
Closed to earth and roses
On the heaven o'erhead

Many a dream is with him,
Fresh from fairy land
Sparkled o'er with diamonds
Seems the ocean sand
Suns are gleaming there
Troops of ladies fair
Seats of infants bear
In their charming hand

Oh, enchanting vision
Look a rill up springs
And from out its bosom
Comes a voice that sings
Lovelier there appear
Sire and sisters dear,
While the mother near
Plumes her new-born wings

But a brighter vision
Yet his eyes behold,
Roses all and lilies
Every path enfold,
Lakes in shadow sleeping,
Silver fishes leaping,
And the waters weeping
Through the reeds of gold

Slumber on, sweet infant,
Slumber peacefully
Thy young soul yet knows not
What thy lot shall be
Like dead leaves that sweep
Down the stormy deep,
Thou art borne in sleep.
What is all to thee?

Thou canst slumber by the way,
Thou hast learnt to borrow
Naught from sin's dismay,
Naught from care
The cold hand of sorrow
On thy brow, how wrinkled yet,
Where young truth and candor all,
Never with rugged nail hath writ
That sad word, "To-morrow."

Innocent! thou sleepest—
See the heavenly band,
Who foretknew thy trials
That for man are planned,
Seeing him unmarried,
Unfearing, unalarmed,
With their tears have warmed
His unconscious hand.

Angels, hovering o'er him
Kiss him where he lies
Dark! he sees them weeping.
Gabriel! he cries
"Hush!" the angel says,
On his lips he lays
One finger, one display's
His native skies

South Florida—the Everglades.

We copy from the Tallahassee Floridian the following interesting letter written by a resident at Cape Florida. The writer says.

"I am now living at the mouth of the entrance of Key Biscayne Bay, (Cape Florida) Vessels drawing ten feet water can enter the bay—a good harbor. Thence to the mouth of the Miami River, 9 feet: into the Miami, and up the falls, four and a half feet. This river is about one hundred yards wide, and only four or five miles long. Biscayne Bay is about twenty-two miles long, and from one to seven miles wide It is not generally very deep, but it is a beautiful sheet of water. The lands bordering on the bay are generally very low—on the main (West) side some high land—several high, rocky bluffs, affording splendid views—the same at the mouth of the river—large tracts of hammock bordering on the bluffs, (very rocky) owned by Mr. English, of South Carolina, and one tract by Dr. Barron, who resides on the same. The low lands are generally mangrove Swamp, or marsh, some of the marsh sufficiently high for cultivation, and quite rich. In many places the pine lands approach near the bay but are high The best of spring water may be had any where on the West side of the bay All the spring water in this section of the country comes from the Everglades, and is strongly impregnated with Iron and Magnesia The lands on the Miami, and all the other rivers whose sources are in the Everglades, are fine, with an occasional hammock of from three to one hundred and fifty acres; but generally very rocky, as are nearly all the pine lands in the country. Bordering on the Everglades are large hammocks, with but little rock—some of them without any I have been several times fifteen to twenty miles into the Everglades—Within this vast sea of grass water, (the Everglades) are thousand of Islands, from a half to four miles apart, several feet higher than the highest freshets ever known—extent, of great variety—from five to ten thousand acres in each—free from rock, and the most fertile lands East of the banks of the Mississippi river. The top soil is brown for one or two inches; then follows a rich mulatto soil, generally from three to twenty feet in depth.

The Islands are usually surrounded by water from three inches to three feet deep. I was on one which contained 1000 or 2000 acres. The Everglades were higher than usual. I saw where a large tree had been blown down, making a hole in the earth some four feet deep. This hole was perfectly dry, and in the bottom of it, as well as on some of the roots, were quantities of Indian pot-ware. I saw no difference in the soil. These Islands are what is called made land. On them, sugar cane and rice grow the entire year. Cane goes to seed. From two to four cuttings of rice may be made during the year. The borders of the Everglades afford the greatest advantages for rice plantations of any part of the continent I believe a sugar plantation may be established at one of these Islands at a much less expense than in Louisiana, and with a greater product to the acre. I believe it is as healthy (and more so) in the Everglades than on any part of the coast of Florida West of this. There is a current throughout nearly the whole of the Everglades for the greater part of the year, and the trade winds prevail—there as they do on this coast. The musquitoes are not so numerous there as on the sea coast. The great objection to the Everglades is a want of fence timber, and the difficulty of carrying the produce to market. The former may be obviated by ditches and hedges—the latter by small cannals to the head of Miami river, or by causeways, either of which may be accomplished at a small expense. If the Federal Government would make an appropriation sufficient to cut a canal from five to six feet deep, connecting the Miama and Key Biscayne rivers, or the opposite sides of the Everglades, such a canal would remove all the difficulties to the settlement of this country, and bring into market hundreds of thousands of first-rate lands, and the population of this same much abused country, (the Everglades) would in two years exceed all the rest of Florida. The lands are nearly all surveyed, except the Everglades.

We have no olive, coffee or cocoa trees growing here, or the tea plant; but from information derived from those who resided here for a long time, and who are acquainted with their culture, I am fully assured they may all be cultivated here to the greatest advantage

Our climate is most delicious, and may truly be called "the paradise of invalids." It is infinitely better than St Augustine or Havana—the former being too cold, the latter too warm and relaxing A hotel here for invalids would do remarkably well

I send you a statement of the expense and profit of our staple commodity—the arrow root—by which it will be seen that seven hands in digging and manufacturing this article, and carrying it to market, will net, yearly, about $4,745 The cultivation of the cocoa, and other tropical fruits, are not less profitable Oranges, bananas, plantain and pine apple all come to the greatest perfection The orange insect is no longer destructive to that delicious fruit, as an effective enemy is found in the "ant We have the finest fish, turtle and game that the country produces All that we want is the fostering aid of the Federal Government, to a small extent, and we shall have the most desirable region of country on this great continent.

D'ISRAELI.—"When Mr D'Israeli was a boy at school he was asked by a companion, who is now a respectable tradesman at High Wycombe, what course of action he meant to adopt in order to make his way in society. The young aspirant promptly replied, 'I mean to write a book which will make me famous, which I have inclanted fame, I mean to get a seat in Parliament first, when once in Parliament, I shall be determined to become a right honorable' All this has been fulfilled, and we believe the anecdote we have recorded solves any loyalty which may cling to Mr D'Israeli's public career It is an anecdote published now for the first time, and conveyed to us through a 'private channel,' which is most trustworthy and respectable."

The most striking feature in the history of Genius is its courage. Talent, on the contrary is distinguished rigidly by its caution The one goes out totally regardless of its costume under the impulse of a glorious dream. The other never suffers itself to be seen until it has made its toilet under the guidance of a becoming taste. Salamis

We suppose that few will deny that a man has an undisputable right to wear what hair nature bestows on him as he pleases. Indeed, as lovers of the largest liberty, we might contend that a man has a right to make an ass of himself, provided nature has not already done so But as we are not talking of asses at the present time, we will dispense with that subject. Hair springs out of a child's scalp in the very earliest stages of its existence, and everybody sees the propriety of its being permitted to grow but when, as a sign of manhood, hair comes breaking through the upper lip like daisies through the earth in early spring-time, a rush is made for razors, and the incipient beard is razed. Others, however, with the heroism which becomes those whose upper lips are perforated by beards, cultivate it carefully, caress it, and strive to improve the soil by the application of those means which experience has proved beneficial, the one of guano included, for what we know. Indeed, judging from the fruitfulness of some lips, we have no doubt that their proprietors have learned how to make art subserve nature on the lip.

What can be more truly admirable, more manly, more essentially heroic than a moustache luxuriant and symmetrical, which, springing from the upper lip, shoots forth and gracefully encircles the mouth and softly touches the chin below? This kind of moustache seems to belong to men who have a genius for moustaches and are altogether too refined for the lips of the vulgar. They effectually guard the mouth from the intrusion of flies and cover up the deformity of that feature so nicely that no eye can discover it. Did you ever see the proprietor of such a moustache drinking oyster soup or a hungry lion-cut lapping cream? In either case the moustache is a sort of taster before hand, and by penetrating the food in advance assures the palate that it is very good indeed

There is another kind of moustache which many consider even more beautiful than that we have just spoken of. This moustache tries to run a parallel with the lips and succeeds pretty well at it. These moustaches turn up at the corners of the mouth, giving to their wearer the power to sneer or to snarl in an eminent degree Indeed it may be considered as a standing sneer, and would seem to denote some degree of misanthropy in the wearer, which is, however, disproved by the tenderness with which it is caressed ever and anon by the loving thumb and forefinger.

The chief business of the day with the owner of this mustache, after giving it its natural twist upward with the curling tongs, is to keep it twisted up; which he does with great expertness with his fingers The proprietor of this moustache is generally a most ferocious fellow. Lord Byron speaks of an Arab whose beard curled with fire, which all beards of this kind do, we are credibly informed

There is still a third class of mustaches which consists of hair matted closely together and entirely covering the upper lip. This moustache neither tumbles down over the mouth like a cataract of hair nor has it any upward twist to it, but, satisfied with covering the lip, it performs its mission and does no more This is the least pretending of moustaches and its owner, so far as we have been able to ascertain, might either to the peace society or to the society for the propagation of fools without doing violence to his feelings.

We have in our mind's eye at this moment proprietors of each of the three classes of moustaches which we have described In making a steamboat trip lately, we were delighted to find that in making provision for the amusement of the company the captain had contrived to get an assortment of moustaches on board The owner of the moustache that tumbled down over the mouth and thence on to the chin was a slender chap, and his hair was a sort of compromise between auburn and carrots. He could not rest satisfied with the coarse nature had implanted for his beard, and hence he was forever twisting it up with his fingers But the beard was rebellious and would not stand up but would fall down It was delightful to watch the perseverance of this gentleman in so good a cause He would stand before the glass for half an hour at a time trying to coax his beard to look upward, while all the time each particular hair would follow its own fancy and turn downward like the tail of a dog that has a great love for mutton But the owner would insist and the hair would persist, and the former growing desperate was in the habit of jerking up his beard with so much force as to bring tears to both eyes What he ever did with his beard—whether he permitted it to have its way, or whether he at last, after many fruitless efforts to bring it to terms, bit it off, we are unable to say. He had great fondness for his beard and could not sacrifice it without deep and painful emotion, such as Brutus felt when condemning his own son to death.

The wearer of the moustache that turned up naturally was evidently a man who stood very high in his own favor, though he was very dwarfish in statue When he got his beard to suit his taste, he would walk up and down the cabin for the benefit of the ladies, who watched him with great interest. As he approached them, he would twirl his moustache up with his fingers to be sure that it was there in its proper place and from which place it could throw out its curled fascination upon the ladies, making them prisoners as certainly as the lasso of the Apache Indian ensnares its victim. His destiny seemed to us to be to cultivate that moustache and to kill the women with it. And here it may be observed that men with moustaches generally think of nothing from morn to dewy eve but the beautiful appendage that nature has affixed to their upper lips.

The third gentleman to whom we refer had a moustache as black at night, and it lay thick and matted across the entire lip Its proprietor is also a woman-killer, having a short time before succeeded in running away with a rich and pretty girl who fell in love with his moustache, and then ran away with it. As he sat by her side stroking his moustache, he looked so confoundedly happy that every lady envied him. There was a consciousness of superiority in the manner of this gentleman which could have sprung from nothing but his moustache His beard was superb and so was the vanity How many rivals he had scotched in love we do not know, but he looked as if he would like to slaughter a whole hecatomb of them. The truth is we suspect he had too much good opinion of himself, if a man fortified by such a beard can be said to have too much. We never saw him kiss his bride, but we have, no doubt she was terribly tickled whenever he did so Not husband ought to think of wearing such an appendage, for how can a mouth thus appareled touch the vermeil of such a cheek without causing it to feel that a thousand daddies-long-legs had suddenly alighted thereon. Very few ladies lands have the bad taste to permit their lips to be garnished with hair, while there are some few whose lines are covered up like a polar bears without a kissing spot on them, though it happens very fortunately that no bane mouth could ever wish to touch such beings

No American of commanding intellect was ever seen with moustache, and this fact may have given rise to the suppostion or shudder that the larger the moustache the smaller the dimensions of the brain.

If beard were brain why then he said—
"What lion so savage but I could
That then why we need without the lead
Wou I wear the most without

That is exactly what they now do according to public opinion—a huge moustache indicating a little brain But public opinion sometimes errs and we think it highly probable that there are some youths who have excellent sense But too much taste who undertake to beautify their faces by leaving the upper lip unshorn

We would attempt to cultivate a moustache rather before the time his sufferings are immense He grows it, strokes it, and encases it through the long week and months until it acquires the necessary length, breadth and shade, and then he goes about with a mighty stiff upper lip, fancying the sensation the ladies feel in thinking that every one that sees him thinks him a dance for his pains. Thus accomplished, he is ready for any high enterprise in the field of love He builds a new ship and hastens over the land, and will utterly exterminate any rival who might dare to reach his mistress We never see a bad wife in company with a man who has not a patch on his pocket ready for defence or vengeance.

We think there ought to be a law throughout Needledom forbidding the wearing of red moustaches They make a chap look too much like Mars, and as we have no mythology we ought to have no imitations Since Gen. Twiggs had left off

DEATHS OF MINISTERS.

The following memoirs were prepared and enbmitted by the Committee on Memoirs to the Mississippi Conference, at its late session. It wil bo seen that this body of ministers have suffersd severely tho year gone by. But the dead died in the Lord and are blessed. Here, the Church, to whom they preached the unsearchable riches of Christ, is reassured that it was no cunningly devised fable they followed. This is their precious testimony.—[En.

REV. G. W. MORRIS.

DIED.—On the 21st of October, of yellow fever, the Rov. G. W. Morris, in the 56th year of his ago, and the 36th of his ministry. He wes born lu Bath county, Virginia, in the year 1798. Ho became a member of the M. E. Church in his 17th year, under the ministry of the Rev. Mr. Watts, of the Baltimore Conference. About eighteen months subsequently experienced religion, and became a very activs member of the Church. At this early period of his religious history, he manifested that quenchless zeal and undying love for the souls of men, which wes the leading and striking features of his subsequent ministorial career. Being fully convinced of bis call to the ministry, he wns licensed to preach in the fall of 1817, and traveled under a presiding Elder until the ensuing annual conference, when bo joined the Baltimore Confsrsnce. He traveled two years in this conference. In 1820, he became a member of the Holston Conference, where he traveled two years, and was then transfsred to the Tennessee Confsrence. We find his nams on the printed minutes of this conference for 1822, among those who remain on trial, and travolod that yser the Abingdon Circuit. In 1823, he was received into full connection, and traveled Lee Circuit. In 1824, Cypress Circuit. In 1825, he was ordained an Elder and traveled Lawrence Circuit; in 1826, Jackson; 1827, Gunter's; 1828, Jackson; 1829, Bedford; 1830, Madison; 1831, Lawrence; 1832, Lawrence, (again;) 1833, Stone's River; 1834, Stone's River, (again;) 1835, Goose Creek; 1836, Goose Greek, (again) sup.; 1837, Centerville Mission; 1838, transfered to the Arkansas Conferonos, and made P. E. of the Batesville District; continued 1839 and 1840. In 1841, he travoled the Batesville Circuit. In 1842, he was on the Helena District. At the sloss of this year, in consequence of ill health, he located. While a local preacher, he labored to the extent of his ability, faithfully end successfully. In 1850, he determined to rejoin the Itinerancy, and in accordance with the advice of his physicians and his brethren, who thought that the climate would suit him better, he came to Mississippi, and was received into the Mississippi Confsrence, and was appointed to the Cole's Creek Mission, on which mission and circuit he labored very acceptably and nssfully up to the time of bis death.

The distinguishing characteristic of Bro. Morris was, his untiring zeal and extraordinary devotion to the work of the ministry. He was emphatically a men of our work. Every other interest was held in abeyance and subordinated to this controlling interest of his heart and life. He professed entire consecration of soul and body to the service of God, and his life exhibited a striking example of the genuinencss of the profession. He has approved himself among us as a holy, laborious, faithful and usoful minister of the Gospel. He died as such a man might have wished to die. He ceased at once to work and live. He died nt his post. When he discovered he must die, he gave utterance to some of the most cheering expressions. Among the many expressions of his triumph were these: "For I am now ready to be offered, end the time of my departure is nt hand. I have fought a good fight; I have finished by course; I have kept the faith." He repeated this triumphant language of the Apostle several times. His exultant soul, in the fullness of holy ecstacy, exclaimed, "I em as happy as I can live! Bless the Lord! Praise the Lord!

"Not a doubt can arise, to darken the skies,
Or hide for a moment my Lord from mine eyes."

Again, "Tell my brethren I am gone straight to Heaven." Exhibiting the "ruling passion strong in death," he requested all that were in the room to come close around his bed, and the dying saint preached his last sermon. He told them he had not deferred a preparation for death until that hour. He had prepared in life for death, and now he was comforted and sustained in death. He exhorted them all to prepare in life for death. To the absent members of his family who were not privileged to hear the cheering words that fell from his dying lips, he sentthe message, "To live in this world so that they might meet him in Heaven." When he could no longer speak, a few minutes before his death, he raised his arm and pointed to Heaven in token of triumph, while the "bright seraphic gleam o'er each feature played," of his speaking and beaming countenance, which indeed the beatific vision his ravished soul had caught. And when his arm was so far palsied in death, that he could not lift it, his son said to him, "Pa, if all is well, press my hand," and the pressure was given, as the victorious saint entered death's cold flood.

REV. EDWARD LOVE.

Rev. Edward Love was born in 1828, in the State of Ohio. He came to Missippi in 1848 or 9. The time and place of his conversion and union with the Church is unknown to us. He was admitted on trial in the travelling connexion of Mississippi Conference in 1850, and was appointed to the Springfield circuit; but in consequence of unforeseen and justifiable causes he did not reach the work assigned him, and was employed by the Presiding Elder of the Lake Washington Mission District on the Bolivar Mission, where he concluded the conference year with great acceptability and usefulness.

At the conference of 1851 he was apointed to the field of labor in which he had concluded the previous year, where he labored with increased usefulness and undiminished popularity.

At the conference of 1852 he was ordained Deacon and appointed to the Covington Station. His timid and retiring spirit almost shrunk from what he erroneously considered the too great responsibility of his charge. This diffidence was so great as partially to disqualify him for the ministry. As he became more familiar with the new associations and circumstances by which he was surrounded, his selfpossession returned; and so rapid was the development of his powerful intellect, that before the breaking out of the fatal epidemic of which he died, the church was filled to overflowing, which was well nigh vacated during the early part of his ministry, by his embarrassment and want of proficiency in those things necessary to please the varied tastes of a village population.

On being asked what he should do if the yellow fever should make its appearance in Covington, he replied, "Life or death, I stand at my post." The fever came, and in accordance with his noble decision, he was found ministering to the necessities of the sick and dying both night and day, until in the full triumphs of a living faith he bid a final adieu to his charge, together with the sorrows and joys of earth, and entered upon a glorious immortality on the 19th September, 1853.

REV. O. L. NASH.

Rev. O. L. Nash was the son of Ezekiel and Elizabeth Nash, who, from early life until death, were exemplary members of the Baptist Church. The subject of this memoir was born either in Abbeville or Edgefield District, South Carolina, Dec. 2d, 1802, and when young moved with his parents to the city of Tuscaloosa, Alabama, and, after a residence of two years there, removed to Lownds county, Mississippi. In the days of his youth he is represented as having been, apparently, quite careless on the subject of religion, but when about twenty-one or twenty-two years of age he was awakened, converted, and joined the M. E. Church, either in Jefferson or St. Clair county, in the State of Alabama; the particulars of which we have not been able to ascertain, as he was absent from home at the time.

Soon after his conversion he felt "inwardly moved by the Holy Ghost to preach the gospel," and being duly recommended, was admitted on trial in the Mississippi Conference, in December, 1825. The following year, 1826, he traveled Jones' Valley Circuit, in Alabama, 1827 Chickasawhay, 1828-9 Attakapas, and in 1830 he was stationed in the city of Natchez. In 1831 he was local, on account of feeble health, but near the close of that year he was re-admitted to membership in the Mississippi Conference, and was stationed for the year 1832 in the city of New Orleans; in 1833-4 he was Presiding Elder on the Louisiana District, in 1835 he was on the Choctaw District, where his health again failed, and at the close of the year he was placed on the superannuated list, and at the Conference of 1836 he again located.

About this time he unfortunately engaged in a land speculation, which, after the most flattering prospect of success, ultimately proved disastrous, and involved him in pecuniary difficulties of long standing. While in his located state, for reasons which seemed to him to justify the step, he dissolved his connection with the Methodist Episcopal Church, and accepted a pastorate in the Protestant Methodist Church. After the lapse of several years, being dissatisfied with his new church relations, and feeling that he was out of his proper sphere, he returned in good standing to the church of his first love, and in the latter part of 1847 he applied for, and was re-admitted into the Mississippi Conference, and appointed to Attala circuit, but was changed by his Presiding Elder to a colored charge in Ochibbeha county. In 1849 he was on the Clinton circuit, in 1850 he was stationed in Yazoo City; in 1851-2 he was again on the Clinton circuit, and at our last Conference he was stationed in the city of Natchez, where, after a protracted illness, he closed his labors and pilgrimage, in glorious triumph on the 8th of August, 1853.

Brother Nash was a men of deep and fervent piety, of unusual power in preaching, and emphatically a revivalist, and instrumental in adding many souls to the Lord. He excelled in the discharge of his pastoral duties, especially that of visiting the members of his charge, and teaching them all to be christians inwardly and outwardly.

REV. JOAB EVANS

Died at his residence, in Rankin county, Mississippi, on the 4th day of February, 1853, in the 39th year of his age. Brother Evans was born in Claiborne county, Miss., on the 30th of April, 1814; joined the church and professed religion in 1837, in the neighborhood in which he died. He was licensed to preach in 1842, and travsied a part of the year under the direction of the Presiding Elder. Was admitted on trial in the Mississippi Conference at its session in 1842, and was appointed in 1843 to the Decatur circuit; for 1844 to the Raleigh circuit, and for the want of further correct data, the writer cannot specify the circuits on which he traveled for the years 1845, '46, '47, '48, and '49; yet the printed minutes will show, without intermission, he traveled the years mentioned above. Having some temporal business to arrange, at the Conference of 1849 he asked for, and obtained a location. In 1850 he was re-admitted and appointed for 1851 to White Sand. In 1852 he was supernumery on Rankin circuit. In 1853 he was superannuated.

Brother Evans was a man of indefatigable zeal and full of the Holy Ghost, and consequently was useful where ever he labored. He did not confine himself simply to preaching at his appointments on his work, but was always engaged in his heavenly vocation whether in family or in the social circle.—This minister, and man of God, will long be remembered by those who knew him best. Though of medium preaching abilities, his originality and peculiar style rendered him interesting. The writer of this sketch made his acquaintance in the spring of 1839, and cherished and enjoyed that acquaintance more or less until his death.

His labors at Shilo camp meeting, in Rankin county, in the fall of '52, was followed by chills and fever, with hemorrhage from the lungs, though partially recovered; but on the 21st of January, 1853 had a slight recurrence of hemorrhage. On the 1st of Febuary he exposed himself too much, and was again attacked with a chill, followed by a continued fever, with occasional delirium, until Friday morning, the 4th, between the hours of three and four o'clock, he finished his course. Relative to the state of his mind—at a lucid interval the evening before his death, he said: "The Lord's will was his: if left to his own choice, in view of some unsettled business, he had rather remain a little longer, but if the Lord should call him, his spiritual sky was clear, and he was ready."

REV. O. W. F. BRISCOE.

The Rev. G. W. F. Briscoe was the son of Gen. Parmenas Briscoe, and was born in Claiborne county, Mississippi. He was a young man of fair intellect and had received a liberal education: He professed religion and attached himself to the Methodist Church South in 1852. At an early period in his religious experience he felt moved, as he believed, by the Holy Ghost, to devote himself to the work of the ministry. He was received into the Conference on probation at Jackson, Mississippi, and was appointed junior preacher in Warren circuit.

He was naturally diffident and retiring, and this, added to the death of his father and other dear friends, so subdued his spirit that he sunk into deep melancholy. Soon after his appointment to Warren circuit, his health began to decline, and by the permission of Presiding Elder, Rev. L. Campbell, he sought to restore it by travel. He left this State early in the spring, and after some months absence, found that his still failing strength admonished him that his end was nigh. He wrote to his friends at home that he was desirous to see them again, but expressed great fear that this would not be permitted him. He died suddenly on his homeward journey, as he believed of disease of the heart. His consistent life and patient endurance of affliction, gives his brethren and friends good hopes that he was prepared for discharge, and found a joyous home in Heaven.

MEMORIALS.

To the Bishops and Delegates of the General Conference, South.

DEAR BRETHREN: We, the members of the Querterly Conference of the St. Francis St. Church, Mobile, would most respectfully call your attention to the fact that the present disciplinary allowance of the Itinerant Preachers is greatly inadequate to their support.

We are not the advocates of radicalism in any of its varied forms, for we adhere to the doctrine and economy of our long cherished Methodism, which has done and is still doing so much for the propagation of divine truth in our own, as well as foreign lands, and we love her with an affection we feel for no earthly object. Prompted, as we are by these motives, we ask as a prudential measure, the removal of what we consider a great evil, by not properly providing for the legitimate wants of those who forsake all for the cause of Christ.

When the present allowance was fixed, money was scarce, provisions cheap, and labor commanding not more than half what it does at present.

While all other classes require more on which to support themselves, we ask, do not the preachers also? The Bible teaches the doctrine, that the "laborer is worthy of his hire." As a church, ere we not asking too much of our brethren to furnish their clothes, horse, books, &c., for the small pittance of one hundred dollars? They are compelled to draw on their own private means for support, or else make themselves dependent on the charity of some of their liberal brethren. To men of cultivation and refinement, this is very humiliating, and from which they should be delivered.

We are far from desiring to hold out inducements to any one to enter the itinerant field for the purpose of making money, but we are equally as much opposed to placing impediments in the way of those whose hearts are in the work of itinerancy, by failing to give them the means of at least a scanty support.

Were the present Disciplinary allowance double the present amount, there would even then be much of personal sacrifice required to induce a man of capacity for usefulness to forsake secular pursuits, home and friends, and take upon himself the arduous and responsible duties of an Itinerant Preacher.

A man of ordinary capacity may by teaching, clerking, and many other vocations, make from four to ten times the present allowance. We indulge the hope that this sore grievance, under which thousands are now laboring, will be removed by your worthy body, and that double the present Disciplinary allowance will be made. This is far below the amount an intelligent, faithful and zealous man might earn, and the church wants no other kind.

Resolved, That a copy of the foregoing Memorial be forwarded by the Secretary to the New Orleans Christian Advocate for publication, and that the various church papers be requested to copy.

Resolved further, That we respectfully request the Presiding Elders of the various Districts in all the Southern Conferences to bring this subject before all the Quarterly Conferences of their districts previous to the meeting of the next General Conference.

With sentiments of the highest regard, we remain yours, &c.

Signed in behalf of the Quarterly Meeting Conference. G. GARRETT, P. E.
R. C. CUNNINGHAM, Sec't.
November 25, 1853.

RINGELY, MACON Co., Nov. 23, 1853.

By order of the Quarterly Conference of Barbour Circuit, held at Olivet, inst., I send the following resolution, and request for them a place in your valuable paper:

Resolved, That in the judgment of this Quarterly Conference, the day has arrived when such alteration should be made in our discipline as to allow to our itinerant ministers better wages for their services, and more aid for their families, and that we recommend the next General Conference to make such alteration.

Resolved, That the above resolution be forwarded to the Southern and New Orleans Christian Advocate for publication.

ROBT. H. HAYNES, Secretary.

[From the London Watchman.]

THE PROTESTANT DEACONESSES.

The works of mercy and of love which are carried on so extensively throughout the length and breadth of this island ought not to occupy exclusively our attention; whilst we build asylums, whilst we open ragged schools, whilst we invite by every means in our power, the spiritually destitute to the well-springs of divine truth, let us from time to time look abroad and seek, in the contemplation of Christian activity in other lands, an example, an encouragement, a motive for increased thankfulness and holy emulation. We should remember, besides, that all the different sections of the Church of God are bound to each other by a common tie; the interests of every single member are those of the whole body. At a time when Popery is making a desperate and last effort to extend or strengthen its yoke throughout the world, we should prayerfully endeavor to prove that the principles of the Evangelical Alliance are no Utopian axioms. Actuated by the motives we have just been alluding to, we propose simply, in a series of articles, to bring together a few facts which will enable our readers to form some idea of the state of Gospel institutions and Protestant charities in France, and first the establishment of deaconesses conducted in Paris by the Rev. A. Vermicl, one of the Ministers of the Protestant Established Church.

It is very well known that communities of that description cannot be liable to the imputation of novelty. The Roman Catholic monasteries are only the exaggeration of a praiseworthy idea, and if the idea is a good one, why should it not be applied under proper control and with certain guarantees? The experiment has been made, at all events, and the blessing so rarely vouchsafed by God to the deaconesses of Kaiserswerth, in Germany, suggested the thought that a Protestant sisterhood organized in Paris upon the broadest principles would be a valuable addition to the means of usefulness already possessed by the friends of the Gospel. In year 1840 the Maison des Diaconesses was opened for the first time, and since then it has gradually developed its efficiency, increased its power for doing good, and obtained the most signal results.

ADMINISTRATION.—The President, M. Vermeil, is assisted in his arduous task by a board of nine members, a superintending council, and an accountant. The infant school, the hospital and the penitentiary, are each under the management of a separate committee.

DEACONESSES.—In the year 1851 their number amounted to nineteen, besides five candidates upon trial. The reader must carefully bear in mind that the sisters are bound by none of those vows which destroy forever the liberty of nuns. They, of course, when admitted as inmates of the establishment, contract a temporary engagement and ipso facto recognise the authority of certain disciplinary rules; but upon giving due notice they can resign their duties and withdraw altogether. The present Superior or directress of the deaconesses is Mademoiselle Malvesin.

MODE OF ACTION.—The work carried on by the French Protestant Sisters of Charity may be considered as twofold. Their operations are not all confined to Paris, and some of them, after having been duly trained, repair to several posts in the departments, where their services as nurses, teachers, etc., are invaluable. Thus, one of them now has the charge of an asylum for destitute aged people at Montpellier, (Herault;) another superintends a small infirmary at Saint Hippolyte, (Gard;) to a third has been confided the management of an infant-school at Alais, (Gard.) This branch of the work appears from all accounts extremely interesting; applications from various quarters are constantly made for deaconesses, and it is a subject of great regret that the Paris committee cannot, for want of means, respond to them all.

We come now to the head-quarters of this excellent establishment, to the house which has so judiciously been opened, Rue de Reuilly, No. 95, in the midst of the Faubourg Saint Antoine—the very part of Paris where the services and the Christian benevolence of our dear sisters are most likely to be needed and appreciated. Eight different subdivisions constitute the whole sphere of their work. We notice: 1st. an infant-school; 2d. a school for more advanced pupils; 3d. a preparatory institution for young girls who are afterwards to go into service; 4th. an infirmary; 5th. a penitentiary; 6th. an adult school open three days a week for out-door pupils; 7th. Sunday-schools; 8th. a normal school where young women may prepare themselves to take their diploma as schoolmistresses. Besides all this, the Chapel is open every Sunday for divine service both to the inmates of the house and to the public indiscriminately. A library, likewise accessible to all, has been organized. A course of religious instruction is given to catechumens and to adult proselytes. Finally, gratuitous medical advice can always be obtained from an eminent physician, who ascertains daily the sanitary condition of the house. Those only can form some accurate conception of an institution such as this, who have visited it carefully and examined it in all its branches. During the eventful year of 1848 it stood as the abode of peace, of order, of prayer, amidst all the horrors of a civil war; and it is very remarkable that the fiercest combatants of the barricades, Ledru Rollin's satellites, were those who valued most the blessings of the Maison des Diaconesses for their own children. The total number of persons belonging to the house exceeds three hundred; in so large an establishment, the greatest discipline is indispensable, and it is easily obtained, thanks to the Christian spirit which actuates every individual. The instruction given never departs from the most useful character, being such as will form good housemaids, cooks and servants; or, in the case of the normal class, persons qualified as superintendents of infant schools.

It is satisfactory to add that large subscriptions, including occasional donations from the Government or municipal authorities, have hitherto been collected on behalf of the Maison des Diaconesses; but we may say that much more is needed to ensure the full efficiency of this important institution.

Nor do we scruple to acknowledge that the French Protestant Sisters of Charity have the greatest claims upon the sympathy of foreign brethren. For let us only think of the great numbers of young English or German girls who yearly repair to France, in the hope of obtaining lucrative situations, or merely that they may gratify an idle curiosity. How many fall victims to the suggestions of Popery! How many more alas! yield to the worse insinuations still, and, very shortly after their arrival in the giddy metropolis, lose every sense of religion and virtue! For all whom such dangers threaten, the Maison des Diaconesses is the safest refuge; to many it has already proved the starting point of a new life in the paths of godliness. The fact that an ENGLISH CELL constituted part of the penitentiary there, proves superabundantly how interested we ought to be in the welfare of an asylum which our country-women help, unfortunately, to fill. We shall add the names of the persons who act as patronesses of the English Cell: Lord Normanby, Miss Burdett Coutts, Lady Eardley, Sir Culling Eardley, Lady Rolfe, Miss Rolfe, Mrs. Ellison, Lady James, Lord and Lady Newark, the Earl and Countess of Shaftesbury. The expenses of one bed in the infirmary are entirely supported by Miss Dunlop alone.

This short sketch can only convey a very imperfect idea of the noble institution to which the Rev. A. Vermiel has dedicated all his energy. In reading the details connected with it, we have often been reminded of what history tells us about Port-Royal. It is the same example of industry, inspired by charity, of prayer without any intermission, of faith bearing continual and abundant fruits. There Christian love burns with a bright, a burning, a clear and steady flame, alike rendering obedience prompt, command reasonable, and devotedness to God all in all.

INCREASE OF THE NUMBER OF BISHOPS—EPISCOPAL ITINERACY.

That the number of our Bishops must be increased at the next General Conference, seems to be the opinion of all parties. But how much we should increase the number, is a question that is not agreed upon.

If the present plan of confining the labors of the Bishop principally to the Chair of the Conference room, is still to prevail, why, then, we need but few more; and, perhaps, might as well dispense with their services altogether, by authorising the President of the Conference to ordain his brethren.

But if, on the other hand, a General Episcopal Superintendency of the work among us is an important and necessary item in Methodist economy, as our fathers believed it to be, then, without doubt, the number of Bishops should be so increased as to meet the wants of the Church.

Every reflecting mind must be satisfied at once that, mere presiding in conferences and ordaining men to the ministry, is but a small part of a General Superintendant's duty, if we take the New Testament, or even our Discipline, for guide.

His pulpit ministrations, his private monitions and councils, and his godly example, are needed in every part of the work. All our preachers, at least, (local, as well as travelling,) ought once in a while to see a Bishop, in order to catch his spirit and example, that they might transmit them to the people, by copying them into their own hearts and lives. "Brethren, be followers of me, and mark them that walk so, as ye have us for an example," should be the motto of a bishop, as well as of an apostle.

The want of such authority and example, throughout our work, is now deeply felt. But in no portion of the Church are the presence and services of a Bishop so much needed, as in our new conferences, where ordained and experienced ministers are few and far between. In many of our large circuits there is not an ordained man, either among the local or travelling ministry, who can administer baptism or the Lord's Supper to our people! There are four circuits in my district, who have among them all only one local elder and one local deacon! Among all the preachers in charge of these circuits, there is but one ordained man! In one of them is a traveling elder, whose health has not allowed him to take work for several years. These four circuits embrace a territory equal, perhaps, to some of the Northern annual conferences, and contain about a thousand members of the Church, many of whom have never been baptized, and have never seen the Holy Eucharist administered by the Methodists in this country! (It is impossible for the Presiding Elder to visit them all.) And why are these things so? Simply because our territory is so large, that the local preachers can seldom visit the seat of an Anual Conference, to receive ordination; and if they do so, the Bishop's work is so heavy, that he breaks down before he can reach us; as has been the case twice in the last three years! And so, both local and traveling preachers have to go without ordination. Other churches are laying hands hastily on the heads of men, and sending them through the country to baptize the people, and administer to them the tokens of Redemption, while ours must stand by and look on, or turn away in disgust, and weep at the tardy movements of our own Church! How much the Methodist Church has suffered in Texas alone, from these causes, can only be known in eternity. We must absolutely remedy this evil, or betray the cause of God committed to our trust. But I see no way of doing it, without so increasing the number of Bishops, that each one shall have ample time to travel through the work, and visit all the important points in it. This cannot be done without dividing ont the work into Episcopal Districts. Let each Bishop have his distinct field of labor, and let him take his appointment at the General Conference for the next four years, and be required to travel throughout his district, visit, as far as practicable, all the preachers, and acquaint himself with the talents, standing, and usefulness of all in their fields of labor, and with the peculiar wants of the Church at particular points. This would be of incalculable advantage to him in stationing the preachers. The local preachers could wait upon him in his travels, and receive ordination at his hands; and all the Church could receive his godly counsel and blessing, and the good that would, under God, thus accrue to the Church, would be incalculable.

The presence of a traveling Bishop among the preachers, subject to the same itinerant law as themselves, would inspire them with new life and vigor, and give an increased impetus to all the enterprises of the Church.

Some have expressed a fear that so great an increase of Bishops would embarrass our finances. I have no such fear. The people, wherever the Bishops would go, would most cheerfully meet their expenses; and, I doubt not, the spirit of liberality would be greatly increased by it, and all the institutions of the Church would be better supported.

But should this plan succeed, and it is to be hoped it will, I most respectfully beg leave to call the attention of all concerned to the west territory of the Church west of the Mississippi River, which is now, and always has been, without a resident Bishop. This territory, stretching from the north line of Missouri to the Gulf of Mexico, and from the Mississippi to the Rio Grande, is equal in extent to all the territory of the Church east of it. And yet, spread over all this vast region, we have only seven conferences, including Louisiana! Here I could enlarge, until I should drain all my ink and wear out my pen in portraying the wants of these conferences. I will conclude by saying: This is a great and interesting country, rapidly filling up; the Methodists here are already a great people, but not what they should be, nor what they soon will be, if the Church pursues the right policy towards them. They need Bishops, and must have them.

"VETERAN MINISTERS."

MR. EDITOR: An Article under the above head, appears in the Saturday Evening Post, published in Philadelphia, of recent date, one paragraph of which professes to be taken from the New Orleans Christian Advocate.—Some of the statements respecting one styled "the venerable father Garrett," now of the Mississippi Conference, being incorrect, it may not be improper for me to correct some material errors. And, first, instead of "ninety years of age," he is in his eighty-second year. Instead of his being "excessively small," he is of medium stature. Instead of his being "excessively feeble, and a child having more strength than he," he is able to walk erect, to preach once or twice on the Sabbath, and to handle the axe, the hoe and the plow, to procure some of the necessaries of life. It is true he now stands on the superannuated list, being unable to render "effectual service," in the usual sense of that phrase. It is also true, that there is a fund, which was created, patronized, and strengthened, for the benefit of "worn-out preachers, &c.," from which him and others who have "borne the burden and heat of the day," might have received aid, but the principles of even-handed justice prevailed over selfish avarice on the division of the Methodist E. Church. It is also true that he entered the itinerant service sixty years ago, in the then "Far West,"—traversed the western wilds—braved the dangers of the wilderness—endured hardships in the mountains and valleys in Kentucky, East Tennessee, and Virginia—enjoyed the comforts, and suffered the afflictions incident to constant travel and labor in sickly regions of Virginia and North Carolina. In 1808 he re-crossed the mountains, witnessed the progress and extension of the remarkable revival of religion, which commenced in Kentucky in the year 1[illegible] took part in extending the itinerant circle ring new ground, combating prejudice, preparing the way for future success.

But these were the days of real itinerant change and interchange was the order of the day; simplicity and earnestness were some characteristics of Methodist preachers—they "went forth weeping, bearing precious seed."

Whether there was any "real necessity" for ministers to break down prematurely from feeble and diseased lungs, brought on by preaching or not, I pretend not to determine. But I know many who were [illegible]porary with me at the period of which I speak, who sunk down with feeble or shattered lungs, under the pressure of ardent labor and hard travel—preaching every day, and often at night—holding class meetings, prayer meetings and laboring with the penitent—was a work which few constitutions could long endure. I know, too, much depends on the formation of the chest, the strength of the constitution, and a deliberate method of speaking.

LET THEM ALONE.

Those judgments of God which come silently, and, in a sense, invisible, are the most terrible in their effects. For merciful purposes, God will often judge his people with seeming severity. He will suddenly interrupt their prosperity when it endangers their higher interests, and place to their lips the bitter cup of adversity. Health is exchanged for feebleness, wealth for poverty, and their happy household becomes the dwelling place for sorrow. These afflictions are palpable, and although in themselves grievous, may be so sanctified as to yield the peaceable fruits of righteousness. It is, perhaps, more frequently the experience of Christians, that it was not good for them to be uninterruptedly prosperous; for the lesson which [illegible] most impressively teaches them the vanity of earth, leads them to a higher estimate of Heaven.

There is, however, another class of judgments which, in their outward aspect, appears like anything else than judgments to those who bear their infliction. They are neither startling nor terrible, but insidious and [illegible]. They fall upon the sinner with fearful effect, and yet are neither felt nor dreaded. They may be called the "let alone" judgments, in which the sinner is given up to his own [illegible] belief and hardness of [illegible], by the withdrawal of all counteracting saving influences. He comes into the [illegible]ary as to which he has most earnestly [illegible] and yet in obtaining his wish he has [illegible]ured his ruin. THE CHURCH SUIT.

By telegraph, on last Saturday, as our paper was going through the press, news was received here that the long pending suit for the Church property in New York had terminated—the M. E. Church, South, getting an equitable share. We presume this is the result of submitting the case to Judge McLain.

The total assets of the New York establishment amount to the sum of $706,733 05 Its real estate in New York, buildings, and the requisite materials for printing, binding, etc., amount to $243,947 83. It has invested in public stocks some $40,500. Its present cash assets are given at $16,947. Its books and sheet stock on hand is worth $170,130 35 There are due in notes and accounts $210,207 10. The liabilities are only $29,858 50, which deducted from total assets leave the actual capital of the concern $676,874 49.

MEMORIALS.—The Quarterly Conference action on the subject of Disciplinary Allowance to Ministers, will be read with interest. The two Quarterly Conferences speaking out now—the Barbour Circuit and the St Frances street Station, Mobile—are in the same points of Alabama; but, doubtless, they represent all the membership lying between. Let them all speak out—for or against. This is the way to get at it. Bro. Baker, of Mobile, informs us the memorial passed unanimously there.

WOFFORD COLLEGE, S. C.—The South Carolina Conference, sitting at Newberry Court House, has elected officers for this college. We agree with the S. C. Advocate, in saying that if they all consent to serve, Wofford College will have a noble faculty, Rev. W. M. Wightman, D. D., President, James H. Carlisle, Esq. of Columbia, Professor of Mathematics Patrick (David?) Duncan, A. M., of Randolph Macon College, Professor of Ancient Literature. Warren DuPre, A. M., Professor of Chemistry, &c. Rev. A. M. Shipp, Professor of English Literature.

PUTNAM'S FOR DECEMBER.—McGinnis & Carver have laid this early number on our table. They get them early at 36 Camp street.

REV. D. W. LEWIS.—This staid and clever man, a native Choctaw Indian, and for some years an itinerant Methodist preacher, writes us from the "Nation," Nov. 14. His friends will be glad to hear from him, and we shall hold him to the "sketches:"

"I expect to see you in about a month or so, on the way to Washington. We are now in General Council, and press of business hastens me to a close. After the adjournment of the Council, if I have time, I will write you short sketches of the proceedings of the Choctaw National Council.

AMERICAN BIBLE SOCIETY.

The regular monthly November meeting of the Managers was held at the Bible House, Astor Place, on Thursday, the 3d ult., at half past four o'clock, P. M. Dr. Thomas Cock presided, assisted by the Hon. Luther Bradish and Benjamin L. Swan, Esq.

Letters were presented from Rev. Cyrus Byington, missionary among the Choctaw Indians, and from the French and Foreign Bible Society. The latter contains encouraging statements in regard to the Bible work in France. It appears that while there is an increasing demand for the Scriptures, there are also increasing facilities for their circulation.

Several new books were received for the library, among which were two copies of the Bible in modern Armenian, with references, published at the expense of this Society, in Smyrna.

Grants of books were made to the Missionary Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church, for their French mission in Detroit and vicinity; to individuals in North Carolina, on application, for distribution among slaves; to a Welch Church and Sunday School in New York City; for the Colored Home in New York; to the Home for Seamen's Children; to the American Seamen's Friend Society, for Rio Janeiro; Spanish Bibles and Testaments for Guatemala; also Bibles and Testaments to the United States Consul for Bourgos, for distribution there; with various others in a smaller amount in English, Indian, French, German, Dutch, and Hebrew, and the four volumes in raised letters for the blind.

The receipts of the month were $26,209 68, and the number of Bibles and Testaments issued 69,687.—[Record.

REVIVAL INTELLIGENCE.

COLUMBUS DISTRICT.

We have had gracious revivals in the bounds of the Columbus District this year. On the Columbus circuit, the preachers report 328 conversions and upwards of eleven hundred dollars in cash and subscriptions collected for missions, besides all the other financial collections. The work of holiness in the Church has been revived also, and some thirty have professed to experience full redemption. Dr. Cox and Bro. Belton have done a faithful year's labor on this circuit, and God has blessed them with extraordinary success. The latter is going to China, where I hope his labors will tell upon the eternal destinies of many of that people.

There has been a great improvement in the churches on Picken's circuit, under the administration of Bro. Murrah, with the cooperation of Bro. Skipper, his colleague. The camp meeting at Hargrove's was one of extraordinary interest, about sixty professed religion. In Carrollton, the county seat of Pickins county, Bro. Murrah held a protracted meeting this fall, which resulted in the conversion of quite a number and many valuable accessions to our Church. Our last quarterly meeting for that circuit was held at Pickinsville, at which we had the very efficient services of Bro. Dorman, from Columbus. He delivered a fine missionary discourse on Sabbath, and we collected about two hundred and eighty dollars at its close. God poured out his spirit on the meeting subsequently, and we had a most gracious revival; in two or three occasions there were forty at the altar at once, about twenty were converted, and some substantial additions made to the Church. There has been about four hundred dollars raised on that work for missions, besides the other collections.

Bro. Spense, on the Gresne circuit, has been quite successful; he has had three or four very interesting meetings on his circuit. The meeting at Sardis was one of special interest and power, at which there were about thirty-five conversions. That circuit will send up about two hundred dollars for missions. Eulaw is now enjoying one of the most extensive and gracious revivals that has ever been realized in that place. Bro. Patten, a young preacher of the first year, has had the charge of that place, and has labored faithfully for the advancement of the cause of Christ. He has been assisted in his last meeting by Bro. C. C. Callaway and Bro. Laney. He has collected one hundred and seventy dollars for missions.

The Yorklund circuit had raised about twenty-six dollars for missions, when I was at the last quarterly meeting, but expected to do more. Bro. Levert was laboring very acceptably among them, and there would have been a good revival there at the last quarterly meeting if it had been protracted, the people appeared ripe for it, but circumstances prevented its continuance beyond Sabbath.

There have been about two hundred conversions, as reported by Bro. Tucker, in the Buttahatchy circuit, and forty-two dollars and fifty cents collected for missions.

The Athens circuit has had some revivals in it, though not extensive. The preacher in charge died, and it has been supplied the latter part of the year by my son, who has raised about one hundred dollars for missions.

Bro. Brown, on the Zion circuit, has had some revivals in his work, and will raise some twenty dollars for missions.

Columbus station is in a prosperous condition; the attention to class meetings is improving; the congregations are crowded every Sabbath. There is general harmony in the Church, and last Sabbath they gave upwards of eight hundred dollars for missions. Bro. Dorman has labored very efficiently for this people, he has attended to all parts of his work, and will leave with the warmest affections of his charge.

I am especially gratified to witness the improvement among the young people of our Church in Columbus. One of the most interesting meetings I ever attended, was a class of about thirty youths under the charge of Dr. Lipscombe, which meets every Wednesday night at the church. The Doctor seems to have an excellent talent to interest and instruct the young people, and I look upon this class as the future preachers, leaders, stewards and pillars of the Church. Each one stands up and speaks out his feelings and exercises, his trials and temptations; and they all seem to love each other, and delight in attending this class.

This has been a year of heavy affliction to the Alabama Conference, but God has not been unmindful of us, and has granted us much spiritual prosperity. May His presence ever abide with us, and make us a model conference in every respect.

GEO. SHAEFFER.

Columbus, Miss., Nov. 26, 1853.

EUTAW, ALA.

God has visited us, even us, with a gracious out-pouring of his spirit. Verily, He "is no respecter of persons." A meeting of seventeen day's continuance has just closed here, resulting in the conversion (among the whites) of sixty-five souls—thirty-seven additions. Several of the converts were members already, and about fifteen remain to be divided out. All the churches in our town have been greatly revived and strengthened.

We notice one remarkable feature in this work. Few women and children were found at the altar, particularly during the first stage of the meeting. The work was confined chiefly among the young men and prominent citizens of the place. Many young men were converted, who, we trust, will preach the precious Jesus. This revival was evidently from God, and constitutes an epoch in the history of Eutaw—a season long to be remembered by this people.

Bro C. C. Callaway spent two weeks with us, and labored with his usual zeal and power; nor was he "labor in vain in the Lord." Bro. J. W. L. Laney came to our assistance in a time of need, and remained with us until the close of the meeting, doing the work of his Master with zeal and success. Other brethren gave us occasional assistance. May the Lord abundantly reward them all.

JAS. M. PATTON.

Eutaw, Nov. 28th, 1853.

BASTROP, LA.

On the 12th inst., (Saturday,) a protracted meeting commenced in Bastrop, and on next day a missionary collection was taken up. Dr. J. A. Whetstone being called to the Chair, Bro. Wiseman, Secretary, the object of the meeting was briefly stated by the Chairman. After which, animated speeches were delivered by the Revs. Messrs. Evans, Russell and Trippett.

A collection was taken up, and it affords me peculiar pleasure to state, that in money and by subscription, we have received near three hundred dollars—more than double any prior collection. To God be all the praise, and may the citizens of Bastrop and vicinity be amply rewarded for this, their kind munificence, not only in time, but eternity.

Our meeting is still progressing, and it does my soul good to state that the Lord has deigned to own and bless his work, in the powerful conviction and conversion of sinners; scores on scores have found the pearl of great price, and up to Monday night, (10th day of the meeting,) seventy-one precious souls have attached themselves to our Church. Glory to Him who so blessed us, as to give his only begotten Son to die, that we might live. To Him be all the praise.

PICKENSVILLE, ALA.

DEAR BRO. MCTYEIRE: I have just closed my labors on this (Picken's) circuit, for the present year. I am happy to report that for the last half, we have been favored with a gracious revival of the work of God. Nearly all the appointments have been visited and refreshed from on High. We have had numerous accessions to the Church, and not less than one hundred and fifty or two hundred converted. Our institutions, withal, have not been overlooked or lost sight of. The amount appertioned to this circuit for superannuated preachers, &c., have been collected, a liberal collection for the Bible cause, and more by double for missions, than the circuit ever gave in a year before.

Our paper retains its hold upon the hearts and minds of the people.

LITERARY NOTICES.

THE HOMES OF THE NEW WORLD: IMPRESSIONS OF AMERICA. By FREDRIKA BREMER: Harper & Bros N Y; 2 vols 8 vo 1853.

We are indebted to the popular and extensive bookseller and stationer, J. B. Steel, 60 Camp st., for these neat and very readable volumes. Americans are never tired of hearing "what they say of us." And the womanly style of these volumes—their minuteness, personality, mistakes, kindness, pettishness, squeamishness, and gossipping sprightliness have hit the public taste. We are not surprised at the eager demand for them. It was our luck to be a passenger in the Lake boat which took Miss Bremer from New Orleans to Mobile, while she was seeing these sights. It was evident enough, she was destined to make a book. We have not forgotten how ungly in her face and how queer in her ways, was she—always having an eye out for the beautiful. Passing a little girl in the cabin, holding in her arms a clean washed, warm fleeced, lap dog, with a red ribbon round its neck, she stopped in the jostling gang-way, lifted her hand, walled up her eyes, and exclaimed, "O, dear, what a pretty picture it would make."

THE BENDED TWIG: By COUSIN CICELY. Auburn, N. Y., 1853; Alden, Beardsley & Co.

"Lewie, or The Bended Twig," may be called a "story," but it is instructive and entices along the reader over its clean pages with a sad air of reality. Indeed, the author's preface assures us that it is with names suppressed, "an o'er true tale." If any doting parent doubt the trite saying, "as the twig is bent the tree's inclined," let them learn here how a spoiled child grows up, by all the laws of nature, of habit, and of morals, into a jail bird. LOUIS XVII—HIS LIFE, HIS SUFFERINGS AND HIS DEATH. By DE BEAUCHESNE. N Y., Harper & Bros 1853 2 vols. 8 vo.

Those who have read the absorbing articles in Putnam's Magazine—"Have we a Bourbon among us?" feel a keen appetite for those volumes—which would say that, we have not. The pretensions of the Indian Missionary, Willinms, do not yet appear to us groundless. These volumes are translated and edited by W. Hoxlitt, embellished with vignettes, autographs and plans.

THE CZAR AND THE SULTAN: By A. GILSON. N. Y., Harper & Bros., 1853.

It is a meagre and, we should judge, not very impartial account of two despots, the one of whom is just now regarded with much, the other with little favor, outside of their respective dominions. Both have crushed, with a terrible energy, domestic conspiracies: the Czar, that of Rylief and Pestel; the Sultan, that of the Janissaries. They were both barely seated on the Throne, when assailed by the revolts which they so fiercely smothered. Each has done remarkable things; but though reformers, in an opposite sense. Nicholas has, while correcting as much as possible the corruptions which had crept into the civil and military servies, under the weak reign of Alexander, has labored to strengthen the nationality of his people; while Abdul Medjid has, with a much more questionable wisdom, ventured to attempt denationalizing his own, by breaking up many of their old customs. Both are, probably, the most remarkable sovereigns of their day; but not remarkable alike. The first is at the head of an empire already great and every year growing more formidable; the second commands a realm fast verging to its downfall and upheld not by his abilities, but that policy of other States, jealous of each other, which is called "the European balance of power." It can scarcely fail that the fate of these two, who now fix so much the world's attention, will be as different as their systems of policy, as opposite as the fortunes which have heretofore attended them. It is, besides, a curious freak of destiny which has them brought into contact and conflict, upon the verge of Europe, to which they but half-belong, two great semi-barbarous races, the one of which was its former, while the other is (perhaps as ably) its present terror. The interference of France and England may for a time postpone it; but the ultimate destruction of the Turkish power cannot long be delayed. Decayed empires are never to be more than most temporarily upheld from without. As soon as they reach that point of weakness, a new process, not to be stopped by foreign assistance, sets in: they begin to crumble within. This will happen to Turkey, even if she escapes by christian aid, extinction in the actual war. She will be left exhausted, a mere fable of dominion; and her dependencies will, one after another, drop from her; until, reduced to a few European provinces, she will sink like that purple empire of the Cæsars which she herself crushed out, of existence, in its last retreat of Constantinople, within a little of 400 years ago.

By way of at once introduction and moral to his coming narrative, the author contrasts as follows a feat which he personally witnessed, and what History tells of the manner in which the first Russian embassador to Constantinople was treated. It really looks as if Fate was about to pay off the old scors of indignity and give Russia her coverage:

In 1860, I saw at Constantinople the new palace of the Russian embassy at Pera. I was greatly struck by the colossal proportions of this edifice—rebuilt after its destruction by fire in 1844. It seemed that I was looking on the material image of the absorbing power which the Czars has acquired in Turkey. It is in this palace that Menschikoff was installed, surrounded by a regal pomp. It was there he received deputations from a great part of the Sultan's subjects. It was from thence he issued his audacious commission of inquiry in various points of the Turkish empire. Finally, it was from thence that he emerged to attend the audience at the Pachalik—with insolent message—and dressed in the disrespectful paletot of which so much has been said.

On the 25th of January, 1068—nearly two hundred years ago—under the reign of the Sultan Mahmoud IV., an embassador of the Czar Alexis Mikhailovitch was conducted to the seraglio, to be received by the Sultan. The Russian of 1668 was no more disposed to humility than he of 1853. The introducing functionaries found that he did not bow down low enough before their master. Faithful to a barbarous and degrading custom, they applied their hands to the back of his head to force him to bend it as much as possible. The Scievonian courageously stood upright; but the chamberlains, instead of loosening their hold, only pressed the harder, to such a degree that the visitor fell to the ground. His dragoman, seeing this, lost all self-possession, and was not in a state to offer a single word.

The Sultan, out of patience, ordered his kaimakam to relieve him of the infidel's presence. The minister obeyed, and drove out with a cudgel, which he applied with his own hand, the embassador, the secretary, and the dragoman.

* Czar, Tsar, or Cæsr, (pronounced Tchar), is derived, according to some, from Cæsar; according to others, it is the same word as the termination of the names of the Assyrian emperors—Nabopolas sar, Phalas-sar, etc. However it may be, the word formerly was used to designate the Emperor of Constantinople, the Grand Khan of the Golden Tribe—the sovereign Tartars of Kaptchack, of Kasan, etc. Peter the Great, who strove to imitate all Western forms, introduced the spelling of Cæsar at the same time as he assumed the title of Emperor—imperator. Previously, the Czars had called themselves povelitil—Master Autocrat.

AN ATTEMPT TO EXHIBIT THE TRUE THEORY OF CHRISTIANITY, AS A CONSISTENT AND PRACTICAL SYSTEM: By W. S. GRAYSON. N. Y.; D. Appleton & Co., 1853., pp. 364.

Mr. Grayson is an intelligent Methodist layman, of Mississippi, and not unknown to the readers of our church periodicals. Though he has written a good deal, his themes have been marked by their elevated character and treatment. The present volume partakes of this quality, treating of the origin of moral evil and its consistency with the benevolent attributes of the Creator—a diversity of creeds consistent with the Unity of the Faith—the divine foreordination reconciled with man's free agency, &c.

Mr. G. is a free thinker—we use this not invidiously. His estimate of ceremonies amounts almost to a contempt of them.—These wrappings, of salvation he tears off with a good will and leads man to the gospel, that the gospel may lead him to God. An essential form in the procedure is not admitted. We promise ourselves the pleasure of a closer acquaintance with this volume, than now we are at leisure to indulge. It is dedicated to Dr. Williams, modestly and respectfully. We have it from the publishers, who have executed a neat job, through J. B. Steel. Doubtless there will be many inquiries for it.

MIRROR OF THE SOUL: By A CHRISTIAN LADY. Auburn, N. Y.; Alden, Beardsley & Co., pp 378, 1853.

Messrs. McGinnis & Carver, 36 Camp-street, have laid upon our table this Mirror—not for a dressing table but a closet. Here speaks the Comforter, in the experiences of grace. Such experiences, as for variety and fervor, few have, but all may have. The simplicity and yet the solid breath and depth of the authoress' experience, are such as belong only to the Bible-read Christian. Introduction by Rev D. Holmes.

"Lewie, or The Bended Twig," may be called a "story," but it is instructive and entices along the reader over its clean pages with a sad air of reality. Indeed, the author's preface assures us that it is with names suppressed, "an o'er true tale." If any doting parent doubt the trite saying, "as the twig is bent the tree's inclined," let them learn here how a spoiled child grows up, by all the laws of nature, of habit, and of morals, into a jail bird. For sale by McGinnis & Carver.

A COMMENTARY ON MEDICAL AND MORAL LIFE: By WM CORSE, M. D., M. R. S. 1853. C. J. Price, Phil; pp. 327.

"A prayer never hurts my patients," said a sensible and successful physician to us, once upon a time. Here is a book that endorses, by weighty name and argument, that opinion. We wish every family would present the family physician with this book. The practitioner who confines himself to the mere body, degrades his profession—he is a mere machinist. The mind and its emotions, the anxieties of the soul, have much to do with disease—and the soothing of these with the curing of disease. We regard with infinite impatience the infidel, who abuses his office as physician, to drag the patient with his creed as well as his pills; draws a spiritual cordon around the sick bed, and under sanitary pretences, ignores the consolations of religion, or debases the entire subject, when it needs most to be entertained, as only pernicious excitement. We cannot too heartily commend this American republication. It is medical theology. To be had of McGinnis & Carver, 36 Camp-street.

A GENTLEMAN.—Seargent Talford, the accomplished author of "Ion," very correctly defines a gentleman thus:

"Gentleman is a term which does not apply to any station, but to the mind and feeling in every station. The man of rank who deports himself with dignity and candor, the tradesman who discharges the duties of life with honor and integrity, are alike entitled to it; nay, the humblest artizan, who fulfils the obligations cast upon him with virtue and with honor, is more entitled to the name of a gentleman, than the man who can indulge in offensive and ribald remarks, however high his station."

STUDYING DEAD LANGUAGES.—Without contesting the point, whether dead languages are of any use, it will be allowed that the study costs pretty dear. Three quarters of the time for seven years at least, is the expense. Not above one in one hundred learns to read even Latin decently well; that is, one good reader for every £10,000 sterling expenditure. As to speaking, Latin, perhaps one out of one thousand may learn that, so that there is a speaker for each £100,000 spent in the languages. It will, perhaps, be said that Latin is necessary to the understanding of English, but the Greeks, (particularly at Athens) who learned no language but their own, understood and spoke it better than the people of any other country. [Prof. Playfair.

AN EMERGENCY MET.—A singer who led the psalm at a meeting, a short time since, finding that his concluding word, which was Jacob, had not syllables enough to fill up the music adequately, ended thus:

"J-a-a-u—J-a-a-a-a—fol de riddle—cob!"

A BEAUTIFUL INCIDENT.—The editor of the Savannah Journal writing from Milledgeville, recently, says: A few evenings since while wandering amid the vine-ombowered tombs and moss-grown graves beneath these great forest pines that decorate the Burial Ground of Milledgeville, in turning a little corpse of eglantine and myrtle that had sprung up within the nearly decayed pailings, that surrounded a place of graves, we came suddenly upon an aged negro man, whose bended form and bowed head prevented the discovery of our approach until we had come sufficiently near to catch the murmur of his voice in sobs and prayer.

Upon our questioning him, he pointed with a trembling hand to the graves before him, and, in his own peculiar manner, but with the deepest feeling, said, "Dere is de graves of poor old Massah and Missus and de children. Massah born 1776, died 1826, I remember it well, and de rest died, all 'cept young Massah, and been in Hebbon dis long long time."

The old man's memory was perfectly clear in regard to the family history, births, deaths and burial. And as we were informed, this faithful old servant is permitted once every year to come up from the plantation to visit his "Young Massah" in town, and never returns without coming out here to visit and weep and pray over the graves of those he loved and served and lost in years gone by.

SONG.

Wail through the bosom of the night
Storm-wind how strong thou art!
Thou canst not change the inward sky,
The summer of my heart.

Shed thy cold tears, oh winter rain!
Sob through the twilight dim—
I only feel the sunshine's glow,
To ripening fruit for him.

Bend your brown branches, leafless trees!
Beneath the wintry sky;
I know for me the harvest time—
The vintage hour is nigh.

The grapes are glowing in the vine,
For love's own hand to take—
But, he must press them with his lips,
The wine of life to make!

THE GIPSY SLAVES OF WALLACHIA.

All travelers who have journeyed from Zemlitza, on the Danube, to Bucharest, agree in painting the country they are obliged to traverse in the most sombre colors. Once out of sight of the lines of trees that border the Danube, you enter upon an interminable diseral plain, with a level horizon that surrounds you like a circle, of which you are ever the centre. There are no objects behind, to mark your progress by their gradual disappearance; there is nothing ahead, to encourage you on; no mountains of blue rising higher and higher, becoming substantial as you advance, breaking up their long line into peaks and valleys bristling with crags or clothed in forest. If you would know that you are in motion, you must look upon the ground beneath your feet and see the pebbles and plants pass slowly backwards as your wagon moves sleepily on, or watch dimly by as the karoutcher pursues its mad career. In winter time, an additional dreariness is given to this desert by the absence of the sun, which is hidden from view by one vast cloud stretching from horizon to horizon, low down, so as almost to resemble a mist just risen from the earth. Here and there, a few slight elevations, a foot or two high, indicate the presence of an underground village. At various distances, tall poles rise into the air, marking the positions of wells, around which the sky is speckled by flights of crows and vultures. Now and then you meet parties of peasants clothed in sheepskin, and wearing prodigious moustaches, wandering across the level. At night the only sound is the wind whistling through the low bushes, occasionally bringing to the ear the reports of a volley of musketry fired by some party of travelers who amuse themselves in this martial way.

It is not uncommon in crossing these sad plains to come upon groups of wild-looking individuals, black as Ethiopians, scantily covered by old rags, stepping jauntily out, waving their arms, nodding their heads, rattling fragments of songs, and chattering together as they go the blacksmith's tools which they bear upon their backs. Further on, perhaps, when night has fallen, an hour or two after these odd-looking people have gone ahead of your wagon (they take two strides for one of your oxen) the ground ahead will probably become sprinkled as with glow-worms; and presently a sort of wail-wind of strange sounds, half song, half shout, will be borne by the night breeze, to mingle with the buzz of your own caravan, and the creaking of the wheels. You have come upon a village, an encampment, a burrow of grimy troglodytes (dwellers in caves,) who are either sitting around the remains of the fires they have lighted to cook their evening meal, or with open doors or traps, by the light of a candle stuck in the ground, are engaged in smoking red clay or cherry-wood pipes, and drinking the harsh wine of the country.

These people are of the most humble and most unfortunate section of the Wallachian people, the Zigans, who of old formed a flourishing little State, paying tribute to the Greek empire, but who are now reduced to a condition of abject slavery. Their history is most obscure and it is not with certainty known whence they came or by what steps they descended to their present level. It seems certain, however, that they belong to the same family of wanderers who are known in Egypt as Gaydras, in Hungary as Zingari, in Germany as Zigeuner, in Spain as Gitanos, in France as Bohemians, and in England as Gipsies. Their own traditions derive them from Syria, whence they were transported in the eighth century, by one of the Greek emperors, to Thrace. On account of some peculiarities in their manners, perhaps of some strange forms of doctrine, they seem to have become detested and despised by neighboring nations, and especially by the Mohammedans. When the Turks penetrated into their territory, instead of merely requiring tribute from them, they attacked them with fury, dispersed them, hunted them down like wild beasts, and condemned those to perpetual servitude whose lives they spared. In this persecution they were encouraged by the Christians: who shared, indeed, the greater part of the newly made serfs among themselves. It is estimated that at present there are more than twenty-three thousand Zigan families in Moldo-Wallachia, comprising about a hundred and fifty thousand souls. A certain number of these belong to the State, which employs them in mines and public works; while the others are divided among the monasteries and the Boyards. Some of these latter possess as many as five or six thousand, engaged in part in the most laborious works connected with their estates, in part let out upon hire. They sell or exchange them at certain fixed periods of the year, bringing them like cattle to market; until lately, they treated them with such severity that they not unfrequently drove them to suicide. Many Boyards of humane character now grant a semi-liberty to their Zigans, allowing them for so much a year to go about as they please, seeking for work, and retaining the produce of it. Once every spring, the half-enfranchised slave must make his appearance and pay his tributs. Sometimes, also, he brings an instalment of his own price, and thus manages by degrees to free himself. An industrious man may earn his liberty in ten years; but this unfortunate race has been so brutalized by long suffering, and is so addicted to every kind of debauchery, that very few succeed in resculing themselves from bondage. Among the Boyards of the present day there are a good many whose copper complexion, white teeth, and general cast of countenance, evidently prove them to be descended from Zigans.

The physical constitution of this unhappy people is strongly marked. The men are generally of lofty stature, robust and sinewy. Their skin is black or copper colored; their hair, thick and woolly; their lips are of negro heaviness, and their teeth as white as pearls; the nose is considerably flattened, and the whole countenance is illumined, as it were, by lively, rolling eyes. All, without exception, wear beards. Their dress consists commonly of a piece of tattered cloth thrown carelessly around them; perhaps an old bed-curtain, given by some master, or a blanket that has gone through every degree of fortune until it has been rejected by the scullion.

As is the case in many savage tribes, the women are either extremely ugly or extremely handsome. Most of the Zigans are beautiful up to the age of twenty; but, after that time, they suddenly shrink and shrivel, change color, bend, and lose the lightness of their step, as if an enchanter's wand had changed them from youth, admired and wooed, to dishonored old age. The dress of these women is peculiar, consisting generally of nothing but a tight tunic or bodice made of sheep-skin, and scarcely reaching to the knees. It leaves their legs, their arms, and their necks bare. Over their heads the most coquettish throw a white veil, and some few indulge in leather sandals. As ornaments, they wear earrings of brass filigree, necklaces of paras strung upon a slender thong, and a variety of metal bracelets. The children go naked up to the age of ten or twelve, and whole swarms of girls and boys may be seen rolling about together in the dust or mud in summer, in the water or snow in winter, like so many black worms. As you pass by, a dozen heads of matted hair and a dozen pairs of sharp eyes are raised towards you, and you are greeted with a mocking shout, which alone tells you that the hideous things are your fellow-creatures.

In fine weather the Zigan is a very independent being. He sleeps in the open air, in the forests, in the fields, in the streets of the towns—anywhere, in fact, where he can find a place to lay his head. However, it is their custom, for the summer season, to erect little sheds of canvas, of straw, of branches, or of mud, whilst in winter they scratch deep holes in the earth, which they roof with reeds and turf. Their furniture is surprisingly simple, consisting of an old kettle, a few two-pronged forks, and perhaps a pair of scissors, a poignard, and a gourd to hold brandy, or arakee—to the use of which this race is particularly addicted. When they have stowed these articles in their holes, or under a shed, they call the place their home, and go back to it every night. They squat upon heaps of filth, and commence smoking their pipes, while the women set before them the supper which has been cooked in the before-mentioned old kettle swung upon three sticks over a fire of wood brought in by the children, mixed with a kind of peat. Sometimes a piece of turned meat, which all Christian cooks have rejected in the butchers' shops, or a portion of some animal that has come by an untimely death, and has been distributed by a generous Boyard, is added to the porridge of beans or maize on which the Zigans generally support their strength. They use no plates or spoons, but dip their hardened fingers into the steaming kettle and bringing up a ball of porridge or a fragment of meat, which they cool by throwing from one palm to the other until they can venture to cast it down their throats. The women and children eat after the men, who, as soon as they have wiped their hands in their hair, go again to their pipes, and—if they can afford it—to drinking. They make themselves drunk for an hour or two, until fatigue overcomes them, and then go pell-mell to their tents, stretch one by the embers of their fires. Nothing can be more abominably filthy than the habits of this tribe. They are often obliged to abandon their villages on account of the insanitary state to which they have been brought by their carelessness. This abandonment seems nothing in feeling or in money, for they are essentially wanderers. When the atmosphere becomes too offensive to breathe, they shoulder their few utensils and their furniture, and remove a mile or two away. If it be summer, they sleep in their sheds again in a few hours; if it be winter, and the frost has not yet come on, they form subterranean dwellings in the course of half a night.

As we have said, a good many of the Zigans are employed in the rough labors of agriculture. The greater number, however, are artizans. They are celebrated for their ingenuity. Their favorite trade is that of the blacksmith, but they also turn their hands to anything; and the bazaars of Bucharest are filled with neat wooden toys and fancy-work, which would do credit to our cleverest workmen. But the natural tendencies of the Zigan—perhaps, also, the contempt with which he is regarded—prevent him, except in the rare instances we have seen, from rising, by means of his industry, in the social scale. It is difficult to learn anything of his religious or other opinions. From what one would sometimes fancy him to be half-Christian, half Mohammedan; at other times a fire-worshipper, an infidel, a believer in God or what you will. He is a man of many words, like his language, which contains few original characters, but which is enormously rich, were, with words borrowed. (It might be more appropriate to say, stolen—for the Zigan, like his brethren we know of, has a few pilfering propensities) from a dozen different dialects. The sound is not at all unmusical, and some of the songs which have been taken down are curiously characteristic. The following is the beginning of one of them:

"Through the pathway of the sky
Quail with sharpened beak doth fly
Christos praising with sharp beak.
What, oh duo quail, dost thou seek?
To the grog-shop come with me,
And treat me to some snakes!"

It will be seen from these lines that the habits of the Zigans on various points are somewhat confused, or at any rate, it seems rather odd to interrupt a plena quail in its devotions with an invitation to tipple. Perhaps, as is the case in many eastern songs, the words are arbitrarily thrown together for the sake of harmony or observation that might apply sometimes in verse-making in our civilized regions.

The Zigans are not only poets and musicians but they are musicians also, and their favorite instrument is the fiddle. They often use it by permission of their masters the Boyards to play what are called Witzeulla, or storms of fiddling, consisting of ten or twelve members, who, about the country to the towns and castles of the rich, and let themselves out at so much an hour. No ball is considered complete without one of the musical storms, who ask very little for their services, preferring that they be paid by their pleasure; but who, unless they be grievously wronged, generally contrive to leave a deficit behind them somewhere, either in the larder or the hen-roost. They often lead their bears about with them; and when they are not at balls toward, dance a strange dance by themselves for the amusement of the company. Forming into a circle, men and women, to the sound of a fiddle, begin by uttering frightful cries, and then, as the fiddle strikes up, whirl, jump, stamp, and make the crowd together, separate, throw their arms and legs into the air, wag their heads, shake their bracelets, and work themselves up into a perfect state of fury. The dance, in fact, is a kind of abridgment of the bolero, the saltarello, and the fandango. Sometimes a single performer will go through a ferocious jig, which may be called the jig of murder and suicide, for these are the most frequent things are the basis of his representation. The acting is often so clever, that the applauding spectators shriek, and rush away from themselves. The ragpost and breadfruit man, fancying they want to escape payment, pursue them with his greasy cap held out, shouting for a piastre.

HYMENEAL:

MARRIED—By the Rev. Dr. J. B. Stanford, at the residence of Joseph Agee, Esq., on the evening of the 17th ult., DUNLY MASK, Esq., to Miss M. ADALINE AGEE. All of Marengo county, Ala.

OBITUARY:

Departed this life, Oct. 25th, at his residence, in Wilkinson county, Miss., Rev. WM. VAKENHAM, aged 36 years. Brother Vakenham was a native of Ireland; he joined the Wesleyan Methodist Church, and embraced religion about thirteen years previous to his decease, and commenced preaching immediately after his conversion. He held no connection with the British Conference, but labored among the poor of his country as a kind of local itinerant, supporting his family as teacher in a school under the control of the church of England. On account of sectarian prejudices, he was dismissed from his situation, upon which he was forced to take a salary inadequate to his support under the most favorable circumstances in that country, but it was his only resort to bravo the horrors of the dreadful famine of 1848.

With means of support so diminished, and an increasing family, he began seriously to meditate on emigration to the United States. While thinking over the seeming impossibility of this enterprise, money sufficient to bear his personal expenses came strangely into his hands. He determined at ones to cross the ocean alone, and seek a home for his family in the land of plenty. He early obtained a situation as private teacher in a family, where he remained near a year, when, from circumstances not necessary to be mentioned, he decided to return to his native country, and never again set foot on American soil.—However, when he compared the miseries of the poor of his own country with the state of things here, he began to think more favorably of our institutions, and thought himself too hasty in his resolution. While in this state of mind, he received a kind proposition from the friends he had made while in the United States, to furnish him with a sum of money sufficient to meet the expense of the emigration of his whole family. He accepted the proposal at once, and was soon on his way to claim citizenship among the very people he had left with such feelings of repulse about twelve months before.

Scarcely had he stepped from the cars at his point of destination, when a letter was placed in his hands designed to forestall any engagement he might make in business, in order to secure his services as a traveling preacher. But a few hours after he received a communication from Brother Drake, the Presiding Elder, requesting his services on the Wilkinson circuit. While in conversation about the matter, he remarked upon the strange providences that had attended him for a few years, and when asked by the writer of this, if he would take the work, he replied: "I dare not refuse."

The people of Wilkinson circuit well know how faithfully he served them, while the immense congregations that crowded to hear him, speak stronger than language of his great acceptability. For preaching talent he scarcely had an equal. His arrangement, his strength of argument, and his great originality, joined with his simplicity of style and manners placed him almost beyond a rival. His strength of reasoning commanded the attention of the most intelligent, while his simplicity brought it down to the comprehension of the child and the servant. As a christian, he was humble and deeply pious. All his intercourse with others showed him to be a man of God. In the social circle he was simple and unpretending in his manners, and highly engaging in conversation. As a father and husband, he was kind and affectionate.

He conversed but little while sick, being too weak or delirious most of the time, but was heard to say, when told that death was upon him—"I can trust that Jesus, whom I have preached to others with unshaken confidence,—I shall soon be with my Jesus." In his death one of the greatest lights of the church has been extinguished just as it was discovered. Those who know how to appreciate him, freely mingled their tears with those of his family, while many a heart, throbbing with deepest sorrow, unawered to the throbbing hearts of those who called him father and husband. J. D. NEWSOM.

Died, of yellow fever, on the 14th Oct., brother WM. MCALLISTER, aged sixty-seven years. He was a citizen of Demopolis, Ala., and a member of the Methodist E. Church, South. When the epidemic came, he removed to his plantation. The destroyer had already marked him as its victim. He was attacked, and, after an illness of four days, joined "the blood-besprinkled bands on the eternal shore."

His death is a sore calamity, not only to his surviving partner, who is left in all the loneliness of childless widowhood, but to the whole community. There was little about him to censure, and a great deal to admire. As a citizen, he was respected and beloved. His was an unoffending and a beautiful life. Kindness and candor were among his prominent characteristics. As a christian, he was simple-hearted and unpretending. He loved God's ministers, God's people, and God's church, with no common love. His life was as silent as the descending snow, but as refreshing and as effectual as a summer shower. When health permitted, he attended regularly upon the services of the sanctuary, and was active in the discharge of his christian duties. He was all we mean by a faithful, humble, follower of Christ.

He leaves a community, a church, and an affectionate wife, to mourn their bereavement. May the remembrance of his piety long remain to rebuke sin and promote holiness in the community. May the remembrance of his devoted life and peaceful death stimulate the Church to greater faith and zeal; may the remembrance of his kind words and gentle ways brighten the hope of meeting again, which is left as the only consolation to his surviving companion.

THOS. H. FOSTER.

Nashville and Louisville Advocate please copy.

Died, on the 16th of October, of yellow fever, sister M. A. TRAWEEK, leaving seven children to mourn her loss; by one of whom, with her husband, she was followed to the grave shortly after. Sister Traweek was an acceptable member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, in this place. Her peculiar situation prevented her giving that attention to the ordinary duties of a member of the Church, which she so much desired, and which would have given greater enjoyment to her heart, and more completeness to her christian character. She deeply regretted this, and never so much, as in her last illness. She was thoroughly penitent for all her failures, and expressed her full reliance on Christ for salvation. Her mind was peaceful. She expressed no regrets at dying, save the necessity of leaving her family in such a condition of helplessness. God was with her in the last struggle. May her orphaned children be protected by their Heavenly Father, and finally meet the sainted mother in the paradise of God. THOS. H. FOSTER.

Demopolis, Nov. 1853.

Died, on the 30th Oct., sister LOUISA SAUNDERS. Her family were among the first attacked by the recent epidemic, and three—all, except herself, were down at once, and dependent on her for attention. Most nobly did she render it. For three weeks, through the long days and nights, did that frail, weak, woman labor in her work of love. Several times she told me of her trust in God, and her consciousness of internal support. Indeed, nothing else could have sustained her, amid the heavy and dangerous duties she was called to perform.

At length, when the rest became convalescent, the effects of her fatigue began to be manifested, and she was compelled to take her bed. Her friends, however, apprehended no danger. Her illness seemed but slight. But one night she suddenly became worse, and in two hours breathed her last. She was not found without preparation. She died trusting in the promises of God, made in Christ Jesus. God was her portion and salvation in the last hour. May her bereaved and desolate husband and child imitate her christian example, and meet her in Heaven! THOS. H. FOSTER.

Demopolis, Nov. 1853.

Died, of yellow fever, on the 6th of Oct., sister ELIZA GLEASON, in the forty-ninth year of her age. She was one of the first attacked, before the disease was known to be yellow fever. In her case there was no abatement of the fever, until death ensued. She suffered much, but bore it with the spirit of a christian, until one bright Sabbath day, at about one o'clock, she entered "the rest which remaineth for the people of God."

Hers was a strange and stormy life. Many years ago, she entered the married life, with unclouded prospects. Shortly after, unlooked for calamities came upon her, which continued with scarcely any interruption. Not the least of these was great physical affliction. A few years since she laid a beloved husband and an affectionate son in the grave, within a few days of each other. Since then she has been in one continued struggle against temptation and trial; God only knows what she was called to suffer. Often was her confidence in God seemingly almost shaken by her peculiar sorrows, but she never gave up her faith and hope. For some time before her last illness, there was an evident growth in grace. God seemed preparing her for her removal from the earth. While ill and recovery uncertain, on being asked if afraid to die, she confidently and unhesitatingly answered, No! Her faith seemed to take a firmer hold on the promises, than ever before. She looked death in the face without quailing. She left in the assurance of eternal life. Farewell, sainted sister; sweet has been our communion on earth, sweeter shall it be when we meet there above. THOS. H. FOSTER.

Demopolis, Nov. 1853.

DIED.—At Cottage Hill, near Mobile, on the 26th October, of yellow fever, after an illness of five days, Mrs. ANNA SPENCER, wife of Richard Spencer, Esq., in the 53d year of her age. She was a native of the city of Baltimore, and has resided in Alabama since 1841. She was converted at a Camp-meeting, on the eastern shore of Maryland, under the preaching of the Rev. George Cookman, and continued to enjoy religion from that time until her death. For many years she was alone in her profession, but by and by saw her prayers answered in the conversion of her husband and two daughters, nearly about the same time. She had been greatly indulged from a child by fond parents, nor was ever subject to restraint, yet from natural bent she was methodical, and was most remarkable for system in all she did; her days and hours had their appropriate employments, and each work was allowed to consume only its proper measure of time. From this order nothing moved her: the arrival of her children and grandchildren upon a visit after long separation, nor any other event, changed the rule of her living. Wherever she might be, away from home, she settled at once into her regular ways. So that, though a very busy and finished housewife, she always had time enough to read the Scriptures and for private devotion. The same hour every day found her in the rocking chair with the Bible open before her. She had her week-day readings and her Sabbath-day readings.

She was a most devoted wife and mother, always forecasting and anxious; yet she did not lose sight of that Providence which is cognizant of everything, but cultivated more than is common with Christians, a grateful spirit to the Giver of all good. Her letters abound with expressions of gratitude. She writes just a month before her death, "I feel He has been very gracious to you and to us, thus far. Truly we do praise his Holy name, and I hope to praise him more and serve him better. I was rejoiced to hear all our dear pets were in the way to recover."

She was scarcely less devoted to her Church; a regular attendant upon preaching and class meetings; a warm friend to Methodist Ministers, and an ardent admirer of Methodism and its peculiarities.

She knew that she was dying during the whole day before the evening on which she died, and had her senses to the last. When first told of her extreme illness, she was engaged for some minutes in prayer, and soon broke forth in ejaculations of praise to God. Being asked at a later period if she was resigned, she replied firmly, "Yes, the Lord is with me! sweet Jesus is with me." From that time, to the time of her death, she frequently raised her hands, evidently in praise to God. She kept her eyes closed, but her lips moved, and her hands were raised in the attitude of prayer. She gave directions about her interment; sent messages of love and exhortation to her children; had all her servants called in, and exhorted each by name to serve the Lord and prepare to meet her in Heaven. Just before she died, she commenced praising the Lord and said she knew there was a reality in religion, that the Lord was good, and so continued as long as she could utter. At the very last, she opened her eyes and looked clear and bright; her countenance, before contracted by pain, changed, became calm, a smile lighted up her face, then she closed her eyes, composed her features, laid her hands across upon her heart, and so fell asleep in Jesus.

PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 5.—The President commenced his message by saying that the interest with which the people look to the assembling of Congress, and the fulfillment on that occasion of the duty imposed on a new President, are the least evidences of their capacity for self-government.

To realize the hopes of the founders of the Government, the sole reliance of the confederacy, is on the justice and intelligence of the masses.

The country has abundant cause for thankfulness to God, for the many mercies showered upon the nation.

Recognising the wisdom of absolute religious toleration, no secure reliance can be placed upon any apparent progress, unless sustained by national integrity, resting upon the truth of Revelation.

Diplomatic relations with foreign powers have undergone no change during the past year. Those now pending, of a disturbing character, will probably be amicably adjusted.

With regard to the Fishery question, the President says the United States never recognized the construction of the treaty of 1818; and with a view of extending the rights of American fishermen, and regulating the trade between the United States and British America, negotiations had been opened with a fair prospect of favorable results.

With regard to the controversy on the affairs of Central America, the Government of Great Britain proposes an amicable arrangement, and our Minister at London has consequently been instructed to enter into negotiations on that subject.

The President represents it as desirable that the boundary line between the United States and British America, in North America, be surveyed and marked.

Our relations with France continue friendly, and a treaty of commerce and navigation is in progress.

With regard to Cuba, the President says, that he is happy to announce that since last Congress, no unauthorized expeditions have been fitted out from the United States. Should any such movements be undertaken, he will repress them by all the means in his power.

The President refers to several annoying occurrences having taken place at Havana between our citizens and Spanish subjects, and says that prompt redress cannot be obtained, because diplomatic intercourse is not allowed between the American Consul and the Captain-General of Cuba.

The Spanish Government has hitherto refused a remedy in this matter, but our Minister at Madrid has been instructed to renew applications for one. The remedy proposed to avoid the vexation and delay attending these cases, is to provide for a direct appeal for redress from the American Consul to the Captain-General.

The President recommends the prompt adjustment with Spain, of the claim for losses in the case of the schooner Arrogant.

Concerning the case of Martin Koszta, the President recapitulates the facts as set forth in Mr. Marcy's letter, and says that the principles therein maintained will be enforced whenever a proper occasion may arise.

Our Commissioner in Chile has availed himself of the occasions recently presented, to extend our commercial relations with that and other Asiatic nations.

The arrival of Perry's expedition at Japan is referred to, but the President says he has not ascertained what effect it has had upon the Emperor.

He refers to the dispute with Mexico with regard to the Mesilla Valley, and says that the former Commissioner of the United States committed an error in running the boundary line. This line was not binding upon the United States, but as the Government of Mexico takes a different view of the matter, our Minister at Mexico has been instructed to negotiate on that and other questions of magnitude between the two nations. These are still pending, and he is not informed what progress has been made in them, but he trusts that they will result in arrangements mutually satisfactory, as being made in a spirit of liberality and friendship.

Our Minister to Central America has been received in a friendly manner.

Our Minister in Brazil has been instructed to induce that government to relax its restricted policy with regard to the navigation of the Amazon and Paraguay rivers. The Argentine Confederation have opened their ports on those rivers, and treaties on that subject will be laid before the Senate.

Measures have been taken to remove the difficulties in procuring guano, and it is believed that the Peruvian Government will make indemnity for the outrages committed by its officers of the Chincha Islands.

The President refers to the expansion in territorial extent, and the increased happiness and prosperity of the country.

He endorses the doctrine of State Rights, and the strict limitation of the powers of the Federal Government.

He says that the revenue of the United States is increasing beyond the interest on the prospective wants of the country. For the year ending June 30, 1853, the revenue amounted to nearly fifty-nine millions of dollars from customs, and two and a half millions from lands. The expenditures, exclusive of payments on account of the public debts, have been forty-three and a half millions, and a balance was left on hand of thirty-two and a half millions, including the balance on hand, June 30, 1853.

The President recommends that this large surplus be applied, first to the payment of the public debt, and secondly that means be devised to effect a gradual reduction of the revenue. The first, he says, is already provided for, and the public debt, which now amounts to fifty-six and a half millions of dollars, is in course of extinguishment. With regard to the second, he recommends the adoption of the plans contained in the report of the Secretary of the Treasury, for reducing the duties on certain articles, and adding to the Free List articles entering into manufactures, and not largely produced in this country.

He suggests improvements in the modes of selling the public accounts, and the collection of arrearages due from public officers.

The augmentation of the Army and Navy is recommended.

The expenses of the Post-office department for the year have been nearly eight millions, and the receipts nearly six millions of dollars, leaving a deficiency of two millions. The great cause of this deficiency is the enormous rates for transportation of the mails, charged by railroad companies. The President calls attention to the income and expenditures of the mail steamers. He considers the subject to demand prompt action on the part of Congress.

The President refers to numerous frauds that have been discovered to have been perpetrated in the Pension Bureau, and asks for a speedy remedy by law.

He comments at some length on the present public land system. The profits from the sale of lands up to June 30, 1853, amounted to fifty-three and a quarter million of dollars. He recommends the extension of the land system over the territories of Utah and New Mexico. Some modifications of the laws is also recommended in favor of actual settlers, and the extension of the pre-emption principle.

The President maintains the power of Congress to construct roads within the territories, and he thinks grants of lands for their construction should be made under proper circumstances.

He recommends the enlargement and modification of the judiciary system, as under the present organization it is confessedly inadequate to the duties devolving upon it.

He recommends the immediate organization of the Smithsonian Institute upon certain prescribed terms.

He takes strong grounds against internal improvements by the Federal Government, and asks, if the policy were once settled against granting appropriations by the General Government for local improvements for the benefit of commerce, would not such, localities by means clearly legitimate and proper, raise the requisite funds for themselves? He hopes that this question will be deliberately reconsidered, and a plan matured to promote the permanent interests of the country. He thinks that whenever any constructions are being made by the General Government, the right to the soil should be first secured.

Referring to the means of affording communication between States on the opposite side of the Rocky Mountains, the President maintains that it is in the power of the Federal Government to construct military roads and improve harbors of refuge.

He thinks, however, that it is of doubtful power, and more than doubtful propriety, for the General Government to administer the affairs of a railroad or a canal, and that therefore its connection with such should be incidental rather than primary. He says that no grandeur of an enterprise, or inducement bearing promises of popular favor will lead him to disregard the limits of the Constitution.

The President refers to the settlement of the exciting questions that had disturbed the country, by the Compromise of 1850, as giving new vigor to our institutions and contributing effectually to the repose of the country. He urges fidelity to the constitutional rights of the States, and avoidance of agitation, and winds up by a general review of the past and prospective advances of our country. He again urges strict adherence to the Constitution, and forbearance from the exercise of doubtful powers, as the only means of maintaining our national cohesion. The cardinal virtues of public frugality and official integrity should be cultivated, and a wise economy introduced into the administration of affairs. He refers in appropriate terms to the death of Vice President King, and concludes by soliciting the warm co-operation of the co-ordinate branches of the Government in the discharge of his duties.

THE VIRTUE OF LAUGHTER.—There is reckless laughter, too; there is heartless laughter; but when one can give, and does give, a clear, honest laugh, or in any way shows a genial sympathy, there is still left something of the innocence of nature and the pulse of goodness. It is true, there are those, the latenalty of whose inner life, and the circumstances of whose lot, may repulse tumultuous joy; yet there is an attractiveness in them, as though that which in others breaks out in laughter, were distilled into spiritual serenity, and issues forth now and then in the sun burst of a smile.

THE INDIANS IN TEXAS.—The Indians are rapidly disappearing from Texas. Fifty years ago the haughty Spaniards of San Antonio were fain to hold the stirrups of the Indian chiefs as they mounted their wild coursers in the heart of the city. Now these proud denizens of the desert appear in the streets of our towns to beg for food.

"Alas for them! their day is o'er,
Their Regs are out from shore to shore;
No more for them the wild deer bounds—
The plow is on their hunting grounds;
The pale maid's axe rings thro' their woods,
The pale man's sail skims o'er their floods."

Already the rangers of the frontier begin to regret the disappearance of their barbarous foes. The regret is, however, something like that of Alexander, for more people to conquer, or of the hunter at the disappearance of his favorite game. [San Antonio Ledger.

15 Days Later from California.

By the arrival of the steamship El Dorado yesterday afternoon we have the [illegible] mails, containing fifteen days later intelligence from [illegible] to the 16th inst.

The overland [illegible] are nothing to note. The following summary is from the San Francisco Herald of the [illegible]

[illegible] of the Governor [illegible] in relation to the [illegible] of the Mexican [illegible] to cross the [illegible] Indians. Two expeditions [illegible] the border in San Francisco are now fitting out in the State, the destination of one of which is Peru and of the other Ecuador. The Peruvian company is organizing under the auspices of the Consul of that country, and with the sanction of that Government. Inducements to the formation of bands and mining privileges are held out to the company, which have proved sufficiently strong to attract quite a number of citizens into the organization, although rumor has made their numbers greatly exaggerated. The sailing of the expedition has not yet been fixed at any definite period, but when it does leave, its movements will be regarded with interest as the pioneer of the enterprise. Of the Ecuadorean company much less is known. Its proceedings have been in a great measure kept secret, and its designs are said to be anything but friendly towards the existing Government of that country. It is rumored that the movement is simply a branch of another Flores expedition; that the agents of that general are now in the city of San Francisco, and have held out the most brilliant inducements to adventurous young men to join the expedition. The design of Flores is said to be to obtain an auxiliary force of two thousand thoroughly armed and equipped, with which, in addition to the forces he may be enabled to raise in South America, his success against the existing Government is regarded as certain. To such Americans as enlist under his banner, the highest positions in the army, and, should the [illegible] prove successful, to the [illegible] lands in the country are promised. A number of vessels which had visited the Northern Pacific was good, and it is estimated that the average yield to each vessel will be 800 barrels of oil. Those which cruised in the Arctic Ocean have met with a very poor return.

TWO WEEKS LATER FROM THE SOCIETY ISLANDS.—Advices have been received at San Francisco to Sept. 18, a fortnight later than previous advices. No mention is made of the reported insurrection of the natives of Huahine.

Governor Page had been making a tour of the Islands, and had just returned to Papeete.

The French fleet in the harbor consisted of the frigate Forte, the steam corvette Prony, and the corvette Sarcelle.

The French ship Dombiat had been repaired and reshipped her cargo. The French ship Cachalot was to sail for Havre on the 22d September.

Later from Texas.

By the arrival of the steamship Louisiana at this port we have received Galveston papers to the 2d inst.

The News says the health of Galveston never was better than at present. Not a single case of sickness was to be heard of. Many building were going up and many improvements were going on rapidly. The News says that the improvements which have been recently completed or soon will be, cannot amount to less than $250,000.

The Austin State Gazette of the 29th has the following paragraphs:

Governor P. H. Bell has resigned the office of Governor of Texas, and the duties of that station have thereby devolved upon our present Lieutenant Governor, J. W. Henderson, by whom they will be discharged until the 21st December.

Gen. A. Sidney Johnson, who returned on Sunday evening last, from his periodical trip to the forts on the upper waters of the Brazos and Trinity, informs us that the Indians are quiet on that part of our frontier, at present.

In noticing the proceedings in the Legislature, the Onondaga has the following paragraph in relation to the Pacific Railroad:

The Committee on Internal Improvements of the Senate have given the bill for the construction of the Mississippi and Pacific Railroad a thorough examination, and although not yet reported, we are informed have come to the following conclusions: To extend the time for the construction of the first fifty miles to eighteen months. To reserve from location a belt of country sixty miles in width; to leave open and undetermined the point at which it shall enter the eastern boundary of the State, but to bear in such direction from where it does enter as to reach the 32d degree of north latitude in the vicinity of the Trinity. They recommend the striking out of the 11th, 12th, 13th and 14th sections, as their substance is provided for in the general railroad law of the State. The principal difficulty is now the fixing the point at which the road shall cross the Trinity river. Twenty instead of sixteen sections of land to the mile are given to the company who shall open the road.

Referring, to another place, to the Internal Improvement Committee of the House, the Gazette says:

Their action on the Pacific Road was characterised by promptitude, agreeing to a grant of twenty-five sections per mile; the road to enter the State east north of Fulton, Arkansas, and to cross the Trinity river near the 32d degree of north latitude, and thence to pursue the nearest practicable route on that parallel.

THE NEWS BY THE HUMBOLDT.

LIVERPOOL MARKETS.

NEW YORK, Dec. 6.—The accounts by the Humboldt state that the Liverpool cotton market was quiet. The sales of Monday, the 21st Nov., were 6000 bales at unchanged prices. On the 22d barely 4000 bales were sold, the market closing with heaviness, but without any actual decline. Flour was more freely offered at previous rates.

MONEY AND TRADE.

Trade at Manchester was dull; the market reported flat. Money was rather easier.

GENERAL NEWS.

DEATH OF THE QUEEN OF PORTUGAL.—Donna Maria, Queen of Portugal, died on the 15th of November, in child-bed. The King was immediately declared Regent until the young Prince should attain his majority. Lisbon was tranquil.

FRANCE.—Louis Napoleon has issued a decree reducing the duty on coal to 50 centimes, and on iron 18 centimes.

The Supreme Court at Paris has decided that the Government has a right to open foreign correspondence entrusted to the Post-office.

At Lyons several persons have been arrested for posting revolutionary placards about the streets complaining of the want of work and the prevailing dearness of bread. The elements of revolution have appeared at several places in France.

THE EASTERN WAR.

The lateness of the season is the reason assigned for the retirement of the Turkish army across the Danube.

The Russian fleet has gone into winter quarters.

RUSSIAN PORTS OPENED.

The Emperor of Russia has issued a decree, opening the port of Odessa to all nations.

RUSSIA AND ENGLAND.

It was reported that the Russian Ambassador at the Court of London had been ordered to demand his passport.

AUSTRIA AND PRUSSIA.

The Governments of Austria and Prussia have given assurances of their neutrality in the war between Russia and Turkey.

HOSTILITIES.—A dispatch from Vienna, dated November 22, states that the Georgians had defeated the Russian troops.

THE ARMIES ON THE DANUBE.—The very latest accounts from the Danube report that the Russian troops were marching on Kalafat, and the Turks were sending reinforcements to that place. Frequent skirmishes were occurring between the outposts of the two armies.

EASTERN AFFAIRS.

There was no doubt that some grand movement was in contemplation by Omer Pasha or his Government, and which the re-passage of the Danube served to mask.

The Russians were sending their sick and wounded to a post on the Arabian borders, the hospitals in Moldavia and Wallachia not affording sufficient room for them.

The Liverpool papers of the day of the Europa's departure contained accounts that would indicate a good deal of fighting between the advanced posts of the two armies, but no important result had been reported. Cannonading had been heard in various directions, and from this fact battles were manufactured for the benefit of stock-jobbers.

Reinforcements were hurrying to the Russian army, and additional levies continued to arrive at the Turkish camp. It was generally understood that if the season would permit operations of magnitude, both parties would soon be in a position to carry them out.

A general attack was expected to be made immediately on the Russians.

FRANCE.

Louis Napoleon especially warns Austria against giving refuge to armed Russians. Such an act he says he will consider a declaration of war.

The correspondents of the London papers state that the Government was gathering large bodies of troops between Strasburg and Marseilles, and that it was able to send off one hundred thousand men at five days' notice.

CONGRESSIONAL—PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 6.—Both Houses of Congress met at noon to-day, and appointed a committee to inform the President of their organization, etc. At ten minutes before one o'clock, the President's Message was handed in by Mr. Sidney Webster, Private Secretary, and read. The Message and accompanying documents were ordered to be printed, with ten thousand additional copies. A bill was then passed to indemnify the State of Indiana for certain lands.

ORGANIZATION OF CONGRESS.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 5.—Congress met to-day, at noon, in the House of Representatives 217 members were present. After some preliminary proceedings the House went into an election for officers. On balloting for Speaker Lynn Boyd had 143 votes, and was duly elected. John W. Forney was elected clerk.

The Senate organized with Mr. Atchison, President pro tem., in the chair. The credentials of Messrs. Johnson of Arkansas, Bell of Tennessee, and Allen of Rhode Island were presented. Mr. Benjamin, of Louisiana, announced the election of John Slidell as Senator from Louisiana in place of Mr. Soulé. Mr. Slidell and the other new members were then sworn and took their seats.

Committees were appointed to wait upon the President of the United States to inform him of the organization, and that the two houses were ready to receive a message from him.

General Intelligence.

LOUISIANA.—The Alexandria Democrat of the 30th ult. says: The wire of the Texas and Red River Telegraph Company was stretched across the river at this place on Monday, and the men who are wiring the lines are working on towards Natchitoches and Shreveport. The wires are now up from Alexandria to within twenty miles of Natches, and it is supposed we shall have dispatches at this point in about ten days. Some of those who have subscribed to the enterprise, who are at a distance, may not be aware, that finding the line between Alexandria and New Orleans could not be completed before winter on account of the fever, the contractors set once come forward, and constructed, with the assistance of subscriptions at Harrisonburg, the wire from this to Natchez, so that their friends in Texas and Red River should not fall of having telegraphic connection for their winter business.

REGISTER OF THE LAND OFFICE.—The great case of L. J. Sligo vs. Crenshaw, claiming the post of Register of the Land Office, was decided by the Supreme Court on Monday, in favor of the relator, Mr. Sligo. The determination of this case settles the right of the Governor to appoint to several other State offices, which have for some months been in the occupancy of persons claiming to hold them by appointment of the present Governor's predecessor.

THE SUGAR CROP IN EAST FELICIANA PARISH.—The Clinton Whig says: "From every section of the parish we hear the most cheering accounts of the yield on the sugar plantations. The cane is represented as far better than it was last season. The Rev. James D. Smith, the only planter east of Clinton who has given sugar-making a fair rub and fair trial, is making a splendid crop. In evidence of the capacity of our eastern lands to produce the sugar cane, he has sent us a stalk of cane measuring nine feet, with seventeen long and perfectly matured joints. We doubt whether the alluvial bottoms of the Mississippi can produce a finer specimen."

EMIGRATION AND SUFFERING.—The New York Express says: In consequence of the sickness and dreadful mortality on board ships from England, Sporford & Tileston have given directions to their agents at Liverpool, to decline taking any passengers (emigrants) on board their largest ships—though they have ships there now capable of conveying a thousand passengers. They will forgo any profits, rather than take a single passenger while the cholera exists and makes such dreadful havoc as was on board the Calhoun, Constellation, etc. Other ship owners, we understand, have sent the same orders.

THE FEVER AT SHREVEPORT.—The Democrat of the 26th says: The epidemic is still here, but in a mitigated form. We heard of three new cases yesterday, and unless there is a change in the weather it is possible that other cases may still occur. The whole number of deaths in Shreveport from the 2d of September to date is one hundred and sixty-five.

ACCIDENT TO THE HUMBOLDT.—During the last passage of the steamer Humboldt across the Atlantic, she was delayed two days by breaking a crank-pin, during a good portion of which time she was rolling about in the sea. The seas were so high that the engineer had great difficulty in making the repairs. The difficulty was in starting the pin which had got wedged in.

THE THIRTY-THIRD CONGRESS.—Congress, which assembles to-day, will be composed as follows: Senate—37 democrats, 21 whigs, 3 vacancies, the latter being in Mississippi, North Carolina, Maine and New Hampshire. House of Representatives—democrats 150, whigs 71, free-soil 3.

YELLOW FEVER AT NEWPORT, ELA.—We learn from the Newport Times that the yellow fever continues to rage in that town without abatement. Four more of the residents of that town had died during the week ending the 23d ult.

COTTON FACTORY.—The Columbus (Miss.) Argus says a project has recently been agitated to build a cotton manufactory in that city. It is proposed to raise a capital of $30,000, in shares of $100 each. We are gratified to learn that 220 shares have already been subscribed, and that there is not the least doubt of raising the remainder.

THE POTATO TRADE.—The potato trade this season, says the Louisville Courier, has been much lighter than last, and we learn that the shipments to New Orleans this season, up to the present time, have not exceeded 30,000 barrels. This is but barely half the shipments of last season, though there is a great quantity here on storage awaiting shipment. The prevailing prices at present are $1 50 to $1 75 per barrel.

NEW TELEGRAPH MACHINE.—The Louisville Courier says an attorney at Rising Sun, Ind., by the name of Hayden has invented a very simple machine, by which any child who knows his A B C's can send dispatches with perfect accuracy. There is no possible chance of a mistake being made, which is an end so much desired in this important science. Steps have been taken to secure a patent, and the machine must necessarily come into immediate use. It will lessen the expense of telegraphing fifty per cent.

THE THREE CRYSTAL PALACES.—The London Crystal Palace was 1851 feet in length 455 feet in breadth, and covered between eighteen and nineteen acres. The frontage for goods, according to Prince Albert's report, was over two miles. The Dublin Crystal Palace is 425 feet in breadth, and 470 feet in length. From the ground to the top of the central dome it is 206 feet in height. The total area of the New York Crystal Palace is [illegible] square feet, or five and three-fourths acres [illegible] breath is 316 feet.

GOLD.—The Richmond Dispatch says it was exhibited two specimens of gold from the State Hill and Walnut Grove Gold Mines. They were apparently of the very finest quality—amounting to about $20 00. They were in the hands of Mr. Seddles, the agent of the companies who was taking them North for coinage. He thinks there is no use in going to California as long as we have such mines at home as these. The superintends and others are in successful operation.

TELEGRAPHIC ARRANGEMENTS.—The Baltimore and New Orleans Telegraph Company has appointed Samuel Lowell, for several years connected with the Magnetic Telegraph Company, Sun Iron Building, Chief Operator for the line in New Orleans. The Western Telegraphic Company has appointed their Wm. M. Hoge, Superintendent of the line (Balt. Sun.

There were 188 deaths in Philadelphia for the week ending the 26th. This is a very small rate of mortality, and contrasts strongly with those of other American cities.

The ship New World, from Liverpool, and the ship George Hulbert, from Hyres, arrived at New York on the 24th. Each had lost 75 passengers on the voyage from cholera.

The collection in the churches in Brooklyn and New York on Sunday, the 27th, in aid of the sufferers of the fire of the American Presbyterian of New School, amounted to $20,000.

Among the principal articles exported from Baltimore for the week ending the 26th, were 19,399 barrels of flour, 995 barrels corn meal, 6421 bushels wheat, 1600 bushels corn, and 1271 hogsheads of tobacco.

JEWISH CEREMONIES

MR EDITOR. When I closed my articles on Jewish Ceremonies last summer, you had the kindness of soliciting both in your own behalf and that of your readers, a few notices on the Festivals and Fasts of the Jews. Taking it for granted that you are still of the same mind, I now re-open our connection by transmitting to you my first instalment, which I am afraid is not very interesting. I am hope, however, that its successors may prove more so. I resign to treat the various times and seasons of the Jewish Calendar in their regular order, and, as before, shall confine myself chiefly to the ceremonies and customs observed by the European Jews of the present day in their celebration of them. I shall begin with the

NEW MOONS.

In Numbers x. : 10, I think we find the earliest intimation of "New Moons" as being set apart, among the "solemn days." They are frequently mentioned afterwards, both in the historical and prophetical books of the Old Testament. In Numbers xxviii. 11, special sacrifices are ordained for the beginning of every month. In later days, when the spirit of the religious institutions of the Hebrews had become lost in the observance of the latter, we find them denounced, together with all their other empty ceremonies, by Joshua (x : 13, 14 and those) by Hosea, and even by St Paul, who reproaches the Galatians (iv : 10) with observing "days and months."

By "New Moon" now, is understood the first day of the month: and on the morning of the day previous, the pious Jew will fast till noon, when a select congregation of devotees—never very numerous—meet at the Synagogue, and recite various penitential hymns and prayers, after every one of which the attributes of the Diety, as proclaimed in Exodus xxxiv. : 6, are repeated in a very fervent and devout manner. This service borrows the form, the chanting recitative, and, in part, the prayers of the Day of Atonement, whenever it has received the name of Yom Kippur Katon—"little day of atonement." This is the only day the Jews go to the Synagogue at the hour of noon. The service lasts from an hour to an hour and a half, after which they may go home and break their fast, though some of the more pious—rare cases however—fast all day. Neither on this day, the eve of New Moon, nor on the following day or days (for the New Moon consists sometimes of one, and sometimes of two days,) is there any interruption in the ordinary transaction of life, and for this reason it may be called a "semi-festival"—a name I shall have frequent occasion to use in the course of these sketches.

In the liturgy of the New Moon service, the Hallelujah Psalms are added, together with numerous prayers for a happy and frequent recurrence of this festive season. In ten of the sacrifice ordained for this day, the modern Jews content themselves with reading the respective passages from the Pentateuch, enjoining them. This is the case on work-days, as well as on Sabbaths and festivals. But there is one prayer used on New Moons and festivals, in the Synagogue and in the grace after meat, which deserves particular mention, inasmuch as it relates to the great point of difference between Jews and Christians. I allude, of course, to the advent of the Messiah. It this prayer, among other petitions, are the following: "Be mindful of Messiah, the son of David Thy servant, of Jerusalem Thy holy city, and of Thy whole people of Israel," &c. This prayer is oft-repeated, but I fear little considered or understood, as is too apt to be the case in the use of all formulas, and more especially so, if they are composed in a dead, or at most but partly understood language. How strange that an enlightened nation should be satisfied in the nineteenth century, blindly to follow the prescriptions made by the ignorant, prejudiced, and superstitious rabbins of the Middle Ages! And this too, with all the living proofs of Christianity constantly before their eyes! How long, O Lord, how long!

It may not be deemed out of place here to note the vicissitude in which the Rationalistic Rabbies of Germany—a species of the "New Light" genus—display the obnoxious word Messiah in their liturgies. I have now one before me, arranged and translated by Dr Maier, of Stuttgart, printed in Hebrew and German. The dogs not yet dare so far to break in upon old forms as to omit this prayer for the Messiah altogether, substituting the original, and in a parallel column gives a very free translation. He, as well as his school, reject the belief in a personal Messiah, the restoration of the Jews, and some other dogmas, held by the mass of the Hebrew people: and he generalizes the above passage into "Remember our salvation and happiness."

Out of the Synagogue, there are scarce any special ceremonies or customs for the New Moons. Here and there I have met an orthodox matron, who always honored the day by having a stately Hutzikhopf, a dainty peculiar to the Hebrew cuisine, to grace the festive board; for as an extra prayer must be added to the inordinately long grace after meals, she thinks it but just that the bill of fare should be lengthened in the same ratio.

Among the more primitive classes of continental Jews it was the custom, in my days, and I suppose is still, for pupils to present their teacher with various gratuities on New Moons, in money as well as in sundry other articles: all of which were, of course, thankfully received, as the teachers generally are but very poorly compensated for their arduous services.

CONSECRATION OF THE MOON.

This takes place monthly, when the moon becomes full: when the congregation either jointly after evening service, or several individuals privately, take candles and prayer books, and go out in the open air, where they have a full view of the moon. Here they first praise the Creator of the starry heavens, and enumerate, in good Hebrew, some of His most wonderful works: then they proceed in a less praiseworthy, and more cabalistic manner, thus to address the moon three times: "Blessed be thy Creator, thy Maker, thy Former, thy Author!" "As I leap towards thee, and cannot touch thee, so shall all my enemies be unable to touch me to my injury." On saying the word "leap," they make a faint attempt at jumping, not proceeding further, however than to stand upon tiptoe for a minute, and looking towards the moon. Then comes the first part of Ex. xxxiv. 10, repeated three times both forward and backwards. Then, "May David, king of Israel live forever," is repeated three times: also "Peace be with you," "with you be peace." This last salutation and answer is interchanged three times between each worshipper and his neighbor. The pride of repetition of all these passages as well as some other cabalistic jargon which I forbear transcribing, are supposed to contain great mysteries which arcana profanely seems to be disposed to have in their unrefined mysteriousness, and meanwhile they are content to follow the beaten track, however absurd that be. This consecration must take place before the wane of the moon to count it, would be a flagrant transgression.

There is also a provision in the liturgy for a consecration of the sun. How often this takes place, I do not remember at present but I know it is only once in many years.

THE PRIEST, MULLEN.

The Lancashire Advertiser of October 29, has been handed to us by an Irish friend whose keen eye picked out the following extract. It is part of a lecture, on the "Evangelization of Ireland," delivered in that place the week before. "The priest, named Mullen," is well known to readers. We had heard of this letter of his but now have its specific nature and date quoted on the spot. Popery does not relish free air:

The reverend lecturer, who was received with great cheering, commenced by remarking that he had not come there to hold controversy, but to show what had been done, for the evangelization of Ireland. After giving an account of the early history and progress of the work of reformation now carried on in that country, he proceeded to adduce proofs of the effects produced. He said that it is calculated that there are now between 40,000 and 50,000 converts from Romanism in Ireland, who assemble every spring in Dublin, to the number of about 500, is that Popery is everywhere shaken to its foundations. The Dublin Evening Post (a Roman Catholic newspaper) confesses that the "success of the proselytizers is beyond any thing that our worst misgivings could have dreamt of." The Nation newspaper has stated that "Ireland is ceasing to be a Roman Catholic country, and other Romish authorities express their fear that "Christianity will soon be swept from the shores of the island." Nor must we estimate the fruits of the movement merely by the 50,000 actual converts now in Ireland for a priest of the name of Mullen wrote from America in the Tablet of the 10th April, 1852, imploring the Irish priests not to let any more of the people emigrate, as they nearly all turned Protestants on their arrival there, the Church of Rome having lost, as he proves by facts and figures, 2,000,000 of her members in the United States during the last twenty-seven years including the emigrants, who ought to have been Catholics. In fact, the Irish are not running away so much from famine as from their priests. Thousands of them are disgusted with Popery, and rather than face persecution at home they emigrate. A statement made by the Rev. A. P. Hanlon, of Mountshannon vicarage, in Ireland, elucidates and confirms these assertions. Mr. Hanlon was waited upon by an Irishman who wished to know if the names of the converts were mentioned in Priest Mullen's letter, for if they were, his son's name would be amongst them, for he had stated when he left home, that if he was once in America, he would never go to mass again: and if his son's name was down, the Irishman said, he, for his son's sake, would be turned out of his farm and made a "holy show" of in the parish. This man expected his son to send for him next year, and he stated that when he had emigrated, he and his family would become Protestants. It is no uncommon thing for those who have settled in America to send money to their friends in Ireland to bring them over, accompanied by the strict injunction to bring no priests with them, which the said priests, finding their occupation gone at home, have often been anxious to do. Their priests power, however, though comparatively broken, is still very great over those who despising them at heart, are compelled to submit to them not being able to make up their minds to incur persecution, by openly becoming converts. Were it not for this evident opposition to the converts would never be almost entirely unheard of, as the whole mind of Ireland has begun to look so favorably to Protestantism. However the infidel may laugh at the credulity of the people that their priests are only men, and not the best of men either, or however valuable may have been the labors of the British society in disseminating a knowledge of the Scriptures: the movement is too universal to be attributed to anything but the direct interposition of God—an interposition which is manifest in combining at the same time just the three things which were necessary humanly speaking, for the evangelization of Ireland: the preparing of the hearts of the people to listen and enquire, the arousing of the Irish clergy to do battle with Romanism, and the awakening of English christians to see the necessity of assisting their brethren in the holy warfare. As to the denial which some have made of the fierce persecution endured by the converts, the fact has been often proved in courts of justice, may yet be published, and gloried in and instigated by the Popish press, to require any proof here.

Sabbath Morning.

Who has not felt the tranquilizing influence of the Sabbath morn? Nature seems to sympathize with the moral associations of the scene. On other days her voice is almost drowned amid the air and bustle of the world: but when the wheels of mammon's car are arrested, and their thunder is not heard, the waves forth their soothing language, which falls on the heart like Elian music: it stills the passions, and to awaken its finer sensibilities. The voice of nature is the voice of God. He who speaks in the sanctuary of redemption by the blood of Jesus speaks from the lush and fragrance of the morning, of the vast and varied gifts of His providence. To commune with nature, and with God, we must imitate David and awake early.

The resurrection of Jesus took place before the dawn. Ere the sun was up one of his faithful followers repaired to the sepulchre. She went in the twilling twilight to look up to the end of Jesus. She found it unsealed and empty and wondered what had become of her Lord. As she wept, a voice addressed her, at first in a stranger's tone of interest, under the excitement of her sudden revelation might overpower her mind. Even that voice was changed, and the well-remembered tones told her that it was her risen Master. Did Mary find her Redeemer at early dawn? and shall we presume to expect his presence if we do not go away in guilty slumbers that portion of sacred time? No, rather let us fly to the sepulchre and see amid the shadows of the morning the breaking beams of the Sun of Righteousness. Let us gather the spiritual manna before the sun is up, and feed upon it ere we refresh ourselves on the food that perisheth. How would I complain of dull Sabbaths or wandering thoughts or tedious services were they to secure for the purpose of private devotion the morning of the Sabbath. A sacred impulse would be obtained which, like a favoring gale, would waft the soul onward to its rest.

Until you calm and improve the Sabbath morning, you need not expect to experience the full advantage of the blessed day. From other days you can awake early to serve the world, and on the Lord's day you take the liberty to indulge the flesh. Be assured the Sabbath will not ordinarily prove to you a delight nor will it bless upon you with edification and peace.

The World's Future

My soul is enlarged and stands erect, as I look down the declivity of years, and see the changes which these young Davids under God will make in all the earth. Countless millions are shortly to awake from the sleep and darkness of a hundred ages to Evil, the day that will never go down. I see the darkness rolling upon itself and passing away from a thousand lands. I see a cloud heavily following, and lay itself over all the earth. I see the nations coming up from the neighborhood of the brutes to the dignity of the sons of God: from the sty in which they have wallowed, to the purity of the divine image. I see the nakedness of the Gospel assuaging their frantic passions, melting down a million contending units into one, silencing the clangour of arms and swelling into life a thousand budding charities which had died under the long winter. I hear the voice of their joy. It swells from the valleys and echoes from the hills. I already hear, on the eastern breeze the songs of new-born nations. I already catch from the western gale the praise of a thousand islands. I ascend the Alps and see the darkness retiring from the papal world. I ascend the Andes and see South America and all the islands of the Pacific, one altar. I ascend the mountains of Thibet, and hear from the plains of China, and from every jungle and pagoda of Hindoostan, the praises of the living God. I see all Asia bowing before Him who, eighteen centuries ago, hung in the midst of them on Calvary. I traverse oceans, and hear from every floating Bethel the songs of the redeemed:

"The dwellers in the vales, and on the rocks,
Shout to each other; and the mountain tops
From distant mountains catch the flying joy.
Till nation after nation taught the strain,
Earth rolls the rapturous hosanna round."

Come, that blessed day! Let my eyes once behold the sight, and then give this worthless body to the worms. [Dr. Griffin.

The Darkened Room.

You have gone, perhaps, into a darkened room on a bright summer day. The shutters were quite closed. When you looked around, what did you see? Nothing. If you did not know what it contained, you might fancy it full of beautiful pictures and rich furniture, or the room might be empty and desolate. There might even be a thief lurking in the corner, waiting to rob the house. Still all was dark and dismal to you. But if you opened the shutter, so as to let in the smallest ray of sunshine, how clear did all become! All that was there you then saw: the pictures and furniture, it may be, or the dusty walls, the cobwebs, the cracks in the roof. Nay, if you let in through the opened window the full beam of the sun, you saw even the smallest specks of dust floating about in the bright rays.

Dear young friend, what is your heart? Is it not a darkened room? It is full of all that is hateful to the holy sight of God: but having the understanding darkened, you see not the impurities. You think there is much in it that is amiable and good. But oh! if one ray from God were to shine into it, how hateful to yourself would all appear. You would see frightful guilt in all the pride and unbelief and pleasing of the flesh of which you have never once thought before. That guilt is all there now, whether you see it or not. Dear young reader, is it be your earnest cry, "O send forth Thy light and Thy truth!"

PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE.

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

The people of the United States have just reason to congratulate each other and all mankind on the prosperous and happy condition of our country. Every year adds to the demonstration of the capacity of the people, the wisdom of the framers of our political system, and the blessings of the Government. While the different branches of the Government have conformed their action to the Constitution, and have been guided by a proper respect for the rights reserved to the States, the Federal Union has been cherished by the affections of the people. Under its protection, and stimulated by the energy of self-government, the principles of which are thus illustrated, our population, our wealth, our resources, and our means of happiness have been increasing with unexampled rapidity. Our relations with foreign powers have been friendly, and our commerce has been extended to every region where the American name is known. Faithful to the principles of peace, which are consistent with the honor of nations, we have avoided the temptations of war, even when forced upon us by wrongs which could not be tolerated. Our attitude in this respect has been regarded by other nations as a guaranty of our firm adherence to the principles we profess, and has secured for us their confidence and respect. Abundant harvests have been scattered over our land, and peace and plenty crown the labors of the husbandman. Our seaports are filled with the evidences of successful industry, and general prosperity is seen in the country and in the town. Burdened with no national debt, free from pecuniary embarrassments, and blessed with all the elements of material wealth, we are destined to witness, if we are true to ourselves, a growth and development of national power which will place us in the front rank of the nations of the world.

Such is a general view of our condition, as derived from the different departments of the Government. Some of the questions which have arisen in the administration of these departments, and which require the action of Congress, are presented in the reports of the Secretaries, and will receive your careful consideration. Others are of such importance to the country that I deem it my duty to call your attention to them in this communication.

Among the latter, I consider it proper to refer to the present condition of our relations with Mexico. Serious difficulties have existed between the two countries, which, unless timely and judiciously adjusted, may lead to hostilities. Our Minister has been instructed to bring the matters in controversy between them to the notice of the Government of Mexico, and to use his best efforts to effect a speedy and satisfactory settlement of them. He has been directed to propose the terms which, in the opinion of this Government, ought to be accepted, and to employ such arguments as are best calculated to secure their adoption. He has been authorized, if he should find it impossible to obtain a settlement of the questions in dispute, to submit them to the arbitration of a friendly power. He has been instructed, if this mode of settlement should be declined, to return to the United States. Should my anticipations be disappointed, and should he return without having secured a settlement of the questions in dispute, I shall feel it my duty to submit to Congress the propriety of taking redress into our own hands. I do not, however, apprehend that this will be necessary. Our claims are so strong, and the justice of them so manifest, that I cannot believe that they will be resisted by a power which professes to be governed by the principles of right and justice.

Martin Koszta, a Hungarian by birth, came to this country in 1850, and declared his intention to become a citizen of the United States. After residing here nearly two years he visited Turkey. While at Smyrna he was forcibly seized, taken on board an Austrian brig of war, and carried in the harbor of that place, and there confined in irons, with the avowed design to take him into the dominions of Austria. The Consul at Smyrna, the Captain of the French Consul General at Smyrna, there to remain until he should be disposed of by the mutual agreement of the Governments of the respective European nations at that place. Pursuant to that agreement he has been released, and is now in the United States. The Emperor of Austria has made the conduct of our officers who took part in the transaction a subject of grave complaint. Regarding Koszta as still a subject of Austria, and claiming a right to seize him within the limits of the Turkish Empire, he has demanded of this Government its consent to the surrender of the prisoner, a full approval of the acts of its agents, and satisfaction for the alleged outrage. After a careful consideration of the case, I came to the conclusion that Koszta was seized without legal authority at Smyrna; that he was wrongfully detained on board of the Austrian brig of war that, at the time of his seizure, he was clothed with the nationality of the United States, and that the acts of our officers, under the circumstances of the case, were justifiable, and their conduct has been fully approved by me, and in accordance with the several demands of the Emperor of Austria has been declined.

Recognizing the wisdom of the French principle of absolute religious toleration proclaimed in our fundamental law, and rejoicing in the benign influences which it has exerted upon our social and political condition, I should shrink from a clear duty did I fail to express my deep conviction that we can place no reliance upon the apparent progress, if it be not sustained by moral integrity, resting upon the great truths attested and illustrated by divine revelation. In the midst of our sorrow for the afflicted and suffering, it has been consoling to see how promptly disease made true neighbors of districts and cities separated widely from each other, and cheering to watch the strength of that common bond of brotherhood which carries alike to rich and poor, in all parts of this land, when danger threatens from abroad, or calamity impends over us at home.

Our diplomatic relations with foreign powers have undergone no essential change since the commencement of the last Congress. With some of them, questions of a disturbing character are still pending, but there are good reasons to believe that these may be amicably adjusted.

For some years past, Great Britain has claimed the benefit of the construction of the convention of the 20th of April, 1818, in regard to the fisheries on the North eastern coast, to exclude our citizens from some of the fishing grounds to which they freely resorted for nearly a quarter of a century subsequent to the date of the treaty. The United States have never conceded to this construction, but have always claimed for their fishermen all the rights which they had so long enjoyed without molestation. With a view to remove all difficulties on the subject, to extend the rights of our fishermen beyond the limits fixed by the convention of 1818, and to regulate them between the United States and the British North American provinces, a negotiation has been opened, with a fair prospect of a favorable result. To protect our fishermen in the enjoyment of their rights, and prevent collision between them and British fishermen, it seemed to be expedient to station a naval force in that quarter during the fishing season.

Embarrassing questions have also arisen between the two Governments in regard to Central America. Great Britain has proposed to settle them by a comprehensive arrangement on four Minister at London is instructed to enter into negotiations on that subject.

A commission has existed for the claims of our citizens against Great Britain, and those of British subjects against the United States, organized under the convention of the 8th of February last, is now sitting in London for the transaction of business.

It is in many respects desirable that the boundary line between the United States and the British provinces in the North west, as described in the convention of the 20th of June, 1846, and especially that part which separates the Territory of Washington from the British possessions on the North, should be traced and marked. I therefore press the subject upon your notice.

With France our relations continue on the most friendly footing. The extensive commerce between that nation and the United States, which, it is conceived, might be increased from some unnecessary restrictions, to the mutual advantage of both parties. With a view to this object, some progress has been made in negotiating a treaty of commerce and navigation.

Independent of our valuable trade with Spain, we have important political relations with her growing out of our neighborhood to the Islands of Cuba and Porto Rico. I am happy to announce, that since the last session of Congress attempts have been made by an unauthorized expeditions against the United States, organized in and set on foot within the jurisdiction of Spain, have been suppressed by the prompt and efficient action of the Government of Spain. Should any movement be manifested within its limits, all the means at my command will be vigorously exerted to repress it. Several attempts at currency have taken place at Havana, or in the vicinity: the Island of Cuba, between our citizens and the Spanish authorities. Considering the proximity of that island to our shores, long, as it does, in the track of trade between some of our principal cities and the superior facilities which foreign intercourse, particularly that of the United States, there regarded, for the introduction of such occurrences may well be apprehended. As no diplomatic intercourse is allowed between our Consul at Havana and the Captain General of Cuba, ready explanations cannot be made, or prompt redress afforded, where injury has resulted. All complaint on the part of our citizens under the present arrangement, must be, in the first place, presented to this Government, and then referred to Spain again before they can be acted upon by the Executive of the United States. This circumstance, and the delay incident to the correspondence, must be my apology for not communicating sooner the views of this Government in relation to the recent unfortunate occurrences at Havana.

The Queen of Spain has declined to enter into any such arrangement. This course, under the circumstances, is deeply regretted, for without some arrangement of the kind the evil complained of, between the two countries, may be expected to occasionally interrupt the friendly intercourse which has so long existed between the United States and Spain. Spain again refers to the Government of the United States for information, and possibly may not answer till she has heard from those authorities. Delays of these interesting and vitally important questions are always dangerous. A proposition is now under consideration by the Spanish Government to refer the whole subject in dispute between the two countries to the Queen of Spain, as Queen Regent of Holland, for her decision. Should this proposition be accepted, I shall submit it to the Senate at the present session.

A new branch of commerce, important to the agricultural interests of the United States, has within a few years past been opened with Peru. Notwithstanding the unfavorable depression of guano upon the islands of that country, several cargoes have been experienced in raising the requisite supply. Measures have been taken to remove these difficulties, and to secure a more abundant importation of the article. Unfortunately there has been a serious collision between our citizens who have resorted to the Chincha islands for it and the Peruvian authorities stationed there. Redress for the outrages committed by the latter, was promptly demanded by our Minister at Lima. This subject is now under consideration, and there is reason to believe that Peru is disposed to offer adequate indemnity to the aggrieved parties.

We are thus not only at peace with all foreign nations, but, in regard to all of them, are exempt from any cause of serious disquietude in our domestic relations.

The controversies which have agitated the country heretofore, are passing away with the causes which produced them and the passion which they but awakened; or, if any trace of them remains, it may be reasonably hoped that it will only be preserved in the jealous rivalry of all good citizens to testify their respect for the rights of the States, their devotion to the Union, and their common determination that each one of the States, its institutions, its welfare and its domestic peace shall be held alike sacred under the sacred ægis of the Constitution.

The new league of amity and of mutual confidence and support, into which the people of the Republic have entered, happily affords indications and opportunity for the adoption of a more comprehensive and unembarrassed line of policy and action, as to the great national interests of the country, whether regarded in themselves or in connection with the powers of the civilized world.

The United States have continued gradually and peacefully to expand. The single acquisition of territory, which, how much soever of them may have been questioned, are now universally seen and admitted to have been wise in policy, just in character, and a great accession of strength to the Union, and of advancement of our country, as well as of the human race, in freedom, in prosperity and in happiness. The thirteen States have grown to be thirty-one, with relations reaching to Europe on the one side, and on the other to the distant republics of Asia.

I am deeply sensible of the immense responsibility which the present organization of the Republic and the diversified and multiplied interests developed upon me. The alleviation of which, so far as relates to the immediate conduct of the public business is, first, in my reliance on the wisdom and patriotism of the two Houses of Congress; and, secondly, in the directions afforded me by the principles of public policy, affirmed by our fathers of the epoch of 1798, sanctioned by long experience, and consecrated anew by the overwhelming voice of the people of the United States.

Recurring to these principles, which constitute the organic basis of union, we perceive that, vast as are the functions and duties of the Federal Government, vested in or entrusted to its three great departments, the legislative, executive, and judicial, yet the subsistence power, the popular force, and the large capacities for social and material development exist in the respective States, which, all being at themselves well constituted Republics, as they proceed, so they alone are capable of maintaining and perpetuating the American Union. The Federal Government has its appropriate line of action in the specific and limited powers conferred on it by the Constitution, chiefly as to those things in which the States have a common interest in their relations to one another and to foreign Governments, while the great mass of interests which belong to cultivated men, the ordinary business of life, the sockings of industry, all the diversified personal and domestic affairs of society, rest securely upon the general reserved powers of the people and of the several States. There is the effective democracy of the nation, and there the vital essence of its greatness.

Of the practical consequences which flow from the nature of the Federal Government, the primary one is the duty of administering with integrity and fidelity the high trust reposed in it by the Constitution, especially in the application of the public funds, as drawn by taxation from the people, and appropriated to specific objects by Congress. Happily I have no occasion to suggest any radical changes in the financial policy of the Government. Ours is almost, if not absolutely, the solitary power of christendom having a surplus revenue, drawn immediately from imposts on commerce, and therefore measured by the spontaneous enterprise and increased prosperity of the country, with such indirect relation to agriculture, manufactures, and the products of the earth and sea, as to violate no constitutional doctrine, and to enforce vigorously promote the general welfare. Neither as to the sources of the public treasure, nor as to the manner of keeping and managing it, does any grave controversy now prevail, there being a general acquiescence in the wisdom of the present system.

The report of the Secretary of the Treasury will exhibit in detail the state of the public finances, and the condition of the various branches of the public service administered by that department of the Government.

The revenue of the country, levied almost necessarily on the tax payer, goes on from year to year increasing beyond either the interest or the prospective wants of the Government.

At the close of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1852, there remained in the treasury a balance of fifteen million six hundred and thirty-two thousand one hundred and thirty-six dollars. The public revenue for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1853, amounted to fifty eight million nine hundred and thirty-one thousand eight hundred and sixty five dollars from customs, and two million two hundred and five thousand seven hundred and eight dollars from public lands, and other miscellaneous sources, amounting together to sixty-one million three hundred and thirty seven thousand five hundred and seventy four dollars, while the expenditures for the same period, exclusive of payments on account of the public debt, amounted to forty three million five hundred and fifty four thousand two hundred and sixty-two dollars, leaving a balance of thirty-two million, four hundred and twenty-five thousand, four hundred and forty-seven dollars of receipts above expenditures.

This fact, of increasing surplus in the Treasury, became the subject of anxious consideration at a very early period of my administration and the path of duty in regard to it seemed to be obvious and clear, namely: first to apply the surplus revenue to the discharge of the public debt, so far as it could be judiciously done; and secondly, to devise means for the gradual reduction of the revenue to the standard of the public exigencies.

To these objects the first has been in the course of accomplishment, in a manner and to a degree highly satisfactory. The amount of the public debt, of all kinds, was, the fourth of March, 1853, sixty nine million one hundred and ninety thousand and forty-seven dollars, payments on account of which have been made, since that period, to the amount of twelve million seven hundred and three thousand and one hundred and twenty-nine dollars, leaving unpaid, and in the ordinary course of liquidation, the sum of fifty six million four hundred and eighty six thousand seven hundred and eighteen dollars. These payments, although made at the market prices of the respective classes of stocks, have been effected chiefly, and to the general advantage of the treasury, and have at the same time relieved a good many of the evils they have incidentally inflicted on the money market and on the industrial and commercial pursuits of the country.

[illegible] objects, that of the reduction [illegible] of great importance, and [illegible] with the Secretary of the Treasury, which [illegible] the duties on [illegible] especially [illegible] are not largely, or at all [illegible] country, is commended to your candid and careful consideration.

You will find in the report of the Secretary of the Treasury, also, a prudent proof of the entire adequacy of the present fiscal system to meet all the requirements of the public service, and that, while properly administered, it operates to the advantage of the community in ordinary business relations.

I respectfully ask your attention to sundry suggestions of the improvements in the settlement of accounts, especially as regards the large [illegible] of outstanding arrearages to the Government, and of other retorms in the administrative action of the department, which are indicated by the Secretary; as also to the progress made in the construction of marine hospitals, custom-houses and of a new mint in California and assay office in the city of New York, heretofore provided for by Congress, and also to the eminently successful progress of the Coast Survey, and of the Light-House Board.

Among the other objects meriting your attention will be important recommendations from the Secretaries of War and Navy. I am fully satisfied that the Navy of the United States is not in condition of strength and efficiency commensurate with the magnitude of our commercial and other interests; and commend to your especial attention the suggestions on this subject made by the Secretary of the Navy. I respectfully submit that the Army, which, under our system, as a nucleus around which our volunteer forces of the nation gather in the hour of danger, requires augmentation, or modification, to [illegible] the present extended limits and frontier relations of the country, and the condition of the Indian tribes in the interior of the continent, the necessity of which will appear in the communications of the Secretaries of War and the Interior.

In the administration of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1853, the gross expenditure was seven million one hundred and eighty-two thousand seven hundred and fifty-six dollars, and the gross receipts, during the same period, five million nine hundred and forty-two thousand seven hundred and forty-four dollars—showing that the current revenue failed to meet the current expenses of the department in the sum of two million one hundred and forty-two dollars—the causes which under the present postage system, have led inevitably to this result, are fully explained by the report of the Postmaster General, one great cause being the enormous rates the Department has been compelled to pay for mail service by railroad companies.

The exhibit in the report of the Postmaster General of the income and expenditures by mail steamers, will be found peculiarly interesting, and of a character to demand the immediate action of Congress.

Numerous and flagrant frauds upon the Pension Bureau have been brought to light within the last year, and, in some instances merited punishments inflicted, but, unfortunately, in [illegible] guilty parties have escaped, not through [illegible] want of sufficient evidence to warrant a conviction, but in consequence of the provisions [illegible] limitation in the existing laws.

From the nature of these claims, the remoteness of the tribunals to pass upon them, and the mode in which the proof is, of necessity, furnished, temptations to crime have been greatly stimulated by the obvious difficulties of detection. The defects in the law upon this subject are so apparent, and so fatal to the ends of justice, that your early action relating to it is [illegible] desirable.

During the last fiscal year, nine millions eight hundred and nineteen thousand four hundred and eleven acres of the public lands have been surveyed, and ten millions three hundred and sixty-three thousand eight hundred and ninety-seven acres brought into market. Within the same period, the sales by public purchase and private entry amounted to one million eighty-two thousand four hundred and ninety-five acres, located under military bounty land warrants, six million one hundred and forty two thousand three hundred and sixty acres, located under other certificates, one thousand four hundred and twenty-seven acres, ceded to the States as swamp lands, sixteen million six hundred and eighty-four thousand two hundred and sixty-three acres, selected for railroad and other objects, under act of Congress one million four hundred and twenty seven thousand four hundred and fifty seven acres. Total amount of lands disposed of within the fiscal year, twenty-five million three hundred and forty-six thousand one hundred and ninety two acres; which is an increase in the quantity sold, and located under land warrants and grants, of twelve millions two hundred and thirty one thousand eight hundred and eighteen acres over the fiscal year immediately preceding. The quantity of land sold during the second and third quarters of 1852, was three hundred and thirty-four thousand four hundred and fifty-one acres. The amount received therefor, was six hundred and twenty-three thousand six hundred and eighty-seven dollars. The quantity sold the second and third quarters of the year 1853, was one million six hundred and nine thousand nine hundred and nineteen acres, and the amount received therefor, two millions two hundred and twenty-six thousand eight hundred and seventy-seven dollars.

The whole number of land warrants issued under existing laws, prior to the 30th of September last, was two hundred and sixty-six thousand, at that date, sixty-six thousand one hundred and forty-seven. The quantity of land required to satisfy these outstanding warrants is four million seven hundred and seventy-eight thousand one hundred and twenty acres.

Warrants have been issued to 30th September last, under the act of 11th February, 1847, calling for twelve million eight hundred and seventy-nine thousand two hundred and eighty acres, under acts of September 28, 1850, and March 22, 1852 calling for twelve million five hundred and five thousand three hundred and sixty acres, making a total of twenty-five millions three hundred and eighty four thousand six hundred and forty acres.

It is believed that experience has verified the wisdom and justice of the present system, with regard to the public domain in, in most essential particulars.

You will perceive, from the report of the Secretary of the Interior, that opinions which have often been expressed in relation to the operation of the land system, as not being a source of revenue to the Federal Treasury, were erroneous. The net profits from the sale of the public lands to June 30, 1853, amounted to the sum of fifty-three million two hundred and eighty-nine thousand four hundred and sixty-five dollars.

I recommend the extension of the land system over the territories of Utah and New Mexico, with such modifications as their peculiarities may require.

Regarding our public domain as chiefly valuable to provide homes for the industrious and enterprising, I am not prepared to recommend any essential change in the land system, except by its liberations in favor of the actual settler, and the extension of the pre-emption principle in certain cases, for reasons and on grounds which will be fully developed in the reports to be laid before you.

Congress, representing the proprietors of the territorial domain, and charged especially with the care to disposal of territory belonging to the United States, has, for a long course of years, coming with the Administration of Mr. Jefferson, exercised the power to construct roads within the territories; and there are so many and obvious distinctions between this exercise of power and that of making roads within the States, that the former has never been considered subject to such objections as apply to the latter. And such may now be considered the settled construction of the power of the Federal Government upon the subject.

Numerous applications have been, and no doubt will continue to be, made for grants, in aid of the construction of railways. It is not believed to be within the intent and meaning of the Constitution, that the power to dispose of the public domain, should be used otherwise than might be expected from a prudent proprietor, and, therefore, that grants of land to aid in the construction of roads should be restricted to cases where it would be for the interest of the proprietor, under like circumstances, thus to contribute to the construction of these works. But the practical operation of such grants thus far, in advancing the interests of the States in which the works are located, and at the same time the substantial interests of all

NEW ORLEANS:

Saturday Morning, December 17.

DR. PIERCE.—This venerable, and able minister of Christ, is expected in our city during the early part of January, for the purpose of dedicating the Morean Street Chapel. Due notice will be given of the day set apart for that purpose.

NEW PUBLICATIONS.—McGinnis & Carver, 36 Camp street, have laid upon our table several interesting and valuable works, from the presses of the Harpers, and C. Scribner, New York. We shall notice them in detail in our next issue. We are pleased to notice that our friends, McG. & C., have greatly increased their already well selected stock of books, and we trust our country friends will remember them when they visit this city.

EDITORIAL CORRESPONDENCE.

RED RIVER, Dec. 10, 1853.

MY DEAR W.: Having nothing else to do, I write. The clever little steamboat Piota, Capt. Parker, having brought a company of us to the Falls, at Alexandria, here we are.—Above the Falls, about one mile and a half distant, is the Choctaw, a steamer of shallow capacity, on which we are to be re-shipped for any place between this and Shreveport.

I have passed over the river here in high water, little imagining a low water scene. It roars like a mill-dam. There are two falls, a mile apart. The difference between the water level, above and below, is between six and seven feet. I saw Messrs. Moore & De Russy, engineers, measuring and leveling around this morning. From New Orleans came up with us a New York contractor, who has engaged to clear out the channel. He is to get $18,000 for a channel over these falls sixty feet wide and eight feet deep. How he is to make a spec ont of the contract, I cannot see. By ordi[illegible]sthods it could not be done at that cost. But this is a Yankee. He cleared out that obstruction to New York commerce, known as Hell-gate. This is a small affair in his eyes. The extraordinary method he has before used, and perhaps invented, is to break up the rocks by submarine blasts. The canister is let down to the proper spot, on the face of the rock; if into a cavity, crevice or other natural opening, so much the better. The powder is exploded by electricity—none of your tedious drilling and dangerous match-work.

Strange enough, speaking by ordinary notions, but perfectly agreeing with this simple application of science, low water is not needed for clearing the channel. When there is a considerable depth of water upon the river rock, a heavy charge of powder let down to it and rested upon its surface, will, by the resistance of the water above, blow a hole down as big as a barrel. Into this, another charge is dropped and exploded, and so the bed is soon torn up, and nothing more is to be done but dragging the shivered fragments out of the way. It is plain that the deeper the water is, the greater is the resistence above the blast, and the more effective. When our Yankee friend let me into the modus operandi, I ceased to be astonished at his complacency, as he stroked his red, stubby moustache and surveyed the job, out of which he will doubtless pocket a few thousand. It is said that the plan of explosion will be applied to dislodge some of the ancient snags and rafts that have lain, cross and pile, for years out of mind—the terror of navigators, and a dead stall to dreg boats and civil engineers.

I must not omit mentioning, among the visitory acquaintances which one scrapes up in a cabin, a gentleman of portly bearing and sallow complexion, whom, as everybody called him Doctor, I shall call Doctor. He was one of that sort of looking folk that people intuitively dubb Doctor. Our Doctor was all agog with one idea, which indeed is a great idea, if it be true. It was, that a plan had lately been found out for making oil, pure fine oil out of cotton seed; oil, good as any linseed or olive oil, clear, inodorous, and fit for table use. He showed us, showed us all over and over again, at our request, a vial of it. He said he had five gallons along. The specimen was certainly in its favor. And more, he showed a piece of clean, smooth soap, first rate shaving soap he said. This was made of the glutinous matter, purified from the oil, and expressed with it from the seed. Our friend was eloquent on the enterprise of cotton seed oil and soap, and the result e that must follow this discovery. He gave me, and I noted it down for the readers of the Christian Advocate, the items: One hundred pounds of seed make two gallons of oil and twenty pounds of soap. The cakes left are good for cows.

When reminded that the attempt had often before been made to do this thing, and more than once the discovery proclaimed, our Doctor admitted past failures to put cotton seed to a better use than manuring old fields, pointed out where the failure lay, and claimed the eureka. A factory is to be established in New Orleans. Rotton piles of cotton seed are to be no more seen. Southern lands and labor are to rise, and planters will no more be without oil presses than cotton screws. Indeed, the seed is the best part of the crop henceforth! Seriously, such a discovery would be a greater accession to Southern wealth than Cuba.

Passing between the falls this morning, I was not a little interested at a fisherman's husk. He had neither net, hook or line. He used no bait, and yet, as the result of less than one hour's gigging, he had a fishy burden under which a lithe and strong negro staggered. With a fork, much like that with which Neptune is represented as ruling the watery realms, only lacking the mid finger, fixed upon a pole ten feet long, he stood below the falls and struck at random. Now and then he fleshed his fork—if fish be flesh. Some struck through the head, or back, or tail, bit plump, or barely hit—so he lifted out his game in such quantity and size as I never saw any where else. They looked like buffalo fish, but the fisherman said no, they were gaspagou: as large as buffalo and of superior quality.

Alexandria is not a corporate town, but here is the Court House and three churches, Romanist, Methodist and Episcopal, the last not yet finished. The yellow fever has been severely felt, and the last patient is hardly on his legs. I was struck at the location of the grave-yard. It is over the river from the town: over the river, on a piney-hill, quiet spot. Thither, Charon-like, the ferryman takes over the dead and the sad processions. His blind horse treads the wheel round and round, fit emblem of those endless cycles the spirits enter upon: only, not blind.

We shall reach the seat of Conference Tuesday night. It is now quite certain, to the sorrow of all, that Bishop Capers cannot be with us. His health does not allow it. This is a loss to us, yet we do not blame the good Bishop. Would that we had more Bishops. H. N. M.

LETTER FROM BISHOP SOULE.

MESSRS. EDITORS: For the purpose of giving as much time as possible for any preachers who may be appointed to California from the conferences now in the course of their sessions, to prepare to accompany me on the voyage, I have determined to postpone my departure from New Orleans to the 7th of January. I purpose to be in New Orleans a few days before sailing, to make all necessary arrangements. Preachers who desire to accompany me should be there at least two or three days before the sailing of the ships.

I indulge the hope that I shall not make my second voyage to California alone. Within a few days I have received five letters from preachers in the Pacific Conference. All speak favorably of the work; but "the harvest is great, and the laborers are few." Well may we pray the Lord of the harvest to send forth more laborers into this field.

The Stockton District, a very important department of the California work, is now left with but three preachers beside the presiding elder. I trust these three will stand or fall at their posts. California is not the land for a preacher to visit for a year or two, and then leave, because he "wants to go home." A Methodist preacher's home should be wherever he is called to labor, on land or ocean. I would advise no preacher to go to California with any other purpose but to preach Christ and him crucified, as his own great work. If he is capable of being influenced by the love of gold, it is desirable that he should avoid, as far as possible, the object of temptation. And if he is not prepared to labor and suffer, and endure hardness as a good soldier of Jesus Christ, willing to live or die in the instrumental agency of the eternal salvation of the souls of his fellow men, he had much better remain at "home" than to attempt a voyage of six or seven thousand miles to a foreign land. I rejoice to witness a movement for the relief of our brethren in Sacramento City. The object to be accomplished is an important one, and worthy of a noble Christian liberality. It would afford me pleasure to be the bearer of the contribution to aid our brethren in that distant land, whose liberality, to the utmost extent of their ability, I well know. In these acts of Christian benevolence there is a double benefit. It redounds as a blessing both to the giver and receiver; but the first has the advantage, as it is written, "It is more blessed to give than to receive." We have one or two other churches in California which greatly need aid, especially the new church in the city of San Francisco. No society within my knowledge, according to number and means, has done more to sustain the interests of the Church than this infant society. They felt the necessity of a convenient house of worship in a suitable locality, and they resolved upon its erection. The lot was purchased, and the contract for building closed before I left California, and, I believe, they are now worshipping God in it. But they need help. Who of our wealthy friends will extend it to them? We are only Stewards "For the earth is the Lord's, and the fullness thereof, and the cattle upon a thousand hills." The silver and the gold are His. Any donations for the San Francisco church, or subject to discretionary appropriation for building, or relieving any other church, or churches in California, will be thankfully received, faithfully applied and duly reported.

THE CHURCH PROPERTY.

DEAR BRO.: The Commissioners, North and South, have been in Conference since Saturday last, and to-day reached a result that cannot fail to give general, nay, universal satisfaction to all the friends of justice and charity, acquainted with the history of the relations of the Church North and South for the past eight years. For the particulars, I refer you to our official report, which will go to the papers to-morrow, and reach you nearly as soon as this. I write to give you the earliest information, and to assure you of the entire satisfaction which this settlement with the New York Commissioners and Book Agents affords us. The Commissioners of the South are unanimous in the opinion that we have been met by our Northern friends in a spirit of undoubted justice and Christian charity. Our claims have been adjusted to our entire satisfaction. Our interviews from day to day, investigating the value of the concern, and in settling the many doubtful and embarrassing issues which were the inseparable accidents of this controversy, have been of the most pleasant and personally gratifying character. We concurred in unanimously inviting Judge J. McLean, to preside as chairman of our meetings. His presence and counsel has contributed largely to the very gratifying results we have been able to reach; and he has, by his marked piety, his broad and manly views of our relations, and the claims of Christian charity in this whole matter, greatly exalted himself in our estimation as a public man, and, indeed, won a place in our Christian confidence and affection, occupied by but few, if any, public men in the whole country. May we not hope that a result so favorable to peace, will ultimately, and indeed at an early day, lead to those fraternal relations between the two great branches of the Methodist family in this country, which no circumstances should be permitted to violate! With me, I confess, this is an object most desirable in itself, and one for which I trust we shall not cease to pray.

Very truly yours,

WM. A. SMITH.

COUNTER MEMORIAL.

The Interpreter, a very spirited sheet, appeared on the 29th ult.; the name of the editor not known. It bears down strongly on the Public School question—discomfitting the priest party among us. This number, the proprietor says, may be the last or not—as patronage justifies. In arrest, or counteraction, if it be needed, of Bishop Blanc's memorial to the last Legislature, which may come up before this next, as "unfinished business," the Interpreter suggests the following:

To the Members of the Legislature of the State of Louisiana:

The Memorial of the undersigned, resident citizens of New Orleans, respectfully represents to your honorable body—

That they have learned, with serious dissatisfaction, of a petition that was presented to you at your last session, and referred to the Committee on Education—which petition aims at effecting a change in our system of Public Schools.

The said petition, we have been informed, was presented to your honorable body by the "New Orleans Catholic Free School Association;" but we are well assured that the masses of our people, of all sects, and those making profession of no religion at all, were not consulted. The newspaper report of the presentation and reference of said petition was a surprise to the citizens generally. The friends of our Public Schools, knowing those institutions to be established by law, had thought them to be so secure—(especially as "the Bible and sectarian prayers" had been discontinued in 1850, in order to propitiate opponents)—that it was not deemed necessary to get up a counter petition, until the intelligence of the proceedings in the Legislature reached this city.

We regard this movement on the part of the Association above named, as manifestly tending to excite such animosities between different religious parties, as unhappily prevail in Europe and in some of our Northern cities.

We fear that a compliance with the petition referred to, would inevitably lead to the destruction of that system of Public Schools which has been built up with so much labor and patience within the last twelve years; which is now the pride and glory of our city; and to which so many of our poor inhabitants look, as the only instumentality afforded them for giving to their children that education, which the future citizens of the Republic should possess.

In the wishes expressed in this Memorial, members of various religious denominations unite. In sustaining their own religious schools, they have never asked any assistance from the State; they are satisfied to be on an equal footing with their Catholic fellow citizens. And they are unwilling that the incipient step to a union of Church and State should be taken by granting such assistance from the public treasury to any religious denomination.

We, the undersigned, do therefore most earnestly and respectfully pray, that the public school funds may not be distributed among the different religious denominations. There is only one denomination which has asked it. The members of that communion have no authority to speak for others; and we hope that your honorable body will disregard the unauthorized request which they have made.

And your Memorialists,

As in duty bound, &c.

FEELINGS OF A DYING MAN.

I was called upon one day, says Dr. Fletcher, now many years ago, to visit a gentleman, one of my congregation, who was apparently in a dying state. Not having heard of his illness before, but knowing his previous history, I felt startled and greatly distressed; for he was one who had trifled with religious convictions, and had so far stifled them as greatly to abandon his religious connection; satisfying his conscience by attending one service on the Sabbath, frequently absenting himself altogether, and seeking, in wordly associations and amusements, to silence the voice within, and bury in oblivion the remembrance of past religious impressions. On entering his dying chamber, with a look of unutterable anguish, he exclaimed, "Oh, sir, I am lost! Your very presence condems me! The sermons you have preached, your faithful warnings from the pulpit, your private expostulations, all condem me! Oh, sir, what is to become of my soul—my poor, neglected soul? I have just been told I cannot live! my hours are numbered! I have no pain now; but this is the precursor of death," —(he was dying of an inflammation in the bowels)—"and I shall soon be in eternity! Oh, stifled convictions—a neglected Bible—misimproved Sabbaths—how will ye rise up in judgment to condemn me!" I endeavored to calm his mind, and told him he must not add unbelief to the catalogue of sins; that the Gospel was a revelation of mercy; that the blood of Christ cleanseth from all sin; that whosoever cometh unto him he will in no wise cast out; that he is able to save to the uttermost all that came unto him. "Uttermost!" the dying man exclaimed, "uttermost! then there is a gleam of hope even for me, if I had time; but even now I feel that stage approaching which will absorb my faculties, and terminate my sad life. Oh! what would I give for one week! one day! Oh, precious time! how have I wasted it! Oh, my dear pastor, pity me! pray for me! my thoughts grow confused—I cannot pray myself." I then knelt down and prayed with him, in which he most fervently joined, summoning all his strength to keep awake. I never shall forget the grasp of his hand, when I alluded to the fullness and sufficiency of Divine grace. I left him, with feelings it is impossible for me to describe, and returned, according to my promise, in a few hours. I found him still sensible, but evidently sinking under the power of slumber, from which he would never wake. In the interval, he had been dwelling on the texts suggested; and when he saw me, he feebly but smilingly said, "Able to save to the uttermost! there I must rest my hope." After again commending this dying man to the riches of divine mercy, I left him not without hope, but such a hope as I would not, for ten thousand worlds, risk as my dying solace.

NORTH CAROLINA CONFERENCE.

In the absence of any official communications from the seat of the Conference, we gleam from the Spirit of the Age, such information as its columns afford, and append thereto the appointments, and the Conference paper on the subject of Finances. The Conference adjourned on Thursday night, 18th:

"The annual meeting of the North Carolina Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, commenced in this city, on Wednesday, the 9th inst., the Rev. Bishop Paine, presiding. We learn that upwards of one hundred ministers are in attendance, belonging to the Conference, besides several distinguished visitors from other Conferences. The meetings of the body are held in the old Protestant Episcopal Church, that building having been purchased by the M. E. Church of this city, for the use of its colored congregation.

"The first day's session of the Conference was chiefly occupied in the preparation of business for the session, examination of new candiates for admission into the traveling connection, &c.

"On Thursday, after the transaction of some Conference business, Rev. Dr. Baird, of the Congregational Church, New York, was introduced, and delivered a highly interesting address upon the subject of Missions, and particularly dwelling upon the great need of diffusing Gospel knowledge among the Papal inhabitants of the earth; alluding to the immense flow of Roman Catholics into this country, the vast amount of ignorance and superstition among that class, and of the paramount importance of circulating the Bible and correct religious truth among them.

"Dr. Baird is Recording Secretary of the American and Foreign Christian Union, whose object is 'to diffuse and promote the principles of a religious liberty, and a pure Christianity, wherever corrupted Christianity prevails.' The Union is composed of members from most of the Evangelical Churches, and through the labors of its missionaries at home and abroad, much light has been shed upon the system of Romanism. Many of its benighted adherents have been converted to Christ—and an amount of good has been done which cannot be fully revealed in this life.

"No public collection was taken up, but we understand quite a handsome sum was made up by private contributions, in behalf of this cause—probably exceeding $150.

"On Thursday afternoon, the Missionary Society of the Conference, held its meeting, and we are pleased to learn that the funds brought up by the Ministers from their respective fields of labor, will form an aggregate of more than ten thousand dollars, collected in the bounds of the North Carolina Conference during year, 1853, being an increase of between four and five thousand dollars over the collections of the year previous.

"On Friday morning, Rev. Mr. Schon, of Louisville, Ky., delivered a most excellent and eloquent address before the Conference, on the great Missionary enterprise of the M. E. Church, South. He spoke like a man whose whole soul was in the work, and his enthusiasm and energy seemed to infuse new zeal into his clerical hearers. Mr. S. stated that, previous to the separation of the Northern and Southern branches of this Church, some eight or nine years ago, about $100,000 per annum was the sum raised for the Missionary work in the entire United States; that since the separation, the Northern branch, during the year 1852, raised upwards of $200,000, and the Southern branch some $85,000!

"The afternoon of Thursday was occupied by the meetings of the various Boards of the Conference—Education, Finance, &c., of which we have no statistics by us to give particulars. We may remark, however, that we learn the subject of Education seems to have taken a fast hold on the Church, and its interests have been well cured for during the past year. It affords us great pleasure to learn, that the Board of Finance report a largely increased sum over former years, contributed during the past, for the relief of deceased preacher's families and the support of the surviving, but 'worn-out and superannuted members of the Conference.' Last year, the Board of Finance were only able to declare a dividend of some 40 cents on the dollar—this year the contributions are so liberal, that at least 90 cents on the dollar will be declared; and next year it is confidently believed that they will be able to give dollar for dollar upon all the claims of this character that may come before the Conference! This is, indeed, as it should be. Men who have died in the work of the Gospel and left dependent families, unprovided for, ought to receive every cent of the small stipend alloted to them—as well also ought those who have spent the flower of youth and the vigor of manhood in the service of the Church, to be well provided for in the infirmities of premature decrepitude, and of advanced age; and we rejoice to see that North Carolina is determined to wipe this stain from the character of Methodism in her borders.

"On Friday night the Educational Society held a public meeting in the M. E. Church. A sermon was delivered by Professor Andrews, of Normal College, and an address was delivered by Rev. Dr. Deems, of Greensboro' Female College, upon the important subject of raising funds for educating for the Ministry, indigent young gentlemen who desire to enter upon the work. The very large audience seemed to be much interested in the cause, and a collection was taken up, amounting to some $300, for this object.

"On Saturday night a public Missionary meeting was held, when able, thrillingly interesting addresses were delivered by Revs. Dr. Jenkins, Missionary from China, and Dr. Sehon, Secretary of the Missionary Board. The first speaker imparted much information concerning the habits and customs of the Chinese, exhibiting minature specimens of their idols, plates illustrative of their language, temples, &c. He has with him a Chinaman, also, who was the object of much curiosity. Dr. Sehon's was an eloquent, telling effort. A collection was taken in aid of the Missionary cause, amounting to near $800.

"On Sabbath morning, we heard a sermon from Bishop Paine, addressed chiefly to the members of the Conference relative to their duties and responsibilities as itinerant laborers in the great work of the salvation of the world through the Gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ. Bishop Paine comes up to our views of what a Gospel preacher should be—earnest, impressive, practical—and we scarcely ever heard a pulpit effort more to our liking than this powerful sermon on this occasion. After the sermon, the Bishop ordained as Deacons of the Church, the following Ministers: Revs. William A. Brame, Thos. W. Guthrie, Hillary T. Hudson, Abram Wenver, James M. Westbrooks, Minter Johnson, John N. Barker and Mr. Shelton.

"In the afternoon, Rev. Wm. Closs delivered a powerful discourse on the slavery of sin; after which the following Ministers were ordained Elders of the Church, viz: Revs. L. S. Burkhead, Zebedee Rush, James A. Dean, N. F. Reid, J. P. Jordan, Thos. G. Whitaker, and another whose name we did not understand. The ordination services were of the most solemnly interesting character.

"At night, Rev. A. Dibrell, of the Virginia Conference, delivered one of the most searching, eloquent sermons on 'the worth of the soul,' we have ever heard—the effect of which must tell mightily, for weal or woe, on the destiny of hundreds who listened with deep interest to his faithful admonitions and warnings.

"The Presbyterian and Baptist Churches were kindly offered to the Conference, the pulpits of which have been occupied by Ministers, as well as the Methodist Pulpits. The ministrations of the Word have been largely attended by the citizens and visitors, and we trust great good to the cause of religion has been done by the assembly of this body of Christian Ministers in our midst."

THE POLICY OF ROME.

When Napoleon declared, "The House of Braganza has ceased to reign," he knew that he was uttering a prediction that was to be accomplished, not so much by the might of the sword as by the power of the imagination. He concealed his defeats; he magnified his successes; was most bold and instant and haughty in emergencies, and overawed by the very magnitude of his aims and pretensions. He had bound his name with a fearful spell, and men trembled at it. His foes became faint-hearted, and despaired of opposing him when all men said he was invincible, and they sought safety in allinnce. The many, the weak, the undecided, those with aught to lose or gain, joined the great tide and made it still more potent to attract. Even the stout-hearted hesitated and struck a feebler blow. His friends were encouraged and granted every aid; his admirers became the more enthusistic; everything favored his pretensions. Thus his manner of acting was more to him than his actions themselves; indeed, it was the real secret of his great success. The battle was often won before a blow had been struck, and his prophecies fulfilled as soon as uttered. He had said, Imagination rules the world. He fully acted up to his principle; and when he who conquered at Waterloo began to oppose the Corsican, it was not by meeting him in battle array, but by breaking this spell of imagination, and by turning it against the tyrant.

But Napoleon learned this secret of success—this great chapter in the book of human nature—from Rome. Chiefly since the organization of the order of the Jesuits in the very midst of the English Reformation, Rome new that her success was not to be had by means that before had proved available. She knew that she must dispense with physical force, and go at once before men to win or drive them by deceit, by shows, by putting on the air of confidence and boldness, by high pretensions and bold anathemas; in a word, that she must sway men through the wonderful power of the imagination. Possunt quia posse videntur, is her favorite motto. Rome knows that thus the ignorant are deceived, the vacillating drawn over, the susceptible impressed; that friends are emboldened and foes put off their guard, affrighted and unnerved. Most men join the cause that looks most prosperous.

Scarcely a church, a school, or an asylum is built, scarcely a convert made, though a mountebank or scavonger from the purlieus of disrepute; scarcely is there a fete or celebration to inaugurate some new abode of idolatry, but it is blazoned forth, with every attraction of hyperbole, throughout the land. But when does she put to press her losses of thousands who are leaving her folds; the institutions that have ceased to exist; the divisions of doctrine which have shaken her kingdom to its centre; or the peevishness and rebellion of her German and French disciples? What organ lays before the public every dispute between her bishops and priests and laymen, or where shall we look for information as to the strength of the Sulpicians, or the present aspect of the trustee question? No, these are hushed in profound repose, so far as the press is concerned—that great medium of the present time for influencing opinion. Rome encourages—she dares not discourage.

Nay, she is the more eager to do so, in proportion to her losses and dangers, and manifold forebodings. Never, perhaps, was there a time (as we may hereafter show) when, in Europe and among us, so many have left the communion of Rome within the same number of years; when abroad, so many antions on whom she formerly has relied, are so feeble and unable, or unwilling, to help her; when everywhere means were so difficult to be obtained, and political and social obstacles were so appalling. And yet her claims are the loftier. She never was more arrogant. Hildebrand and Innocent, and not Gangenelli or even Leo, are her favorite ideals. In England, the land of Cranmer, she tramples on acts of Parliament; in France, this favored soil of Jansenism, she is ultramontane; in Holland, where even Alva was disheartened, she seeks for supremacy, and the Czar himself is braved at the holy sepulchre. Here, too, amid republican laws and Puritan associations, she flaunts in our face principles of persecution and dogmas of idolatry, which so many of her children have hitherto been so anxious to disclaim; she insists more than ever upon her most offensive dogma of supremacy; she is rudely casting out from her midst all that hampers her action, and while allowing converts to enter her ranks almost on their own terms, (for the sake of blazoning forth their names,) she is centralizing power, so as to be able hereafter the more easily to crush rebellion within and to scatter foes without.

But does power stoop to pretence? Is parade of strength any evidence of its reality? We know that it is otherwise; that the losing gambler is bolder than ever; that the anxious shopman doubles his price; that the hopeless politician is smiling and boastful; that the drowning man has the energy of the giant. But all this is unreal, spasmodic—only expiring strength, mere galvanic courage. Yet Rome needs it. Losing, she must not let it be known. She is not in a position for quiet and efficient action, for the calmness of conscious strength. Hence, she must attempt to retrieve by deceit, by arrogance, by appealing to the imagination. The method is a well known and influential one. "The House of Braganza has ceased to reign."—[Evangelical Catholic.

OBITUARY.

DIED—At her residence, near Plaquemine, on the 25th of September, Mrs. REBECCA JOHNS, aged 60 years.

Mrs. Johns had long been a useful and pious member of the Methodist Church. Her Christian practice beautifully illustrated her religious profession.

Her great gentleness of character—her kindness—her charity to the truly deserving—her love for the cause of her Saviour—will long be remembered by those who knew her but to love her. Though rich, she was humble-hearted, and in her the poor ever found a true friend.

She had not put off repentance and faith in the Gospel until the long and weary hours of sickness. All she then had to do was to die the happy death of the righteous. Even in the hours of pain which preceded her departure from earth, she was greatly solicitous about her young friend sick in the same room; about her absent son, who she feared, had fallen a victim to the prevailing epidemic. In her thoughts of others she seemed to forget herself. Kind—kind to the very last for the happiness of others. To the Pastor of the Presbyterian Church, who, in the absence of her pastor in another portion of his work, visited her, when she knew she was going to die, she expressed full confidence in her Redeemer. She well knew, by long experience—and an experience chastened by many an hour of affliction, for several of whom she dearly loved were not, for Jesus had taken them—that the Christian religion was the truth.

Death came—and she smiled to meet him coming; for she knew that love which is "sweeter than life, and stronger than death."

She was abundant in communicating the riches God had given her for the advancement of his kingdom.

Her friends mourn their loss, with the joyful hope of the Christian's faith, that "to lose is her eternal gain."

The light of the household hath gone out—yet, in the Resurrection morn, will it be lighted to go out no more, but ever to shine in heaven's blessed immortality.

"Thou art gone to the grave—but we will not deplore thee,
Whose God was thy ransom, thy guardian and guide:
He gave thee; He took thee; and He will restore thee.
And death has no sting, for the Saviour has died."

HER PASTOR.

DIED—At his residence, near Plaquemine, Iberville Parish, Col. RICHARD REAMS, in his 53d year.

Col. Reams was a native of South Carolina, but for some years a resident of this Parish, in which he married Miss E. R. Johns.

At one time of his life he was a member of the Methodist Church, on probation; but not having obtained religion, he quit it.

His affability of manners, his truly generous charity, endeared him to his personal acquaintances, and by none was he more loved than by the Methodist Ministers with whom his friendship was kind and earnest.

He was a reader of the Bible, a praying man; and often at the House of God, and under the preaching, show the great tenderness and impressibility of his heart with reference to divine truths.

Yet he stayed away from that Saviour whose mercy is so large and free, until the yellow fever sought him out.

The black vomit had taken away hope of life; and the question was to be answered, whether he would be prepared for death!

How sweet to have the thought of a kindred being eternally saved, leaving a bright legacy. Then around the grave cluster not only precious memories of life, but also hopes lends her brightness to an otherwise cheerless dispensation of God—the death of those we dearly love.

While lingering on this side of the Jordan of death, our friend caught occasional glimpses of the promised land; hence, when he said, "It is hard to die," "I can't die," when asked afterwards, "If Jesus was so precious to him?" his reply was, "Yes, Sir." Again, he said, "All I want is grace to die by." The hour of his departure drew nigh. The death rattle had communicated a dread warming. Suddenly and emphatically he raised his right arm, saying, "I throw myself on Jesus." These were the last words. The shout of hope which he threw back to surviving kindred, as he entered the cold waters of death.

He died as calmly as a child falls asleep, and we hardly knew he was dead.

We hope, and that hope is more precious to his widow than all of earth—that with him "to die was gain." Kindred and friends mourn and miss him much, but this hope cheers.

"Friend after friend departs,
Who has not lost a friend?
There is no union here of hearts
That finds not here an end.
Were this frail world our final rest,
Living or dying none were blest."

"There is a word above,
Where parting is unknown—
A long eternity of love,
Formed for the good alone.
And faith beholds the dying here,
Translated to that glorious sphere."

General Intelligence.

ARRIVAL OF EMIGRANTS—CHOLERA AT SEA.—The British ship Glenmanna, from Liverpool, arrived at Port Jackson Tuesday with a large number of passengers, of which thirty-seven had died during the passage. The ship will be detained at the quarantine until it is thoroughly cleansed, and also the passengers until they are in good health.

NEWSPAPERS IN THE WORLD.—The following is supposed to be the number of newspapers in the world: 10 in Australia, 14 in Africa, 24 in Spain, 29 in Portugal, 39 in Asia, 65 in Belgium, 85 in Denmark, 90 in Russia and Poland, 320 in other Germanic States, 560 in Great Britain and Ireland and 1800 in the United States.

HEAVY FEES.—A case is on trial in the United States Circuit Court, at Philadelphia, to recover $50,000, alleged to be due to the estate of the late Daniel Webster, for fees in the great case of Matthia Aspden's estate. The case is not yet finished.

THE AFRICANIZATION OF CUBA.—A telegraphic dispatch to Charleston from Baltimore says: The Europa's mails contain a correspondence between Lord Howden, the British Embassador at Madrid, to Mr. Corbin, of Virginia, relative to the British designs respecting the Africanization of Cuba. His Lordship pronounces the whole story a wicked fabrication, and says that his efforts have been directed to induce Spain to suppress the slave trade and obtain the freedom and emancipation of those who have been unjustly detained in bondage since 1617. The Washington Union, however, professes to find internal evidence in the letter confirming its statement.

THE RUNAWAY IN PARIS.—The Paris correspondent of the NewYork Times gives the following account of an interview with a runaway slave in Paris:

I was standing last evening at the corner of a deserted street, the fog almost quenching the light of the lamps, when I was accosted by a voice that spoke English:

"Are you an American, sir?

My questioner was a negro boy, perhaps eighteen years of age, tall, somewhat emaciated, jet black, and dressed in a blouse or smock-frock.

"Yes, I am. What then?

I beg your pardon, sir, but I ran away from home, sir, and I don't know what I'm going to do, clear off here. I am a slave, sir, and some people told me it was better to starve than to be a slave, and I shipped for Marseilles, and I've come up here a-foot, and I haven't got a cent, and I don't know what I'm going to do, so far off, sir. I wish you'd give me a few coppers to get a night's lodging, sir.

Well, that's a pretty account to give of yourself. So you ran away. Did your master ever beat you?

No, sir, he didn't never beat me.

Well, what are you going to do?

I am a-going to get down to Harre tha best way I can, and work my passage back to the States, sir.

You were better off there than you are here?

Lord gracious, I should think I was.

Well, here, take that, and be careful with it, and another time don't mind what "some people" tell you. Good bye.

Thank you, sir. I'm very much obliged to you, sir; if I ever get back, I'll stay back. Fine bye, sir.

And he hurried off into the fog.

Alabama.

From the Message of the Mayor of Mobile, delivered on the 10th, we learn that the expenses of the city government for the past year were $71,079. The receipts in the same time were $72,630.

The number of arrests during the year, according to the report of the City Marshal, was 3,038, and the amount collected for fines in the police department is $7,795 83.

We learn by the Claiborne Southern of the 3d, that since its last issue three persons had died of yellow fever. The same paper thinks, however, that there is no longer just ground to fear the epidemic in that town, as there was only one case of sickness, and that was not of yellow fever.

Texas.

By the arrival of the Perseverance on Sunday, we have Galveston papers to the 9th, Indianola to the 7th, and full files of our exchanges from the interior. We copy the following items from the commercial columns of the News:

There has been a fair amount of business done during the past week. Sickness has now entirely ceased, and the danger in visiting this place is over.

The delay of opening of the rivert for regular navigation is seriously felt by all classes of our merchants. Several steamers are in readiness to go into the Trinity trade. Reports from this river mention a continuation of rain, but do not announce that the rise of the river is sufficient to admit of navigation.

We have had a succession of singularly fine weather for the advanced season; vegetation has thus far not been interrupted, and late picking of cotton may be expected to yield a better quality than usual. In the uplands picking is now pretty nearly over, while in the bottoms the planters have still their hands full of work.

Some sugar plantations are through grinding, others are still working, and report favorably as to the quality, while the yield is irregular, and short of the quantity produced last season.

From Houston we learn that business was very active, and cotton coming in freely: receipts being about 200 bales per day.

FROM EL PASO.—Capt. Skillman, the indefatigable mail contractor between San Antonio and Santa Fe, arrived at the latter place a few days ago—after his late visit to the metropolis of the nation—direct from El Paso in twenty-two days. He came down with a tiovernment train, accompanied by Col. Mansfield, of the U. S. Army. Col. M. made this as a trial trip to become acquainted with the advantages offered by the San Antonio route to New Mexico. He is, says the Western Texian, highly delighted with his trip, and pronounces the San Antonio route the shortest, best, and consequently the cheapest. The train found an abundance of water, grass and everything else necessary along the entire line of travel. It is surmised that, in consequence of Col. Mansfield's satisfaction with the country which he passed, most, if not all Government trains, destined for New Mexico, will in future be directed to adopt this route in preference to the one heretofore traveled, via Independence, Missouri.

LATER FROM MEXICO.

THE NEW EMPEROR—INVASION OF SONORA.

By the arrival of the Texas on Sunday we have received files of Vera Cruz papers to the 8th, and papers from the City of Mexico to the 3d instant. Down to the 3d the City of Mexico seems to have been occupied chiefly with the subjects—the supposed approach of the consummation of the imperial dignity by Santa Anna and the piratical invasion, as they style it, of the Americans in Sonora. These benighted Mexicans do not seem to understand the doctrine of manifest destiny, nor the polite terms in which its exploits should be mentioned.

Upon the first of these subjects, we do not perceive that there is any distinct ground on which is expected the usurpation of Santo Anna. Yet the very little under which he is to reign, has been settled for him either by himself or others. The matter seems to rest on general rumor; but such rumor is probably correct in the main, since it does not appear to proceed from his enimies alone.

The new relations which will be produced between our Government and the Emperor, that is to be, will receive a certain degree of unavoidable complication from this rather extraordinary event, for Santa Anna is already regarded with any thing but popular favor in this country; and as we have a Government that is guided by the popular feeling, we are likely enough to be embroiled in our diplomatic relations with Mexico by this unpopular proceeding of Santa Anna, which, nevertheless, does not appear to be against the public wish of Mexico.

A courier from Uros had brought dispatches to the Government, conveying the intelligence that the schooner Arrow and the bark Caroline had sailed from San Francisco on the night of the 16th of October, for Guaymas under Mexican colors, with about two hundred patriotic adventurers bent on the annexation of Sonora. These two vessels were seen off the harbor of Guaymas on the 11th of November. It seems from San Francisco papers that the Arrow had been proceeded against by the authorities of San Francisco, but had been released.

The Mexican papers complain that the police had been for twenty-four hours in possession of the proof that she was about to sail with arms and munitions, but that they waited until her departure before they proceeded to a second arrest. They say, however, that all this is precisely after the good faith of the North Americans—that this was just the manner in which they acted in Texas. Great excitement reigned in the city of Mexico in consequence of these dispatches. Great preparations were being made in Sonora to repel the invaders, and the Governor of that province had issued the following proclamation:

1. All foreigners embarking without permission of the Authorities, and forming themselves in armed bodies, will be considered and treated as pirates.

2 That captains of ships trausporting armed adventurers, the owners of such conpiloted or accomplicy, persons who shall hold relations with the invaders who shall protect them, serve them, or come to their aid, shall conceal or any to save any of them, shall act as guides to them, or shall give them news or advice, shall also be treated as pirates.

3 That all inhabitants who shall retire from the centres of population, in order to avoid taking arms, and those who shall prove recalcitrant in fulfilling the obligations which are imposed on them by their country, shall be considered suspicious and be tried by martial law, and the least penalty to which they shall be liable shall be that of incorporation in the corps of veterans.

A sad accident, of which we gather the particulars from the Eco Del Commercio of Vera Cruz, occurred on the 18th ult., at Nopalucan, on the road between Puebla and Perote. One of the trains of wagons laded with powder, under the care of a company of soldiers, by some unaccountable agency became ignited, producing a terrible explosion, resulting in the death of ten persons: a sergeant, six soldiers, and three peasants. Many others were badly injured.

The Eco del Commercio states that the Consul General of Mexico in the United States will hereafter be stationed at New Orleans.

The plan of Guadaiajara, proposing the prolongation of the power conferred on Santa Anna, had been ratified by many of the most distinguished men of the nation. The municipal government of the city of Mexico having resolved to abide by it, the Governor of the Federal District as issued the following proclamation:

Government of the District of Mexico:

The will of the nation having manifested itself in an unequivocal manner, through the petitions which, originating in the department of Jalisco, were afterwards gotten up in the most important States of the Republic, inviting the illustrious Gen. Santa Anna to continue in the exercise of the supreme power delegated to him by the people for their own safety. I have thought proper to fulfill a patriotic duty, and which is commended by the office which I fill, in regulating the ardent and spontaneous wishes, which animates every class of our population, as well as the garrison of the Capital.

Having called together this day the Governor, Council and a large number of citizens of this city, we resolved to adhere to the vote of Jalisco, and state that the capital did the same.

Fellow citizens, the flattering hopes which the people entertained when they entrusted to one of their most illustrious sons all the powers necessary to re-organize the country, would soon raulish away if the term of those powers was not extended. It is, therefore, necessary to extend it, and by the will of the and of the people, the independence and future prosperity of our country will forever be established. ANTONIO DAEZ Y BONILLA.

Mexico, 1st December, 1853.

It was generally thought that Santa Anna would be proclaimed Emperor on the 11th of December.

Important from Havana.

The steamship Empire City, from Havana the 1st, arrived at New York the 6th. The news in two days later than that received by the Black Warrior. We extract from the New York Express the following important intelligence received by this arrival:

The Captain General of Cuba has just issued an important circular to the several Captains of Partidos (sections of country,) of a character which indicates a new alarm of invasion from the United States. The circular sets out with affirming that the Superior Authority has been surely informed that the traitors, enemies of Her Majesty, favored by the magnanimous indulgence with which they have, hitherto, been treated by our Lady the Queen, and hypocritically protected by the new Administration of the United States, are projecting a fresh invasion of the Island, with considerable force; and, at the same time, the same Supreme Authority is convinced of the necessity of repressing the revolutionary tendencies of the native inhabitants of the country with the strong hand, etc. etc.

It is therefore ordered that "in the case of an invasion the said Captains shall have authority to call upon those persons who are suspected of partiality to the Americans and to freedom, to cause them to offer their persons and property for the Spanish service. When a landing shall take place, all natives are to be called out old and young, married or unmarried, capable of bearing arms and whereever property can be seized upon. The rigor of the law is to fall upon all who resist in any way, i. e. they will be shot."

It is also ordered—

Simultaneously, and without loss of time, even employing the armed force, if necessary, your Excellency will cause the principal Creoles, previously designated to the Superior Government, in the lists transmitted, as persons disreputed and influential through their intelligence, wealth and revolutionary spirit, to be conducted to the Government House, and having been there assembled, your Excellency will cause them to sign a declaration, obliging each one of them to subscribe in it, under the general voluntary offering of provisions and property.

In consequence of the reduced condition of Her Majesty's treasury, resulting from the very extensive military preparations which this tioverament has been compelled to make, in view of the disaffection of the people of the country, your Excellency is likewise authorized, in the name of Her Majesty, to exact, should it prove necessary, the sum of two millions of dollars, from the Peninsulars and the mercantile class, as a forced loan and at six per cent. interest, for the support of the war; and as the latter classes of persons are the only friends upon whom the Government can depend, and it is, therefore, unjust that they should be the first to be ruined by the exhibition of their loyalty, bonds and, compose of the local tioverniment, conceived in the usual forms, shall be delivered to them; which said bonds your Excellency will cause to be subscribed and guaranttad, conjointly and valiadly, by all the Creoles.

In order to secure the execution of the preceding regulations, your Excellency will see that trusty guards shall watch and keep the some junta of Creoles in such wise that no one of them, for any motive, upon any pretext whatever, shall separate himself from the point designated by your Excellency as the general quarters. The declared ostensible object of the said guards shall be to shield these Creoles from the vengeance of their fellow-countrymen, at the same time apparently treating the said Creoles with the greatest consideration, and inducing them to believe, if possible, that every measure taken is for their benefit and personal safety.

And it might happen that your Excellency should find it necessary to transfer your prescribe to various points of your jurisdiction, according to the accidents of the war, in no case will your Excellency leave behind you the aforesaid Creoles, but invariably transport them with you, in order that the moral force of their apparent cooperation may not be lost to the Government, while, at the same time the advantage that might be drawn from them by the enemies of the Crown, would thus be prevented.

The disaffection of the natives of the Island being an evident and marked, and there remaining no room to doubt that some of the assemblage of Creoles aforementioned will spare no pains to elude the vigilance and desert the cause of the Government, your Excellency will suppress, with a stern hand, any attempt of the kind, or any expression whatever of dissatisfaction at the measures of Government herein previously enumerated; and, in case an exemplary chastisement should be deemed necessary to impose respect and absolute submission, one or more of them may be passed by the arms, (shot,) this act of execution to take place at a distance from any town or city, and while the troops are on the march.

This circular bears date, Havana, Oct. 29.

The religious policy which this extraordinary document marks out, is thought to foreshadow the course which the new Spanish dynasty of Cuba, then Prussia, is commissioned to pursue. The new functionary it is said, comes invested with poaare never delegated to his predecessors, and will yhild o sway absolutely dictatorial. Gen. P was one of the two leading spirits in the struggle for the absolutist Don Carlos, and still is a Carlist. He is the son of the former Viceroy of Peru, and was himself for two or three years tloversnor of Porto Rico. He not only engaged largely in the African slave trade, but was (according to a statement in the Courier) in the habit of reducing white men, who had been guilty of any small offence, to a temporary servitude, and appropriating to himself the avails of their labor.

The benefit intended to have been given at the Grand Theatre, to Dona Domingues will ba held in due order, for the purpose of starting a fund for the adnation of her new orphan son. A very beautiful daguerreotype portrait of the murdered actress had been taken by St Arica and was visited by crowds. A sium of gentleman waro preparing a tasteful printed testimonial to her memory.

Letter from Florence.

FLORENCE, November 12 1853

I was disappointed with Paris. I confess it to my shame perhaps; but such is the simple fact. Not at its size, for it is generally thought to be large enough for all practical purposes; nor yet at the absence of any special magnificence. I had expected to find—endeed the style of that magnificence completely surpassed all my preconceived opinions. I know it that I can better convey to you my meaning than by saying that there is about the larger structures a want of apparent strength and massiveness which is apt to strike a foreign eye unpleasantly. This is doubtless owing in a great measure to the universal prevalence of courts around which all the palaces and hotels of any dimensions are constructed. Even the mercantile establishments of any considerable size surround the never-failing court, and you might pass a hundred times a day without noticing either a hotel as large as the St. Charles or the St. Louis (that is containing as many rooms) or a commercial house transacting annually business to the amount of many millions, or a banking-house which lends money to crowned heads, for the long succession of buildings is rarely broken by any specimens of ostentatious magnificence sticking out before its neighbors as if to proclaim the superior wealth or consideration of its owner. Indeed he would commit a capital error who should judge of the length of a tradesman's purse by the length of his front on the street; or of the exquisitacy of an inmate or of the solvency of a bank, by the glimpses he gets of either from the same point of view. The stranger in Paris wonders, in fact, where the merchant-princes of the Capital transact their immense business. No such building as Stuart's, on Broadway, proclaims itself to every passer-by as the temple of the high priest of commerce. Millions are not expended as with us, in erecting dry-goods palaces; but the same capital exists in another form—stowed safely away in the form of all the manifold and wondrous creations of the artisan's cunning. But I was speaking of courts, and I was saying that a court in the centre of a building, however beautiful it may be in itself, and however well it may strike you in a utilitarian point of view, has a tendency to weaken, in a measure, the general effect of the whole. It seems also to convey to you the impression that the space which has been thus appropriated has been taken at the expense of the surrounding structure, and that the apartments comprising it must necessarily be somewhat narrowed and contracted in their proportions. Moreover, where you see a building ten times as long as it is wide (these are exactly the proportions of the Tuileries) the reflection is forced home on you that it cannot be so strong and lasting as it ought to be, and as its builders intended it. Both of these notions to be sure are erroneous, for these dark, gray, moss-covered buildings have stood for half a thousand years, and will stand, perhaps, for unnumbered centuries longer; and to banish the other idea effectually from your mind, you have only to enter the structures in question—but I am speaking of the general impression conveyed to the onsider, or at least of the one that was conveyed to me. It was, I am told, seriously debated some time ago, whither a general coat of whitewash would not improve the exterior of the Tuileries. Were this project carried into execution, the ideas I have alluded to would come home to the stranger with ten-fold more force, for the prestige of age, which forms the gilded and crowning glory of that noble structure, would be at once and forever destroyed. The plan, however, was abandoned; and it was well. I believe the very stones themselves, those old historic stones would have raised their voices and cried out against such a profanation. As it is the Rue de Rivoli, which runs parallel with the gardens of the Tuileries and from which it is separated by an iron fence, surmounted by gilded spear-heads—the Rue de Rivoli, with its cream colored shops and hotels, has a kind of ginger-bread look about it that you are a long time in reconciling yourself to. The palace of the Tuileries has been in existence as a royal residence only about three hundred years. As late as the reign of Charles the Sixth its site was occupied by a field of tile-kilns, which had supplied Paris for four centuries, and the foundations of which were accidentally turned up in some excavations made in 1836; and yet around no other building that I have ever seen does there seem to cluster such a host of stirring associations. In the time of Francis the First nothing but a private hotel marked its present site, and still in gazing upon the time-blackened walls of the present structure and in recalling the history of the many fair ones and brave ones who have tenanted it, we cannot help feeling that all its original character is but little changed; that it is still a hotel of magnificent proportions, indeed, whose guests have tarried a little longer than usual, and who in many cases have paid at the end of their sojourn a fearful score of reckoning. The glory of having commenced the building belongs to Catherine de Medicis. She began it as a private residence for herself about the middle of the sixteenth century. The parts finished by her are the central pavilion, a small ring on each side of it and two other small pavilions by which these wings are terminated. The central pavilion so-called is, you must know, in the exact centre of the facade, which fronts on the gardens. The length of this facade is 336 yards. An astrological prediction alarmed the bloody Catherine, causing her to discontinue her work, and the two lofty pavilions terminating the facade at each end were erected by Henry IV., of Navarre. This king also began the long gallery that joins the Louvre to this palace, and the works which were suspended at his death were carried on and terminated under Louis XIII. Louis XII harmonised the whole which was still discordant in many of its parts, added an attics to the central buildings, and removed a magnificant spiral staircase which filled the under part of the central pavilion, and which was reckoned the finest things of its kind in the world. Napoleon began the northern gallery in 1808, to serve as a communication with the Louvre. The general style of the architecture of the Tuileries cannot be classed under any one denomination. All the styles are joined together by—no quite lawful marriage of the arts," and the tonic, Corinthian, Composite, and I know not how many other orders, are mixed up in a manner quite puzzling to contemplate. The earlier portions of the building are built in the Italian style of the sixteenth century, and the work of Henry IV. is the best specimen of the architecture of his day remaining in Paris.

The central or the Medicis pavilion is called the Pavilion de l'Horloge or the Clock-Pavilion—a very queer name, it struck me, to give to a portion of the Palace—for there is nothing extraordinary about its mechanism that I could ascertain, and it certainly does not look half as well as the one in the post office, which indeed is a perfect bijou of its kind, and has always a group of admiring faces turned upward towards its dial. But then what would a large building be in Paris without a clock. All the Palaces have them, all the banks have them, all the churches of course have them. But I am digressing. The three orders of architecture that I have mentioned have each its representative in three rows of columns occurring on the central facade, and all adapted to the style of the epoch in which each prevailed. The ranges of buildings on each side the Pavilion de l'Horloge consisted originally of a long gallery to the South and a grand staircase to the North, erected in place of a smaller gallery in the time of Louis XIV. Towards the garden on the ground floor vaulted arcades extended in front of these galleries from the central pavilion to the two middle ones, forming terraces on the top. The General effect of the Tuileries is very grand, but more from its great length and varied outline than from any excellence of detail. But enough of the exterior of the Tuileries. In my next I may talk to you somewhat about its interior and the royal gardens. There is but little news stirring in France. You may have read that the French Embassador has been recalled from the Court of Naples. The reason is this: the Emperor Napoleon tells his majesty, the King of Naples, in a quiet, friendly way, "My dear brother, you have yet too large an army; you have got an army of 80,000 man; enough to garrison the whole of Italy; this number is quite disproportionate to the size of your little kingdom, and you must reduce it." Upon this his majesty makes up wry faces; he don't like to be deprived of these paltry playthings of a monarch, hired soldiers, any more than a boy does of his marbles. It seems, however, that Napoleon, better informed as to the number than as to the state of discipline of the Neapolitan army, sent a couple of his officers of no very high grade to inspect it. They passed through some of the other Italian States, whose monarchs received them with the greatest politeness. Arrived at Nepies, however, the King learns the object of their mission, gets frightened and orders them into quarantine as the best way of getting rid of them. The consequence is that Napoleon gets wroth at this reception of his Envoys and immediately orders home his Embassador. The weather at Paris has been wretched for the last few weeks, as indeed it has been all over the continent. I kept up a good fire in Paris in the first days of September. Even than, or at least about the middle of the month, the alleys of the Champs Elysées were strewed with dead and whirling leaves, and now the orange trees of the Louvre have gone into winter garments and the gold and silver-fish have disappeared from the basins in the gardens.

SUGAR HOUSE BURNT.—On Thursday last, 8th inst., at 2 o'clock a. m., the sugar-house of Cyprien Larose Fontenot, near Flat Town, in this perish, was destroyed by fire and 120 hogsheads of sugar and all the mainasse. We are informed that neither the sugar-house nor the sugar and molasses were insured, and that the loss is very great. The fire was but the cause of an accident. [Opelousas Courier, 10th.

The wolves of Maine are said to be remarkably numerous and unusually bold the present season. A few days since the stage and passengers from Rockland, while on their way to Machias, were driven back from the woods near Indian river, and detained over night, by a large detachment of wolves.

There is not at present, it is said, a captain in the U. S. Navy who was born in this country. The average age of officers of this rank is about 70 years.

Five thousand one hundred and fifty-nine tons of guano were imported into London during the month of October.

the other States, by enhancing the value and promoting the rapid sale of the public domain, I refer you to the report of the Secretary of the Interior. A careful examination, however, will show that this experience is the result of a just discrimination, and will be far from affording encouragement to a reckless or indiscriminate extension of the principle.

I commend to your favorable consideration the men of genius of our country, who, by their inventions and discoveries in science and art, have contributed largely to the improvements of the age, without, in many instances, securing for themselves anything like an adequate reward. For many interesting details upon this subject, I refer you to the appropriate reports, and especially urge upon your early attention the apparently slight, but really important, modifications of existing laws therein suggested.

The liberal spirit which has so long marked the action of Congress in relation to the District of Columbia will, I have no doubt, continue to be manifested.

The erection of an asylum for the insane of the District of Columbia, and of the army and navy of the United States, has been somewhat retarded by the great demand for materials and labor during the past summer; but full preparation for the reception of patients, before the return of another winter, is anticipated; and there is the best reason to believe, from the plan and contemplated arrangements which have been devised, with the large experience furnished within the last few years, in relation to the nature and treatment of this disease, that it will prove an asylum indeed to this most helpless and afflicted class of sufferers, and stand as a noble monument of wisdom and mercy.

Under the acts of Congress of August 31, 1852, and of March 3, 1853, designed to secure for the cities of Washington and Georgetown an abundant supply of good and wholesome water, it becomes my duty to examine the report and plans of the engineer who had charge of the surveys under the act first named. The best, if not the only plan calculated to secure permanently the object sought, was that which contemplates taking the water from the Great Falls of the Potomac, and consequently I gave to it my approval.

For the progress and present condition of this important work, and for its demands, so far as appropriations are concerned, I refer you to the report of the Secretary of War.

The present judicial system of the United States has now been in operation for so long a period of time, and has, in its general theory and much of its details, become so familiar to the country, and acquired so entirely the public confidence, that if modified in any respect, it should only be in those particulars which may adapt it to the increased extent, population and legal business of the United States. In this relation; the organization of the courts is now confessedly inadequate to the duties to be performed by them; in consequence of which, the States of Florida, Wisconsin, Iowa, Texas and California, and districts of other States, are in effect excluded from the full benefits of the general system, by the functions of the circuit court being devolved on the district judges in all those States, or parts of States.

The spirit of the Constitution and a due regard to justice, require that all the States of the Union should be placed on the same footing in regard to the judicial tribunals. I therefore commend to your consideration this important subject, which, in my judgment, demands the speedy action of Congress. I will present to you, if deemed desirable, a plan, which I am prepared to recommend, for the enlargement and modification of the present judicial system.

The act of Congress establishing the Smithsonian Institution provided that the President of the United States, and other persons therein designated, should constitute an "establishment" by that name, and that the members should hold stated and special meetings for the supervision of the affairs of the Institution. The organization not having taken place, it seemed to me proper that it should be effected without delay. This has been done; and an occasion was thereby presented for inspecting the condition of the Institution, and appreciating its successful progress thus far, and its high promise of great and general usefulness.

I have omitted to ask your favorable consideration for the estimates of works of a local character, in twenty-seven of the thirty-one States, amounting to one million seven hundred and fifty-four thousand five hundred dollars, because, independently of the grounds which have so often been urged against the application of the federal revenue for works of this character, inequality with consequent injustice is inherent, in the nature of the proposition, and because the plan has proved entirely inadequate to the accomplishment of the objects sought.

The subject of internal improvement, claiming alike the interest and good will of all, has, nevertheless, been the basis of much political discussion and has stood as a deep graven line of division between statesmen of eminent ability and patriotism. The rule of strict construction of all powers delegated by the States by the General Government, has arrayed itself, from time to time, against the rapid progress of expenditures from the national treasury on works of a local character within the States. Memorable as an epoch in the history of this subject, is the Message of President Jackson, of the 27th of May, 1830, which met the system of internal improvements in its comparative infancy; but so rapid has been its growth, that the projected appropriations in that year for works of this character had risen to the enormous amount of more than one hundred millions of dollars.

In that message the President admitted the difficulty of bringing back the operations of the Government to the construction of the constitution set up in 1798, and marked it as an admonitory proof of the necessity of guarding that instrument with sleepless vigilence against the authority of precedents, which had not the sanction of its most plainly defined powers.

Our Government exists under a written compact between sovereign States, uniting for specific objects, and with specific grants to their general agent. If, then, in the progress of its administration, there have been departures from the terms and intent of the compact, it is, and will ever be, proper to refer back to the fixed standard which our fathers left us, and to make a stern effort to conform our action to it. It would seem that the fact of a principle having been resisted from the first by many of the wisest and most patriotic men of the Republic and a policy having provoked constant strife, without arriving at a conclusion which can be regarded as satisfactory to its most earnest advocates, should suggest the inquiry whether there may not be a plan likely to be crowned by happier results. Without perceiving any sound distinction, or intending to assert any sound principle as opposed to improvements needed for the protection of internal commerce, which does not equally apply to improvements upon the seaboard for the protection of foreign commerce, I submit to you, whether it may not be falsely anticipated that, if the policy were once settled against appropriations by the General Government for local improvements for the benefit of commerce, localities requiring expenditures would not, by modes and means clearly legitimate and proper, raise the fund necessary for such constructions as the safety or other interests of their commerce might require.

If that can be regarded as a system, which, in the experience of more than thirty years, has at no time commanded the public judgment as to give it the character of a settled policy—which though it has produced some works of conceded importance, has been attended with an expenditure quite disproportionate to their value—and has resulted in squandering large sums upon objects which have answered no valuable purpose, the interests of all the States require it to be abandoned, unless hope may be indulged for the future which find no warrant in the past.

With an anxious desire for the completion of the works which are regarded by all good citizens with sincere interest, I have deemed it my duty to ask at your hands a deliberate reconsideration of the question, with a hope that, animated by desire to promote the permanent and substantial interests of the country, your wisdom may prove equal to the task of devising and maturing a plan, which, applied to this subject, may promise something better than constant strife, the suspension of the powers of local enterprise, the exciting of vain hopes, and the disappointment of their cherished expectations.

In expending the appropriations made by the last Congress, several cases have arisen in relation to works for the improvement of harbors, which involve question as to the right of soil and jurisdiction, and have threatened conflict between the authority of the State and General Government. The right to construct a breakwater, jetty, or dam, would seem, necessarily, to carry with it the power to protect and preserve such constructions. This can only be effectually done by having jurisdiction over the soil. But no clause of the constitution is found, on which to rest the claim of the United States to exercise jurisdiction over the soil of a State, except that conferred by the eighth section of the first article of the constitution. It is, then, submitted, whether in all cases where constructions are to be erected by the General Government, the right of soil should not first be obtained, and legislative provision be made to cover all such cases.

For the progress made in the construction of roads within the territories, as provided for in the appropriations of the last Congress, I refer you to the report of the Secretary of War.

There is one subject of a domestic nature, which, from its intrinsic importance, and the many interesting questions of future policy which it involves, cannot fail to receive your early attention. I allude to the means of communication, by which different parts of the wide expanse of our country are to be placed in closer connection for purposes both of defence and commercial intercourse, and more especially such as appertain to the communication of those great divisions of the Union, which lie on the opposite side of the Rocky Mountains.

That the Government has not been unmindful of this heretofore, is apparent from the aid it has afforded, through appropriations for mail facilities and other purposes. But the general subject will now present itself under aspects more imposing and more purely national, by reason of the surveys ordered by Congress, and now in the process of completion, for communication by railway across the continent, and wholly within the limits of the United States.

The power to declare war, to raise and support armies, to provide and maintain a navy, and to call forth the militia to execute the laws, suppress insurrections, and repel invasions, was conferred upon Congress, as means to provide for the common defence, and to protect a territory and a population now wide-spread and vastly multiplied. As incidental to and indispensable for the exercise of this power, it must sometimes be necessary to construct military roads and protect harbors of refuge. To appropriations by Congress for such objects, no sound objection can be raised. Happily for our country, its peaceful policy and rapidly increasing population impose upon us no urgent necessity for preparation, and leave but few track less deserts between unsailable points and a patriotic people ever ready and generally able to protect them. These necessary links in the enterprise and energy of our people are steadily and boldly struggling to supply. All experience affirms that, wherever private enterprise will prevail, it is most wise for the General Government to leave to that and individual watchfulness the location and execution of all means of communication.

The surveys before alluded to were designed to ascertain the most practical and economical route for a railroad from the river Mississippi to the Pacific Ocean. Parties are now in the field making explorations, where previous examinations had not supplied sufficient data, and where there was the best reason to hope the object sought might be found. The means and time being both limited, it is not to be expected that all the accurate knowledge desired will be obtained, but it is hoped that much and important information will be added to the stock previously possessed, and that partial, if not full reports of the surveys ordered will be received, in time for transmission to the two houses of Congress, on or before the first Monday in February next, as is required by the act of appropriation. The magnitude of the enterprise contemplated has aroused, and will doubtless continue to excite, a very general interest throughout the country. In its political, its commercial and its military bearings, it has varied, great, and increasing claims to consideration. The heavy expense, the great delay, and, at times, fatality attending travel by either of the isthmus routes, have demonstated the advantage, which would result from interritorial communication by such safe and rapid means as a railroad would supply.

These difficulties which have been encountered in a period of peace, would be magnified and still further increased in time of war. But whilst the embarrassments already encountered, and others under new contingencies to be anticipated, may serve strikingly to exhibit the importance of such a work, neither these, nor all considerations combined, can have an appreciable value, when weighed against the obligation strictly to adhere to the Constitution, and faithfully to execute the powers it confers. Within this limit, and to the extent of the interest of the Government involved, it would seem both expedient and proper, if an economical and practical route shall be found, to aid, by all constitutional means, in the construction of a road which will unite by speedy transit, the populations of the Pacific and Atlantic States. To guard against misconception, it should be remarked that, although the power to construct, or attain the construction of a road within the limits of a territory, is not embarrassed by that question of jurisdiction which would arise within the limits of a State, it is, nevertheless, held to be of doubtful power, and more than doubtful propriety, even within the limits of a Territory, for the General Government to undertake to administer the affairs of a railroad, a canal, or other similar construction, and therefore that its connection with a work of this character should be incidental rather than primary. I will only add, at present, that, fully appreciating the magnitude of the subject, and solicitous that the Atlantic and Pacific shores of the Republic may be bound together by inseperable ties of common interest, as well as of common fealty and attachment to the Union, I shall be disposed, so far as my own action is concerned, to follow the lights of the Constitution, as expounded and illustrated by those whose opinions and expositions constitute the standard of my political faith in regard to the powers of the Federal Government. It is, I trust, not necessary to say, that no grandeur of enterprise, and no present urgent inducement promising popular favor, will lead me to disregard those lights, or to depart from that path which experience has proved to be safe, and which is now radiant with the glow of prosperity and legitimate constitutional progress. We can afford to wait, but we cannot afford to overlook the ark of our security.

It is no part of my purpose to give prominence to any subject, which may properly be regarded as set at rest by the deliberate judgment of the people. But while the present is bright with promise, and the future full of demand and inducement for the exercise of active intelligence, the past can never be without useful lessons of admonition and instruction. If its dangers serve not as beacons, they will evidently fail to fulfill the object of a wise design. When the grave shall have closed over all, who are now endeavoring to meet the obligations of duty, the year 1850 will be recurred to as a period filled with anxious apprehension. A successful war had just terminated. Peace brought with it a vast augmentation of territory. Disturbing questions arose, bearing upon the domestic institutions in one portion of the Confederacy, and involving the constitutional rights of the States. But, notwithstanding the differences of opinion and sentiment which then existed in relation to details and specific provisions, the acquiescence of distinguished citizens, whose devotion to the Union can never be doubted, has given renewed vigor to our institutions, and restored a sense of repose and security to the public mind throughout the confederacy. That this repose is to suffer no shock during my official term, if I have power to avert it, those who placed me here may be assured. The wisdom of men, who knew what independence cost—who had put all at stake upon the issue of this revolutionary struggle—disposed of the subject to which I refer, in the only way consistent with the union of these States, and with the march of power and prosperity, which has made us what we are. It is a significant fact, that from the adoption of the Constitution until the officers and soldiers of the Revolution had passed to their graves, or, through the infirmities of age and wounds, had ceased to participate actively in public affairs, there was not merely a quiet acquiescence in, but a prompt vindication of the constitutional rights of the States. The reserved powers were scrupulously respected. No statesman put forth the narrow views of secessists to justify interference and agitation, but the spirit of the compact was regarded as sacred in the eye of honor, and indispensable for the great experiment of civil liberty, which, environed by inherent difficulties, was yet borne forward in apparent weakness by a power superior to all obstacles. There is no condemnation, which the voice of freedom will not pronounce upon us, should we prove faithless to this great trust. While men inhabiting different parts of this vast continent can no more be expected to hold the same opinions, or entertain the same sentiments, than every variety of climate or soil can be expected to furnish the same agricultural products, they can unite in a common object and sustain common principles essential to the maintenance of that object. The gallant men of the North and the South could stand together during the struggle of the Revolution; they could stand together in the more trying period which succeeded the clangor of arms. As their united valor was adequate to all trials of the camp and dangers of the field, so their united wisdom proved equal to the task of founding, upon a deep and broad basis, institutions which it has been our privilege to enjoy, and will ever be our most sacred duty to sustain. It is but a feeble expression of a faith strong and universal, to say that their sons, whose blood mingled so often upon the same field, during the war of 1812, and who have more recently borne in triumph the flag of the country upon a foreign soil, will never permit alienation of feeling to weaken the power of their united efforts, nor fraternal dissentions to paralyze the great arm of freedom, uplifted for the vindication of self-government.

I have thus briefly presented such suggestions as seem to me especially worthy of your consideration. In providing for the present, you can hardly fail to avail yourselves of the light which the experience of the past casts upon the future.

The growth of our population has now brought us, in the destined career of our national history, to a point at which it will behoove us to expand our vision over the vast prospective.

The successive decennial returns of the census since the adoption of the Constitution have revealed a law of steady progressive development which may be stated, in general terms, as a duplication every quarter century. Carried forward from the point already reached, for only a short period of time as applicable to the existence of a nation, this law of progress, if unchecked, will bring us almost incredible results. A large allowance for a diminished proportional effect of emigration would not very materially reduce the estimate, while the increased average duration of human life, known to have already resulted from the scientific and hygienic improvements of the past fifty years, will tend to keep up through the next fifty, or, perhaps, hundred, the same ratio of growth which has thus been revealed in our past progress; and to the influence of these causes may be added the influx of laboring masses from Western Asia to the Pacific side of our possessions, together with the probable accession of the populations already existing in other parts of our hemisphere, which, within the period in question, will feel, with yearly increasing force the natural attraction of so vast, powerful and prosperous a confederation of self-governing Republics, and will seek the privilege of being admitted within its safe and happy bosom, transferring with themselves, by a healthy and peaceful process of incorporation, spacious regions of virgin and exuberant soil, which are destined to swarm with the fast-growing and fast-spreading millions of our race.

These considerations seem fully to justify the presumption, that the law of population above stated will continue to act with undiminished effect, through at least the next half-century; and that thousands of persons who have already arrived at maturity, and are now exercising the rights of freemen, will close their eyes on the spectacle of more than one hundred millions of population embraced within the majestic proportions of the American Union. It is not merely as an independent topic of speculation that I present these views to your consideration. They have important practical bearings upon all the duties we are called upon to perform. Heretofore, our system of government has worked on what may be termed a minutiæ scale, in comparison with the development, which it must, then become within a future not very far hand, as scarcely to be beyond the present of the existing generation.

It is evident a confederation so vast and so varied, both in numbers and in territorial extent, in habits and in interests, could only be kept in national adhesion by the strictest fidelity to the principles of the Constitution, as understood by those who have adhered to the most restricted construction of the powers granted by the people and the States. Interpreted and applied according to those principles, the great compact adopts itself with healthy ease and freedom to an unlimited extension of that benign system of federative self-government, of which it is our glorious, and, I trust, immortal charter. Let us, then, with redoubled vigilance, be on our guard against yielding to the temptation of the exercise of doubtful powers, even under the pressure of the motives of conceded temporary advantage and apparent temporary expediency.

The minimum of Federal Government, compatible with the maintenance of national unity and efficient action in our relations with the rest of the world, should afford the rule and measure of construction of our powers under the general clauses of the Constitution. A spirit of strict deference to the sovereign rights and dignity of every State, rather than a disposition to subordinate the States into a provincial relation to the central authority, should characterize all our exercise of the respective powers temporarily vested in us as a trust from the generous confidence of our constituents.

In like manner, as a manifestly indispensable condition of the perpetuation of the Union; and of the realization of that magnificent national future adverted to, does the duty become yearly stronger and clearer upon us, as citizens of the several States, to cultivate a fraternal and affectionate spirit, language and conduct in regard to other States, and in relation to the varied interests, institutions, and habits of sentiment and opinion which may respectively characterize them. Mutual forbearance, respect, and non-interference in our personal action as citizens, and an enlarged exercise in the most liberal principles of comity in the public dealings of State with State, whether in legislation or in the execution of laws, are the means to perpetuate that confidence and fraternity, the decay of which a mere political union can no more be, could not long survive.

In still another point of view, is an important practical duty suggested by the consideration of the magnitude of dimensions, to which our political system, with its corresponding machinery of government, is so rapidly expanding. With increased vigilance does it require us to cultivate the cardinal virtues of public frugality and official integrity and purity. Public affairs ought to be conducted that the settled conviction shall pervade the entire Union, that nothing short of the highest tone and standard of public morality marks every part of the administration and legislation of the General Government. Thus will the federal system, whatever expansion time and progress may give it, continue more and more deeply rooted in the love and confidence of the people.

That wise economy, which is so far removed from parsimony as from corrupt and corrupting extravagance—that single regard for the public good, which will frown upon all attempts to approach the Treasury with insidious projects of private interest sneaked under public pretexts—that sound fiscal administration, which, in the legislative department, guards against the dangerous temptations incident to overflowing revenue, and in the Executive, maintains an unsleeping watchfulness against the tendency of all national expenditure to extravagance—while they are admitted elementary political duties, may, I trust, be deemed especially adverted to and urged in view of the more impressive sense of that necessity, which is directly suggested by the considerations now presented.

Since the adjournment of Congress, the Vice-President of the United States has passed from scenes of earth, without having entered upon the duties of the station, to which he had been called by the voice of his countrymen. Having occupied, almost continuously for more than thirty years, a seat in one or the other of the Houses of Congress, and having by his singular purity and wisdom, secured unbounded confidence and universal respect, his failing health was watched by the nation with painful solicitude. His loss to the country, under all the circumstances, has been justly regarded as irreparable.

In compliance with the act of Congress of March 2, 1853, the oath of office was administered to him on the 24th of that month, at Ariadne estate, near Matanzas, in the Island of Cuba. But his strength gradually declined, and was hardly sufficient to enable him to return to his home in Alabama, where, on the 18th day of April, in the most calm and peaceful way, his long and eminently useful career was terminated.

Entertaining unlimited confidence in your intelligent and patriotic devotion to the public interest, and being conscious of no motives on my part which are not inseparable from the honor and advancement of my country, I hope it may be my privilege to deserve and secure, not only your cordial co-operation in great public measures, but also those relations of mutual confidence and regard, which it is always so desirable to cultivate between members of co-ordinate branches of the Government.

FRANKLIN PIERCE.

Washington, D. C., December 5, 1853.

SUPREME COURT OF THE UNITED STATES—Tuesday, Dec 6 1853.—A commission from the President of the United States, appointing the Hon John A. Campbell, of Ala., an Associate Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States, was read in open court, and ordered to be entered on record.

Wm. Dunbar and F. Perin, Esqs., of Louisiana, and George W. McCook, Esq., of Ohio, were admitted attorneys and counsellors of this court.

Nos. 1, 7, 8, 10 and 11 John McDonogh's executors, appellants, vs The United States. These causes were argued by Attorney General Cushing for the appellants.

No. 2 and 9. John McDonogh's executors, appellants, vs The United States. These causes were argued by Mr. Attorney General Cushing for the appellee, and submitted on printed arguments by Mr. Meredith, of counsel for the appellants.

WASHINGTON—Business in the Pension Bureau—The Star of the 6th says:

In the course of the month of November, just passed, there were 456 revolutionary claims examined, only 20 of which were allowed.

The total number of claims presented under the act of February 3, 1853, to the 1st inst., have been 4607; of which 3069 have been allowed and passed into certificates. Of the number admitted, 1663 are to widows of revolutionary men, and 1406 to widows and orphans of officers and soldiers of the Mexican war, and the various wars since 1790. Number of bounty land claims examined, 7581; warrants issued, 2234; pension and half-pay claims examined, 1608; certificates issued, 395; letters written, 3230; re orded 2584; copied, 620; received, briefed, and registered, including original claims, 6561; letters sent from the office, 7784.

THE SEASONS,

FROM THE GERMAN

Hey ond corn and buds ond flowers,
Snow and ice and fruit and wine,
Suns and Seasons, sleets and showers,
Bring in turn, these gifts divine.
Spring blows, Summer glows,
Autumn reaps, Winter keeps,
Spring prepares, Summer provides,
Autumn hoards and Winter hides.
Come, then, friends their praises sound;
Summer, Autumn, Winter, Spring,
As they run their yearly round,
Each in turn with gladness sing:
Time drops blessings as he flies—
Time makes ripe, and time makes wise.

CHRISTMAS.—As the festival of Christmas is near at hand, the following lines, written nearly a century ago, may be appropriate:

ON THE SALUTATION OF A HAPPY CHRISTMAS AND A MERRY NEW YEAR.

So merry at Christmas are some, they destroy
Their health by disease, and by trouble their joy;
At Christmas mix wisdom with spirth, and never fear,
You'll secure the wish'd blessing, a happy new year.

EDUCATION.

Re-opening of the Baton Rouge Female Seminary.
Parents and others concerned in the education of misses and young ladies, are respectfully notified that the epidemic having disappeared, the studies at the Baton Rouge Female Seminary were resumed on WEDNESDAY the 9th inst, [n26] M. W. READ, Principal.

CENTENARY INSTITUTE, ALA
This Institution of Learning has been in successful operation for ten years, is situated eight miles north of Selma, and is the child and property of the Alabama Conference.
There are two departments, male and female. In the male department young men are prepared for the junior class in any college, or if they choose, complete their education here. The female department is regularly organized as a college.
The course of study is extensive, and the instruction thorough. The teaching is done mainly by men of age and experience, (not by girls.)
The President (Rev. A. H. Mitchell) is a minister of the gospel, of twenty odd years standing, and during most of that time has been connected with literary institutions of the church in Georgia, South Carolina and Alabama. He is assisted by seven others, most of whom are persons of age and experience, and all, with one exception, professors of religion. A majority of the Board of Trustees are members of the Alabama Conference, which fact is a sufficient guarantee of its successful management.
Board and tuition are as low as can be afforded, and lower than most institutions of similar grade.
The next term opens the first Monday in October, and closes the first Wednesday in July. For further particulars, apply to the President, at Summerfield, Ala.
B. J. HARRISON, Secretary.

FEMALE MASONIC INSTITUTE,
Dayton, Marengo County, Alabama.
Rev. E. D. Pitts, Principal.
TO PARENTS, GUARDIANS, AND THE FRIENDS OF EDUCATION GENERALLY, we would announce the opening of the TENTH Annual Session of the Institute. The healthful locality—the spacious and beautiful grounds—the commodious and convenient buildings—the full supply of Musical Instruments—the fixed purpose of the Trustees to spare no expense or efforts to promote the true interests of FEMALE EDUCATION—and the assiduous devotion of an efficient Faculty to promote the comfort and improvement of Pupils, lead us to expect with confidence a liberal support.
The Principal has taught with marked success in Alabama, Mississippi and Florida, and will consecrate all his energies—physical, intellectual, and moral—to the proper training of the head and heart of those committed to his tutelage.
The services of Miss MARY W. HOWEN, who has been for two years past connected with the Central Masonic University, have been secured. Her intelligence, energy, piety, and felicitous manner of communicating, have justly placed her in the first rank of educators.
The Musical, French, and Ornamental Department will be conducted by competent and skillful Teachers, and all due attention given to the arts and accomplishments that so beautify and adorn the gentler sex.
The Primary Department will be confided alone to a skilful and gifted Lady, for we design to attend carefully to that sadly and miscellaneously neglected class of Pupils.
The Scholastic year is divided into Two Sessions of nearly Five Months each—with no intervening recess. The School opens on the first day of October, and closes with Examination Exercises in the latter part of July. Pupils received at any time, and charged to the end of the Session. For fractions of Sessions each week is counted one twentieth.
The School is not Sectarian or denominational; and the only religious tuition embraces the principles of a pure morality based upon the cardinal doctrines of the Bible.
The Principal and his wife have charge of the Stewards Department, and will tenderly care for the health, manners and morals of those who Board in the Institute. Each boarder will be made to feel as far as possible that she is the loved subject of parental solicitude, and every reasonable wish will be promptly and cheerfully gratified. Yet Discipline will not be forgotten, and the needful restraints of family government will be thrown around them.
CHARGES PER SESSION OF FIVE MONTHS.

Primary Class	$12 50
Preparatory Class	15 00
Junior and Senior Class	20 00
Music on Piano, Guitar and Harp, (each)	25 00
Drawing, Painting and Embroidery, (each)	10 00
French and German, (each)	15 00
Incidentals	1 00
LATIN included in the Regular Course.
BOARD (including Washing, Fuel and Lights) per month	10 00

Each Boarder must furnish her own Towels, Brushes and Combs, and have each article distinctly marked with her full name.
AN INVARIABLE RULE—Board and Tuition one-half in advance, and the balance at the end of each Session; and every account must be closed at the end of each Session, by Cash, or by Note.
SPECIAL ARRANGEMENT.
Each Lodge in Marengo County is entitled to select within its jurisdiction, a worthy object of benefaction, and have her taught in the Institution without charge, provided said Lodge secure the payment of her Board and supply her with Books and Stationery.
As the Principal is so extensively known, the Committee have forborne to speak of his character and qualifications, and refer Parents and Guardians to the persons named below.

OAK BOWERY FEMALE COLLEGE.
This Institution of learning is under the supervision and control of the Alabama Conference of the M. E. Church, South, and has been in successful operation for six years. It is situated about five miles north of the Montgomery and West Point Railroad, in Chambers county, in a healthy country, and among a population, moral, industrious and intelligent.
The Board of Trustees take great pleasure in announcing to the public, the election of the Rev. ALEX STERR, of Georgia, to the Presidency of the College. We think it only necessary to be known, that the Institution will be for the next year under the charge and direction of Brother Speer, to awaken a deep interest in behalf of the enterprise throughout the community, and insure confidence of success. His long and faithful service in the M. E. Church as a minister—his age and experience—his natural judgment and sound discretion—his acknowledged literary attainments and ability, authorise the expectation of full patronage on the part of an enlightened public.
A complete corps of Instructors whose names will hereafter be published, will be provided to supply the demand for instruction.
Miss MARY J. TOOMER continues Principal in the Music Department; and the unbounded satisfaction hitherto given by Miss Toomer, who we consider has no superior in any country, is a sure guarantee that all who patronize will be pleased.
Through the kind offices of the former President, the Rev. Wm F. Samford, who solicited contributions for that purpose, a fine and judiciously selected Library, of several hundred volumes, has been purchased, and is now in the possession of the College, embracing some of the most approved and standard literary works, and such as are peculiarly adapted to the purposes of Female Education.
The Tuition Fees will be no higher than usual, and the course of study as extensive as that in any institution of the same grade in the country.
The College Exercises will begin under the proposed organization, on the first Monday in January next—its second session will begin on the first Monday in September, and close at Christmas.
A circular, containing fuller information, will appear over the signature of the President.

The fees for the first half the scholastic year are as follows:

Primary Department	$12 00
First, Sophomore and Middle Classes, each	20 00
Junior and Senior Classes, each	22 50
Music	25 00
Use of piano	2 50
Contingent fee	1 00
Board, including lodging, washing and fuel	60 00

The above fees are required to be paid on the first day of October.
Fees of the same amount, for the second half of the scholastic year, are required to be paid on the 15th of February, 1854.
An extra fee of $20 is charged for French.
The course of study in this institution is as extensive as that in any institution for the education of females and the instruction is of the most critical and thorough character. Every provision has been made to ensure success. A philosophical and chemical apparatus adequate to all the purposes of instruction has been provided, together with maps, charts, globes, etc. The instructors are experienced in their work, and highly approved for capacity, fidelity and skill.
This institution has just closed the first year of its existence, with the most satisfactory results. And the public may feel assured that the Trustees will watch over its interests with the utmost solicitude and care, and spare no pains to render its system of education as perfect as possible.
The tuition fees have been somewhat reduced, and are below those of many Southern institutions of no higher grade. It is impossible to engage teachers of the highest character for talents, attainments and skill, without paying liberal salaries. But we offer as an equivalent, above all price, a faithful and skillful application of the most approved means of developing and training the mind.
Printed circulars, containing fuller information, may be had by application to Alex. Glasgock, Esq., Secretary of the Board.

MARION FEMALE SEMINARY.
MARION, PERRY COUNTY, ALABAMA.
FACULTY.
REV. JAMES K. ARMSTRONG, A. M., Principal, and Professor of Mental, Moral and Natural Science.
H. M. DALY, A. M., Professor of Vocal and Instrumental Music.
MISS E. L. HASKELL, English.
MISS M. J. BONDURANT, English.
MISS PIRNEN FULLEM, Drawing, Painting, French and Guitar.
MISS J. V. CLARK, Primary and Preparatory Department.
MRS. L. J. ARMSTRONG, Governess.
MRS. REBECCA CLARK, Matron and Nurse.
This institution has just closed a prosperous year, with one hundred and twenty-six pupils.
The ensuing session will commence on THURSDAY, the 29th day of SEPTEMBER.
It is very desirable that pupils enter at the beginning of the session.
The main building is a new and superior brick edifice, one hundred by fifty feet, three stories, and for elegance, convenience of arrangement—for summer, size and comfort of school and private rooms—is not surpassed by any similar one in the country.
The Principal resides in the building, and superintends the Boarding Department. He has in his employ a gentleman and his lady, who discharge with faithfulness and satisfaction the duties of this position. Pupils boarding in the Seminary are under the immediate control of the Principal at all times—are members of his family.
The Matron and Nurse, a lady of great amiability and kindness of heart, united with long experience and untiring faithfulness, secures to pupils, at all times, the kindness and attentions of home.
The Principal and his lady, with the aid of the Female Teachers, all of whom reside in the Seminary, diligently guard and form the morals, manners and habits of the young ladies.
There is but one session, of nine and a half months. Pupils can enter at any time during the session, charges like from the beginning of the month in which they enter to the close of the session.
One hundred and forty-five dollars will pay the board and tuition of a young lady, for the entire session, in the collegiate department; one hundred and seventy-four dollars will embrace the languages; two hundred and thirty-five dollars will embrace board, tuition in the collegiate department, on the piano, and in the languages.
The above estimate does not include books, stationery, sheet music, ornamental materials and lights; all of which articles are furnished by the Principal on moderate terms.
This institution is furnished with a new and complete Chemical, Philosophical and Astronomical apparatus. It also has a large collection of globes, terrestial and celestial; and celestial maps, atlases, charts plates and diagrams, for simplifying the various branches of Natural Science.
The Library consists of more than one thousand volumes, embracing a choice collection in every department of Literature, Art, Science, History, &c., &c.
The Cabinet consists of several hundred specimens.
The institution is furnished with a large and superior assortment of musical instruments.
The Church and Sabbath School facilities are

WASTED.

"He had wasted his goods."—Luke, xv.

Wasted!

Precious pearls of TIME,
Moments rich as diadems!
One by one they come unnoted;
One by one afar they floated!
One by one! till myriads sped,
Far away to join the dead.
Till that lost life, shatter'd broken,
Won no heaven-born light nor token—
Drifted to the fearful shore,
Helpless, hopeless evermore!

Wasted!

Gifts of deathless mind
By the hand eternal given
They hed mounted to the skies,
Meet and reverent sacrifice
To the Majesty of heuvan;
But the spirit lyre, erst strung
To sweet harmonies unspoken,
Shiver'd, and its deep chords broken,
Mermnreth but of songs unsung;
Of rich melodies flung wildly
On fame's gorgeous alter-fire;
One brief moment in its brightness
Flashing, swiftly to expire;
Of high purposes all blasted,
Talents hidden, treasures wasted!
Cnsecrate at Memmon's shrine,
Owning not the Hend Divine.

Wasted!

Founts of deepest love,
Gifts of mercy from above,
Lavish'd on a humen breast,
Striving for an earthly rest;
On a human idol pouring
Treasures from affaction's deep;
At a humaa shrino adoring,
Waking but to writhe and weep!
Starting from its dream of rapture
At the touch of mortal care:
On its shiver'd idols gazing,
In the frenzy of cespair.
Heart sore stricken! Love Eternal
Woos thee from a heavenly throne,
He, the world's Redeemer, esks theo
Now to trust the unchanging One!

Wasted—youth's rich golden hours!
Wested—loftiest, mightiest powers!
Wasted—manhood's glorious prime,
Hopes, nnd aims, and thoughts sublime!

Weep'st thou? Ere life's setting sun,
Ere Time's flasting sands be ran,
Rouse thee from ignoble rest,
Toil to win the land more blest.
Swiftly are thy moments flying;
Up! ere hope be drooping, dying!
Ere high purposes all blasted
Speak thy life forever wasted!

REPORT OF THE MISSIONARY SOCIETY OF THE ALABAMA CONFERENCE, 1853.

At the last session of the Alabama Conference twenty-eight Missions were recognized with its bounds. The reports of the Missionaries we condense as follows:

1. The German Mission in Mobile was served by C. Herwig, who reports 16 members. It is in contemplation to build a church in Mobile for the Germans.

2. The Mobile City Mission was served by W. H. Milburn, from whom we have no report.

3. The Portersville Mission was served by G. H. Jackson, who reports 130 white and 53 colored members. He has labored extensively and not without success.

4. Bigbee Colored Mission was served by I. G. Rush, who reports 49 members. $34 50 was contributed on the Mission.

5. Arcola Colored Mission has prospered under the ministry of A. McBryde, who reports 17 preaching places, 18 plantations, 317 members, 319 children catechised, 1450 persons preached to; $371 50 contributed by the patrons, who take great interest in the prosperity of the mission.

6. Magnolia Mission has never been developed.

7. Dayton Colored Mission suffered at the beginning of the year by the failure of Bro. Bond's health; it was afterward served by F. Walker, who reports 12 preaching places, 17 plantations, 174 members, 243 children catechised, 1100 persons preached to; $188 90 contributed by the patrons, who are pleased with the mission. The Presiding Elder has received a good influence on this and the Arcola mission, on both of which, under the great labors of Bros. McBryde and Walker, a number have been converted. Three missionaries instead of two are demanded for the work on these missions.

8. Prairie Creek Colored Mission was served by J. M. Walls, who reports 14 appointments, 1600 people, most of whom are under catechetical instruction, 485 members, of whom 170 joined this year. The patrons have then support it and wish its continuance, and other planters wish their plantations embraced in the mission.

9. Plymouth Colored Mission has been served by L. J. Schoolar, who reports 18 appointments, 218 members, increase 61; children catechised 250, and 30 baptised. It is very promising, as the planters take so lively an interest in it; they will pay $200 for its support; it will be greatly enlarged as nearly all the planters in that region are favorable to missionary operations among their servants.

10. Sipsey Mission was organised last Conference; it is promising; it has 6 appointments, 64 white and 20 colored members. G. W. Gillespie was the missionary.

11. Walker Mission was served by E. Sullivan, who reports 161 white and 2 colored members, 7 local preachers; $80 raised. It is desired that it should be made a Circuit.

12. Mancock Mission was served by J. W. Haring, who reports 8 churches, 13 appointments, 42 joined, 3 expelled, 2 died, 6 Sunday Schools, 550 preached to; $19 75 raised on the mission.

13. Pikeville Mission was served by J. Gross, who reports it prosperous; 170 having joined, 41 baptised, 26 Sunday School scholars; $59 raised—324 white and 2 colored members.

14. Warrior Mission was served by A. Watson, who reports 196 white and 4 colored members; 40 joined, 112 S. School scholars; $72 raised.

15. Sand Mountain Mission was served by W. D. Nicholson, who reports 362 members, of whom 120 were received this year into full membership. 135 on trial, 47 baptised, 15 appointments; $73 50 raised; 110 S. School scholars, 6 local preachers. It is prosperous.

16. Coosa Mission was served by E. Patten, who reports it as an experiment, which he thinks sufficiently successful to warrant its continuance. He says it is opposed by Hard Shell, Two Seed and Missionary Baptists, who have great influence in that region. Its continuence is desired by the people.

17. Hillabee Mission was served by S. E. Swope, who reports 14 appointments, 500 members, of whom 100 joined this year. After another year it may be developed into a Circuit.

18. Ookmulgee Colored Mission was served by J. W. Holston, who reports 10 appointments, 1200 preached to, 150 catechised, 122 baptised, 234 members. The patrons are pleased with the mission and contributed $156 20, and are expected to contribute $50 more.

19. Catoma Colored Mission was served by J. W. Broxson, who reports 235 colored members, 80 joined this year, 6 expelled, 10 died. There are also 11 white members. The patrons contributed $128 50 for its support and wish its continuance. It is promising.

20. Big Swamp Colored Mission was served by A. Skinner and D. Hearlong, who report 18 appointments, 235 colored and 6 white members, 284 children catechised, 19 adults and 78 children baptised, 7 dropped, 4 died. The patrons contributed $282 50 for its support, and desire its continuance.

21. Andrew Colored Mission, in Macon co., was served by W. N. Sears, with whose services the planters and their servants appear to be well pleased—the latter profiting greatly by his labors. He reports 224 members, a net increase of 113, catechumens 516, 1455 preached to. The extension of the mission is desired.

22. Uchee colored Mission was served by W. C. Turner, who reports 12 appointments, 2500 preached to, 400 children catechised, 100 received on trial, 400 members. He speaks in high terms of the results of catechising, and says the planters are much pleased with the mission and want two missionaries, as the field is indefinitely extending.

23. Chambers Colored Mission was left to be supplied, but was not supplied.

24. Cattahoochee Colored Mission was served by A. Tatom, who reports 22 preaching places, 1000 preached to, 454 children catechised, 53 adults and 188 children baptised, 63 received on trial, 4 expelled, 13 dropped, 3 withdrawn, 3 died, leaving 390 members. The patrons are liberal in supporting it.

25. Chunnenuggee Colored Mission was served by G. W. Carter, who reports 6 appointments, 224 members; $41 received from patrons, who wish its continuance. It is improving.

26. Enon and Treadwell Colored Mission was served by J. Carter, who reports 120 members, 37 children catechised. The mission is promising; $100 was contributed by one of the patrons.

27. Ochese Mission was served by L. Petterson, who reports 99 white and 70 colored members, of whom 40 whites and 12 colored joined this year, 6 withdrawn, 6 died, 5 removed; $75 received on the mission.

28. Pea River Mission was served by Z. Dowling, who reports 21 appointments, 55 received on trial, 5 by certificate, 1 expelled, 4 dropped, 29 children and 1 adult baptised; $65 received. The work is large enough for two missionaries.

29. In addition to the foregoing, the Presiding Elder of the Tuscaloosa district, has recognised a mission, which he calls Prairie Grove, embracing 9 plantations, 3 appointments, 400 colored people, 100 of whom are members. The missionary, J. Du Bois, reports 48 conversions on one plantation; 32 of them were baptised at one time. He has baptised 60 children, and will receive from the patrons probably $160.

30. Chippola Mission, Fla., was organized by the Presiding Elder of the Eufula district, and J. G. Russ was appointed to serve it. He reports 14 appointments, 42 white and 12 colured persons have joined the church; $250 raised on the mission.

31. Lockey Colored Mission was also organised by the Presiding Elder of the Eufula district, who appointed J. P. Lockey to serve it. He reports 9 appointments, 45 received on trial, 16 baptised, 1 expelled, 250 catechised. The mission is increasing in interest.

The foregoing facts and figures are truly encouraging. A great and effectual door is opened to the evangelisation of the colored people on the plantations in Alabama and Mississippi, and we are called to enter it. But while we are attending to this important work, we must not forget that the field of missionary enterprise is the world.

The apparent comparative failure of Christianity has long been a source of depression to its friends and of exultation to its foes. If the Christian religion be catholic in its constitution and claims, how is it that after nearly 2000, not to say 6000 years, three-fourths of the human family are ignorant of its existence, and only a mere fragment—a hundredth part—has been brought under its saving influence? A formidable question, we confess. A century ago an answer was found in the decree of God—"Even so, Father, for so it seemed good in thy sight." But as this involves absurdity, if not blasphemy, other solutions have been furnished. The lack of zeal—the lack of liberality—the lack of judgment on the part of the church—this will account for the failure. So it will. But generalities like this do not much affect the minds of men; the culprits will plead guilty to the charge, and yet not adopt reformatory measures. And the reason for their delinquency is not always found in an indolent, or parsimonious, or stolid disposition—the true cause is to be sought aback of this; and it is our business to seek it out in order to its removal.

One of the impediments to the progress of Christianity is the vague notion entertained by many Christians that it will never require universal prevalence in the earth without some radical change in the Divine economy.

The patriarchal dispensation had its period predetermined, and, great as were the wants of the world, the Jewish dispensation could not be initiated until the former era expired. The latter had its term of 1500 years assigned it—thus long and no longer was it predetermined to last. So Christianity will never gain the conquest of the world until a specific time shall come—a time known to God, because predetermined by him. We are safe in saying, the divine predestination is innocent of all this. Omniscience, of course, knows when the world will be converted, as well as the time when every man who ever will be converted will experience the transition from death unto life; but who will affirm that God has foreordained that no one shall repent and believe the gospel until he arrives at a certain age? And if he would have all men to repent now—if to-day is his accepted time—is it not preposterous and impious to say that the world must, by a divine decree, wax old in wickedness before it can be converted to the faith of Christ?

Some have imagined that the set time for missionary operations will come when the church shall be endowed with pentecostal powers, fitting it for the momentous undertaking, and not before. Surely this opinion cannot be extorted from the Bible. Only one Christian pentecost is promised there, and that took place ten days after our Lord's ascension. The inspiration then vouchsafed to the church including the charismata, or miraculous endowments, lasted to the close of the apostolic age; it then passed away, and we have no intimation that it will ever be imparted again.

As to the millennial delusion, it has not an inch of revelation or reason on which to stand. The millennial scheme is point blank opposed to missionary movements. If the world is to wax worse and worse until the second coming of Christ—if he is to come in bodily person to reign in the city of Jerusalem—if his enemies are to be destroyed by the brightness of his coming—if he is to have none but friends upon the earth for a thousand years—if after that period the nations are to be deceived by Satan, and making war against the saints, are to be again destroyed preparatory to the initiation of the heavenly and eternal state: if this self-contradictory and preposterous scheme be maintained, than it only adds to its absurdity to affirm that the world will ever be converted. It never can be—never, unless the day-dream of some good men—Prof. Tholuck, for example—is to be realized, that another state of probation will be vouchsafed in the future world to those who have never heard the gospel in the present. We cannot pronounce this opinion preposterous—all it wants is Scripture proof—of this it can challenge none.

If the infidel world is to be reduced to the obedience of faith, it must be under the present dispensation, and by the appliences which God by his providence and grace now secures to the church; nothing more is needed than a proper use of the means laid at our disposal. In proportion to the prevalence of other views among Christian people will the Missionary cause be retarded in its progress.

But alas! the moral condition of the church almost lays an embargo on missionary operations.

The counter-reformation which began on the continent of Europe with the rise of the Jesuits, has been going on until many portions of Germany and Holland that were considered reliable Protestant have relapsed into Popery. The Reformed Church of France has dwindled down to a mere remnant, scarcely deemed worthy of persecution by the infidel usurper or his Popish myrmidons. The treatment of Beaoni, Gavazzi, the Madiai, and Maria Cunningham reveals the condition of Italy, while the peninsula has long been nothing better than a dreary void. The papal aggression in England, so feebly resisted by the British government and so scandalously promoted by trimming Puseyites and infatuated perverts, has disclosed a weakness in the very citadel of Protestantism, which we are ashamed to tell in Gath and blush to publish in the streets of Askelon. The same Romeward tendencies are seen this side of the Atlantic. Truckling to the great unwashed masses of European papists drifted upon our shores, is the disgrace of our office-seeking politicians and time-serving conductors of the secular press. The Legislature of California has yielded to the demands of Popery in regard to the common school question, and thus set the example to the Legislatures of other States, which some of them seem almost ready to follow. And we need not wonder if the concordat policy, Jesuitically modified and disguised, should after a while be recommended for some of our more popish States and Territories. Popish chaplaincies in our public institutions have been already demanded on the ground of the overwhelming majority of popish paupers and criminals. Meanwhile priests and demons of the so-called Anglo-American church are frequently leaving that communion for Rome; and it was reserved for our country and time to furnish to the great apostasy the first apostate prelate. The most violent and unscrupulous defenders of the papacy, as the editors of popish journals were, a few years since, ministers or members of Protestant churches. They are now shameless and impudent enough to advocate ultramontane doctrines, even to the extent of crushing civil and religious liberty in this country, boldly affirming their determination to do so when they have the power. Notwithstanding all this, Protestants betray but little concern—indeed, many of them send their children to popish schools, thus paving the way for their perversion and facilitating the papal aggression. What is, perhaps, still more ominous, the dry rot of Popery has been insidiously working its way into the very heart of one of our communions—the German Reformed Church—until the developments have well nigh brought about its ostracism from the fellowship of Protestant christendom.

On the other hand, the neology of Germany, partly yielded to and feebly opposed by the followers of Schleiermacher, Neander, and others, has affected almost all classes on the continent, except the dupes of superstition—it is working out its baleful results in Great Britain and New England, and even our own more conservative region has not escaped its influence. The infidelity of the Martineaus, Foxes, Parkers—the clique of the Westminster Review—is far more intense than some will admit, and vastly more prevalent than others imagine. Without adverting to the Atheism, Pantheism, and other systems of unbelief, boldly avowed by Socialists, Turners, and other immigrants, it is alarming to see how skepticism has invaded our American sanctuaries and how many reputed Christians scarcely know whether or not the doctrins of Christ be of God.

How deplorable, too, is the spectacle which the Evangelical Churches present in the schisms and contentions so rife among them. The various sects into which Christendom is partitioned are engaged in an apparently internecine conflict, a guerilla warfare, disgraceful and desolating—a mere beating and mangling of the men-servants and maid-servants of our common Master. Here is a faction which tries to put down all who can not recognize the importance of certain endless genealogies and old wives' fables about prelatical succession. Here is another which attempts to revive the bootless controversy about absolute predestination and cognate points, equally offensive to reason and Revelation—points which a man cannot believe, though he may, perchance, fancy, fear or hope that he does; some of the best men in the church are employed in asserting them, and others in refuting them, thus strengthening the ranks of infidelity and chilling off the forces of the sacramental host from their legitimate field of action, employing them insanely in this civil war. How bitter and prolonged is the strife occasioned by the efforts of some to exclude children from the church, and to invalidate the initiatory rite, if the subject be not plunged into the water! Alas! that a difference of opinion on such points should embroil the whole church in angry and unending controversy, weakening its moral force and diverting its attention from its proper work, the conquest of the world.

An incontinent desire and demand for immediate and prodigious results in the missionary field operates very unfavorably on the cause of missions.

It argues a lack of faith. "Except ye see signs and wonders, ye will not believe." Miraculous powers were imparted to the apostles to authenticate the new dispensation; their perpetuation, age after age, is contrary to the reason of things, contrary to the law of miracles. Even if missionaries were supernaturally favored with polyglottal endowments, it does not follow that every nation which might hear in its own tongue the wonderful works of God would immediately become obedient to the faith. The Apostles themselves had to shake off the dust of their feet against the people of some places for their obstinate resistance of the evidences of Christianity—the miraculous and the moral combined. Others, they warned night and day with tears, and after long patience reaped the fruit of their labors. So must it be with us. It must be borne in mind, too, that the wholesale conversion of kingdoms and tribes in the centuries subsequent to the times of the Apostles, can scarcely be considered a work of evangelization; it was only a commencement. How long-continued were the oscillations between paganism and Christianity among the Anglo-Saxons, Germans, Scandinavians, Muscovites and other nations! How imperfect, even now, is the evangelization of many portions of Christendom. Were we to adopt the policy of the papist, or even of some of the fathers, we could report whole nations born in a day. By fraud or force, or the union of both, we might induce an ignorant, savage people to submit to baptism, leading or drawing them by herds into the water; but we have not so learned Christ. And as in Christendom men do not all at once become religious, but now one, then another—sometimes a small number, at other times a larger number, espouse the faith—we ought not to be surprised if such be the developments in heathen lands. In some cases the apparent success is on a larger scale. The Wesleyans in Polynesia, and in some other places, about twenty years since, multiplied their converts in a ratio suggestive of Pentecostal times. The American Board also in the Sandwich Islands have realized astounding success; nevertheless, this was not without much faith, and prayer, and labor, and patience; and now, after the lapse of thirty years, and the outlay of $800,000, and incessant anxiety and toil, they are able to pronounce the Islands a part of Christendom no longer dependent on missionary support. But suppose it to be otherwise—suppose we have to labor, like Judson, for many years, without gaining a convert—must we cease our exertions? Is our duty measured by our success?

This impatient demand for results—immediate and magnificent results—is the bane of the missionary cause. It is the bane of the cause of God at home. It leads to the substitution of ostentatious human measures for the simple methods which God has appointed for the extension of the church. We must move men in masses, by machinery, or we make no effort to move them at all. We cannot condescend to small matters; line upon line, precept upon precept, here a little and there a little, the force of example, private admonition, personal influence, the training of the young, and similar modes of propagating the principles and extending the area of Christianity—all this is too plodding, especially in this age of lightning and steam. We must clear the forest with a tornado—we cannot cut it down tree by tree with an axe: this impatience and impetuosity we carry into the foreign field. We are always on the qui vive for the signs of the times—not merely that we may be prepared to co-operate with Divine Providence in every new dispensation, but that we may see some great thing, some marvelous display of supernatural power. If the wall of China be so far broken down that our missionaries can have access to some of its teeming millions, we are transported with joy. If an insurgent army, menacing the Tartar dynasty, evince an iconoclastic spirit and manifest some acquaintance with Christianity, we sanguinely precipitate the conclusion that salvation is at length come to the Celestial Empire. If Rome be encompassed with armies and Turkey be threatened with a Russian invasion, we feel sure that the beast and the false prophet are to be forthwith cast into the bottomless pit. When omens of this sort present themselves, we are ready to exclaim, "God hath spoken in his holiness, I will rejoice; I will divide Shechem and mete out the Valley of Succoth." We then readily believe that the world will be converted, and that right early. But suppose Pius IX. should not be the last Pope—suppose the Turkish dynasty should weather the storm, or the insurgents should succeed and then assume a sinister attitude to Christianity—suppose Turkey should not be speedily overthrown, what effect will he produced on our faith and zeal by this disappointment of our cherished expectations? The former falters and the latter fails—whereas our devotion to the missionary cause ought not to be affected by such considerations. They do not make the enterprise rational or practical—puerile or important. Its character and our obligations are determined by a more sure word of prophecy, the predictions, promises and precepts of Divine Revelation. If our faith and hope be founded on this basis, our zeal will be a steady flame, and our services will be unremitting and earnest, but not otherwise. If nothing will satisfy us but present results, immediate and ostensible prosperity, prodigious developments, we might as well abandon the cause of missions, and, indeed, renounce Christianity in toto. For the kingdom of heaven is like unto the morning light, which shineth more and more, by a gradual increase, unto the perfect day; it is like the seed cast into the ground, which springeth and groweth up a man knoweth not how, first the blade, then the ear, after that the full grown corn in the ear; it is like the little leaven and the grain of mustard seed, incomparably small and invisibly erective, though magnificent in its ultimate development. We must consider it in this light, or our services and sacrifices for its promotion will be fitful and subsultory, ill-bestowed, and perhaps, very soon not bestowed at all.

We calmly suggest that the Missionary cause is retarded by the ill-proportioned efforts put forth for its promotion.

Were any nation seized with the spirit of universal dominion and resolved to enter upon the conquest of the world, what preparations for the enterprise would there be; what care in the selection of men to lead it forward—what attention would be bestowed on their training, what liberality in their equipment, what efforts to secure men sufficient for armies of invasion and occupation, what secret councils would there be, what multiplied correspondences, gazetteerings, and dispatches, what absorbing interest in the movement of every expedition, the progress of every campaign, the state of every siege, the result of every engagement! All other matters, public and private, would be subordinated to this. Indeed, the occurrence of a war between any two nations will excite this interest; and even other countries that are remotely, if at all, affected by the result, will sympathize with one or the other of the belligerent parties, perhaps render it aid and comfort, deplore its failure or rejoice in its success. And what is the end had in view in all this array of men, measures and means, services, sacrifices, and sufferings? Perhaps civil and religious liberty; and God forbid that we should ever withhold any thing at our disposal to secure that precious boon. We may not stop to notice the contemptible or diabolical ends which usually prompt to blood and carnage; always, indeed, in the case of wars which are waged for universal dominion—but what are even the most commendable, the most important, interests which can be thus subserved, compared with the deliverance of man from the thraldom of the devil, by the overthrow of his damning usurpation and the conquest and subjugation of the world to Jesus Christ, who is the rightful Lord of all? And yet how little interest, zeal and concern does the Church manifest in this great undertaking! Does she select her choicest sons for standard bearers? does she take pains to train them for the service? does she levy a tribute on all her available resources to furnish the sinews of war? does she think, feel, converse, counsel, correspond continually on the state, progress, successes, failures of the forlorn hope, the little detachment, the small body of crusaders she has sent to the battle-field? Alas! no, she does not. She seems not to act in character, but in caricature, as if she had no other object in view than to give proof of her want of faith and earnestness and to impress the world with an idea of the small importance as well as the hopelessness of the cause. See how contemptibly trifling are the contributions of men of means—mean men, the world would call them, were they correspondingly restricted in their appropriations to the lust of the flesh, the lust of the eyes and the pride of life. More money is spent in the evening recreations of a single city of one of our States than all Christendom contributes to the Missionary cause. And what is more mortifying still, nearly all kinds of manœuvres have to be resorted to for the purpose of extorting from close-fisted christians the doits which are doled out for this enterprise. Where is the collector of revenues for the missionary exchequer that does not feel constantly burdened and pained—that does not frequently blush as well for the measures adopted to secure the modicum of support which the cause receives as for the detestable covetousness which occasions their adoption? Perhaps he is sometimes tempted to return the thirty pieces of silver, hardly thinking it lawful to employ that in the cause of truth and love which was furnished grudgingly or of necessity, as if it were the price of blood.

What then is the conclusion of the whole matter? Shall we abandon the cause of missions as a hopeless enterprise? Not unless we are prepared to abandon Christianity, for the one involves the other. We must not deny our duty, or ignore it, or postpone it, or perform it in a perfunctory manner, as the difficulty of performing it does not diminish its importance. We must not suspend the discharge of our obligations or the fidelity of others, their performances not being the measure of our duty, nor their delinquencies an excuse for our indifference, but rather an incentive to greater zeal on our part to supply their lack of service. We must not let the distracted and feeble condition of the Church discourage us and check our endeavors to promote its extension—as the best way to quell a civil war is to proclaim war with a foreign power. We must not let the parsimoniousness of professing Christians be a cloak for our covetousness, but rather make the prodigality of the world the standard of our liberality; or, better still, acting on the high principle of Christian piety and benevolence, consecrate ourselves and our all to the cause of God and humanity, after the example of our blessed Saviour: "For ye know the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, that though he was rich, yet for your sakes he became poor, that ye through his poverty might be rich." Standing on the platform of inspiration, surrounded, sustained, challenged and encouraged by predictions, precepts, promise and performance, no successes or failures, however they may excite our joy or sorrow, ought for a moment to affect our faith, or hope, or zeal. The conversion of one sinner proves the truth and power of Christianity, the conversion of sinners from among all nations, and kindreds, and people, and tongues, shows its catholic character, its universal adaptation—the conversion of so many sinners, by so small an outlay of effort on the part of the church might well lead us to conclude that, with effort proportioned to the interests involved, the whole world—excepting, of course, the wilfully incorrigible—might be speedily converted to God. Let us trust the prophecy, "As truly as I live, all the earth shall be filled with the glory of the Lord." Let us obey the precept, "Go ye into all the world and preach the Gospel to every creature." Let us endorse the promise, "To him shall he given of the gold of Sheba, prayer also shall be made for him continually, and daily shall he be praised." Let us reiterate the prayer, "Let the people praise thee, O God: let all the people praise thee."

HINTS TO CLASS LEADERS—FORMALITY IN CLASS MEETINGS.

The most obvious and prevalent evil in our class meetings is formality; an evil, which no other kind of religious meeting will so ill endure. A large measure of Christian friendliness, of brotherly confidence, and even of conversational freedom, is requisite, or the occasion will become cold and uninteresting. One means of preventing this is discrimination of character on the part of the Leader. Where the Leader addresses all his members in about the same way, dealing in general terms of encouragement or of caution, and never coming to particulars, the members are not drawn out; they will learn to speak in like general terms; many of them will by and by say as little as possible. A meeting of this kind must be extremely insipid to persons of good sense and intelligence. There are certain, generalities in which all the members agree; two or three divisions, at most, would comprise them all; but there are among twenty people innumerable shades of belief, degrees of faith and love, modes of temptation, means of resistance, peculiarities of experience, excellences or defects in practice, which, if properly brought out, would afford an exhaustless store of mutual edification. To speak merely in general, to neglect individual peculiarities, and then imagine that Christian instruction has done its work, is to be guilty of a most serious mistake.

One useful rule would be to vary the manner in which the members are severally addressed. The unvarying repetition of the question, "How is it with you?" tends to formality. Many things may serve to vary the manner of addressing them; such as irregularity of attendance, statements previously made, family position, youth, or age, peculiarity of circumstances or of mind. The Leader's remarks might sometimes be made before the member speaks; in short, anything to avoid monotonous repetition, so long as it is consistent with propriety, and with the object of the meeting.

It is also needful to draw members out of that general and indefinite way of speaking to which reference has been made. This may also be effected by a few well-judged questions. Thus, when discouragements are alluded to, the request, "Can you tell us what discouragements these have been?" would sometimes elicit an instructive account, and at other times would teach the person that he really had no discouragements worth talking of—a most valuable lesson. Or, when it is stated that some progress has been made, instead of taking it all for granted, and allowing the individual to be altogether his own judge, it would be useful to ask, "What leads you to think you have been making progress?" This would be productive of many advantages. It would promote the habit of self-examination. It would discourage speaking in hackneyed or cant phrases. It would secure variety, and lead persons to think before they speak. Many persons are nervous at the idea of having to make a speech. No pains should be spared to dissipate this idea, and to encourage a free, natural way of talking, (of course, with a becoming seriousness,) such as is adopted in ordinary conversation. The members do not meet to hear a series of short speeches, but to hold a free religious conversation—a kind of domestic service. Nor does it seem necessary to adhere strictly at all times to the form of the member's statement and the Leader's reply. As a general way of proceeding, this is undoubtedly the best; but when circumstances lead to it, why should not a general conversation be allowed, care being taken to avoid controversy and family secrets?

This is by no means the easiest method of conducting a class. On the contrary, it demands much thought on the part of the Leader. Great profit may be secured where he makes a special study of each individual under his care. Without this, there may be lively meetings, but higher ends will be unattained. In no department of Christian labor is a constant study of character, united with moral courage and deep-seated kindliness of spirit, more needful or more richly rewarded. These are not every-day qualifications: indeed, the thought and study necessary to the right discharge of a Leader's function are popularly underrated. His weekly meeting may be compared to the daily round of a medical man. He inquires into the symptoms of each patient, traces them in his own mind to their cause, and prescribes accordingly. He remembers exactly the state in which the patient was the day before, and notes the advancement or the lessening of the disease. When his round is completed, he retraces his steps, considers the case of each person severally, bestows special thought on critical cases, anxiously reviews the symptoms of those whose progress is not satisfactory, decides what advice ought to be given, and thus equips himself for the round of the ensuing day. What would be the success of a practitioner who bestowed no thought on his patients except when no was actually in the sick room? or of one who treated them all on general principles, without regard to the peculiarities of each case?

It is also necessary, and never more so than now, to give due prominence to practical duties. Experience is one thing, practice is another; and it may be questioned whether the latter has its due place among us. Where the attention is diverted from outward duties, and fixed on inward feelings, the result is Antinomianism. It may seem strange that such a tendency should exist among us, when we reflect on the very practical character of the Rules of the Methodist Societies. Possibly, as every good thing may be abused, the prominence given in our theology to the doctrine of the Witness of the Spirit may have tended to exalt inward experience disproportionately in our estimation, to the comparative depreciation of duties. We commonly ask those whose religious state we wish to ascertain, "Have you the witness of the Spirit?"—a most important question. But would it not be well to inquire more frequently than we do, (in the pulpit no less than in the class-room) whether they have the fruits of the Spirit?—seeing it is by these only that the genuineness of what they believe to be the witness of the Spirit can be tested? The government of the tongue, of the temper, of our households—the duties of parents, servants or masters—the respective claims of business and religion—the virtues of temperance, integrity, humility and brotherly love—ought assuredly to be as prominent subjects of instruction and inquiry as the witness of the Spirit or any other doctrine.

In no case is this more necessary than in that of persons brought into church-fellowship during revivals. These are often the creatures of impulse and feeling—no worse for that; and they need to be led kindly, yet faithfully, to see the importance of practical duties, and that diligence in these is their only guarantee for the perpetuity of the holy feelings in which they rejoice. This would tend to prevent that re-action which is common after revivals, and which leads some to suspect that the conversions were not genuine. Doubtless most of them were genuine: the great want was, that the attention of the converts, while in the warmth of their first love, was directed too exclusively to their immediate emotions, while not sufficient pains were taken to question them on the evidence of their acceptance with God, as distinguished from their inward persuasion of it; in other words, on their possessing and manifesting the "fruits of the Spirit." Instead of laying principal stress, in the weekly review, on the question, "How have you lived?"—the Leader has merely asked, "How have you felt?"—whence they lapsed into sin, and were lost to the church. If all who were brought into our fellowship could be kept, our enlargement would be rapid indeed. To watch over the Christian deportment and godly consistency of new members, is one of the most arduous and responsible works to which a church officer can be called; and it cannot be successfully done without steadily instructing them in those great truths which lie at the foundation of our belief, and in the daily duties of their station.

JUDGE LONGSTREET.—This distinguished and honored minister of the Church—at this time President of the Mississippi State University—has paid us a brief visit. He preached in the McGhee Church on Sabbath morning, a logical, spiritual and most profitable discourse to a large and appreciative audience.

He was with us on the Monday night following at our Love-Feast, and gave us, greatly to our comfort and edification, a most interesting sketch of his religious history. The Judge seems to wear well and promises to be useful for long years to come.

LITERARY NOTICES.—F. & G. C. Rand, of Boston, have laid on our table "Forrester's Boys' and Girls' Magazine," a neatly bound volume of 376 pages. The book seems replete with matter adapted to interest and instruct children. It is filled with biographical sketches, natural history, poetry, and science simplified, with more than one hundred engravings.

Leonard & Scott, the enterprising republishers of the English Reviews, have laid on our table the "Edinburgh" for October. It is needless to say anything in praise of these Reviews: they are too well and favorably known to need further commendation.

ROMANISM vs. LIBERTY AND LIGHT.

Papal priests and publications used to claim that Romanists were as staunch friends of liberty and the dissemination of light among the people as any other class; and it is only a little while ago since Bronson published in his Review a series of articles to maintain the proposition, that a republican government can only exist under the fostering and conservative auspices of Romanism.

They appealed with great confidence to the fact that, in the ever-memorable struggle for independence, Catholics perilled and suffered as much as any other class of their fellow-citizens.

We do not for a moment question this, neither do we question the fact that many Catholics, as individuals, are as true friends of liberty and education as ever wielded pen or sword in their defense. Our charge is, that Romanism, as a system, ever has been, is now, and ever must be opposed to the extension of liberty and learning among the whole people. We are aware that France and Spain—Catholic countries, too—took part in the war of independence; but we are well aware, also, that they did so with no desire to see the system of self-government established on this Continent, nor anywhere else, for they were both despotisms at the time they aided in the war. But it was from a desire to maintain the balance of power and check the growing preponderance of England.

England, it should be remembered, has been the bulwark of Protestantism since the reign of Edward the VI., and we think it would not be uncharitable to suppose that Catholic powers and individuals would enter into any war that might promise to curtail the dominions and power of England, with a most hearty good will.

More recently Romanist priests and publications have in a measure thrown off the mask with which they sought, for a season, to conceal the hideously bigoted and anti-republican features of the system. They now openly denounce the American system of common schools, and deny that the power to read contributes to the elevation or happiness of the laboring poor. A system that is opposed to the education and mental elevation of the mass—that prohibits the reading of God's word, and denies the right of private judgment cannot be friendly to human freedom.

Again: the Pope, the head of the Roman Church, is the very embodiment of civil and ecclesiastical despotism. He governs without a constitution or a representation; his advisers in council are the Cardinals, and they are the creatures of his own appointment. When other rulers and State ministers do wrong they can be impeached and dismissed from office; but the Pope is fenced about with an impassable and inviolable wall of infallibility. No matter how despotic or absurd the Bull he issues, it must be obeyed by all the faithful, under peril of pains and penalties infinitely more appalling than any mere human government can array to compel obedience or punish offenders.

Again: in proof of our charge, see those countries where Romanism has long been the dominant religion—Italy, for instance, the home of the Pope—especially the Roman and the Neapolitan States—and Austria, Portugal and Spain. In these States are to be found the most despotic forms of government in modern Europe.

Romanist priests show their opposition to education and public enlightenment by utterly failing, in Italy, Spain, Portugal and in the South American States, to do anything for the education of the great mass of the laboring poor; their failure to do so is proof that they do not wish to do this work, for in these States so great is their power that they have but to will it and it shall be done. If they are zealous for education among us it is simply to counteract the liberalizing tendency of Protestant teaching.

ANNIVERSARY OF THE MISSIONARY SOCIETY OF THE ALA. CONF.

The Anniversary of the Missionary Society of the Alabama Conference was held during the session of the Conference, at Tuscaloosa, Dec. 10, 1853. The President, Mr. Murrah, being absent, the chair was filled by A. J. Crawford, the Vice President. Religious services were conducted by Dr. Jennings. A condensed report of the Treasurer and the report of the Secretary were read. An interesting address was then delivered by Dr. Jenkins, Missionary to China, which was followed by another from James L. Belton, who has been accepted by Bishop Andrew as a Missionary to China from the Alabama Conference.

A thousand dollars was then contributed in aid of the Treasury, $300 of which was to defray the passage expenses of Mr. Belton, and a portion of the remainder to aid in purchasing a press for the Shanghai Mission. Bro. Belton was make a life-member of the Parent Society, and $50 to be repeated annually by the members of the Conference to educate a Chinese boy, to be named Robert A. Baker, after a devoted and influential member of the M. E. Church, in Summerfield, Ala. The anniversary exercises closed with the benediction by the presiding officer.

[For the N. O. Christian Advocate.]

TUSCALOOSA, Dec. 8, 1853.

BRO. MCTYEIRE—To a Methodist itinerant, one of the most delightful occasions is the meeting of the Annual Conference. It is one of those ever-recurring seasons which is looked to with much anxiety, but with more pleasure. It is the great point of convergence, upon which we centre and the focus from which we diverge in all directions. It is a joyful, and often a mournful occasion. We meet our brethren with whom we labor in Christ, and many and heartfelt are the greetings, and warm the pressure of hands; but we miss faces and voices we once loved to see and hear.

We are here at the Alabama Conference once more. This is the most mournful meetings of the kind we have ever witnessed. Nine of our brethren during the past year have exchanged the trump for the lyre. The most of them were with us, at our last Conference. We see them not now, and shall not, till, like them, we go home. We are very thankful for the peace which was theirs in their last moments. It cheers our hearts. Their example is left us. Happy for us if we can live as they lived and die as they died. The following are their names: John Boswell, T. H. P. Scales, D. Pollock, W. R. Bounsaval, W. Weir, T. W. Manning, A. H. Powell, J. Hughes, J. W. Starr, jr. You exclaim, "How are the mighty fallen!" You see, by the list, some of the choicest spirits in the Conference have gone. Truly we have cause to mourn. Some of them died of the recent epidemic which has desolated South Alabama. They fell martyrs to the work of love to which they had consecrated themselves. We shall follow them after awhile. Well, "no matter where, no matter when, so we sleep in Jesus."

The Conference met on yesterday, at nine o'clock. The Bishop, not having arrived, Bro. G. Garrett was elected President, and of course Bro. T. W. Dorman, Secretary. Two have now passed, and our excellent President has displayed administrative talent of a fine order. Business is done promptly and done well.

The following committees have been appointed:

On Education: T. H. Foster, T. Z. Ramsey, D. Dunenn.

On Sabbath Schools: E. J. Hamil, W. J. Powers, C. Strider.

On Bible Cause: J. A. Clement, A. J. Coleman, A. McBryde.

On Periodicals: W. M. Lovelady, J. W. Shores, J. B. Rabb.

On Book Accounts: J. C. Huckabee, R. G. Rhew, J. A. Spence.

On Temperance: W. E. N. Linfield, J. W. Laney, W. K. Norton.

On Memoire: C. C. Gillespie, J. Barksr, C. D. Oliver, E. V. Levert, J. E. Newman.

The following have been received on trial: W. L. Matthews, D. M. Hudson, James Beverly, Wm. P. Harrison, Geo. A. Shaeffer, Dr. J. M. Jennings, C. B. Connerly, C. H. Nicholson, James M. Campbell, J. McCain, Edward Patton, and several others, whose names I will give you after awhile.

We will have about twenty new recruits, all good, capable men; or as the old brethren say, "safe cases." And, by the way, Mr. Editor, the young men of the Alabama Conference will bear honorable comparison with those of any Conference in the Union. Taken as a whole, their piety and educational attainments are remarkable. Now, you are glad of that, and proud too—that is in a good sense—for you know you passed your noviciate among us. Several young men of capability offer themselves as missionaries to China or anywhere else. That is the spirit for you. We intend, hereafter, not only to raise more missionary money than any other Conference, but to furnish more men to go. A better day is dawning on us.

On Wednesday a resolution was offered by Bro. Blue, as follows:

"Resolved, That this Conference wholly disapprove the practice of reading sermons."

After some interesting and amusing discussion, it was adopted. How much good the resolution will do we shall not say. For our part we should be willing to have sermons read occasionally, if it only induces more to write sermons; though it would be ruinous to pursue the practice ordinarily.

We have had some good preaching. On last night we heard one of Bro. P. P. Neely's best sermons. It would be difficult to describe it. Profound thought, extensive research, thrilling eloquence and heavenly unction characterized it. Bro. N's declamatory powers are of the first order. Its effect was overwhelming; and yet the sermon was read. Few men succeed so well in reading as he does. If one wishes to make himself ridiculous, let him attempt to imitate him.

December 9.—This morning Dr. Summers preached the Annual Conference sermon, and an admirable sermon it was. It was on the Pastoral office, in the Dr.'s best style. We have heard no sermon in our past life superior, and few equal to it. He applied the lash most unsparingly to indolence and avoidable ignorance. He went into the details of pastoral duties and gave advice and direction with reference to the performance of each, individually. There was no altruism in it. He neither advised a radical departure from established usages, nor a tenacious clinging to the antiquated. He leaned neither to old fogyism nor to the so-called progress party. But we cannot do justice to the sermon here; it will be published in the Conference minutes. Would that every Methodist in the world could give it a prayerful perusal. Such a sermon has not been issued from the press for many a day.

December 10.—This morning the election for delegates to the General Conference was held. The following were elected: J. Hamilton, Thomas O. Summers, A. H. Mitchell, T. W. Dorman, J. S. Hurd, W. H. McDaniel, O. R. Blue, T. G. Ferguson, G. Garrett. Reserves, P. P. Neely, G. Schaeffer.

The Missionary anniversary is to be held to-night. As Bro. Jenkins is here with his Chinaman and his goddory, as Bro. Summers calls it, we are expecting an interesting occasion. You shall hear further about it hereafter. Yours, T.

CANNO PARISH, La., Dec. 6, 1853.

DEAR BRO. MCTYEIRE: Having just returned from Marshall, the seat of the East Texas Conference, I propose sending you a few items for your paper. Marshall contains a population of near 1500 inhabitants, situated fifteen miles from Red River, and exhibits a commanding appearance, the country being broken and hilly. The Court-house is situated on one of the most elevated places, and is a magnificent building. They have a College and a Female Academy, both fine buildings and well adapted to their end. The people are noted for their generous feelings and hospitable character, and the members of the Conference and visitors were well entertained. Bishop Andrew presided with his usual benignity, and on Sunday preached one of his best sermons to more than 1200 persons.

This year the East Texas Conference will station fifty-three preachers. The Conference, as you are aware, embraces all the territory east of the Trinity. The preachers are generally middle-aged men, with but few exceptions, and bear the indications of having made considerable sacrifices in carrying on the work of saving souls. They get through business peaceably, without making many speeches, and great order and regularity prevails. This year there has been 2000 members added to the Church in this Conference.

I was favored with the privilege of hearing a few sermons from members of the Conference, which were rather unique, with illustrations drawn from the book of nature, as if the preacher had drawn inspiration from the wild-wood scenes he witnessed so constantly, and his connection with human life on the border.

You notice a considerable manifestation of patriotic feeling when the early scenes of Texan Independence is reverted to. The appearance of several persons in the congregation with red or blue Mexican blankets gave them quite an original appearance to us who were not accustomed to such things.

Bishop Andrew spoke with great interest at the Missionary meeting at the Methodist Church, and Rev. O. Fisher at the Presbyterian Church. The collection at both churches was over $300. Bro. Fisher is known as the great champion of the Pedo-Baptists. It is said, from sermons he preached in one neighborhood on his district, a good number of Baptists changed their views on this subject, and joined the Methodists. He preached on the same subject on the Sabbath of the Conference, which must have had a good effect; not against immersion, but in favor of sprinkling. It happened that a gentleman of the Baptist persuasion came into town that day and heard Bro. Fisher's sermon, and who dined with us, remarked that it was certainly a sermon of undoubted merit; says he, "he quoted Scripture to prove his arguments, but I don't believe his doctrine."

The weather was beautiful, and in coming from Marshall I noticed great numbers of emigrants moving into Texas, the white covers of their wagons glistening in the sun's rays, with every evidence of comfort attending them.

May they find there a pleasant home for their bodies, and in heaven a home for their souls. Yours, P.

A SAD SIGHT.—In passing up Broadway yesterday afternoon about 4 o'clock, when all the world was en promenade, we met a well-dressed lady, leading a drunken man by the arm. His face was bruised and dirty; and hers was concealed by a very thick veil. He looked like a foolish brute, with the disgusting tobacco-juice trickling from the corners of his mouth; she looked like a picture of despairing Pity, with the tears trickling from her eyes. We glanced at the staggering pair—the one weak from intoxication, and the other from shame and anguish, with the feeling that earth has no sadder sight than that presented by a heart-broken wife leading her drunken husband, in open day, through a public street. LETTER FROM ENGLAND.

GOSSIP ABOUT BOOKS.

Correspondence of the N. O. Christian Advocate.]

November 16, 1853.

What changes have come over the earth within the short space of a single generation! The intellect of a dormant world is awakening. The one-half of mankind aspire to teach and the other half are disposed to learn. Since time began, when could this have been affirmed of the human race? And is not such an order of things at least very like the commencement of those all-pervading preparations whereby, at length, the whole earth is to "be filled with the knowledge of the Lord, as the waters cover the sea?" True, there are those who would wield this power for purposes of mischief; but there is hope for the world if the Christian church will only arouse herself and yoke to her chariot this mighty agency. Error, in all its forms is, from its very nature, both unstable and perishable. The printing press, allied to truth and religion, is omnipotent and its empire immortal; but the handmaid of error and impiety, it is a reed, a withe, a straw. The curse of the press, from the very nature of things, is local and temporary; its blessing universal and permanent. As one of God's own chief instruments for enlightening, subduing, purifying, civilizing and elevating mankind, its right applications have ever been and they will ever be the rule; its perversions the exception. Every stroke of the press in multiplying the elements of truth, the materials of intellectual and spiritual nourishment—like the heart in the animal economy—gives a new impulse to the progress of thought and of reason, of which thought and reason, too, it is both the conservator and distributor.

Unquestionably, in our day the Press is the mightiest of mere human agencies. Armies, unfortunately, are still very powerful; steam, with its innumerable applications, is daily unfolding its exhaustless powers of benefiting the world; but more potent by far is the Press. Its influence is of a higher, a more subtile and resistless character, and its sphere of action is more far-reaching, whether for the dissemination of good or of evil. It originates thought, it combines thought, it directs thought—not that of one man only, but of the whole thinking community, which it welds, as it were, into one individual; and so, by creating and controlling thought, it regulates and controls the world. Now, in the printing press, thought possesses the means of indefinite accumulation and expansion; and, accordingly, civilization, which languished and was all but stationary till this instrumentality arose, has since rapidly advanced. Protestant Britain and America should especially rejoice that the press was early consecrated to the hallowed work of multiplying copies of the Sacred Volume, and the subsidiary helps furnished to the Reformation by opening the Word of Life to the people and diffusing among them the writings of the Reformers, cannot be too highly estimated. The Press, too, is one of the strongest bulwarks around our civil and religious liberties. Its tendency is to originate a new kind of rule which shall come in the place of all the earlier, ruder and less intellectual kinds of government. It allows of the accumulation of the thought of all ages, and so goes to the formation of a code which shall embody the experience and wisdom of all generations.

Never, perhaps, was the Press of Great Britain so prolific of good books as it is at the present time—books that must live and exert an influence for good upon the destinies of this nation and the world. A rapid and friendly glance at some of the more recent productions of the British press may not be uninteresting to the readers of your Advocate.

"Gold and the Gospel" is the title of a very remarkable book. Its history may be briefly narrated. A few Methodist and Presbyterian laymen of Ireland, last year offered two prizes for the first and second best essays in favor of the Scriptural duty of "giving in proportion to means and income." Five adjudicators were chosen and fifty-one essays were sent in—one being from America. But when the adjudicators had finished their labors, strange to tell, each gave his verdict in favor of a different writer. Each seems to have been tenacious of his own judgment, and the result was an arrangement that all the five essays should be published in one volume. And the five essays, in fact, constitute one whole: one gives the logic of the case, another its Scripture, a third its precedents, a fourth its sentiments, and a fifth its practical details. Curious enough, the authors represent the several divisions of the United Kingdom. Two are Englishmen, two are Irishmen and one is a Scotchman. And more curious still, they belong to different communities; one is an Episcopalian clergyman, Mr. Conetable; the second is a Presbyterian minister, Dr. James Morgan, of Belfast; the third is a Scotch Dissenter; the fourth is an English Nonconformist, and the fifth is a layman. Already two gentlemen have each ordered a thousand copies for distribution among ministers of the Church of England. A Presbyterian, a Congregationalist, a Baptist and a Wesleyan gentleman have each ordered a thousand copies for similar distribution amongst their respective Churches. The name of the Wesleyan gentleman is Thomas Farmer, Esq., so renowned among us for his princely generosity. I know not the principle on which Mr. Farmer distributes his thousand copies; but as my superintendent has had a copy sent to him, and I have had none, I conclude that he is sending one to every superintendent in the Connection, which will require about five hundred; and then, it may be, that the other five hundred are sent to the moneyed laymen of the body.

This book is one of immense importance to the cause of religion and humanity, and of everything supported by voluntary contribution; and its universal diffusion throughout Christendom is greatly to be desired. Let it be read and pondered, and acted on, and the result will be to put a new face on the financial affairs of the Christian world. We augur from the book the happiest consequences, and in particular to the cause of missions, and think that its appearance will prove an era in the history of many an opulent man, and, we trust, of not a few Societies.

"Christ our Life," is the title of another volume originated by the offer of £200 for the best essay on that theme. The prize was offered by a strict Church of England man. The adjudicators were Professor Scholefield, of Cambridge; Rev. Mr. Tucker, Secretary of the Church Missionary Society, and Rev. T. Sale, Vicar of Sheffield, a of the Church as by law established; and yet a Dissenting minister has carried off the prize. Of the sixty-four essays submitted to the judges, that of Dr. Angus, President of the Baptist College, Stepney, was, by their unanimous decision declared to be the best. The book is full of the results of extensive reading, patient inquiry, careful analysis and pious reflection. It is a readable epitome of New Testament theology—an intelligible and comprehensive exposition of what has been called "Christology."

Dr. Wayland's life of Dr. Judson is published simultaneously in this country and in America. The British issue is now in the market in two beautiful volumes, from the house of T. Nisbet & Co., of London, and sold for twelve shillings; and the arrangements with the English publisher are such as to admit the widow and children of Dr. Judson to a large share in the profits. This great and good American missionary has hitherto been dependent for his reputation on the well known merits of his admirable wife. Now the public have got the portraiture of the husband, and the unanimous verdict is sure to be, that they were worthy of each other; and that two brighter lights never shone together in the missionary galaxy.

Dr. Cumming, of the Scottish Church, London, is most indefatigable, both as a preacher and an author. Considering the number of his pulpit appearances, and the rapid succession of his works, few men will bear comparison with him. His zeal is indomitable, and his application to reading and study must be intense. During the past month he has added two more volumes to the vast number he had before given to the world. One is called "Benedictions, or the Blessed Life," and the other "Sabbath Evening Readings, on St. Matthew's Gospel; the latter a five shilling and the former a seven shilling volume. Like his other works these volumes are written in his own clear and beautiful style, with great simplicity and overflowing with the richest evangelical matter. His power of illustration is truly remarkable, and his imagery, which is very abundant, is never far-fetched or perplexed.

Dr. James Hamilton, of the Free Scottish Church, London, is like his compeer Dr. Cumming, a most prolific writer. His "Lamp and Lantern" is a precious little volume, which he has just published, and which I perceive you have already reprinted in America. But his last work, fresh from the press, the "Life of Richard Williams," is the most marvelous book that has seen the light for many years.

The circumstance that the biographer is a Presbyterian minister, and the subject of the biography a Methodist local preacher, must fix the attention upon the book itself. Mr. Williams was converted to God in the town of Burslem, Staffordshire; there for a few years from the date of his conversion, he labored with quenchless zeal for the welfare of the lowest strata of society in that wicked town. At length his heart became fired to go on a mission to the cruel Patagonians; and, with a few others like-minded, he entered upon this hazardous enterprise. But his heroic career was prematurely terminated by death—death resulting from starvation. His friends, believing that the record of his life must do good, placed his papers and journals in the hands of the Rev. W. Arthur, the biographer of the "Successful Merchant," hoping that he would prepare them for the public eye. This Mr. Arther would have done but for other pressing literary engagements; yet, convinced that the life should be written, he waited on Dr. Hamilton, who, in looking over the MSS, became enamored with the hero, and engaged to write his memorial for the good of others. Dr. Hamilton's publisher made the Williams' family a present of fifty pounds, took upon himself the risk of publication, and the tale of religious heroism is now before the world.

The Rev. George Steward, who resigned his position as a Wesleyan minister at the last Conference, has since published a book justifying the step he has taken. It is entitled "Church Government, and its Application to Wesleyan Methodism." He confesses in the preface that, although a Wesleyan minister for more than twenty years, he had never seriously examined the subject of Church Polity; but that the expulsion of Messrs. Everett, Dunn and Griffith, and the agitations resulting from these expulsions having drawn his attention to the matter, he had made the discovery that our Church government is not Scriptural. He is not a thorough-going Reformer, for he chastises them as much or more than he does the Conference; and his book will satisfy no party, accomplish no good, and do but little if any harm.

The first number of the new Quarterly Review, projected by a few Wesleyan ministers and laymen, is spoken favorably of by the periodical press. The principal financiers of the now undertaking are Dr. McNicoll, of Liverpool, and Dr. Landwith, of Hull. The Rev. Jonathan Crowther, of Didsbury College, is said to be the acting editor, and Dr. Dixon, Rev. F. A. West, Wm. Arthur, and others, are the leading contributors. Surely, the time is come when the Methodist Church in this country should sustain a first class quarterly; it will be discreditable to the Wesleyan Conference and people if this noble enterprise fail of success. PLEASURES OF CONTENTMENT.—I have a rich neighbor that is always so busy that he has no leisure to laugh; the whole business of his life is to get money, that he may still get more and more money. He is still drudging on, saying what Solomon says, "The diligent hand maketh rich." And it is true, indeed; but he considers not that it is not in the power of riches to make a man happy; for it was wisely said by a man of great observation, "that there be as many miseries beyond riches as on this side of them." And yet heaven deliver us from pinching poverty, and grant that, having a competency, we may be content and thankful. Let us not repine, or so much as think the gifts of God unequally dealt, if we see another abound with riches, when, as God knows, the cares that are the keys that keep those riches hang often so heavily at the rich man's girdle, that they clog him with weary days and restless nights, even when others sleep quietly. We see but the outside of the rich man's happiness; few consider him to be like the silk-worm, that, when she seems to play, is at the same time spinning her own bowels, and consuming herself. And this many rich men do, loading themselves with corroding cares to keep what they have already got. Let us, therefore, be thankful for health and competence, and, above all, for a quiet conscience. [Izak Walton.

FOOTSTEPS OF ANGELS.... By LONGFELLOW.

When the hours of day are numbered,
And the voices of the night
Wake the better soul that slumbered,
To a holy, calm delight;

Ere the evening lamps are lighted,
And, like phantoms grim and tall,
Shadows from the fitful firelight
Dance upon the parlor wall.

Then the forms of the departed
Enter at the open door;
The beloved, the true-hearted,
Come to visit me once more.

He, the young and strong, who cherished
Noble longing for the strife,
By the roadside fell and perished,
Weary with the march of life.

Then, the holy ones and weakly,
Who the cause of suffering bore,
Folded their pale hands so meekly,
Spoke with us on earth no more.

And with them the being beauteous,
Who unto my youth was given,
More than all things else to love me,
And is now a saint in heaven.

With a slow and noiseless footstep
Comes the messenger divine,
Takes the vacant chair beside me,
Lays her gentle hand in mine.

And she sits and gazes at me,
With those deep and tender eyes,
Like the stars, so still and saint-like,
Looking downward from the skies.

Uttered not, yet comprehended,
Is the spirit's voiceless prayer,
Soft rebukes, in blessings blended,
Breathing from her lips of air.

O, though oft depressed and lonely,
All my fears are laid aside,
If I but remember only
Such as these have lived and died.

The Tomb of Milton.

Two minutes scarcely elapsed after I rang the sexton's bell at St. Giles church, Cripplegate, before that personage ushered me artlessly into the aisle. The roof of the building is modern, but the dark carvings on pulpit and choir indicate an age of two centuries. I stood at the altar where Cromwell and Ben Johnson were married; marked the pavement beneath which Fox, the author of "The Book of Martyrs," is buried; and read the inscription on the Lucy vault—a family satirized in the character of Shallow, and which incarnates for everlasting ridicule the sapient justice who would have proved Shakspeare a deer-stealer. I examined the quaint old tomb of the historian Speede; and, from a window, looked upon a fragment of the Roman wall—the greatest antiquity of London, hard by the venerable Cripplegate.

Over against a pew, a familiar bust marks the spot beneath which are the mortal remains of Milton, and his epitaph is grand in its simplicity—"The author of Paradise Lost." He and his father before him were inmates of this church. How sublime to the imagination is this otherwise not remarkable temple, where that beautiful head bowed in prayer! I recalled his image as it lay in youthful beauty one summer afternoon, on the green sward, under the classic trees of the college-lawn, when a fair lady hung entranced above the sleeper, and left a scroll in his nerveless hand.

I saw him in his prime, conversing with Galileo, and looking forth, with all a poet's rapture, upon Val d'Arno from the wooded summit of Fiesole. I beheld him when time had silvered his flowing hair, with sightless orbs uplifted, as his fingers ran over the organ-keys, and the calm of devotion softened the lines of care and grief in that majestic countenance.

The picture he bequeathed of Eden, fragrant and dewy as creation's morning, the forlorn glory of Satan, and the solemn cadence of the verse that embalmed, in perpetual music, the story of "man's first disobedience," came vividly back upon my heart beside his sepulchre. Stern Cromwell's rugged visage grew mild as his marriage response woke again from the silence of years; and blithely sounded the footsteps of rare old Ben, as he walked again, with his beloved, in my vision, up that solitary nave. What a changed aspect bears the world since Roger Williams talked with Milton of the prospects of religious liberty in America, and the latter pleaded for the freedom of the press; and yet, with all the triumphs of science, the revelations of the hard have lost not a ray of their spiritual beauty; his "high argument" remains in all its original significance; his mighty song wakes the soul to-day as when first its eternal symphony burst forth; his intact career, answering faith, and sustained elevation, reproach the sordid and win the brave for ever. [Tuckerman.

Wanted.

"WANTED—A young man of industry, ability and integrity," etc., etc.

This meets our eye daily in the columns of "Wants," and it is true as the Pentateuch. Wanted? Of course they are—always wanted. The market can never be overstocked; they will always be called for, and never quoted "dull," or "no sale." Wanted for thinkers—wanted for workers—in the mart, on the main, in the field and the forest. Tools are lying idle for the want of a young man; a pen is wanting to be nibled; a tree to be felled; a plow to be guided; a village to be founded; a school to be instructed.

They talk about staples and great staples. Honest, industrious, able young men are the great staple in this world of ours. Young man! you are wanted, but not for a Doctor. No, nor a Lawyer. There are enough of them for this generation, and one or two to spare. Don't study "a profession," unless it be the profession of brick laying or farming, or some other of the manual professions. Don't measure tape if you can help it. It's honorable and honest, and all that, but then you can do better. Of all things, don't rob the women. It's their prerogative to handle silks and laces, tape and thread. Put on your hat then, like a man, don an apron, and go out doors. Get a good glow on your cheek, the jewelry of toil upon your brow, and a good set of well developed muscles. We would go, if we could, but then we were young, longer ago than we like to think, and you know when one's "old, he can't."

Besides, if you become a Doctor, you'll have to wait—"because you haven't experience," says an old practitioner; "because you are too young," say all the women. If you are a Lawyer, and likely to rise, they'll put a weight upon your head, a la Swiss, to keep you under, or, if you make a good argument, some old opponent, as gray as a rat, will kick it all over by some tenant or other, because you were not born in the year one. And so it will go, until you grow tired and soured, and wish you had been a tinker, perhaps "an hammertal" one, or anything but just what you are.

Be a farmer, and your troubles are over, or rather, they don't begin. You own what you stand on, "from the centre of the earth," as they used to say, "up to the sky;" you are independent all day, and tired, not weary at night. The more neighbors you have, and the better farmers they are, the more and the better for you.

There's one thing more, young man. You are wanted. A young woman wants you. Don't forget her. No matter if you are poor. Don't wait to be rich. If you do, ten to one if you are fit to be married at all, to any body that's fit to be married. Marry while you are young, and struggle up together, least in the years to come somebody shall advertise "Young men wanted," and none to be found. [N. Y. Tribune.

THE SUFFERINGS OF GENIUS.—The world's history is full of the persecution of great men, who stepped forward in advance of their age, warning us to look kindley on honest purpose, and to judge with charity what we do not comprehend. Let us not ridicule or display new things, because they conflict with our observation or seem to be impracticable. There is hardly a discovery or invention in art that has not had its day of trial and discouragement. Many a man has gone heart-broken to his grave, to whom the firs of genius has turned unseen and unappreciated, when adverse circumstances, or shrinking timidity, or cold neglect, or want of a kind word, have come like a mountain upon him and kept his secret buried forever. Prisons have been pressed by throbbing brows which would have redeemed the world. The records of the world are full of the neglect of merit, and yet nothing has been told. Perhaps there is scarcely a man living who has not during some portion of his life, known some one who has pined unheeded, wanting the general air and sunshine which never came. Many a gem misplaced and do not meet the magnet to draw out the metal within them. Mediocrity writes verses when it should be holding the plow, and the true poet does the drudgery of life, not dreaming why the fire torments him. The flint and steel are cold and cheerless until stuck together, and they may never come in contact.

General Intelligence.

The Season.

Winter—the real, the pure, the unmistakable—has arrived at last, with all its mantling honors thick about him, and received a notice more general and eulogistic than any other stranger of the season. Despite Secretary Marcy's bulletin of Fall fashions, and despite the democratic element supposed to pervade our population, royal honors have been unhesitatingly paid to this greater than Mitchel or Meagher, by the adoption of such court dresses as are worn only during his presence, and only in his honor. Fingers that were cold enough during the ovation of Kossuth, have been rubbed warm on account of the advent of his more suitable successor; tongues that have never wagged in deification of precedent potentates have hardly been silent in praise of the present. The humbugging fellow who some weeks ago laid claim to the ermines of Winter was but a deceit and simulation—merely the avant conrier and forerunner of his majesty proper who, we are happy to say, has now arrived in propria persona, to enhance the festivities of Christmas and increase the glories of the Holidays.

Winter is here—the real, genuine, nipping cold weather that leaves no chance of doubting its presence or identity—and the amusements of the city have begun to show in their full glory. Thanks to the kindly reports which have obtained in many places, with regard to cholera and raging epidemics here, we have not so full a delegation from the country as is desirable; but it is daily increasing and will before long make the present season equal in business, in festivity and amusement to any of its predecessors. Indeed, we have every reason to anticipate, from end, after the commencement of the Holidays, an unusually, brilliant and hustling winter. There are large parties coming from the North, and the thousands who have been locked up and embargoed in the interior during the months past feel a few weeks or months of relaxation due to themselves. Besides, the very fine weather which has been enjoyed this fall for getting in crops must have had its influence upon the mind as well as the pockets of the planters, and prepared them for a trip to New Orleans.

Winter has come—piping cold weather—and the very rumors of disease here have died away in such a bracing atmosphere as might rejoice an inhabitant of Patagonia or Nova Zembla. Let our friends therefore no longer refrain from cheering us with their countenances, but test our abilities and disposition by the numbers in which they come and the time during which they stay.

On comparing the above statement with the returns of last year it will be seen that the increase of taxable property within the last twelve months in the Parish of Orleans is $8,025,025, to wit: Real Estate, $3,440,785; Slaves, $383,100; Capital, $2,202 040. This increase is exclusive of the Fourth District, (late Lafayette) in which portion of the city the increase is unknown.

REPORT OF THE HOWARD ASSOCIATION.—We have been furnished by the publishers, Messrs. Sherman & Wharton, 19 Camp street, with a copy of the "Report of the Howard Association," giving a detailed statement of their operations during the recent epidemic, their receipts, expenditures, etc. The publication embraces many interesting facts relative to a calamity which will hereafter furnish matter for one of the most interesting chapters in the history of our city.

By reference to the reports it will be seen that the total receipts of the Treasury of the Association since the 14th of July last, were $228,927 46; and that the sum expended from the same date is $150,190 32, which, together with an approximated estimate of $3500 for outstanding debts, is $182,690 32; leaving a balance on the first of this month of $46,237 14; of which balance, $36 000 is invested in mortgage on real estate at 8 per cent interest per annum, and $30,000 deposited in bank, subject to draft at 10 days' notice, and bearing interest at the rate of 4 per cent. per annum.

THE WINTER FIRE.....BY MARY HOWITT.

A fire's a good companion,sha friend;
A comfortable friend, who meets your face
With welcome glad, and makes the poorest shed,
As pleasant as a palace. Are you cold?
He warms you—weary? he refreshes you—
Hungry? he doth prepare your food for you—
Are you in darkness?—He gives light to you—
In a strange land? he wears a face that is Familiar to your childhood. Are you poor?—
What matters it to him? He knows no difference
Between an emperor and the poorest beggar?
Where is the friend, that bears the name of man?
Will do as much for you?

ST. PAUL, MINNESOTA TERRITORY.—The last number of the Minnesota Pioneer, printed at St. Paul, gives some interesting statistics relative to the growth and progress of that town. The population of St. Paul is now over 4700; the value of real estate and personal property is $723,500 as assessed for the year 1853. Of this $82 000 is invested in saw mills, as the lumber trade forms the most important business of the territory. There are 700 houses and building is going on rapidly, and it is thought that the number will be augmented to 1000 by the opening of the spring. There are seven churches, six school houses and three newspapers. There are fourteen physicians and thirty-four lawyers. Considering that it is but four years since the territory was organized and the progress exhibited by these figures is really wonderful. St. Paul is, no doubt, destined to become one of the most important cities of the Northwest.

FIRE AT SHREVEPORT, LA.—We learn by the clerk of the Piote, in yesterday from Alexandria, that a fire occurred at Shreveport on Friday last, by which the warehouses of Messrs. Oglesby Griswold, containing between 7000 and 8000 bales of cotton, was consumed. We have not been able to gather further particulars than the above relative to the matter.

ANOTHER MAIL BURNT.—The first baggage car on the train of the Michigan Southern Railroad, which was due at Chicago on the 8th was burned about fourteen miles east of that place. The car contained the through mail from New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, Washington, Cincinnati, and Cleveland—together with a good portion of the passengers baggage. The fire caught by sparks from the locomotive, and the car was entirely consumed, as also most of the baggage and mail bags. Some of the letters not wholly consumed, show that there was a large amount in money, drafts, land warrants, and postage stamps, destroyed.

LITERARY JOURNAL.—We have received the first number of a fine looking sheet called the Literary Journal, published in Cincinnati, and edited by Mrs. Ella Wentworth. The most peculiar and interesting feature of this enterprise is that it is to be under the exclusive control of females. An office is to be opened, furnished with carpet, piano, etc., and a library of three hundred volumes placed in the office for the benefit of the operatives during hours of rest. The type will be set, forms distributed, and in brief, all the mechanical work of the office executed by females, who will be required to work eight hours per day, and will receive for their services one dollar per day.

FLOUR, ETC., IN MINNESOTA.—The Minnesota Pioneer says that flour is selling there at $8 a barrel, and other farming products in proportion. These high prices are owing to the great rush of emigration.

NEW STEAMSHIP COMPANY.—There is a talk at Baltimore of a new steamship company being formed with a capital of $10 000 000, to establish a line of steamships between San Francisco and some port in China.

SOUTH CAROLINA.—The Committee on Education in both Houses have recommended an appropriation of $8000 for the Charlestna College.

SOUTH CAROLINA.—It is said that the Committee of the Senate and of the House will each recommend an appropriation of $1,000,000 for the erection of a new State Capitol.

CONSUMPTION OF GAS.—Many persons who do not desire the full flow of the gas, on account of the increased consumption which it causes, merely check the flow by partially turning the stop-cock at the burner. This is not half so effectual for saving as to turn in the same manner, the stop-cock at the meter. This shuts the gas off at its head to such an extent as will permit merely a steady flame at the burner, of such brilliancy as may be wished.

HEAVY DAMAGES.—The Boston Mail says that a gentleman, whose daughter was killed at the collision on the Providence and Worcester railroad last summer, has demanded of the Railroad Company $50,000 as damages. This is his ultimatum, and the company having refused it, are to be allowed one year for reflection on the subject. The gentlemen referred to is said to be possessed of great wealth.

HEAVY RUNS.—It is stated that the property on Broadway and the south corner of Courtland st., N. Y., fifty feet front by one hundred, has been leased at $8,000 per annum for fifteen years, the lessee to put up a building costing $50,000, to revert to the owner of the ground on the expiration of the lease. A bonus of $100,000. It is said, has been offered for this lease and refused, it being considered as really worth three times that sum, from the rental expected to be realized.

THE U. S. CONSUL AT HAVANA.—It is announced that Judge Cleyton has resigned the Havana Consulship. Col Robertson, who has heretofore temporarily discharged the duties of the office, will, we suppose, continue to discharge the duties of the office until a successor is appointed.

THE RECENT FIRE IN NEW YORK.—The Harpers estimate their loss from the recent fire at $1,600,000. But $400,000 worth of property was saved, and $250,000 insured, reducing the net loss to about $900,000. The losses of other parties comprise $161,000, of which $138,000 are covered by insurance.

THE COTTON CROP.—The Charleston Standard computes the cotton crop of the South the present season at two and a half millions of bales.

FIRE ALARM BELLS.—Two fire alarm bells are to be cast for the city of New York, which are to weigh 10,000 pounds each.

SNOW IN MISSISSIPPI.—The Holly Springs Times of the 10th says: A slight snow fell on Wednesday afternoon, the 7th instant; only enough, however, to cover the ground to a small depth. The weather has since been clear and cold.

The Great Western Canadian Railroad, from the Niagara river to Detroit, is expected to be opened by the 1st of January. At a meeting of the directors held at Hamilton on the 7th. It was resolved to present to Sir Allen McNab, who has been a warm advocate of the road, and its agent to England, the amount of $40,000 in the stock of the company, and an annual sum of $2 000, as a remuneration for his valuable services on behalf of the company.

LIBERIA EMIGRANTS SAILED.—The brig Gen. Pierce, for Liberia, left this port yesterday, taking out one hundred and sixty-two colored emigrants for that colony, seven of whom were from South Carolina, fifteen from Alabama, eighty-four from Tennessee, and fifty-six from this State. One hundred and twenty-five were sent out by their masters, now living; slaves liberated by will; and twenty-two were free. One hundred of them are under twenty-one years of age. The company is composed of eighty-three males and seventy-nine females. They are all in fine condition, and liberally provided with the necessary means to enable them at once to assume a position favorable to their future prosperity, and to that of the colony. RAISING OVER THE FLORIDA.—Public notice has been given by the Directors of the Albany and West Stockbridge Railroad Company, that they intend to apply to the next Legislure of the State, for the privilege to construct a bridge across the Hudson river at this city. The necessity of such a bridge is every year more apparent in the increased business of all the railroads terminating in this city and East Albany. [Albany Transcript.

A FEW WORDS TO THOUGHTLESS PEOPLE.—If you have lost anything, or if you have found anything, if you have anything for sale, or wish to purchase anything—in a word, if you would do a prosperous and flourishing business, you should not fail to advertise. Advertising is to business what food is to life; those who invest money in advertising "shall reap, some thirty, some sixty, and some an hundred fold." If you put your "light under a bushel," who will know that you have a light?

The Ferry Master at Detroit says that at least nine hundred fugitive slaves crossed at that point into Canada during the past year. It is also estimated that some two hundred and fifty crossed over at Cleveland. If these statements are correct, not less than two thousand slaves, at a market value of two millions of dollars, passed into Canada within the past year at two points alone.

"Cato, what do you suppose is the reason that the sun goes towards the south in the winter?" "Well, I don't know massa unless he no stand de 'conemy of do norf, and so nun obliged to go to de souf, where he 'speriences warmer longitude," was the philosophic reply.

BALTIMORE AND OHIO RAILROAD.—The receipts of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad for the month of November last amounted to $296,273 53, an increase of $72,192 10 upon the receipts of the same month of last year.

The Great Conflagration in New York.

The New York papers of the 12th came to us containing lengthy accounts of the great fire which occurred in that city on the 10th.

The following account is from the Mirror:

In the second edition of Saturday's Mirror, we gave a brief account of the destruction by fire of the publishing house of the Messrs. Harper and other buildings. We now give a synopsis of the particulars. The fire took place a little after one o'clock, just as the employees of the Messrs. H were resuming work after dinner.

Having suffered from a fire some ten years since, the Harpers had taken extraordinary precautions to prevent the recurrence of such a calamity. They had a large steam-boiler in the cellar; no other fire was ever allowed to be used about the building in any form. The gas-lights were so arranged as to be perfectly safe. All the buildings were heated with steam pipes, and, instead of the charcoal furnaces generally used in bindery establishments for heating the tools, gas-burners had been provided to take their places.

It is necessary to clean the ink rollers used in the Adams presses; and this can be done most effectually by employing camphene. In order to render the use of this perfectly safe, a small room had been provided on the third floor of the lower building on Pearl street, adjoining the press room, so as to be easy of access from it. This room had been carefully lined with zinc. The camphene used was kept in shallow iron pans, and the paper, rags, etc., with which it was supplied, of course were scattered about the room. It seems that a Plumber was employed in this room on Saturday to make some repairs; and in the course of his work he had occasion to use a light. He lit an oil lamp and threw the match into one of the camphene pans, supposing it to be water. It blazed up instantly, burst through the partitions, and swept with tremendous fury through the entire range of buildings. This occurred at half-past one o'clock; and in less than two hours the entire establishment was in ruins.

The alarm and sudden spread of the fire excited the greatest consternation among the operatives, and though all escaped without loss of life, many did so at great peril, and most of them were unable to gather up their clothing. Several had to be secured by the firemen's ladders, one girl, by leaping from a window, dislocated her hip and was otherwise injured, and a boy was hurt by a brick falling upon his head; beyond this, there were no serious personal injuries. All the presses were at work, but not one of them, nor one of the stereotype plates upon them, could be saved. As soon as the alarm was given in the business office, Col. John Harper, the financial partner, took $2900, which was lying in his desk, called the bank clerk, gave him the book of a bank where he knew his account had been slightly overdrawn, and sent him to deposit the amount—fearing lest the bank officers should be absent after the fire! He then went to the head of the stairs trailing to the press room—and seeing the hopelessness of attempting to save anything—directed the engineer to make his way to the boiler and put off the steam. The proprietors of the establishment, having done all they could to secure the safety of the persons in the building, and seeing the hopelessness of any effort to save the property, took their stand in Firth & Pond's manufacturing establishment, from which they had a splendid view of the blaze which was sweeping away, in a single hour, the fruits of their labor and enterprise for thirty years.

Finding the fire still gaining ground, the Chief Engineer ordered the general alarm to be given, which brought to the ground nearly the whole force of the Fire Department, with a great number of engines from Brooklyn, Hoboken and Yorkville.

At about half-past two o'clock the walls of the lower buildings on Pearl street fell in, soon after the walls of Nos. 80 and 82 Cliff street fell in also; next the roof, after the floors and inner walls tumbled in with a tremendous crash. By 4 o'clock the walls of all the buildings had fallen down—the vast stores of books and other property had been consumed. Fortunately the stereotype plates, which, next to their stock of books, constituted the most valuable single item of their property, were stored in vaults which extend under the pavement in Cliff street, in front of all the buildings of the concern. These plates, therefore, are invaluable, as enabling them to resume business as soon as Press-room and other required facilities can be obtained. It is believed that they are all saved.

Among many new books consumed is Dr. Kane's History of his Arctic Explorations—a large octavo, profusely illustrated with engravings, which had been ready for some days, but was kept back until a larger supply could be secured. Henry Grinnell, Esq., had received a copy of the work, so that it will not have to be re-written as well as re-issued. Several other books were in a similar condition. Mr. Adams, the artist, who did the engraving for the splendid Pictorial Bible, lost, though a few years since, was half owner of the copies of that work which were destroyed. Some ten days since, he was urged by one of the firm to insure his interest in them, but did not think it worth while. His loss will probably be not far from $15,000.

The conflagration was witnessed by at least fifty thousand persons, during the afternoon.

By this terrible fire there has been over one thousand male and female operatives thrown out of employment.

Col. John Harper was employed in one of his counting-rooms when the startling announcement was brought him that the building was on fire, coupled with the enquiry—"What portion of the property shall we save first, sir?" "Never mind the property," replied Mr. Harper, "save the lives."

"This is a sad calamity, sir," said a friend to Mr. John Harper, alluding to the conflagration—"a large number of poor persons thrown out of employment."

"Oh, yes," answered Mr. Harper, "God bless them, they must be seen to."

Another of the brothers, not present at the fire, when he heard of it, asked, "Are any lives lost?" "No," was the reply. "Then," said he, "all is well." With such a spirit to meet such a calamity, all will be well, and the enterprising and indefatigable Harpers, backed by the warm sympathies of the community and the country, will rise from the ashes of this conflagration Phœnix-like. No loss of property can overwhelm such men.

Take it altogether, this is the most destructive and important fire that has occurred for many years. For much of the data touching the loss of the Harpers, we have drawn upon the summary of the Times. The Tribune, which varies only in a trifling degree, gives the following:

	Insured.	Loss.
Harper & Brothers	$1,400 000	$200,000
Coolidge & Brother	100.000	100,000
A. Howell	2 000	2.000
A. Dougherty	12.000	12.000
J. Schulte	1,500	1.500
J. K. Happel	4 000	8 000
Mr. Dunscomb	1.500	1.500
Wm. W. Thayer	0 000	....
J. Bradley	2.000	2.000
J. Kelly	0.000	1.500
J. Rucastle	2.000	2.000
Wm. Bloodgood	3.000	3.000
J. Brown	2.500	....
Noyland & Williams	8.000	4.500
Frederick Hemmell	1.000	....
Losses of others	10.000	....
Total	$1,560.500	$338.000

We understand that the heavy losses of the Messrs. Harpers will not prevent them from resuming their business immediately and prosecuting it with characteristic vigor, i. e. provided the insurances offices are as prompt and energetic in their movements, which we have no doubt they will be. There are so many laboring people dependant upon the enterprise of these gentlemen, that it becomes a matter of great moment for them to resume their works as speedily as possible. We hope to see them in full operation in a few days.

The Herald says:

We cannot refrain again from speaking of the noble conduct of our firemen. Amid crackling timbers and hissing flames they forced their way, regardless of every peril, in their efforts to roll back the billows of fire. Some idea can be formed of the degree of heat, considering the fact that it was difficult for them to bear it even in the upper part of Franklin square. Yet onward all this, for three long hours, the heroic firemen worked at their engines, and yielded not till they were masters of the angry element.

By no means considered by some the least item in the history of this great conflagration was the destruction of the new manuscripts of embryo Walter Scotts and Byrons, and historians, the first appearances of which before the public eye was looked forward to by their anxious authors, as the birth of their immortality. Who can say how many Harriet Beechers, Bulwers or unfledged aspirants for literary fame, had anticipated a future of continued sunshine suddenly turned into dark and dismal night, clouded and overcast by the colums of smoke which went up from Harpers' ruins.

Who can say how many of these manuscripts were the result of sleepless nights, and years of temple-scratching for ideas, and which, when completed, received the full admiration of at least their writers, and which were looked to by the publishers with an air that said, "Just let that once come before the public, and I trust I shall not long live unknown." When we consider these blighted hopes, the would-be great men obscured in the airy castles vanished, the literature consumed, the amount of property destroyed, the numbers thrown out of employment, the Walton, "another revolutionary hero gone," and reflect that all this came from setting off a gill of camphene, how naturally comes up the words, "behold how great a matter a little fire kindleth." It has been a long time since a conflagration such as this took place, and may it be a longer time before we are called upon to record such another.

A CARD.—The undersigned take occasion to say, that in consequence of the destruction of their establishment by fire, this afternoon, they will be unable immediately to fill all the orders with which they have been favored. The sheets, stereotype plates and copy of Harpers' New Monthly Magazine for January, having been consumed, a delay of a few days will unavoidably occur in the delivery of that number to agents and subscribers. The undersigned take this occasion to return their thanks to the members of the Fire and Police Departments, and others, who rendered assistance in rescuing persons in their employment, and portions of their property from destruction. Their business will be resumed at the earliest possible moment. The members of the firm can be seen on business at Nos 79 and 81 Cliff street.

WEATHER IN TEXAS.—A correspondent of the Galveston Civilian writing from Liberty county, under date of Dec. 10, says:

We have had the most delightful Fall I have ever known. Not until this morning has there been enough frost in the neighborhood to kill the most tender vegetables. The foliage of the fruit trees is nearly as green as in summer; grass is green and abundant, and the cattle upon the prairies are in a thriving condition. The shores of the Bay are covered with wild fowl, and he who will can enjoy the finest sport and the daintiest living. The corn crop in this county was not an average one, owing to the drouth in May and June. The cotton crop is above an average [one, and the sugar cane yields finely, in quality, and about a hogshead to the acre.

NAVY OFFICERS ORDERED TO SURVEY THE ISTHMUS OF DARIEN FOR THE PROPOSED SHIP CANAL.—The following officers of the U. S. Navy have been ordered to take passage in the sloop of war Cyane, from Philadelphia, to be employed on the survey above mentioned, viz: Lieut. Isaac G. Strain, Passed Midshipmen Chas. Latimer and Wm. T. Truston, and First Assistant Engineer John M. Maury.—Washington Star.

A French historian, speaking of the first revolution relates an incident which cannot fail to excite a horrid grimace on the face of all who read it. He says that at Meudon there was a tannery of human skins—being the skins of those unhappy victims who had been guillotined. Men's skins were tough and good—women's soft and good for nothing. [Very Frenchy, that!]

The New York Tribune, having been taunted with the charge of a declining circulation, publishes an exhibit of its affairs—showing a daily circulation of over 21 000, a weekly circulation of 63 000 copies, and a total circulation of over 93 000. This is a larger circulation, says the Tribune, than it has ever enjoyed before, and larger by 10,000 than that of any other newspaper in the world.

The number of deaths in New York for the week ending the 10th were 376,

Later From Texas.

The steamship Louisiana, Capt. J. Smith, from Indianola and Galveston the 10th, arrived Wednesday, bringing the following passengers:

W. O. Watson and lady, Mrs J. Smith, jr., Miss Givens, Mrs Miller, L. F. Chapman and lady, Mrs Oliver and servant, Messrs E. Solomon, Jona. C. White, Runge, Kleth, jr., Hartwell, John H. Ashe, Maj. Steen and 2 servants, U. S. A. Lieut's Bulger & Moore, Richardson, Jefferson, W. S. Ladd, Simmons, and nineteen on deck.

By the arrival of the Louisiana we have received Texas papers as late as the

The Pacific Railroad Bill passed the Senate on the 8th, by a vote of 22 to 4; Messrs. McAnelly, Potter, Scarborough and Wren voting against its adoption.

The State Times says:

The eastern portion of the route is left open for a commencement from Fulton southward. The bill confines the line to crossing the Trinity, Brazos and the Colorado rivers at the 32d degree, or the nearest practicable point to it. The portion between the Colorado and the Rio Grande has no line designated. A bonus of twenty sections was granted. The printed bill has been altered in few other particulars.

INDIAN NEWS.—The State Times of the 10th says:

The Lipans and Tonkahuas are organizing an expedition against the Comanches. The Bonnaches recently made a foray upon the former, and carried off near two hundred horses. The Lipans and Tonkahuas are determined to avenge the injury by retaliation. They and the Comanches have been enemies for years. The Lipans once enlisted the greater portion of the territory now occupied as hunting ground by the Comanches. The Tonkahuas have receded from the vicinity of the coast. They are greatly embittered against the Comanches. Some trouble may originate from the late depredation. Major Neighbors will take timely and judicious steps to arrest the movements; Major Howard being on leave, he has taken temporary charge of these tribes.

COTTON AND SUGAR OF THE COLORADO.—The Western Texan says:

The prospects for heavy crops of cotton and sugar on the Colorado are very flattering, imparting fine spirits to the farmers of that region. They have also raised an abundant crop of corn, and have had a beautiful fall for gathering.

Later from Havana.

The steamship Empire City, Capt. H. Windle, from New York the 12th and Havana the 16th, arrived at this port on Wednesday last. The Empire City hauled thirty-nine passengers at Havana, and brings ninety-two passengers and a considerable freight for New Orleans.

The ex-Captain General, Canedo, embarked for Spain on the 13th. It was currently reported that he had amassed a million of dollars during his administration of eighteen months.

The new Captain General, Pacuelo, was born at Lima, and his father held the important position of Viceroy under the Spanish Government. He is said to be a tall, fine-looking man, with the usual amount of moustache and whisker. He is accompanied by his family. There is great anxiety among the foreign population, as well as native, to know what his course will be.

Mr. Clayton, the U. S. Consul, has resigned his office and returned to the United States, leaving the Consulate in charge of Col. Robertson, the former acting Consul.

The sugar crop is much heavier than it has been before for several years.

Tobacco remains high.

From New Mexico.

El Amigo Del Pais, of Albuquerque, New Mexico, of the 10th of November, is received. Lieut. Whipple and his party left Albuquerque on the 10th, en route for California. The party were all in good health and spirits. The escort going with them was to be increased at Fort Defiance.

The above mentioned paper has an article in reference to Governor Lane, in which it says Governor Lane has left the Territory, giving notice to Mr. Bellegos, on the eve of his departure, of his intention to contest his election, but this we imagine is without "ulterior view" that he will ever get the seat. The only "ulterior views" we now suppose him to entertain are to draw mileage from Congress, and to return to this country permanently to reside, and we believe the former as likely of consummation as the latter.

Later from the West Indies.

By the arrival of the Geo. Law at New York we have received files of the Kingston Journal to the 28th of November.

The new import duty bill had passed the Legislature, and a radical change of the Constitution was coming up or consideration.

Lady Barkley had arrived at Kingston in the Illinois.

Mr. Robbins, who was formerly employed in the Jamaica Bank at Kingston, committed suicide by drowning himself on the 16th ult.

The Journal of the last date

The proceedings in the Assembly during the last week have been without interest, and may be said to have been confined to the passing of three bills. These are the road bill, the spirit license bill, and the warehousing bill. The latter has passed the Council, and it is under the consideration of the Governor. In all probability it will receive his assent on Tuesday.

The review of the markets, under date of the 26th ult., says that not much business had been done during the previous fortnight, although the market had been rather better supplied. The high prices generally demanded tended considerably to limit operations.

Antigua.—The Antigua papers give the particulars of a most diabolical and attrocious murder committed at Nevis, on the person of the Hon. James Hanley, President of the Island, and casual Receiver. The murderer is one John Hooley, cousin to the deceased. It appears that a disputed property was the cause.

Barbadoes.—The city of Bridgetown had narrowly escaped destruction by fire, through the timely discovery of the plot of an incendiary.

The weather was very fine, though the health of the island was not particularly good.

Grenada.—From this colony there are no advices of importance. The Chronicle complimants the planters of Grenada on the economical use they make of the small amount of labor at their disposal.

Trinidad.—The Trinidadian says: Our merchants and planters are preparing themselves for the next crop which, to all appearances, will be very plentiful. But the market is almost bare of necessary supplies for the planters. Five or six cargoes of lumber, and two or three of shooks and staves, would meet with immediate sale, at high prices. Our lumber yards are empty, and white pine boards sold during this week as high as forty dollars per thousand retail.

The Invasion of Sonora.

By the arrival of the George Law, at New York, the New York Herald is placed in possession of the following proclamation, issued by the filibustering army—numbering forty-five men—which gives a full history of the whole affair:

HEAD-QUARTERS OF THE REPUBLIC OF LOWER CALIFORNIA, Nov. 7, 1853.

On the morning of the 17th of October we sailed with the First Independent Battalion for Lower California. The command consisted of forty-five men. Our voyage was a prosperous one to Cape St Lucas; we landed on the 28th; there we gained some information of importance, and proceeded on our way to La Paz. On the third day of November our vessel cast anchor opposite the town. A party was ordered by Colonel Walker to land, take possession of the town, and receive the person of the Governor, Lieutenant Gillman commanding the party.

In less then thirty minutes the town was taken and the Governor secured. We hauled down the Mexican flag in front of the Governor's house, proclaimed the independence of Lower California, and our independent flag floated triumphantly where, but a few moments before, that of Mexico had waved in supposed security. Our men, provisions and munition of war were landed, the town fortified, and Col. Walker entered upon his duties as President of the Republic of Lower California—issuing such decrees as were most congenial to the citizens, as well as to the security and comfort of his command. Here we remained until Sunday, 6th November, when the President determined to remove the seat of government to St. Lucas. In accordance with his determination, we embarked, talking with us as Governor Espinosa and the public documents. Shortly after our embarkation a vessel came into port having on board Col. Robledo, who was sent by the government of Mexico to suppress the Governor Espinosa. A small detachment was dispatched to bring Col. Robledo on board the vessel. The order was promptly executed.

About an hour after this occurrence, a party was sent on shore to procure wood. While in the act of returning to their boats, they were fired upon by a large party of citizens; thus commenced the first action. This party consisted of but six men, who returned to the vessel under a heavy fire of musketry, without losing a man. Meantime a fire was opened upon the town with our ordnance, which was kept up until Col. Walker landed with thirty men, when the fight became general. From the time of landing until the close of the action, (a signal defeat of the enemy) was about one and a half hours. The enemy's loss was six or seven killed and several wounded. Our men did not so much as receive a wound, except from the contusions, while pursuing the enemy through the chaparral in the rear of the town.

Thus ended the battle of La Paz, crowning our efforts with success, releasing Lower California from the tyrannous yoke of Mexico and the establishment of a new republic. The commercial resources, the mineral and agricultural wealth of the republic of Lower California, destines her to coincompare favorably with her sister republics. Our men all are in fine health and spirits, and are as noble and determined a body as were ever collected together.

The officers, who compose the Government are as follows, viz:

THE EXECUTIVE.

William Walker	President of the Republic of Lower California.
Frederick Emory	Secretary of State.
John M Jarueglu	Secretary of War.
Howard A. Snow	Secretary of Navy.

MILITARY.

John Chapman	Major of Battalion.
Chas. H Gilmen	Capt. of Battalion.
John McKibben	1st Lieutenant.
Timothy Crocker	do.
Samuel Ruloved	2d do.

NAVAL.

William T. Mann	Captain of Navy.
A Williams	First Lieutenant.
John Grandell	Second Lieutenant.

Our government has been formed upon a sure and firm basis. The civil code and code of practice of Louisiana has been adopted for the rule of decision in our courts, and as the civil law of the land. We arrived at Cape St. Lucas on Thursday, Nov 3. On the morning of the 5th, the Mexican cutter Geneva cruised off the Cape. Our appearance was so formidable she deemed prudence the better part of valor, headed to and gave us the slip. In the evening our troops again embarked for Magdalena Bay, where the President contemplated establishing the seat of government for the present.

Colonel Benton's History of Thirty Years' Operation of the United States Government, will be issued from the press about the first of April next. The work will be comprised in two volumes octavo, of seven hundred pages each.

European News by the Arctic.

The steamship Arctic arrived at New York on the 12th, from Liverpool the 30th, having made the passage in a little more than eleven days, which is one of the best passages of the season, considering the very rough weather she encountered.

On the evening of the 30th ult., the Third Assistant Engineer of the Arctic, Charles H. Williams, while on duty in the engine room came in contact with the starboard side lever, and was instantly killed.

The following summary of the Arctic's news is from the New York Express:

THE TURKISH WAR.—No event of importance had yet taken place along the Moldavo-Wallachian line. Omer Pacha's operations had received the entire sanction of the Government, and discretion was left him to act where he may have best chances of success. His retreat across the Danube was in consequence of concentration of the Russians on a point that was not defensible, and the step is approved by military men. That movement, not anticipated by the Russians, appears to have baffled Prince Gortschakoff, and to have forced him to adopt new combinations. The Russians do not believe the retreat of the Turks an ultimate. Complete ignorance prevailed as to these movements, and they were expected to make their appearance at any moment and at any point on the left bank of the Danube. The Russians appear not to have adopted any definite plan. They remain encamped at Oltenitza, Bouldeschy and Nikopo'itzi. Rain and snow had been heavy in parts of Wallachia, so that operations were, to a great extent impracticable.

The combined squadrons lie at anchor at Beycos Constantinople is tranquil.

The fighting since last advices had been unimportant. On or about the 20th the Russians attacked the fort of Tultscha, but were beaten off. Tultscha is the last Turkish fortress on the Danube.

In Paris it was generally expected that a battle would be fought on, or soon after, the 23d November, between Krajova and Kalafat. We do not see how this could be known beforehand, and therefore attach but slight value to those surmises of battles to come.

Latest accounts confirm that the Turks captured and yet hold the important fortress of San Nicholas near Istoum. Five times have the Russians, by sea and land, attempted to retake it, and five times

The New Orleans Christian Advocate.

TO MY WIFE;....By Lindley Murray.

When on thy bosom I recline,
Reraptured with to call thee mine,
To exult thee mine for life,
I glory in the sacred tie.
Which modern wits and fools despise,
Of husband and of wife.

One conjugal flame inspires our bliss;
The tender look, the melting kiss,
Even years have not destroyed;
Some sweet sensation, ever new,
Springs up and proves the maxim true,
That love can ne'er be cloy'd.

Have I a wish?—'tis all for thee,
Hast thou a wish?—'tis all for me.
So soft our moments move,
That angels look with ardent gaze,
Well pleased to see our happy days,
And bid us live—and love.

If cares arise—and cares will come—
Thy bosom is my softest home,
I'll lull me there to rest
And is there aught disturbs my fair?
I'll bid her sigh out every care,
And lose it in my breast.

Have I a wish?—'tis all her own;
And hers and mine are roll'd in one,—
Our hearts are so entwined,
That, like the ivy round the tree,
Bound up in closest amity,
'Tis death to be disjoin'd.

The Paris Newspapers.

The following is the rank held, in circulation, by the principal papers of Paris. The Presse guarantees its exactitude:

1. Le Siècle, 24,000 copies a day.
2. La Presse, 23,500.
3. Le Constitutionnel,
4. La Patrie,
5. Le Pays,
6. Les Débats, 8,000.
7. L'Assemblée Nationale, 6,500.

} 49,000 altogether.

The rest are insignificant down to the Moniteur, whose subscribers are very few—principally crowned heads and Embassadors Plenipotentiary. I have heard its paying circulation estimated as low as 300. Nobody knows the facts, however.

From this list it will be seen that the two Opposition papers are as strongly supported as the three Government sheets. The circulation of these latter has diminished more within the last year than I had supposed. The Constitutionnel must have lost 20,000 subscribers, for before the Empire, and at the period of its lowest prices, it printed 40,000 copies a day. The Pays has lost 10,000, for it once had 20,000; but that was when it was Republican, and before it became Imperialist. The Patrie has gone off fearfully. The Débats, the former Orleans organ, has been naturally on the decline since the fall of Louis Philippe. The Assemblée is a bitter, shrewish daily, devoted to the fusionists, and more lately to Russian interests in the Turkish dispute.

The Siècle is a valuable and generally reliable paper. It is much less blinded by its Republican zeal than is the Pays by its Imperial partialities. It has a daily record of the progress of Eastern affairs, which is, perhaps, the best that appears. It assumes to be an authority in American politics, and receives frequent communications from the State Department. I feel bound to say that its accounts of the popularity of Gen. Pierce's Administration are highly wrought, and that they partake strongly of that sort of frenzy which I have so often lamented in the Patrie. Thus, we have an anticipatory portrait of Mr. Mason, according to which that gentleman is a happy compound of Washington, Franklin, Bacon and John Howard. The Siècle is a little untrustworthy in American affairs, but, generally speaking, it is entitled to its position as the most widely circulated paper in France.

The imbroglio has benefitted the Presse vastly. It is an evening paper, appearing at 5 o'clock, containing the dispatches from the seat of war, and the Bourse news and rumors of the day. It appears one hour before the Patrie, and thus makes off with all the stray purchasers. Not far from five thousand copies are sold in the streets, and to-ent-going railway travelers. Dumas' Memoirs have lately given it a vigorous lift. Girardin has not written a column in it for six months.

The other papers, whose circulation is too insignificant to mention, are: L'Union, Legitimist; La Gazette de France, a relic of something which perhaps existed once, but which is now extinct; L'Estafette, and Le Journal des Faits, papers without editors, and made up by cribbing from the papers of the day before; L'Univers, Jesuit, etc.

Besides these, there are many journals devoted to various specialties—the courts, the hospitals, the drama, the crops, the finances. Finally, let me mention Galignani's Messenger, printed in English, and when the Humboldt arrives at Havre on Saturday, containing its news on the following Wednesday.

It is certainly a significant and suggestive fact, and one not generally known, that the Republican papers are in advance of the government's organs in point of circulation. The price has nothing to do with it, for all the papers are nearly at the same rate—ten dollars a year. The principles professed and the ability displayed, are the explanation of this superior currency. [Cor. N. Y. Times.

How to Treat a Husband.

A husband ought to be considered as a horse, with the marriage bit in his mouth—hence the word bridal or bridle. If the wife hold the ribbons judiciously, he is easily driven about, even in the most dangerous parts of Broadway, such as Genin's or Stewart's, Le Forest's, and Taylor's. The whole science consists in your being able to manage your animal, I mean husband, so skilfully, that after driving him about New York constantly for eight months, from store to store, he is yet able and willing to carry you down to Saratoga, to spend the summer. An accomplished wife should be able to assume, like the moon, every phase of fascination; but whatever shape she assumes should be a bright one, from the crescent smile encouraging the bashful husband, to the full moon gaze of tenderness, which is payment in full for sems Quintus Curtius act of immolation, such as a diamond necklace, or new damask bed-hangings. Never waste your smiles upon your husband; let him earn them; arma (alms) giving is bad, it discourages industry; what we get for nothing, we despise. When a husband is generous, dispense your smiles upon him; but be careful not to overstock the market—kisses may become a drug, like corn, coals, cotton, calico, rhubarb, patriots, and poets. A wife's happiness consists in her nervous system. A nervous system cannot be healthily supported without being fed upon sorées, satin dresses, rosewood couches, pretty hysterics, opera sofas, hectic coughs, and violent sobbings. We have known a wife who screamed herself into a set of rosewood furniture, and languished so, day by day, that at last, when dying, she found herself in a Fifth Avenue palace, which had so beneficial an influence upon a galloping consumption, that she resolved to give over her dying, and live for twenty years to come.

One word more, dear wives, and I have done. Above all things, avoid that "last French fashion," of coup d'etats—they are dangerous in politics; fatal in marriage. You may indulge in one before wedlock—by-the-by, there is no club to pick that lock, except a club-by boy—but these "strokes of State," as Lord Palmerston says, are not exactly fitted for the United States of Marriage. Marriage is the real spirit of the Ring, and when we say this, we intend no reference to the spirits of Alderman Ring—we only mean that the wedding ring is the "magic circle," out of which, like Caspar in "Der Freischute," it is difficult to escape. Above all things, dear wives, let me warn you against letting your husbands have their own way, even though only once—that once may be fatal. Tigers, when they have once tasted human blood, crave after it incessantly, and are ten times fiercer than before. I can assure you, my dear wives, that a tiger is not half so ravenous and unreasonable a beast as a husband. I beg the former noble animal's pardon for the degrading comparison. Wedded happiness is founded upon the axiom that a woman cannot be wrong. She has never yet been so from the days of Eve, and never will be—at all events, it will never do for a woman to acknowledge it; the woman who makes that unlawful admission will be considered as the Judas Iscariot of her sex. Farewell—my dear wives—bow you may go and tease your husbands. Nicodemus of Hoboken P. S.—Always select the most expensive articles, and the most useless—they may be wanted. [New York Folly.

Love.—These beautiful lines, which speak to the heart, are by Tennyson. None but the true poet could have uttered them:

I held it true, whate'er befall;
I felt it when I sorrow most;
'Tis better to have loved and lost
Than never to have loved at all.

Marriage Rites in High Life.

The long talked of espousals of Lord Julius Fitzmarlingspike and the lovely accomplished Rosa Augusta, youngest daughter of his Grace the Duke of Bopps, have at length come off. Some delay was occasioned by the gentlemen of this long robe, but the Sponsalia having been finally perused and settled by the eminent barrister Chrysostom Silvertongue, Q. C., were engrossed on the Legitimæ Tabellæ, and were sealed on Woden's test. Lord Julius took the opportunity of presenting his betrothed with a splendid Annulus Pronubus of diamonds alternating with emeralds expressly manufactured by the talented jewelers Runt and Keskell. There was a difficulty in fixing the marriage day, there being so many unlucky days, and Atri, in this month's calendar, and Salii and the Parentalia festivals approaching. But yesterday having been selected, the lovely bride was dressed in a long white robe, bordered with purple fringe, or embroidered ribbons (we could hardly say which), bound with a girdle of wool, and tied, of course, with the time-honored Nodus Herculeus. Her face was covered with a flame-colored veil, denoting modesty, and her beautiful hair having been divided into six locks with the point of a spear (kindly lent from the New Zealand Museum), was crowned with flowers supplied from the well-known bouquetière in Covent Garden. Her shoes were of the same color as her veil. The auspices had been duly consulted, and a very fine hog having been sacrificed to Juno (the animal was supplied from the long-established styes of Messrs. Chitterlings and Co.), the omens from its inside were pronounced very favorable. We must not omit to record a bon mot of the bride, which shows that she possesses all the wit for which her spiritual family has been so long celebrated. On the question at the espousals being put to her, "An spondes?" she instantly replied with an arch smile, "Spondeo, sed nomen meum nonest Anne." The marriage ceremony was performed at the house of the Duke of Bopps, but in the evening the bride was conducted to her husband's domus. Three boys, whose parents were alive, attended her, two holding her by the arms, and one flourishing a link, which was regret was made the subject of rihald remark by the other boys in the street. The maid-servante followed with distaff, spindle, and wool, and a boy from the Lowther Arcade bore the playthings—the crepundia—for the family with which it is to be hoped Rosa will be blessed. The boys let off more than usually good sales et convicia, which is accounted for by Mr. Punch having kindly undertaken to supply the jokes for the day. On arriving in Park Lane, the house of Lord Fitzmarlingspike was found tastefully adorned with ivy and flowers, and the rooms with tapestry. Rosa, being asked by Lord Julius who she was, replied, in a firm voice, "Ubi tu Caius, ibi ego Caia." and immediately bound the door-posts with woolen fillets, supplied by Madame Crinoline, of Bond street. She was lifted over the threshold, touched fire and water—a wax lucifer and some Eau de Cologne doing the symbolic duty—the nuptial song, written by M. Catnach, and composed by M. Costa, was sung; Lord Julius scattered nuts (best Barcelona, from Shadback's) among the boys; and then several matrons, who had been married but once (the Hon. Mrs. Jones, the Hon. Mrs. Brown, and the Hon. Mrs. Robinson) singing all the way, conducted the happy bride to the nuptial bower, which was erected in the hall, and covered with flowers. Young women sang outside the house until midnight, when they were ordered off by the police. The second entertainment, the Nuptia, will be given this day. We should add that the ceremony was impressively performed by the Hon. and Rev. Pontifex Maximus, assisted by the Harusfex Bobbus Mentgomeriensis. [London Herald.

Celebrated Women.—It was in the assemblies of celebrated women that, in the reign of Louis XV., were nourished the principles of free discussion and destructive philosophy that exercised so fatal an influence over destinies of France. In the bureaux d'esprit of Madame de la Popelinière and Madame de Tuecin, the growing tastes for artistic and intellectual excitement were gratified. Madame de la Popelinière was the daughter of an actress, and was herself educated for the stage; but having formed a connection with a wealthy fermur-general, which the aristocratic notions of the day did not allow to be continued, he was compelled by the minister Fluery to marry her, and she quickly assumed a high position in society. Her career was, however, a short one. Her husband discovered a communication between the chimney of her boudior and the next house, which was tenanted by the Duke, afterwards Marshal de Richelieu. He repudiated her, and she died at an early age. Madame de Tencin was a nun in the convent of the Augustine of Montfleuri, where a gay and jovial life seems to have been led, but as it was too narrow a world for the lady; she gained her freedom. Among her numerous admirers were Bolingbroke and Fontenelle.

The recruit of her imprudence was a son. This child, to save the credit of her brother, with whom she resided, she abandoned, and exposed on the steps of a church. It was picked up by a poor woman, and eventually attained the highest eminence by the name of D'Alembert, the friend of Voltaire. As Madame de Tencin grew old she assumed an air of respectability, and gained considerable indirect political influence. Marmontel, Fontenelle, Marivaux, and the young Helvetius were her friends, and Pope Benedict XIV. was among her correspondents. She died in 1749, and was succeeded in social reputation by Madame Geoffrin. [Miss Kavanagh.

Shakspeare Pilgrims. — A curious statement has just been prepared of the number and nations of the several visitors to Shakspeare's house, at Stratford-upon-Avon. The statement has been compiled from the signatures of the parties themselves; and for the period from the 1st of May, 1851, to the 30th April, 1852, the total number is 2,210—and of these:

England furnished	1642	Italy	3
Scotland	58	Newfoundland	1
Ireland	49	South America	1
United States	444	Russia	2
East Indies	1	Sweden	1
Australia	3	Mauritius	1
Brazil	5	Cape of Good Hope	2
Germany	18	Canada	1
Channel Islands	1	Holland	3
Hungary	3	Finland	1
Switzerland	2	Bagdad	1
California	2	Madeira	1
France	4	Belgium	1
New Zealand	1	Austria	4

For a like period, from the 1st of May, 1852, to the 30th of April, 1853, the return shows a slight increase—the total being 2,321:

England	1898	East Indies	3
Scotland	41	Hungary	1
Ireland	11	Islands of South Pacific	1
United States	360	Russia	6

Female Vanity.—In spite of being fifty-four years of age, the Dowager Princess of East Friesland was much handsomer than ladies are wont to be at that period of life. She was well aware of it, and neglected none of the innocent arts of the toilette to preserve her charms. In her wardrobe she had more than two hundred dresses, and it afforded her the greatest pleasure to continually change her attire. Her wardrobe always accompanied her wherever she went. During a visit she was paying to the Duke of Celle, at his chateau of Bruckhausen, in 1692, a violent pain in the heart suddenly attacked her, which the physicians declared was mortal. On her inquiry, they informed her of the impossibility of effecting a cure. She prepared for death like a Christian; but as soon as the clergyman had quitted her room she ordered all her ladies' maids round the bed, and arranged her toilette with the greatest accuracy. She was dressed in her best linen, and a white dress shot with black; had her hair arranged, and her handsomest head-dress put on. All was most carefully selected, down to the white gloves. She then uttered her last wishes, among which she expressly ordered that no surgeon should lay his hand upon her. She had her coffin lined with white satin, and placed in a room. Her greatest apprehension was lest the jolting of the coach, in which her remains would be borne home, might disarrange her position and dress; and only a few minutes before she felt the approach of death, through the coldness of her extremities, she most earnestly entreated her attendants to take care that she was properly laid in her coffin, and securely fastened down, that nothing might be disturbed. Could any one be more consistent in vanity, in the presence of death?

Effects of Wrong Spelling.—Not long since, a gentleman, then a chorister of a certain choir in Vermont, wrote to a publisher in Boston, for a copy of that popular singing book, entitled "The Ancient Lyre."

In his communication he used the following language: "Please send me the Ancient Liar well bound." The publisher, in answer to his request, replied:

"My Dear Sir—I do not doubt but the devil has been, and still is, in Boston; but it will be difficult to comply with your request, for the reason that Boston Influence is so strongly in his favor, it will be impossible to bind him."

English Taciturnity.—The Morning Post revives a good story apropos to English reserve. An Englishman and a German were travelling together in a deligence, and both smoking. The German did all in his power to draw his companion into conversation, but to no purpose; at one moment he would, with a superabundance of politeness, apologize for drawing his attention to the fact that the ash of his cigar had fallen on his waistcoat, or a spark was endangering his neckerchief. At length the Englishmen exclaimed, "Why the deuce can't you leave me alone? Your coat-tail has been burning for the last ten minutes, but I didn't bother you about it."

A Spirit Perplexed.—Medium: Ali is now ready; what question do you wish to put? Widow: Why, ma'am, I must explain that I gave to my dear departed one (he was many years younger than myself) two hundred pounds, to pay off a claim; and now he's gone, they've had the audacity to apply again for the money! Pray, therefore, ask my dear Augustus what he did with the receipt? [Diogenes.

Sad.—To kiss a rosy cheeked girl, and find your mouth filled with Venetian Red, and she growing pale on it, is truly an awful thing.

THE HOMESTEAD....By Lady Spencer.

It is not as it used to be,
When you and I were young;
When round each elm and maple tree
The honeysuckles clung;
But still I love the cottage where
I passed my early years,
Though not a single face is there
That memory endears.

It is not as it used to be!
The mosses on the roof,
And from their nests beneath the eaves
The swallows keep aloof.
The robins—how they used to sing
When you and I were young;
And how did flit the wild bee's wing
The opening flowers among!

It is not as it used to be!
The voices loved of yore,
And the forms that we were wont to see,
We see and hear no more.
No more! Alas, we look in vain,
For those to whom we sang,
And loved as we can love but once,
When you and I were young.

Spanish Idleness.—Every one, in Spain, employs his time most conscientiously in doing nothing. Gallantry, cigarettes, the manufacture of quintains and octaves, and especially card-playing, are found sufficient to fill up a man's existence very agreeably. A workman who has gained a few reals leaves work, throws his fine embroidered jacket over his shoulders, takes his guitar, and goes and dances or makes love to the majos of his acquaintance, until he has not a single cuarto left; he then returns to his employment. An Andalusian can live splendidly for three or four sous a day. For this sum he can have the whitest bread, an enormous slice of water-melon, and a glass of anisette; while his lodging costs him nothing more than spreading his cloak upon the ground, under some portico, or the arch of some bridge.

Oppenry Chapeta.—The personal appearance of the father of English poetry is thus described by his contemporary, John Murray, of Sacombe:

"His stature was not very tall,
Lean he was, and his legs were small,
Hosed within a stock of red;
A buttoned bonnet on his head,
From under which did hang, I weene,
Silver hair both bright and sheene;
His hand was white trimmed around.
His countenance bright and merry found;
A sleeveless jacket, large and wide,
With many plaights and skirtless dyed,
Of water chenciel did he wear;
A whittle by his belt he bare;
His shoes were carved round before—
His sok-horn at his side he bore—
And in his hand he bare a booke;
Thus did the prudent poet looke."

An Intense Native American.—The most decided case of antiveism we have recently known, is that of a person in this city, who was asked to attend the Pilgrim Fest at Plymouth, on the 22d inst. He replied, that "he was not going forty miles to attend a celebration in honor of a parcel of foreigners." Boston Transcript.

Re-opening of the Baton Rouge Female Seminary.

Parents and others concerned in the education of misses and young ladies, are respectfully notified that the epidemic having disappeared, the studies at the Baton Rouge Female Seminary were resumed on WEDNESDAY the 9th inst. [n20] M. W. READ, Principal.

CENTENARY INSTITUTE, ALA

This Institution of Learning has been in successful operation for ten years. Is situated eight miles north of Selma, and is the child and property of the Alabama Conference.

There are two departments, male and female. In the male department young men are prepared for the junior class in any college, or if they choose, complete their education here. The female department is regularly organized as a college.

The course of study is extensive, and the instruction thorough. The teaching is done mainly by men of age and experience, (not by girls.)

The President (Rev. A. H. Mitchell) is a minister of the gospel, of twenty odd years standing, and during most of that time has been connected with literary institutions of the church in Georgia, South Carolina and Alabama. He is assisted by seven others, most of whom are persons of age and experience, and all, with one exception, professors of religion. A majority of the Board of Trustees are members of the Alabama Conference, which fact is a sufficient guarantee of its successful management.

Board and tuition are as low as one has a right to afford, and lower than most institutions of similar grade.

The next term opens the first Monday in October, and closes the first Wednesday in July. For further particulars, apply to the President, at Summerfield, Ala.

FEMALE MASONIC INSTITUTE,
Dayton, Marengo County, Alabama.
Rev. E. D. Pitts, Principal.

TO PARENTS, GUARDIANS, AND THE FRIENDS OF EDUCATION GENERALLY, we would announce the opening of the TENTH Annual Session of the Institute. The healthful locality—the spacious and beautiful grounds—the commodious and convenient buildings—the full supply of Musical Instruments—the fixed purpose of the Trustees to spare no expense or efforts to promote the true interests of FEMALE EDUCATION—and the assiduous devotion of an efficient Faculty, to promote the comfort and improvement of Pupils, lead us to expect with confidence a liberal support.

The Principal has taught with marked success in Alabama, Mississippi and Florida, and will consecrate all his energies—physical, intellectual, and moral—to the proper training of the head and heart of those committed to his tutelage.

The services of Miss MARY W. HOWZE, who has been for two years past connected with the Central Masonic University, have been secured. Her intelligence, energy, piety, and felicitous manner of communicating, have justly placed her in the first rank of educators.

The Musical, French, and Ornamental Department will be conducted by competent and skillful Teachers, and all due attention given to the arts and accomplishments that so beautify and adorn the gentler sex.

The Primary Department will be confided alone to a choice and gifted Lady, for we design to attend carefully to that sadly and mischievously neglected class of Pupils.

The Scholastic year is divided into Two Sessions of nearly Five Months each—with no intervening recess. The School opens on the first day of October, and closes with Examination Exercises in the latter part of July. Pupils received at any time, and charged to the end of the Session. For fractions of Sessions each week is counted one twentieth.

The School is not Sectarian or denominational; and the only religious tuition embraces the principles of a pure morality based upon the cardinal doctrines of the Bible.

The Principal and his wife have charge of the Stewards Department, and will tenderly care for the health, manners and morals of those who Board in the Institute. Each Boarder will be made to feel as far as possible that she is the loved subject of parental solicitude, and every reasonable wish will be promptly and cheerfully gratified. Yet, Discipline will not be forgotten, and the needful restraints of family government will be thrown around them.

CHARGES PER SESSION OF FIVE MONTHS.

Primary Class $12 50
Preparatory Class 15 00
Junior and Senior Class 20 00

Each Boarder must furnish her own Towels, Brushes and Combs, and have each article distinctly marked with her full name.

AN INVARIABLE RULE—Board and Tuition cash in advance, and the balance at the end of each Session; and every account must be closed at the end of each Session, by Cash, or by Note.

SPECIAL ARRANGEMENT.

Rosh Lodge in Marengo County is entitled to select within its jurisdiction, a worthy object of benefaction, and have her taught in the Institution without charge, provided said Lodge secure the payment of her Board and supply her with Books and Stationery.

As the Principal is so extensively known, the Committee here forbear to speak of his character and qualifications, and refer Parents and Guardians to the persons named below.

OAK BOWERY FEMALE COLLEGE.

This Institution of learning is under the supervision and control of the Alabama Conference of the M. E. Church, South, and has been in successful operation for six years. It is situated about five miles north of the Montgomery and West Point Railroad, in Chambers co., in a healthy country, and among a population, moral, industrious and intelligent.

The Board of Trustees take great pleasure in announcing to the public the election of the Rev. ALEX. SPEER, of Georgia to the Presidency of the College. We think it only necessary to be known, that the Institution will be for the next year under the charge and direction of Brother Speer, to awaken a deep interest in behalf of the enterprise throughout the community, and liberal confidence and success. He is long and faithful service in the M. E. Church as a minister—his age and experience—his natural judgment and sound discretion—his acknowledged literary attainments and ability, authorize the expectation of full patronage on the part of an enlightened public.

A complete corps of Instructors whose names will hereafter be published, will be provided to supply the demand for instruction.

Miss MARY J. TOOMER continues Principal in the Male Department; and the unbounded satisfaction hitherto given by Miss Toomer, who we consider has no superior in any country, is a sure guarantee that all who patronize will be pleased.

Through the kind offices of the former President, the Rev. Wm F. Samford, who solicited contributions for that purpose, a fine and judiciously selected Library, of several hundred volumes, has been purchased, and is now in the possession of the College, embracing some of the most approved and standard literary works, and such as are peculiarly adapted to the purposes of Female Education.

The Tuition Fees will be no higher than usual, and the course of study as extensive as that in any institution of the same grade in the country.

The College Exercises will begin under the proposed organization, on the first Monday in January next—its second session will begin on the first Monday in September, and close at Christmas.

A circular, containing fuller information, will appear over the signature of the President.

Fees of the same amount, for the second half of the scholastic year, are required to be paid on the 25th of February, 1854.

An extra fee of $20 is charged for French.

The course of study in this institution is as extensive as that in any institution for the education of females, and the instruction is of the most critical and thorough character. Every provision has been made to ensure success. A philosophical and chemical apparatus adequate to all the purposes of instruction has been provided, together with maps, charts, globes, etc. The instructors are experienced in their work, and highly approved for capacity, fidelity and skill.

This institution has just closed the first year of its existence, with the most satisfactory results. And the public may feel assured that the Trustees will watch over its interests with the utmost solicitude and care, and spare no pains to render its system of education as perfect as possible.

The tuition fees have been somewhat reduced, and are below those of many Southern institutions of no higher grade. It is impossible to engage teachers of the highest character for salaries, attainments and skill, without paying liberal salaries. But we offer as an equivalent, above all price, a faithful and skillful application of the most approved means of developing and training the mind.

MISS REBECCA CLARK, Matron and Nurse.

This institution has just closed a prosperous year, with one hundred and twenty-six pupils.

The coming session will commence on THURSDAY, the 29th day of SEPTEMBER.

It is very desirable that pupils enter at the beginning of the session.

The main building is a new and superior brick edifice one hundred by fifty feet, three stories, and, for elegance, convenience of arrangement—for number, size and comfort of school and private rooms—is not surpassed by any similar one in the country.

The Principal resides in the building, and superintends the Boarding Department. He has in his employ gentlemen and ladies, who discharge with faithfulness and satisfaction the duties of this position. Pupils boarding in the Seminary are under the immediate control of the Principal at all times—are members of his family.

The Matron and Nurse, a lady of great amiability and kindness of heart, united with long experience and untiring faithfulness, secures to pupils, at all times, the kindness and attentions of home.

The Principal and his lady, with the aid of the Female Teachers, all of whom reside in the Seminary, diligently guard and form the morals, manners and habits of the young ladies.

There is but one session, of nine and a half months. Pupils can enter at any time during the session, charged bills from the beginning of the month in which they enter to the close of the session.

One hundred and forty-five dollars will pay the board and tuition of a young lady, for the entire session, in the

REPORT OF THE COMMITTEE ON EDUCATION.

ALABAMA CONFERENCE.

No one among us holds a doubtful position as to the importance of attending to the educational interests of the country. The fact, that a special hour has been fixed for this subject and the general discussion of the subject, evinces the interest felt in this body. We all know how intimate is the connection between education and all the progressive movements of the day. Only an educated people are prepared to receive, properly use, enjoy, retain and transmit, the great blessings of civil and religious liberty. It is the policy of despots to keep the masses ignorant. Educate a subject, and he becomes restless under tyranny, and is prepared to struggle, and struggle successfully, against it. Consequently, where civil freedom is there is general mental cultivation, and, vice versa, where general mental cultivation is, there is civil freedom. If eternal vigilance is the price of liberty, that vigilance must be directed by that wisdom and energy, which general education alone can inspire.

More necessary still is it for preserving the purity, spreading the blessings, and perpetuating the influences of Christianity. Pure religion, intelligent views of Bible truth, consistency of Christian character, depends much on the mental cultivation of Christian professors. Great heresies can only become permanent by being taught to the ignorant—by repressing that spirit of inquiry which seeks and discovers truth in the midst of error. On this account, it is the policy of the great Papal superstition to keep its dupes in darkness—to seal up the fountains of instruction. Thus it has, latterly, become deeply interested in the education of American youth. A stream of funds is continually flowing from Rome for educational purposes in this country, while millions are groveling in degrading ignorance, right under the shadow of the Vatican. The Pope is as careful to keep his own subjects in ignorance, as to educate our youth. The same object is sought in both cases. In this country children will be educated, whether Popery does it or not; and, to assume their education is the surest way to win them from the faith of their fathers. Jesuitism is manifest in the whole matter. This movement does not invalidate our position, that ignorance is the only safe-guard of tyranny.

It is a fact then, a stern fact—we must educate. We must educate, and we must do it denominationally. This work can only be done successfully by a body of men deeply interested, and who, from their position, are prepared to act in concert. In what body are these conditions better fulfilled than in the members of a particular church; and in that better than in the ministry of that church; and we may add, than in the ministry of the Methodist E. Church?

While we may congratulate ourselves on the interest the church has manifested, and the successful efforts she has made, we must admit that interest is very far from being as great, and that effort very far from being as earnest as circumstances demand. Comparatively few of our members patronize our institutions; comparatively few of our ministers impress them with its necessity.

And yet these institutions, while affording a course of scholastic training equal in every respect to the best, secure that moral training which others neglect, and which is absolutely essential to the formation of character. The hope of better advantages for fashionable accomplishment, induces many to forego this priceless advantage. They are ensconced in domicils, where reason and imagination are the household gods; where the head, it is true, is thoroughly educated, but the heart is left to grow up with briars and thorns. It is needless to say how ruinous this course is. It is detrimental to the interests of the educated; it is detrimental to the interests of our institutions. Our children will not become pious and useful, our institutions will not flourish, unless a different course be pursued. It well accords with the spirit of Methodism, to avail itself of every instrumentality which promises to it influence, and the promotion of the general interests of Christianity. The efforts and success of other denominations should excite a noble emulation among us. In proportion to wealth and numbers, they are doing far more than we. Catholic influence is beginning to be felt in this direction. The struggle making to wrest education from the hands of Protestants, is the most interesting and important now going on, on the face of the earth.

It effects the happiness of our race far more seriously than the Eastern question, or the Chinese revolution. Jesuitical ingenuity, with unsleepless and eternal vigilance, is being exercised, day and night, and will move heaven and earth to accomplish this, its darling purpose. Effort—earnest, intelligent, energetic, persevering effort, must be made in the opposite direction. Protestant denominations in general—the Methodist in particular, must establish, endow and patronize institutions, under the immediate control of the Church; where the Bible—the great bulwark of the Protestant faith—shall be read and taught. As ministers, through the press, from the pulpit, in private, in a conference capacity, our influence must be exerted. As members, we must patronize our own institutions—send our children and give our money. The practice of some Protestants, in sending their children to Popish institutions, and of some Methodists in sending their children to schools where they learn Puseyism, and thereby pave the way to Popery, cannot be too severely reprobated. Would to God, the Church could be thoroughly aroused with regard to this matter! At the risk of being considered somewhat a paradox, we notice another thing. We are too much inclined to dissociate the office of minister and teacher. We are too much wedded to the idea that souls are to be saved only by preaching the gospel and laboring around the altar, forgetting that mental must, in most instances, precede moral instruction. One can often preach as effectually from the professor's chair as from the pulpit. The Church already recognizes this relation of the Church to education, by appointing some of our most eminent ministers as the officers in our schools and colleges, and we have no doubt, useful as these might be, in the more immediate pastoral relation, they are more useful where they are. We are availing ourselves of the literary tendencies of the age by appointing editors and book-agents from among our ministers. With how much more consistency may we go still farther than we have, in appointing officers for our institutions, from among them. Ministers must identify their success in converting sinners and building up Churches, with their success, in educational monuments. God has joined true mental culture and true spiritual progress together and he who seeks their divorce, as far as he succeeds, will lose both one and the other.

While, therefore, we keep the one great idea of the ministry in view—the immediate duties of the pastoral relation—we must not lose sight of these collateral movements which are so necessary to give us success.

The field of view on this subject is ample and interesting, and might be explored to an indefinite extent, but we forbear.

In connection with the foregoing remarks, your committee recommend the Conference to appoint one of its body to preach a sermon on the first night of its ensuing session. Subject: "The Relation of the Church to Mental Culture."

REPORT ON OAK BOWERY.

The committee have had before them a communication from the trustees of Oak Bowery Female College, which represents the institution as in a languishing condition. We regret that this institution has met with no greater success. We hope, however, the recent election of Rev. Alexander Speer to the presidency, the competent corps of teachers, its healthy and eligible location, and the recent establishment of a library, together with the hope of increased benevolence in the community, will yet insure success to the institution.

MACON FEMALE COLLEGE.

Your committee are gratified to learn that this institution is in a flourishing condition. Taking into account the unusual advantages of its position, the Conference has reason for congratulation that it has an institution established there. Situated in the midst of an intelligent community, surrounded by a vast extent of wealthy country, the importance of earnest and effectual effort in making the college one of the first of its class, cannot easily be overrated. The present faculty are represented as fully competent for the discharge of their duties. The great desideratum at present is, more elegant and commodious buildings. Were these obtained, nothing would be wanting to ensure complete success. But how shall the money be raised necessary to erect them? The enterprize must not fail when there are scores of wealthy Methodists all through that part of the Conference. The report asks for a financial agent to attend to its interests. If a suitable man can be spared from the work, his time cannot be better spent than in this business. If this cannot be, we suggest that the appointing power have reference to the promotion of the interests of the college, in the selection of a pastor for Macon station.

We cannot recommend this institution too highly to the favorable consideration of the Conference.

REPORT ON LA GRANGE.

The annual report of La Grange College has been laid before the committee. The college is represented as being in a state of prosperity—the number of students during the past year being 95; whole number matriculating, 133.

A gracious revival in the college has added no little to the interest and success of the year.

A deep moral influence among the students has been the result.

The finances are said to be in a hopeful condition.

The trustees are hoping soon to be entirely free from embarrassment.

The committee, in common with the rest of the Conference, most sincerely deplore the decease of the recent President, Rev. James W. Hardy. The College and the Church have sustained a very great loss. We can bear ample testimony to his gentlemanly manners, literary accomplishments and high moral worth. We mourn him as one whose equal, in every respect, is rarely found on the earth.

The committee are, however, gratified to learn that the Rev. R. H. Rivers, of Centenary College, La., has been elected President and has accepted, and will enter on his duties early in the next spring session. This fact needs but to be known in order to secure increasing patronage and ultimate success. Professor Hatch, of Tonacesee, has also been secured for the department of chemistry and geology. In the absence of other testimony, his election is a sufficient endorsement of his qualifications.

In order to promote the endowment of the College, and at the same time secure a permanent income to pay the board and tuition of the sons of traveling ministers, the committee, at the suggestion of the report, recommend a change in the condition, on which the preacher's fund is expended, so that the interest annually received from this fund shall be applied first to the board and next to the tuition of the sons of members of the Conference.

We commend the college to the patronage of the Church, and pray for its continued and increasing success.

TUSKEGEE FEMALE COLLEGE.

A communication has been received by the committee, from the trustees of a projected college in Tuskegee, making some important statements and asking some important favors at the hands of the Conference.

It sets forth the importance of securing so favorable a locality for the erection and building up of such a college, as Tuskegee. It is needful we avail ourselves of the opening while we may.

Throughout that part of the State, Methodism is exceedingly strong. Long has such an institution been desired by our people. Many have been compelled to send their daughters to Georgia to be educated. A large local patronage, nearly one hundred students, can be obtained. As to its ultimate success, if the proper steps are taken, there can be no doubt.

The committee are deeply impressed, both from the statements in the communication, and from personal knowledge of the facts, of the necessity that we should occupy this locality, and do it speedily. They see here the means of a large and influential institution; much, very much might be said in its favor—nothing against it.

The trustees desire the Conference to receive the college, and assume its control as a regular Conference institution. They further state that $26,000 has already been subscribed, on the condition that the Conference thus receive it, and should the Conference fail to do so, they state that the whole amount subscribed will be forfeited. It is designed to be emphatically a Methodist institution. They intend raising the subscription to $40,000. They intend the buildings shall be after the most approved style of architecture, and with accommodations most ample and comfortable. They intend, its faculty shall be equal in attainment and ability to teach, to any in the land. Indeed, no pains or expense is to be spared to give it high and wide-spread character and abundant success. The trustees earnestly request that Rev. C. C. Gillespie, who has operated heretofore, with such remarkable success, may be appointed to the agency for the ensuing year.

The committee are satisfied that he could promote the general interests of the Church far more by laboring in this agency than in any other work to which he may be appointed. Indeed, unless he be appointed agent, the important work of raising the remaining $14,000 must, in a measure, be abandoned.

His former success, too, designates him as the most suitable—perhaps the only suitable man for the work.

The committee recommend the adoption of the following resolutions:

1. Resolved, That, as a Conference, we receive Tuskegee Female College under our care, as a regular Conference institution.

2. Resolved, That the Conference request the president to appoint Rev. C. C. Gillespie, as agent for the college for the ensuing year.

SUMMERFIELD INSTITUTE.

The following facts have been furnished the committee with reference to the institution at Summerfield. It has been in operation thirteen years, with an average of two hundred students each year. About twenty ministers have been educated there, five of whom are now in the Conference, five now in the institution preparing for the regular work. There have been revivals averaging about forty converts each year.

The institution is now in a condition very gratifying to its friends. It has one hundred and sixty students.

The trustees design making still further improvements by erecting buildings such as are needed for comfort and elegance.

The praise of Summerfield is or should be everywhere. Such an institution;—one combining so many advantages and so few disadvantages, we have not found in all the land. A location proverbially healthy; a community not only moral but religious; an able and efficient faculty, a course of instruction thorough and comprehensive; an attention to the religious interests of the students, such as are rarely found in such institutions, all unite to recommend it as one of the first order. We regret that, flourishing as it is, it is not far more so. We regret that our ministers do not take more pains to represent its claims to their charges and congregations. The adopted, the favorite child of the Conference—its interests should be very dear to all our hearts. We recommend to our brethren generally more earnest and persevering effort in its behalf. Double the number of students might be obtained if each one did his duty with reference to it.

In conclusion, the committee recommend the appointment of the usual committees to visit each of the institutions named in the report at the annual examinations.

REPORT ON TEMPERANCE.

ALABAMA CONFERENCE.

The committee to whom was referred the subject of Temperance, beg leave to report:

That they have given the attention to this subject which the shortness of time would allow, and they candidly state that they are more than ever convinced that evils of alarming magnitude arise from the sale and drinking of ardent spirits, and notwithstanding the commendable zeal and labors of institutions organized ostensibly for the suppression of intemperance. Yet the red track of the murderous monster may still be traced to the doors and firesides of the strong as well as of the weak; nor are our colleges and churches sufficiently guarded against its intrusion. The cry of distress from ruined wives and worse than orphaned children in bitter disappointment is answered by the yell of the drunkard. The dram-shop whence issues pestilence, poverty, shame and death, is securely defended by the arm of law.

The statistical information of crime attributable to intemperance, furnished by philanthropists, certainly cannot fail to excite a feeling of indignation against the iniquitous traffic.

The time has arrived and the age sufficiently enlightened to authorize the united exertion of the utmost moral and legal force for its entire suppression. And while the citizens of the State are endeavoring by various means to reach the case by law, the line of policy for the Church is sufficiently marked and clear, and though the Church may not consistently with apostolic usage, either deprecate or invoke the aid of law, yet they may afford such aid and co-operation as may not derrogate from their high position. The weapons of warfare for the Church are not carnal but mighty through God to the pulling down of strongholds; but to secure total abstinence in the Church will, under the present form of our discipline, depend entirely upon the disposition of our people and their sense of moral right. We have not a single rule in our discipline by which we can reach members that distill and vend spirituous liquors. It seems to us that the only service your committee can render is to recommend measures immediately within our province as a branch of the Church of Christ. We therefore offer the following resolutions:

Resolved, That while we, as an ecclesiastical body, would not dictate a course of prohibitory legislative action, in reference to the present system of retailing intoxicating liquors, we nevertheless, as citizens of the country whose common interests are jeopardized by the nefarious traffic, will give our sanction to any system of legislation which shall secure our communities from the ruinous influence of legalized dram-shops.

Resolved, That of all men, ministers of the Gospel should be most untiring in their efforts to promote the cause of Temperance, and to do this the more effectually we should preach and lecture on the subject in all our congregations.

Resolved, That in our estimation the ordinary traffic in intoxicating liquors is a violation of Christian principles, a sin in the sight of God, and when pursued by professing Christians tends to work evil in the Church and to the cause of religion generally; we therefore recommend and hereby memorialize the next General Conference and do instruct our Delegates to secure such action by that body as to alter the rule in our discipline touching the distillation and vending of ardent spirits by ministers, so as to include the membership, making it an offence warranting expulsion from the Church to distill or vend the article.

EAST TEXAS CONFERENCE.

The writer has just returned from a visit to the East Texas Conference, and presumes that some description of the place in which it was held, may prove acceptable to the readers of the Advocate. Others will furnish you with the proceedings of the Conference, from which it will be seen there has been an accession of two thousand to the membership of the Church during the past year within their bounds. The general cause of religion is progressing in this new and inviting region of country, but the educational and some other interests of the Church are suffering. There has been but one death among the members of the Conference, and that was—Jamison. The preachers are mostly looking very well, and seemed to be in good spirits, though some of them who have been in the work a length of time exhibit unmistakable evidences of having suffered and labored beyond human endurance.

Marshall is the seat of justice for the county of Harrison, in the State of Texas, and it is situated very nearly in the geographical centre of the county, and is the most considerable town in the northern or eastern portion of the State. It contains a population of about fourteen hundred, scattered over an elevated, undulating surface, embracing an area of about two thousand acres of ground, composed of a sandy, ferruginous soil, with a firm, argillaceous foundation. A small stream of clear, unfailing water meanders along the eastern border of the town and another through its southern boundary, which effectually serve for purposes of drainage, and in every part of town they have succeeded in procuring excellent well water; the site of this town twelve years ago was an unbroken forest of pine, hickory and various species of oak, and now domes and spires of many noble public edifices greet the light of opening day and speak the progressive march of Christian civilization. In the centre of the public square a large costly brick court-house assures the stranger that here obeisance is paid to the majesty of law, and if he cast his eye around him at no great distance from the public square, and in different directions, four elegantly finished and commodious churches equally assure him that here, too, homage is done to the great Law-Giver. But the worshippers of Bacchus have erected their altars around the public square, as if determined to mock and profane under the very shadows of the temple of justice. Not far off, however, is another brick edifice which must have cost eight or ten thousand dollars, and its iron-grated windows are ominous to all evil-doers. The ancient and time-honored order of Free Masons, whose mystic ties are enshrouded in impenetrable secrecy, and who claim admiration for a world-wide charity, have a flourishing Lodge of about 125 members. In their Hall the Conference held its sittings; it is the upper room of a large brick building, the lower portion of which is used for a Female Seminary, under the entire control of the Lodge, to whom the whole building belongs. This institution is in a most flourishing condition, and has at present eighty pupils.

Then there is the Order of Odd Fellows, who don't choose to be so odd as to fail of any thing laudable, who have erected a handsome house for a female Institute, procured experienced and accomplished teachers, and have fifty pupils.

In another direction, on the west side, and just in the edge of town, is a handsome College edifice, also built of brick, designated "Marshall University." This institution is liberally endowed with lands which will in the future enrich it. At present it is rather an academy than a University. It is a first rate school with sixty pupils at present receiving instruction. In addition to these, there is the Republican Academy, and a primary school in the place. There are also three large Sabbath Schools, with large libraries, and these schools have been kept up, and interest maintained which has not been done at any other point west of the Mississippi within the knowledge of the writer. This is attributable chiefly to two causes: a sufficiency of books and the countenance and assistance of the intelligent and refined portion of the community. Educated gentlemen and members of the learned professions and their wives have engaged in the work of teaching, and have found the task delightful. These Sabbath Schools, connected as they are with the flourishing institutions of learning which have been mentioned, are destined to shed a happy religious influence all over the surrounding country.

There is a Temple of Honor in Marshall with thirty members. There are two hotels, two large livery stables, with the usual number of work-shops, stores, etc. There are twenty-five lawyers residing here, seven physicians, and six ministers of the gospel. Two newspapers are published here.

One thing has not been mentioned which must not be forgotten, because it indicates a refined sentiment, and elegant taste. Just beyond the scene of bustle and excitement of a thrifty, flourishing trade, in a retired part of the town, yet within the tolling of any of the bells, is a beautiful Cemetery, adorned with a number of handsome marble slabs, and two monuments which must have cost each between four and five hundred dollars.

Nothing more is needed than has been said to illustrate the character of the people who reside at Marshall, and it can scarcely be necessary to add that they entertained the members of the Conference in a most hospitable manner. The town is surrounded by an intelligent and prosperous planting community. It is sixteen miles from Jefferson and about the same distance from Port Caddo, twelve miles from the Sabine river, and forty-three from Shreveport being midway between that place and Henderson. There is a daily line of stages connecting it with Shreveport and Jefferson, and a regular line is about being established through the interior of the State to Austin. It is likely to be the crossing of the Pacific, and the Galveston and Fulton Railroads. If so it must become an important commercial point, and may become a large city. It will at no very distant day become emphatically the seat of learning of the South.

"RULE OF OUR GOVERNMENT."

Mr. Editor: I extract the above significant sentence from the third article, in what is styled "Limitations and Restrictions." I do this for a specific, and as I think, a justifiable purpose. And first, to combat what I conceive to be a manifest tendency to "change or alter" some "part or rule of our government." And secondly, to present in precise and authentic form the rule of our government as it regards especially the superintendency.

I judge of the tendency to "change or alter," from the manner in which the subject has been presented in the Nashville and New Orleans Advocates, by men of high standing, Presiding Elders, and delegates to the ensuing General Conference. Permit me to premise, that I allow to these worthy brethren, the utmost sincerity and purity of motive. But at the same time, candor and a love for the "old paths" compel me to doubt whether or not they have thought closely on the rule of our government in its inceptive stages and as settled by constitutional law.

Bros. Drake and Fisher suggest or propose a large increase in the number of Superintendents or Bishops; to this there is no constitutional bar. But they propose also "districting the work," making "smaller districts," "dividing out the work into Episcopal Dists," and for each Bishop "to labor in the same field for at least four years," or for "each Bishop to have his distinct field of labor and take his appointment at the General Conference for the next four years," etc.

Now how does this comport with "primitive usage," "first principles," or the original "rule of our government"? Let us see. Mr. Wesley recommended, and the General Conference adopted, in the year 1784-5, a joint superintendency; these are his words: "I have accordingly appointed Dr. Coke and Mr. Francis Asbury to be joint Superintendents."

In the year 1800, Richard Whitcoat was constituted joint superintendent with Mr. Asbury; they traveled through the Connexion at large.

In the year 1808, the traveling preachers met at Baltimore, in their primary capacity, and framed what they no doubt designed to be a permanent "rule of government," a constitution permanent or fundamental law. They established a delegated General Conference, gave to it "full powers to make rules and regulations for our Church," under certain "limitations and restrictions." The third article in this instrument says: "They (the General Conference) shall not change or alter any part or rule of our government, so as to do away episcopacy, or destroy the plan of our itinerant general Superintendency."

At this Conference (in 1808) Wm. McKendree was constituted Joint Superintendent or Bishop with Mr. Asbury. What was the duty of one was the duty of both, and it was made their duty in accordance with "primitive usage," "to travel through the Connexion at large." This duty they performed until Mr. Asbury's demise, in the year 1816. This was primitive usage—this was in accordance with a "part or rule of our government;" this was "the plan of our itinerant general superintendency," which the General Conference "shall not change or alter" so as to "destroy it." This concise view of primitive usage and organic law is predicated on authentic documents and actual observation, which cannot be successfully controverted.

Whether the plan now proposed of "districting the work," forming "Episcopal districts," and allowing each Bishop to labor on the same field or district four years, would change or alter a rule of our government, or whether it would not destroy the plan of our itinerant general superintendency, let the discriminating mind decide.

But it is proposed that this "districting the work," etc., be "done by the Bishops themselves;" that "the General Conference should so increase their number as to make their districts smaller, and give its sanction to their remaining four years on the same work." Can the General Conference do indirectly what it cannot or "shall not" do directly? What is the difference between giving its sanction to a change in a "rule of government" and that of doing the same thing by legislative enactment? Whether such an increase in the number of Bishops, and such powers and prerogatives vested or sanctioned in them would be safe and lastingly salutary, demands serious consideration.

The wisdom, prudence and foresight of the fathers of Methodism was evinced in the act of limiting and restricting the powers of the General Conference. And I trust that wisdom and prudence will mark the acts of the ensuing General Conference, and that the insidious approaches of innovation will be watched with great care.

JEWISH CEREMONIES.

The Jewish months number from twenty-nine to thirty days each, so that every four or five years there is a surplus, which is used to make an additional month; I think in every cycle of nineteen years, they have five leap years, or years of thirteen months.

In Exodus xii., 3, we find that God said through Moses: "This month" (i. e. Nisan, the month of the Exodus,) "shall be unto you the beginning of months; it shall be the first month of the year to you." No commandment could be more explicit, and yet the Jews have their New Year on the first day of their seventh month; and call that the beginning of the civil, and Nisan the beginning of the ecclesiastical year. Dr. McCaul, in his "Old Paths," dwells very strongly on this wilful and habitual violation of the Word of God; showing that they are guilty of great inconsistency, to say the least of it, inasmuch as they hold very tenaciously to the letter of the law, and consider it as one of the chief arguments against the genuineness of the mission of Christ, that he abolished the ceremonial law. But as I am at present speaking of the festivals, I shall pursue the order of the ecclesiastical year, and commence with the PASSOVER.

Although this feast only begins on the eve of the fifteenth day of Nisan—corresponding to about the end of March or beginning of April—yet so great and manifold are the preparations for it even at this day, that they commence operations almost a month before. One of the first and most important matters to be attended to is the baking of the unleavened bread. This is generally made of wheat flour. The wheat must not be soaked or moistened to the least degree, as the fermentation or germination then produced is supposed to be equal to the dough being leavened; and, for this reason, great care and circumspection is had that the mill is perfectly clean, even of every particle of flour prepared in the ordinary way. A conscientious Jew must be at the mill, and see that everything goes on properly. The flour is then put into new sacks, and about a fortnight before Passover the baking commences.

In the smaller country congregations, each man bakes his own supply; though they generally unite, and do it at one and the same house, the various families assisting each other. The dough must be constantly kneaded or worked, as letting it rest even for one moment is supposed to cause it to ferment. It is then cut up into small portions, which are rolled out very thin—say the sixth part of an inch—and circular in shape, measuring about twelve inches in diameter. After being rolled out to their proper size, they are perforated all over, with some iron instruments made for the purpose. This is done to facilitate the baking, I presume. The whole baking apparatus is expressly set apart for this occasion, and at the end of the season is carefully stowed away for the coming year.

Now that the supply of Motzoth—"unleavened bread"—is ready, the matrons set all their servants, and any quantity of extra help at work, to set the house topsy-turvy; the ostensible reason being to clear the premises of all leaven. "Not a nook or darksome cranny" is left unscoured; and three or four days before Passover, all the family are turned out of the house—some shed, and frequently even the stable, being pressed into the service as a dining-room; for just think, if they were to eat in the house, they might drop the tenth part of a crumb of bread, and that would be awful indeed! As all the tables are scoured away for the approaching holidays, a large inverted wash-tub must serve the purpose temporarily. During this week, no man remains at home, who can possibly get away.

But now it is the evening of the thirteenth day, and the house, the barn, the kitchen, the cellar, the stable, and even the yard, are all supposed to be free of that demon—leaven. This, however, is not yet enough. A mouse might have carried some crumbs across the floor in transitu to his domicile, and thus have profanely undone, what the servants had accomplished with such an immense outlay of time and trouble. To secure against this, (?) the Rabbies have instituted the following farce: The master of the house, in propria persona, must this evening go into every room, clear them of leaven, pronouncing at the same time some blessing. But as the name of the Lord must not be mentioned in vain, and as such would be the case, if he were to find anything leavened there—and as the rooms have been carefully swept, and garnished and scrubbed of all leaven for some weeks—his wife precedes him, and lays little pieces of bread where she knows he will look for them; and in sweeping them into a piece of paper, and saying his blessing, his house becomes ready for the Passover! On the next morning after breakfast, about ten o'clock, and after all the ordinary kitchen utensils have been carefully placed into the "leaven room," he burns, in the open air, the crumbs collected on the previous evening; and saying a prayer, he formally severs his connection with every thing leavened. Boys usually assist their fathers at this ceremony; and at this time they are also required to empty all their pockets of bread-crusts, crumbs, and all the other paraphernalia of a school-boy's pocket, and throw them into the fire.

"Seven days shall there be no leaven found in your house," (Ex. xii., 19,) said the Lord in the Institution of the Passover: but, as the modern Jews consider nearly all their household articles in ordinary use, as understood in this word leaven; and as it would be very inconvenient to empty all these things every year, the Talmud directs every man to place them all in the "leaven room," lock and seal it, and sell its contents to some Gentile neighbor for a given sum, to be paid after the holidays; a contract is written, and signed by the parties. At the end of the feast, the Gentile purchaser (who has his due) returns the key, and says he does not like the bargain, and he would prefer to be released from his engagement; the Jew then obligingly takes back his key, and burns the contract. This farce is gravely acted from year to year, at this day, by thousands of intelligent and well-educated men!

Some years ago, when I was a pupil of a very orthodox—i. e. superstitious Rabbi, there was a case of a very skeptical member of the congregation, who once omitted the selling of his "leaven room." Of course his Rabbiship was furious, but the days of the "forty save one" were gone, and he had no power over the delinquent. I very innocently inquired what harm the man had done, as his house was just as clean of every thing leavened as anybody else's, and since he had only omitted to seal and sell the "leaven room." That I told him was mere sham, as everybody knew. "Sham or no sham," said he, "that is not our business. The Talmud says this is sufficient, and that's all that concerns us." This was of course conclusive. This same Rabbi had received a liberal university education, and mingled freely with the most enlightened men of his country.

Now that the leaven is all disposed of, the "Passover room" is opened, and the kitchen utensils, pans, plates, pots, kettles, knives, forks, et id omne genus—used only at this season, are brought forth, and take the place of the leavened. How few of my readers had any idea of the extent of these preparations; and even in reading the chapters in Exodus, enjoining these ordinances, they little thought that they were all carried out to the very letter, by millions of mistaken Israelites, even at this day. The directions relating to the observance of this festival, cover several prodigious folios of the Talmud.

In Exodus xiii., the first-born are consecrated to the Lord, and as there is no temple service now, every first-born male above the age of thirteen, and in good health, fasts on the eve of Passover, to commemorate the goodness of Jehovah in sparing the Hebrew first born, when he slew all the Egyptian, both man and beast. He fasts from the evening of the thirteenth to the evening of the fourteenth day of Nisan, and is considered somewhat of a privileged character on this occasion.

I have taken up so much space with the preliminaries of the feast, that I must postpone the description of the Passover itself for another article.

THE AMERICAN PRESS.—It now becomes a necessary duty to speak of as important a feature as there is in the whole character of America, and consequently a very leading one in that of New York—we allude to the Press. A newspaper there is the most serious of all daily considerations, inasmuch as no one can do without that, but any one can do without his breakfast. Ergo, the first thing a man does is to see what he has to read, and the second, what he can get to eat. A newspaper constitutes the very breath of Jonathan's nostrils; it is the guide to his opinion, the furtherance of all his views—and its influence therefore over him is incredible. There are nearly three thousand papers of one description or another in the United States, which circulate according to authentic statistics upwards of four hundred and twenty millions of copies per annum! Every hotel and coffee-house, down to the lowest cabaret in town or country, takes in one or two. They are sold at all corners of the streets—hawked from door to door—displayed upon public stalls—paraded through every railway station directly the cars stop—cried about on the decks of every steamer, and trumpeted forth from pillar to post. Stroll through the streets, and you will see the urchin who sells them often detain his customer until he has finished his column. Go into the market; the butcher eats open his paper before he cuts up his pork—the hatmonger digests "the leading article" before he troubles himself about selling any other article—and the green grocer looks through the market pages before he thinks of regulating his own prices. NEW ORLEANS:

Saturday Morning, December 31.

DEDICATION.—The Moreau street Church will be opened (D. V.) on Sabbath, the 8th of January. Dr. L. Pierce will preach the dedication sermon. The public are invited to attend. Seats free.

STEALING BOOKS.—Books are "laid on our table." On Monday an armful of rich Annuals and other fresh literature was 'taken off.' Our sanctum has been invaded! We thought there was nothing here to tempt any body.

Speaking of stealing books—the three principal Methodist churches of this city have been robbed of their pulpit Bibles—fine morocco bound, large size, Oxford Ed. We have been requested to say that if the thieves will only read they can have as many Bibles as they want by applying at the depot on Camp street.

SOUTH CAROLINA CONFERENCE.

This body closed its session 29th Nov., Bishop Paine presiding. By the S. C. Advocate we learn from the statistical reports presented, it appears that there are within the bounds of the Conference 235 local preachers, 33,213 white members, and 42,280 colored, shewing an increase during the year of 9 local preachers, 384 whites and 1922 colored.

The Conference Stewards settled claims at 90 per cent.—the best figure yet attained.

The Missionary exceed those of all preceding years, amounting in the aggregate, to the noble sum of Twenty-five Thousand Dollars. The ecclesiastical year has covered but ten months, and much that would have been collected, especially in the low-country, is yet to be reported.

DELEGATES TO THE GENERAL CONFERENCE: W. W. Wightman, A. M. Shipp, W. M. Gamewell, Whiteford Smith, H. A. C. Walker, W. A. McSwain, R. J. Boyd, J. Stacy, and T. R. Walsh and H. H. Durant, reserves.

Preachers of the Mississippi Conference.

BRETHREN: By a resolution of our late Conference held at Canton, Miss., the preacher in charge of each circuit and station is required to take up a collection for the purpose of defraying the expenses of our delegates to the next General Conference, in the month of February next. You will please attend promptly to this and remit the amount to the nearest delegate or to your Presiding Elder in due time.

By order of the Conference.

LITERARY NOTICES.

FLUSH TIMES, in Alabama and Mississippi: By J. G. Baldwin, 1853.

Rather a game book this, in the Georgia scenes line. It is mainly a collection in neat 8vo. form, of papers published at various times, in the Southern Literary Messenger. The times of '36 and '37—the epoch of rag money, mushroom fortunes, bursting up, running off property, escaping to Texas—those were flush times truly. As seen from a lawyer's stand point—and the author is of the green bag—they presented rare phenomena in morals and financials. A peculiar type of bench and bar was one of the effects of that period. Society and Jurisprudence took a twist to suit those flush times, from which, alas, they have not in some sections untwisted. This book is a lively memorial of those "flush times."

The writer hails from Livingston, Ala. His style is easy—sometimes elegant, but often tainted with low-flung things. The reader will hardly fail to be disgusted at Shakspearean allusions: tediously quotatious also from small literature. Many of the sketches are personal. The reader, if of either of the States, will be drawn on by this bait, with unflagging interest from title page to Finis. Levity is occasionally mingled with profound reflection. There is an appreciative critique of Hon. F. S. Lyon—one of the noblest citizens Alabama boasts of—or any other state. Fluency and aptness of illustration Baldwin is remarkable. In this department of description he can do up a character so well he often overdoes it. The "Flush Times" will have a run. For sale by J. B. Steel, 60 Camp street.

BAPTISM: its import, modes, history, proper use, and the duty of parents to have their children baptized. By J. L. Chapman. Morton & Griswold, Louisville, Ky., 1853.

Few divines are so well posted up in the controversy between Baptists and Pedo-Baptists as the author of this book. He has been all through it. If the reader will go through this book (8vo., pp. 360,) he can say the same for himself. It sweeps around and about with much freedom, even irrelevancy, but always takes in the strong points. The discussion is brought down to date, not passing by the latest issues in the periodical press.

HOT CORN: Life Scenes in New York. Illustrated. By Solon Robinson, New York, 1854. Dewitt & Davenport.

The publishers have forwarded us this most readable book. It, like many books of this day, is a composite thing—went before the public and got approved by small parcels. Sketches by a strong writer and philanthropist who has sounded the depths of life's woes in a great city, and explored its haunts, can but be interesting.

Wild Maggie is worth the price of these 400 pp. 12mo. The volume comes to us through J. Morgan, at the Post-Office.

LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.

TRIP TO MANSFIELD.

A letter by the way left us at Alexandria, waiting re-shipment above the falls. The Choctaw was to start early in the morning. Morning passed beyond its last early and yet no start. Then at twelve positively. The engine would certainly be repaired by 3 P. M., pos-itively. The hour came and still tinkering at the engine and taking on freight, as the slow ox teams brought it from the lower landing. Then by dark, pos-i-tive-ly. "Night drew her sable mantle round the world and pinned it with a star"—with several of them. In plain prose, it was dark and yet not started. So after ringing all the emphatic changes upon positively, it fell on the last syllable, and turned out a positive-ly. By and bye another boat came into port, and as there was danger of a transfer to this rival, the Choctaw actually rang her last bell and pushed off on one wheel. For a night and a day were we creeping up stream at three miles an hour, when both engines went to work and in course of time landed us at Grand Bayou, the depot for Mansfield, seventeen miles distant. Passage fare up to the falls $10. Passage on Choctaw $10. Two tens make twenty. Pretty deep digging this, into the pockets of Methodist preachers. It was to the same tune returning, with other necessary items not here included: making the Conference trip of ten of us not less than $45 each—total $450.

If any one thinks he has seen the most miserable of steamboats, running in the day time, commanded by white men and charging white mens' prices, let him suspend his opinion till he tries a trip on the Choctaw or Frances Jones, upon upper Red River, at low water.

Of the dead speak no evil—therefore of the former craft we say no more. On our downward we passed her snagged and sunk—and shed no tears. The cabin (if the filthy, cold passenger-receptacle deserves that name) of the F. Jones defies description. Cigar smoke, tobacco juice, defunct quids and segers, a spewing drunkard, a little lukewarm stove, two brindle puppies with sore stumps, whining piteously, their tails having been cut off, dirty pewter-ware, reeking beefsteak, a moist rotten carpet and more than fifty breathing folks all jumbled together, eating and sleeping for two days and nights in a small place so crowded, we could not get the room to measure it!

The necessity of shutting one's eyes to go to sleep was felt in a double sense. The mattresses and bed-clothes looking as though they had done service in a yellow fever hospital, were spread about the floor. Two negro boys (none of the cleanest) did the honors of the cabin. We heard them complaining in the morning that they had slept without covering. "Where are your bed-clothes?" The cool reply was—would you believe it reader?—and it had something reproachful in it, too, "Had to give 'em up to you all, last night."

But we must go back to Grand Bayou, where we landed after midnight. Major P., who is part owner of the warehouse there and keeps a tavern, received us kindly, with a roaring chimney fire of generous capacity. Just before day we were startled by a wailing cry. It was of a creature in distress. The cook had attacked the roost—mindful of her guests—and laid violent hands on an old mother hen that was unwilling to be offered up in such a cause. "How do you know it was a hen's?" says some skeptic to this narrative. Because roosters do not crow that way. "An old one's" Because we chewed on it, next morning.

As the readiest way of getting to Mansfield, it was agreed to take a road wagon, as these substantial vehicles were bringing cotton every day and running out empty. Maj. P. said there would be no difficulty in that arrangement, if we would accommodate ourselves to it. His own wagon was going that way; so he very promptly and kindly nailed a rough board or two across it, and with four mules we drove off—nine of us, in the best spirits. We settled our bills with Major P. before starting, at $2 apiece. Considering that he had been engaged by our Mansfield friends to take us in and forward us on our way; and considering that his wagon was going that way any how; and considering that there was no danger of stalling, and there's nothing like a certain trip; and considering that that hen might have been a good laying hen, and that eggs sold at a premium so near Christmas—considering all these things, we have reason to thank Major P., and do. The four mule team, Cato driver, put us through by 3 P. M., with sundry jolts, for which, as Major P. made no extra charge, we thank him again.

THE CONFERENCE.

There was no cause to regret the seat of Conference, after getting there. Its members were received and treated with that hospitality characteristic of a Christian, refined and wealthy community. Most of them are old Georgia and Alabama settlers, who have brought their home-altars and their generous habits with them here. High in this list must be included our good host, Bro. Campbell and his family, who contributed not only to the personal happiness of their numerous guests, but with a convenient office, facilitated our official business in attending to interests of the Treasury of the Conference Missionary Society and the New Orleans Christian Advocate.

Conference met in the Female Academy, on Wednesday, Dec. 14. A sealed letter from Bishop Capers was laid on the table which officially announced the appointment "of our faithful and worthy brother, John C. Keener, President of the Conference." All lamented the absence of the Bishop, and more for the cause of it—personal indisposition. The preachers came to see the Bishop—the people too, and the local preachers were there to be ordained; and in fact it is in Methodism an almost fact, "no Bishop, no Conference."

However, the President made a pertinent and modest speech on taking the chair, and the Conference felt there was a deal of work to be done and must go to doing it, asking the blessing of God. Things went on well. The President showed himself worthy of his post and merited the unanimous vote of thanks passed by Conference for the ability and impartiality with which he had discharged its duties. We have never known a more working and harmonious session. Brotherly love prevailed and increased.

MIXED COMMITTEES.

This new wheel of lay-committee co-operation worked well. The interest of the Mansfield Conference was largely due to the presence and intercourse of a number of the large-minded men of the Church from various portions of the Conference. As most of the acts of the Conference were originated and discussed in these afternoon meetings an early and separate article will be devoted to them. Some notes were taken and may be printed.

VISITING MINISTERS.

Several from the East Texas Conference were present; Revs. Tullis, Woolam and Hobbs: and from Arkansas Rev. A. Hunter. The latter came as a delegation to obtain a portion of Northern Louisiana to be added to Southern Arkansas, for forming a new Conference. It was decided by a considerable majority that the grant could not be recommended. But though his mission failed we are glad that it brought us the man—that we might see him, know him and hear him preach. One instance of humor, on a grave subject, betrayed that he had some kin in the "Green Isle." Speaking for a preacher who was about to be admitted into Conference and had once been in Arkansas, Bro. H. said: "The brother was a safe case, perfectly safe—only sorry to lose him. The straightest of the people did have one; only one objection to him in Arkansas—some of them thought he wore too much whisker. But," added he, looking around archly, "I reckon that will hardly be an objection here." A dozen hirsute faces were involuntarily stroked by their owners.

PROGRESS.

Our plague-stricken State has suffered in every department of Church benevolence. There is cause for gratitude at the results of the past year. The Missionary and other collections were totally hindered in many of the most fruitful places: in all, unfavorably affected. The deaths of members have been more than made up by accessions. The figures in dollars and cents, though behind other Conferences, and behind our own, indicate no real falling off. Under all the circumstances events have turned out better than our fears. The Louisianna Conference is more hopeful and prosperous now than at any former time. But how few the laborers are compared with the demands of the unoccupied and developing field that invites! Twice the number of preachers could have been appointed to advantage. May the Lord send them.

CONFERENCE STATISTICS.

The following were admitted into full connexion: M. Maas, R. Tripett, S. J. Graves, W. H. Rogers.

Re-admitted: Jas. L. Wright, Moses Davis, H. A. Sugg.

Received on trial: Jas. I. Graves, George W. Evans, Gerhard Busman, Uriah Riley, Bedford J. Hamilton.

Elected to deacon's orders: All those admitted into full connexion except R. Trippett, he being an elder. Local—J. M. Laney, Gilderoy Snyder, B. J. Hamilton, J. R. Langston, J. McKamie, H. B. Kemp.

Elected to Elder's orders: Travelling—H. A. Morse, L. Parker, J. Pauly, J. A. Ivy. Local—F. M. Carey, U. Whatley, J. L. Wright, W. C. Moreland, T. C. Lewis, Reddick P. Bruton.

No ordinations took place in consequence of the absence of a Bishop.

At the question, Are all the preachers blameless in life and conversion? the lives and characters of the members of the Conference, one by one, were passed in review and approved—all except one, against whom charges came up from Trenton Circuit, and he was suspended from the Ministry.

Sunday Schools—Number of, 33; S. Scholars 1627; Money raised for Sunday School purposes $667 30; Money raised for Bible Society $1505 95; Vols. of Visitor taken 727. Amounts raised within the bounds of the Conference, for Church extension, paying debts on churches and building parsonages, $42,850 85. Conference Stewards paid the claimants at about thirty-eight cents to the dollar. Rather a low figure that—and calling either for some better plan for raising the amounts these claims call for, or a better operation of the old plan. This matter received the attention of the Conference in Committee of the Whole, in lay session. We shall report the sayings and doings of the committee on that head, and they will be read with interest.

The Anniversary of the Conference Missionary Society was held Saturday evening, at the Methodist Church. The amount collected was about $250, which added to the collections of the Circuits, Stations, etc., makes our Missionary money this year only $3,012 35.

Conference adjourned Wednesday 21st.

Delegates to General Conference: J. C. Keener, H. N. McTyeire, Thomas Samford.

BOUNDARY LINES.

The land-marks of Southern Conferences are in some peril, judging from the resolutions published. Mississippi declares for that portion of Alabama Conference lying west of the Tombigbee, and instructs her delegates accordingly. Louisiana craves those parishes of the State lying in the Mississippi Conference. Arkansas would make a new Conference by putting off the Southern portion of the State, and asks the Northern portion of Louisiana to add to it. A correspondent of one of our contemporaries calls for a new Conference made up of the Tennessee Conference lying within the State of Alabama and the Alabama Conference north of Tuscaloosa and Pickens counties.

ALABAMA CONFERENCE.

Through the prompt courtesy of the Secretary of this body, Rev. T. W. Dorman, and of our correspondents, Revs. Foster and Blue, our readers have already been put in possession of the principal items from this Conference. From the pencil minutes of the Secretary before us, and other communications, we finish up the proceedings.

On Thursday, Dec. 8, a memorial from the Quarterly Conference at Auburn, Alabama, was presented by Rev. J. Barker, on ministerial support, and on motion referred to a committee of three, who afterwards brought in the following report, which was adopted:

Whereas, the unusual influx of gold into both this country and Europe, and the consequent increased commercial and productive activity, have greatly enhanced the cost of all articles of living, thus rendering necessary an increase in the compensation of all kinds of labor and service; and whereas, the disciplinary allowance of Itinerant Ministers, which was fixed many years since, and was proportionate to the value of money and price of all articles of consumption then, but is entirely disproportionate to the value of all now; and whereas, our people have been extensively consulted upon this subject, and have universally expressed themselves favorably; therefore—

Resolved, That this Conference request the next General Conference so to change the discipline as to increase the quarterage allowance of Itinerant Ministers, their wives and children; and that the claim for children be continued until they are sixteen years of age.

J. HAMILTON,
J. BARKER,
J. W. LANEY, } Committee.

The following resolution was adopted by the Conference:

Resolved, That a committee of three be appointed by the President of the Conference, to superintend the erection of a suitable monument over the graves of our deceased brethren, A. H. Powell, J. S. Hughes, and J. W. Star, Jr., and that said committee confer with the friends in Mobile in reference to this object.

T. E. NEWMAN.
J. H. FOSTER.

The several reports of committees will appear. We ask the particular attention of our Alabama readers to the report on Periodicals. Speaking of periodicals, we make an acknowledgment to the Committee, and especially the Chairman, Rev. W. M. Lovelady, for the very satisfactory dispatch of moneyed business, and the business like balance sheet sent on. For the rest we append communications:

"THURSDAY, Dec. 15, 1853.

"Bishop Paine has, unfortunately, been prevented from attending our Conference at all. Reason—family affliction. Brother Garret, however, our President, has done well; very well. He presides with the dignity and efficiency of a Bishop. His present connection with the Conference will be long remembered by us. Firmness and mildness have characterized his course. We all love him the better, for kindness, prudence and resolution.

"Our missionary meeting came off on Saturday night. A pleasant and profitable occasion. Dr. Summers, the standing Secretary, read his annual report. A word about those reports. They are worthy of being published in a separate volume. Such masterly missionary papers are to be found nowhere else. There is a variety in the matter, a felicity of expression in the language, a point and power in the style, and a general interest in the whole, such as is rarely surpassed. I tell you, Mr. Editor, Dr. Summers is a great man. We are proud of him. Long may he live to bless the world and comfort the church.

But to the missionary meeting. Dr. Jenkins was present with his Chinaman, his maps illustrating the work to be done in China, and his collection of Chinese gods. By the way, the latter are rather uncouth looking chaps. They remind you of old battered doll-babies, which, however pretty at first, have been lugged about and beaten over cuts until they have been put quite out of countenance, or the countenance been put out of them. All attempt at decision with reference to character, from their physiognomy, is out of the question.

On this occasion, however, they seem to have turned preachers. In the hands of Dr. Jenkins, and by the help of his interpretations, they made some capital missionary speeches. It does seem that the Celestials are hard put to it, to worship such unutterably ugly images. And yet, some nearer home worship images not much better looking.

The Doctor made a plain, practical speech, and gave the congregation an interesting statement with reference to the religious condition of the celestial empire. Brother Belton, of our Conference, who has offered and been accepted by Bishop Andrew as missionary to China, made a short, telling speech; the outgushing of a warm heart, devoted to the service of God. Many and hearty were the responses which rose from his brethren, and many hearts in the congregation were melted. He is a noble young man, and is well suited to the world before him.

God go with him, and make him abundantly successful!

The congregation responded with the handsome collection of more than one thousand dollars.

Over twenty-two thousand dollars have been collected during the past year. This is very good, considering the fact that Mobile, and several appointments in South Alabama, have been severely scourged with yellow fever, and the panic occurred just about the time the missionary collection was to be raised. Three of the churches in the city lost their pastors in the fall, and of course were able to raise but little money for benevolent purposes.

As a missionary will now go from this Conference to China, we will feel more identified with missionary interests than ever. You may look for still greater things in this matter hereafter.

The subject of education came up on yesterday. After the report of the committee, the Conference listened to a very eloquent and interesting address from Prof. Garland, of the University in this place. Wish you could have heard it, Mr. Editor. Hope its sentiments will not soon be forgotten by the Conference. The relation of Methodism to education, and the duties growing therefrom, were most forcibly presented. We do not pay too much attention to the immediate duties of the ministry—would one could pay more—but we do not pay enough attention to those conservative interests which are essential to our success in our immediate pastoral relations. As Brother Summers expresses it, "we are not too aggressive; but we are not sufficiently conservative." Just pause a moment, Mr. Editor, and look at that sentence. There is meaning in it. Preaching and altar work and class meetings do not occupy too much attention, but the educational, and such other interests, occupy too little. We earnestly hope to see improvement in this respect. We are now in a state of conviction in this Conference, and we are hoping soon for conversion. When it does occur, you will hear the "shout of new born souls."

The Conference obtained subscriptions among the preachers for the erection of buildings for the benefit of the Summerfield Institution, amounting to more than three thousand dollars. Very handsomely done, was it not Mr. Editor?

The Conference accepted a Female College, to be established at Tuskegee, which promises to become influential and flourishing. It is, henceforth, to be one of our regular Conferences institutions. The buildings and the general operations of the college are made upon an extensive and magnificent scale. Look out for glorious things in this quarter, after a while, Mr. Editor.

The next annual Conference Sermon is to be on education; and Dr. A. H. Mitchell has been elected to preach it. So you see, we are "bringing forth fruits meet for repentance," though we do not yet profess conversion.

On last Sabbath Brother Levert, by special appointment of the Conference, preached a sermon with reference to the decease of the nine ministers who died during the past year. It was in the preacher's best style. The effect on the ministers present, and on the congregation at large, was very great. We all felt it to be a privilege to die for Christ, and to die in the work of the ministry. The benefit of the sermon will, we trust, manifest itself for many days to come. F.

"The several interests of the church were well attended to, and some of them—especially that of education received more than ordinary attention. The congregations that attended the ministry of the word were large and attentive, and many of the ministers preached with great power and effect; and although there was not an extensive revival, there were, nevertheless, as we are informed, several happy conversions, and a good degree of religious feeling pervaded the community.

Admitted on trial: T W L Mathews, Dan'l M Hudson, James Beverly, Wm P Harrison Geo A Shaeffer, Jacob M Jennings, D C B Connerly, Charles D Nicholson, James M Campbell, Edward Patton, Alanson B Norris, Levi Moore, Ezekiel T Nabors, Whitman C Turner, Wm H Carter, Sheltou J Kelly and John Latham.

Re-admitted: Geo R Talley, J C McDaniel and Thos L Dentaler.

Of the Class admitted last year—31 in number—five were discontinued and one died. The rest were continued on trial, with much promise to the Church.

Received into full connexion: Asa Skinner, John B Warren, James M Towles, George F Ellis, Elisha Phillips, Wm B Tipton and Henry Wrynhart.

Elected to Elder's orders: Wm Monk, Robert W Spence and Wm M Shockley.

The Conference settles with its claimants as follows: For deficiencies of preachers at 80 per cent.; for widows and orphans at 90 per cent.—some amounts having been contributed with special reference to the claims of the latter. On this fund we are improving and still expect to improve.

Our increase, whites 2019; colored 603; Local preachers 7. Total increase 2629.

The place appointed for our next Conference to hold its session is Talladega. D.

PARIS CORRESPONDENCE.

Correspondence of the N. O. Christian Advocate.

PARIS, Nov. 24, 18[illegible]

To such go-a-head people as you Americans are said to be, it would no doubt be [illegible] notice, under such a date as this, Miss [illegible]ningham's imprisonment in Florence and subsequent release, and the Kirchenlag's [illegible] in Berlin. Is is here those and other [illegible] of great importance for the religious [illegible] have taken place since my last letter was written. But what of that? What are the hundreds of papers that circulate [illegible] nally amongst you, in such numbers that almost fancy one citizen at least in five [illegible] be an editor; what with the eagerness of your English correspondent, and especially with the lynx eyes of Bro. McTyeire, who knows so well how to pounce upon [illegible] scrap of religious information for his weekly budget of European news, I must have [illegible] distanced long ago, and the deliverance of the martyr of Popery in Tuscany, the [illegible] breadth escape of Methodism at the Kirchenlag, the one million Testament Fund of the British and Foreign Bible Society for China, these events have long been known to you and even, perhaps, already forgotten by you. I shall therefore keep to France, and see what is the news in reserve for us in this beautiful country.

I am happy to begin by saying that the revival which I mentioned in preceding letters is spreading all over the land, and its best results are seen in the conversion of sinners, the awakening of the Church, the progress made by Christian union, the increased efforts of all denominations in favor of evangelization; and lastly, not least, the great hatred manifested by Popery against all who do not bend under its sway. The time will be very near when the children of God will be able to exclaim, "France is conquered," even though they be at the same time persecuted and trodden under foot by the reign of religion, just in the same manner as our Lord was able to say: "I have conquered the world," the very night he was betrayed to the Jews, condemned and crucified.

In a case of persecution that has recently happened, it is remarkable to see how the wicked have missed their aim and obtained very different results from what they desired. Trauvillers is a small place in the North, far from Amiens, where about a dozen Protestants reside. Once a month they are visited by a clergyman from the neighboring parish, who preached to them in a room. One day during Lent the Romish priest of the place took it into his head to speak against Protestantism. The consequence was, that the minister at his next visit had two hundred hearers. But curiosity being satisfied, this number gradually fell off, until the priest made a new attack, which again increased the pastor's congregation so much that meetings had to be held in the open air, and twenty-five heads of families having declared themselves Protestants, subscriptions were received for the building of a place of worship. Had the priest held his peace instead of meddling with the pastor's preaching, probably this revival would not have taken place. However, the evil was deemed a remedy was the priest to find? He did not whip his flock back to the Romish church as I hear some of his black-coat brethren in Ireland, and even sometimes in New Orleans. Well, he applied to the local authorities, who at once put a stop to preaching under pretence that it was illegal to hold religious services any where else than churches! Mr. Goulard, the pastor, complained at once of this arbitrary act to the Minister of Public Worship, but no one has yet been received, and the Trauvillers brethren are yet forbidden, at this very moment, to worship God according to the dictates of their consciences.

This is not, however, the worst act of persecution I have to mention. About six weeks ago the body of an honorable Protestant, residing at Chelles, near Compiegne, where the Emperor was then residing, was buried in the common cemetery of the village, in which a plot of ground had been bought by the family of the deceased. Three weeks after, in consequence of an order from the Sous-Prefet, the coffin was disinterred early on a rainy morning, dragged to the place reserved for murderers and suicides, and there buried again or rather thrown in a hole dug along the road leading to the church. Then, as to add derision to so gross an outrage, a fine amounting to $10 was sent to the son of the deceased for the expenses of disinterment. On the following Sunday a delegate of the bishop went to Chelles to purify the cemetery which had been defiled by a Protestant corpse, and a solemn procession was organized to walk around the church and consecrate the newly consecrated ground.

The Protestants have of course entered their protest at once against such an act of vandalism, which might almost make one afraid that a second repeal of the edict of Nantes is at hand. The members of the Paris Consistory have seen the Minister of Worship on the subject, and he has promised to inquire into the matter. In the meantime, while nothing is being done.

It is said that these persecutions and annoyances are merely local and do not proceed from the Government. It is true that the Government does not command them, for there are many parts of France where full liberty is enjoyed; but then, why does it allow its subordinates to act as they please and to play the despot whenever they choose? Why does it not give them positive orders about religious liberty? If the Emperor loves liberty of worship, as he said a month ago to a deputation of Baptists who were asking for religious freedom, why does he not show it?

But let us turn to another and more pleasant side of the picture. Two new churches or temples, as we call them, were dedicated to the worship of God last month. One of them was erected by the Evangelical Society of France, in the town of Alencon, which was in former times thickly inhabited by Protestants, for three synods of the Reformed Church of France were held there in 1597, 1637 and 1671. The other is located at Jesnes, near Orleans, and belongs to the Established Church. It has for pastor a devoted and pious servant of the Lord.

Autumn in this country is the season when most of the meetings of the Evangelical Alliance take place. We have, therefore, lately had important gatherings of Christians of divers denominations in the Poitou, in Lyons, in Nismes and in Paris. They all have been highly interesting and blessed, being favored with the outpouring of the Holy Ghost. Some of them are, I believe, something like what your camp-meetings would be, were they held in towns, and frequented by Christians of different churches. The importance of such fraternal meetings may not be felt in the United States, where each church, and especially the Methodist Episcopal, is so powerful as to be able to stand by itself, and where Popery is but a small minority when compared to all the Protestant churches taken together. But here the case is widely different. We are a mere handful, in presence of a powerful enemy. We must, therefore unite, both in order to show our opponents that there exists a real unity amongst us, notwithstanding minor differences of organization and creed, and also in order to be stronger, for there are many important means of action which no single Protestant church in France could carry on by itself. This is the reason why we have but one Missionary Society, one Tract Society, one Sunday School Union, one Young Men's Christian Association, etc., equally supported by church people, Dissenters and Methodists, all the committees being mixed. If such a state of things he sometimes the cause of troubles, I must also state that it often is a source of great blessings. We feel that we are one already in the Lord and we find much happiness in helping one another onward.

This is especially the case for the Paris Religious Tract Society, which, I am happy to say, is actually in a very prosperous condition. I have before me a circular the committee has just issued, giving an account of its operations during the last six months. As many as a hundred requests for Tracts have been presented at a single sitting of the committee. More than half a million Tracts have been distributed; 163,000 copies of the "Almanac des bons conseils," for 1854, have already been sold; eighteen new tracts have been published, three of which belong to the children's series, and it has been resolved to issue a new series of tracts in a very large type, for old people. The receipts have exceeded by $1200 those of the corresponding months last year. But the committee complain of much difficulty in finding authors who will write for the Society. In order to excite their zeal, they are preparing a series of subjects on which tracts are most wanted, and they intend to offer prizes for the best essays they receive. Two years ago after an appeal of this kind, they received nearly sixty manuscripts, which shows that there are in France more tract writers than one would think.

I have been glad to see that the N. O. Advocate had taken up the cause of Education versus Popery and Popish intrigues. Let it be well understood that the Papists aim at giving as little instruction as they can, and when possible, none at all. This was strikingly illustrated the other day at the Sorbonne. No one can be a schoolmaster or mistress in France, whether in a public or private school, unless he has a diploma or certificate of merit. These certificates are delivered at certain seasons of the year, in different towns of France, after a lengthened examination, conducted by Professors of the University. At the last quarterly examination, which took place at the Sorbonne, there were fifty-five candidates, forty-nine of whom were Roman Catholics and six Protestants. Of the Catholics only two were found worthy of the diploma, whilst it was obtained by four out of the six Protestants, notwithstanding the efforts made by the examiners who, being Roman Catholics themselves, certainly did what they could to obtain a different result.

The political horizon is very dark. I can not give much information on the Eastern question, reports being so contradictory. The Turks have crossed the Danube and then retreated from prudence. England and France seem to take more and more the part of the oppressed Sultan, and it is generally believed that they have gone too far to retreat, so that we may expect a European war between France, England Turkey on one side, and Russia and Austria on the other. A well organized plot against the life of Napoleon has been discovered by the police, and the conspirators punished, but we have not probably seen the end of it, for I hear that two days ago another attempt at assassinating the Emperor was made at Fontainebleau. Such is the critical state of poor Europe. Happy are we that the Lord reigneth. J. P. C.

P. S. The cholera has arrived in Paris, and a few deaths have taken place in the hospitals.

ETYMOLOGY OF NAMES.

It seems that the new Sardinian Envoy, (a Count,) just arrived in the United States, bears the somewhat butcherly appellation of Talincorne, originally, no doubt, Taglliacarne; that is, cleave flesh; given, no doubt, to the warlike founder of the family, in memory of the blting-ness of his sword in battle. For, though some may supppose that this founder is likely to have been as obscure of birth as brave of deeds, yet it must be remembered that he must have been ennobled, not for cleaving the flesh of beeves, but that of men. (Ir, say that he drew his title as is possible,) from the skill with which, at the board, not in battle, he handled the carving-knife, not the sword; still, his lineage was, no doubt, good. For, in those days, not menials, but young gentlemen, performed this service. It was a regular part of the courtly, yet warlike education of the times of knighthood, as one may see in those best old pictures of bow Chevaliers were bred up—the' Loyal Servant's account of the boyhood and the after-deeds of that most gallant of warriors, Pierre du Chartrall, better known as the incomparable Bayard; and the like de Pise's "Life of the good King Charles VI;" or in that other classic of pure and sweet old French, the "Petit Jehan de Saintré."

The new Ambassador's designation brings to our mind that of a Southern family of some distinction—the Talinferros—whose name is, in common pronunciation, corrupted into Tolliver. Originally, they must have been Italian, and have been called Taglisferro, that is, "cleave-iron," or "armour-clavers." Possibly they came directly, hither from the land in which some progenitor of mighty muscle had at first won for them this martial sur-name; but, probably, they have come to us through England; for there survives not even a faint and fading tradition of their Ausonian origin. Our own supposition is that they are English, ever since the times of the Conquest, and are sprung from that large Norman champion, Taillofer, of whom the chronicles tell how, at the battle of Hastings, he advanced between the armies as they were about to close in fight, and challenged to single combat, thee and there, any man in Harold's army. His stature and his bearing were such as to induce, in the boldest Englishman, some little hesitation to accept his invitation; but, while they paused, the vast Norman was amusing himself by giving them some specimens of his activity and his address; he danced, thundering out, as he danced, the old heroic song of him who fell at Roncevalles, Roland; to the time of which he hurled high into the air, his great, two-handed sword, catching it ever as it fell. They tell us that after that performance, Taillefer's chance of finding an adversary vanished entirely. In his disappointment, he seems to have flung himself upon the enemy with prodigious fury, and, after many acts of prowess, and much havoc enacted, to have at last got cut down, as the tallest fellow will, in the end. For, however tough ons may be, one is sure, soon or late, to meet a tougher or a luckier, and to be knocked over. Well, so much for Taillefer's fate; as to his name, it was, no doubt, fixed in England, in its Italian form, as soon but a little while before, in Apuglia and Sicily, under Robert Guiscard and his bold brothers, by our Norman of the chronicles.

Such is the origin of our Talisferros; who, however, in this country—no doubt by the force of our institutions—have become neither fiercer nor taller than other folks. They dance no better, they sing no louder than the rest of the world, and have quite forgotten the ancestral trick of the long-sword.

General Intelligence.

DEATHS AT SEA.—The ship New England, Captain Orr, from Bremenhaven, the 31st October, with 430 passengers, arrived here on Monday night and anchored off Slaughter House Point. The New England left Bremenhaven with 500 German immigrants, of whom seventy died on the passage. Captain Orr reports that the surviving passengers have been perfectly healthy for the past three weeks.

ALABAMA.—Murder of a Father by his Son.—A young man named Hall, wayfield and shot his father in Wilcox county, recently, for some trifling difficulty which had occurred between them.

QUICK TRIP.—The steamer Wetumpka made the trip from New Orleans to Wetumpka, a few days since, in three days and nine hours, which, says the State Guard, is the quickest trip yet made by any of the steamers.

Eli Mendenhall was assassinated a few days ago near Upper Peach Tree, on the Alabama river, by some unknown person. He was shot while riding, and was just able to get to his own home before he died.

Miss Lyon, a daughter of H. S. Lyon, of Pickens county, drowned herself a few days ago. No cause known for the commission of the act.

THE STATE GUARD.—Mr. D. W. Dorsey, the editor of this excellent paper, announces that the title of that sheet is, after the 1st of January next, to be "Dorsey's Dispatch," instead of the "State Guard." We can hardly see the advantage of dofling the old name by which it is so evidently known. The present number completes the 7th volume. We are glad to learn that able ewekly is in a very flourishing condition.

THE GREAT FIRE AT SHREVEPORT.—The Shreveport Democrat has the following particulers relative to the destructive fire which occurred in that place on the 13th, of which we have had a brief notice:

Our afflicted community has sustained an immense loss by fire. About 1 o'clock this morning the cotton shed of Messrs Oglesby & Griswold was discovered to be on fire, but how it originated has not been ascertained. The shed contained from 7000 to 9000 bales of cotton, all of which has been consumed by the devouring element. From all that we can gather, the fire originated near the centre of the building, and before it was discovered it had spread to such an extent as to render all efforts to extinguish it wholly ineffectual.

The loss to the community will exceed $300,000, but no single individual will lose an amount large enough to disturb the regular course of business. Messrs. Oglesby & Griswold have sustained the heaviest loss, but their building, which was of brick, was partly covered by insurance.

Several planters will lose heavily. Col. W. W. Harper, residing near Greenwood, in this parish, lost 85 bales of cotton. A great number of planters will lose considerably; and some few merchants will lose something. Of course, the whole community will feel the loss to some extent.

Messrs. Oglesby & Griswold, with true American energy and enterprise, have, even whilst the devouring element is consuming their property, made arrangements for the building of another shed, and the men are even now at work preparing materials for the building. They have room in the remaining warehouse for 1500 bales of cotton, and in the course of two or three weeks they will be prepared to store any amount that may be entrusted to their care. Such men are entitled to the liberal support and patronage of the community.

FISHER'S PAINTING OF THE BATTLE OF NEW ORLEANS.—Of this painting, representative of the memorable engagement of the 8th of January, 1815, which is now on exhibition at Washington, the Globe says:

The painting is remarkable for accuracy and minuteness of detail. The contending forces are seen from the river in battle array and in action. In the foreground of the picture is the 93d Regiment of Highlanders advancing along the brink of the river, and suffering severely from the fire of the American batteries; and on the left is the American camp with the line of breastwork on the Rodriguez canal, and the Tennessee and Kentucky troops in close engagement with the enemy; and each figure is represented with such surprising precision, that a magnifying-glass of considerable power is required to obtain a full and complete view of the stirring scene.

This is the only painting of the battle of New Orleans, of any note, which has ever been executed. It cost many years of patient labor, and is, undoubtedly, worthy of being placed by the side of the paintings of various revolutionary scenes which adorn the rotunda of the Capitol.

MELANCHOLY ACCIDENT.—Michael N. Mayfield, a lad about thirteen years of age, met with his death on Monday last, says the Bayou Sara Ledger of the 24th, in the following singular manner. It appears that he and another young man were on one end of a capstan, (a mule being attached to the other end,) drawing a log for the purpose of working it up into shingles, when the rope attached to the mule broke and the opposite end immediately flew around striking young Mayfield on the neck, breaking it and causing instant death. The other lad narrowly escaped with his life, having been struck slightly on the arm at the same time.

PACIFIC RAILROAD.—A plan is on foot. It is said, to persuade Congress to lend its sanction to the Pacific Railroad in the following manner: The Government to lend its bonds to the company, taking the road as security for their payment. To the amount of money paid in by individuals, and for every $1000 thus paid in by persons, $1000 to be loaned by the General Government. If fifty millions are paid by subscribers to the company, Congress will be asked to subscribe the same amount.

CALIFORNIA LAND DIFFICULTIES.—There are three government land reserves in San Francisco, worth some $4,500,000, to which the State of California puts in one claim, and the banking firm of Palmer, Cook & Co., another, both claiming against the government. Dispatches have been sent to the U. S. District Attorney at San Francisco to commence a suit against both parties, and to push it through with vigor.

THE LATHOM PRIZE POEM.—The premium offered by Mr. Lathom, of Washington, for the best National Ode, has looked in vain for a claimant among over a hundred contestants. The Committee of Judges, after a long and careful perusal of the poems sent in, have, Nevertheless, there is not a national poem in the lot. Nevertheless, the Washington Star announces the intention of these rejected addresses; and as "failure was in the nationality only, we have a right to expect some brilliants among them. Had any one of these poems been selected, Mr. Lathom purposed to print them all in a volume and give them to the world as a specimen of what can be done by American heads. The speculation would have been an admirable one. The friends of each of the hundred poets would have discovered and proclaimed that their particular friend's poem was the best; the poets would have got at loggerheads in the newspapers, and the newspapers commenting upon the subject, would have advertised it wider than they did "Uncle Tom," and Mr. Lathom's five hundred dollars would have swelled to thousands—and all to encourage native genius."

REMITTING MONEY BY MAIL.—An important decision has recently been made in the U. S. District Court, Richmond, Va., Chief Justice Taney presiding. In a case on trial before that court, the question arose whether money remitted by mail to a creditor, such money being lost before it reached its destination, was a release of the debtor from obligations of the debt. The Chief Justice decided that the plaintiff having requested his debtor to remit the money, without specifying or directing how it was to be sent, and the defendant having complied with the request by remitting through the mail, as was the custom of others in do ing, the debtor would not be held liable to make good the loss. The decision is in conflict with other cases involving the same principle, the Chief Justice holding that the former decisions were not correct.

THE PACIFIC RAILROAD QUESTION AT WASHINGTON.—The well-informed correspondent of the Baltimore Sun says the Pacific Railroad question engresses more attention here than any other. It occupies our newspapers, and will soon occupy Congress. Mr. Gwin has got the track with his bill, and that will be the first scheme for discussion. He does not propose, as I understand, to bring on the discussion till after the holidays. Mr. Chase is prepared, as I notice, to exhibit the superior advantages of his project over those of Col. Benton and Dr. Gwin. It will be a waste of time to attempt the adoption of any project for a national highway to be constructed by national means, and managed by national agency. The question, it is true, may grow in strength, but at present the exertion of federal power for the construction of a public road is wanted both by Congress and by the Executive.

TWELVE LIVES LOST—Steamboat Disaster.—A dispatch from Charleston, dated Saturday, says: The steamer Marlboro, a river boat, plying on the Pedee river, between that place and Cheraw, exploded her boilers at eight o'clock on Saturday morning. The captain was just ringing the bell for the boat's departure, when the explosion occurred, she having all her cargo on board. The Captain, Wm. M. Smallwood, the mate, Mr. Bullen, formerly captain of the bark Saranac, and the chief engineer, Warren Stone, were all killed, as were also two, and probably twelve, of the fifteen hands on board. Several other persons were badly scalded.

BUTTER.—The Boston Courier of the 17th inst., in commenting upon the high price of butter, assigns as one cause for it, the enormous quantity of the article which is shipped to California—it states that on the 15th of last month the enormous quantity in the market of San Francisco amounted to five and a half millions of pounds, where it is selling for one half the cost and charges of shipping it; and yet in the face of all this, the Eastern merchants are continuing to ship it at the rate of 8000 to 15,000 firkins per month, while the consumption there does not exceed 9000 firkins per month.

AMERICAN STEAMERS FROM PANAMA TO VALPARAISO.—The New York Express states that the project of a new line of American steamers, to run between Panama and the ports on the Pacific to the southward of that point as far as Valparaiso, has enlisted the serious attention of capitalists who are fully disposed to carry it into effect—perhaps within the next year.

GERRITT SMITH.—The Hon. Gerritt Smith made his debut in the House on the 20th in a speech on the Kossta case, and the bearing of the views of our Government relative to that case, and upon the slavery question generally, which attracted the attention of the House and elicited a spiritad pro-slavery rejoinder from Mr. Preston, of Louisville.

SLAVE MOTHERS AND THEIR OFFSPRING.—A bill is before the Georgia Legislature, prohibiting slave children under five years of age from being sold, separately from the mother, and also to prevent as far as possible the separation of families.

DESTRUCTIVE FIRE IN BROOKLYN.—A destructive fire has occurred at Brooklyn, N. Y., by which eight magnificent dwellings were consumed, involving a loss of $100,000.

The latest letters says there is to be a regular reform in the Havana Custom House, the reason given being that the revenue has fallen off more then a million and a half of dollars during the last year.

THE DUBUQUE CLAIM.—This case, which is now pending before the U. S. Supreme Court, involves interests to the extent of some $3,000,000. The claim embraces the town of Dubuque, Iowa, and extensive bodies of lands in Dubuque and Jackson counties (Iowa) on the Mississippi river.

MINISTER GADSDEN ON THE GADAY GRANT.—No credence seems to be given in official circles of this city to the telegraphic story that Gen. Gadsden has demanded of Mexico the prompt recognition of the Garay Grant under the penalty of having the Mesilla Valley immediately taken possession of by U. S. troops. It is believed to be a mere concoction of parties in Garay-grant stock speculation. [Washington Star.

THE MCDONOUGH CASES BEFORE THE SUPREME COURT.—The Supreme Court has decided in favor of the United States, in five of the cases argued at the present term, in which the question was of sundry titles to different tracts of land claimed by the representatives of the late John McDonogh, of New Orleans, under pretended titles from the French authorities of either Louisiana or Florida. Those are all the McDonogh cases so far decided. [Washington Star.

THE CHOCTAW NATION.—The Little Rock Gazette of the 16th has the following items:

A son of Col. George Folsom, a few days since, was chasing game in the woods near his father's house, when his foot caught in a vine and threw him to the ground, killing him instantly, by breaking his neck.

A testimony of respect to the memory of the late Alfred Wright, for upwards of thirty years a missionary among the Choctaws as adopted by the General Council of the Choctaw Nation, has been handed to us for publication. Mr. Wright translated the Bible into the Choctaw language, and lived to see it printed and placed in their hands.

ARAB PROVERBS.—Listen if you would learn. Be silent if you would be safe. Inquire about your neighbor before you build, and your companion before you travel. The first of wisdom is the fear of God. The world is carrion, and its followers dogs. Poverty without debt is independence. Long experience makes large wit. The sluggard becomes a stranger to God, and an acquaintance with indigence. By six qualities may a fool be known: Anger without cause, speech without profit change without motive, inquiry without an object, putting trust in a stranger, and wanting capacity to discriminate between a friend and a foe.

LICENTIOUSNESS OF POMPEII.—The discovery of Pompeii has been worth thousands of sermons as a vindication of the reforms worked by Christianity. Had it not been for the paintings that still survive on the walls of the exhumed dwellings, the moderns would have had no adequate conception of the immorality of the ancients. All that Tacitus has written of the licentiousness of Roman Emperors fails to make an impression equal to that produced by these indecent pictures. For that an idle, luxurious and despotic monarch should violate every law, human and divine, seems not impossible, but that private citizens should imitate their example, surpasses belief, which is proved by the walls of Pompeii. On these walls—the walls of dwellings—the walls of the common sitting room—the walls on which husband and wife, mother and daughter, maiden and suitor gazed in company—are seen paintings which would disgrace the vilest modern bagnio. The universality of these pictures proves that it was not a few dissolute young men, who thus covered the walls of their rooms, but that fathers of families, citizens of highest rank, and even grave senators were equally guilty. How gross and corrupt must that state of society have been in which licentiousness not only shock off all decorum, but sat in the very domestic circle.

RACHEL IN RUSSIA.—After recording how Mmlle. Rachel has been "spirited away" from Paris to St. Petersburgh for a year and a half, by the seductions of Russian gold, who could have expected to hear that her first appearance in the City of the Czar has been by no means brilliant! Yet such, we are assured, is the case; and the cause assigned is the parsimonious inferiority of the company, that, by her engagement, the French tragic Muse was bound to take with her. This is said to have called the imperial tre—and so far from Cear or Czarina honoring her first performance with their august presence, it is stated that, on her first night, the resident company of French actors (which includes Madame Araold-Plessy, Madame Volnys, and others) received commands to play at court; and that they had been further enjoined to prepare "Lady Tartuffe" without Mmlle. Rachel in the principal part. The economy of the French actress seems to be capitally matched in the resentment of "the powers that be" in Russia; and the tale does not illustrate the "saving knowledge" of the lady, or of those who set or contract for her, better than it illustrates Muscovite manners, and the sensitiveness of Ursa Major under the insolence of a Queen in e tinsel crown! [London Athenæum.

THE PROPOSITION TO BUY THE MOUNT VERNON ESTATE. The value of this property, without the contingent sale of the house of "the father of his country," is about $30,000. As much land adjoining it, in like condition, can easily be bought for that amount of money. We hear that a bargain was made some time since, by the proprietor, selling it to some persons whose names we have not heard, for $20,000 nominally. And, further, that this sale is conditioned on their success in getting Congress to take it at that price, when he will pay them 25 per centum (or $50,000) of the money paid up him for it by the Government. We know not how far this is reliable, giving it to the reader as the account of the condition of the "operation" which is floating around the lobby. [Washington Star.

From the Charleston Courier, 15th.

Explosion of the Marlborough.

It is our painful duty to record this morning a most fearful destruction of life, arising from the explosion of the boilers of the steamer Marlborough, Capt. Wm. M. Smallwood, which took place shortly after eight o'clock yesterday morning, as she was backing out from Atlantic wharf to proceed on her voyage to Cheraw and the landings on the Pee Dee River.

The force on board at the time of the explosion, including the captain, officers and crew, comprising twenty-two, thirteen of whom have been killed—the majority having been either burnt up with the hull, or have met a watery grave.

The body of Capt. W. M. Smallwood, who, we are told, held the bell-rope in his hand at the time, has been recovered, as has also the body of his chief engineer, Warren H Stone. The mate, Capt. H. N. Bullen, formerly of Saranac, is missing.

Of the ship saved, several received severe contusions—one, a deck hand, a white man, had one of his arms amputated, yesterday, in consequence of injuries sustained.

A negro boy who was standing on the wharf at the time of the explosion, was struck on the head by a piece of iron and instantly killed.

One of the boilers, weighing about two tons and a half, was propelled about two hundred yards, cutting in its progress three bags of cotton in half, and knocking down six brick pillars sustaining the eastern portion of a cotton shed on Atlantic wharf, ultimately being deposited among the cotton in the shed.

The steam drum passed over the deck of the schooner, J. T. Furly—whose officers and men were fortunately below at the time at their breakfast—slightly injuring the foremast, and lodged on the wharf.

The cupuch of the ship Delaware, belonging to Bath, Me., laying at the same wharf, and his officers were at breakfast, and the table at which they were seated was filled with the fragments from the wreck.

The cause of the catastrophe is not, nor probably ever will be, definitely known; we trust, however, that this occurrence—the second within five or six weeks—will cause the owners and captains of our river boats to neglect no precaution that can conduce to the safety of those who trust themselves on board them.

[From the Charleston Standard.]

There were many painful incidents of this catastrophe, which is coming upon the ground we were compelled to witness. In the dock, and clinging to a portion of the wreck, was a boat-load who was badly scalded, and could scarce support himself until assistance came. Upon North Atlantic wharf, between the bales of cotton, lay a colored man, whose face was charred and mangled, and who, though breathing, was beyond the help of any human kind. Further on the wharf, lay the State, mangled and dead. There was shouting and hurrying to and fro about him, but with his face covered, and the cool morning air upon him, he was tranquil as though wrapped in his most peaceful slumber. The Captain lay on the steamer Marion, with many friends around him, but he, too, was cold and dead! A relation and an old and attached friend strained through the crowd to reach him, but the sight was too much—he staggered and fell into the arms of those who had followed him. A little distance from the Captain lay a poor negro, whose clothes and flesh had been stripped from him ta permit the treatment of his wounds. Further on lay another. He mourned most piteously, and those who heard him needed no other assurance of the intensity of his suffering. Through all this scene of suffering and death, the fire still raged, and finding it impossible to subdue the flames, the boat was fastened to steamboats and dragged away from the shipping into the stream. The escape of the clerk, Mr. Burnes, was truly wonderful. He stood upon the upper deck—the deck was shattered into fragments, but springing towards the water he caught upon its utmost edge, swung under it, the edge alone remained, and when the smoke subsided he effected his escape.

Later from Texas.

PACIFIC RAILROAD BILL PASSED.

By an extra from the office of the Austin Times, we learn that the Pacific Railroad bill passed the House on Saturday, the 17th inst., without amendment, by the following vote:

YEAS.—Messrs. Speaker, Adrion, Banks, Baylor, Bee, Bell, Birdwell, Boon, Bourland, Brown, Burke, Burney, Calvert, Cannon, Crawford of Bexar, Crawford of Washington, Crosby, Daniel, Darlen, Dooley, Dulany, Edwards, Ferris, Fields, Fowler, Gaston, Hall, Hicks, Holman, Holland, Hunt, Kingsbury, Laird, Lewis, Laring, Lyday, Mallard, Marshall, Muckleroy, McCulloch, Melton of Hopkins, Melton of Navarro, Moore of Wood, Palmer, Parsons, Petche, Reily, Roberts, Ruching, Schleicher, Shaw, Simms, Speight, Stout, Stroud, Swearingen, Tait, Taylor, Travis, Throckmorton, Turner of Lavaca, Turner of Rusk, Ventress, Walker, Waller, Whitmore, Wilson, Witt, Wood of Cass, Wood of Leon, Woodson—71.

NAYS—Messrs. Berry, Billingsly, Cheriton, Collier, Hord, Mealfee, Moore of Polk, Randolph, Rogers, Stapp, Thorp, White, Wiley—13.

The Indians continue their ravages on the frontiers. A party have been lately seen within twenty miles of San Antonio, and have killed and driven away stock and attacked the whites in that neighborhood. A man named Wilson had been scalped and left for dead by them near the ranche of Webb. The settlers upon the frontier are kept in a constant state of uneasiness by the savages.

The Santa Fe Mail has arrived at San Antonio, in twenty-five days from Santa Fe and fifteen from El Paso.

The Santa Fe Gazette mentions the gold mining operations in that quarter, and says that "the prospects of an ample remuneration for an outlay of capital are most flattering." Ninety dollars is the amount given as the result of the labor of two males and several men, employed four days on some machinery in crushing the gold bearing rock. The rock is said to contain gold in the proportion of 66 cents to the bushel.

The Indians continue to be very troublesome about El Paso, but the Mexicans are said to equal them in perfidy and atrocities.

Mr. Zebulon M. Anderson of Seguin, aged twenty-five, and formerly of Virginia, was killed by the accidental discharge of a gun on the 8th.

Mr. Wiley Hodge killed a Mexican near Goliad on the 10th, in self defence, as it seems. Mr. H. was in company with a lady—his sister, when a Mexican whom they met attempted, without any necessity for so doing, to obstruct the passage of the lady, by turning his oxen in front of her. Mr. H. interfered, when the Mexican drew a revolver, with the evident intention of using it, whereupon Mr. H. drew a pistol, and shot the Mexican, inflicting a wound of which he died.

Lino Flores has been found guilty of the murder of Antonio Quico and his wife, near San Antonio.

The Gonsales Enquirer says Mr. Shannon, a very gentlemanly and intelligent emigrant from the State of Missouri, who passed through Gonzales a few days since, says that at and between Preston, on Red River, and this place, he counted two thousand three hundred emigrant wagons bound for Western Texas, a great many of which are from Missouri. He mentions one county in that State as being almost depopulated, by emigration to Texas. The same gentleman says that in the vicinity of Belton, in Bell county, exclusive of the above, he saw at one view, he thinks, about five hundred tents pitched, all home seekers.

TWO WEEKS LATER FROM MEXICO.

Assumption of the Dictatorship by Santa Anna.

The steamship Texas, Capt. H. Place, arrival at the port Sunday morning, from Vera Cruz the 22d inst. By this arrival we are placed in possession of Vera Cruz papers to the 22d, and of City of Mexico papers of the 17th.

On the 16th of December Santa Anna issued the following decree:

That seeing the acts of all the authorities, corporations and most notable persons of all the departments and towns of the Republic, in support of the declaration made in the city of Guadalajara on the 17th of November last, and having particularly consulted the Council of State by virtue of the powers with which the nation has invested me, I have decreed as follows:

Article I. It is declared by the will of the nation that the actual President shall continue to enjoy the powers with which he is now invested, so long as he shall judge necessary for the establishment of public order, the integrity of the national territory and the complete regulation of the several branches of the public administration.

Art. II. That in case of the death, or physical or moral disqualification of the said President, he shall have power to select his successor, naming him in a sealed paper, with the restrictions which he shall deem fit; which document, under proper precautions and formalities, shall be lodged in the Ministry of State.

Art. III. The title of Most Serene Highness shall for the future be attached to the office of President of the Republic.

It will be perceived that by this decree Santa Anna puts aside the rank of Captain General and accepts the pay of $60,000 per annum which were offered him by the Declaration of Guadalajara.

On the 17th of December his Most Serene Highness issued the following manifesto:

Mexicans—Events as unfortunate as they have been continual have appeared to be conducting the nation to its certain ruin. The springs of the public power were all relaxed; the greatest disorder prevailed in all the branches of the Administration; the army was destroyed; the public wealth was dissipated; liberty had fallen into complete licentiousness, and the monster of anarchy threatened to overthrow the very ruins that it had made. A change was necessary, was even inevitable, which might restore harmony between authority and rights, between the laws and our traditions and customs; between reason, morals, and Religion with Liberty; a harmony which is the indispensable condition of order and of prosperity for nations. The short sighted who thought they saw in the great movement of Jalisco effected last year, a change purely personal, have proved to be mistaken, as they always are who mistake things for men. A change of persons had been made; but the disorder and discontent increased; the general interest was not satisfied, nor the object of that revolution accomplished. It was not the paltry interests of a party struggling with its adversaries, nor the wretched manœuvres of intriguers which were at strife. It was the struggle of high thoughts with visions and miserable errors; that of the noble sentiments of nationality and patriotism with selfishness and treachery: it was, in fine, the work and the will of the nation, which, tired of enduring the yoke imposed upon it by insane systems, rose up as one man, in order to resume that original dignity with which it shone at the glorious epoch of its Independence.

And this magnanimous nation—so often generous to me—turned its eyes upon me, calling me to co-operate with my fellow-citizens in saving it from the dreadful fate which threatened it. What heart truly Mexican could resist the voice of his country, imploring the aid of her children at such a crisis? I listened to it in the retreat to which ingratitude and perfidy had driven me; and putting everything aside, hastened to offer to my country the sacrifice of my repose, of my health and of my existence.

I did it with the enthusiasm with which I have always served her. I took charge of the government only the more that I knew the heavy weight which it would impose upon me, and the difficulties and inconveniences he encountered in accomplishing the high undertaking of re-establishing social order, and of reorganizing the public administration. To this end I have directed all my efforts during the brief period which has intervened. Posterity will one day judge of the acts of my government, on which has fallen the hard task of repairing, in every branch of the government, the enormous evils caused by others, and of effecting this in the midst of the most complete confusion of all principles, of the most scandalous relaxation of all obedience, an immorality the most general, and of the most absolute disappearance of all reverence into which legal power had fallen, through the ill combination of our laws and through the crimes or follies of those who were administering them. I occupied myself with the utmost assiduity in promoting the public good and prosperity, thus performing what I had promised to God and to the nation, and without aspiring to anything but the glory of leaving, at the end of the time fixed on the 6th of February last, the Republic respected and respectable without, quiet and happy within; when the unanimous, free and spontaneous voice of my fellow-citizens, expressed by their legal organs on all sides, came to exact of me the lengthening of my sacrifices, and to extend the period previously marked to one of as much time as might be necessary in order to secure the integrity of the national territory, the consolidation of public order and the complete organization of all the administrative branches.

The will of the nation to this effect has been heard from every corner of the Republic. From the remotest places I have had the honor of receiving Commissioners especially directed to present to me their wishes, and to express their adhesion to the acts of my government; and an unanimous multitude of honorable citizens, of wealthy proprietors, of persons distinguished by their rank and dignity, have made manifest their opinion by the legal and pacific means of subscribed petitions, declaring that it is their will that I should continue clothed with the fullness of powers which I have till now exercised.

Never since the memorable epoch of Independence had the public opinion expressed itself in a manner more orderly, explicit, uniform, strong and respectable. The common sense of good men and of distinguished men, of whatever represents the true and effective moral power of society, of those whose interest forms the interest of all, agrees in recognizing as insufficient the time allowed for consolidating order, restoring respect to authority, drawing closer the bonds of union among all Mexicans, and creating confidence in the independence and the integrity of the Republic. The first necessity of him who governs is to know, in order that he may obey the true public opinion. That which has now manifested itself cannot be mistaken, cannot be confounded with the rash cry of the passions, nor the hoarse voice of political parties. Quiet, majestic, and far-sounding, the voice of the nation is heard; the voice of the nation which, depressed by misfortune, makes its last effort to live honorable and happy.

Such is the light in which things appear to me. But not trusting in myself alone, I sought surer advice in the high intelligence of the Council of State. That respectable body, in which are represented the most elevated classes of the nation, has seen, like myself, in the manifestations from the people the authentic will of the nation and the complete vote of confidence in that which our country has designed to honor me with, by placing in my hands all that power which may be necessary to snatch her from ruin and to restore to her her lustre, power and glory. Ever obedient to her will, I will shrink from no danger or sacrifice to accomplish it: but I entreat my fellow citizens not to take it ill that I refuse the personal titles and honors with which they have so liberally adorned me; since my glory and greatest recompense consists altogether in the unbounded confidence which they have thus bestowed upon me. For the service which I may have chanced in my long career to render, and which I was bound to render, their munificence has already rewarded me far beyond my merits. To what else could I aspire? I have already received on the field of battle, when my sword had already consolidated forever our freedom and independence, the highest grade to which, by our laws, can mount the soldier who has served his country well. With that I am perfectly content. If I accept a power which I do not seek and the right of transmitting it to a successor, it is because I regard them as the powers necessary for realizing the great purposes which the nation proposes to itself in conferring them upon me, and because the right of transmitting the power places the nation in safety from the horrors of anarchy. But in order to be the first in leading the soldier to battle it is not necessary to bear the title of Captain-General though it be a great honor, which I esteem and appreciate at all its worth.

It is just that he who consecrates his time and his toil to the service of the nation should receive from her a proportionate pay; and it is probably for the reason the judgment of the Council has been pleased to bestow it upon me; but when the destitute condition of the Treasury is so known, I could not, without sinning against gratitude, consent to impose upon it this new burden. To deserve after death the praise of having served my country well will be my most grateful reward. I wish nothing—I aspire to nothing. Should it please God to prolong my days until I may see realized my public vows, then, far from power I shall not refuse the honors which my countrymen now offer. But it shall be when the nation reaps the happiness which I have endeavored to procure for it and is quietly enjoying the good which I have shaped out. Should death lay me low before I can consummate that great work, my countrymen will know how to do me justice, and will then honor my memory in my family. These, Mexicans, are all my feelings—all my hopes.

To obtain these I judge nothing more necessary than the lifting up again into respect authority so long degraded and forgotten. That of the first Magistrate of the Nation should be recognized and respected by all. To his dignity is due the same reverence as to the nation which he represents. The salary, therefore, with which the Mexicans desire that their first officer should be distinguished, I accept; but not for any personal use, and only for the greater dignity of whoever may be President of the Republic, so that setting him apart from other functionaries it may serve as the mark of that respect and reverence which all owe to him whom it has pleased all to place at the head of their dearest interests, the interests of the country.

Protesting to the whole nation my deep and eternal gratitude for the vote of renewed confidence with which it has deigned to honor me, while it was pleding in my hands such ample powers, which I will endeavor to use with temperance and with prudence for the good of the nation alone, I owed to my countrymen this frank and sincere declaration of the feelings of my heart and of the honest intentions which shall guide my conduct in the continuation of the work which has been entrusted to me, until such time as I shall have brought back for the Republic days of solid and positive happiness.

Arrival of the Steamship Pampero

Interesting from Sonora, Oregon, Washington Territory, and the Sandwich Islands.

The steamship Pampero, Captain W. C. Flaadars, arrived Saturday morning, from San Juan, bringing us dates from San Francisco to December 1. The Pampero arrived at San Juan on the 15th instant. The Northern Light arrived the same day from New York, and sailed again for that port on the 15th instant, with One hundred passengers, and $1,635,118 in specie on freight.

The Pampero left San Juan on the morning of the 16th, with fifty-five cabin, and one hundred and forty-six steerage passengers, and $800,000 on freight in the hands of the passengers. She left in port at San Juan the Royal Mail steamship Teviot, and the American brig Martha Clark, loading for New York. The Bremen bark Antoinette arrived at San Juan on the 14th, with two hundred German emigrants for Costa Rica. The tathmus is reported very healthy, and the transit speedy and comfortable. The passengers of the Pampero and Northern Light started up the river San Juan on the evening of the 15th, all well. In coming out of the harbor of San Juan, the Pampero met an English vessel of war going in.

Summary of the Fortnight's News.—The following summary of the fortnight's news is from the San Francisco Herald of December 1:

The State.—The expeditions which we noticed in our last summary as fitting out in our State for the purpose of exploring the auriferous regions of the Amazon, seem to have made no progress, and the excitement has in a great measure died away. The sober second thoughts have divested the enterprise of many of its charms, and it has been found, upon examination, to possess much less of romance than was at first supposed. Occasionally an article appears in one of the daily papers bearing discursively upon the subject, but there seems to be no prospect, whatever, of the sailing of either the expedition to old Flores in his designs upon the existing Government of Ecuador, or of the other expedition which has been invited to take peaceable possession of a portion of the Peruvian territory. The movement of the expedition to Sonora also remains in statu quo.

A great deal of interest has recently been excited in regard to the agricultural capabilities of California. During the last season, fruits and vegetables of every

PICTURES IN THE FIRE.

What is it you ask me, darling?
All my stories, while you know;
I have no strange dreams to tell you,
Pictures I have come to show.

Tell you glorious scenes of travel?
Nay, my child, that cannot be.
I have seen no foreign countries,
Merrels none on land or sea.

Yet strange sights in truth I witness,
And I gaze until I tire;
Wondrous pictures, changing ever,
As I look into the fire.

There, last night, I saw a cavern,
Black as pitch; within it lay
Coiled in many folds a dragon,
Glaring as it turn'd at bay.

And a knight in dismal armour
On a winged eagle came,
To do battle with this dragon;
His towering crest was all of flame.

As I gazed the dragon faded,
And, instead, sat I into crowned,
By a lake of burning fire;
Spirits dark were crouching round.

That was gone, and lo! before me,
A cathedral vast and grim;
I could almost hear the organ
Roll along the arches dim.

As I watched the wreathed pillars,
A thick grove of palms arose,
And a group of swarthy Indians
Stealing on some sleeping foes.

Stay; a cataract gleaming brightly,
Dashed and sparkled; and beside
Lay a broken marble monster,
Mouth and eyes were staring wide.

Then I saw a maiden wreathing
Starry flowers in garlands sweet;
Did she see the fiery serpent
That was wrapped about her feet?

That fell crashing all and vanished;
And I saw two armies close—
I could almost hear the clarions
And the shouting of the foes.

They were gone; and lo! bright angels
On a barren mountain wild,
Raised appealing arms to Heaven,
Bearing up a little child.

And I gazed, and gazed, and slowly
Gathered in my eyes sad tears,
And the fiery pictures bore me
Back through distant dreams of years.

Once again I tasted sorrow,
With past joy was once more gay,
Till the shade had gathered round me
And the fire had died away.

Fashion.

When a man applies himself soberly to reflect upon the fitness of things in general, and of their several teadencies towards the great End, of what a whirligig of vanity and inutility—of paste and glitter—the Great World seems to consist! All these flounces and furbelows; all this crenolline, bergamot, pasto and jewelry, wax-chandlery, Brussels lace and Sèvres china; all those jobbed horses, silken squabs, double and tripple knocks, tags and embroiderles and fripperies of the Heralds' College, what are they good for?—what end do they serve? All these mountebank bowings and reverences; these kissings of hands and hacking out of rooms of lath and plaster; these clatterings about streets for the purpose of handying pieces of printed pasteboard; these grinnings to your fellow worm of five feet long across a glass of grape juice; these bawlings out of names by lacqueys; these posturings and jumpings, and agonies of etiquette; and turning day into night and night into day, and eating when we are not hungry, and drinking when we are not thirsty; all these, the life-chords of the Great World, to what end are they? Who commanded them? Who promulgated the statutes that regulate them? If Fashion were a tangible idol with a frontal protuberance and a golden head, squatting on his hauns in a pagoda like Juggernaut, we should not need to wonder at his votaries wearing absurd dresses and passing their lives in the performance of more absurd ceremonies. We might set down the worship to be a delusion; but we might concede the dresses and the ceremonies to be the offspring of a sincere though mistaken superstition, and to be typical or symbolic of something. But my lady Analia, the Queen of the world of Fashion, is a member of the Church of England, and she would be indignant if you were to ask her whether she worshipped a protuberant idol. Besides, Fashion is not tangible or palpable. No one ever saw Fashion, or drew his (or her?) portrait, or promulgated the conditions of his (or her?) creed, or taught what is heterodox or what orthodox; except one vulgar pretender who wrote a Handbook of Etiquette; which, for any authority it was grounded on, might as well have been a headbook to the Bear Garden.

What are the laws of Fashion, and who made them? Who regulates their absurdities and their proprieties? It was the height of fashion in Charles the Second's time to display about four inches of white shirt between the waistband and the vest: now, if I were to enter a ball-room with my shirt bulging from the bottom of my waistcoat I should be bowed down stairs. Why should fashion in sixteen hundred and sixty-three be beauty, and be impropriety in eighteen hundred and fifty-three? Can any thing be more absurd than the present chimney-pot-hat? Nothing. Yet, if you were to meet me in Regent street with a hunting cap, a shovel hat, a sombrere, or a fur porringer like that which Henry of Lancaster wore—would you speak to me? The day after to-morrow velvet coats, shovel hats, flip-flaps, or rabbit-skin porringers may be the only wear. Why should the bishop have refused to ordain Oliver Goldsmith, because he wore scarlet breeches? What are wigs, boots, colors, fashionable virtues, fashionable vices, bon ton, high breeding, worth, after all? Will they save "the sprightliness of youth, the fair cheeks and full eyes of childhood, the vigorousness and strong flexure of the joints of twenty-five," from the "hollowness and deadly paleness, the loathsomeness and horror of a three days' burial? Will they avail us one jot in the day when you and I and all the world, "nobles and learned, kings and priests, the wise and the foolish, the rich and the poor, the prevailing tyrant and the oppressed party shall all appear to receive their symbol?" Will Fashion and Madame Devy and the Red-book keep the "storm from the ship or a wrinkle from the brow, or the plague from a King's house?" Is the world any better for Fashion, and could not it move towards its end without Fashion, do you think?

"A man," says a divine I love to quote, "may read a sermon the best and most passionate that ever man preached, if he shall but enter into the sepulchre of kings . . . . . where our kings have been crowned, their ancestors lie interred, and the king must walk over his grandsire's head to take the crown." How what a homily might a man read over second-hand Court dresses, over a Court Circular, or over a Red-book two years old! How sharp one might be upon the miserable vanity of superfinities, and the uselessness of luxuries. How easily we could do without them.

"Give but to nature that which nature needs, Man's life is cheap as beast's."

You, and I, and the King, could live on sixpence a day, and never grow hungry. But after all, in the very midst and flow of our homilies, and this sharpness of our exhortation, comes this thought to make us pause before we go with unwashed faces to live in a tub like Diogenes, or to hide ourselves in a cave, and cover ourselves with the skins of wild beasts, as Jean Jacques Rousseau talked of doing, or to dig up pig nuts for food, and shovel gold away as if it were mud, like Timon in the play. For we begin to think how many thousand men and women in England, and how many millions more throughout the world, eat their daily bread by making and vending Fashion's elegant trumpery; gloves, fans, spangles, scents, and bon-bons: how ships, colonies, and commerce, are all mixed up in a curious yet congruous elaboration with these fal-lals: how one end of the chain may be my lady's boudoir and its nick-nacks in Belgravia, and the other end a sloppy ship-dock on the hot strand of the Hooghly: how the beginnings of a ball supper, with its artificial flowers, its trifles, its barley sugar temples, its enamelled baskets and ratifia cakes, were tha cheerless garret and the heated cellar: how the immensities of the world—its workshops, and marts, and bourses, and chambers of commerce—are, after all, only an accumulation of these fashionable littlenesses in bulk; packed into huge bales and casks, registered in ledgers and day-books, and sent and re-sent to strog ships, with bills of lading and charter-parties, to the uttermost ends of the earth. Pause before you condemn Vanity Fair—reflect for a minute before you run to the justice's to have its charter taken away. Obadiah Broadbrim has helped to stock it; conventicles have been built from its profits; the crumbs that fall from its table fed millions of mouths. After she has made one set of fortunes at first hand, she showers her favors on trade at second hand. From second-hand court dresses, and from second-hand fashion of all kinds, the moral of Fashion can be more strongly pointed than from Fashion

Let us instance Mrs. Brummus. She is the mysterious female who deals in second-hand ladies' apparel. I look upon Mrs. Brummus's vast silent repository of last season's varieties with the awe I have for a family vault; for the sepulchral secrecy of a worn-out pantomime; for undertaker's Latin (in oil colors); for last year's Belle Assemblée, or for the tailor's plate of fashions and the Court Guide for the year eighteen hundred and fifty-two.

Mrs. Brummus's repository nestles as Miltons fountain did, the "navel of a wood," quite in the core of a cancer of dingy, second-hand streets and houses. Both Mrs. Brummus and her shop have, moreover, a dingy, second-hand appearance. They remind you of the magnificent allocation of the lady of the quondam dealer in second-hand apparel la Congreve's comedy: "You that I took from darning of old lace, and washing of old ganze, with a blue-black nose over a chafing dish full of starved embers, behind a traverse rag, in a shop no bigger than a bird-cage!" The chafing-dish and blue-black nose may be gone; but there is yet a marvelous touch of the bird-cage about Mrs. Brummus's shop: there is yet the traverse rag, the torn lace to be darned, and the old ganze to be washed.

Enter. Here is the discarded wardrobe of those enchanting actresses, those ravishing songstresses, those bewitching dancers, who have so enthralled and delighted Fashion; who have drawn rapturous plauditits from Fashion's kid gloved hauds; melting sighs from under Fashion's white waistcoats; tender glances from Fashion's double-barrelled lorgnettes; lisps of prnise from Fashion's moustachioed lips, when the wearers of those dresses acted, and sang, and danced on Fashion's great chalked stage—upon that stage where there are more sinks and rises, more drops, flats, borders, set pieces, wings, and floats; where there are more changes of scene, more going down graves and vampire traps; where there are more music, dancing, gay clothes, red and white paint, hollow hearts and masks for them to wear, than you would find on the stage of the largest playhouse in the world. Suspended and recumbent, folded up, stretched out, slugly and in heaps, in Mrs. Brummus's bird-cage shop, in dimly distant crypts, and parlors, and crannies, and ouphoards, and lumbering old presses, and groaning shelves, are the crimson velvet dresses of duchesses, tha lacs thit queens have worn, our grandmothers' brocade sacks and hoops and high heeled shoes, fans, feathers, silk stockings, lace pocket handkerchiefs, scent bottles, tha Brussels lace veil of the bride, the sable bombazine of the widow, embroidered parasols, black velvet mantles, pink satin slips; blue kid, purple prunella, or white satin shoes; leg of mutton, bishop, Mamoluke sleeves, roles without bodies, and bodies without robes, and sleeves without either; the matron's apron and the opera dancer's skirt. Here is Fashian in undress, without its whalebone, crenoline, false hair, paint, and pearl powder; here she is tawdy, tarnished, helpless, inert, dislocated, like Mr Punch's company in the deal box he carries strapped behind his back.

If there be one article of commerce which Fashion delights in more than another, it is Lace. The rich products of Mechlin, Valenciennes, Brussels and Liege; the scarsely less valuable wares of Nottingham and Honiton; tha almost priceless remnants of "old point"—"beggars' lace"—the lace that Henrietta Maria loved to wear and Vandyck to paint. Not one, therefore, of Mrs. Brummus's tattered morsels of lace but has its history and its moral. Here is the veil in which poor Clara Rackleton was married to Captain Middleman. They had a grand estate (grandly encumbered) at Ballyragget, in the County Galway. Charley Middleman kept hounds and open houses; and his widow lives now in a boarding house at Tours with her two daughters. Clara's Brussels lace veil was not sold by the lady's maid nor by the bride herself. It was neither lost or etolen, but Captain Middleman, formerly of the twenty-fifth Hussars, privately conveyed Mrs. Middleman's veil, together with two ostrich feathers and a carved ivory Chinese fan, ta Mrs. Brummus's emporium. He drove the bargain, he pocketed the money, and he lost that same money half-an-hour afterward at chicken bazard, at the Little Nick near Leicester Square.

A wedding dress—all white satin, lace, and silver sprigs. Methinks I can see it now, glistoning and sparkling in the August sun, and rustling and crumpling in the August air, as, at the close of the London season, its beautiful wearer descends that ugly, little narrow staircase, which has been a ladder of delight to so many, a via dolorosa to so many more, and which leads from the vestry-room of St. George's, Hanover Square, into Maddox street. The wearer of the satin dress comes down the shabby stepe a wedded bride. She is married to a lord; a duke has given her away. Fourteen young bridesmaides in white have wept at the responses. Two have faluted, and one has been carried into the vestry, to be sal-volatilised.

A nervous clergyman has addressed the bride expectant as "Thomas, wilt thou have this man to be thy wedded wife?" The bridegroom has been seized with the usuel deadly perturbation, and offers to place the ring on the finger of the pew-opener; and the clerk, while gravely correcting the errors of all parties, has viewed the whole proceedings with an air of deep misanthropy. At last, somehow or other, the right man has married the right women; the pew-opener and handle have been feed, and the vergor remembered; the glergyman bas had his rights and the clerk his dues. The license has been conued over; the regieter has been signed—by the bridegroom in a character meant to be very valiant and decided, but in reality very timorous and indistinct; by the bride with no pretence or compromise, but in a simply imbecile and hysterical maunar; by the father of the bride in a neat hand I should like to see at the bottom of a cheque; and by big General Gwallyor of the Indian army (the additional witness) in a fierce military manner, with a dash at the end liks an oath. The little boys have shouted, and the wedding carriage, with its orimson-vested postboys and spanking greys, has clattered up; tha policemen have put down an imaginary riot, threatened with their batons the crowd generally, and menaced with arrest one individual lamp-post; and thsn, shining out like a star among the silver favors and orange flowers, the snowy dresses and black dress coats, the smilee and tears, comes the bride: God bless her! Is there a sight more beautiful under heaven than a young bride coming ont of church? Can you forget Sir John Suckling's beautiful lines in his ballad upon a wedding?

"Her feet beneath her petticoat
Like little mice stole in and out,
As if they feared the light.
And then she dances such a way,
No sun upon an Easter-day
Is half so fine a sight."*

Now, alas, my lord is at Florence, my lady is in furnished lodgings in London, and the bride's dress is at Mrs. Brummus's. There was an actiou at law in the Court of Queen's Bench respecting them not long since; and numberless suits in all sorts of courts are pending between them now. My lord hates my lady, and my lady hates my lord; and they write abusive letters against each other to their mutual friends.

Fashion is born, is married, and dies every year, and Fashion is buried in Mrs. Brummus's dusky shop; she watches its funeral pyre, and superintends the process of its incineration; until, phœnix-like, it rises again from its ashes to die again.

Fashion dies. It is so far like a prince or a rich man that while it lives we dress it up in purple and fine linen, and fall down and worship it, and quarrel with and hate our brothers and sisters, for a smile from our demi-god, for a card for Fashion's balls or the entrée to Fashion's back-stairs. But no sooner is the demi-god dead than we utterly desert and forget it. We do not condescend, as in the case of dead humanity, to fold its rottenness in gold and crimson velvet, to build a marble monument above it, sculptured all over with lies; to state in an inscription that beneath repose the ashes of such and such a most noble, highy, mighty, powerful Prince Fashion, who was a father to his subjects, and a model to his compeers, and was in short the very best Fashion that ever was known, and the first fashionable gentleman in the world. No, we allow the corpse of Fashion to putrefy in the gutter, or to be eaten up by the vultures, and the storks, and adjutant birds. There have been kings treated as cavalierly. When the luxurious Louis Quinze lay at the point of death, the noise of the courtiers deserting their monarch to pay their respects to the new king echoed through the long galleries of Versailles like thunder. When the king was dead they crammed his miserable body (he died of the most horrible form of small pox) into a box, and jolted him off in a post-chaise by night to St. Denis, where they flung him into rather than buried him in the sepulchre of his ancestors. So do we act by our dead King Fashion—adding even insult to injury; for after his death we scoff and jeer at him, and are tremendously satirical upon the ridiculous, hideous, frightful, preposterous fashion that he was. It is my opinion that if Messrs. Bunting and France were to confine themselves to performing the funerals of Fashion, they would cease to be the fashionable undertakers they are.

Fashion is greater than king or kaiser when he is alive; but dead he is of no more account than a broken egg shell. Le roi est mort—vive le roi! Leg of mutton sleeves and short waists are dead. Long live tight sleeves and long waists!

Lettar from Florence.

FLORENCE, November 26, 1853.

In no country in the world, that I have ever seen, can so many of the comforts of life be obtained for the same amount of money as in the United States of America. It seems to be the general opinion, (how it ever originated is more than I know,) that it costs much less to live in Europe than it does in the New World. The only country I have yet visited, of which this can be predicated with the most remote approximation to truth is Tuscany; where rents are very cheap, and where all the great staples of life are generally low. But to say that an American with all his tastes and habits can live cheaper in France than in his own country, is very far from the truth; and that is what I aim at presenting to your readers. Even in Lyons the American Consul informed me that the expense of living was fully twice as great as in New York (he is a New Yorker by the way) and I knew that the rent of his office costs him a mere bagatelle. But in Paris, not only are the great staples by no means cheap, but rents are far from being so low as they are generally supposed. Perhaps there is no city in America where a greater amount of money is paid for the same amount of comfort than New Orleans, but I can live in New Orleans as well and as cheaply as I can in Paris. For instance, I occupied while once in the Crescent City a comfortable little bachelor's room, for which I paid, I believe, fifteen dollars per month. It was not a dozen rods from the Post-office, so that as you perceive it was in the central quarter of the city. A room in Paris similarly situated, and equally well furnished, would have cost me thirty dollars, and I was gravely assured by a French friend of mine, a resident of your city, that I could have it for five. Would you believe it, I believed him; it took me just twelve days by steam to find out the mistake. And then as for comfort; bless you! there is no such word in the French language any more than there is a word equivalent to our word home. Yet, perhaps there are na two words in any language more pregnant with meaning to the eor of an Englishman. They are two inscperable adjuncts to the highest, purest happiness his nature is capable of experiencing. They suggest to him emiling visions of tea and toast, coffee and hot muffins, a smiling wife and rosy children, a well aired-newspaer; and lastly, but above all, the supreme luxury of a roaring coal-fire in the grate. But talk to a Frenchman about comfort and home—the one word is rendered into his language by aise, commodité soutien—the other by maison, logis. The one means music and theatres and cafes, the other is an uncarpeted room, ten-by-twelve, up four pairs of stairs that have been strangers to soap-suds for half a century. It is not too much to say that there is not one room in one hundred in Paris that has a carpet on it. The floor is made of brick, laid down generally in large squares, and it is cleaned by pouring on it a quantity of brick-dust, and then throwing over it a quantity of water and then scrubbing it till it acquires a polish fairly painful for the eye to look upon. The dirt of ages has accumulated on the stair-cases—but yet not a speck of it is visible, for every morning it is passed over with a scrubbing brush anointed with beeswax, or a compound, of it till the whole is as smooth and dangerous as the mountain sometimes mentioned in connection with his Satanic Majesty. I am supposing now, my dear reader, that you have taken private apartments and have settled down in all the dignity of your bachelar independence.

Your consierge always receives you so pleasantly and has such a sweet smile an her face when she gives you the bonjour, that if she be rather young and pretty, (but they are generally old and ugly,) you half imagine you have made an impression. You are disconcerted when you have seen her greeting twenty others after exactly the same fashion. You may be sure you will never be at a loss to know what time it is in Paris, for if you don't happen to own a watch you need not fear but what you will find a pendule under a glass ornamenting your mantle-piece, however small may be your apartment; you will probably be grieved at the absence of a carpet, (I you find one ten chances to one it will be reeking with the pollution of a thousand feet,) and if the weather is cold and nasty you will order a fire. Tha wood (you don't harn coal) is brought in to your maison meuve raggots, and is not sold to you by the stick exactly, but by the basketful. They have another strange fashion of having doors in the walls, sometimes half a dosen of them in a space 15 by 20, in which you are expected to put any thing you may happen to possess in the shape of dry goods. They have a suspicious look about them, utterly repugnant to your ideas of a well-ordered house, and you believe there are bed-bugs or other ferocious animals in them—and so there are. It is an Englishman's privilege to grumble, and why should not Americans? They go grumbling from one and of Europe to the the other, with their checkered, ill-setting dresses, hugging about them their huge traveling shawls, their enormous whiskers and round red faces looking very much like one of their own puddings are it is taken out of the bag. You may know an Englishman by three things. He always dresses outlandishly—he always keeps a tight grasp on his purse, thinking every thing is enormously dear, and always contradicts you when he can possibly do so with a regular Dr. Johnson-like air as though that was the nonclusion of the whole nation. You have doubtless heard of the John Bull who never could go to sleep in peace without raising his window, every time the watchman passed under it sailing "twelve o'clock," and bailing out, "it is not twelve o'clock, you rascal; it wants five minutes of it." He was a type of this race. Poor Mr. Orapeand knows not what to make of him. All the wildest, most improbable stories about the eccentricities af Englishmen are rife in France, and are readily swallowed by the mass of the people. Here is one that is now making a great noise in Paris, and it is said to be an actual occurrence; you can judge. Sir Edward E. is the hero of the tale, and he is said to be as wealthy as his tastes and habits are an outré and extravagant. He engaged a celebrated French pianist, not long since, to entertain with his talent a large and brilliant party he was about to give at his hotel in the Rue St. Honori. The evening came round and so did the musician. On being ushered into the drawing-room he found four or five people already arrived. On an ottoman in the farther and of the room was seated a lady, magnificently dressed, whom Sir Edward immediately introduced to the pianist as "Lady B., my wife." Not the slightest bend of the head nor any other acknowledgement on the lady's part followed the introduction. "And this," continued the nobleman, turning to another lady seated at a table and attentively engaged in perusing the last novel, which lay open before her, "this is my sister, the Honorable Miss B.; she is a great reader and frequently sits up very late, engaged in her favorite occupation." The poor artist bowed with a true Frenchmon's grace, but his salutation was taken just as much notice of as his previous one. "This," pursued the polite Sir Edward pointing to a gentlemen seated at another table shading his brow with his hand and intently gazing upon the squares of a chessboard, "this is the greatest chess-player in England; I am happy to be the medium of your acquaintance." Not a nod, not the movement of a muscle, indicated that the great chess-player was conscious of the presence of a stranger. To say that the poor pianist was in despair at this brutal reception would but half express his feelings of mortification and astonishment. But thought he to himself, there ods probably some mystery connected with this manner of reception that will soon be cleared up—in the meantime, perhaps I shall have better success with the fourth party, and he looked inquisitively at a tall gentleman standing by a neighboring console and engaged in scenting the ordor of some manificent camellias in vases of Sevres porcelain. "Ah!" said Sir E., dividing his wishes and in a measure anticipating them, "You will allow me to present to you this, my most intimate friend, the Viscount B——. He twice saved my life in India, but his many high qualities of head and heart needed not, I assure you, this additional motive to the high esteem in which I hold him." Again the Frenchmen bowed and again was his bow returned with the same incivility—that is, not returned at all. Sir Edward, therefore, fearing perhaps a too hasty discouragement, led the pianist up to the piano and entreated him to favor him with an exhibition of his skill. He complied and selected a piece of his own composition. It happened that the piano was exactly opposite the ottoman on which sat the lady to whom he had first been introduced. His fingers were flying over the keys at a great rate, when suddenly he noticed the lady's handkerchief drop. He sprang forward with all a Frenchman's gallantry to pick it up and restore it, but his amazement may be conceived when he discovered that the beautiful lady was nothing more nor less than wax. He turned to survey the others—they were wax—the novel reader, the chess player, and the men "aux Camelias." He began to suspect that Sir Edward himself was not exactly what he represented himself to be, when that gentleman came to his relief by assuring him that the real company was yet to arrive—that these statues were only figures of some of his friends, then dead. That finally, he carried them round with him wherever he went, kept several servants for no other purpose than to wait on them, and always treated them with every possible mark of respect. Such is a Frenchman's idea of an Englishman. B.

PASSENGER FOR EUROPE.—It is said there are at present a large number of applications for passports at the State Department at Washington, by Italian, Polish and Hungarian refugees. Numbers of them anticipating a general war in Europe, desire to be where they can take the part [illegible] countries.

A Texas Caravan.

It may astonish many of our readers, in remote and far away localities, to read of caravans here. They are historically and geographically the idiosyncrasies of another land and another clime—separated from our shy wide seas and deserts, by differences of language, habit, custom, descent, and education. But with some slight differences in unimportant details, we have here in the streets of New Orleans, almost weekly, caravans as large, as picturesque, as real, and as romantic as any that thread the Libyan Desert or make paths through the wilderneseee of Arabia. We have the essential and plastic components. We have the great controlling features. What is needed to change our caravans into an exact similitude to those of the old world might be readily accomplished by a substitution of camels for mules, and wild Arabs for equally uncouth looking negroes—by an abolition of wagons and carts and an addition of more pack animals. But the change would add nothing to the poetry or picturesqueness of these immense trains of travel which, sterting from Alabama, Georgia, or Mississippi, take their long and devious way towards the new and almost unexplored regions of Texas. There is a rich, romantic coloring about them which never fails to attract our notice. There is something in the sundering of all old ties and friendships, in the leaving of a home, endeered by many associations, and the starting forth upon a journey through new lands to new homes—through forests, plains and prairies; across rivers and rivulets; over meadows and mountains—which we cannot describe as Cooper has described, nor paint with the pencil of a painter. And there is something wild, strange, enterprising, almost patriarchal, in the great procession itself, which, pushed by the res angusta domi, thus branches forth with the self-same spirit of a colony in the days of Rome, seeking new hearths, other riches, and a greater freedom for growth.

We were attracted by one of these great caravans the other day, taking its way riverward and westward through the roar and bustle of Canal street. First, came an immense van drawn by four large mules—the nearest wheeler of which was ridden by a big negro who managed the team. The van was filled with trunks and bundles and packages; some the hair-looms of the family and some rendered valuable for preservation by causes we could not divine. The mules were large, sturdy fellows, who walked off with their load as though it were sport. Then came a smaller wagon, drawn by two mules, but covered like its more imposing predecessor and quite evidently the same thing in miniature. Out of the covering in front and rear were protruded the heads of some juvenile negroes, and underneath was lashed a couple of fine looking blood-hounds. A neat, two-horse carriage, driven by a rather plethoric copy of Uncle Tom, and occupied by the females of the family, followed the lesser wagon. It looked like a gem amid the rougher conveyances around it; like an oasis in a large desart; like a picture in a dry book; like a ray of sunlight in a cloudy day—like something finer, sweeter, more pleasant, feminine, comfortable and home like than any thing else near by. Two or three stalwart negroes followed the carriage on foot, leading fox hounds and favorite dogs of lesser worth. After these came six or eight other vans of varying size, drawn by from two to six mules, and peopled with negroes "like motes i' the sunbeams." The vans were all curiously gotten up and curiously attended. Buckets hung at the end of each; a rifle protruded its grim mouth here and a hoe handle there; axes were fastened along the sides; ropes and rope ends show at each sallant point like necessity had been the mother of invention. There were two or three led horses, and the head of the family, and those whom we took to be sons and relatives, rode such specimens of horse flesh as we should be very loppy to straddle.

The filling up of this sketch we are not able to give. Our outline is rude and rough as was the picture itself. But the picture was one to be seen and studied and would afford fine opportunity to the genius of a good painter. The negroes seemingly enjoyed the thing as much as any one else and were crackling continual jokes with their sable brethren and sistars on the side-walk. "Ha, Dinah there," says one good looking fellow to an ebony beauty near by, "we're a goin' to Texas. Come along if you want to. This child ain't married."

"Jordan am a hard road to trabbel, old hoss; ain't it?" aries Juba on the pave to Barney in the saddle.

"Don't you wish you could trabbel it—hey?" was the response.

And so with noise and laughter, and high hopes and stout hearts, the caravan proceeded towards its far away destination, to richer soils, broader fields, a clearer sky—extending the bounds of civilisation, pushing forward the outposts of the nation. May success go with them.

EARTHQUAKE.—A slight shock of earthquake was felt at Memphis on Sunday morning, the 15th inst., about half-past six o'clock. It lasted but a very few moments.

EDUCATION.

Re-opening of the Baton Rouge Female Seminary.

Parents and others concerned in the education of misses and young ladies, are respectfully notified that the academic having disappeared, the studies at the Baton Rouge Female Seminary were resumed on WEDNESDAY the 6th inst. [n26] M. W. RHAD, Principal.

CENTENARY INSTITUTE, ALA

This Institution of Learning has been in successful operation for ten years, is situated eight miles north of Selma, and is the child and property of the Alabama Conference.

There are two departments, male and female. In the male department young men are prepared for the junior class in any college, or if they choose, complete their education here. The female department is regularly organized as a college.

The course of study is extensive, and the instruction thorough. The teaching is done mainly by men of age and experience, (not by girls.)

The President (Rev. A. H. Mitchell) is a minister of the gospel, of twenty odd years standing, and during most of that time has been connected with literary institutions of the Church in Georgia, South Carolina and Alabama. He is assisted by seven others, most of whom are persons of age and experience, and all, with one exception, professors of religion. A majority of the Board of Trustees are members of the Alabama Conference, which fact is a sufficient guarantee of its successful management.

Board and tuition are as low as can be afforded, and lower than most institutions of similar grade.

The next term opens the first Monday in October, and closes the first Wednesday in July. For further particulars, apply to the President, at Summerfield, Ala.

B. J. HARRISON, Secretary.

FEMALE MASONIC INSTITUTE,

Dayton, Marengo County, Alabama.

Rev. E. D. Pitts, Principal.

TO PARENTS, GUARDIANS, AND THE FRIENDS OF EDUCATION GENERALLY, we would announce the opening of the TENTH Annual Session of the Institute. The healthful locality—the spacious and beautiful grounds—the commodious and convenient buildings—the full supply of Musical Instruments—the fixed purpose of the Trustees to spare no expense or efforts to promote the true interests of FEMALE EDUCATION—and the assiduous devotion of an efficient Faculty to promote the comfort and improvement of Pupils, lead us to expect with confidence a liberal support.

The Principal has taught with marked success in Alabama, Mississippi and Florida, and will consecrate all his energies—physical, intellectual, and moral—to the proper training of the head and heart of those committed to his tutelage.

The services of Miss MARY W. HOWZE, who has been for two years past connected with the Central Masonic University, have been secured. Her intelligence, energy, piety, and felicitous manner of communicating, have justly placed her in the first rank of educators.

The Musical, French, and Ornamental Department will be conducted by competent and skillful Teachers, and all due attention given to the arts and accomplishments that so beautify and adorn the gentler sex.

The Primary Department will be assisted alone to a modest and gifted lady, for we design to attend carefully to that sadly and mischievously neglected class of Pupils.

The Scholastic year is divided into Two Sessions of nearly Five Months each—with no intervening recess. The School opens on the first day of October, and closes with Examination Exercises in the latter part of July. Pupils received at any time, and charged to the end of the Session. For fractions of Sessions each week is counted one twentieth.

The School is not Sectarian or denominational; and the only religious tuition embraces the principles of a pure morality based upon the cardinal doctrines of the Bible.

The Principal and his wife have charge of the Stewards Department, and will tenderly care for the health, manners and morals of those who Board in the Institute. Each boarder will be made to feel as far as possible that she is the loved subject of parental solicitude, and every reasonable wish will be promptly and cheerfully gratified. Yet, Discipline will not be forgotten, and the needful restraints of family government will be thrown around them.

CHARGES PER SESSION OF FIVE MONTHS.

Primary Class	$12 50
Preparatory Class	15 00
Junior and Senior Class	20 00
Music on Piano, Guitar and Harp, (each)	25 00
Drawing, Painting and Embroidery, (each)	10 00

LATIN included in the Regular Course.

BOARD (including Washing, Fuel and Lights) per month 10 00

Each Boarder must furnish her own Towels, Brushes and Combs, and have each article distinctly marked with her full name.

AN INVARIABLE RULE.—Board and Tuition one-half in advance, and the balance at the end of each Session; and every account must be closed at the end of each Session, by Cash, or by Note.

SPECIAL ARRANGEMENT.

Each Lodge in the Marengo County is entitled to select within its jurisdiction, a worthy object of beneficiation, and have her taught in the Institution without charge, provided said Lodge secure the payment of her Board and supply her with Books and Stationery.

As the Principal is so extensively known, the Committee have forborne to speak of his character and qualifications, and refer Parents and Guardians to the persons named below.
